and Index

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 1, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2005/03/01
 [The Mace was on a cushion below the table]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 7, 2005, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

head: Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.
 His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, his party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

His Honour: Ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

Mr. Stevens (Provincial Secretary): Hon. members, I am commanded by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to inform you that he does not see fit to declare the causes of the summoning of the present Legislature of this province until a Speaker of this Assembly shall have been chosen according to law. He therefore is pleased to retire from this Assembly, to return at a subsequent hour tomorrow to declare the causes of the calling of this Legislature.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

head: Election of a Speaker

The Clerk: Hon. members, pursuant to the Lieutenant Governor's direction and section 16(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act nominations are invited for the Office of Speaker of this Assembly for the 26th Legislature. Ms Haley.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Clerk. It's a real honour for me to be able to participate in the Speaker's election for the 26th Legislature of Alberta. With this being our 100th anniversary year as a province, I have been looking into the historical context of various building blocks of our province. Part of that, of course, is the actual election of the Speaker.

The first known Speaker's election was held in 1377 in England. Even the name of the position, Speaker, evolved out of those early days as one designated to speak for the House and represent the House to the Crown. The role became pivotal in times of struggle between the Crown and the House, the essence of which was captured in 1642, when Charles I entered the House to arrest five members for treason. The Speaker refused to give the members' whereabouts, saying, "I have neither eyes to see, nor tongue to speak in this place, but as the House is pleased to direct me."

It is, in fact, a common myth that Speakers have been executed in the course of carrying out their duties, and while it is true that between 1399 and 1535 nine people who had once held the Office of Speaker were executed or suffered violent deaths, those demises cannot be attributed to the actual act of being the Speaker. They were in fact attributed to other functions in their lives. However, the responsibility still weighed heavily in uncertain times when free speech could not be taken for granted. Our parliamentary system of democracy has evolved over the past 800 years, and the role of Speaker may be slightly less dangerous now but still equally important.

There is a role for government which is represented by the Premier and Executive Council, and there is a role for the Assembly, comprised of all members, most of whom are not part of Executive Council. It is imperative to keep the separation between the two. That is why there is a separate budget for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. It is also why we have our own Standing Orders, that we ratify in this Chamber, to govern our own behaviour.

There are many books defining how to do things, and one person is vested with the role of interpreting and ruling on issues important to all members. It is in this context that I am very proud to nominate a man who lives and breathes those dusty old books and brings them to life for us here, to the benefit of us all. It is the third time he has willingly put his name forward for this position and the third time I've had the privilege to nominate him. He has brought respect, honour, and dignity to our home away from home here in this Assembly, allowing all of us to function freely and with integrity on behalf of our constituents. He has proven over the past eight years that he is not only good at the job but that he, in fact, loves doing it. I am very proud to nominate my friend and colleague Ken Kowalski, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, to the position of Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Clerk.

The Clerk: Mr. Kowalski, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Kowalski: Mr. Clerk, I'd be both honoured and humbled to accept the nomination.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations for the Office of Speaker? I declare, then, the nominations closed, and I further declare that Mr. Ken Kowalski, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, is elected Speaker of the Legislative Assembly for the 26th Legislature. [applause]

[The Speaker, with apparent reluctance, was escorted to the chair by Mr. Klein and Dr. Taft]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is with the deepest of humility that I thank you all, all members of Alberta's 26th Legislature, for the great honour bestowed upon me today.

As we close the first 100 years of Alberta as a province and embark upon our second centennial, we should all be cognizant of the tremendous responsibility placed upon all of us as Members of this Legislative Assembly. As the future unfolds, I have no doubt that the 26th Legislature will experience momentous events that will define the new Alberta. Your integrity, your honesty, and your transparency will define you as a member of Alberta's Legislative Assembly. You will make a difference.

Thank you again for electing me as your Speaker. To the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, thank you for believing in me and thank you for your humbling nomination.

The best to all. Thank you.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms placed the Mace on the table]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: I would now invite everyone to stand for the prayer.

Let us pray. To the Almighty, on this day of a new beginning we ask for Your guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and Your help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of this Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Election of a Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 55(1)(a) nominations are invited for the office of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of this Assembly for the 26th Legislature. The hon. Mr. Amery.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be the first one to formally congratulate you on your re-election to the Speaker's chair. I look forward to serving under your inspired guidance for this 26th Legislature.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to put forward the name of the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for the position of Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has for many years served you and all members of this House as Deputy Chair of Committees as well as serving on several House committees dedicated to the rights and privileges of all members. All members who have sat before him in this Chamber and Committee of Supply know that he is always a balanced and thoughtful purveyor of the rules and Standing Orders to all members of this House whatever their political stripe.

Mr. Speaker, as we go to place our ballots for Deputy Speaker, it is important that we know more about the candidates who we are electing and the accomplishments and activities that they have undertaken before and while they have been elected to this House.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has been a lifelong advocate of child welfare and community support for children. He has also taught numerous courses at Mount Royal College in Calgary. The hon. member ran and was elected in a by-election in 1995, strongly committed to making a greater contribution to the people of Calgary-McCall and the people of this province. In his first term the hon. member served voluntarily and diligently as the Deputy Chair of Committees whenever he was called upon.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has served in many nonpartisan capacities: as a member of this House, as a vice-chair of the Public Accounts Committee, as a member of the Legislative Review Committee, and on any other committees that he was assigned to. I have the pleasure of sitting with him on the Standing Policy Committee on Health and Community Living and have found his level of commitment and dedication to be second to none.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I know that by electing the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to the position of Deputy Speaker, this Assembly will be well served. He will do so in the manner in which he has served us in the past, with a shrewd understanding of the duties and parliamentary responsibilities required in conducting the business of the House. He will do so in a manner that brings credit to this House and all hon. members, who serve the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, through you I urge all hon. members to support our friend and colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for Deputy Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, Mr. Shariff, do you accept the nomination?

Mr. Shariff: With humility and a great sense of pride I accept the nomination.

Mr. Speaker, I also congratulate you on your victory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, Mr. McFarland.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, and may I be the second, Mr. Speaker, to extend sincere appreciation for your eloquence and your dedication and also for the words of advice that you gave my electorate during my by-election in 1992. Only you and I would remember what those words were.

I am pleased to present to the Legislative Assembly an individual that I know would be a worthy and capable Deputy Speaker. This MLA has a well-rounded background that suits him to assist you, Mr. Speaker. A former scoutmaster, a minor hockey coach, a small-business owner/operator, he and his wife, Jan, have farmed in central Alberta since 1964. During that time they raised their daughter and son, and their expanded family has now blessed this marriage with three grandchildren, a wonderful gift for a couple who this November will celebrate their 40th year of marriage.

A responsible community person, my colleague served 17 years as a municipal councillor, as many of us in this Assembly have. He also served with the municipal district of Kneehill, as it was known then, as deputy reeve, as reeve, as chair of the central zone of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and as chair of the reeves' council for the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

Richard Marz was elected to this Assembly in 1997, and I have been fortunate to know and work with him in various capacities since that time. A devoted MLA, in my mind, Richard has chaired a number of committees including the farm assessment review and the labour review committee and served on all other SPC and legislative committees that he's been asked to, and he's done so with vigorous attention. I am confident that his abilities to now assume the role of Deputy Speaker will be made with dignity and with strength.

It's my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to nominate without reservation Richard Marz, MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, for Deputy Speaker, and I encourage all members of our Assembly to support him.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Mr. Marz, do you accept the nomination?

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for Little Bow for his very kind words, and I would accept the nomination with honour and pride.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, would there be additional nominations? I declare the nominations closed.

The nominees for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees are Mr. Shariff and Mr. Marz.

Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted in each voting booth and will be conducted by the office of the Clerk.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: Hon. the Premier, perhaps you might begin, followed by the hon. Minister of Environment. Then we'll just go up this row.

Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if you would commence on this side, and then we'll follow with the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill and just go down the row.

[Members voted from 1:55 p.m. to 2:02 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, have all those who wish to vote voted? Then proceed, Mr. Clerk.

[Ballots were counted from 2:03 p.m. to 2:12 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it'll be a couple of minutes before the results come in.

There was one thing we were going to do at the conclusion of the program this afternoon, but I think we'll proceed with it now. I'm going to call on the hon. the Premier, the hon. Mr. Klein.

Centennial Medallions

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you very much. Well, Mr. Speaker and colleagues, thank you for that very warm round of applause, and it is nice to be back.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate you on your acclamation as Speaker. I know you had a hard run.

I would like to congratulate in advance, although we don't know who the victor might be, the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees. As well, in advance I would like to congratulate whoever wins the Deputy Chair of Committees. I'm confident that each of them and you, Mr. Speaker, will serve Albertans well in your respective roles.

As Alberta celebrates its 100th anniversary, there will be a number of celebrations and activities throughout the province. There will be celebrations in communities, and service clubs will have celebrations. I know that a number of corporations are planning celebrations. So virtually whole segments of society are developing programs to celebrate Alberta's 100th birthday. These are all people and entities that make this province such a fantastic place in which to live.

As a government we are recognizing centenarians, we are recognizing students, and we are recognizing community leaders and volunteers, just to name a few. I would personally like to add another group to that list, and that is Members of the Legislative Assembly because notwithstanding what we hear on the radios and read in the newspapers and watch on television from time to time, we actually do work. We do very significant work, and we serve the people of this province with a tremendous amount of commitment, pride, and dignity. So I want to add to that list Members of this Legislative Assembly because as legislators the members of this Assembly continue to make important contributions to the lives of all Albertans.

As I announced last September, the government is producing a centennial medallion in honour of Alberta's 100th birthday. Each student from kindergarten to grade 12 will be receiving a commemo-orative brass medallion. Every Albertan who reaches or has reached the age of 100 in 2005 – and I can't believe how many there are; there are many – will receive a 14-karat gold medallion.

A silver medallion has also been produced to bestow as a commemorative gift to distinguished Albertans and guests visiting Alberta in 2005. Members will receive a supply of these medallions for their distribution. Today, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a silver medallion to each member as a memento for his or her work on behalf of all Albertans during this centennial year.

I would like to note with pride that these medallions were designed by an Alberta artist, as a matter of fact right here in Edmonton, as I understand, and produced, of course, right here in Alberta.

Alberta's centennial should be a great year, and I look forward to working with you, Mr. Speaker, and all Members of this Legislative Assembly to make sure it is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Leader of the Official Opposition, this is a deviation from what we are doing today, but I suspect that we might interpret the Premier's comments as a ministerial statement, and under our normal rules if the Leader of the Official Opposition wants to make a comment further with respect to the medallion presentation, please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a completely unexpected gesture on the part of the Premier and the government and the Legislative Assembly. I haven't seen the medallion yet, but I'm sure we'll be very interested in them. I appreciate the gesture, and I'm even more excited for the Albertans who will receive the medallion who aren't MLAs, the people who have reached their 100th birthday and the schoolchildren of Alberta, who represent the future of this province. So on behalf of the opposition I thank the government and the Legislative Assembly for this generous gesture.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would also draw to your attention this pamphlet that we've produced: Page Biographies. These very remarkable young people will be with us for the remainder of this session, and I certainly hope that you will have an opportunity in the ensuing days to basically identify their backgrounds, their names, and some really remarkable things. Do you know the Speaker's page, Matthew? Where is he? There he is, right there. In his biography he's president of a junior achievement company, executive member of the Northern Alberta BMW Club, an owner of an automotive accessories business. He's in high school with honours all the time, and once he leaves us after his successful stay in the Legislative Assembly, he plans on getting into business administration. Remarkable people, all of them.

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, the number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, 82; the number of spoiled ballots, zero; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 42; the member having received the majority of the votes cast, Mr. Richard Marz. Mr. Richard Marz is declared Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 26th Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has a new Deputy Speaker for its 26th Legislature. We all congratulate the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Mr. Marz, would you like to say a few words?

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much. I'd like to thank all the members of the Assembly for entrusting this very important position to me. I'd also like to extend my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your third term, and it will be indeed an honour and a privilege for me to work side by side with you in serving this Assembly in the 26th Legislature.

Again I would like to thank my friend and colleague from Little Bow for his kind words, and I would also like to thank my friend and colleague from Calgary-McCall for giving us the opportunity to exercise the democratic process in this Assembly.

I guess that about sums it up, Mr. Speaker. Thanks again.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would ask you to join with me as I say thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for very distinguished service in the 25th Legislature of the province of Alberta as Deputy Chair of Committees. Thank you.

head: Election of a Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 55(1)(b) nominations are invited for the office of Deputy Chair of Committees for the 26th Legislature. The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to congratulate you on your election to the Office of Speaker. We have benefited immensely from your expertise in the past, and I look forward to another Legislature with you in the Speaker's chair.

I'd also like to congratulate my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on his election as Deputy Speaker.

It gives me great pleasure to rise today to nominate the Member for Calgary-Fort as the Deputy Chair of Committees for the 26th Legislature. I've come to know this member very well since he was first elected in 1997. We were both elected in the same year. Since that time I have witnessed his dedication to his constituency and to the province of Alberta. He has shown himself to be an ethical, hard-working, effective member of this Legislature. I have no doubt that he would be an impartial adjudicator of House debates, and his enthusiasm for parliamentary democracy would be a benefit to all members of the House. The Chamber would be well served by the Member for Calgary-Fort, and it is an honour to nominate him.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, Mr. Cao, do you accept the nomination?

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, for the nomination. With my personal pledge of hard work, humility, and great honour I'll accept the nomination and seek your support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to be one of many who are going to congratulate you on your acclamation as Mr. Speaker. Your commitment, knowledge, and leadership are admired and appreciated by all.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on his appointment as Deputy Speaker. I know that the experience and the challenge will be humbling and trying at times.

It is my honour to stand before you today, Mr. Speaker, and this Assembly to nominate the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Drayton Valley-Calmar. This member was elected to his first term as the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Drayton Valley-Calmar on March 12, 2001. In addition to his role as MLA he has served as a member of the standing committees on Law and Regulations; Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; as well as the Standing Policy Committee on Learning and Employment.

I believe this member will be fair and courteous and will keep good decorum in the House. His knowledge of process and parliamentary procedure will be an asset to this Assembly. He will be an excellent support for our newly elected Speaker and Deputy Speaker. Therefore, I nominate the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for election for the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, Reverend Abbott, do you accept the nomination?

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, let me also congratulate you publicly on your position as well as my seatmate, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, on his election as Deputy Speaker.

Let me thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for his gracious nomination, and yes, Mr. Speaker, I do accept.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there further nominations?

Ms Haley: Mr. Speaker, with great pride I would nominate my friend and colleague Mr. Shiraz Shariff, Member for Calgary-McCall, for this position.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, Mr. Shariff, do you accept the nomination? [some applause]

Mr. Shariff: Thank you very much, colleagues. I hadn't contemplated running for this position. I will put my name forward. I accept.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there additional nominations? Then I declare the nominations closed.

The nominees for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees are Mr. Cao, Reverend Abbott, and Mr. Shariff.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: Hon. the Premier, would you lead the members on this side and, hon. Dr. Taft, would you lead the members on that side, please?

[Members voted from 2:22 p.m. to 2:29 p.m.]

The Speaker: Have all hon. members who wish to vote voted?

[Ballots were counted from 2:29 p.m. to 2:38 p.m.]

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, the number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees, 82; the number of spoiled ballots, zero; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 42. No candidate has received a majority of the votes cast. Reverend Abbott has received the least number of total votes cast, and Reverend Abbott's name will therefore be excluded from subsequent ballots.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a second ballot will be cast. It'll be just a matter of a minute or so, and then we'll proceed in the same manner as the last.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, Mr. Leader of the Official Opposition, please proceed.

[Members voted from 2:41 p.m. to 2:47 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, have all who wish to do so voted? Then I think, Mr. Clerk, you can proceed.

[Ballots were counted from 2:47 p.m. to 2:54 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a few quick reminders before the proceedings continue. First of all, tomorrow at 3 o'clock. But on Thursday, when we come in at 1:30, we are going to try and do one of those historical pictures of all Members of the Legislative Assembly. There's a window of opportunity for the picture to be taken of about 20 seconds, so would you please be in your chair. If not, we will have to electronically insert you after the fact.

An Hon. Member: And it hurts.

The Speaker: And it hurts, yeah.

Hon. members, I'd just like to draw your attention to the legislative officers who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. For returning members, you'll be familiar with them and know who they are, for new members perhaps not, so I'll just take a moment here to introduce them: first of all, Mr. Don Hamilton, the Ethics Commissioner; Mr. Fred Dunn, the Auditor General; Mr. Brian Fjeldheim, the Chief Electoral Officer; Mr. Gordon Button, the Ombudsman; Mr. Frank Work, the Privacy Commissioner.

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, the number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees on the second ballot, 82; the number of spoiled ballots, one; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 42; the member having received the majority of votes cast, Mr. Shiraz Shariff. Mr. Shiraz Shariff is the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 26th Legislature.

The Speaker: Congratulations are extended to the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Mr. Shariff, would you like to say a few words?

Mr. Shariff: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm stuck for words, and you can understand that, but I want to take this opportunity to thank each and every one of you for your confidence in me. I will serve you diligently, fairly, and I'll apply the Standing Orders as I've always done in the past.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank my colleagues the hon. Member for Calgary-East and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for nominating me.

I want to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your acclamation and congratulate my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on being elected as the Deputy Speaker. I also want to recognize my two other colleagues, Calgary-Fort and Drayton Valley-Calmar, for letting their names stand for this position.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we have consent to destroy all ballots and documents related to the election of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, and the Deputy Chair of Committees?

[Unanimous consent granted]

[At 2:58 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 3 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 2, 2005 3:00 p.m.
Date: 05/03/02
The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice. At the conclusion of the anthem I would ask that you remain standing.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Hon. Dr. Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, on January 6, 2005, the late the Hon. Dr. Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, the 15th Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, passed away following a courageous battle with cancer. Her Honour served with grace and dignity as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor from 2000 to 2005.

Her Honour was well known in various local, provincial, and national organizations and was recognized for her contribution to libraries, education, and the arts.

To Mrs. Hole's family and those who knew her I extend the condolences of the Assembly. Members of Her Honour's family are with us today in the Speaker's gallery.

In memory of Her Honour I ask you to join me in a moment of silent prayer and remembrance.

Rest eternal grant unto her, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon her. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, prior to the arrival of His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will play a brief musical interlude.

The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band is today under the direction of Captain Brian Greenwood, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

The band will now play a piece written by baroque composer George Frederick Handel, the details of which are in your program.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

His Honour: Pray be seated.

The Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfill the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not the Assembly, whose servant I am and who through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duties to the Queen and province, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to your person at all reasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from you the most favourable construction.

Mr. Stevens (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of this Assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that the proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temperance, and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow the Assembly's constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Assembly shall have ready access to His Honour upon all reasonable occasions and that all proceedings as well as your words and actions will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

head: Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Fellow Albertans, it is my privilege to welcome you to the First Session of the 26th Alberta Legislature.

The Next Alberta

It is my great honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne as it is my great honour to serve as this province's Lieutenant Governor. [applause] In this role I have big shoes to fill, or perhaps I should say big rubber boots. My predecessor, the late the Honourable Lois Hole, was much beloved by Albertans. She brought warmth, grace, kindness, and compassion to this office. She personified the very best qualities of this province.

I had the honour and privilege of meeting Bill and Valerie and Jim and Marcia this afternoon and know that their mother's qualities are carried on in the family.

All of us here can do no less than endeavour to follow Mrs. Hole's example. We must strive to fulfill the duties of our offices with diligence and dignity. We must respect each other even when we disagree. Above all, we must always remember the people we serve and act in ways that will bring honour to them and this province, as she did.

This year the government will establish lasting tributes to Lois Hole. Later on I will announce two initiatives in recognition of Mrs. Hole's dedication to libraries and learning. The government will also celebrate the late Lieutenant Governor's first love, gardening, with the creation of a memorial garden on the grounds of the Alberta Legislature. There will be a seating area where visitors can enjoy the beauty of the garden and the grounds. The garden will be named after Lois Hole and will include a cairn with a plaque featuring her portrait and biographical highlights of her life and legacy.

During this centennial year we will also remember the legacies of the many other great Albertans who came before us, and we will celebrate the wonderful province they helped to build.

The Centennial: A Century of Achievement

It's amazing to think of how far Alberta has come from its roots 100 years ago. Back in 1905 Alberta's population was only 185,000, much smaller than that of either Saskatchewan or Manitoba, and the people were outnumbered by the livestock. There were nearly a quarter million horses and a million cattle in Alberta at that time.

A look back at this province's first Speech from the Throne, delivered by Lieutenant Governor George Bulyea in the First Legislature at McKay Avenue school, shows some surprising similarities with the business that concerns us today. Mr. Bulyea noted, as I also will, the importance of agriculture to the province. He spoke about the pressures a rapidly growing population puts on infrastructure, pressures we continue to face today. Back in 1905 Alberta was developing a telephone system, while 2005 will see the completion of the SuperNet.

The people who heard Lieutenant Governor Bulyea's words couldn't have known all the struggles they would face. They didn't know how difficult it would be to build the roads, bridges, and railroad tracks that would connect this province to the rest of the country. They didn't know that fires, floods, and droughts were on their way. They didn't know that many of their sons and daughters would give their lives building this province and this country and defending it overseas.

What they did know was that theirs was a land blessed with beauty and natural resources. They knew they would have to work hard to turn the land's promise into prosperity. They knew that with provincehood came great responsibility. It was a responsibility they willingly accepted, and together they built a strong, vibrant province.

Today all Albertans owe a debt of gratitude to those who came before us: to the aboriginal people, whose deep connection to this land spans generations and centuries; to our seniors, who laid the foundations for the communities that took root all across this province and made it home; to the settlers, who came from all over the world to make a fresh start here, often bringing nothing more with them than dreams and determination; to those who fought for this nation in armed conflicts; and to everyone who had faith in this province and what it could become. The fruits of their labours are all around us.

Alberta now enters its second century with a strong economy, no debt, nation-leading rates of growth and employment, a high standard of living, and an enviable quality of life. The credit for all these achievements rests with Albertans themselves, and they are indeed achievements worth celebrating in this centennial year.

Albertans will mark the centennial in ways that are as grand and unique as Alberta itself. Among the highlights of the province's centennial celebrations will be a visit from Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh this spring.

In honour of the centennial a new graduate scholarship and fellowship program will be established. Beginning in the next school year 200 students enrolled in full-time masters programs in Alberta will each receive a $9,300 scholarship, and 100 students enrolled in full-time PhD programs will each receive a $10,500 fellowship. A total of 300 students will receive nearly $3 million through this program, a number that will grow with the number of graduate students in Alberta.

Another way Alberta will mark its centennial is by presenting centennial medallions to all schoolchildren and to Albertans who are 100 years or older.

As Albertans celebrate the province's past, they will also look ahead with enthusiasm to the next Alberta, the Alberta our children and grandchildren will inherit. My government's goal is to make sure that the next Alberta is even better than the Alberta of today.

The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Learning

That's why the next Alberta will continue to be a leader in learning. The children of Alberta already benefit from one of the best education systems in the world. Its success is due to dedicated students, outstanding teachers, and a high-quality curriculum. Alberta will continue to invest in its children's futures by supporting initiatives that build on the strong foundation of the kindergarten through grade 12 system and enhance learning opportunities for students across the province.

Previous efforts to strengthen the education system are already showing results: class sizes are coming down and will meet the Learning Commission guidelines two years ahead of schedule, and our students continue to outperform their peers on national and international tests.

Now it's time to make sure that the province's postsecondary education system is able to meet the needs of the next Alberta. A strong postsecondary education system is crucial for continued economic diversification, growth, and prosperity as well as personal fulfillment. Strengthening the postsecondary learning system is the government's top priority during this centennial year.

The government is taking immediate action to improve access to advanced education. Over the next three years 15,000 new spaces will be added to the postsecondary system. In six years that will double to 30,000 new spaces. By 2020 a total of 60,000 new spaces will be created. Our goal with this bold expansion plan is to move Albertans to the highest rate of postsecondary education in the country.

Particular attention will be paid to increasing training opportunities in areas experiencing skills shortages. Government will invest in new apprenticeship certification programs. Investment will also be directed to new apprenticeship training initiatives, particularly for aboriginal people. It will bring opportunities closer to the learner by exploring increased use of alternate delivery training mechanisms such as distance learning and mobile delivery to rural communities.

This government will also make advanced education more affordable. The government will pay the full cost of tuition increases at Alberta's public postsecondary learning institutions for the 2005-06 academic year. It will also create a new policy, the most innovative, entrepreneurial, and affordable in the country, to ensure that tuition and schooling costs aren't a barrier to learning in Alberta.

The first legislation introduced during this session will call for a significant new investment in the postsecondary learning system. Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, aligns government's fiscal strategy with its 20-year strategic plan. It will lay the groundwork for investments that will allow Alberta to continue to prosper in the increasingly globalized, knowledge-based economy.

The signature piece of this act will allow for the creation of a $3 billion endowment fund to sustain Alberta's postsecondary education system into the future. The access to the future fund will support innovation and excellence in postsecondary education. For example, it will provide matching contributions to help create a new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta. This landmark institute will promote greater understanding of the culture, language, and history of one of the world's largest economies and a country with which this province has long enjoyed a special relationship.

The new fund will also support the development of an Alberta-wide digital library that will allow all students and faculty, wherever they are located in the province, to access the resources and knowledge currently held in the individual libraries of our postsecondary institutions. To be named the Lois Hole digital library, this leading-edge initiative is centred on the work already under way at the University of Calgary. The government will also create the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship. Beginning in the next academic year four students will each receive a $5,000 scholarship toward his or her postsecondary studies.

This government is committed to removing obstacles from the path of any Albertan who wants to get an education, whether it's from a university, college, or technical institution, and it will show its commitment through its actions.

The Next Alberta Will Have a Diverse and Growing Economy

Having an educated workforce is key to ensuring continued prosperity in the next Alberta. We know that a strong economy is not an end unto itself; rather, it is the means to achieve the things we want as a society such as strong health and education systems and supports for those who are vulnerable. This government remains committed to the fiscal principles that have served the province so well: balanced budgets, no debt, and low taxes. These principles have made Alberta the economic leader of the nation. We're at the head of the pack, and we're staying there.

Growth brings its own challenges, and among them are tremendous pressures on infrastructure. This government will maintain one of the most aggressive infrastructure programs in Canada to make sure Albertans have the roads, schools, hospitals, and facilities they need.

Work will begin this year on the southeast portion of the Edmonton ring road thanks to a public/private partnership that will see the road's completion in just two and a half years. Government will explore continued use of this innovative form of financing for large capital projects as it aims to complete the ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary within the next decade.

Secondary highways are also critical to the province's continued economic growth. These roads are vital links to and between rural communities, and many are long overdue for improvements. This year the government will increase its investment in this area to rehabilitate and upgrade more provincial highways throughout the province.

Our government will work with municipal partners by allocating the $3 billion that has been committed to address municipal infrastructure needs beginning in Budget 2005.

Now that the province's debt has been paid off, the government will begin inflation-proofing the Alberta heritage savings trust fund to ensure that it is sustained as a legacy for future generations.

We will take steps to protect consumers by strengthening legislation on collection practices, credit reporting, public auctions, and loan brokering. We will also introduce standardized, plain language contracts for residential natural gas and electricity consumers.

Alberta will continue to implement its water for life strategy this year, including developing a provincial plan for water conservation in partnership with the Alberta Water Council.

We will increase consultation with aboriginal people on resource development and land access issues to help them participate fully in the growing economy.

This government will continue to stand by agricultural producers, who face the future with renewed optimism. The economic hardships of recent years have prompted improvements to the agriculture sector, including increased domestic processing capacity and the expansion of value-added products, which will make the industry more competitive than ever.

We will work to strengthen this vital sector by continuing to advocate for marketing choice for wheat and barley. The global marketplace is demanding that we move to a more competitive marketing system. Alberta will push for a new business model for the Canadian Wheat Board, one with market choice, so that Alberta farmers can be more competitive in the value-added market.

Vibrant rural communities are vital to this province. That's why this government will act on the recommendations of the rural development strategy to sustain and strengthen the rural economy.

Much as the land sustains the agriculture industry, it also sustains other economic mainstays such as energy, forestry, and tourism. Wise land management is crucial to ensure the sustainability of these sectors and continued prosperity for Albertans. That's why this government will develop a land-use management framework supported by effective resource and environmental policies and shared, integrated information systems. It will also continue to leverage energy resources to their full value.

The government will explore ways for the economy to be more knowledge based by adding value to primary resource industries and expanding manufacturing and business services.

Taking a co-ordinated approach will help protect the province's environment and ensure that all the province's resources are wisely managed with their benefits maximized for future generations.

The Next Alberta Will Be the Healthiest Province in Canada

Having a strong economy gives Alberta the ability to invest in areas like health care, but Albertans and indeed all Canadians know that if simply adding money to the system were enough, the challenges in health care would have been resolved long ago. The days of endlessly studying and debating health care reform are over, and the time for action is here. That's why Albertans will pioneer a new way of health care.

Alberta's third way for health care is about making sure Albertans get the best health care services, what they need and when they need it, at a price taxpayers can afford. We're going to get on with the things that need to be done such as developing systems to improve wait-list management and allowing electronic referrals between family physicians and specialists. We'll make whatever legislative changes are needed to allow innovation to occur throughout the health system.

We'll keep looking at new ideas. In May Alberta will host an international symposium to examine best practices in health care delivery. The symposium will give Albertans an opportunity to examine a range of solutions that could benefit our province.

And we'll take steps to make Albertans the healthiest people in the world because even the best medical treatments aren't as good as staying healthy in the first place. The government will work with community partners to find new ways of encouraging Albertans to make health and wellness part of their daily lives. We will examine a range of wellness strategies promoting healthy outcomes for all Albertans.

The government will introduce daily physical activity in schools for grades 1 through 9 beginning this fall. It will also introduce a wellness initiative starting at the kindergarten level beginning in 2006 to help foster a lifelong commitment to healthy and active living in students.

We will take steps to manage future health risks. The government will develop a plan to reduce the unacceptably high number of deaths and injuries on Alberta's streets and highways. We will invest in water infrastructure to provide a safe, clean water supply, and we will complete an emergency response plan for communicable disease emergencies.

All Albertans Will Share in the Alberta Advantage

Albertans are caring, compassionate people who want every member of this province to have the opportunity to share in the Alberta advantage both today and in the next Alberta. This means making sure that Albertans are protected in their workplaces and that they feel safe and secure in their communities.

This year the government will review employment standards to make sure that the laws dealing with overtime, vacation, hours of work, and other workplace standards are current and relevant. It will raise the minimum wage to $7 per hour, a rate that reflects the strength of Alberta's economy. Albertans are being consulted about whether this increase should be phased in or introduced all at once. We will work closely with affected employers to see that the impact on business is minimized.

Following the review of the assured income for the severely handicapped program, government will increase financial benefits for program recipients. Details of these changes will be announced during this legislative session.

This spring we will implement programs to provide dental and optical assistance to seniors and help cover annual increases in the education portion of their property taxes.

We will also review the Dependent Adults Act and revise accommodation standards for long-term care and seniors' housing.

Government will update the Police Act to enhance civilian oversight of police services. The province will continue to be the leading voice in pushing the federal government for conditional sentencing reform. Our position on this issue is very clear: in order to maintain the public's confidence in the justice system, those convicted of serious offences must face real jail time.

We will fight to protect our children from crimes such as sexual exploitation. The government will introduce an education campaign to help prevent sexual exploitation of young people through Internet luring, child pornography, and child prostitution.

Government will strive to reduce family violence through effective interventions, including treatment, through the province's specialized domestic violence courts. Increased emphasis will be placed on training police and Crown prosecutors to investigate and prosecute family violence cases more effectively.

The system of parent link centres will be expanded, and Alberta will become the first province in Canada to introduce a child care worker accreditation program.

We will also continue to fulfill our commitment to children through Alberta's Promise and encourage all sectors of our communities to contribute their time, volunteer efforts, and finances to benefit young people.

These initiatives and others will help Albertans who are vulnerable receive the supports they need to participate fully in the social, economic, and cultural life of the province.

The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Canada and the World

In these past hundred years Alberta has grown from humble roots. It's gone from being a long shot on the Canadian prairie to becoming a magnet for modern-day pioneers from all around the world. It's gone from being a rough-edged frontier to offering among the best qualities of life of any province in Canada, with world-class museums and libraries, breathtaking parks and recreational opportunities, and a vibrant arts and cultural scene. It's gone from being the new kid at the Canadian family's table to playing a major role on the national stage, and Albertans are ready to play an even bigger role in Canada because, as this province's 100-year history illustrates so unmistakably, Albertans have what it takes to be leaders.

Like those who were faced with the task of building this province back in 1905, Albertans today cannot know what challenges lie ahead. We know only that we will meet them, as Albertans have always done, with courage, innovation, and determination. We live in a land rich in blessings, and like those who came before us, we are willing to work hard to make it even better for those who will follow us.

This centennial year people across Alberta will celebrate the amazing province we call home, and from this firm foundation we will look ahead to the prospect of building something even greater: the next Alberta.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Speaker: Thank you, Your Honour.

Please remain standing, ladies and gentlemen. I'd now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

God save The Queen!

happy and glorious,

long to reign over us:

God save The Queen!

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Access to the Future Act

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As His Honour the Lieutenant Governor so aptly pointed out, this year Alberta celebrates the accomplishments of its past with the 100th anniversary of this province. It is most appropriate in this Alberta centennial year that the signature bill for the first legislative session of Alberta's second century focuses on postsecondary education. In the very first sitting of the Alberta Legislature 100 years ago, the government of the day passed a bill called the University bill. That bill helped set the stage for the rich heritage of higher learning in Alberta today.

In that same spirit today I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, a hundred years ago Albertans knew that there is no better way to secure the future than by investing in higher learning. The Albertans of 2005 know the same to be true today.

Bill 1 lays out a solid and comprehensive plan for taking Alberta's advanced education system to a new level of excellence. It confirms this government's commitment to an affordable, accessible, and high-quality postsecondary education. I've said on many occasions in recent months that this government doesn't want Albertans' young people to have to go elsewhere for a postsecondary education. We don't want any students turned away because they can't afford the cost of tuition. We want to ensure that Alberta has the best advanced education system in the country. Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what Bill 1 will help us achieve. It's about investing in this province's future, it's about ensuring that all Albertans have access to educational opportunities, and it's about securing a bright and promising future for Alberta's children and grandchildren.

Therefore, it is my honour and my privilege today to introduce Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

head: Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[The Clerk read the election returns]

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a number of guests from Alberta Finance, who are here as part of a public service orientation tour. I would ask them to stand as I read out their names: Balkar Dusanj, Bashar Dari, Boris Dudas, Bronwen Thompson, Christine Loiselle, Jasmine L'Heureux, Joffre Hotz, John Yu, Jon Hill, Kevin Pengelly, Laura Zavicsa, Lori White, Louise Devaney, Melissa Strong, Nicola Sargeant, Robert Hoy, Sam Wong, Tracey Rittinger, Tyler Foote, Waldemar Kuras. I would ask that all members welcome our guests to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, a long-time employee of Alberta Transportation, marking more than 35 years, Mr. Barry Campbell, seated in the members' gallery. I would ask Mr. Barry Campbell to rise and receive the traditional applause of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature someone who has travelled all the way from Calgary to be with us this afternoon. This is someone who took action where she saw a need to do so. She did so out of caring and compassion and a belief in the need to stick up for the rights of those who cannot adequately fend for themselves. I would like to recognize and thank Carol Weatherdon for her effort. She gathered over 4,000 names of Albertans who support an increase in the AISH benefit and a commitment from this government to renew that benefit annually. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly today 14 constituents from my constituency accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Dean Hughes. There are 14 students with him today from grade 10, and they attend the Airdrie Koinoina Christian school. I'd just like to commend them on once again being one of the top schools in Alberta for marks, according to our achievement tests. They deserve incredible congratulations for that. They have a very small, humble school, and they work really hard. It's just an awesome place. I'd ask if they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly nine very bright students from the J.F. Dion school from the Fishing Lake Métis settlement in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. They are accompanied today by teachers Miss Kathryn Walmsley and Miss Rhonda LaBoucane and helper Mr. Shaun Anderson. They have been here all this week, and they have been participants at all the festivities that have taken place this week. They've also been very active in the program that you offer, School at the Legislature. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce a man who wears a lot of hats. Today the hat he's wearing is as co-chair of Edmonton Salutes, a body that liaises our civilians with military and shows them the due respect that they indeed deserve. I would ask Mr. Bart West to rise and accept the warm, customary welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two distinguished constituents, Dr. Olga Kempo and Dr. Hélène Narayana. Dr. Olga Kempo was born in Nordegg, Alberta. She has a PhD in French literature from the University of British Columbia. She lives in my constituency, Edmonton-Strathcona, and her family home, known as Margaret Martin House, which was built in 1907 and where her mother lived for 50 years, is being considered for historical designation by both the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta.

The second guest, Mr. Speaker, is Dr. Hélène Narayana, who is a physicist by background and education. She's a long-time social and environmental activist and a former broadcaster with the CBC French network. These distinguished guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of honour this afternoon to introduce to you a number of very powerful Liberal supporters seated in the public gallery. Through you I would like to have the Assembly give them the warmest possible welcome: Ms Kieran Leblanc, who is with the Alberta Liberal Party; Mr. David Cournoyer, who works with us in the Liberal Party; Mr. Bruce Dean; and several others that are up there as well. Please have all members give them the warmest possible welcome.

Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Border Closure to Canadian Beef

Mr. Klein: Thank you. If you'll allow, I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate all members of this Assembly on their elections or re-elections, including you, Mr. Speaker. As this spring session begins, I know that all members feel honoured to serve their province as legislators and will take their responsibilities seriously.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I rise to talk about yesterday's development in the ongoing struggle to restore the full strength and prosperity of the Canadian beef industry. Yesterday, as we all know, a Montana court brought down a temporary injunction to prevent the expected reopening of the U.S. border to Canadian beef next Monday. The injunction was granted at the request of a lobby group in the U.S., to be specific R-CALF, I believe. The decision undoubtedly was a blow to the hopes that ranchers and producers have carefully held for the last two years, it was a blow to the excitement that was growing around the expected border opening next week, and it was a blow to every Albertan whose livelihood depends on an open border.

But this is not the time for us to give up. Over the last two years Alberta's beef producers have shown the world what they are made of. They are strong, they are resilient, they are innovative, and they are resourceful, and they have made Albertans proud. These men and women don't give up fighting for what they believe is right, and there is no question that getting that border reopened is the right thing. It's right for beef producers and consumers on both sides of the border, and, Mr. Speaker, it will happen.

Today I want to assure Albertans that this government is pledged to doing whatever it can, whatever it needs to do in order to speed the process along. Our Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is meeting with federal and provincial counterparts to develop a national response. He's in Ottawa as I speak. As well, the minister has instructed his department experts to continue working with Alberta producers on further steps to be taken to get the industry fully back on its feet.

Under the recovery plan announced by this government last year, expanded slaughter capacity is being developed right here in Alberta. We're working with industry on market and project development, work that has already led to over a dozen new Alberta-made beef products hitting the markets. Improved income support programs for producers are in place, programs designed to keep the overall cattle market running. Just this week the government announced that almost $40 million is being allocated to a prion research project. That project, of course, is to help better understand how BSE is spread and how to control the disease in livestock.

But we're not going to stop there. Given yesterday's court injunction, I will meet with the minister and others involved, my colleagues in cabinet, to discuss any further action necessary on the government's part. We will also work with our fellow provinces and the federal government to ensure that all necessary and possible steps are taken to restore open trade as quickly as possible. My government will press the USDA to appeal this injunction and quickly, and my government will meet with whomever necessary wherever necessary to discuss the harm to both countries caused by the decision.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that no member of this Assembly believe that yesterday's injunction has anything to do whatsoever with food safety or disease prevention as it relates to humans. Canadian beef has met or exceeded every international safety standard known to man and woman. Canadian testing systems have been reviewed repeatedly by national and international bodies and have been deemed to be more than adequate. It is clear that what has happened is the result of politics and protectionism not safety. It is not science. Therefore, I do not expect yesterday's decision to withstand the clear-eyed scrutiny of science or a rational approach to trade policy.

Mr. Speaker, as rightfully angry as Albertans are about the decision, I urge everyone to keep in mind who's at fault here. Our disagreement is with a small group – and I emphasize a small group – of protectionist cattle producers in the U.S. It is not with the U.S. administration nor the American President. The U.S. Secretary of Agriculture is on record that he supports an immediate reopening of the border, and I believe that he, not R-CALF, speaks for the President and his administration.

Alberta, I would remind all members, has a good, positive relationship and friendship with the U.S., and while we expect the U.S. to be good neighbours just as they expect us to be good neighbours, we must not jeopardize that friendship by seeking revenge. We must work with the U.S. administration if we are to be successful in having this injunction overturned. Mr. Speaker, our work on this vital matter begins immediately. That work will not end until cattle are moving freely in both directions between our two countries. That is the goal of this government. It is the goal of every member of this caucus and, I'm sure, the opposition caucuses, and it is a goal that we will not be swayed from until we have succeeded.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sure, like all the rest of us, I'm saddened that we have to rise again and face the need today to speak once more to the unnecessary suffering that is going on in rural Alberta as a result of the ongoing BSE crisis. Yesterday's Montana court decision to bring down a temporary injunction to prevent the reopening of the U.S. border to live Canadian cattle is just the latest blow to Alberta's farming communities. For almost two years this disease and the political reactions of governments at home and abroad have had a devastating impact on rural Alberta, not just farmers and ranchers and their families but implement dealers, truckers, and many of the other people whose livelihoods depend on the agricultural sector. Entire communities are struggling.

The decline of rural Alberta hit home once again for me while in Calgary last fall after I watched oil close at over $50 a barrel and then visited Olds the next day and discovered that times were so tough in that area that a food bank has been set up. It's a shame to see that for all the prosperity in Alberta people are still suffering.

The Alberta Liberal opposition has always supported farmers in rural communities. We want independently owned packing plants to be built in Alberta and slaughter capacities to be increased. The BSE crisis has proven that we cannot have all of our focus on the U.S. We need to seek out new markets for the high amount of product we have to export.

The Alberta Liberals believe that there's an alternative to the devastation of rural Alberta by supporting rural Alberta entrepreneurs. The Alberta government should provide infrastructure for water, roads, and land to help get small packing plants off the ground, set a 10 per cent cap on the monthly slaughter capacity of the big three packers coming from their self-owned herds, restrict market share and control of the market packers until healthy market conditions return. This may require capping process capacity of these companies and placing a moratorium on the purchase of Alberta-based processing companies.

The cattle industry was a vital part of Alberta well before this province came into existence. Beef producers and people working in related areas remain among Alberta's most important industries and serve as the backbone of rural Alberta. There are so many families relying on Alberta's cattle industry for their living that no Albertan can afford to ignore the BSE crisis and the devastation it has caused. We will do whatever we can and work with this government in any way possible to help bring this terrible situation to a positive conclusion.

I would urge the leaders of all parties of this Assembly to draft a resolution to be given unanimous consent by the Assembly urging the resumption of live cattle exports to the U.S.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to allow the leader of the NDP to reply to the Premier's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has once again proclaimed his dedication to the farmers and family farms of Alberta. Unfortunately, farmers can't eat words. From the beginning the government has put all its eggs into the basket of getting the American border reopened. They have consistently told Alberta farmers to be patient, that relief was on the horizon.

However, certain political realities have been obvious. It was obvious to most observers that opening the border would be determined by politics rather than by science. As we pointed out over a year ago, the reopening of the border would be delayed until after last year's presidential election. It was also clear that R-CALF was not giving up its lobbying efforts.

Despite obvious obstacles to border reopening, the government continued to sell farmers a troughful of false optimism, and the results on farmers have been disastrous. This government's practice or failure to protect farmers from a distorted marketplace, a concern raised in this Assembly by the NDP opposition, has forced families from their farms and forced farmers to take work to replace the income they should have been getting from raising cattle.

We know that the packers have continued to make hundreds of millions of dollars of excess profits at the expense of Alberta producers. With the recent announcement that the border will remain closed, the packers are poised to once again make profits from a dysfunctional marketplace.

Statistics Canada reported last year that Alberta's farm incomes had plummeted by almost 70 per cent. Reports of farm bankruptcies and rural decline are the clearest evidence of this devastation.

It's time to stop waiting for the border to reopen. It's time to protect beef producers against a monopolistic packing industry. It is time to address issues around testing and time to develop real protection for family farms and rural communities. In this sitting of the Legislature the NDP opposition will be proposing real solutions to the real problems faced by real farmers. They deserve no less.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to request unanimous consent of the House to respond to the minister's statement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, normally that matter would be dealt with according to the major caucuses in the House and the leaders of such caucuses. In the case of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner he is one member of one caucus and not the leader of the caucus, as I recall. However, a request has been made by the member, and unanimous consent is required.

The Speaker: Hon. Solicitor General, did you give notice to me as well that you would like to make a ministerial statement?

Mr. Cenaiko: I did.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

RCMP Drug Raid near Mayerthorpe

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a new minister I report to you and members of this Assembly a tragic situation. I understand that RCMP were conducting a raid near Mayerthorpe this morning, and they were met with gunfire. The latest information available to me indicates that this incident may be still ongoing as we speak, and details are still very unclear. My thoughts are with any officers or anyone else who may have been hurt during the raid this morning. In my previous experience as a police officer I know of the dangers involved in these kinds of incidents and the pressures and challenges faced by those who respond.

As Solicitor General I am gravely concerned with the level of illegal drug activities in Alberta. Albertans are thankful for the service provided by all officers in this province, and I along with my colleagues are praying for all individuals affected by this incident.

As well, together with the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, we have been briefed and will monitor the events as they unfold.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to participate.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have only the highest respect for members of the police forces of Alberta because they daily put their lives at great risk in order to protect Albertans and create communities in Alberta that are safe and secure. So we're quite obviously shocked and worried about the events that are unfolding near Mayerthorpe, and our prayers are with them.

It's fitting, Mr. Speaker, that this Assembly begins each day with prayer, acknowledging our dependence on a power not our own, so we pray for the officers involved, that they would have courage and that they would have healing. Now is not the time to talk about issues that we must face in the future, like the underfunding of our police service in Alberta and dealing with gangs. Now is the time to pray for these officers and their families, and our thoughts are with them.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin Oral Question Period today, I would like to provide a statement to hon. members with respect to the conduct of question period today and Monday and Tuesday.

All hon. members should have on their desk a copy of a memo that I forwarded to the various House leaders yesterday, but I would like on the record to share these comments as we proceed to the first Oral Question Period of the 26th Legislature.

First, for the information of new members the chair wants to quote from page 415 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice by Marleau and Montpetit about the nature and importance of Oral Question Period, where it is stated:

The right to seek information from the Ministry of the day and the right to hold that Ministry accountable are recognized as two of the fundamental principles of parliamentary government. Members exercise these rights principally by asking questions in the House. The importance of questions within the parliamentary system cannot be overemphasized, and the search for or clarification of information through questioning is a vital aspect of the duties undertaken by individuals Member.

The chair notes that there is no House leaders' agreement about the conduct of Oral Question Period. Accordingly, it falls to the chair to determine the rotation of questions.

In the interest of certainty for today, for Monday, March 7, and for Tuesday, March 8, the chair will follow the practice in place for the 25th Legislature. At the end of the daily Routine on Monday next the chair will invite members, any member, to make submissions concerning the rotation of questions. These are oral submissions; they need not be in writing. After hearing these submissions, the chair will rule on the operation of question period for the Legislature by 5:15 on Tuesday, March 8, 2005.

That means that for today, for Monday next, and for Tuesday next the Leader of the Official Opposition or his designate will be entitled to the first three questions. The leader of the New Democratic opposition or his designate will be entitled to the fourth question. A member from the government caucus will be entitled to the fifth question. The Official Opposition will be recognized for the sixth, eighth, and 10th questions and members of the government caucus for the seventh and ninth questions. The New Democratic opposition will be entitled to the 11th question. A member of the government caucus may ask the 12th question, the Official Opposition the 13th question, and a government member the 14th question. Following the chair's ruling of April 11, 2001, which governed the operation of the last Legislature, government members would be entitled to ask subsequent questions should there be any.

In terms of proportion of seats the Alliance member would be entitled to the 58th question each week, although we will not hit that number by the end of question period on Tuesday. The practice that has developed in Alberta is for each member asking a question to be entitled to a main question, which may include a preamble of a few comments, a couple of sentences maximum, and up to two supplementary questions with no preambles. The chair sees no reason to depart from this practice.

It has long been a concern of members that some questions and answers take up too much time. Members may be aware that the Canadian House of Commons has a 35-second time limit on questions and answers. The chair would like to see a similar system put in place in Alberta and would appreciate the contributions of members next Monday. For today, Monday, and Tuesday I will attempt to apply a 45-second rule. "Attempt to apply" are the operative words.

Another practice that will continue is that of caucuses submitting lists to the Speaker's office by 1 o'clock each day the Assembly sits of those members who wish to ask questions, and in accordance – always in accordance – with the practices and traditions of this Assembly the chair will retain discretion when it comes to recognizing members during question period.

The chair also understands that there may be some agreement amongst House leaders concerning members' statements and recognitions. While the chair recognizes the need to operate according to the will of the members, it must be done in accordance with the rules that govern the proceedings. In this case the chair is reluctant to depart from the requirements in Standing Orders until the appropriate amendments to those Standing Orders are passed or there is unanimous consent to waive those requirements.

Accordingly, unless the House decides to do otherwise, the chair will apply the rules from the last Legislature concerning members' statements. So as to provide for Standing Order 7(4), there'll be four members' statements today and next Tuesday, March 8. Today two will be by government members and two from the Official Opposition. Next Tuesday government members will be entitled to three members' statements and the Official Opposition to one.

On Monday, March 7, under Recognitions up to seven members other than members of Executive Council may make one-minute statements of congratulation or recognition. The chair will recognize five members of the government caucus and two members of the Official Opposition.

The chair will revisit the rotation of these items of business at the same time as the decision on the rotation of questions for Oral Question Period.

I hope that's as clear as it can possibly be. On Monday, before we call Orders of the Day, I am prepared to hear comments from any member in the House with respect to these three matters.

So we will now proceed.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: I'll recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ambulance Services

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Beginning with the provincial review in 2001, this government has been reviewing and studying ground ambulance services for almost four years, and now, just one month before they were to transfer responsibility, they cancelled the transfer, leaving municipalities scrambling and Albertans wondering whether they can rely on ambulance services. The government's mismanagement is not only irresponsible; it is quite possibly dangerous. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier guarantee here and now that this government will cover all municipal costs of delivering ambulance service in the next fiscal year so there is no interruption in the delivery of that service?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond in further detail.

We won't be writing blank cheques, but we will treat each municipality fairly. Our priority is to ensure that Albertans have access to a solid and dependable ambulance system this year wherever they live.

With that, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the continuity of patient care and public safety is uppermost in the minds of both the government and the regional health authorities and the municipalities. I have spoken with the Urban Municipalities Association, with the mayors of the two larger cities, and with a number of other municipal leaders and have assured them that we will consider their costs, that we will look very carefully at how we reimburse them, and that we will give a very definitive answer on the manner in which that reimbursement will come by next Tuesday.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier assure Albertans uninterrupted ambulance service when emergency workers in some areas of the province have already been given notice and are looking for other work?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true. Perhaps the Minister of Health and Wellness can shed some more light on it.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in fact, anecdotally I have been told that there are a number of employees that are either contract or are employed by the municipality that have already faced other job opportunities or have been relieved of their duties, and we will be working with those municipalities. Again, uppermost in our minds is the best interest of the patient, a continuity of patient care. Where there have been people that have incurred expense or disruption as a result of this change, then I would assure this Assembly that we will be addressing those matters.

Number one, Mr. Speaker, the most . . .

The Speaker: I think we're going to move on to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Evans: All right. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a mess.

Again to the Premier: given that this government has been working on reviewing and studying this issue for almost four years, why were there suddenly one month before the transfer unexpected costs of such great magnitude?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're trying to get to the bottom of why those costs escalated from $55 million to $128 million. That answer will be provided as soon as we have it.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I'm somewhat frustrated and a little bit perplexed as to why these costs have gone up because the ambulance review conducted by the hon. members for Calgary-Buffalo and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake took place I believe two and a half years ago. After a very careful and considered review of the multitude of ambulance services throughout the province they arrived at an average, as I understand it, that came out to $55 million. Adjusted for inflation to 2005, it would be slightly more but certainly not $128 million.

The reason I'm perplexed, Mr. Speaker, is that the intention was simply to leave ambulance service much the same way as it now is but have the regional health authorities co-ordinate the activities of ambulance services, recognizing – and I'm sure the hon. member agrees – that ambulance services are an integral part of the health system as opposed to fire departments and volunteer systems and so on.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Market Surveillance Administrator Review of Enron

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation has cost Albertans $8 billion – $8 billion – and now there's growing evidence that deregulation opened the door for market manipulation, costing Alberta energy consumers who knows how much more. This morning the market surveillance administrator announced that they are asking the federal Competition Bureau to reopen its investigation into Enron's Project Stanley scheme. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the market surveillance administrator and the federal Competition Bureau see the need for an inquiry, will this government now follow suit and launch a full independent public inquiry of its own?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite clear relative to the question. Is the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition asking us to launch an investigation into Enron or into the whole issue of electricity deregulation?

I'm not quite sure of the question, but maybe the hon. Minister of Energy is, and I'll have him respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that even in the deregulation this is also an example of how it worked in this sense. We have a market surveillance administrator, that monitors 24/7 all the irregularities. Through that period of time there were legislative hedges put in place while we were also giving experience so that the generators and everybody participating in deregulation could understand the new rules, new methodologies so that in case any odd variations happened in the marketplace, they would have a chance to legislatively by hedges protect the consumers. In this case Albertans have not been impacted in any significant financial way.

Dr. Taft: How do we know that?

Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: given that a former Tory Premier launched a public inquiry into the Principal affair, when the investments of hundreds of Albertans were lost, will this Premier follow the example of his predecessor and call a public inquiry into Alberta's entire electricity deregulation experience when so much more is at stake?

Ms Blakeman: Exactly. Do the right thing.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are doing the right thing, in response to a gratuitous comment from across the way. Electricity deregulation has worked. There have been some problems, admittedly, relative to billing by retail operators, but that has nothing to do with deregulation, which alludes only to the generation side of power. But I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the government make public the latest evidence that has sparked this new investigation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that it's prudent to speculate or attempt to interpret the information contained in the documents relative to the 1999 Enron fiasco, which occurred – as a matter of fact, I was in Houston at the time that all of this broke.

I would remind the hon. member that there is an industry watchdog. He alluded to the . . .

An Hon. Member: Lapdog.

Mr. Klein: "Watchdog," I said. Watchdog. That is the market surveillance administrator. He has the expertise to review the materials, and he and members of his agency have been diligent in requesting all the relevant documents relating to this particular incident, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that we let him get on with his work.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Government Aircraft

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this same time last year the Liberal opposition exposed and questioned the government on their blatant misuse of government aircraft. It seems that the government hasn't changed their ways at all, and in fact the abuse of the government aircraft has indeed increased. My questions are to the Premier. Since the government was questioned last year, have they implemented any measures to ensure more efficient and accountable use of government planes so that taxpayers are not burdened with the costs of empty or single occupancy flights?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the use of government aircraft is quite clearly to allow government members and members of the opposition who are on government committees to access all regions of the province in a timely manner.

Relative to the policy with respect to use of government aircraft I'll defer to the hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly attempt to fill up the plane as many times as we can. This morning at 7 o'clock there were 24 people that were flown to Calgary on the Dash 8. There will be 37 returning on the Dash 8 this afternoon. These people are flying down for an incredibly important land sale, which actually brings money into this government and into this province. It is absolutely critical for those of us who live in rural Alberta to have access to rural Alberta. If I were the Liberal opposition, I wouldn't want us as the government in rural Alberta either because we help rural Alberta.

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier: how can Albertans be assured that their tax dollars are not being wasted on flights for nongovernment reasons?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the policy is quite clear that the planes are to be used for government business. But, again, if there is any doubt in the mind of the hon. member of the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is absolutely right. The planes must be used for government business.

We do not delineate exactly what government business is. However, the ministers are held responsible for the booking of the airplanes to ensure that it is truly going for government business, and I trust the people on this side.

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier: will this government commit to tabling the flight logs in this Legislature so that all Albertans can see for themselves what their tax dollars are being used for?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question is an interesting one. You know, I don't know if one wants to be subjected to boxes and boxes and boxes full of information. As the hon. minister alluded to today, there is – I don't know – a whole Dash 8 planeload of people heading down to Calgary, as they do every week, for land sales. Certainly, if members of the Official Opposition want to know about flights, they can access that information through the regular freedom of information program and access the manifests that way. If the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has specific questions relative to the use of aircraft by myself or any other minister or member of government, I would invite him to direct those questions to me.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Less than one month before ground ambulance services were supposed to be transferred to regional health authorities, this Conservative government has brought the process to a screeching halt, thereby creating a province-wide emergency. The complete lack of an action plan along with a lowballing of the costs involved has been obvious for months. In fact, I drew attention to this looming emergency in November, but the government kept claiming that the transfer was on track. My question is to the Premier. How can the Premier assure Albertans that their safety has not been jeopardized by this completely botched transfer of ground ambulance services?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it has not been brought to a screeching halt. As a matter of fact, ambulances are running in Edmonton and Calgary and, indeed, throughout the province, and people are being transported to hospital. Just before coming in, I heard an ambulance siren, looked out the window, and there was an ambulance on the road, so obviously it hasn't come to a screeching halt.

Mr. Speaker, the review was done with all good intentions, and that was to find a way to bring ambulances into the health service, understanding that ambulances have evolved considerably over the last 20 or 25 or 30 years from being much more than a service to simply transport the sick and injured to being the first line of medical treatment, and we simply wanted to find a way to better coordinate under regional health authorities those services. It was determined that the cost initially would be $55 million. Somehow that ballooned to $128 million, and we need to examine why.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that two jurisdictions will go through a discovery relative to whether the system under the regional health authority works.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What action will the government take to make sure that the safety of citizens in communities like Wainwright is not put at risk since the paramedics and EMS personnel of the Wainwright ambulance society have already received their layoff notices effective at the end of this month?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the situation specific to Wainwright, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful to provide information to this Assembly. Our deputy is contacting the mayor in Wainwright to make sure that today we can make absolute arrangements, something that will ensure the continuity of service.

Mr. Speaker, the innovation and creativity of Albertans is never at question here. Although there has been, as the member described, a screeching halt of the transfer as it was originally intended, I can only anticipate what kind of criticism this government would have received had we proceeded where costs had apparently escalated three times the original estimates. We're trying to do the job properly, and our discovery over this next year will assure Albertans that it's not only a good service but that it's responsibly funded and provided for.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why is the Premier expressing surprise and frustration over the situation relative to ambulances when I raised this looming mess three and a half months ago, including specifically the woefully inadequate $55 million allocation? At the time his government denied any problem whatsoever.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there were audited statements at the time that the survey was done, and I said that adjusted for inflation, $55 million appeared to be reasonable, understanding the simplicity, in my mind, of what we wanted to achieve, and that is that ambulance services would ostensibly remain the same but would be governed and controlled by the regional health authorities. How it ballooned from $55 million to $128 million is what is perplexing to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Border Closure to Canadian Beef

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Montana court ruling that will leave the border closed to Canadian cattle dealt a devastating blow to our industry and our economy. My questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who is also responsible for trade policy. Can he update this House on the status of the proposed rule on live cattle trade given the current situation in Montana and the other actions taken today in the U.S. Senate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier said earlier today, all Albertans were obviously very disappointed with the ruling of the lone Montana judge. However, we firmly believe that the U.S. government will stand by their word, not only Secretary of Agriculture Johanns but also the President, to ensure that the border does open. These are court proceedings that'll take a bit of time, but we firmly believe that the American government is on our side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary is again to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What action is the Alberta government taking at this time to address this issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we do have legal counsel in Washington. We do have our envoy in Washington as well as our minister of agriculture working with the federal minister in Ottawa to ensure that we expedite the opening of the border. About February 2 and 3 the minister of agriculture, my colleague, and I personally met with a number of key officials from the American government. We talked about basing the decision on science and not emotion, and we were supported at every meeting, including the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Advanced Education Tuition Costs

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Speech from the Throne yesterday confirms the government's intention to overhaul its postsecondary tuition policy for the fourth time in 14 years, a clear and ongoing admission of failure to address the issue of affordable advanced education in the province of Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. How can the minister assure Albertans and their sons and daughters that this review will produce a policy that's any better than last year's new and improved policy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, access to postsecondary education is very important for all Albertans, particularly as we move to implement the strategic plan and make sure that opportunities that Albertans have can be achieved because they have access to the education they need. So we'd need to review the policy for both access and affordability.

It goes beyond tuition, Mr. Speaker, because in many circumstances the costs of going to school, whether you have to move from a rural area or whether you have to even move from one urban area to another, are perhaps even higher than the cost of tuition. So it's not just review of the tuition policy. It's review of affordability and review of how you finance that education. It's an understanding that there's a contribution made by society, an important benefit to society, Albertans being educated but also the need for students and their families to participate in the cost of education. So it's a review of the tuition policy, but it's broader than that. It's a review of affordability and how it's financed.

Mr. Taylor: To the same minister: what role, if any, will the proposed $3 billion access to the future fund play in holding the line on tuitions beyond the academic year 2005-2006 freeze on tuitions?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the access to the future fund is not designed to hold the line on tuition freeze or to be part of the ongoing operating budgets of the institutions. It's designed to ensure that there are better opportunities for access, better opportunities for affordability. That might be by way of, for example, people who want to contribute to setting up an endowment for scholarships or bursaries or rural access funds or those sorts of things. So it can play a role in financing, but it wouldn't play a role in holding the line on tuition fees or in the operating budgets of institutions.

Mr. Taylor: One final supplementary to the same minister, then, Mr. Speaker. Does this freeze mean that the minister thinks tuition fees in Alberta are too high?

The Speaker: Well, opinions are really not relevant in the question period, but if the minister wants to proceed, he can.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what's important is that many students across this province believe that tuition costs are getting out of hand. It's very clear that students and their families are concerned about the cost of education, and when students and their families are concerned about the cost of education, their government is concerned about the cost of education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister provide the House with an update on the softwood lumber dispute between Canada and the United States?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since the House last adjourned, there have been a number of court and trade challenges. The latest one is the extraordinary challenge under NAFTA, and we are awaiting the decision. In the meantime, remember that when the House adjourned, the tariff duties were about 28 per cent, and there was some hope that the Americans would reduce those tariffs substantially. Unfortunately, they reduced them to about 21 per cent. Presently they're sitting on more than $3 billion of tariffs on the other side of the border.

We are awaiting the results of the first track, which is the litigation, and we will work on the second track, which is under the responsibility of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, in terms of looking at some policy renewal. But at the end of the day we want our money back.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Can he tell the House when this softwood lumber dispute will be resolved?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are now completing the fourth challenge. I suspect and it's the feeling of the industry and of governments on both sides that we may, as soon as this litigation is complete, enter into the fifth challenge. That is the reason why we're working with our federal counterpart and the industry and our minister responsible to try and find some sort of consultation process to maybe bring this to an end before another legal challenge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How is this ongoing dispute affecting our Alberta forest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The softwood lumber trade dispute is challenging, certainly, to our province's forestry industry but, more importantly, to the people that work in that industry and the close to 50 communities in this province that produce dimensional lumber. Fifty per cent of the dimensional lumber that is produced in this province goes into the international marketplace, the majority of that into the United States, and we're very concerned about how this trade dispute will have an effect on these communities as well as on our industry.

I can assure the Member for West Yellowhead that we will continue to work with the industry, particularly the Softwood Lumber Trade Council, and our colleagues at intergovernmental affairs as well as with the federal government to make sure that we can come up with some long-term solutions to this dispute for the betterment of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Grizzly Bear Hunt

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the deadline for applications to be included in the random draw for the spring grizzly bear hunt to commence this April. This hunt is being continued despite the warnings of the government's own grizzly bear recovery team as well as the warnings of conservation groups which call for the spring bear hunt to be postponed due to the low numbers of grizzly bears in Alberta. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is this government refusing to listen to the findings of their own experts and allowing the grizzly bear hunt to continue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The endangered species committee that was set up by the former Minister of Sustainable Resource Development asked us to look into a number of things, and this was three years ago. They asked us to look at including designation of the species as it's threatened. They also indicated that there was no indication of declining numbers at this point in time and that the hunt really and truly has no significant factor in the population itself. As a result, we took a very cautious and a very conservative approach to the management of grizzly bears in this particular province. [interjection] Absolutely right. The job that we have in Sustainable Resource Development is to monitor and make sure that we put conservation methods in place for the future of the grizzly bear in this province.

Mr. Bonko: A supplemental question again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that new evidence indicates that the death of one female grizzly bear can have serious repercussions, won't the minister suspend the hunt?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member is speaking about a study that came out of the University of Calgary for which members of Sustainable Resource Development provided information. The threat to grizzly bears in and around the park of Banff and south to Montana was based on the reproduction of the grizzly bears, and we have taken those kinds of studies into account when we took a look at the number of grizzly bears. Along with our DNA consensus, that is the best way of finding out how many grizzly bears there are in the province, we have made the proper decision that from highway 1 south to Montana and over to the British Columbia border as well as in the Willmore area there will be no hunt. We will do hunting in areas where we know that the populations can sustain themselves.

Mr. Bonko: Third question, Mr. Speaker. When will this government take action to save an endangered species from extinction?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, what we need to do is continue with bear management on the ground. We want to see bears remain on the landscape, and the best way for us to do that is to conserve and to monitor and make sure that grizzly bear species are here for many, many years to come. Some of the things we put in place as a result of the recovery team are appropriate, things like DNA consensus so that we know the actual numbers and we can actually tell what the numbers were, but more importantly poaching fines: $100,000 if someone is caught poaching. That is a huge policy that was put in place to make sure that we have this resource for the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Climate Change Technology

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. In his budget the federal government seemed to follow the lead of the Alberta government in emphasizing the role of technology in addressing climate change. What is Alberta doing to develop technology to contribute to the fight against climate change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans, like all Canadians, want a healthy and sustainable environment, and technology is a key in terms of a solution in terms of helping the environment that we all live in. Investment in technology in Alberta universities, in research institutions is so critical in terms of today and into the future but at the same time maintaining a vibrant economy. I just want to say that the best way, I believe, to address climate change – and we've shown the Alberta leadership – is rather than buying a piece of paper and having money leave Canada, we believe it's best used in investing right here in Alberta at our own universities, that are true excellence across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary question to the Environment minister: is this technology in the future, or is it something which is happening right now?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, one thing about the Alberta attitude is that it's somewhat like one of the sporting associations' commercial that says: let's just do it. That's exactly what Alberta is doing. If I could use an example for you, in Joffre we are showcasing the technology to capture and store carbon dioxide. This is so important. We're investing in such areas as clean coal, the use of CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery, and hydrogen fuels in partnership with many stakeholders across this province and this country. From a pan-Canadian approach clearly Alberta is playing an important role in this technology initiative we're taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. When will we see commitment and action on reducing greenhouse gasses?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, that's a very good question by the hon. member. Mr. Speaker, we are the first province in Canada to pass in this Legislative Assembly legislation called the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. It was done right here, so I congratulate every member of this House who participated in that important law.

I also want to say that in terms of Alberta government buildings that are fuelled, are you aware that 90 per cent of the energy is through renewable energy sources. How much? Ninety per cent of the energy is through renewable energy sources, and that's because of technology, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About 31,500 Albertans with severe disabilities rely on the AISH program to survive. Right now that assistance includes a maximum cash benefit of $850 a month. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: when can AISH recipients expect that long-overdue increase in their monthly cheques?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite raises a very important issue. It is about the assured income program for the severely handicapped.

As you know, there was a review that commenced in September of 2004, and I'd like to begin, actually, by thanking the chair of the review committee, the hon. Member for Strathcona, as well as members that were on the committee from Calgary-Bow and from Calgary-Nose Hill. That report has been submitted to me, I can tell the Member for Lethbridge-East, just within the past two weeks. I am reviewing the recommendations of the report. They are important, and a part of that is the financial benefit that you have referred to in your question. I can tell you this: I will be getting back to the Assembly and releasing the report to the public in the near future.

Ms Pastoor: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will this government tie the AISH rate increase to the Alberta consumer index, the market-basket measure, or some other calculation of living costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the living allowance that the hon. member is referring to in the report is very important and on the minds of people who are currently receiving the AISH benefit, but I can tell you this: there were many suggestions from Albertans. There were over 18,000 submissions that the committee reviewed, and those suggestions were excellent in that they asked for a renewal of the AISH program. In that renewal package, which I'm currently reviewing, are a number of recommendations, and this very well could be one of those recommendations. Thank you.

Ms Pastoor: Again to the same minister: when will the Renewing AISH report be actually made public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned to the hon. member when we met – I think a couple of weeks ago we had the opportunity to meet – I am fast-tracking the report. As I indicated to you, hon. member, I am currently reviewing the recommendations, and the report will be released to the public in the near future. It will be during this session. I am trying to tie it in with the budget and the fiscal year, so you will see it soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Beef Recovery Strategy

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's cruelly ironic that in the throne speech reference to renewed optimism in rural Alberta came the same day as the news that the U.S. border will remain closed to Alberta cattle. The Conservatives seem to have a one-point plan of action for dealing with the BSE crisis: hope and pray for a quick reopening of the U.S. border. Meanwhile, for two years nothing has been done to prevent the two big American-owned meat packers from profiting at the expense of cattle producers. My question is to whoever is second in command. Does the government have a plan B to deal with the continued closure of the U.S. border to Alberta cattle, and if so, what is it?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could certainly understand, as the member wasn't in the Assembly over the last period of years and is new to the Assembly, that he would not be as familiar with the six-point plan that in fact was introduced last fall, late summer. That six-point plan was built on the basis of the border not opening. It was not dependent on a border opening.

For the member's information, because I think he's truly interested in rural Alberta, I would reiterate very quickly some of the comments that the Premier made. We have increased our slaughter capacity in Canada over 20 per cent. In fact, last year were the highest slaughter numbers that we have had in the history of the industry. We have over a dozen – the last count I had was before Christmas – 16 new beef products on the shelf by Alberta companies and entrepreneurs, advanced work in marketing into new markets.

Mr. Speaker, cattle prices are as high or higher on the calf and yearling market than they've ever been. Fat prices are being held because of the program that was put in place in Alberta for feed and basis. If the hon. member would like to discuss that further, I'd be happy to talk to him about it.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we don't know when that border is going to open, the six-point plan doesn't mean anything right now. My question to the minister is simply this. What are the plans, other than the six-point plan, if this doesn't open and stays that way indefinitely?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member misses the point. The six-point plan does not hinge on the border opening. In fact, what it plans on by this fall is Canada being totally self-sufficient in slaughter and not dependent on the U.S. market. [some applause]

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, we can pound all we want, but the reality is – then if we're talking about slaughter capacity, my final question is: why has the Alberta government continued to block efforts by groups like the Peace Country Tender Beef Co-op to expand value-added meat packing in Alberta? They'll be setting up in Dawson Creek in B.C. How do they justify that?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond to that, and I in fact would be pleased to ask the hon. minister of agriculture to table the work that was done with Peace Country because, in fact, we did work with them. Their decision to move was their decision, and I would remind him that Dawson Creek is not very far across the Alberta border. We're talking about Canadian slaughter capacity.

I would remind him that at Sunterra 800 head a day will be up and running this fall and of recent announcements about a cow plant in southern Alberta. We hope there'll be more in the north. I remind the hon. member again that our slaughter capacity has increased over 20 per cent, the highest it's ever been in this country in the history of the industry, in these recent months, and it's being done because of the initiatives that we put in place well over a year ago to ensure that slaughter capacity increased. He might want to write to another government in this country and ask why the delay in their portion of it.

Youth Residential Drug Treatment

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, there is a battle raging in our province and in our country for the hearts and minds of our children. Children addicted to drugs or alcohol are torn away from their families and all that is good into a life of crime, sickness, and death. The government of Alberta has received a growing number of requests to address the increasing demand for youth detoxification and residential treatment services. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the Ministry of Health and Wellness provide funding for youth residential treatment facilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North about the scourge of drugs and increasing addictions that are facing our young people. The exact amounts for funding have not been determined yet for the 2005-06 year, but I've consulted with the chair of AADAC, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, about expanding addiction services. Currently there are several outpatient services.

I think what the hon. member is looking at are some more intensive, secure types of treatments. Mr. Speaker, with the professionals from AADAC and in conjunction with other ministries, we're looking at the opportunities we have to actually expand in communities in Alberta and take a giant step forward to healing young people.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Children's Services: since this is a cross-ministry concern, will Children's Services provide support for youth residential treatment facilities in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the hon. member that if a child is in the care of Children's Services, we do provide alcohol treatment. For example, we are partnered with AADAC on the Chimo Healing Home, which provides addiction treatment. For example, if it's the protection of children involved in child prostitution and they enter one of our safe houses, we treat their addiction in that way.

The hon. member brings up some good points, and we'll continue to work with the partners that we need to on this very serious issue.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, since this is a cross-ministry concern, my third question was to the Solicitor General to ask for support for our youth treatment centres. However, he has been called out of the Assembly to deal with a very serious situation related to drugs.

The Speaker: I take it there was no question there then.

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently revealed evidence from a court case in Washington state indicates that Enron may have conspired with other companies to manipulate electricity prices here in Alberta, a scheme Enron dubbed Project Stanley. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How long has this government been aware of Project Stanley?

Mr. Melchin: Project Stanley was an acronym that came to light. There have been a number of acronyms used, I guess, but the latest information was just recently, back in February, when the market surveillance administrator talked about Project Stanley. We didn't know really what that meant per se. So it's new information.

On the latest, that came out today, I've got to congratulate the market surveillance administrator. They have been proactive in getting the information from this court case that's going on in Washington at the present stage and were asked if they would give complete disclosure as to any relevant information. Some of the facts that came out – I don't know if they're facts. It's just transcripts of phone conversations, so that doesn't necessarily mean what facts you have. You just have a discussion and a dialogue that's going on. Out of that, there was some thought that we ought to continue. We will be proactive. If there's any abuse in the system, the market surveillance system will act on behalf of Albertans to ensure that all Albertans are protected in electricity.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is it the market surveillance administrator's role to manufacture confidence in electricity deregulation or protect electricity consumers from price gougers and market manipulators like Enron?

Mr. Melchin: The good news about the market surveillance administrator is that even as far back as when this story first hit, in 1999, they acted on it. Watching as the watchdog on behalf of Albertans, they actually did investigate this back in 1999. This is just old information that is coming to the forefront because of a court case in Washington today. They did act, but Albertans were always protected because of legislative hedges that were in place during that time such that no one would really benefit if in the design and transition to new rules Albertans would be impacted. They have acted appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can this government and this minister claim that the Enron investigation in 1999 by the market surveillance administrator is adequate, that it's enough, when new evidence has been uncovered and this new evidence is for the years 2000 and 2001 in regard to Project Stanley? How can you tell this Assembly that the market surveillance administrator and that system is working?

Mr. Melchin: It's important to note that Albertans have been protected back then, now, and in the future with respect to the role of the market surveillance administrator. They have acted very proactively in that regard. The information that's coming forward is in fact relating still to the 1999 issue. It does relate to that, and it is they themselves that have asked the Competition Bureau to further investigate. It is part of their role to ask for further investigation if there was an impropriety. But even with that new information, it's too soon to assess if there was any wrongdoing. It is only some information that's come forward. We do not yet, even at this stage, have all the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mount Royal College

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Now that he has received the request from Mount Royal College to change its status to a university, I'd like to know what steps the minister will be taking to grant that request.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to review a considerable amount of information with respect to the proposal by Mount Royal College to achieve university status. I must say that it's an interesting and unique proposal and has a lot of facets which are important to the whole postsecondary system in this province. I've met with the president of Mount Royal College and the chairman of its board as recently as yesterday. I've assured them that we will take a very thorough review of their proposal, and we will review that proposal in the context of the overall postsecondary system in the province. The college, of course, has to look out for its own strategic plan and its aspirations and goals. Our role is to make sure it fits into the continuum of education opportunities for students in southern Alberta and particularly in Calgary.

So we will be reviewing it in the context of the system. We'll be discussing the concerns of other members of the system, looking to see whether it's in the best interests of students in Calgary and southern Alberta, looking to see whether by making that change it creates any holes, creates any problems for students in other program opportunities, and whether it adds value.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the minister. I'd ask him if it's his intention to hold public consultations in the city of Calgary with groups such as the students' union and the faculty before granting this request.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've indicated to all players in the postsecondary system that I intend to work collaboratively with them, to have open, frank, and honest discussions with them about any changes, any moves that we make. We've started that process by virtue of a meeting that I held at Government House on January 19 with a broad cross-section of the system and followed it up with meetings with board chairs. I intend to continue that type of a collaborative process. At the January 19 meeting we had representatives of faculty associations and of student associations at the meeting, and we'll continue that process.

I wouldn't at this time intend to hold a public type of meeting but certainly intend to collaborate and discuss with each of the players in the postsecondary system in Calgary and, quite frankly, across the province because the interest and questions come not just from the Calgary area but also from rural colleges, from other institutions across the province as to what impact, if any, the change in status might have on them.

Mr. Liepert: My final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the minister. Since Calgary is the largest city in Canada represented by only one university, what is his timetable for granting this request?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's of course an important question to be determined and important to be determined on a timely basis. This discussion and the request have been in the works, I think, for a period of at least a year and a half, possibly two years, so it's important that they get a determination quickly. I have indicated to them that I will try and make sure that that happens as quickly as possible. We need to have the full and complete discussion. They need to have an answer by early May. We'll try and accomplish both the full and complete discussion and their timeline if at all possible.

The Speaker: That'll conclude the question period today.

I want to thank all hon. members for their co-operation. Today we had 14 hon. members who could participate, which is very good, very large. In essence, if you just took 14 members times three questions, that's 42, but two members only asked two, so in essence there were 40 exchanges. That's pretty good in a 50-minute question period. That would be really wonderful if we could continue this on a daily basis and all members would really be able to participate.

Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'm going to call on four members to participate. I'll call first of all on the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Before calling on the hon. Member for Strathcona, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that I've managed to collect my heart and put it back in my chest where it belongs, I'm grateful to have the opportunity to do this again. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a longtime Liberal Party volunteer and most recently the chair of the very successful Edmonton leader's dinner, Mr. Keith Meagher, who is seated in the public gallery. I would ask that he receive the warm welcome of all members of the House.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Sorry. Strathcona, period. I've got to get used to that.

World's Longest Hockey Game

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 10 days, 4,457 goals, and one mangled finger, Dr. Brent Saik and his 39 fellow hockey players skated to a Guinness world record, completing the world's longest hockey game on February 21, 2005. Played in Strathcona county on an outdoor rink at Dr. Saik's acreage, known as Saiker's Acres, the players fought injury, exhaustion, and the weather to battle it out for 240 straight hours of play, beating the old record of 203 hours. Referees ensured that the world's longest hockey game was played according to official NHL rules. Dr. Saik and his teammates tripled their own previous record of 80 hours set in 2003.

More impressive than their endurance was their dedication to raising funds for pediatric cancer research at the Cross cancer research centre. In 2003 Dr. Saik and his teammates raised $140,000 and have already raised over $100,000 this year, with donations still coming in.

Dr. Saik's hockey dream was almost finished before it started when he sliced off the tip of his middle finger while working on the Zamboni prior to the start of the game. Luckily, he was able to have it bandaged up just in time to make it back for the game-starting faceoff at 12:13 p.m. on February 11.

I and thousands of Albertans had the opportunity to go and watch parts of the game, which was open to the public all day every day. It was good to see the dedication and perseverance with which these players played the equivalent of an entire season. Without a doubt the funds raised for cancer research meant as much to the players as the record they helped to set. Pictures of family members who had battled with cancer were placed under the ice surface to help remind players of their commitment.

I'd like to thank Dr. Brent Saik and his teammates for their commitment to hockey but more so for their firm belief that we will one day, hopefully soon, find a cure for a disease that has prematurely taken so many loved ones from us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My apologies. It is the Member for Strathcona.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Rotary International

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One week ago yesterday marked the 100th anniversary of the meeting of the very first service club. Rotary International was founded in Chicago on February 23, 1905, by Paul Harris and three business associates. In the 100 years that have followed, Rotary International has grown to include 1.2 million Rotarians world-wide belonging to 31,000 clubs in 166 countries.

From the very first project, which was a public comfort house in downtown Chicago, to the unprecedented response to the tsunami in southeast Asia last December the Rotary has truly been there when nature called. Whether responding to natural calamity, disease, famine, poverty, or local community needs, Rotarians have a 100-year history of putting service above self.

Over 200,000 young people have been the beneficiaries of the Rotary youth exchange program, while tens of thousands have participated in the ambassadorial scholarship program. Since 1985 when the PolioPlus program was initiated, more than $500 million have been raised to immunize more than 2 billion children world-wide, resulting in the near eradication of this dreadful disease.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the generous gift of $56,000 from this government and the people of Alberta, which will help to pay for the making of a compact disc which profiles last week's gala celebration held at the Winspear Centre. I know that all Rotarians and past Rotarians in the Assembly today would invite all Albertans to join us in congratulating the family of Rotary International for their wonderful achievements and in wishing them well as they begin their second century of service to humanity.

Mr. Speaker, if I may quote Sir Winston Churchill, a Rotarian from the Rotary Club of London, England, and if I might mention that he was a parliamentarian of some note himself, he said: what is the use of living if it be not to make this world a better place for those who will live in it after we are gone?

Happy 100th birthday, Rotary.

The Speaker: Just out of interest, would the Rotarians in the Assembly kindly identify themselves? One, two, three, four, five. There are more than that. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, I believe, is one as well. Impressive.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Proliferation of Drug Abuse

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are facing a problem in this province that does not discriminate according to race, colour, religion, sex, or socioeconomic status. It is a problem that has existed in one form or another for a long time but has now grown to a size where more measures are needed to control it. This problem is the proliferation of dangerous drugs and the effects they are having on our children.

We see drug busts in the news, each one seemingly larger. Just today the Solicitor General gave a very grim report about a gunfight near Mayerthorpe, with a number of police officers no longer responding to their radios. We hear of grow operations worth millions of dollars and meth labs big enough to blow up entire city blocks if not handled carefully.

We need to take a tough stance against those responsible for these illegal enterprises. Criminals are taking bigger risks because of the bigger rewards. They do not fear our justice system. They rob us of our children and take away their innocence. We need to target organized crime since they are the fuel that is feeding our kids' addiction fires. We need to target the federal government and convince them that federal drug laws are weak and in desperate need of change. We need to come together as a community because it does take a whole community to raise a child.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's parents deeply and unconditionally love their children, and it is hurting them intensely to watch them fall victim to addiction. These parents have the courage they need to help their children overcome their addictions. They have the will and determination to see the process through. What they lack are legal tools, and when Alberta's parents are given the legal tools to help their children, added to their courage and determination, we will all reap the benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Freedom to Read Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak in recognition today of Freedom to Read Week, which is sponsored by the Freedom of Expression Committee in Canada and was celebrated the final week in February. Freedom to Read Week is primarily an educational opportunity to have people understand that even in Canada, even in Alberta we do not always enjoy intellectual freedom. The Freedom of Expression Committee organizes Freedom to Read Week and encourages Canadians to think about and reaffirm their commitment to intellectual freedom, which is guaranteed them under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Freedom of Expression Committee produces an information kit and website every year, and the Calgary Freedom of Expression Committee presents an annual award honouring freedom of expression. This year it was presented to my colleague the new MLA for Calgary-Mountain View. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View was particularly honoured for his work with the antiwar protest movement, including his co-founding of the Canadian Network to End Sanctions in Iraq, now known as Canadian Democracy and International Law, and for his work in promoting the Kyoto protocol and linking it to health issues.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View understands better than most that intellectual freedom can carry dire consequences. As medical officer for the Palliser health authority he was released from his job for speaking out in favour of the Kyoto protocol. His journey from that day two years ago to his taking his seat in this Legislature today on this first sitting day of the 26th Legislature is a story of personal integrity, hope, and advocacy.

We Members of the Legislative Assembly have a special privilege in this Assembly guaranteeing our freedom of speech. I ask all of you to help those outside this Assembly to achieve, enjoy, and protect that same right. And my personal thanks to the Freedom of Expression Committee in Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a petition signed by 401 Albertans from Fox Creek, Grande Prairie, High Prairie, Red Deer, Valleyview, Vermilion, Stettler, Sunset House, and many other areas urging the government to institute a fair and equitable minimum floor price for cattle that would be flexible to meet the changing needs of the cattle industry, including cow-calf producers, and curb the excessive profits of the major meat packers in the current dysfunctional market.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. Petition?

Ms Pastoor: I'm sorry; I'm new.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because the person that our leader had introduced earlier was actually not in the gallery, may I have your indulgence to introduce to you and through you Carol Weatherdon, the lady behind the petition I am about to present to you.

The Speaker: Do all hon. members agree that we can proceed to this introduction?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I would like to introduce to you and through you Carol Weatherdon, who is in the gallery and is the lady behind this petition.

Thank you.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 4,175 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to

1. significantly increase the amount of the AISH monthly benefit; and
2. adjust AISH benefits on an annual basis to reflect changes in the rate of inflation.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a Standing Order 40 application.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice that I plan to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 40 at the appropriate time in the proceedings. I am sending the appropriate number of copies of the motion to the table for distribution.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper also do stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to table the requisite copies of a review entitled Coverage of Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta from the Alberta Risk Management Fund. Also, members will see under Notices of Motions on Monday's Order Paper a motion for this report to be referred to the Members' Services Committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to table three different documents. This first is in fact a letter addressed to you, written by me, and delivered earlier today seeking clarification on the authority of the Chief Justice in her role as Administrator of this Legislature as well as in respect to her participation in the legal decision which determined who would serve as MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Speaker's Ruling
Tabling Correspondence to the Speaker

The Speaker: Hon. member, just a second. It's really, really strange. The chair will deal with hon. members in a very private and confidential manner, and members should be aware that if they convey anything to the chair, it will be dealt with that way. Never once would the chair ever consider making public correspondence or verbal statements made to the chair from any hon. member. If the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition wants to make public correspondence to the chair, he can do so. The chair will not deal with this matter outside of this Assembly. The member should know that. The chair also is in no position to provide legal opinions to anyone. That's clearly prohibited by all of the rules.

Proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second tabling is a letter to the Premier, delivered to him on February 28, urging him to review the Election Act of Alberta through an all-party committee.

My third tabling is documents from a constituent of mine operating a business called the Bon Ton Bakery outlining a new line of products he provides, encouraging healthy choices to address diabetes for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you want to come back?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article printed in the Calgary Sun on March 2 of this year. The article quotes Calgary Mayor Dave Bronconnier objecting to accusations that municipalities were inflating the cost of ambulance services.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table a document from Frontier Economics of Cambridge, Massachusetts, labelled Privileged and Confidential Communication with Counsel, regarding Project Stanley.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter to the Hon. Anne McLellan, Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, expressing my concerns about the closing of the RCMP forensics lab in Edmonton.

Also, I would like to table a letter from my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning expressing his objections and problems with the lack of wisdom in closing this very important RCMP forensics laboratory "as a cost-saving measure."

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a series of tablings I have to make today. Pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 37th annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2003, to March 31, 2004.

Pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-23 of the 2000 Revised Statutes of Alberta I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner for the period April 1, 2003, to March 31, 2004.

Pursuant to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2003.

I table with the Assembly the report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. former Member for Edmonton-Norwood, Mr. Gary Masyk, dated July 20, 2004.

Pursuant to section 63(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000, chapter F-25 and section 95(1) of the Health Information Act and section 44(1) of the Personal Information Protection Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. The report covers the activities of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner covering the period April 1, 2003, to March 31, 2004.

I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 17th annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office of Alberta for the calendar year ended December 31, 2003, and financial statements for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003. This report represents the audited financial statements for the 2002-2003 fiscal year and the seventh annual report of the Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Under Standing Order 7(5) I'd like to ask the Government House Leader if he would be so kind as to share the projected government business for the week beginning the 7th of March.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are no bills on the Order Paper at the moment, I will take some licence and indicate which bills might be introduced as well as the government business.

On Monday, March 7, in the afternoon under Introduction of Bills it would be our intention to introduce Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act; Bill 3, the City of Lloydminster Act; Bill 4, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005; Bill 5, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2005; Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005; and Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. It's my understanding that Bill 201 and Bill 202 might well be introduced at that time as well. Because of the fact that those bills have not been introduced as yet, there may not be business available for the House under private members' business on Monday afternoon, and if that's the situation, then it would be our intention to ask for consent to use that time to speak to government business, being the reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Monday evening at 9 under Government Bills and Orders government motions that are on notice now with respect to supply, Committee of the Whole, adjournment, and spring recess might well be addressed, as well as address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On Tuesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders it's anticipated that there may be messages delivered from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor with respect to supplementary supply. Also, under Government Motions, then, supplementary supply motions with respect to referral to Committee of Supply, and the number of days in Committee of Supply would be proposed. The remainder of the day would be spent in address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and possibly in the introduction for second reading of Bill 1 as introduced by the hon. the Premier yesterday. Tuesday evening at 8 under Government Bills and Orders address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and potentially second reading of Bill 1 and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 9, under Government Bills and Orders again address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Wednesday, March 9, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, potentially Committee of Supply, and potentially day 1 of two proposed days for supplementary supply.

Thursday, March 10, under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, supplementary supply, day 2 of two days.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to soon recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to proceed with a Standing Order 40 application. I would direct all hon. members to Standing Order 40 in your Standing Orders. Hon. members will be requested to vote.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ambulance Services Funding

Ms Blakeman:

Be it resolved that this Assembly urge the government to provide all necessary funding to municipalities to cover the operation of ambulance services for the 2005-2006 fiscal year so as to maintain uninterrupted ambulance services and ensure that no municipality is put into a position of hardship as a result of this government's decision to cancel the transfer of ground ambulance services from municipalities to regional health authorities.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to present arguments under Standing Order 40. I believe we have the situation in place to address the urgency required by this motion. Standing Order 40 indicates that "in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover," the House will give unanimous consent without notice having been served under Standing Order 38, which would allow us to proceed with the motion. I have had the motion distributed to everyone, and I'm assuming that they all have it now.

I think there is no matter more pressing than addressing the services that Albertans rely on when they are sick and in desperate need of medical attention. The urgencies in this case, Mr. Speaker, are several, and I will proceed to outline them.

The new fiscal year and the original deadline of April 1 for the transfer of ambulance services is fast approaching. We are now less than one month away. This creates a fiscal urgency for those municipalities. The Legislature has not sat for over nine months. This is the first day, the first opportunity, we have had to raise the issue in the Assembly since the problems with the government's plan to transfer responsibility became apparent.

There are no government bills or motions on the Order Paper that deal specifically with this issue. There has been nothing raised through the projected government business that would lead us to believe that it might be addressed quickly. The provincial budget has yet to be given a date and at this point, I believe, is too far off to bring any certainty or financial relief to the municipalities in the short term or, indeed, before the April 1 deadline at all.

Some municipalities such as Edmonton have already budgeted on the direction from the provincial government that the government would be picking up the tab for the transfer and operation of ambulance services so that these municipalities should redeploy funding. They will be left in a fiscal hole, a fiscal deficit, if no solution is found in time.

We did ask questions in the number one position in question period today, but the question period format is not sufficient to explore this issue at length, and indeed that runs against the purpose of question period.

Mr. Speaker, the House does not sit tomorrow, and by the next sitting day, we would gather, four more days will have gone by without a resolution to this crisis. There is an urgency of public health and confidence in the public health system and delivery of ambulance services. Thousands of people rely on ambulance services each and every year in Alberta. There is a risk to the health and safety of these individuals if we cannot come to a successful consensus on the delivery of ambulance services.

The case for urgency couldn't be summed up any better than in the words of Garry Zinga, the administrator for the ambulance society in Wainwright, who is quoted as saying: it's unconscionable to think that there wouldn't be an ambulance service in this region; I don't know what we're going to do and who's going to provide it.

I ask for the Assembly's agreement to this Standing Order 40 request to allow us to debate and accept the motion that I have proposed. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I move that this Assembly consider the debate on the speech of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, colleagues, yesterday we heard the new Lieutenant Governor, His Honour Norman Kwong, deliver his first ever Speech from the Throne. Before replying to that speech, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say how fortunate we are to have someone of Mr. Kwong's legendary character represent this Assembly and the people of Alberta. There is no forgetting the outpouring of sorrow and sympathy at the loss of Mr. Kwong's predecessor, the Hon. Lois Hole. Her good humour, easy grace, and undeniable compassion endeared her to all Albertans. Lois Hole set new standards for anyone elected or appointed to a public office. I think Dr. Hole would be pleased to know that the duty she has left behind, the people she had yet to met, and the responsibility she worked so diligently to fulfill will be so ably and respectfully attended to by His Honour Normie Kwong.

I am extremely pleased to address this Assembly this afternoon. I say "extremely" because for a member of the Legislature there is no greater motivation nor realization of just how privileged we are and no acceptance of humility like that which accompanies the rather unique experience of losing and winning the same election. I am here today, Mr. Speaker, because of the wisdom of our institutions and the right of every Albertan to a fair and equal voice in a true democracy. If that's what it takes to validate a three-vote victory, then it's neat to be known far and wide as Landslide Lukaszuk.

Mr. Speaker, if nothing else, my recent experience has taught me that no matter who we are or where we come from, my colleagues and I serve at the pleasure and whim of two very important people. We know them as Martha and Henry, average everyday Albertans, Albertans who work hard to pay their taxes, to plan their futures, and to make a meaningful contribution to their communities.

My government colleagues and I pay close attention to the things that Martha and Henry have been telling us. We've discovered that average everyday Albertans are developing new ideas and progressive new outlooks on who they are and where they are going. I am happy to report that Martha and Henry have been taking advantage of the Alberta advantage. They've become more cosmopolitan, better educated, better travelled, and more productive than ever before. Look around, Mr. Speaker. Martha and Henry have become leaders in business, made great discoveries in medicine, toured the world as talented performers, shared their knowledge as accomplished academics, tilled the soil as tireless providers, and helped shape the future generations of proud and prosperous Albertans.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Martha and Henry have grown up right along with the cities and towns and the economy of our great province. They value the prudent management of their finances, and they've earned the right to enjoy a high standard of living. They also believe that no government should attempt to micromanage their personal affairs or their morality. Martha and Henry are rational, intelligent citizens of a modern world, and they're quite capable of determining their own family values.

I believe it's incumbent upon this government and every member of this Assembly to ensure that we keep pace with the people who put us here. To provide the methods, means, and materials to sustain our momentum as we move into a new century of continued growth and prosperity, we must remain focused on the things that really matter, things like quality of health care, a good education, a clean environment, safe and secure communities, vibrant arts and culture, and a robust and competitive business environment.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta stands poised on the threshold of another 100 years of challenge and change. In 1905 our forefathers were busy building the foundation of what has now become the wealthiest, most productive province in the country. Today our job is to ensure that future generations are equipped to realize the same degree of success but in an even more competitive global market. There is no question that Albertans benefit greatly by virtue of our close association with our friends to the south. However, as markets evolve and new opportunities arise, we must actively pursue new commercial, cultural, and academic relationships with the world's most influential trading nations, especially those of the Pacific Rim and the European Union.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to acknowledge that according to the recent figures released by the hon. Minister of Economic Development, our province's total merchandise exports increased by over 16 per cent during the first nine months of the last year. That includes 88 per cent growth in manufactured goods exported to China and 28 per cent to Japan. Strong growth in the value-added exports means new jobs for Albertans and increased trade opportunities for Alberta-based business and industry. I encourage our government to build on these successes with a program to expand the number of foreign offices and our ability to liaise effectively with key decision-makers and trading partners throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, with an estimated $100 billion in new and proposed capital projects in the works our province boasts the most vigorous economy in the country, but that kind of success places great strains on our human resources and underlines the need for a skilled workforce. Our priorities must include facilities and programs to provide the vital educational and training opportunities Albertans need and deserve. In fact, it's difficult to overstate the benefits of a well-educated and highly skilled population. That's why the first piece of new legislation introduced this session is indeed cause for a celebration. Bill 1 will establish unprecedented new investment totalling $4.5 billion in postsecondary education. Alberta's colleges and universities will see the creation of 15,000 additional student spaces as early as next year.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we'll see new initiatives to make postsecondary education more affordable for everyone. Bill 1 will also create a $3 billion endowment fund supporting a variety of innovative, new education-related projects, such things as a new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta and the development of a province-wide digital library. It's apparent our government remains committed to any Albertan determined to achieve a quality education.

A few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the caring, compassionate nature of Her Honour Lois Hole. I believe Martha and Henry share her belief that good government promotes personal independence but is also prepared to assist those in need. Even though some disabilities may not be apparent, AISH recipients are among those most deserving of our support. Government is to be commended for its promise to increase financial benefits for the severely handicapped but also for its commitment to programs such as Alberta Works, helping an estimated 20,000 unemployed workers find new jobs and new independence.

This year we can also look forward to new dental and optical assistance for seniors, improved accommodations for those in long-term care, a new initiative to prevent exploitation of young people, and an increase in Alberta's minimum wage. In addition, our government will soon become the first in Canada to introduce an official accreditation program for child care workers. Mr. Speaker, these kinds of supports for families, for workers, and for the disadvantaged clearly demonstrate that government has the willingness to assist those in need, the ability to encourage those who can help themselves, and the wisdom to know the difference.

In recent years, Mr. Speaker, no issue has received more attention or created greater debate than health care. Edmonton is extremely fortunate to realize the benefits of such world-class institutions as the Capital health authority or the Stollery children's hospital, for example, or even the newly constructed Alberta Heart Institute. We have become a centre of excellence in organ transplants, medical training, and research. Yet despite the fact that our health care system is the envy of jurisdictions across the continent, we continue to experience unacceptable delays and limited access to front-line acute care personnel. There is a shortage of qualified general practitioners and nursing staff. It is the responsibility of my colleagues and I to ensure that Martha and Henry have reasonable and convenient access to the front-line medical attention they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see a range of new initiatives designed to make Albertans the healthiest people in the world, new systems to improve waiting list management, and electronic referrals between family physicians and specialists. This year we will also see a new focus on health and fitness, plans to reduce the high number of injuries and fatalities on our streets and highways, and new infrastructure to provide a safe, clean water supply. Albertans deserve no less than the best possible health care services and facilities in the world. This government is to be applauded for its determination to establish innovative, efficient, and affordable health and wellness solutions that are truly second to none.

Mr. Speaker, creative innovation and fresh new approaches to the problems of growing population are the hallmark of this government. Recently we've seen a truly innovative private/public partnership, or P3, in response to Edmonton's pressing need for a new ring road. I submit that our minister of infrastructure should be encouraged to employ similarly creative programs to bring vital new schools to Alberta's children facing urban sprawl and new neighbourhoods with no schools at all.

Last year our Premier announced an unprecedented $3 billion fund to help build and repair much-needed new infrastructure across the province. This was truly a landmark decision, a decision that only a province with robust financial resources would even consider. Even so, we must ensure that the funds are distributed in such a way as to recognize the diverse needs of nonamalgamated municipalities with their aging infrastructure and unique circumstances. Mr. Speaker, people who live in various municipalities surrounding the city of Edmonton make good use of our streets, roads, and recreational facilities every day, yet those who live in St. Albert, Spruce Grove, Sherwood Park, for example, pay virtually no property taxes to the city of Edmonton. In order to ensure the fair and equitable distribution of infrastructure funds, these kinds of issues must be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has established an enviable track record when it comes to economic development and attraction of new companies and businesses from all over the world. In a report released by TD Canada Trust two years ago the Edmonton-Calgary corridor was described as the only Canadian urban area to combine American-styled wealth with Canadian-styled quality of life. In fact, Alberta is renowned for its affordable tax structure, stable government, skilled workforce, and overall business-friendly environment.

But we're also famous for the amenities we enjoy as individuals, families, and communities. This year, in concert with our centennial, Albertans will celebrate the recent renovation of the Jubilee auditoria in Edmonton and Calgary. We have constructed new museums, recreation facilities, and entertainment complexes. We're proud of our low crime and low poverty rates, our high-quality education and health care system, and our clean environment. We enjoy short commutes, safe streets, a vibrant arts community, cultural diversity, and breathtaking Rocky Mountain resorts. There is little wonder why people from around the world can't wait to get here.

We have every right to take pride in the accomplishments of the past hundred years. But I think, Mr. Speaker, it's time to kick it up a notch, to use the fruits of our nonrenewable resources to move more aggressively beyond them. I see the character of my colleagues and the vision, energy, and depth to lead our province into a new century, a new century of connecting to the world, of developing new technologies and medical miracles, and of the never-ending pursuit of excellence. Call it the Alberta advantage or the next Alberta, it's all Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to rise today to second the motion of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and to see him in the House and to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for the Speech from the Throne.

I'd like to begin by congratulating His Honour on his new role as Alberta's 16th Lieutenant Governor. I know that if the former Lieutenant Governor were looking down, she'd give him a big hug and say that she also approves of the new choice.

I'd also like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, for being re-elected as the Speaker of the 26th Legislature. If my experience in the House has taught me anything, it is that the Assembly is assured of another productive and disciplined session with you in chair.

There are a number of new faces in the seats that were occupied by past colleagues. Although this will take some getting used to, I am confident that these new faces will bring forth energized debate and that it will only further contribute to the success of the province and this government. Albertans have once again agreed in an overwhelming majority that the vision this government has for Alberta over the next 20 years is something that they want to be part of and contribute to.

I am as always humbled to have the opportunity to once again represent the extraordinary, wonderful constituency of Calgary-Shaw. It seems like yesterday, but only four years ago I addressed this Assembly for the first time. During my maiden speech I mentioned that the first member from Calgary-Shaw once described Calgary-Shaw as being three subdivisions in a series of cow pastures. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to pause for just a moment and remind the House once again that in the last sitting I represented the largest constituency in the history of the province of Alberta. At that time I had some 82,000 constituents. That constituency continued to increase to the number of 100,000 constituents until recent boundary changes when I was joined by the hon. members for Calgary-Hays and Calgary-Lougheed, and I'm thrilled to have them join me in the south. I'm confident that this number – I now have 36,000 constituents – will not remain for long as I have the privilege of representing one of the fastest growing constituencies in the province.

I believe that the message in this year's Speech from the Throne is extremely positive and one that the constituents of Calgary-Shaw and all Albertans can be proud of. There is much to celebrate during 2005, but at the same time there is work that needs to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like, though, to pause for just a moment and reflect. We're busy in this Legislature looking at new problems and issues, and we forget sometimes to look back at blessings. I feel very blessed to live in the province of Alberta. I heard recently in the news that being born in Alberta or living in Alberta is like winning the lottery. Truly, you don't have to go an inch out of this province to the right, left, north, or south to hear others say that they wish they had our problems and that we're so fortunate in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I look back to the tremendous growth issues that I had over the last four years. I saw this province step up and bring some 11 schools into Calgary-Shaw. We opened the south health centre so that constituents could go that didn't have family doctors. We also saw the Deerfoot Trail extension completed, and we broke ground on a new hospital in the south end of the city of Calgary. So we do have much to be thankful for.

It was almost 99 years ago, March 15, 1906, that the opening of the first Legislature and Alberta's inaugural Speech from the Throne took place at the Thistle rink before 5,000 Albertans. I can only imagine the excitement and the energy that was in the air that day: a province on the verge of charting its own destiny and a population waiting in anticipation to hear what the future had in store. And here we are a hundred years later with the luxury of hindsight to see where we strayed and how to take that lesson and use it to ensure that we stay the course over the next hundred years. There might not be 5,000 Albertans packed into the Legislature, but I can assure you that thanks to advances in technology there are millions of Albertans hearing our provincial centennial Speech from the Throne, and they too are waiting in anticipation to hear what the future has in store. The next hundred years are still ours to decide, and much of the population is counting on this government to make the right choices and the right decisions to ensure that Alberta's future is successful.

I'm happy to hear that the memory of Lois Hole will be honoured with the creation of a memorial garden. It's a fitting tribute to a fine lady. Through the positive effect she had on numerous Albertans, along with the Queen's graduate scholarship and fellowship program and the Lois Hole digital library, our beloved Lieutenant Governor will be in the hearts and minds of Albertans for generations to come.

Education has always been a top priority for me and my constituents. My constituency is full of young families with children in elementary school, high school, and college/university. I'm happy to report that the government's class size initiative is working. I recently visited one of the elementary schools in my riding and saw first-hand that our schools have been able to lower class sizes to reflect the recommendations of the Alberta Commission on Learning. The government has injected some $98 million into the system and provided 1,250 new teachers across this province to meet class size guidelines. School boards have chosen to direct these resources to early elementary grades.

I know it's working, Mr. Speaker. I recently received an e-mail from a constituent, a teacher who has called me many times over the last four years, and she writes: I'm having a much better year with only 21 in my grade 3 class; for the past 10 years I've had 30, and this year means a different style of teaching and much more individualized attention for my students; the class size initiative has been a real bonus for us; thank you. This is positive proof that the work we're doing is working and effecting positive change throughout the province. I know that this is an extremely important issue as it was the number one reason I was contacted over education in the last four years.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to bring attention to another accomplishment for my constituency. I was extremely proud, as all of us, I'm sure, as I watched the Premier's centennial address in February. You may have noticed that some of the segments were taped at the Centennial high school. I couldn't have picked a better location myself. It was fitting that the Premier chose that school as the setting to announce new investments in postsecondary education for Alberta. Once the school has a full student complement and all programs are up and running, Centennial high school will stand out as an example of the best that we can offer young people.

Centennial high school is the first high school to be built by the Calgary board of education in more than a decade, and it was built in Calgary-Shaw. The school opened to 550 grade 10 students and 34 staff for the year 2004-2005. The school is one of a kind, with many defining factors, including mentors to assist students in developing an individualized learning pathway and portfolio. The portfolio reflects student career pathways and high school learning experiences. This gives students the essential opportunity to explore career options and experience career pathways in health, human resources, arts and communications, science, technology, business information and management systems.

Mr. Speaker, this is another example of the commitment of Alberta to continually improve its education system and ensure that Alberta's youth have the skills and knowledge to carry on their successes. It's apparent through the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne that the actions taken in the past show that this government acknowledges and is committed to building the resources of our youth.

The work has begun to strengthen elementary and high school education, but I still have concerns regarding the future of postsecondary education in Alberta. We know that the bubble of kids moving through elementary and high school is now hitting our postsecondary system, and we don't want that bubble to burst as young people seek to further their education. I was so pleased to hear that over the next three years we'll be adding 15,000 spaces to the current 140,000 full time and 40,000 apprenticeship positions. I'm also pleased to hear that government has made long-term commitments to improve access by doubling additional spaces to 30,000 in six years and by 2020 increasing the number of new spaces for Alberta postsecondary students to 60,000. It's an important step in the right direction, and I've received many calls from constituents who are concerned about their kids being able to attend postsecondary. Increasing the number of available spaces is definitely a good place to start.

I'm also happy to hear that tuition fees will be frozen for the upcoming postsecondary year and that a new tuition policy is in the works. As I mentioned earlier, the future of this province is currently in Alberta's education system. It's up to us to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to play a role in the next hundred years of our province.

Mr. Speaker, it's more than evident that this government's focus for the 26th Legislature in Alberta's centennial year is on education and ensuring that Alberta's future is in good hands. I commend these commitments and look forward to the discussion and debates that will take place in the months to come on these topics.

There is, however, a topic on my mind that I would also like to bring forward, another major concern of my constituents, and that is the concern of health care and its costs. We must make certain that Alberta's health care system is sustainable and that we are doing our job to ensure that Albertans are the healthiest people in Canada. Alberta now spends more on health care each year than all the money we collect in personal income tax, federal transfers, and health care premiums combined. Health care spending could rise to almost a billion dollars in a single year. Health care and education are the biggest government expenditures, and they remain Albertans' highest priorities.

I am confident that very few individuals will disagree that making Albertans the healthiest people in Canada is one way to curb health care costs. I think that can be achieved by better tobacco reduction strategies and by reviewing other ideas that have been proven effective in other jurisdictions as well as many other innovative ideas that have been discussed in the past. I look forward again to the debate and discussion that will take place concerning Alberta's health care system, and I know that it's an important issue to my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, despite the work that needs to be done, Alberta continues to be the best place to live and work, and I am proud to call this province home. It is a privilege to stand here today amongst my colleagues, representing the constituents of Calgary-Shaw for a second term. The 26th Legislature will see the celebration of Alberta's centennial, a visit from the Queen, and the first full session of a debt-free Alberta. There is a lot to celebrate and a lot to be proud of.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as we reflect on the past hundred years and celebrate Alberta's success and learn from its failures and mourn its losses, we can be certain that there are few other jurisdictions in North America or the world that have the ability and the resources to be a leader in innovation, a leader in health, a leader in education, and a leader for the next hundred years.

I'd like to close, Mr. Speaker, by referring to the Speech from the Throne, where it said that Alberta has gone from being a long shot on the Canadian prairie to becoming a magnet for modern-day pioneers from all around the world . . . This centennial year people across Alberta will celebrate the amazing province we call home, and from this firm foundation we will look ahead to the prospect of building something even greater: the next Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Speaking Time

The Speaker: Hon. members, in your Standing Orders the standing order that applied to the participation here today by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was Standing Order 29(1)(b), which provided up to 20 minutes to speak. For the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw the standing order that applied was Standing Order 29(1)(c), which provided for up to 20 minutes to speak. Now I'm going to recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and the Leader of the Official Opposition can participate according to Standing Order 29(1)(a)(ii), which provides up to 90 minutes of participation. Following the participation Standing Order 29(2)(a) provides for a five-minute question and comment period.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and my duty today on behalf of all Albertans as Leader of the Official Opposition to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered in this Assembly yesterday.

First, Mr. Speaker, while we continue to mourn our truly beloved friend Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, we also celebrate our newly appointed Lieutenant Governor. The distinguished person who now holds this high constitutional office is one whose accomplishments stand as a model for our province's next 100 years. We welcome His Honour the Honourable Norman Kwong to public life in Alberta. We thank him for agreeing to give so much of himself in service to Alberta and Albertans, and I caution him now that I will be asking for his autograph when circumstances permit.

Mr. Speaker, we joined the Legislature to build. In responding today to the Speech from the Throne, I am conscious that my job, our job as Alberta Liberals, is to begin building a better future for Alberta. Every time we rise in this Assembly, our cause will be to better Alberta's future, and there is so much room to make Alberta's future better.

There is so much this Assembly can do to make it better. We can manage what we have so much better. We can reach so much higher. Alberta's future will be driven by the values of Albertans, by their energy, their thoughtfulness and imagination, their individualism, their grasp of opportunity, their respect for the land, their humanity, their commitment to community, their thrift, their sense of fairness, right, and wrong. The government of Alberta must serve those values to serve the future. Our government must serve our values.

Mr. Speaker, a hundred years ago the men and women of the North-West Territories worked with Canada's leaders to create the province they called Alberta. They breathed life into this Legislative Assembly. They built a working democracy, a system that could truly represent its citizens although the errors of those times excluded many: aboriginal peoples, many immigrants, and all women. But the system they built on values was and is strong and flexible enough to look at itself, to work towards correcting errors.

The people who laid Alberta's foundation are our ancestors in spirit if not in blood. They are the forebears of legislative democracy who planted their feet and spread their arms and stood tall to hold up a sheltering roof for democracy, and like the foundations and stone pillars and the great dome of this building they created a space for dreams and ideas, for possibilities and opportunities. Those builders of a new province understood they weren't just building roads and schools, towns and businesses, communities and a government; they were building a society.

The urgency, the creativity and energy of the first years of this Legislature were remarkable. The Liberal government of Alberta, the first government of this province, established the University of Alberta, the first step in creating Alberta's postsecondary education system. It empowered school districts and municipal governments, creating a comprehensive system of local government. It laid the foundations for telephone and electricity systems.

It led the way in recognizing the rights of women. In 1916 in response to the undeniable voices of Alberta women, this Legislature recognized women's right to vote. This was an important start by a courageous government, but as I look around at the small number of women who are members of this Assembly today, I remind us all that a government guided by the values of Albertans will improve the representation of women in this Assembly. It will recover the creative spirit of democracy through democratic reform.

The Liberal government of this province placed the cornerstone of natural resource research and development in 1920 by forming the Scientific and Industrial Research Council of Alberta, which eventually became the Alberta Research Council. More than 80 years ago, an entire lifetime, that agency did the basic research on extracting oil from the oil sands that led to the industry that is driving Alberta's economy today. Far-sighted government.

As the decades passed, governments changed, but Albertans continued to bring their core values to the business of this Legislature. Mr. Speaker, the 1940 throne speech, delivered in this room on behalf of a Social Credit government, neither minced words nor counted pennies when it pledged social and economic justice for all Albertans. I quote from that throne speech.

We are determined to provide food, clothing and shelter for the people to the limit of our financial ability, and we will continue our unrelenting fight for monetary reform and social security with the determination to relieve unemployment and banish poverty from Alberta. No person should be allowed to lose his farm or home.

Those were the words from that throne speech.

In the 1970s the government changed again. Thirty-three years ago yesterday, in this very room, the Progressive Conservative government of Peter Lougheed delivered its first throne speech. The speech was sharply focused and specific, presenting a series of ideas aimed at improving government accountability and advancing Alberta society. Human rights led its five priority areas, followed by seniors' benefits, the family farm, handicapped children, and mental health, priorities that squared with the values of Albertans: values, passion, detail. The important throne speeches of Alberta's past respect Albertans' individualism, their thrift, but they set and reset our course with energy, thoughtfulness, imagination, humanity, commitment to community, respect and responsibility for the environment, a sense of right and wrong, and an understanding, a grasp of great opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, we can look back on Alberta's century with pride. We've built a remarkable society with elements of great success because we meant to, because we planned to, because we did our best to make the most of what we were given by good fortune or the grace of God. But in contrast to the passion and detail of great throne speeches, great plans for the future, we heard yesterday a laundry list, housekeeping, a disjointed, reactive response to the holes in this old government's moth-eaten program.

The Tory House leader gave us a sneak preview of this throne speech last week. The government's agenda is, he said, and I quote: mostly amendment acts improving, updating, and adding on to existing legislation. This Premier's often-repeated dream has come true. This really is a government on autopilot – or maybe four very expensive autopilots.

Mr. Speaker, let's look at recent history. The Tory governments of Alberta spent their first decade building toward a clear-eyed vision of an amazing future. They spent the next decade floundering, then the most recent decade reversing their course, cutting, hacking, slashing, following the motto sometimes attributed to a former Tory treasurer, "If it ain't broke, break it."

That brings us to now. No more of 1993's blind determination to pull the rug out from under education by chopping kindergarten. Instead, a present for every baby, a present for postsecondary education; an old government but not a wise government fumbling for its second youth, marching ahead under a 12-year-old Alberta Liberal slogan but still without a plan.

The people of Alberta expect and deserve better from their government. The great governments of this province have known what they stood for and where they were going. They have known these things because they have known their values, and the values of the people of Alberta have been steady throughout the past century: individual rights, thrift, energy and initiative, imagination, humanity and generosity, respect and responsibility for the environment, commitment to community, a sense of fairness, right and wrong, common sense. Mr. Speaker, these values will guide Alberta's future. They will because they are resilient, enduring, and substantial in contrast to the insubstantial patchwork of a throne speech that parliamentary tradition invites me to pick over today.

We in the Alberta Liberals prefer to talk about tomorrow rather than yesterday. We have said it before. No place on Earth offers the wealth of opportunities we have here now in Alberta. Nowhere. We are unique. We are so, so fortunate. We are blessed. We have forests, agriculture, some of the world's most stunning natural landscapes. We live in peace and security. Albertans are energetic, hardworking, well educated. They bring talents, knowledge, and experience from all over the world. We live next to the richest market on the planet, on top of petroleum reserves that rival Saudi Arabia's. No place on Earth offers these opportunities except Alberta. What we make of these opportunities defines us.

What is it that we will make of these opportunities? That's what I want to hear in a throne speech. That's what Albertans' values demand. What will we make of our opportunities? What will we make of what is given to us, our luck, our blessings? That's what I want to hear in a throne speech.

Squandered opportunities offend our values, the very nature of Albertans: the flowering of individual talents and energies stymied, squashed; thrift discarded for unplanned spending and unaccountable excess; humanity and generosity sacrificed to arbitrary goals and then insulted by enormous surpluses sent straight to the banks. In the future Albertans will have a government that manages better and reaches higher. Our values demand it.

Mr. Speaker, there's an old joke that says that the best way to make a small fortune in the futures market is to start with a large fortune. As the Tory government congratulates itself and settles back for another spell on autopilot, that's the joke ringing in our ears in this Alberta Liberal caucus, and we're not laughing.

Since the Tories were first elected in 1971, they have had more than 135 billion windfall dollars to work with or to play with; $135 billion in energy revenues have flowed through this government's fingers. No other jurisdiction on this continent comes close. And that's in addition to taxes, health care premiums, user fees, and everything else. That's a mix of 1971 dollars, 1981 dollars, 1991 dollars, and 2001 dollars. Adjusted for inflation today, that would be hundreds of billions, $65 billion in this Premier's tenure alone. This government paid off a $23 billion debt that it created with $65 billion in revenues from nonrenewable resource revenues. That's bad management, bad government, the Tory-preached cutbacks cloaked as sustainability when they could've been building for an unparalleled future.

Mr. Speaker, that offends what Albertans believe in. It offends our thrift, our imagination, our grasp of opportunity. This is not the moment in our history for another patchwork plan. After all that cash we may not have dollar debt, but we still have social debt: two Albertans living side by side; unacceptable child poverty mocked by a one-time-only baby bonus; attention to the minimum wage and disability benefits, both arriving a day late and a dollar short.

We have infrastructure debts, a billion here and a billion there to make up for years of short-changing cities, hospitals, schools. Environmental debt: the fruits of an attitude towards fresh water, resource extraction, and climate change that too often says, "Use it like there's no tomorrow." Human debt: debt of the spirit, leaving some communities pitted against each other and arts and cultural expressions stuck way in the back seat while the engine of the economy roars ahead. Family debt: rural families stressed as never before, taxes masquerading as premiums and user fees, seniors served or abandoned on the whim of a moment despite the means to plan.

We don't owe a penny, but Edmonton and Calgary have the most overcrowded hospitals in Canada. We jerk our universities and colleges around like dogs on a leash. We have the highest high school dropout rate in Canada. We still have billions of dollars in unfunded pension liabilities, our liabilities. Farms and ranchers are facing foreclosure all over the province while the Tory government points fingers at Ottawa, Washington, and a court in Montana.

As Albertans what can we say about all this? That we'll wait for next year's Speech from the Throne? That we'll forgive and forget and hope that we all get a second chance? That the windfall will always be there? That our string of luck will never run out?

Don't our values demand that now is the time to make a plan? Even better, yesterday was the time to do it, yesterday when this government shredded a handful of Alberta Liberal policies and served the tatters up in a throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, let's look at this another way. Let's compare Alberta to other lucky energy producers. Norway since 1990 has built up a fund of about a hundred billion U.S. dollars. Alaska has an enormous permanent fund and sends money back to taxpayers. Kuwait earns more from its investments made with oil money than from its oil itself.

Meanwhile, Alberta's heritage fund is worth less in real terms than it was in the 1980s, and the best we can do is now to inflation-proof it. A hundred and thirty-five billion extra dollars in energy revenues since the Tories were elected, and it is virtually all gone.

What have we learned? That's what Albertans deserve to hear in a throne speech. What will we do if our luck continues? That's what Albertans deserve to hear.

Mr. Speaker, the praise this government gets for management is a triumph of image over substance. This throne speech should have told us that this Premier will no longer be the minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau, that he'll spend more time on substance than on spin.

Yesterday's throne speech watered down Liberal policies and called them Tory inspirations. The echoes begin with the evocative recurring phrase "the next Alberta." I quote from yesterday's throne speech. "The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Learning." "The Next Alberta Will Have a Diverse and Growing Economy." "The Next Alberta Will Be the Healthiest Province in Canada." "The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Canada and the World." Well, Mr. Speaker, The Next Alberta was the campaign slogan of the late Laurence Decore's Alberta Liberals in the 1993 election. Almost 12 years later the Tories' failure to remember that fact recalls their failure of imagination ever since that year.

Yesterday's throne speech went on to incorporate a damaged Tory version of the Alberta Liberals' plan for a postsecondary endowment fund, now through some epiphany the Tories' highest priority, and the sadly overdue increases in the minimum wage and assured income for the severely handicapped.

With all of those piecemeal borrowings we believe the throne speech missed the opportunity to borrow some other key planks in the Alberta Liberal platform, our plan for the future. Our surplus policy, the Alberta legacy act, would create permanent wealth out of fleeting resource revenues by investing future surpluses in postsecondary education, in the heritage savings trust fund, in the restoration of our crumbling infrastructure, and in the arts, culture, and humanities.

Our bill would commit 35 per cent of future budget surpluses to an endowment fund for advanced education, uncapped and without strings attached. There is a plan to set innovation free as opposed to tying postsecondary education even more firmly to the apron strings of the government of the day. Thirty-five per cent of future surpluses would be streamed in the heritage savings trust fund, to grow it rather than be satisfied with simply preventing it from eroding away; 25 per cent would be put in a capital account to address the multibillion dollar backlog of infrastructure projects in this province; and the final 5 per cent would be invested in an endowment fund to support the contribution the arts and humanities make to Alberta society.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Liberals have long stood for universal public health care, and we will continue to do so. We will continue to support the idea of a wellness fund created from tobacco taxes to support public health initiatives and research. We will continue to support health impact assessments for major policy decisions and a health auditor to ensure that Albertans are getting the best value for their health care dollars.

Alberta Liberals will also push to improve the democratic process for all Albertans. Yesterday's throne speech should have mentioned democratic renewal. Democratic renewal will come because Albertans' values demand it.

Alberta Liberals believe that open, accountable government follows naturally from a belief in fairness, that freedom of information should not be a euphemism for manipulating access to information when government has something to hide.

We believe we should call things by their right names. Wasted money is wasted money whether or not most of us feel prosperous for the moment. It's not good management. It should be fixed. The throne speech should promise to fix it. Call things by their right names. This government should not call its record in all areas of education, kindergarten to postsecondary, "previous efforts to strengthen the education system" in a throne speech. The throne speech shouldn't call privatizing health care a "third way." The Tories plan to violate the Canada Health Act, but they don't say it. They say that they will "make whatever legislative changes are needed to allow innovation to occur throughout the health system."

Open, accountable governments make plans, and then they review their performance against those plans. They budget, and then they review their performance against those budgets. They spend steadily less on special warrants, not steadily more. They listen to their Auditor General, and they commit to making necessary changes. I didn't see any of that in yesterday's throne speech. The Auditor General notes that in the area of health care, ostensibly a high priority throughout this government's tenure and again in this throne speech, there is no provincial health plan. Let me respond very directly to that section of the throne speech. It should be amended with 21 simple words: we will develop a provincial health plan, and we will disclose it to Albertans openly and accountably in their Legislative Assembly.

Let me also respond very directly to the section claiming that all Albertans will share in the Alberta advantage. The Auditor General examined the books of two agencies out of about 120 funded by the Department of Community Development to provide services for persons with developmental disabilities and found almost $3.6 million improperly skimmed off by the operators in clear violation of their contracts instead of going to people with developmental disabilities. This section should say: we will plan and implement measures correcting all concerns raised by the Auditor General.

Tradition suggests that I should respond to what's in the throne speech, but I find myself responding to what is not in the throne speech. I quote: "The government will explore ways for the economy to be more knowledge based by adding value to primary resource industries and expanding manufacturing and business services." Or again: "Alberta's third way for health care is about making sure Albertans get the best health care services, what they need and when they need it, at a price taxpayers can afford." What's not there is content. The throne speech is missing information. The throne speech is missing information because of yet another deficit, a democratic deficit.

We in the Alberta Liberals believe we must rebuild democracy. When I listened to the throne speech, I heard the cynical manipulation of information by this government, the substitution of spin for substance, the contempt for this Legislature they have shown again and again while making billion-dollar decisions in backrooms. Add to that the sloppiness, incompetence, and corruption detailed in the Auditor General's report.

The Alberta Liberal vision for the future of Alberta is one of revitalizing our system and its institutions through democratic reform and renewal, ensuring that our government is responsible and accountable to the people of this province. In practical terms: fixed election dates every four years, a lobbyist registry, whistle-blower protection legislation, cooling-off periods for cabinet ministers and senior officials leaving government.

The first step should be to establish an independent citizens' assembly on electoral reform, with all recommendations put to a referendum. The citizens' assembly should have a mandate including reviewing the number of MLAs, reviewing electoral options such as proportional representation, considering preferential ballots, and examining term limits for Premiers.

Democratic reform should include a citizens' empowerment act to give Albertans the power to petition government either to introduce legislation they would like to see or to remove legislation. It should amend election financing laws to restrict individual, corporate, or union donations to a maximum of $5,000 per political party per year.

Democratic renewal would include a Legislature that establishes an external, independent, nonpartisan committee to select the Auditor General and the Ethics Commissioner. It would strengthen the Public Accounts Committee so that even Premiers accept their accountability, supported by an open-book policy on government expenses including travel and credit card expense accounts. It would allow examination of the mandate, management, and operation of every government department every year.

Democratic renewal means amending the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Albertans deserve prompt, affordable access to information even when it may embarrass the government. It means all parties with elected MLAs will be represented on legislative committees and that an independent external body will set MLA remuneration and benefits. Democratic renewal means replacing the current government-only accounting principles with generally accepted accounting principles.

That's what I wanted to see in this throne speech: some hint, some sign that we will not be subjected to government by unplanned, unprincipled, undisclosed whim and whimsy for another session.

First things first. Let's reinvigorate this institution, our government; let's use its capacity for self-correction to repair errors of the past; and then let's get down to the business of government with the energy, attention, and capacity to tackle the spectacular opportunities that lie ahead.

Albertans demand a government that reflects their enduring values, one that joins them in putting their values into practice in building a better future for Alberta: individual rights, thrift, energy and initiative, imagination, humanity and generosity, respect and responsibility for the environment, commitment to community, a sense of fairness, right and wrong, discipline, common sense.

Albertans demand a government that has not exhausted its capacity to imagine that things might be done differently, that they might be done better, that they might be done according to a plan that informs and inspires where this throne speech does not. They deserve a government more focused on discharging its awesome and its historic responsibilities than on preserving its hold on power.

Albertans demand that we can and will again strive towards an Alberta that works for every Albertan, one that pays attention to equity as well as to debt, one that turns off the autopilot and seizes control of the future, building the best Alberta we can be.

Mr. Speaker, that's our response to this throne speech and our response to the opportunities ahead. That's the vision of the Alberta Liberals. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) now is available. Five minutes. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I for one cannot sit quietly in this Assembly without challenging the drivel, the falsehoods, and the negativity that I have just heard from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He talks of building Alberta, but in his first speech in this Legislature he stoops to federal Liberal smear campaigns used by his corrupt Liberal cousins in Ottawa. My question to the hon. member: does he really think that he is building Alberta by delivering a message of despair and doom? Is that the kind of leadership we're going to see over the next four years from the opposition?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. The member reveals much about himself in that comment. I would say this. There is a huge lesson to be learned from the federal government in Ottawa about disclosing flight logs and flight manifests. When will this government live up to that responsibility to be open and accountable and honest to the people of this province?

Rev. Abbott: I'd like to know what part of the current hundred million dollar ad scam he sees as open and honest from his Liberal friends there in Ottawa.

Dr. Taft: It's irrelevant.

The Speaker: Others?

Then we will call on and recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin in my remarks today by commending His Honour Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong, who delivered yesterday's throne speech on behalf of the government. I wish to congratulate Mr. Kwong on his appointment as this province's Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Kwong is an Albertan who has accomplished much in the areas of sports, business, and multiculturalism, and I'm certain he will fulfill his responsibilities as the province's Lieutenant Governor with honour and distinction.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour knows better than anyone else what huge shoes he has to fill in succeeding Mrs. Lois Hole, perhaps the most popular and most beloved Lieutenant Governor in the 100 years since Alberta became a province. For the past four years the former Lieutenant Governor fulfilled the duties of her office with grace, generosity, and with the hugs for which she was famous. I just want to say once more how much she will be missed by those of us with the NDP opposition and by everyone in this Assembly.

I would also like to take this occasion to thank the residents of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for the trust they placed in me last November 26 by electing me for a third time to represent them in this Legislature. It is indeed an honour to serve a provincial constituency as diverse and hard-working as Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, a constituency I am proud to call home.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday's throne speech was a disappointing document. Far from laying out an ambitious agenda for Alberta's next century, the government's commitments on the throne speech are a series of half measures designed more to put a happy face on the problems of the past than they are to chart a course for the province's future. The government seems so bereft of ideas that it's taken to stealing them from other jurisdictions and from other political parties, but if you're going to steal ideas, at least steal sensible ones. The Conservative government can't seem to do that.

For example, for its health care agenda the Conservative government has ripped off the slogan The Third Way from the United Kingdom in order to import a health care system from the United States. If you like the way the government is handling the ambulance transfer, you're going to love the way the government implements The Third Way in health care. Not much, Mr. Speaker.

For its grandiosely named access to the future fund the government is ripping off a flawed idea from the Alberta Liberals. I'm disappointed that the Conservatives had decided to use unplanned budget surpluses to set up the postsecondary endowment and to expand student scholarships. Relying on unplanned and unpredictable budget surpluses to fund endowments is bad budgeting and bad public policy. A March 2 government release that accompanied the throne speech says, "If there are any unbudgeted surpluses in future years, a portion of that surplus will go into this new endowment until it grows to a maximum of $3 billion." Planned investments from future unbudgeted surpluses is in itself an oxymoron, Mr. Speaker. How can you have a planned investment from an unbudgeted surplus? Well, I'm sure that our former Provincial Treasurer could have told us that.

In other words, if there's a downturn in the price of oil and natural gas and future budget surpluses evaporate, Alberta's postsecondary students will either have no endowment at all or a significantly smaller endowment than first advertised. This is gambling with their future, Mr. Speaker. If endowments such as the one proposed for postsecondary education are set up, the cost of doing so should be built into the budgets up front and not depend on unbudgeted surpluses, as common as they are with this government.

The Conservative government has faced criticism, including from the province's own Auditor General, for systematically lowballing budgetary revenues, thereby leading to unbudgeted and unplanned spending partway through the fiscal year. Sometimes this unplanned spending starts before the ink on the provincial budget is dry. This government needs to be challenged to do accurate revenue forecasting for provincial budgets, not given the licence to dole out unbudgeted monies outside of the established budgetary process for its own ends. Banking on unplanned budget surpluses to fund endowments will make the government less accountable for the expenditure of public funds in the future.

My NDP colleagues and I are also concerned about the political motivations behind the postsecondary endowment fund. Yesterday's backgrounder that accompanied the throne speech certainly leads me to question that motivation. "The Minister of Advanced Education will then make decisions about how to allocate grants from the Access to the Future Fund." In other words, Mr. Speaker, instead of providing predictable, stable funding to our universities, public colleges, and technical institutes and letting them establish their own priorities, the Minister of Advanced Education gets to dole out the grants from the endowment fund at his whim. This leads me to question whether or not this is an endowment fund or just another political slush fund. In my view, this undermines the autonomy of postsecondary institutions and is not a step forward for advanced education in the province.

The tuition freeze in the throne speech is a bait-and-switch ploy, Mr. Speaker. It's only for one year. In fact, the government isn't even agreeing to freeze tuition at all, only to pay the costs of tuition increases for a single year, making it likely that students will be hit with a double tuition increase the following year.

The Alberta NDP caucus will continue to push for real solutions for Alberta's advanced education institutions, not band-aids. We will continue to push for an independent review of postsecondary education to fund long-term solutions to both affordability as well as to improving teaching and learning conditions at our universities, public colleges, and technical institutes.

I can move on to health care, Mr. Speaker. The throne speech says that "the days of endlessly studying and debating health care reform are over, and the time for action is now here." Yet, true to form, there is little or no detail about what those actions will be other than to study the problem some more by holding an international symposium of health care experts. To this day the Conservative government refuses to consult with Albertans about its so-called health care reforms, preferring instead to huddle with hand-picked experts. During the election the Premier repeatedly refused to discuss his health care plans with Albertans.

Unlike the Premier, my NDP colleagues and I have just returned from a province-wide tour where we asked Albertans, including seniors, patients, health professionals, disabled Albertans, and many others, to share their views with us on how to strengthen and sustain the health care system. From these Albertans we heard many excellent and exciting ideas which we are currently preparing in a report that we will table in this Assembly in the coming days. We heard about the need to expand public coverage of prescription medications while getting a better handle on the escalating costs of drugs. We heard about innovative suggestions about how to reduce wait times for specialists, diagnostic tests, and surgeries. We heard about the need to improve standards for long-term care of the frail elderly and the chronically ill, something that was also mentioned in yesterday's throne speech but on which very little action has yet been taken.

If there was a common theme to the presentations we heard from Albertans, Mr. Speaker, it is this: the best way to sustain health care is to strengthen public health care. We need to stop throwing money at more costly private approaches, yet I fear that this is exactly what this government has in mind with its so-called third way in health care.

The NDP invented public medicare, Mr. Speaker, and we can be counted on to defend it. Albertans can count on us to make the case for a strengthened and sustainable public health system, and the recently completed public hearings give us a good foundation for doing so.

Mr. Speaker, this is a government with an extremely poor track record when it comes to looking after lower income and working Albertans. After years of unapologetically having the lowest minimum wage of any Canadian province, an increase of that minimum wage sometime in the next year to $7 will still only place us in the middle of the pack. While I welcome the review of employment standards announced in the throne speech, previous reviews have generally not yielded positive changes for working Albertans, and working Albertans and union members across this province are not looking forward to the potential that may arise from that.

The Conservative government has done several reviews of the assured income for the severely handicapped program. However, there's only been one single-digit increase in monthly benefit levels in the past 12 years despite the fact that our salaries as elected members are automatically adjusted every year. Disabled Albertans can only hope that the promised increase in financial benefits is a substantial one as there is a lot of catching up to do and that thereafter there is a mechanism put in place to link future adjustments to increases in living costs.

The throne speech says that Alberta agriculture producers are facing the future with renewed optimism. How ironic, Mr. Speaker, coming on the same day that a Montana judge threw a monkey wrench into the planned reopening of the American border for Alberta cattle exports. Not only that, but I have just learned that the United States Senate voted down the bill that would have opened the border to Canadian cattle by about 52 to 48. Again, the government's plans to deal with this crisis have been shown to be wanting.

Mr. Martin: Hope and pray.

Mr. Mason: Hope and pray is the answer that they keep coming back to.

It also exposes the government's continuing short-sightedness in placing all of its hopes in the reopening of the U.S. border instead of adopting an action plan to find long-term solutions for our farmers and ranchers. For over a year the government has rejected calls for a temporary floor price to curb excessive packer profits, to undertake universal testing of all cattle over 30 months, or to support increased packing capacity within the province to diversify export markets. They talk about it, Mr. Speaker, but we haven't seen any results yet.

Instead of adopting such positive solutions, the government instead continues to pursue its vendetta against the democratically elected Canadian Wheat Board. This attack continues despite the fact that Alberta grain farmers keep electing directors who want to maintain the Wheat Board's single desk marketing powers.

Mr. Speaker, environmental protection warrants only a single sentence in this throne speech. There's nothing said about addressing climate change or about the dangers posed by approving sour gas development near large urban centres. The water for life strategy is only mentioned in the vaguest of terms with no firm commitment to phasing out the use of fresh water by the oil and gas industry for well injection. These are important issues that my colleagues and I will be raising in this Assembly in coming days.

It is also disappointing that there is little in this year's throne speech about K to 12 education, this despite the fact that there is so much unfinished business in terms of implementing the recommendations of the Learning Commission. This unfinished business includes providing school boards with funding to implement kindergarten and junior kindergarten programs for disadvantaged children.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday's throne speech alternates between the rudderless drift of a government that has spent far too much time in office and whose leader is packing his bags to depart and, on the other hand, doing damage control to try and fix past mistakes, mistakes that are very, very serious and very difficult to overcome.

It's certainly not a plan that Albertans can fly with, Mr. Speaker, and not one that the Alberta New Democrats are prepared to support. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, did you want to participate in Standing Order 29(2)(a)? We have five minutes.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your election to the chair. It's obvious that we will need your experience and your knowledge throughout the session.

I rise today to enjoy the privilege of being the third government member of this House to respond to the Speech from the Throne. Congratulations are in order to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his appointment to this very important position and for his most gracious presentation of the throne speech.

I'm honoured to have the opportunity and responsibility to once again represent the constituency of Red Deer-North, and I look forward to working diligently with all my colleagues in this Chamber to ensure that Albertans have the best economic health and physical environment in order to continue to be successful.

Mr. Speaker, this term is one of legacies: the legacy of Lois Hole, who has served Albertans with such dedication and integrity; the legacy of our hon. Premier, proclaimed nationally to be one of the best leaders that Canada has ever seen; and the legacy of Alberta's centennial, an event that will remain in the hearts and minds of Albertans for many years to come, especially the school-age children, who will always remember the very special day that they received their centennial medallion.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I'd like to acknowledge a great Albertan, the former Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, as my colleagues have done previously. She has left her hugs on thousands of people in this province, and her kind words and her legacy will continue to affect thousands more. Her list of accomplishments is impressive, and her commitment to honesty and goodwill is immeasurable. Lois Hole will remain in my memory as a true Alberta hero.

With the passing of Mrs. Hole comes the passing of the torch. I have no doubt that the new Lieutenant Governor will serve Albertans with the same passion and devotion as his predecessor. His Honour has demonstrated his love for all of Alberta by helping both the Edmonton Eskimos and the Calgary Stampeders to win that great Canadian Grey Cup. He is a football legend in the province, and with his new appointment as the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta a new legacy begins.

The next legacy, the one that will be left by the hon. Premier, is one of achievement, of sacrifice, and of commitment. What makes our Premier a great leader is his ability to sense the needs of Albertans and to turn their dreams into opportunity. Mr. Premier, we thank you for creating economic opportunities for Albertans to be able to realize their dreams.

Mr. Speaker, my young family moved to this great province 24 years ago from my hometown of St. Catharines, Ontario. My career choices in Ontario were limited to the usual and typical part-time jobs in banking and retail, and my husband's choices were limited to assembly line work for General Motors or the Ford Motor Company or as a communications technician for Marconi Canada or Bell Canada. Alberta opened up our suitcase of hopes and dreams and allowed us to fulfill our greatest potential.

Twenty-four years ago, when we drove our old car loaded down with two children, one dog, one cargo trailer, one boat, and one very pregnant mama into the province of Alberta, we were welcomed by the great spirit of freedom, the great spirit of love for family, and the great spirit of entrepreneurship. The mountains confronted us with awesome wonder, the lakes greeted us with the colours of the wind, and the wheat fields waved to us as we passed by. We knew then that Alberta was a paradise where we could raise our family and have the opportunity to make our dreams come true, and more and more families keep coming every day because they know that this is the best place to live.

I thank our Premier and our government for not blinking in the face of adversity and criticism. I thank you for having the same courage and persistence as our pioneers, and I thank you for creating the economic environment that helped our family business to grow and to become very successful. Now that Alberta is the only debt-free province in Canada and our fiscal position is strong, we owe many thanks to you for leading us in this direction. I also thank you for introducing the Fiscal Responsibility Act as this legislation will remind future generations about the sacrifices made at the end of Alberta's first century by all Albertans to make life as an Albertan better in the second century. Your legacy will be timeless.

A very special legacy will remain from this term in Alberta's 2005 centennial celebration. This once in a hundred years event will allow us to look back and be proud of what Albertans have accomplished. We will unite in September and celebrate together the passing of this monumental time in our history, and we will leave legacies for future Albertans by way of centennial grants, the rebuilding of parks, historic buildings, and other important sites across the province.

Mr. Speaker, although it's a great time to be an Albertan, it's an exceptional time to be a member of this House. I'm very grateful for the opportunity to serve my province as the MLA for Red Deer-North and as the chair for the Standing Policy Committee on Justice and Government Services, and I thank the constituents of Red Deer-North for voting for me for the third time and for once again allowing me to represent them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all of the volunteers who helped me go door to door to listen to the concerns of constituents, who phoned people for hours on end, and who dedicated their time to ensure that I had the opportunity to stand here and represent them today.

I speak for all members in this House when I say that without volunteers Alberta would not be where it is today. The level of volunteerism in Red Deer and the rest of Alberta is very impressive. Alberta is recognized nationally and internationally as a leader in the voluntary sector. This is due to the strong values that make us Albertans. Among these values are three concepts – personal responsibility, caring about others, and family life – which are the ingredients for a healthy society. These concepts make up the values of the people of this province. Collectively there is no end to what we can accomplish.

I also thank Red Deer seniors who have worked with me and whose experience and wisdom have guided me through several decisions. Last session I submitted a motion to urge the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to review benefits for seniors and to raise the qualifying income levels for seniors' subsidies. The throne speech mentions that dental and optical benefits for seniors will begin on April 1, an announcement that makes me very happy. This session I have submitted a motion to urge the Legislative Assembly to review and implement regulations and standards for private, for-profit and private, not-for-profit long-term care facilities to ensure that all seniors in any long-term care facility in Alberta are treated with the same respect and regulations everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is strong because its base is the family. I would like to thank my family as their support and love is the wind beneath my wings. I would especially like to thank my loving husband, Bob, who continues to give me confidence and who inspires me to achieve everything that I thought possible.

Finally, my extended family, which consists of all the people of Red Deer-North. This constituency of about 32,000 people is a great source of pride, and I continue to cheer their every accomplishment. We have hundreds of small businesses that serve the oil field, construction companies, manufacturing companies, and farmers which are flourishing and growing. Red Deer is part of the economic corridor along highway 2 that drives our economic engine. Companies like Olymel, E-One emergency, Traveleaire, Terroco, Halliburton, Safety Boss, and Nossack's are such important ingredients in the Red Deer-North recipe for a successful and diversified economy.

Infrastructure projects I have worked hard for in the Red Deer region, along with my hon. colleague from Red Deer-South, are the expansion of the Red Deer College library, the modernization and expansion of the Lindsay Thurber, Camille J. Larouge, and Notre Dame high schools, the hundred million dollar expansion of our Red Deer regional hospital, Red Deer's new $7 million stand-alone cancer centre, expansion of the Red Deer health unit, and five affordable housing projects that will provide 244 homes in Red Deer to combat homelessness.

In addition to these infrastructure projects I've also worked and supported the hospital's Healing and Hope campaign, the St. John Ambulance Training Centre, the Children's Services Centre, the upgrading of Red Deer-North playgrounds for safety, increased funding for the Schizophrenia Society, funding for a detox centre in Red Deer, and a youth rehabilitation centre in central Alberta that I hope will be announced sometime in the future.

Finally, I presented Bill 202, the environmental cleanup act, that was unanimously supported in the Legislature, and I supported the north Red Deer water project. I presented Bill 23, Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, which helps families by giving them two levels of service: family support services and child-focused services.

In this upcoming Legislature I will proudly push through legislation, Bill 202, to protect children abusing drugs, as a response to the growing drug addiction problem that is affecting so many families across this province. We need to keep the family strong as it is the core of a strong society, and with that core strong people are able to concentrate on living, working, and playing.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember that it is not governments that create wealth but people, provided that we have the policies which encourage them to do it. As a government we should not try to legislate everything as this will destroy the driving force of human nature, its inventiveness and ingenuity. We must leave the planning, the money making, and creativity up to the businesses that build up our economy.

We can, however, ensure that our children are healthy, educated, and productive members of society so that they can one day become the brains and the sweat behind our economic engine. The fuel for this economic engine is a highly educated and productive labour force, and the education policies our government has introduced and will continue to introduce are the grease that the engine needs to work in the long run. I commend this government for recognizing the need for this grease, grease like the new postsecondary tuition policy that will make higher education more attainable for Albertans, the increased capacity for schools so that we have graduates to fill jobs, and our dedication to a knowledge-based economy. This is the wave of the future and another legacy that will be left by this government during this term.

This term will be one of legendary proportions. We will celebrate the life of the great Lois Hole. We will welcome His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. We will be led in this session for the last time by our hon. Premier, and we will celebrate Alberta's centennial. These people and all Alberta are associated with the pure pursuit of clear goals and desires of an honest and straight path to a great end. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that my colleagues remember why we are here and that we work together to keep the fires burning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, would you like me to recognize you?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Prayer for Fallen RCMP Officers

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been advised and it's confirmed that four RCMP officers were killed today and one was wounded. This will without any doubt go down, I am sure, as one of the darkest and blackest days in the history of Alberta.

I think we shouldn't be here. I have no right to say that, but I want you to join with me, please, in a moment of silent prayer. We extend to those four officers the hope that they will experience eternal peace, and to their loved ones, I would ask that all hon. members please provide them with all the strength that you have in your hearts so that it can be conveyed to them. This has to be one of our blackest days. Let's have that moment of silence and prayer.

Thank you. May they rest eternally in peace. Please be seated.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I would ask you to move an adjournment motion, if you would.

5:00

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a sad and tragic day, and I commend you for the act that you've just taken to draw all members' attention to that. For the Deputy Premier and myself, who grew up in that area, it's doubly tragic to hear such sad news coming from there.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful to all the members for their understanding, and I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 5:01 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Please join me in the prayer. We give thanks for the lives of Your faithful servants who defend the freedoms and values that are a true expression of Your divine intent. We humbly ask Your blessings and grace upon the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who were killed in the service of our country and our communities: Constable Anthony Fitzgerald Orion Gordon, Constable Lionide Nicholas Johnston, Constable Peter Christopher Schiemann, Constable Brock Warren Myrol. We pray for the families, friends, and fellow officers of those who have died as they mourn their loss. On Thursday last we prayed in this Assembly. Let us do it again as we stop for a moment of silence in honour of the four RCMP officers. May God bless them all and extend eternal salvation in a heaven of peace. Amen.

Hon. members, on your desk is a blue and black ribbon with a pin. It was provided this morning by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and it may be worn in memory of the four members of K Division, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, killed on Thursday last while carrying out their duties in the service of others.

Those citizens of Alberta wishing to express their sympathies for the officers can visit the Legislature rotunda, where books of condolences will be available from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. today, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week. These books of condolences were opened on Saturday last.

I would like to advise all as well that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police also have an online website, www.rcmp.ca, that citizens can access and convey their messages of condolence.

We will now participate in the language of your choice in the singing of our national anthem, and we'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of my colleague the Hon. Gene Zwozdesky, the Minister of Education . . . Mr. Speaker, I apologize.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mrs. Fritz: . . . to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Barbara Pederson and Ms Mary Sertic, who I understand are from the Department of Education's information and strategic services division. I would ask that both Barbara and Mary rise and receive the traditional warm applause of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Again we'll call on the Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ambassador of France to Canada is in our province on his first official visit to the province of Alberta. It is my great privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Daniel Jouanneau, ambassador of France. With His Excellency are Mme Jouanneau and Jean-Yves Defay, consul general of France for Alberta, and Mme Defay. The honorary consul to Edmonton, Dr. Jean-Michel Turc, and Mrs. Turc are also here.

This is His Excellency the ambassador's first official visit to Alberta. Alberta has always had a special and warm relationship with the people of French heritage be they francophone Albertans, the vibrant Québécois, or our trading partners, visitors from, or generous hosts in France itself. I ask His Excellency Jouanneau and his party to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly of Alberta.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 30 grade 6 students and their teachers, Ms Natalie Gago-Esteves and Mr. Matt Thiessen, from the Brander Gardens elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 19 department workers that are visiting the Legislature here today to see how we work first-hand. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly this afternoon seven students from the Cedarbrae community school in Calgary-Glenmore together with teacher Ms Chari Smith and parents Mrs. Jan Coates and Mrs. Judy Arnall. In the three terms now that I have been in the Assembly, while I have had an opportunity to introduce people, I have never had an opportunity to introduce a school group. This is the first one in that time that has visited Edmonton while we've been in session. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm response.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and other members of the Assembly a fine young lady who provided valuable service to the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti last summer, worked in the office. Lots of very positive comments from constituents who called in with concerns that they wanted addressed to the government. I'd like all members to recognize Hannah Zacharias, who is with us this afternoon and is currently a student at the University of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a school group from one of my favourite schools in McClung, called Callingwood school. The students, staff, and parents of this school are truly amazing, and I have a particularly soft spot for this school because that's where my five-and-a-half-year-old boy attended his two years of playschool. Today I welcome 17 students and their teacher, Mr. Lonnie Wilcox, and one of the parents, Mr. Peter Conrad. I ask permission to invite them to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you a group of 24 very energetic and enthusiastic seniors who reside in the Lifestyle complex in the fine constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are joined today by group leaders Phyllis Lindsay and Mr. Bill Jones. I met with them a little bit earlier. They had lunch here, and they tell me that they've just had a wonderful day and were so pleased to have had the opportunity to meet His Honour Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong. I'd ask your permission to have them stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Hubbard and her grade 6 class from Keenooshayo school from St. Albert and also Mr. Dennis Arnesan and Mrs. Sandi Mecir, who are volunteers. I believe they are in the public gallery. With your permission I will ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three international students who are currently pursuing their programs of study at the University of Alberta. Besides pursuing their graduate studies, these students are the founding members of the international student relief organization that raises funds not only for international students in need on campus but also for causes overseas. They and their organization have raised funds for the tsunami victims in Indonesia and Thailand. They are planning to hold an international cultural night on March 14, 2005, at 6:30 p.m. in Myer Horowitz Theatre on the U of A campus to raise funds, this time for tsunami victims in India.

These guests are Dr. Yokanath Sekar, Mr. Ouan Keosysano, and Sarabpreet Singh. They are already standing in the public gallery, so I would request all members of the House to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the House today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very important people from Red Deer, Darin Doel and Tracy Rosentreter. Darin is my constituency assistant, who does a tremendous job for me, and Tracy is a really good friend of mine. The two of them are here today in support of the introduction of Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs, as concerned parents. I would ask Tracy and Darin to rise in the members' gallery to receive the warm welcome from the House. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Deaths of RCMP Officers

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much has been said about the RCMP shooting in Mayerthorpe. There has been much speculation about what happened and how it might have been prevented. It is natural for the public and the media to ask these questions and to look for answers, but I would encourage the members of this House to refrain from speculation.

In the coming days as funeral and memorial services are held, we need to stop and really think about the sacrifices these four men made for us. We need to honour their lives, we need to grieve for their families and their friends, and we need to pause for a moment and reflect on the remarkable service our police provide to us each and every day.

Later in today's session I will give notice of a motion. As you know, a national public memorial service will be held this Thursday afternoon at the University of Alberta. Because it will take place at the same time as our session, Mr. Speaker, my motion will seek to reschedule our session so that members can attend the memorial.

I would also like to report to this House, Mr. Speaker, that all members will be receiving a blue ribbon that honours these four RCMP members and all those who died in the line of duty before them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sent a note to the Solicitor General expressing my feelings that he has been under a great deal of pressure and he has spoken so well to the media to encourage all Albertans to enter into a period of grieving. It's just a terrible tragedy that has taken place. We talked this morning about the national public memorial service, and our caucus is in favour of suspending the usual business. It seems inappropriate to continue business as usual considering these tragic events.

This week as we continue to grieve the tragic loss of the four young men, we must deal with a variety of emotions: deep sorrow for the families of these men – nothing can diminish the pain which the families feel – and also anger, anger towards such an incredible, evil deed that in an instant took away their precious lives. At a time like this we realize how vulnerable our lives are and that life is such a precious gift, and we reel back from the horror of such violence which destroys life. May God give us courage, strength, and hope.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request the unanimous consent of the House to allow my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona the opportunity to speak on the statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the House for this opportunity. It's with deep sadness and pain in my heart that I rise today on behalf of my caucus colleagues and the NDP opposition to express our deep sorrow and regret of the tragic events of last Thursday. In the few days since the deaths of the four valiant constables from the RCMP, we have slowly begun to get a clearer picture about the crime that led to this terrible tragedy. To date the only thing we know for sure is the devastating impact this loss has had on the families, friends, and fellow members of the RCMP.

On behalf of the New Democrats I rise today to extend our deepest condolences to all those who have been affected by this loss. Our hearts are especially with the families and friends of the fallen officers and with the residents of the Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt area, whose lives have been so rudely jolted by this devastating event.

Every day we ask police officers to uphold the laws of our society. We ask these officers to put their lives on the line to safeguard our lives and our communities. Thankfully events leading to deaths of police officers are not commonplace, and that is what makes last week's events such a profound tragedy. We must do everything we can to learn from this tragic event. There has already been a great deal of speculation surrounding these events. It's my hope that collectively we can wait until all the facts are known before coming to conclusions, and I'm certain that as the grieving process takes its course and the investigation into last week's tragedy continues, we will be able to focus our attention on ensuring that such a tragedy never happens again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: 1:50 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Inquiry into Deaths of RCMP Officers

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tragic events of last week leading to the deaths of four dedicated young members of the RCMP have devastated all Albertans. In the aftermath of this tragedy our attention turns to what can be done in the future to prevent incidents like this from occurring again. Our men and women who wear a uniform every day and put their lives on the line for our safety deserve no less. My questions are to the Solicitor General. What role is the Solicitor General's office going to play in the investigation of the events last Thursday outside Mayerthorpe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General's office won't play any role with regard to the investigation but that of the employer of the provincial police service. The RCMP's responsibility is to conduct the investigation, and if there is any assistance that the Solicitor General's office can provide, we'd be more than happy to assist them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Solicitor General: does he know if there will be any actions taken or recommendations put forth while this investigation is proceeding to protect our police officers from being exposed to similar dangerous conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I spoke to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Anne McLellan. I conveyed to her the Alberta government's opposition to the decriminalization of marijuana, that in the wake of this tragedy now is not the time for the federal government to weaken illegal drug legislation.

As Alberta's Solicitor General I am more committed than ever toward the dismantling of organized crime in every region of this province. My department has been working on a strategy, and will continue to do so, to dismantle organized crime that I will present to my government colleagues in the immediate future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: is the government considering any sort of provincial inquiry, public or otherwise, into the tragic events that led to the deaths of these four young officers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask the Minister of Justice and Attorney General to supplement the answer on this, please.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all I'd like to point out that the members of the Justice department work very, very closely with the police services of Alberta, and on their behalf I wish to pass on condolences to the family and friends. This is a most tragic event.

We will be having a fatality inquiry with respect to this matter. The RCMP are currently conducting their investigation, and it is necessary for that to conclude before a date with respect to the inquiry is set. It's important that all of the facts be available, and we believe that as a result of having a fatality inquiry, those facts will be made public and the best opportunity to determine what can be done to avoid a tragedy like this occurring again can be had.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal opposition expects this government to know the value of a dollar, but this government's use of its fleet of aircraft indicates that it does not. To the minister of infrastructure: will the minister do the right thing and recommend to cabinet that the government fleet immediately be cut in half? Thank you.

Dr. Oberg: No.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the former Minister of Economic Development, a known leadership contender for the government party, took over 100 flights on government aircraft last year alone, how can the minister assure Albertans that the government planes are not being used for the Tory leadership campaign?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Each time a government minister books a plane, they do have to put down a purpose. As I mentioned in the Legislature on Thursday, that purpose can be government business, or they can be more specific. The ministers on this side have to get out to rural Alberta. I fully understand why the Liberal opposition does not want us in rural Alberta, but the rural Albertans are Albertans too.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that most of the flights are between Edmonton and Calgary, when will the minister of infrastructure table the government flight logs that have been so often promised and that are supposed to state the reasons for the use of the fleet of government aircraft?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Liberal opposition was allowed to see our flight logs.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

Dr. Oberg: They had asked that parts of these flight logs and the manifest be photocopied. We gave them full compliance on this.

Mr. Speaker, the other issue that's very important here is something that the Liberals have championed for a long time, certainly this side of the House has championed for a long time as well, and that's freedom of information and privacy. Anything that potentially could damage the privacy of individuals will be severed before it is given to anyone. That's part of the law of this land, and it's something that we will adhere to.

An Hon. Member: You're hiding.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we are hiding nothing. We want to get it out. We have nothing to hide on this side.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader, there was a point of order?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, there was.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora with the third question from the Official Opposition.

Market Surveillance Administration Review of Enron

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government can no longer ignore the mounting evidence that Enron colluded with Powerex to drive up electricity prices in Alberta. To the Minister of Justice: what investigations has Alberta Justice made on electricity price manipulation in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. None.

Dr. B. Miller: Will Alberta Justice now investigate the allegations that Alberta's laws were broken by unscrupulous market traders?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that my colleague the Minister of Energy is following, and last week he answered questions in this House with respect to it. I'm sure that if the minister wishes me and my department to get involved, he will contact me. At this point in time there is no intention to proceed with anything.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, given that new evidence has revealed that Enron officials want to destroy all electricity trading tapes regarding Project Stanley, what is the minister doing to ensure that all evidence on this scandal is gathered?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the market surveillance administrator has received some new information about the case. I understand that he's reviewed the new information and has asked the federal Competition Bureau to reopen the investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Border Closure to Canadian Cattle

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the past couple of months in anticipation of the American border opening to live cattle exports, Alberta cattle producers finally started making a bit of money after enduring almost two years of losses while meat packer margins soared. However, returns for farmers literally evaporated overnight due to last week's Montana court injunction that is keeping the border slammed shut, and cattle producers are once again back in the red. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given the overnight collapse in prices since last week's Montana court injunction, will the government reconsider its stubborn opposition to a temporary floor price for cattle as a way to curb packer profiteering in a dysfunctional market?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's announcement was indeed a very, very frustrating development in our long and bumpy road to normalized trade between our two countries. I think it's important to note that our argument today is not with the government of the United States. They are firmly onside with the rule that they've prepared. The President of the United States has publicly announced his intention to veto any opposition to that in both Houses. The Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary Johanns, has been very, very supportive in his comments to it.

As to the pricing mechanism that is in place in the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we are extending the calf set-aside program that was in place up to this point. We're going to extend it out farther. We've made some adjustments to it to be more market reactive. The industry is telling us that that's the way to go, and that's the way we will go.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the U.S. Senate voted 52 to 48 against legislation that would have opened the border, can the minister tell us what our envoy to Washington, Mr. Smith, has been doing in terms of lobbying the Senate of the United States?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. I must say that my understanding of the American system would tell me that the Senate needs a two-thirds majority in order to override the presidential veto. The Senators knew that; they knew it when they voted. They also knew that the President had announced his intention to veto that vote prior to the vote taking place. So I view the vote as somewhat symbolic. All politics is local.

The office in Washington has been instrumental, Mr. Speaker, in creating the context for us to meet with those Senators and Congressmen as well as members of the USDA as well as members of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association. The Premier instructed the office in Washington to stay in very close touch with all of the key members and key decision-makers there so that we can act as a team and work with our partners across the border.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the minister and the government are again wrong in their predictions about American political behaviour, what does the minister then have to say to Alberta farmers who are losing their farms?

The Speaker: Well, that's kind of a speculative question, but if the minister wants to briefly say something, go ahead.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, our plan that was developed last year, the six-point restructuring plan, was based on the fact that the border would be a long time in reopening. In fact, these developments this past month are far ahead of the schedule that we had anticipated previously. The six-point recovery plan, that we are working on right now and working on through and with industry, is working. We have had an increase in slaughter capacity in our province over 20 per cent since the first case of mad cow was announced. The industry is solidly behind what we are doing. In fact, I met with them this morning in Calgary, and we are working with them to make sure that what we do doesn't hurt the industry and, in fact, makes it a stronger one when this crisis is over.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most Albertans are still shocked by the tragic shooting of four RCMP officers on Thursday in my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne. The family members, the police force, and our communities are in deep mourning as we face a week of funerals and memorial services throughout the province. During this time we must respect the families involved and not politicize this horrific disaster. My first and only question is to the Minister of Justice. Given that the minister has ordered a fatality inquiry, what will the minister do to ensure that the families' wishes for a week of mourning are respected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly agree with the hon. member that this particular week is a week of grieving, of mourning, and that that is what all Albertans should focus on. In an answer to a previous question this afternoon I indicated that a fatality inquiry has been ordered. However, there is no intention whatsoever to proceed in any meaningful way at this time because the RCMP investigation is ongoing. It was important to tell Albertans who were asking questions about what happened that there in fact will be a process, the usual process, if you will, to answer those questions. In the fullness of time it will be held, but it certainly won't be proceeding in any fashion this week, hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Did the minister consult with any groups, such as the 14,000-member-strong Alberta Fish and Game Association, before entering into the interim Métis hunting agreement signed in September of 2004?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, we did not do that. We went into negotiations with the Métis settlements as recognized by the Powley decision, where the Métis community is the group that we would recognize. So that's basically what we did.

Mr. Tougas: Again to the same minister: given that no other province has entered into such an agreement, why did the government hastily sign this document without consulting all concerned stakeholders?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we did not do this hastily. The Supreme Court of Canada made a decision on the Powley decision actually in September of 2003. It took us a year to go into negotiations, and those negotiations are what sent us to make sure that we address the very concerns.

The one thing that I would like to say about the decision is that the decision came out with some areas where we were not quite certain as to what needed to be done. What we wanted to do was ensure that we were dealing with the Métis community to address a number of issues, and of course those ones were the conservation issues for the benefit of all Albertans, and I think that's really important when we're looking at these issues, when we're dealing with the rights of aboriginal communities.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: given that the agreement was created out of session and with no opportunity for public debate, will the minister commit to consulting with concerned groups before signing the final document?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we're dealing with minority rights, it's a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada to be able to address the issues, and each province then has to be able to address the concerns, as has been decided. What we have done is we made sure that we addressed the concerns with the very community that has been impacted and the ones who have the rights, and that's what we've been doing. It was a negotiated position with those communities. The rights were recognized and affirmed by the Powley decision.

Basically, what we did then was we made sure that we would work with that community to be able to address the very issues that the decision left, where we wanted to ensure that we took care of the conservation issue. What we did then was we made sure that we would work with those communities. There is an opportunity for any other group to be able to identify should the interim agreement not do what we had intended to do.

I'm sure the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development may want to address that very concern about the implementation of the agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Highway Safety

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Economic activity is at an all-time high in northern Alberta, and this puts tremendous pressure on our highway safety and has been especially noticed in northern corridors like highways 43 and 63. Again this winter we are experiencing a high number of serious and fatal accidents. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what are your department's near-term plans to continue the upgrading of highways 43 and 63?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Highways 43 and 63 are incredibly important to Alberta, especially as the increased economic activity in these areas just continues to blossom. On highway 43 we have already twinned a little over 300 kilometres of that particular highway, and there are about another hundred to go. We have been held up to a small degree because of some land acquisition issues. We certainly hope and would foresee that those will be done very shortly, within the next couple of weeks. So we will be proceeding with the twinning of highway 43, and hopefully we'll get it done as quickly as we can.

Highways 63 and 881 – and I would add in highway 881 because I do believe that that does add some potential outages for us on this – will be looked at very, very quickly. We are looking at a concise and comprehensive plan for the whole corridor up to Fort McMurray. Again, when you take a look at the economic activity up there, the number of people that are going to be travelling on that road, it's absolutely imperative that we do this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what message is your department co-ordinating with the enforcement agencies on these routes?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, over the past winter we've seen a lot of accidents occur right across the province of Alberta. Many of these have had to do with enforcement issues: driving too fast, making left turns when they shouldn't, all of the above. We are putting together a concerted effort to ensure that there is improved enforcement, that the enforcement is out there. We are co-ordinating it very closely to the McDermid report, which was a very comprehensive, good report on the safety of roads in Alberta, and we'll be doing that very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has highway maintenance or lack thereof contributed to the high collision rates, again, on these routes?

Dr. Oberg: I would love to stand here and say no, but I have been in communication with a lot of the municipalities in northern Alberta, and there certainly have been a lot of maintenance issues that have been raised with me over the past couple of weeks. Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, we are looking very closely at our maintenance contracts and ensuring that that standard of our highways is maintained. Quite frankly, I've heard some rather nasty stories about our maintenance contracts, so we will be taking a look at these, especially in northern Alberta, to ensure that they are to a high standard. Again, the transportation routes in northern Alberta are absolutely critical.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Climate Change

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For several years the government of Alberta has committed itself to face the stark reality of climate change and to greenhouse gas reductions. However, the Alberta government has not created any absolute targets and only voluntary compliance. Alberta's greenhouse gases continue to increase in spite of this commitment. To the Minister of Environment: how can the minister tell Albertans that we are leaders in reducing greenhouse gases in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to say that the province of Alberta is the only government in Canada that has legislation dealing with true action on the issue of climate change. That speaks for itself in terms of why Albertans have been leaders in the past, will be leaders today and certainly into the future on this important issue in protecting our environment.

Dr. Swann: A second question, Mr. Speaker: given that some municipalities and companies in Alberta are already on track to achieve Kyoto targets in 2012, when will this government require all industry to meet their commitment?

Mr. Boutilier: This is so important, Mr. Speaker, the issue of a carrot or a stick. In changing behaviour, I think all of us as Albertans have a responsibility that we have our behaviour so that we do the right thing, rather than using a stick. In my meeting with the federal minister, Dion, when he visited on my invitation the province of Alberta just two weeks ago – I might also say that the province of Alberta is the only government in Canada that has Climate Change Central, an agency unmatched anywhere in the country because of the leadership we took seven years ago. We are on the right track. We want to do the right thing, but we're going to be doing it because our behaviour says that it's the right thing to do in protecting our environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the Alberta government help industry by showing real leadership and work with other jurisdictions to establish consistent regulations?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a very important point relative to working with our stakeholders. It's not only industry though; it's every single Albertan. As you know, we got in our cars today to come to work, or we took public transit. If I were to ask everyone in here, “Who took public transit? Who drove? Who walked? Who took a bicycle?” – the reality of it is that industry has a responsibility, and my comment to them has been this, that they can do better, just like all Albertans can do better, and that’s this government’s commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned earlier, this government has entered into agreements with Alberta’s Métis people to permit hunting, fishing, and trapping year-round. Many of my constituents in Drayton Valley-Calmar are feeling that this is very unfair and that it will deplete the harvest for sport hunting and fishing. My questions today are for the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Given that Alberta has resisted other Supreme Court decisions, with regard to same-sex marriage and the gun registry, why did we sign these agreements?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I indicated earlier, the Supreme Court of Canada in the Powley case of 2003 recognized and affirmed that the Métis had an aboriginal right to hunt and fish as their ancestors had for generations. What it did was that it left some issues unresolved.

In terms of the question that was asked, under section 35 of the Constitution these are rights that cannot be questioned or in any way, shape, or form used with the notwithstanding clause. What they did, then, in the Powley case was they certainly affirmed those rights.

Basically, when we went into the negotiations, we wanted to make sure we did a number of things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we wanted to have certainty . . .

The Speaker: Perhaps, hon. minister, we’ll get to that a little later. The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is for the same minister. Who, then, can claim these rights?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Métis of Alberta. As the Supreme Court of Canada indicated, there was a test for making sure that the Métis had a way to be able to identify themselves. One is self-identification, one is ancestry, and one is community acceptance. What we did was we decided that the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council were the community that we use, so basically we had to ensure that that membership was going to be able to meet the test of what was happening under the Powley case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary question is for the same minister. Given that the original agreements were struck at a time when the common weapon was the willow bow and arrow, will we require the modern-day Métis to use such ancient weapons, or will we allow them to use the modern guns?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, nowadays it seems that those who have money can use the bow and arrow. Years ago we used to use the bow and arrow, it’s true, and we didn’t have the guns, but nowadays it’s those who have dollars that can use the bow and arrow, and we use the guns.

So I guess what we’re trying to make sure is that we have the conservation issue in place. I’d like the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to talk about the issue of conservation, which all Albertans are concerned about.

The Speaker: Perhaps another day, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Workplace Drug Testing

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recently leaked 2003 industry report to government said that Alberta should change its human rights law to allow random workplace drug testing. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will the minister commit to tabling that report in the Assembly during this sitting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Once I do a thorough review of the report, no doubt it’ll be filed.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is this government committed to bringing in mandatory random workplace drug testing to determine drug use risk rather than just impairment?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I did have an opportunity to meet with a number of groups that are interested in that particular area. It is a very important area and challenging and not easy because you may introduce something that industry cannot afford or support. So we will be working very closely with industry, continue monitoring the situation, and make the necessary changes that are required.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: as a show of good faith and in order to better be acquainted with this process, will the minister volunteer that Executive Council, cabinet ministers, submit to random drug tests to better understand this process?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, no, but the Liberals may want to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Government Air Travel

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main purpose of the Alberta government’s aircraft fleet seems to be the operation of some sort of private limousine service for the Premier and the Tory caucus. Despite the fact that the government planes fly empty a good percentage of the time, the government has admitted that it also charters planes on occasion. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How often does the government charter aircraft in addition to flying people around on the government-owned fleet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are occasions when we do charter planes. By far the most common occurrence of this is when one of the planes is out for maintenance. We’ve had several times when the Dash 8, some of the King Airliners have gone for routine maintenance, and therefore we have chartered them.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we will be having some episodes where we will have to charter planes in the near future; for example, when the Queen comes. All of these things are occurrences. We attempt not to do it unless there are outstanding circumstances.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the government, then, ever charter private jet planes, and if so, will the minister agree to make public information detailing the cost and the frequency of doing so?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been four, five, or six different times when there has been a private jet chartered to go across Canada. Again, consistent with the freedom of information and privacy rules we would certainly make these public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask: does the $3.5 million cost to the Infrastructure and Transportation ministry of the government-owned fleet represent the entire cost to the government, or are there additional costs for the aircraft allocated to the budgets of other departments or even to the Premier's office?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, each and every time the members of Executive Council utilize the government aircraft, it is billed to my department, which takes into account the $3.5 million.

Mr. Speaker, one point I would really like to make and that I think deserves being said is that the province just to the left of us, British Columbia, recently went and sold their planes, and as of today my understanding is that their costs have been roughly triple what their costs were when they owned their fleet. So this fleet, although it's probably a break-even kind of point, does enable us – and I really have to say this again and again and again – to do our business in rural Alberta, which is critically important to the people on this side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Beef Recovery Strategy

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today was supposed to be an encouraging and progressive day for cattle producers. Instead, thanks to the actions of a group of protectionist ranchers in the United States our cattle industry faces uncertainty. Many ranchers and farmers who have had their livelihood and dreams again diminished are feeling the anguish of the challenge ahead. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development mentioned the progress on the set-aside program. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What else is the government doing to help our industry deal with the uncertainty they are currently facing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a very good question. One of the things we are doing immediately with industry is going over our six-point plan as well as the set-aside program to ensure that we're on the right track. In addition to that, we all recognize that slaughter capacity is a key component of that, but slaughter capacity alone won't do it. We have to have international markets and marketplaces where we can diversify our markets. To that end, this morning I was with the Premier at an industry meeting where the Premier announced a $37 million new program for BSE initiatives, which is to increase our market access as well as deal with the question of SRM removal and to try to create more value on farm.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. The Premier and the minister mentioned in their announcement about the progress tied to the six-point plan. Could the minister please enlighten us on the progress that's being made in other elements besides the plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the six-point plan is what the whole industry is basing our recovery strategy on and a significantly increased slaughter capacity. I mentioned earlier in answer to another question that in Alberta our slaughter capacity since the first case of mad cow disease has gone up over 22 per cent. We are currently at a capacity that will increase to 67,500 head per week by the fall of this year. That's an increase of close to 800,000 head each year. In addition to that, current slaughter capacity for cattle older than 30 months, which is a real concern with our producers, sits at about 600,000 head per year. The proposed projects that we're aware of right now will increase that national slaughter capacity for older cattle to over 1.4 million head per year.

Our inventory management programs are coming along very well, Mr. Speaker. We are looking at other income support. We are reviewing the case program in conjunction with other provincial ministries in meetings we attended last week. In addition to that, the Premier invited me to sit in on a conference call where the Prime Minister and other provincial ministers spoke about the current situation and whether we needed to change plans or to re-evaluate our plans. The general consensus is we're on the right track. Industry is behind us, industry supports what we're doing, and they're very much involved in those plans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Trade Mission to Southeast Asia

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From January 11 to the 21st of January 2004 the Premier led a delegation on a trade mission to India and Hong Kong. This trip cost Alberta taxpayers about $64,500. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. What incentive has this government provided to the Indian film industry to encourage the production of movies in Alberta as a result of this trip?

Mr. Mar: None that I'm aware of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again, to the same minister: can this government prove that this trip provided a benefit to the Alberta film industry?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think this might be a question that may more properly be directed to the Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Agnihotri: Another one to the same minister: can this government provide proof that all gifts over $200 received by the government members on this trip were reported to the Ethics Commissioner?

The Speaker: Hold on. Hon. member, questions of that nature should be directed to the Ethics Commissioner.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Prevention of Wildfires

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the last five years we've seen wildfire devastation through several communities in western Canada and the United States. Following the Kelowna fires of 2003 the B.C. government released the Firestorm report, highlighting the urgent need for protective measures to be taken in and around forest communities to help protect them from wildfire. My questions today are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the provincial government doing to reduce the risk of wildfires around these forest communities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The province has started implementing FireSmart communities based on the principle of Alberta's at-risk communities that are in the forest. Certainly, you can see that it's no small task. Over the past five years we've come what I believe is a long way with the department and with the help of communities in assessing communities in the forest protection area, prioritizing them based on a degree of risk, and we're starting to develop an implementation plan for those who we deem to be a top priority. Right now the department is focusing on about 32 communities across the province, and every one of these communities is currently in the planning or the implementation stage of the FireSmart process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Why has it taken so long to see the results on the ground?

Mr. Coutts: The planning process, Mr. Speaker, is a very lengthy one. FireSmart is only a small part of a broader landscape picture. It's important to know that there are a number of other important priorities that have to be taken into account in making a FireSmart community, and those are fish and wildlife habitat, timber resources, public lands, and, of course, the all-important watershed. Work is proceeding in many of these communities. Particularly in West Yellowhead the town of Hinton is proceeding with their plans, and open houses will be held in Grande Cache and Robb in the coming weeks to gather public input on the FireSmart proposals that are before that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How long will Albertans who live in communities deemed as a lower priority have to wait to get this critical protection?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, individuals can begin today, companies that are in the forest protection area can begin today, and communities can begin today. That is, we need the help of every resident, of every municipality, and of every stakeholder to make a FireSmart plan work in that community. Albertans can begin by fire smarting their own particular properties, and municipalities can start by introducing FireSmart principles within their boundaries. We have a wealth of public information that is available to individuals, to stakeholders, and to communities through the process with step-by-step instructions on how they might reduce the risk in their communities, and they can find that information on Sustainable Resource Development's website.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Centennial Education Savings Plan

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Premier and the Minister of Advanced Education participated in the launch of the centennial education savings plan. Now, most of my constituents are pleased that this government is actively encouraging parents to start saving early for their children's postsecondary education, but they wish that the program applied to children born before 2005. To the Minister of Advanced Education: why are children born before 2005 not eligible for the initial $500 grant of the centennial education savings plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That has been a concern raised by a number of parents calling my office and calling colleagues. I know that many parents, particularly those whose children were born in the previous months just before January 1 of this year, are concerned and raising that question, quite appropriately. But as with any program there has to be a start date.

Since January 1 of this year there have been approximately 4,500 births registered in this province. It's estimated that there will be 40,000 children born in our province in 2005. We've budgeted about $20 million to provide these children with a head start on their postsecondary savings. We encourage parents to get to their banks or financial institutions and open those RESPs so that the money for those children that are eligible can be deposited in the RESPs.

Again, Mr. Speaker, programs have to start at some point in time. It's difficult to go back and change retroactively everything for everybody. So, unfortunately, we can't go back and start it retroactively. However, one of the things that I want to assure people is that one of the most important parts of the CESP program is not just the putting of money in the account but the recognition at birth that children will go on to get an advanced education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would the minister consider looking at the possibility down the road of making the three subsequent $100 grants available to all holders of registered education savings plans in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a good idea. We have had some initial discussions about it and are trying to cost out to see what effect there would be if every child could have the $100 supplement at age 8 and age 14. We'll certainly be looking at that to see whether we can manage to change the program in that way.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the program is about more than just the $500 and the supplements of $100 at those two ages. The program is about encouraging people to think about education when their children are young and make sure that their children have an RESP in place. Statistics show that 80 per cent of children with RESPs in their names go on to postsecondary studies, but only 44 per cent of parents have actually opened an RESP for their children. There's lots of work to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given that children born in 2005 and beyond who participate in the centennial education savings plan will be better able to afford postsecondary training, what is the government doing with respect to affordability for students of today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, that's a very important question. The Premier mentioned in his speech to the province in early February that we're very concerned about affordability in postsecondary. We're also very concerned about access. We're intending to create 15,000 new spaces in the next three years, 30,000 over six years, and 60,000 over the years of the 20-year strategic plan. But it has to be affordable.

Affordable is more than just tuition fees. Although we've indicated to the public postsecondary institutions that we will pay the costs of increase in tuition this year, we also have indicated that we're going to spend the course of this next year looking at affordability, looking at the costs of going to school, whether you're coming from Manyberries or whether you're coming from Fort Vermilion, whether you're moving from one urban centre to another. It's more than just tuition; it's also the cost of living and the cost of transportation.

So we're going to do that review. We're going to make sure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Tourism in Rural Alberta

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the government released the report A Place to Grow, Alberta's rural development strategy. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the minister planning to do in order to meet the recommendation that new tourism destinations be developed in rural Alberta?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, the four pillars of tourism in this province have traditionally been, of course, Calgary and Edmonton and Banff and Jasper. Certainly, the mandate that we have taken on is to move the tourism activity further into rural Alberta, and I want to just reaffirm to everyone here in the House today that there's lots to see in rural Alberta. As a way to try to solidify my argument about lots to see, I would want to indicate that if I lived just east of Lethbridge and if I had a dog and that dog wanted to run away, I could watch him for three days. You can see lots in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what plan for the next year does the minister have to establish, expand, and market tourism opportunities in rural Alberta?

Mr. Dunford: I notice I have the attention of the House now. Thank you very much.

The product development and marketing arms of our ministry are taking a look at some projects as we speak, and one of the ones that I am particularly excited about is around the Canadian badlands. Now, this is a project, of course, that would be primarily located east of highway 2. I think this is very important because we do get caught up, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the corridor and in terms of the mountains as we look at tourism here in the province. So when we start looking at east of highway 2, we look at the Canadian badlands. I might throw in at that particular point the Dinosaur Trail and other product that is likely to come on stream as we move forward.

We're very, very excited, then, about the opportunities for rural Alberta as it relates to tourism.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Beef Slaughter Facilities

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to direct my question to the hon. minister of agriculture on the crisis of BSE. The question I have at this time is that no one understands the importance of value-added here in the province, yet many of the small packing plants that are trying to get up and going cannot receive the financial aid they need and backing. Would the government contemplate or consider making a dollar-to-dollar match for the small packing plants and have a first mortgage on those packing plants, that would enable them to get the funding up and running and, therefore, increase and have value-added here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member. Today I don't think it's fair to say that they cannot get the funding that they require. Those plants that have proper business plans, those plants that have the experience and the expertise to move forward and the markets are getting the financing that they need, and we're going to see those plants come to fruition very, very shortly.

Mr. Speaker, I said in public and many other times that anyone can build a slaughter facility. That's not the hard part. It's what you do with it afterwards that counts. This government is not going to pick winners or losers. We're going to stand behind our producers, and we're going to stand behind this industry.

Mr. Hinman: Last week the Premier made comments that it's not about science; it's about politics. Our beef is supposedly safe here, which I know it is. I eat it here in the province. Why has this government shut down farm gate sales and acts like there is a problem? In the past we've always had farm gate sales. We no longer allow it here in the province of Alberta, whereas B.C. still does.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest things that has come out of this is that the world and consumers demand food safety. This government has always worked with the industry to develop the rules and regulations that will enable these plants to survive and thrive. I think the member is a little bit mistaken in some of the comments that he's making with regard to our shutting down this marketplace.

I'll say one other thing, Mr. Speaker. Part of our six-point plan, a major component of it, is the slaughter capacity. One of the things that the industry has told me at round-tables that I had with the industry in January is that we need to have a consensus amongst our producers as to food safety, food inspection, and that is what we have. They like the rules that we have in place. We would like to harmonize with the other provinces, and that's another issue that we'll be addressing federally and provincially.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. A final supplemental question regarding the banking system here. There are many farmers that are in a crisis situation now because of BSE. Would you urge the banks to postpone their foreclosure on those farming operations that have not been able to zero-base their operating loans because of BSE?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to see the specifics of any of those situations that might be urgent in nature. I can tell you that under our CAIS program the advanced payments and the final payments under the 2003 program are about 70 per cent complete. In many instances where the banks have decided that they for whatever reason do not want to wait for that program, we've been able to expedite the 2003 CAIS payments and, in fact, the advances under CAIS. The banks have been very, very receptive to that, and I intend to continue to dialogue with them and to work on making the CAIS program the risk management program for all producers in the province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we were able to recognize 17 hon. members, which is very, very significant. So I want to congratulate all of you who have participated for your sharp questions and your sharp answers. A couple might get a note from me later in the day, but all in all pretty good.

Just so the Minister of Economic Development knows, while you may be able to see a dog running for three days outside of Lethbridge – I said the other day that I would start with a comment of the day – in March of 1906 the first Edmonton-to-Calgary automobile journey was undertaken in a 29-horsepower Ford. Twenty gallons of gasoline and a gallon of lubrication oil were used to complete the journey. Sounds like my Buick.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the Albert Lacombe school from St. Albert. They have some special teachers here, Bruce Brown and Tina Warbis, and volunteers, which are key, Mrs. Labas and Mr. Lauckner.

Also, I understand that the hon. Doug Griffiths, Battle River-Wainwright, is getting married. He says a special hello to Brodie Ackerblade, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member will have observed earlier that I did like that to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for mentioning the name of an hon. member. I have to do the same thing to the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to the rest of the Assembly I am very honoured to introduce a rancher from northeastern Alberta. Shelley Dyck farms with her husband Bob and her family just northwest of St. Lina. Shelley is a previous school board trustee for many years, and she is now presently offering her contributions and efforts and knowledge by sitting on the zone 7 children's services board. So if I could ask this Assembly to honour Shelley Dyck if she would rise, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very proud to rise in the House to introduce a number of guests who are here in support of Bill 202, PCAD, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs. Some of them braved the winter road conditions to be here, but they've been through much more difficult circumstances as they watched their loved ones sink lower into the depths of depression with drug abuse.

There is one that could not be here today, and his name is Tyler Bjornstad. Tyler wanted to be here today to support this bill, but he was not able to be here due to ongoing treatment. He also supports this legislation.

So here in our members' gallery today I would like to introduce Morgan Kingdom, Dallas Oeger, Alisha Pollar, Nick Smith, Ryan Stanley, and Miranda Zapisocki. If I pronounce your names wrong, I apologize. Those are youth that here today to support this bill.

From Parents Empowering Parents – if you'd like to stand when I call your name, then we'll be able to recognize you later on, parents – we have Audrey Bjornstad, Patrick Galenza, Kelly Parson, Barb White, Maralyn Benay, Tina Dow, and Gord Daniher. Other parents and family members from Parents Empowering Parents are Marguerite MacPherson, Lori Read, Pat LaSalle, Bill Baker, Aline Lafleur, Lisen Limon Falcon, Asia Castor, Samantha Castor, Karin Daniher, Denise Scorgie, Moyra Holliday, and Chris Uttley.

One more recovering youth who is present is Gillian Galenza, and I'd ask Gillian to stand as well. Anyone else here supporting Bill 202, if I do not have your name . . .

The Speaker: It's okay, hon. member. Thank you very much.

Mrs. Jablonski: Could you please welcome our members? Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm going to be leery of these introductions here. That went on seven minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on Recognitions.

North Saskatchewan River Rescue

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 24 two nine-year-old boys fell through the thin ice of the North Saskatchewan River and into the frigid waters. Brandon was able to pull himself out to safety, but Steven Hillman was not able to do the same. Luckily for him Jack King, Lawrence Yuskow, Patricia Bartolozzi, and Patrizio Bartolozzi were nearby to come to his rescue.

King immediately went to help, running into Yuskow, who then called 911, and the Bartolozzis happened upon King and Yuskow and immediately sprang into action. Patrizio risked his own life by crawling out onto the thin ice to drag Steven to safety. Without Patrizio's quick thinking and selfless drive to help a person in need, Steven might have suffered a different fate.

For their actions I would like to recognize Jack King, Lawrence

Yuskow, and Patricia Bartolozzi, and for risking his own life to rescue Steven Hillman, I would ask the Assembly to pay special tribute to Patrizio Bartolozzi. He truly is a role model and a hero.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

U of A Pandas Hockey Team

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and recognize some very outstanding athletes from the University of Alberta. These fine young women have been doing a single masterful job since October 13, 2001, and that is win. They have not lost a single game during this time frame and have just recently captured their fourth straight Canada West women's hockey title, beating the Manitoba Bisons 2 to 1 and 5 to 3 in a best of three final.

Their current unbeaten streak currently sits at 105 straight games. You very rarely see such dominance in sport at any level. This is just an outstanding feat considering the level of competition in women's university hockey.

The amount of dedication these women put forward towards both their athletic and academic commitments is to be admired and commended. They have had many close games, but these athletes just refuse to give up and have come together as a team and persevered.

I congratulate all the athletes, the head coach, coaches assistants, and parents of the present team and of all the teams since 2001 on a job well done.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Kyle Shewfelt

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak about a once-hidden secret in the Dover community of the Calgary-Fort constituency. Indeed, it's a secret no more that a quiet young Albertan has brought top honour to Canada at the 2004 Olympics in Athens, the birthplace of the Olympic Games.

This young man is Kyle Shewfelt. He is the family product of Nola and Wes Shewfelt, together with his brother Scott. He is also the athletic product of the Altadore Gymnastic Club and personal coach Tony Smith and career coach Kelly Manjak. As you know, he has brought great pride and encouragement to Canadian athletes, and he is an great inspirational model for the young people in Alberta.

Just think about it. Olympics 2004: we have two gold medals won by Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

U of A Golden Bears Volleyball Team

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to recognize the University of Alberta men's volleyball team. The Alberta Golden Bears captured their fourth national men's volleyball championship on Sunday in Quebec City, with an exciting 3 to 2 win over second seeded Trinity Western Spartans in one of the more closely contested national finals in history.

This accomplishment was made all the more exceptional by the fact that the national title caps off a brilliant season for the Bears in which they had an overall record of 33 wins and only two losses, and fourth year player Brock Davidiak of Edmonton earned MVP honours following his performance in the gold match final.

It takes a great deal of skill and dedication to win a championship banner, and the Bears volleyball team is to be congratulated. This latest achievement builds on the university's outstanding reputation for good sportsmanship and excellence in athletics.

I know all members of this Assembly join me in extending their best wishes and congratulations to head coach Terry Danyluk and all members of the University of Alberta men's volleyball team.

Spitz Sylvan Lake Ice Marathon

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise today and recognize the outstanding efforts of the Foothills Speed Skating Marathon Association in hosting the third annual Spitz Sylvan Lake Ice Marathon, an international event in Sylvan Lake on February 26.

Through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Evert van Benthem, Mr. and Mrs. Dirk Appel, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Yss, this year's event was a huge success, with local volunteers hosting over 125 skaters from Europe and 50 from outside our province, with a total of 500 skaters participating in all the races. In fact, Mr. van Benthem is to the Netherlands in speed skating what hockey and Wayne Gretzky is to Canada.

It's hoped that this event, which honours the sport of speed skating and the Dutch heritage of these three men, will grow and become one leg of the Grand Prix 200-kilometre circuit. This would be a huge accomplishment for Sylvan Lake. The other three legs of this international event are in Sweden, Austria, and Finland.

This is truly a remarkable event, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask all honourable members to join with me in recognizing the volunteers and organizers who did such an outstanding job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Flooding in Guyana

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In late December of 2004 and into the end of January this year the nation of Guyana endured four weeks of torrential rains which have resulted in widespread flooding. Many people lost their lives, and 50 per cent of the total population in Guyana have lost everything they had, their livestock and cash crops, and the rest have with limited water supply and inadequate medical assistance, all contributing to a high risk of disease.

As many as 75,000 people, almost 10 per cent of the total population there, still have standing water in and around their homes, raising fear of epidemics such as malaria and cholera. It's a huge challenge for the government as well as the people of Guyana to get the water out and the health resources in.

The flood disaster in Guyana brought powerful relief that was felt here in our homes and everywhere around the world. The lives lost cannot be replaced, but we certainly can reduce the suffering of victims of this disaster by helping them . . .

The Speaker: That's one minute, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Pharmacist Awareness Week

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise again today, this time in recognition of national Pharmacist Awareness Week. The theme of this year's event is A Healthy Partnership: You and Your Pharmacist.

Pharmacists work in local drugstores, hospitals, nursing homes, and outpatient clinics. They receive a minimum of five years of university training in all aspects of human health and medication management. The traditional role of a pharmacist as dispenser of medication has been replaced by a multifaceted, comprehensive role of primary care where patients and health professionals rely on a pharmacist as a drug expert, a health educator, and as a provider of disease management. Surveys have shown that pharmacists are the most trusted health professional and the most accessible health care providers in the community.

I have taken great pride, Mr. Speaker, in being a member of this profession that's essential to the health and well-being of Canadians for 10 years, and I would like to encourage Albertans to take a moment this week to reflect on the impact their local pharmacist has had on their lives in the last year whether he or she promptly filled a prescription, gave pertinent warning about a drug interaction, gave helpful advice, or was simply available when needed.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a petition signed by 400 Albertans from Clairmont, Fox Creek, Grande Prairie, High Prairie, Little Smoky, Red Deer, Stettler, Sunset House, Valleyview, Vermilion, Whitecourt, and many other areas urging the government to "institute a fair and equitable minimum floor price for cattle that would be flexible to meet the changing needs of the cattle industry, including cow-calf producers, and curb the excessive profits of the major meat packers." This petition adds another 401 names to the one presented earlier, the total now being 802.

Thank you.

The purpose of Bill 201 is to create smoke-free environments in enclosed public and work places. I care very deeply about the health of all Albertans and am particularly concerned with the exposure of youth to second-hand smoke. The regulations set forth in this legislation will help the province embrace and promote healthy workplaces and safe public social areas for Albertans as well as provide a province-wide set of standards concerning smoke-free areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bill 202

This bill would recognize that children who abuse drugs are victims and need help and protection and recognizes that families should be actively involved in ensuring the safety of their children, especially when involved in drug abuse. The outcome of 202 would be that children are safe and free from abuse and neglect, practise healthy behaviours, and are successful in their transition to adulthood.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to table an article from the Peace River Block Daily News dated September 7, 2004, in which the Tender Beef Co-op indicates that their plans to build a slaughterhouse in Alberta were stymied by a "negative attitude" from the Alberta government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table an Alberta Fish and Game Association position paper on Métis hunting and fishing rights in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from the Academy of Learning where they are marketing 18,000 workers from Venezuela, and they attest that these workers are Alberta job ready. They're engineers, rig workers, and tradesmen.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter dated February 16, 2005, from my office to the hon. House leaders in this Legislative Assembly. This is in regard to improving and reforming the Public Accounts Committee.

My second tabling is on behalf of Joanne Dykstra, who is writing from the Fulton Child Care Association in regard to the school closures in the neighbourhood of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

My third tabling is five copies of a petition. This is also from the Fulton Place community, and it is in regard to the public school closures which hopefully will not occur in Edmonton-Gold Bar. This petition is signed by 74 citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table an e-mail from senior Enron officials regarding the destruction of electricity-trading tapes. This e-mail is dated March 2001.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Municipal Affairs: pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2003; the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association annual report, April 1, 2003, to March 31, 2004; the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2003. Pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the Safety Codes Council 2003 annual report and the authorized accredited agencies activity summary for April 1, 2002, to March 31, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Provoking Debate

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period in an exchange between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the minister of infrastructure, the minister of infrastructure claimed that the Liberal opposition had access to the government flight logs. Now, citing Beauchesne 417, in which questions and answers in question period should not be raising or provoking debate, I would argue that he very much opened that up to provoked debate.

The minister himself was the one who allowed the Official Opposition to examine the manifests but not the flight logs. He was very aware of the difference between the two. I would argue that in misleading the House, he did provoke debate in that given the sequence of events, he was very clear on giving us access to passenger manifests but not to the flight logs.

In fact, in a memo dated February 14, 2005, the minister of infrastructure states that the passenger manifests are available for viewing by appointment at the government hangar and then goes on to give contact information. We in fact followed those instructions, but we did not see flight logs. We saw manifests. Further in that memo of the 14th: if we wish to view additional documentation such as flight logs, one must file a formal request in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Again, that's written by the very member who is claiming that the Official Opposition had access to flight logs when very clearly we did not. I would ask that the member correct himself at this point in time.

Thank you.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously in the answer that I gave, I did misspeak and said "logs" instead of "manifest." I believe that when you take a look at the Blues, I actually clarified it in the answer to the question. So if there's any harm done, I do apologize to the hon. member for bringing it up. Yes, indeed, they were given full access to the manifest logs because by virtue of the private information they are required to be under the auspices of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

The Speaker: I would think that we've now had clarification for this. This matter has now ended.

Submissions on the Rotation of Oral Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Thursday last I rose in the House and indicated that failing, I guess, an agreement or advice provided to me by the various House leaders with respect to the rotation of question period, I would provide certainty for three days of the question period: Thursday last, today, and tomorrow. I indicated that at the conclusion of this part of our agenda for today I would invite comments from various individuals, particularly House leaders but not to say that other members cannot participate, on this whole question of the question period. What is certain is that our Standing Orders say that we have to have a 50-minute question period. That's it. I also invited comment with respect to Recognitions and the other item that we have another two days each week.

So I'm going to invite members who wish to participate. I'm seeking advice, and I'll take that advice and would come back with a ruling no later than 5:15 tomorrow afternoon that would provide us for the duration of the Legislature. This is not a debate. There is no need for cross-debate. Nobody has to get angry with one another. Just provide your thoughts, and we'll see where we go with it. You have to have some certainty. If there can't be any certainty in the House, well, the chair has no difficulty providing that certainty to the members. If no one wants to make participation, that's fine with me too.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you making this presentation of arguments public by asking that it be done in the Legislative Assembly, obviously recorded by Hansard and available for those in the gallery to witness the arguments that are put forward. I appreciate that.

We in the Official Opposition would like to present issues surrounding the number of questions and the order and rotation of question period for the 26th Legislature. In addition, with the Speaker's permission I would like to speak briefly on the format and the use of precedents in considering how the Speaker will determine how question period rotation shall proceed through the 26th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition believes that there should be a stronger role for Official Opposition private members during question period. I note that in Marleau and Montpetit they hold out that the primary function of question period is to hold the government accountable and the right to ask questions of the government is fundamental. Okay. That's Marleau and Montpetit, 415. Oral Question Period is the primary forum where the opposition may ask questions and seek accountability and information from the government. Marleau and Montpetit, 416, notes that question period is almost exclusively for opposition. The accountability function must be done primarily by opposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you are very aware, as most members of the House are, that Alberta is unusual in the degree to which private members who support the government are able to participate in question period both in terms of the number of questions and also in the order or rotation or positioning of the members' questions. In fact, the high participation of members supporting the government is acknowledged by the 2001 Speaker's ruling in which he notes that for private members supporting the government, their role is reflecting the contribution of individual members but also the number of government private members.

Now, in comparison to other jurisdictions – for example, Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia – the primacy of opposition and the Official Opposition in question period is stronger, and government members are not in the regular rotation at all. But there are also examples where members supporting the government are in the rotation – for example, in Ontario and even in the federal House of Commons – in which one question is allowed from a government private member each day.

Mr. Speaker, private members supporting the government have important contributions to make, but given that the primary function of question period is to hold government accountable, I would argue that these members are not well positioned to fulfill this function. In fact, Marleau and Montpetit notes that their primary function – that is, the primary function of members supporting the government – is in fact to facilitate the government's agenda.

I note in Beauchesne 195 that "the chief function of the government party is to support the administration of the day in achieving its policy objectives." Marleau and Montpetit, 30, notes that the parties define political fault lines for debate and legislative activity, and again Marleau and Montpetit, 32: the tripartite functional division of the House is government, private members who support the government, and private members who oppose the government. I would argue that accountability, therefore, in question period must be done primarily by opposition. In other words, if question period is for accountability, then the Official Opposition should have the pre-eminent role in doing that.

It's been raised many times inside and outside of this Assembly that members supporting the government have special access to government that is not enjoyed by members of the Official Opposition or other opposition parties. There are a number of examples that have been raised inside and outside of the House; for example, the standing policy committees, which are funded by the regular budget. But no one other than members of government caucus are allowed to participate. These also rarely have open or public meetings, and no Hansard or minutes are kept.

Members of the government caucus have access to decision-making and information not shared with other private members. There is special access by members supporting the government to ministers by simple right of proximity and by being members of that caucus. Interestingly, just recently, according to the previous Speaker Schumacher, even bills from members supporting the government are now being treated more like government business. He says, and I quote: the government is trying to co-opt this process by requiring caucus scrutiny and consent for certain private members' bills, much the same as government bills. The point being made is that members supporting the government are treated differently and have more access to government and Executive Council than other private members not supporting the government.

Other changes in the last 12 years have affected the ability of the Official Opposition to function fully in other processes of the Assembly. The opportunities to comment in substantive ways have been reduced. For example, we've had speaking times which have gone from unlimited to 30 minutes to 20 minutes to 15 minutes. We increasingly have government bills which empower ministers to carry on virtually all business in the specified area through regulations and orders in council without returning to the public forum of the Legislature for additional scrutiny and comment. We have the time guillotine that is now available for use by the government to limit the amount of time that will be spent on debating government bills, and we sit relatively few days in comparison to other jurisdictions.

In other words, members supporting the government have other opportunities to question Executive Council or to have their views heard. The Official Opposition does not have this access and therefore must take the primary role in both position and number of questions in question period.

There is also a categorical distinction between the Official Opposition and other opposition that ought to provide us with a relative role beyond what simple numbers should provide. Position is of great importance. The role of the Official Opposition being pre-eminent among opposition members appears in Marleau and Montpetit, 33, and Beauchesne 196-97. This is evident in distribution of debate time, again Marleau and Montpetit, 33, and the Official Opposition being given particular rights in Beauchesne 196. The Official Opposition is equal to the opposition versus the recognition for other parties.

The Liberal opposition has laid out the argument for pre-eminence of the Official Opposition, but we believe strongly in supporting opportunity in question period for all opposition members, including single-member party representatives. Privileging the Official Opposition in terms of numbers of questions is not necessarily to disadvantage government. Marleau and Montpetit, 416, indicates that question period dominance by the Official Opposition serves both sides well. Government gets the last word even if the Official Opposition sets the agenda of questions.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make clear that I am not arguing the abolition of questions being asked by private members who support the government, but I am arguing that their position be lower in the rotation. If constituency-based questions need to be raised by members from the government side, their position in the rotation should follow all reasonable opportunities being exhausted by members of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking you to consider granting the Official Opposition significant number and positioning of questions. We ask the pre-eminence of the Official Opposition with five leader questions. In the last Speaker ruling the Speaker was wise by apportioning seven questions: three for the leader and four for other members of the Official Opposition. We ask that our now larger caucus be taken into consideration and ask for an additional four questions in positions high enough in the rotation to be likely to be heard each day. Thus, four questions plus the five leader questions we've asked for, for a total of nine questions daily. Given the 24 government ministries from which accountability and information need be sought, this would give us a ratio of three questions for every eight ministries.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to comment briefly on the Speaker's memo of the 2nd of March indicating retention of the prohibition of preambles before supplementary questions. The lack of a preamble in supplementals is an advantage to the government side because opposition parties are unable to react to earlier answers and reframe subsequent questions to hold ministers accountable for the statements they've just made. In other words, there's no ability through use of a preamble to respond to the answer just given. There's no ability to put a response on the table to note that it was off topic or didn't answer the question that was asked. So there's no ability for the Official Opposition to contextualize the supplementary question as a further question in response to the answer given. We're not allowed to refer to the answer the minister just gave us at all. I would ask that if the 45-second rule is going to be put in place, the Speaker please consider removing the prohibition against the use of a preamble on supplementary questions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, precedent, which I know is a very important part of what you consider. I know that in other contexts there has been some reference to the 1986 rotation of questions and positioning. If I may ask that we avoid the search for selective precedents. The rule of precedents must take in all relevant precedents including the most recent, and all other things being equal, the most recent precedents trump older precedents. The more recent precedents will be more attuned to the changes that have happened. Precedents should favour orderly change according to established principles of stability, certainty, and evolutionary progress of parliamentary traditions and practices. All circumstances should be considered.

This Assembly has had many changes since 1986. Although the Official Opposition had 32 members in 1993, they had only three leader questions. I argue that much has changed since then, and I've already mentioned some of those differences: the creation and institutionalization of the standing policy committees, the shorter speaking times, increasing government bills passed which take parliamentary scrutiny outside of the Legislature and subsuming action into orders in council or regulations, and Speaker Schumacher's point about government giving their private members special attention and resources not available to other members.

I argue that in the context of the last election, in which Albertans are looking for a stronger opposition voice, it would be counter to that expressed democratic will to reduce the number of Official Opposition questions. I'm not arguing that any grouping of private members should lose questions, but I am arguing that the Official Opposition should be pre-eminent, followed by third party and other party representatives. Government members should be able to raise their constituency-based questions at the end of the rotation.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to argue this.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the NDs.

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking on behalf of our House leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who unfortunately fractured his ankle yesterday and is unable to be with us for a few days. So I beg the indulgence of the House to speak on his behalf.

Mr. Speaker, last week you noted the importance of question period, citing Marleau and Montpetit. Your citation noted in the western parliamentary tradition the importance of question period for holding members of Executive Council accountable. By tradition this method of accountability is particularly important for members of the opposition parties. In fact, question period as a means to hold members of Executive Council is at the very core of what it means to belong to a loyal opposition party.

It is not our position that the government private members should be excluded from question period. Our position is, however, that the opposition parties ought to be given the first opportunity to set the tone and the direction of question period. I would like to emphasize that the question period belongs not only to the Official Opposition but also to other recognized opposition parties. As a result of last November's election the Alberta NDP elected four members to this Assembly, thereby becoming a recognized opposition party. As such, it is the submission of the NDP opposition that the achievement of recognized party status warrants a change in the question period rotation in the 26th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, it is my submission that the most important criteria upon which the question period rotation should be based are the precedents in this Legislative Assembly. A second criteria is the practices of the federal Parliament and the practices in other provincial Legislatures where there are recognized third parties.

In fact, in the history of this Assembly there is an exact parallel to the situation we find ourselves in in this 26th Legislature. Between 1986 and 1989, in the 21st Assembly of the Legislature of Alberta, the proportion and number of seats between the two recognized opposition parties was exactly as it is now. Only the distribution of the seats was reversed in 1984. The NDP was the Official Opposition, with 16 seats, while the Liberals were the third party, with four seats. Between 1986 and 1989 the Liberal party opposition, with four seats, was given the third and sixth main questions in question period. Given the exact parallel with today's 26th Legislature, we submit that the NDP opposition is entitled to ask the third and sixth main questions.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in every jurisdiction across Canada today where there is a recognized third party, that party has no lower than the third main question in question period. Currently in the federal Parliament the Official Opposition Conservatives have the first two main questions; the third party, the Bloc Québécois, has the third main question; and the fourth party, the NDP, has the fourth main question. In the Ontario Legislature the third party, the NDP, receives the third and fourth main questions each day. Again, these precedents require that the NDP opposition in this Legislature should receive at least the third question each day.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make a couple of points relative to issues raised in the submission of the Liberal caucus, which asked for great scope for the Official Opposition as opposed to the opposition in general. Actually, under Beauchesne, section 196, there are limited additional roles specified for the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, just a second, please. It may be more prudent here this afternoon to make submissions on behalf of what the hon. member and his party believes. I don't want this to turn into a debate. If the hon. member then questions what the hon.

Official Opposition House Leader says, there may be then a desire to counteract. So let's just stick to what it is we want to have delivered here today.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I'll carry on.

Based on the precedents that I have cited in our submission, the NDP opposition proposes the following rotation for question period for main questions: first question to the Liberal caucus, second question to the Liberal caucus, third question to the NDP opposition, fourth question to a government member, fifth question to the Liberal caucus, sixth question to the NDP opposition, seventh question to a government member, eighth question to the Liberal caucus, ninth question to the NDP opposition, and all subsequent questions should rotate between government members and the Official Opposition.

At least once a week the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner should be given the seventh question, which would bump all subsequent questions one down.

This rotation would provide government members with an opportunity to ask four questions in the top 12 and five questions in the top 15. The Liberals would have seven questions in the top 15, which is the same as what they had from 2001 to 2004. I would like to note, Mr. Speaker, that in 2001 the size of the Liberal caucus was cut in half. At that time, however, the number of Liberal questions was not similarly cut in half. It follows, then, that simply because the Liberal numbers have now increased, their questions should not automatically increase as well. In fact, the most significant change between this Legislature and the 2001 Legislature is that today there are two recognized opposition parties whereas there was only one in the previous Legislature.

To conclude, therefore, the most exact precedent for today's Legislature is the question period rotation that was in place when the composition of the opposition made up of recognized parties was identical to what it is today. Such an identical composition can be found in 1986, in the 21st Legislature, when the Liberal opposition, with four members, had the third and sixth questions. We ask you to reply on this precedent, Mr. Speaker, and in your ruling provide the third and sixth main questions to the NDP opposition each day.

I just want to make a short comment with respect to time limitations, which have been informally enforced. This has produced, I think, a tremendous improvement already in our question period. Today I think we set, at least in my limited experience, a record in the number of questions that were asked, and it didn't detract at all from the thoroughness of the answers which are sometimes given in this House. So, Mr. Speaker, I would wholeheartedly endorse that change and thank you for making it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not wanting to be repetitive on the arguments that have been brought up, I'd just like to bring up a few points. I feel that Albertans and this Assembly would best be served by the more voices that come forward, the better off we will be. It is important that the government is asked questions from those that aren't part of the government. I do feel it's critical. I am the only MLA elected in the rural – I feel that that's an important and significant role that I need to play for rural Albertans. We received close to 9 per cent of the vote, and I think that in those considerations it would be appropriate to allow more than one question a week. It's also worth noting that 53 per cent of Albertans did not vote for the current government and would add to the weight of why it is important that those who are not part of the government get to ask them questions.

I think it would be fitting to be able to receive one question a day, when we look at the precedent set in the past, and if that were to be in the ninth spot, I think that would be appropriate. To look on the long side, with 21 opposition members being elected, the ninth question every other day to me would be extending it the longest. We should be allowed to ask questions at least once every other day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this discussion as well. First of all, let me congratulate you on your election as Speaker to this 26th Legislature. This is your third election as Speaker and clearly sets you out as one of the pre-eminent guardians of the legislative process and the parliamentary tradition in our world of parliamentary democracies.

Mr. Speaker, the role of the Legislature has at least three very important functions in a parliamentary democracy. We of course debate and pass bills brought before the House, primarily brought by government but also brought by private members. We have been leaders in the parliamentary world in promoting the role of private members with a system for debate and voting which ensures that private members' bills have the opportunity to be debated and the opportunity to become law, a system, I might note, which was promoted by yourself when you had the role of Government House Leader, attaining a far-reaching agreement between all House leaders on that point.

As a Legislature one of our other very important functions is to pass supply. The Legislature has the ultimate authority over the public purse. Indeed, a good portion of each session is dedicated to budget, Committee of Supply, and appropriation bills to ensure that interim supply, supply, and supplementary supply are all voted by this House.

A third very important role, Mr. Speaker, is accountability. The government promotes business to the House, requests supply from the House, and is accountable to the House. Part of that accountability is the daily question period, an opportunity for members of the Legislature to seek information from the government and to hold the government accountable for its actions by questioning ministers of the Crown in the areas of their responsibility.

While often the Legislature is viewed as government and opposition, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it's actually made up of government accountable to the Legislature, all members of the Legislature, some of whom have a particular role as members of the Official Opposition, some of whom choose to sit with others as recognized parties, some of whom sit alone as independents, and, yes, some who choose to sit with the governing party.

But all of those members who are not part of Executive Council, not just those who sit in opposition, have the responsibility of the Legislature to hold the government accountable and to represent their constituencies by raising issues, seeking information, and questioning action. The participation of all private members in question period is a critical role of a private member, and every private member deserves equitable access to that particular portion of our daily travail.

The opposition's function in parliament is well known. It's a role which has been recognized in part by affording the Official Opposition and other recognized opposition parties the pre-eminent position each day in question period. But that role, Mr. Speaker, is not so overarching that it can be allowed to push out or overwhelm the very legitimate right of all private members. Question period is not in our tradition the exclusive domain of the opposition.

It should be noted that with 50 minutes allotted for question period, our Legislature is among the forefront in the country in meeting the opportunity for accountability. Some are as short as 15 minutes. You have, Mr. Speaker, indicated both in your ruling in 2001 and in your comments on Thursday a preference for brevity in questions and answers, which would allow for the maximum utilization of the full 50 minutes that this House devotes to question period each day. While specific application of time rules may inhibit important or appropriate questions or answers, for the most part, assuming the framing of the question is not excessively inflammatory or inaccurate, requiring significant context for an answer – and, really, that should not be necessary – I certainly would accept that a judicious application of time parameters will ensure that we maximize the number of opportunities for private members each day.

So how should the question period for the 26th Legislature be structured? Well, Mr. Speaker, on the basis outlined above, there should be two principles observed. All private members should have a fair opportunity to participate, and the opposition, due to their particular role, should have the priority position daily. That, in fact, is our tradition.

Mr. Speaker, the last two Legislatures dealt fairly and appropriately with this, and we would propose that the rotation utilized for each of those Houses, one of which, in 1997, was very similar in makeup to this one, was appropriate and ought to continue; that is, the first three questions to the Official Opposition, the fourth to the third party, with a subsequent rotation between the government and Official Opposition until the third party receives an additional question as the 11th question, and the private members on the government side receive all questions after 13.

We would submit that the independent member should be eligible for every 58th question, as has been accorded to other members who have attended as independent members in earlier Legislatures, and presumably would fall into the rotation on the appropriate day after the first four questions or within the first nine questions.

With the fact that the New Democratic Party now has official party status, we would not object to a rotation which would see them participate earlier in the rotation, somewhat as they propose. We would suggest, however, that it should be the first two questions to the Official Opposition, the third question to the third party, the fourth question to private members on the government side, the fifth question to the Official Opposition, the sixth to the third party, the seventh to members on the government side, and then a rotation between private members on the government side and Official Opposition members to 14, with any subsequent after 14 being allocated to government members, the 58th to the independent member after the primary rotation on the day that his entitlement comes up.

Either proposal, Mr. Speaker, assuming 14 questions a day, would result in PC private members, with 63.7 per cent of the 58 private members in this House, having 20 questions per week while their numbers would warrant 36 and would have them participating only after four or five opposition questions being raised, which would answer the principle of fairness and a pre-eminence of the opposition role.

The Official Opposition, with 27 per cent of the private members in this House, would have 28 questions per week, including the first two or three per day and three of the first five. Their numbers would only warrant 15. So the allocations are almost double what they would be entitled to normally on a simple percentage basis. The third party, with 6.9 per cent of the seats in the House, would have eight questions, whereas their entitlement on that percentage would be four, with either one or two in the first, depending on which of the two suggested rotations you selected. The independent member would get one question per week, almost right in line with his .95 per cent of private member status.

These proposals are fair to the opposition members in that they get almost twice as many questions as numbers warrant and the front end of the question period rotation each day. It's fair to the private members on the government side in that while a smaller number of questions go to them than warranted, it continues to provide the opportunity for them to do their job, equally important to that of opposition members, in getting information important to their constituents, highlighting issues important to their constituents, and holding the government accountable on behalf of their constituents.

Some would suggest that private members who are members of the governing party have better access already. With respect, such arguments fail to distinguish the important difference in role and function that this House stands for. Every member of this House has an equal role and an equal responsibility to represent their constituents. Some may be asked to take responsibility as a member of Executive Council. By doing so, they may feel that they can take on that role and better represent their constituents and all Albertans, but it comes at some loss of their individual role as a member in the House.

Members decide, and it's their decision alone, to join a caucus perhaps in order to be more effective as a group than as an individual. They may agree to meet as a caucus and make decisions as to how they will handle themselves as a group. They may do any number of things outside this House which they believe will make them a more effective member and a better representative. None of that, Mr. Speaker, detracts from the individual responsibility of a member for his or her own voice and for his or her own vote and for his or her own actions and for his or her own right to participate to the fullest in this House regardless of whether they've chosen to align themselves with the governing caucus or an opposition party caucus or to remain independent.

It's for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be appropriate or desirable to move away from the rotations you previously determined in 1997 and again in 2001, which have served this House and its members well, when the opposition had similar numbers to that reflected in the House today and when the numbers were lower. In other words, the fact that a smaller opposition in the last Legislature was afforded significantly more questions than their numbers warranted to acknowledge that particular role of the opposition is not a reason to grow that number of questions because they have now risen back up to the numbers they previously had in 1997.

Mr. Speaker, question period is important for all members of the House. There is a pre-eminent role for the opposition. That's why they get the first three or four questions in the front end of the rotation. The proposal to maintain the status quo or modify it gently to acknowledge the official party status of the NDP by bringing their second question earlier in the rotation would recognize that pre-eminent role of the opposition. Having the rotation as we've suggested would clearly recognize that each and every private member of this House has a valuable and important role and responsibility to their constituents and to Albertans to seek information and to hold the government accountable regardless of the side of the House on which they sit.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, in order to increase democratic participation in this House and to involve the electorate to a greater degree, which I think is what we would all believe in, we have to involve them through the question period. Voters traditionally in Alberta and, I guess, in other provinces as well have less than a 50 per cent turnout, or a very small turnout. In order to involve people and give them the kinds of transparency and accountability that I believe is necessary, the opposition must have more questions.

It's been noted previously that oppositions together received more votes than the government itself. The first past the post system works against members of the opposition. What we require is the opportunity to ask the questions that the people have elected us to ask. The government has all the resources. It also has what I consider to be a large cloak, a cloak of secrecy, and that is FOIP. So often we request of the government to detail a position such as the flight logs, and we're unable to do that, so we have to go through the long and involved FOIP process. Question period is our one shot at democracy, and I believe the opposition needs a larger share in that position.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to get up and make a few brief comments. I appreciate very much the comments that I've heard from all hon. members today. I guess I would like to speak just on behalf of some of the private members on the government side. We, too, have constituents and issues that occur and are raised by our constituents to us. It is just as important for us as a private member, whether we sit on the government side or not, to be able to in fact ask those questions. The truth is that we get very few opportunities to ask those questions in a question period format to show our constituents that we, too, are working.

Believe it or not, we all work very hard. I recognize that you work hard as well, but I need to be able to assure my constituents that I'm not just sitting here day after day not doing anything. They ask me a question, and question period is my opportunity as well. It's very competitive in my caucus to try and get an opportunity to ask a question because, generally speaking, the opposition, both parties, have that opportunity well before us. So you have the opportunity to raise the bigger issues. We tend to raise issues that are more relevant to our own constituencies but equally important to us and to our constituents. We do have a majority of members, but we also have a minority of questions. So when you talk about democracy, it's just as important for us to be a part of that democratic process that question period affords us.

I remember in 1993 when question period was extended to its current length. Probably at that point, at least, it was the longest in Canada. That was done in recognition of a larger, more substantive opposition that we wanted to show that we had respect for, and we still have respect for the opposition parties although they are not at 32 members, which they were at that time.

I think that the current system, Mr. Speaker, whether it were to change the order of questions to two and one or stay with three and one for the opposition parties matters not to me from my perspective. But as a private member of this caucus and as somebody who served as the government caucus whip for over five years, my job was in fact to make sure that my private members, when I was doing my job as whip, had an equal opportunity to try and have their voices heard in here. I believe that the quality of their questions was just as good or better than anything that the opposition raised. We challenge our ministers just as much as they do. I would sincerely hope that when you make your ruling, our members are treated the same even though it's a lesser number than I think we're entitled to, that at least we end up with no less for our caucus.

Opposition members indicate that we have all of these advantages. Yes, we have standing policy committees. They are advisory bodies to ministers. It gives us an opportunity to review policy. That's our job. Government's job is to bring forward policy, and as a private member I wish to have the opportunity to participate in that policy direction. So, yes, SPCs are in fact for government members.

Under FOIP, as I recall, there were numerous members on the original FOIP committee from the opposition party, including a distinguished lawyer, Mr. Gary Dickson, that helped to write the rules of FOIP that we all have to live with, whether we like them or not. I think there are many of us that wish it had never been invented, but it's there. It's not just about freedom of information. It is, in fact, about protection of privacy, and that must be respected.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I know that if there's one thing I can count on, it's that you will in fact be fair when you make your final ruling on this decision, and I appreciate your consideration of my colleagues that are private members on the government side as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I'll be brief. I'd like to make a few comments here. My colleague the leader of the NDP opposition in the House, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, has made the argument based on precedent: first and foremost, the precedent of this House, and, secondly, precedents in other sister Legislatures across this country.

I've tried to search for a precedent in the history of this Legislature where when there is more than one recognized opposition party present in the House, the Official Opposition would have as many as the first five questions. There's no precedent that I can find in the 100-year history of this particular Legislature which gives the Official Opposition in the context of three or more parties being present in the House the first five questions. So that's one point that I want to reiterate.

Associated with that, of course, is the arrangement that this House had in 1986. That, I think, needs to be re-emphasized. The number of seats held between the two recognized opposition parties, the NDP and the Liberal at the time, were 16 plus four, or 20. We have the same, exact situation now except that the parties have reversed their positions. Liberals have 16 seats, and NDP have four seats. So I think the arrangement that was fair and appropriate and worked well in the Legislature of the 1980s is the arrangement that we are proposing, at the minimum, should be the guide.

Going outside of the precedents and history of this Legislature, my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has drawn our attention to the way the House of Commons as currently constituted uses the question period. I'm not going to repeat that; he is on record saying that. I just want to add one minor additional precedent to it. In the current Ontario Legislature, where there are three recognized parties – the ruling party and the Conservative Party and the NDP as a third party but a recognized party – the arrangement for the question period is as follows. The Official Opposition in the Ontario Legislature receives the first two questions; the third and fourth questions are then available to the NDP as the third recognized party in this Legislature. So that's another precedent, Mr. Speaker, that we should draw upon from a sister Legislature in our country.

With these points made, I think I would simply say that we should pay attention to the principle of precedents and that we should pay attention to the principle of fairness, both of which, I think, are incorporated in the proposal that the NDP opposition has submitted, with respect, to you and to the House, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Opposition House Leader has argued in favour of a diminished role for private members and, in particular, those private members who happen to be affiliated with the governing party. Private government members are not constrained by solidarity with the government policy, as are members of the Executive Council. In fact, by custom and tradition members of the backbench are free to criticize government policy. I would respectfully submit that the private members, including private government members, have equal rights to represent their constituents and their electors in this House and to raise their concerns before the House and to be their voice in this House. I would therefore argue in favour of the status quo in terms of rotation of the questions.

The Speaker: Are there additional comments from members? Anyone else want to participate? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a short comment with respect to the issue. There have been some statements made with respect to the low number of voters at provincial elections. The number is somewhere less than 50 per cent. Given that that might be a fact and given that the boundary review commission divided the 83 seats equitably, the government represents 62 of 83 ridings, or 75 per cent of the 50 per cent plus of Albertans who never took the opportunity to go to the polls.

Therefore, it follows that the private members in the House are with their questions representing 75 per cent of the people that didn't take an opportunity to vote. The opposition members are representing 25 per cent of that same group of citizens. I think that it speaks for itself, that perhaps we're being, I would suggest, more than liberal with our suggestion that the questions remain as our leader has suggested.

The Speaker: I thank all hon. members. I shall take this input. The table officers and I will do some huddling.

Statistically it's very easy to find out the calculation of exactly how things have gone in the past in the province of Alberta. A number of members talked about 1986. No member mentioned in the discussion of 1986 that other parties had a right to ask a supplemental question to the original question being asked, and I gather that while there was some discussion about 1986, no one has suggested that we might go back to that. I was here in 1986. It meant that the Official Opposition had the right to ask a question, they could have two supplementals, and any other party could ask a question as well, so it was quite a free-for-all in the Assembly on any given day. It sure did make some excitement for the chair, but that's probably not what anybody is anticipating today.

We've got variances, going from the Official Opposition saying that they want the first five questions to the government and the third party basically saying that it should be two and two to a variety of other things with it. We will use the best wisdom that we possibly can to try and come up with a conclusion. There will not be any heart attacks or anything else when this decision is made. It will be made for certainty, and it will be made in the best traditions that we can hopefully come up with.

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 3, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 3, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are no bills available for discussion given that bills 201 and 202 were only introduced today, and it would require unanimous consent of the House to move to discussion of Bill 201 at second reading. Now, it may not be appropriate for the House to have that unanimous consent given that most members, I presume all members other than the one introducing it, have just seen the bill for the first time today.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask, if it's the pleasure of the House, to have unanimous consent to proceed to second reading on the same day as first reading of Bill 201.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you look at your Standing Orders, 73(1) says, "Every Bill shall receive three separate readings on different days before being passed." What is being asked today is to waive this particular ruling, if I understand the hon. Government House Leader correctly.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we do not have private members' bills to proceed with this afternoon, then I would ask that the House waive the standing rules and allow us to proceed to government business for this afternoon to address the motion in reply to the Speech from the Throne because that is properly on the table with the unanimous consent of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you look at your Standing Orders, Standing Order 8(1) gives the Routine, and the Routine on Monday provides for certain things. What's being asked now by the Government House Leader is that the Assembly give unanimous consent to waive that so we might now proceed to Consideration of the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne.

The Speaker: Then we shall now proceed with the reply to the Lieutenant Governor's throne speech.

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 3]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you were last up, if you wanted to continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to take this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to start out by welcoming all members of the Assembly, particularly the new members of the Assembly, to the absolutely fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, in which you are now sitting. So welcome to you, one and all. I'm very proud of my constituency of Edmonton-Centre, as many of you know, and I take every possible opportunity to promote it and welcome you to it. It's pretty special to have the Legislative Assembly in your constituency, so I like to tout that when I get the chance.

I'd also like to thank the electors living in Edmonton-Centre. They were very supportive and generous to me during this last election and gave me a whopping majority, and I really appreciate that vote of confidence. Very nice to have. I've really enjoyed serving two terms, and I'm very much looking forward to the third term, that I'm now in.

The last group that I would like to thank is those on my campaign team that worked so hard to elect me. I think it's appropriate that I also recognize and thank them very much and of course, my family, who are fairly long-suffering in this, but I sure appreciate their support.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, we've had quite a bit of reflecting, this being the 100th year of Alberta, and I take a perverse pleasure in acknowledging that in all of this casting back 100 years, in fact we're casting back to a Liberal government. It was the innovation and vision for the 100 years that was set in place by, in fact, the Liberal government. So I know the members opposite don't like to acknowledge that when they talk about what was going on 100 years ago, but it was a Liberal government, and I'm proud of that. I'm proud that they did things like start the University of Alberta. It shows that Liberal commitment to higher education and to moving forward and trying to get as much access for as many people as possible to a postsecondary education. I'm proud of them that they put in place a number of public utilities and regulations for public utilities. I'm proud of the then Liberal government for having put some human rights, particularly women's rights, in place. Very appropriate.

We are also starting this 26th Legislature having come out of an election, obviously, so we've all had lots of opportunity – or at least I hope we did – as we were door-knocking to listen very carefully to what our constituents were telling us. What I looked for in the Speech from the Throne, what I was hoping to hear was that energy, that vitality that comes from saying: "Alberta is a good place to be. No, Alberta is a great place to be. But Alberta could be extraordinary. It could be mind-boggling. It could blow you away." I was looking for that kind of vision, that kind of excitement, that kind of planning, that kind of management, and I got autopilot. I got announcements that we've heard in two or three press releases over the last four months. I got something that was in an infomercial on TV. I was so disappointed, Mr. Speaker, because really that's what my constituents told me.

We have a unique opportunity right now to capitalize on our luck and on our good fortune. We're very lucky to be born and walking around on a chunk of geography that spews oil out of it. Some of us were lucky enough to be born here, and others were smart enough to move here. Nonetheless, that's where a good deal of our money comes from, and we need to recognize that. It has given us a surplus, and the Liberals want to see that not frittered away.

Some of you will remember a bumper sticker that was around, I think, in the '70s. Mr. Speaker, you'll have to bear with me while I paraphrase a bit because the original of the bumper sticker is not printable in Hansard to be read. But it went something along the lines of: dear Lord, please send me another oil boom, and this time I promise not to fritter it all away. That's the position that we're in. We are in an extraordinary position right now. We are so lucky to have this, and we need to be making sure that that money is not frittered away. Very, very important, and I heard that repeatedly from my constituents.

So what did they want done with this money? Well, they wanted to see prudent management of those assets. They really liked the Liberal idea of a surplus policy in which we had 35 per cent of future surpluses going into a postsecondary endowment fund, and don't you know it: Bill 1. Gosh, sounds like they heard it. I don't mind. I don't mind sharing good Liberal ideas with the government caucus. If it's a good idea, they should take it from us. Credit where credit's due. I'm happy to share that with you. It's a gift.

People also really like the idea of putting an additional 35 per cent of any future surpluses into the heritage fund to strengthen the heritage fund. That's become a keystone for us in our belief of who we are as Albertans and how we handle our resource revenue.

We had an additional 25 per cent going into infrastructure, which is badly needed, and we recognize that – so that was a catch-up fund – and a final 5 per cent going into a special endowment fund for universities, specifically going into the humanities and the arts. It's recognizing that there's opportunity that's being capitalized on, rightly so, by the sciences and technology sectors of the universities. They're attracting a lot of outside money and research grants. Good; go for it. But the arts and the humanities don't attract that same kind of outside assistance, and the Liberals felt that they're important. We need archaeologists and philosophers and artists and writers and speakers of other languages as much as we need scientists, and we wanted to make sure that there was some redress of the imbalance there. So that was the final 5 per cent.

You know, one interesting thing I will note is that people were pretty clear with me that they did not approve of having public lands sold off. That's been a bit of a move that we've been seeing from the government side, and I just want to state that very clearly: my constituents were not in favour of public land being sold off. I just want to get that on the record there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've got about six groups that live in my constituency with very particular interests in the throne speech. The first group is people on AISH. I represent a downtown riding. I tend to have a fairly high portion of people who receive AISH benefits and live downtown. They're closer to the support services that they need. Also, we have an older housing stock, so it tends to be a cheaper housing stock, and given the low rates of AISH, they need that cheaper housing stock to be able to afford their rent. So my people on AISH were looking at that throne speech saying: when do we get the money? It's as simple as that.

I think February 28 was the 100th day that this government has been in power since its election on November 22. What's the delay? Where's the money? They said that they were going to increase the AISH rates. Where is it? How long are they going to make these people wait? Another month? Another two months? Another six months? How long do they have to wait? We've recognized that the rates are insufficient, so why are we delaying in finding that money and getting it in a cheque and getting it into their hands? It's really, in my opinion, quite unforgivable. So that's one thing we were looking for.

I also have a number of people that have mental health issues, and again they tend to cluster downtown for the same reasons: they're closer to services and the housing stock. A number of them are homeless; there's no question. They just don't have the coping capacity that others do, and they're looking for more community support. A long time ago we deinstitutionalized. We threw them all out there and said: the community is the better place for them to be; we'll put the supports in the community. We have never come to the point where there is sufficient community support for those individuals, and I continue to look to this government to make sure that happens.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a lot of seniors that live in my constituency, and they have a number of concerns. One would be funding of seniors' centres, which is going to give them access to programming, wellness, initiatives, exercise programs, mental health programming, and that they can get out and socialize with people; they don't just sit at home all day. I continue to press the government to make sure that they develop a new funding model which would include seniors' centres.

The seniors are also really concerned, as are their families, with the state of long-term care. I'm aware that the Auditor General is doing an audit, but I understand he's doing an attest audit, not a value-for-money audit, which I'm disappointed to hear because I don't think it's going to give us very much information about the state of things. In particular, we would like to see standards of long-term care that go right across the board and affect not only the smaller group homes with two or three seniors being looked after but also the various kinds of institutions that we now have. I think that's very important. We've got to put some attention to that.

Mr. Speaker, no surprise to anyone that's sat in here, but I also have a large gay and lesbian community that lives in Edmonton-Centre, of whom I am very proud. They look to having human rights in Alberta upheld. They are protected in the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. They look to having the government uphold those rights for them. In particular, in that community they are very concerned about a very high level of suicides among their young people. They say to me: you've gotta understand, Laurie, that when politicians and leaders in the community get up and say things about people who are gay and lesbian in a way that is not positive, that really affects particularly young people who could be really struggling with their identity. I think we need to be very careful about that. I don't want to see those suicide rates get any higher. I'd like to see them get lower, and I'm just asking for respect.

Human rights are not a finite bucket of rights. In extending a human right to one group or individual, you don't take away rights from others. That's not how it works. It's not a finite bucket of rights. If you extend human rights to others, you simply have them join a loving family of individuals that are in this province. You don't take something away from someone else, and I wish we'd quit talking about it that way.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a large constituency of artists, who are the hardest working, proudest Albertans, who struggle away without the benefit programs that are available to many other groups. They don't qualify for unemployment insurance. Unless they're truly strapped, they don't get onto social assistance or Alberta Works or whatever it's called now. They tend to subsidize the arts very heavily in Alberta. Yes, they get occasional jobs working in the arts, and they spend the rest of their time working at a myriad of other jobs, which helps them stay alive and pay their rent so that they can go out and continue to make art in whatever form that is.

I would really like to see this government step up to the plate, understand and acknowledge the contribution that artists have made in this province and what an economic driver in fact they are in this province. It's money that stays in this province, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't go away. It doesn't go to shareholders in a multinational corporation. That money stays right here in Alberta and circulates here. I would really like to see the government increase the Alberta Foundation for the Arts grant pot of money to $40 million immediately. That fund has been starved for a very long time, and I'd like to see that corrected.

The sixth group of people in my constituency that had particular interest in what was in the throne speech were students because they were really looking for help. You've all heard my argument on the transfer of intergenerational debt, which I argue has happened instantly. You know, paying off that debt basically was shifted to the shoulders, in many cases, of students and seniors and people on programs like AISH.

Anything the government can do to improve access – and that's real access with real desks in real classrooms with real instructors. Yes, I hear what the government is saying about virtual space, but it's also about staffing, and it's about infrastructure in the postsecondary institutions. So I encourage them to continue on that path.

I'd also like to note that my constituents hold a keen interest in the environment and particularly in conservation, so I'm going to be holding the government to account on that.

We would like to see a complete workplace smoking ban. I think we're also very interested in seeing better labour laws, particularly around replacement worker legislation and first-contract legislation.

What's interesting is the government seems to keep planning for things to get worse, Mr. Speaker, and we in Edmonton-Centre believe that things are going to get better. We want to see things put in place that are going to make Alberta extraordinary, not just okay, not just good, not just great but extraordinary. We are on the lip, the cusp of something, great potential, so let's do it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 allows for a five-minute question and comment period. Past practice has been that we try to restrict that to one minute for questions, comments, and responses. So the floor recognizes anyone that wishes to speak under Standing Order 29.

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly grateful to be able to speak at this the first session of the 26th Legislature.

I would like to offer my condolences to the family of Her Honour Lois Hole. She was a truly remarkable and inspiring woman.

I would also like to offer my congratulations to our new Lieutenant Governor and wish him and his family all the very best as he begins to serve our province in his new role. We have been truly blessed with the men and women chosen to be our Lieutenant Governors, and I know that His Honour Mr. Kwong will also exceed our expectations.

Congratulations to all members, both new and returning. This is a great year for our province and its citizens. I feel so privileged to be here again as an MLA in this our 100th anniversary as a province.

I would like to thank the residents of Airdrie-Chestermere for their support. In four elections now, Mr. Speaker, I have only lost four polls out of close to 300, all of them in my first election in 1993, all of them in your area. I am very gratified by the strength of my win, and I repeat the one promise that I have made in four elections. I promise I will continue to try to do my best to represent the needs of my constituents, not always the wants but the needs, and we have many.

We have a very high-growth constituency, with growth rates consistently over the years coming in at around 8 per cent for Airdrie and 18 per cent for Chestermere and Langdon. We opened new schools with a dozen portables attached and instantly high occupancy rates. I know both the Minister of Education and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation are fully aware of our issues, and I am grateful to both of them for taking the time to meet with both of my school boards.

In addition to school facilities, we are in desperate need of overpass work, both at the north and south ends of Airdrie, as well as traffic control lights in Chestermere, an overpass on 797 to cross highway 1, and Langdon needs control of its main street, as well as the Prince of Peace Village, just east of the Calgary city limits, needing assistance with traffic control at the entrance and exit to its village off highway 1, issues that I have been raising and will continue to raise until we finally get our problems solved.

I'm also very pleased that Jack Davis, the CEO of the Calgary regional health authority, has taken a personal interest now in making sure that the medical needs of Airdrie are finally going to be taken seriously. It has been a long battle, but as they say, good things come to those who wait, and I know that we've waited. We've been very patient, but I'm afraid the patience is wearing pretty thin. Our new mayor in Airdrie, Linda Bruce, has also worked very hard on the medical clinic initiative, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to take the time to thank her for her effort and diligence on this.

I would also like to mention my municipal councils, Mr. Speaker, as I feel particularly lucky in the truly awesome people that I get to work with. In addition to superb councillors, I also get to work with mayors Bruce, Fuselli, Rowe, and Mikkelsen, with Reeve Schule, and with Mrs. Metzger of the Rocky View school board as well as school trustee Linda Wellman of the Calgary Catholic board. I know that the residents of our area can from time to time get frustrated with the growth pressures that we deal with. I also know that the men and women in my area that serve our constituents all work very hard and with integrity and honour to try and solve those problems, and I'm grateful to all of them for their efforts.

One hundred years ago in our province, Mr. Speaker, I could not have been elected an MLA. Even 50 years ago it would have been very difficult, but today we have 13 women here, not because they are women but because they are all strong Albertans with a dream and a vision for our province. Now, if you lined all 13 of us up and asked us what that vision was, you would have 13 totally different responses, but that is the beauty of politics: good people with different points of view get elected, come here, and try their best. I know that that is true for all 83 MLAs, but in this our centennial year

I would like to thank the women that came before us and made it possible for the 13 of us to be here.

I hope it is not inappropriate to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think Alberta is a better place because there are women involved in every aspect of people's lives from construction to research and from business owners to politicians. I admire Albertans for their willingness to see women in many roles. And truth be told, if all the women in Alberta decided to withdraw from the workforce in our province, our economy would collapse.

Mr. Speaker, I lived in Europe for a year in the late '80s, and one of the realizations I had when I was there was how young we are as a province and how we take for granted that we can compete with established and mature civilizations that have gone through their growth in the building of their infrastructure over hundreds if not thousands of years. I stood in a cathedral in Lausanne, Switzerland. At the time it was 1,293 years old and Alberta was celebrating its 82nd birthday. I stood and looked at this enormous building and realized that they had taken longer to build this one cathedral than we have to build an entire province. They did it without cranes. The bricks and arches were made by hand, put in place by people using pulleys and ropes and huge numbers of people working on one project. The family business was truly a family business. Generations of a family would work on one project.

Our world today is so unlike that. Our challenge is to try and keep up with the speed of change that the Industrial Revolution, the technology revolution, and now the knowledge-based revolution are sweeping over us. When I was first elected in 1993, MLAs were not even allocated computers. Apparently we didn't need them, and now, just over a decade later, every MLA has been given a laptop. We can and do use them right here in this Assembly, and I can't imagine trying to do my job without one anymore.

My sons could not imagine a world without colour TVs or cell phones, McDonald's Restaurants or paved highways. Yet when I was a child, TVs were black and white, if you were lucky enough to have one at all. Phones weighed about 10 pounds and may have had a crank on the side that you wound up to try and get an operator. [interjection] I'm not telling you how old I am. My first phone number when I was 10 years old was 212. It was up in Lesser Slave Lake, and it was on a party line. I grew up with gravel roads, and that was gravel if you were lucky. Most of the time it was just a trail backlit by a D9 Cat because we also lived in the oil patch, and that's just the way the world was. We had power when the rig was running because we could use the power plant, but when the rigs were shut down, we used coal-oil lamps.

My brother and I had the world's best imaginations because we had to. We had to invent things to play. I lived through books, and of course I grew up in the oil patch, so my life, I admit, was a bit different than many of my colleagues here. But it was what it was. I didn't question it. The junior high school I went to in Lesser Slave Lake was heated by coal. We considered ourselves lucky when the public health nurse would come to town. There was no doctor or hospital there, but I don't remember anybody complaining about it. We were all just happy that our dads had jobs. Life was maybe a little simpler then.

My dad had a love for golf, so he and several of his friends decided to build a golf course there. There were no provincial grants. There were just a group of guys out there month after month over the course of several years building a golf course. They finally got it open and hosted the oilmen's golf tournament. It was a huge day for my dad. He had been injured in an oil field accident years before. His leg was crushed, and they told him that he would be lucky to walk and that he would never golf again. Well, they were wrong. He did golf and as often as he could right up until he died.

I realize that I sound like I must be close to 100 years old. Well, I'm not quite there yet. The truth is that massive changes have occurred just in our lifetimes. In this our centennial year I truly hope that we pause to reflect on those changes and not just on our physical environment, Mr. Speaker, but also on our level of expectation as a society on what we want from government. How deep do we want government in people's lives?

I listened with great attention to the Speech from the Throne, and there were many wonderful initiatives in that speech. We need more spaces in postsecondary education, but noting the rapid expansion of high-speed Internet, I wonder if we know how many students will take their courses online 15 years from now when 10 years ago it was almost unheard of.

I worry a little bit, Mr. Speaker, about the sustainability of some of our programs. I don't question the value of the programs, just the sustainability of them. The Health Council of Canada estimates that with our aging demographics the health system will grow by at least 80 per cent over the next 10 years. I think they're way off. I think it is more than capable of growing by 80 per cent in the next five or six years. If I'm right, or even if they are, the provincial budget will be consumed by health care unless changes are made in how it is paid for and how it is delivered. Our expectations of what the system can and should do may have to be adjusted a bit as time goes on because it is just possible that it will not be capable of doing all things for all people all of the time.

We have incredible research going on right here in our province thanks in large part to a foundation set up 25 years ago, and, as announced, it will be enhanced. The researchers are amazing, and they think they may have found a way to help a group of people with a genetic disorder. From what I've heard, there is no doubt that this new discovery can and will help people. The downside right now is that the estimated cost is $300,000 per patient per year. I would like the researchers to spend some time on how we can make our system sustainable and not just expensive, but that's just me.

Right now we have many bright and thoughtful people working hard on developing great programs that will solve the problems for many families, whether it be in Children's Services, Human Resources and Employment, health care, Education, Advanced Education, to name but a few. We have other bright and thoughtful people trying to figure out ways to pay for it all.

So in this our 100th year I ask all my legislative colleagues to look back a little bit before they look forward. Don't forget that independent and freethinking spirit that has brought us this far. Let us as MLAs help where necessary but respect Albertans' right to succeed and their right to fail.

I have travelled extensively, Mr. Speaker, across Canada, the United States, and to countries in Europe. There is no place I would rather be. I thank God that I was born an Albertan and that, as the words on our crest so eloquently put it, I was born strong and free.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. Before I start with the response, I want to congratulate you on your election as Deputy Speaker and on your very first opportunity to preside over the proceedings of this House this afternoon.

I also want to not overlook congratulating the Lieutenant Governor, Hon. Norman Kwong, for his appointment into this position. My congratulations to him and his wife, and we look forward to his contribution to the Alberta we want to build in the future.

Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise in this House. I see lots of familiar faces but also lots of new faces. I want to congratulate all the members of this House for their election or re-election. I look forward to working with each and every one of them in this session and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, we are entering the new century of this province. This is the centennial year, so Albertans are hoping that their government and their Legislature will come up with a vision of a new Alberta, the Alberta of the next century, the new Alberta, that will excite their imaginations, that will strengthen their sense of hope in their own future and the future of all of us as a provincial community and the hope that the Alberta of the 21st century will be charting a course in which democratic values will take a central place in developing our communities, developing our institutions, developing our educational institutions, political institutions, and all.

So looking at this throne speech, I search for the vision, the dream that at the turn of the new century for this province this government is presenting for Albertans to consider and to feel excited about.

Albertans are hard-working, optimistic, compassionate. They've demonstrated this over and over again. The very last expression of those core values and commitment of Albertans to those values was to be seen in the response that Albertans made to the victims of this huge international disaster, the tsunami disaster that hit two continents, nine or 10 different countries far away from us here. Albertans were generous beyond the expectations of anyone in responding to this huge natural disaster leading to human tragedy. So those values are alive and well in this province.

Albertans are expecting their leaders, their government, to renew their commitment to those values and incorporate them, inscribe those values in everything that we do, in every action that we take, in every policy that we develop, a vision of our future that we forge working together. Looking at this throne speech, I keep looking for the cues, for some signs that would assure me, assure my constituents, assure Albertans that, in fact, the government is quite alive and receptive to their hopes, their dreams, their values.

I find the throne speech lacking in its ability to inspire Albertans to higher goals, to building a more compassionate, a more humane future for all of us, where we are freed from the prison of poverty. In this very wealthy province with an economy that's growing at a rapid pace, expanding in many directions, driven by our natural resources wealth, we continue to find lots of fellow Albertans who live in conditions of poverty. More heartbreaking is to see our children, a substantial percentage of children in Alberta, 15 to 20 per cent, who live under conditions of poverty.

Poverty disables. Poverty is disabling. Poverty is prison-like, and I would have hoped that the throne speech would commit the Alberta of the 21st century in its own beginnings of the second century to eradicating poverty. Signs of that poverty are to be seen everywhere. Go to food banks. Look at the homeless on our streets in big urban cities and in smaller towns; they're everywhere. This speech doesn't ask the question and doesn't challenge Albertans by saying that there's no room for us to live with the realization that it's okay to have homeless among us. There's absolutely no reason why this province should find its own citizens, Albertans, living under conditions of homelessness. It takes away human dignity to be homeless. It hurts our sense of wellness and humanity to be thrown onto the streets.

I don't see any commitment, a pledge, an undertaking in the form of a vision that over the next five years this province, this government, is determined to provide leadership to Albertans to achieve a social condition in which there will be absolutely no need for anyone to have to go to food banks. Yet we find that as the provincial economy has grown, it hasn't translated into prosperity for all. In fact, whether you are in Medicine Hat, a city that I visited last year on one of my tours of southern Alberta – and I was invited to go and visit the food bank, which is used by increasing numbers of people who live in that beautiful city.

Why is it that in the richest province in this great country, in Alberta, we have an expanding need for the food banks? More and more Albertans go to food banks in order to get the food their families need. We have created a whole new class of the working poor in this province. There's no attention paid here, firstly, to say that, yes, it's a problem, and secondly that we are up to addressing this problem, solving this problem, and then setting timelines that we are going to do it together, that we have the resolve and the commitment and the resources that we're going to put there so that this problem can be addressed.

Alberta in the new century must provide special opportunities to young children, preschool children. There is an opportunity now for us to make serious investments in our own future by investing in the care of our children, child care, child care that includes a robust vision of child development and early childhood education.

Our child care centres must become centres of learning and development and growth for every child in this province, yet there's no commitment that I see in this throne speech to embracing that challenge, to embracing that opportunity to make sure that children who are two, three years old today, the ones who are going to build this new century, who are going to build the new Alberta, will not be deprived of the very fundamental experiences that all children need at that age. It is those experiences that become the building blocks for their later success. If children miss out when they're one year old, two years old, three years old, on those very fundamental, important learning experiences, opportunities to develop and grow in certain ways, they cannot become successful, first, in school and later on, when they leave school, in the wide, open world outside. So we have in this speech an absence, a stunning silence of this government on what its plans are to address this very critical question that we have before us with respect to providing facilities for our preschool children.

If anything, this government is about to squander the opportunity that's provided by a commitment made by the federal government. After 13 years of waiting, at least the federal government now says: we are willing to put funds in there for the development of these early childhood development and education facilities in every province. Our province is dragging its heels. It's mired in its own concerns about keeping control. Control is more important than providing those facilities. Its concerns with for-profit/nonprofit mix trump the interests of children in this province.

I think it's a shame that we as a province are not playing a leading role in insisting on the establishment of national standards. We can be leaders in that. We need to provide that leadership. We have the capacity to provide that leadership to establish national standards, which every child care facility dedicated to providing development experiences, learning experiences, early childhood education experiences will have to meet. That should be the primary concern, not who runs these child care facilities. That's absent in this speech, and I'm disappointed. My constituents and Albertans, I'm sure, are disappointed that this government is silent on this very critical issue.

Mr. Speaker, I seek your guidance. How many more minutes do I have?

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. Your time has elapsed.

Is there anyone who wishes to be recognized under 29(2)(a)? Are you rising on 29(2)(a), hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I was listening with interest to his response to the Speech from the Throne, and I certainly would agree with him on his points, certainly on issues related to poverty and children, the fact that too many children in this province think Kraft dinner is a luxury meal.

The hon. member has in the past been a passionate defender of public health care, and I was curious. I didn't hear him talk at length about public health care and his view on where we're going in this province with public health care. I'm now asking him to share with this hon. member and the entire House his concerns about the direction we are going in this province with public health care.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, hon. colleague. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to address the question. I have, I guess, a minute to do it.

There's widespread concern across Alberta among Albertans with respect to the direction that this government proposes to take with respect to refashioning Alberta's health care system one more time yet. What I've been hearing from Albertans is that they want this government to give a commitment to them that their health care system will be publicly funded, publicly delivering services, and will not be taken away from them, that it will not be stolen by using a term like the third way. This third way is the Mazankowski report way. They have told me that it's the Graydon report way, and they are not going to be fooled by a new label that the government is now proposing to use. They don't want this government to be paying the consultants and advisers of the Fraser Institute, west and east, to again be put on a new expert committee to give us advice on what to do about the system. They have heard enough.

Albertans know enough about where to take their health care system. They want this government's commitment that it will not steal the system away from them. Mr. Speaker, at four different places in Alberta, from Medicine Hat to Grande Prairie to Calgary to Edmonton, we heard the same message from concerned Albertans about the future of health care. They are not at all willing to trust the designs of this government with respect to yet further changes that it proposes to make come May or June or whenever it starts to do it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I commence my maiden speech, I would like to express my sincere appreciation of the leadership the Speaker showed and the solemnity when he first shared the news last Thursday of the tragic deaths of the four young RCMP constables. Our hearts and gratitude go out to their families for the gift of their sons, husbands, and fathers.

I would also like to take a moment to express my condolences on behalf of the residents of Calgary-Varsity to the family and many friends who recently observed the untimely passing of our Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Lois Hole. We welcome, however, a distinguished gentleman and proud Albertan, the Hon. Norman Kwong, to continue the great work that his highly revered predecessor began.

On a personal note, I was thrilled to be able to meet such a famous celebrity as the Hon. Mr. Kwong as he had a distinct role to play in one of my most precious childhood memories. The first football game my father ever took me to starred none other than the living legend himself, Normie Kwong. I congratulate the Hon. Mr. Kwong as he assumes the position of Lieutenant Governor of the 26th Alberta Legislature and to the Speaker for his continued service to the House and to you, the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, a willingness to change and grow is a powerful motivator, as evidenced in the Calgary-Varsity constituency in the recent provincial election. It is my pleasure as the newly elected MLA for Calgary-Varsity to respond to the throne speech and provide this House with some insight into the many facets of the diverse, dynamic constituency I'm proud to call home.

I have the privilege of standing here today as a representative of Calgary-Varsity because of the dedicated support and efforts of hundreds of financial supporters and incredibly effective, skilled, caring, and highly motivated campaign workers. To each of you, thank you for the opportunity to represent you in this Legislative Assembly. Individuals from diverse backgrounds, including dedicated seniors, friends, teachers, and former students and parents, worked collaboratively because they believed in a new, inclusive version of what could be, given Alberta's bountiful resource and Albertans' potential. To my campaign supporters and all constituents of Calgary-Varsity I declare that I will strive to respectfully uphold the powerful democratic process by listening to and addressing constituents' concerns, holding the government accountable, and striving to bring about positive change which will benefit Calgary-Varsity constituents and all Calgarians and Albertans.

This constituency is typical of many which 30 years ago were considered outlying suburbs, however, due to the rapid urban growth of the city of Calgary, find themselves now reclassified as inner city. Calgary-Varsity encompasses the vibrant communities of Dalhousie, Brentwood, Charleswood, Varsity, University Heights, portions of Silver Springs, Banff Trail, Capitol Hill, and Triwood. Calgary-Varsity hosts a healthy array of bustling schools, libraries, community halls, recreational facilities, thriving small businesses, and enviable parks and pathways. The people, however, are naturally this constituency's greatest asset. The residents of Calgary-Varsity represent a rich cross-section of society and stem from various walks of life and economic and cultural backgrounds.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the hon. Murray Smith for his valued service to this remarkable constituency from 1993 to 2004 and wish him all the best in his new position in Washington.

I have had the privilege of living in the constituency, more specifically Dalhousie, for the past 25 years. My daughter has fond memories of growing up in the area, playing in the community soccer league, riding her bike down the pathways to the constituency's many parks and playgrounds, and attending the local public schools from elementary right up to the University of Calgary, where my wife and I are also alumni.

Schools are an essential cornerstone of any community. I have a particularly strong interest in the delivery of public education within the riding as my background for the past 34 years is teaching, 21 years of which took place within the constituency at Jerry Potts elementary and F.E. Osborne junior high. I retired from full-time teaching two years ago. However, I spent a great deal of time substitute teaching in various Calgary-Varsity schools at the elementary, junior, and senior high level. My wife taught in and around the area, and my daughter, also a teacher, began her career at a well-respected elementary school within the constituency. My first-hand experience coupled with the extensive discussions with students, parents, teachers, and school staff during and following the election has made me intimately aware of the numerous concerns constituents are saddled with regarding the government's lack of support for education in this province.

The blatant inadequacy of government funding has hurt the schools in the Calgary-Varsity constituency and throughout this province. Alberta suffers from Canada's highest dropout rate, a pronounced lack of support for special needs and ESL students, overcrowded classrooms, outdated and often unsafe and environmentally unsound infrastructure, a shortage of classroom resources, a dismal supply of library books and staff, cuts to arts and language programs, and increasingly expensive school fees, which are becoming a heavy burden on parents like any other user fee or tax.

On behalf of the residents of Calgary-Varsity, I hope to impress upon the government that parents cannot continue to subsidize schools indefinitely. Small class sizes are not a luxury but are essential for quality teaching and learning. Curriculum support must outweigh spending on overemphasized areas such as controversial achievement testing, of very questionable value.

The cause of the majority of problems that ail the school system is that the government has chronically overlooked and under-researched the true cost of education. You get what you pay for. Government funding has no relation to schools' actual costs. It's not necessarily about spending more but spending smarter.

Calgary-Varsity, as denoted by the name, is a university community. The University of Calgary lies at the heart of the Calgary-Varsity constituency. I am proud to have obtained my degree at this well-respected institution back in 1971. The University of Calgary exemplifies the power of education to help people of varied ages to reach personal and professional goals. The students, support staff, and faculty of the University of Calgary are a valuable Alberta resource. They deserve our respect.

I have heard from postsecondary students, many of whom are forced to work two minimum wage jobs to pay for their inflated tuition, rent, and/or food and are looking forward to the funding specifics of how the Alberta government will improve the quality, affordability, and guarantee the sustainability and diversity of postsecondary education as an investment in both their and Alberta's future.

I have also spoken with many of the valuable people who support the students in a variety of roles, from faculty to food service to maintenance and security, who are watching nervously as their budgets, buildings, and jobs crumble around them. As my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie likes to say, we must get postsecondary institutions off their starvation diet.

The contributions of leading-edge philanthropists to the University of Calgary, that have resulted in the creation of the recently established Institute for Quantum Information Science and the Markin health institute should serve as the icing on a well-government-funded cake rather than as the dough that holds the cake together.

The success and prosperity of our province in the next century depends upon a highly skilled and educated, richly talented and diverse workforce. The University of Calgary, in addition to other academic and trade-based institutions throughout Alberta, can only achieve this through stable, predictable, long-term financial support from our provincial government. My opposition colleagues and I will diligently promote adequate public and postsecondary funding in order that education be accessible to all and so no student in Alberta is denied the opportunity to excel.

In the run-up to the fall election seniors, especially those on fixed incomes, who represent a large portion of the Calgary-Varsity constituency population, received a welcomed, long-overdue relief when the province no longer collected their health care premium taxes. Hopefully, during this session of the Legislature the government will also come through with a promised return of their vision, dental, and pharmaceutical benefits now that the province is supposedly debt free, which is due in a large part to the contributions seniors made throughout their lives.

Another announcement that seniors in long-term care facilities would look forward to is an improvement in the services they receive which is directly proportional to the crippling rent increases that the government forced them and their families to endure. For those fortunate enough to still be able to drive, a decrease in their insurance rates would be appreciated given the province's underwriting of private insurance profits by reducing yet-to-be-defined soft tissue injury settlements, capped at $4,000.

Seniors deserve the best possible quality of life and must be given the means to live with dignity, a notion that stands in stark contrast to the cuts the government has imposed in previous budgets. Seniors, their family members, and support group advocates are anxiously awaiting the Auditor General's review and recommendations for long-term care, which we hope the government will quickly accept and implement once they are discussed and debated in this spring sitting of the Legislature.

In addition to seniors, I have heard from a large number of AISH recipients of varied ages in the Calgary-Varsity constituency who are hoping to be recognized and valued by the province through not only an increase in their minuscule living allowance but through a decrease in the portion of the province's clawback. I recently met with representatives of the VRRRI, the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute, located within the Calgary-Varsity boundaries, to discuss the AISH advocates' coalition recommendations report, which has been compiled with government representation and input. With the anticipated approval of this House I hope it will be quickly funded and implemented.

One of the ways in which the Calgary-Varsity constituency is dramatically different from the majority of other Calgary or Alberta constituencies is the fact that it not only has a soon-to-be-completed hospital, the new Children's hospital, within its boundaries, but it is in close proximity to the Foothills hospital, which, although possessing wings older than the imploded General, escaped the latter's fate. While the Children's hospital will not house all the children's services under one roof, as it was originally proposed to do, and although it will only provide a few more beds than the existing Children's, their layout and accompanying child-and family-friendly support rooms will serve as a much-needed addition to the million-plus combined population of the communities served by the Calgary health region.

With luck and a renewed government commitment to public health care delivery the second replacement hospital in southeast Calgary, which has been set back to 2010, will finally be in service and, hopefully, paid for rather than P3 leased, together with the much-needed additions to the Foothills, Rockyview, and Lougheed hospitals, which must be completed as quickly as possible to relieve the pressure of growing waiting lists. In royalty-rich Alberta good health care should not be merely a perk.

Calgary-Varsity is a remarkable, concerned, caring community where people have settled to live, learn, work, and play. This vibrant constituency contributes not only to the quality and character of the city of Calgary but to the province of Alberta as a whole. Calgary-Varsity voters supported me on November 22 because they want a strong and effective opposition voice in the Legislature. Calgary-Varsity residents want their concerns and values reflected in the questions, statements, and motions I bring forward on their behalf. They have asked me to stand up for what they believe in: affordable and accessible health care; quality education for all; inclusive and equitable community support systems; bold innovation and strong, steady management; fiscal responsibility; and open, accountable government.

It is my privilege to stand here today as the representative for Calgary-Varsity on the cusp of Alberta's new century exhilarated by the opportunity to help shape a just and inclusive vision of this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a singular honour to rise in the Assembly this afternoon. Let me begin by expressing my gratitude to the residents of Calgary-Nose Hill who've entrusted me with the privilege of public service and granted me the opportunity to be their voice in this House. I want to say to all of the residents of Calgary-Nose Hill that I will do my utmost to listen to all of you and to be your voice in government.

Over the past 12 years this government has achieved remarkable things. To the hon. Premier and to my colleagues who are returning to this House I say this: it was your leadership and your record that led us to another resounding victory in this recent election, and for this you have all our gratitudes. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the House that our work is not finished. Indeed, it never will be finished for as legislators it is our opportunity and our job to improve the conditions which we have found, as those who have preceded us in this Chamber have also done.

Mr. Speaker, this year marks the centenary of Alberta's incorporation as a province in Canada. This is a time to pay tribute to those who have with courage, vision, and hard work built this province from our aboriginal peoples to our pioneers and our builders and who have left us proud legacies. I'm proud to say that my own ancestors have played a part in writing this great story. My maternal ancestors William and Helen Shaw and their children came to what is now Calgary in 1883. They journeyed by covered wagon from near present-day Swift Current, Saskatchewan, across a wild and desolate land to take out a homestead on the banks of Fish Creek. There they built Alberta's first manufacturing industry, the Shaw Woolen Mills of Midnapore.

A number of my family have also served the military forces of our country. My paternal grandfather, John Thomas Brown, volunteered to serve his country in World War I. He went overseas with the Canadian Expeditionary Force, where he was gravely wounded in the Battle of the Somme. My parents, Allan and Irene Brown, both volunteered for military service in the Second World War. Mr. Speaker, it is our task to build on the courage and the vision of our ancestors. The challenges that we face are myriad, but none are insurmountable. We can improve education and training for our young people, we can preserve and improve the quality of our public health care, we can dedicate ourselves to the needs of our senior citizens and those less fortunate, and we can sustain and protect the environment and our wildlife resources.

Let me turn to education. Our education system from kindergarten through high school is among the finest in the world. Yet, sadly, many of our young people drop out as early as the age of 16 years to take unskilled jobs to their own long-term detriment and to the detriment of our society at large. Let us set a goal to reduce the high school dropout rate by one-half. Let us achieve this goal by making school attendance mandatory until the age of 17 years, by ensuring that programs are developed and supported for those young people who are at risk of failing, and by providing enhanced learning and career choices appropriate to individual aptitudes.

We must also ensure that Alberta continues to train and keep the best teachers, who make all the difference in determining the success of our young people. I know that teachers like Roberta Scott and Mabel Dow of Midnapore school made a great difference to me.

Mr. Speaker, let me now address some of the issues of higher education and training. This government has provided us with a strategic plan which includes the goals of leading and learning, unleashing innovation, competing in a global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. As our province makes its transition to a knowledge-based economy, the key to all of these goals is to invest in education. Let us heed the wisdom of the philosopher Diogenes, who said: the foundation of every state is the education of its youth. Why not aspire as a province to reach the pinnacle of accomplishment in teaching, learning, discovery, and creativity in the sciences and in the arts? Why not have our universities and other postsecondary institutions be among the best in the world? If we do so, the future success of our province will be assured.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne provides a positive plan to provide increased access and more affordability for postsecondary education. It is our obligation to ensure that the riches accruing to our generation from nonrenewable resources are of benefit not only to our generation but that they also benefit future generations. Let us build on the access to the future endowment and continue to invest a portion of surplus funds into that fund. Let us build on the quality of our major research institutions by enabling them to grow and attract the best researchers and provide the best facilities by putting in place a long-term capital funding plan necessary to fulfill the government's goals for increased access.

In pursuing our goals of educational excellence, we should not focus narrowly on fields of endeavour which may be perceived to have immediate economic benefits, for such an approach lacks foresight. Often the fruits of knowledge are little known at the outset but at some future date may produce great benefits.

Dr. John Polanyi, the Canadian Nobel laureate, put it this way. We should not try to turn centres of excellence into centres of relevance because such a policy will fail to deliver value for money for two reasons: first, because excellence is rare, and we simply cannot select the excellence we prefer; and, secondly, because the discovery that one wishes to see made and its application lie well in the future, and the future is hard to predict.

Let us recognize that pure sciences, the arts, and the humanities also have important places in our postsecondary education system and that they make important contributions to the richness of learning.

Let me turn now to health care. Our health care practitioners are of the highest standards, as are our programs and facilities. While public expectations of what health care can and should do are increasing, so are the costs of providing those services. Changes are both necessary and inevitable, and we should innovate and modify the methods of delivering health care so as to optimize the health and wellness of all Albertans. Nonetheless, we must ensure that whatever changes are made, universal public health care continues to be just that: publicly funded, universally accessible, affordable to all Albertans, and of the highest standard. We must continue to ensure that timely access to quality health care is never dependent upon financial means.

Mr. Speaker, there is no better way to acknowledge the contributions of those who have built this province than to accord recognition to our seniors. They, too, should benefit from the Alberta advantage. Some priorities in this area include the necessity of ensuring that there is adequate and affordable housing for seniors and that our health care and support systems allow seniors to be as independent as possible. Where necessary, we must provide support to those who choose to remain living in their own homes and especially to those who selflessly provide such great service to our society by providing home care for spouses and other family members who are unable to care for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the application of market value property assessment across the province and the upward trend in house prices have resulted in an increasing tax burden falling on those who live in long-established neighbourhoods in our cities. We must ensure that seniors who are faced with rising property taxes are not forced into hardship by such increases.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly about Alberta's environment. There is no higher duty to which we are bound nor no greater legacy that we can bequeath to future generations than that of ensuring that our natural environment is preserved and enhanced. Alberta has always been a leader in those endeavours. We were the first province in Canada to create a ministry of the environment.

I wish to mention three priorities for the future. First, we must ensure that there is continued protection of public lands for the benefit and enjoyment of future generations. We must keep our inventory of public lands intact. Resource exploitation from those public lands must be done in a way that never compromises the ecological integrity of those lands.

Secondly, we should ensure that our water resources are conserved. We must have a comprehensive, integrated policy for watershed management, and this policy should be multidisciplinary and multidepartmental. It must build on the ideals of the water for life program. It must include policy in the fields of agriculture, forestry, industry, and hydrology and must establish guidelines for the development and land use in the eastern slopes and the riparian areas of our major watersheds, from which we draw our drinking and irrigation water.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure that our wildlife resources are conserved and protected for the enjoyment of all Albertans now and in the future. We need to allocate the resources required to protect and preserve our wildlife resources and to enforce our laws, and we must find ways to deal with the findings of our courts on special hunting privileges for aboriginal and Métis people for if we do not, wildlife and game conservation will be in jeopardy for all of our peoples.

Mr. Speaker, as parliamentarians many challenges lie before us as we play our part in writing the next chapter in the history of this province. We are entrusted with power not to advance our personal agendas nor to embellish our own names but for the noble purpose of serving people. Times of prosperity, like times of scarcity, provide great challenges to peoples and to governments. We must accept these challenges. We must seize the moment and ensure that these great opportunities which lie before us are not lost.

The motto of our fair province, Fortis et Liber, strong and free, is drawn from the anthem of our great nation of Canada. From Wood Buffalo to Waterton, from Zama City to Etzikom, from the Rocky Mountains to the prairie grasslands under endless skies of blue may Alberta always remain part of the "True North strong and free" and a place where freedom and individuality may flourish.

Mr. Speaker, may all of us in this House be granted the strength to fulfill our purpose here, which is to benefit the people of this fair province and this great nation now and in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under Standing Order 29?

Seeing none, we'll move to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the time remaining, I rise with a great feeling of honour and privilege as the member of the Legislature for Edmonton-Glenora. After a high-profile campaign between very able candidates 55 per cent of Edmonton-Glenora voters went to the polls, and I feel quite elated to be elected by them. I know this is not the time for introductions, but I would like to acknowledge that the most important supporter of my campaign is here in the gallery, my wife, Rhea Jansen. She is an outstanding watercolour painter, and she put aside her paints for the campaign. She became just a tireless worker, going door to door on my behalf, so thank you.

Edmonton-Glenora residents are highly educated and very well informed about politics and public issues, and they have high expectations for their MLAs. Their confidence in me is I believe an endorsement of the social justice agenda which I have been advocating for many years: equal justice for the poor and the marginalized and greater participation in the wealth of Alberta by all Albertans. Edmonton-Glenora voters expect their MLA to be a strong voice in the Legislature for the values which they believe in.

What is it that the residents of Edmonton-Glenora want? This became quite clear to me recently in a town meeting in Inglewood, where I live. The town meeting, which had standing room only, was held to discuss the new proposal to develop the Camsell hospital site. All agreed that something must be done to develop that site – the hospital building has been sitting there empty for eight years – but there were many different opinions on the new proposal. As I listened to the people state their opinions – and some statements were quite emotional – it was obvious to me that the residents of Inglewood really care about their community and that they are all united in their desire to improve the quality of life of their community.

They're not against development, but they're asking important questions. Will 2,000 more people only exacerbate the already very busy traffic through the community? Will a huge urban development create a more secure, safe, and healthy neighbourhood? What will happen to the Inglewood School? Will there be some open space for parks? How will this development affect the value of their properties and homes? Speaker after speaker shared why they had moved to Inglewood, a quiet single-family neighbourhood with fine shopping at Westmount Shopping Centre. They expressed their concern, above all, for the quality of life of their community, and more and more quality of life is becoming the key measurement of growth and the criterion for evaluating change.

Quality of life is more than just income and the value of our property, but that is a good place to start. Edmonton-Glenora has a wide spectrum of income levels: 12.9 per cent of the population earns over $100,000 a year, but 13.1 per cent earns less than $20,000. So the gap between the rich and the poor is increasing, especially in cities like Edmonton. What is there in the throne speech which addresses this reality? There is one statement which I affirm with all my heart: "Albertans are caring, compassionate people who want every member of this province to have the opportunity to share in the Alberta advantage both today and in the next Alberta." Yes, Albertans are caring and compassionate; would that were true of governments.

Raising the minimum wage to $7 and promising yet to determine increases to AISH and reintroducing optical and dental benefits for seniors does not address the real problem, which is a paternalistic, punitive, uncaring, welfare system. Arbitrary handouts every 10 years solve nothing. We need a total reform of the system, the restoration of social workers on the front lines who will deal in a caring way with the real needs of people, and an invitation to people living in poverty to participate in building a system in which people will have a living wage so that they can lift their heads with dignity and pride.

People often ask me if entering the public realm of politics is a radical break from my career as a minister in the United Church of Canada. Well, one of the differences is that at least in the congregation that I served, when I got up to speak, the congregation didn't all disappear; they stayed. But there's lots of continuity, not just differences. It's a radical change, but the continuity is that I'm still able to deal with the same social justice issues. After 27 years of serving as a pastor and preacher for churches in Lethbridge and St. Paul and for the last 15 years at Robertson-Wesley United Church in Edmonton, I can now come here to address the same social justice agenda.

It's not unusual for preachers to enter politics. In the last 100 years there have been 21 preachers in this House: 19 ordained ministers, including well-known former Speaker Dr. David Carter, and two unordained preachers who are perhaps the most famous preachers, two former Premiers, William Aberhart and Ernest C. Manning. But the tradition that has shaped me as a preacher is not that which shaped Ernest C. Manning and William Aberhart. It's called the Social Gospel tradition, which was prominent on the prairies in the first few decades of the 20th century and which produced such remarkable politicians here in Alberta as William Irvine and Nellie McClung. In fact, Nellie McClung taught Sunday school at Wesley Methodist Church right here in Edmonton, which later became Robertson Wesley United Church, which I served, and she served in this Legislature for five years.

So as I begin my work as a legislator, I am particularly aware of this rich heritage. Some preachers focus all their attention on heaven and life after death; you just have to turn on the TV to see that. Not the Social Gospel preachers. For them God was active in history and in politics. For them personal sin was secondary to the sin of social structures which left people poor and marginalized. Preachers of the Social Gospel demanded justice, not charity. They hated the soup kitchen philanthropy which enabled the rich to provide condescending handouts to the poor without questioning the injustices of the system. As the noted Saskatoon theologian Ben Smiley put it, quote: they were confident that the realm of God would come in the political events of daily life and that God's new Jerusalem would be built on Earth.

Now, in our time some have referred to the right-wing revival which has been going on for some years and, hopefully, is now waning. It's easy in the midst of a right-wing revival to forget the Social Gospel tradition and all of the values that it represented, values such as equal rights, which led to the inclusion of women in political life. Nellie McClung was a great leader to bring about the inclusion of women and the establishment of a social welfare system which served the needs of the poor, which is being gradually dismantled by the social policies of governments today.

The Social Gospel Movement produced a song which I'm going to the end with, a song that goes to the tune of the Battle Hymn of the Republic, which I'm not going to sing, but I'll repeat the words because the words focus on the real concern for me, which continues to be equal justice: equal justice for women, equal justice for gays and lesbians. Here are the words. The song goes like this.

The farmers of the prairie lands are massing in their might,
Exalting in a principle, a cause for which they fight,
The sacred cause of justice, the establishment of right,
And equal rights for all.
Oh, 'tis time to get together,
You will help us get together,
Pledge we all to stand together,
For the day of peace and right.

Mr. Speaker, that is my pledge: to fight for the sacred causes of justice, equal rights, and peace as I represent the people of Edmonton-Glenora. And all the congregation said amen.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? I was going to say to the hon. member that had you chosen to sing the song, it wouldn't be the first time it was done in this Assembly.

Does anyone wish to rise on the Speech from the Throne?
The hon. minister of seniors.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Wellness Initiatives

501. Ms Blakeman moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider using taxes from tobacco sales to create a wellness fund to support wellness programs, public health initiatives, and research.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason I have brought forward this particular motion and ask for the support of the House for it is two parts. One, I think that we are a healthier society, a better society if we have more well people in it. I like the idea of a wellness fund that supports initiatives to get more people with a wellness attitude rather than always looking at a sickness model.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'm very interested in the idea of cost containment in our health care system, and I think one of the easiest and most obvious ways to contain costs is to have more people well and less people in need of acute and primary care.

The Alberta Liberals really believe in this. In fact, this was our number 2 policy in our Creating a Healthy Future policy position, and this motion is a paraphrasing, essentially, of that particular motion, but it contains all the important ingredients of it.

The background to this is that in March of 2002 – so we're talking three years ago – a number of stakeholder organizations came together under the banner of Wellness Alberta to advocate for the establishment of a wellness fund. There were a number of organizations that were involved in that: Action on Smoking and Health, Alberta Centre For Active Living, Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, Alberta heart health project – I'm just jumping around here, Mr. Speaker – Alberta Public Health Association, Alberta Recreation & Parks Association, Dietitians of Canada, Grande Prairie & Area Safe Communities, the Health Promotion Research Group at the University of Calgary, et cetera. It was a very lengthy list. They were calling for a provincial wellness fund of approximately $200 million annually that would be funded out of tobacco tax revenue.

We think that's an excellent idea, and essentially that's what we've incorporated into the motion that I have before you here tonight. The Alberta Liberals listened to those experts and those members of the health promotion community. We heeded their good advice and their suggestions, and thus we are in favour of creating this province-wide wellness fund.

Now, how does the fund work? Well, it would be phased in. The idea is to eventually collect $200 million a year from taxes on tobacco and tobacco products, and that $200 million a year would then be fed back out to support projects aimed at improving health and wellness.

The amount of this fund could be adjusted for future years based on the tax revenue and Alberta's increasing population. It anticipates that hopefully we have fewer people smoking and that tobacco tax allocation of money does in fact drop. Currently it's at $660 million a year, and we are proposing using $200 million of that for this wellness fund. But let's say that we do have a tobacco tax revenue drop and it becomes inadequate to sustain this. Then we can look at other sources of revenue to sustain it; for example, perhaps liquor taxes. We should note that the $200 million is not a one-time cost, but it is in fact an annual cost of $200 million each year, and the funds are expended annually.

Mr. Speaker, I want to underline that the wellness fund would under no circumstances take revenue away from other programs. This is not meant to cause any kind of a clawback in any other area. This is intended to be separate and a new fund beyond what we have, so it shouldn't take money away from acute care or chronic care or anything like that.

Now, we propose that the money be distributed and get into the community and create wellness initiatives through a couple of different ways, but the primary venue that we would like to support is using the family and community support services. We would hope to foster healthier communities and by extension healthier families and healthier individuals by funnelling most of this money through the FCSS set-up.

FCSS currently supports approximately 192 programs across the province, and they vary widely. They range from things like parent-child development activities, support services for young school-aged children, parenting and family life education, youth development, home support services for the elderly, outreach and co-ordination for the elderly, newcomer services, education services. It's quite an extensive list.

You can start to see what becomes possible there; for example, the issue that the Member for Red Deer-North raised earlier today around drug-use problems with youth. We could be looking at initiatives on wellness that dealt specifically with youth and the drug culture. So lots of possibilities there.

Right now 286 municipalities and Métis settlements are participating in FCSS programs. In other words, almost 98 per cent of Alberta's population has access to an FCSS service.

FCSS is particularly a good venue for us because it's driven by the communities that it serves. In other words, it's localized decision-making for the allocation of dollars. Neither the province nor any provincial agency directly creates or runs FCSS services. They rely on municipal initiatives and community support in order to achieve their objectives. The process works from the bottom up. What does the community need? They identify that need, and then we can look at the programming that feeds into it.

Currently there is an 80-20 split. The municipalities put in 20 per cent, and the province puts in 80 per cent. With the wellness fund in place, this formula could be re-examined, for example.

I think that in FCSS we have a proven, successful mechanism for building partnerships between Alberta's provincial and municipal governments and the communities that they serve. We think it deserves more credit for the work that it does and more money to do that work. We think the wellness fund would allow FCSS to create new programs and services in addition to those currently offered. We'd also like to explore ways to encourage stronger partnerships between FCSS and the public health organizations.

Now, the second initiative we're looking at underneath this motion, aside from funding through FCSS, is to support specific public health initiatives. Investments in health promotion require that we invest not only in programs that would benefit targeted high-risk populations, for example people with diabetes, but we also look at ways to fundamentally change the way we operate our schools, our hospitals, our local community organizations. So we're talking about institutional change and incorporation there.

Lastly, we would like to look at furthering research into wellness initiatives and pilot projects, and part of that is looking at and better integrating social determinants into the way we look at our health system and wellness initiatives. Furthering health promotion research is also a key component of the wellness fund, and I don't think we can make informed decisions on how and where to invest our money unless we understand what works and what doesn't work.

I think that there's a variety of groups that can gain funding through this. Public health and health promotion are not solely the responsibility of any one government department. We think that through these three ways – the FCSS, the public health initiatives, and the research initiatives – this is an excellent way to disseminate that money.

I know I have other colleagues who want to speak tonight on different aspects of a wellness fund, social determinants, wellness overall in society. I will ask for the support of the Assembly in supporting this motion, and I will take my seat and allow some of my colleagues to be able to speak to this. Thank you very much for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Motion 501. Sadly, I can't support it, but I would like to try and explain why.

There is already a fund dedicated to healthy living initiatives in Alberta. It is called the Department of Health and Wellness, and currently it is funded at about $8 billion per year, and it is moving up at the rate of about 10 per cent a year. There is another fund. It's an endowment fund, Mr. Speaker, called the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. A commitment has been made to move it from the original $300 million in grant money to $800 million by adding an additional $500 million this year.

While I agree that more needs to be done on the wellness side of our coin, reality has a habit of getting in our way. Health care funding has been growing at a rate exceeding 10 per cent a year. It becomes difficult to do the extra things in health care or in any other department even when necessary when growth in health care spending is so high. It not only precludes our ability to deal with new initiatives; it makes it difficult for other departments of government that are continually being denied additional funds as health care and education come first, as they should. They're the priority, but the growth in those two program lines is starting to hurt other programs.

All is not lost however. The current minister of health continues to work on a wellness strategy, and I am confident that even small things like more phys ed in schools can have a huge impact on the well-being of our children's lives. Impacts from the tobacco reduction strategy are being felt. As the minister of health indicated, over a hundred thousand people have quit smoking in the last two or three years.

Mr. Magnus: And one.

Ms Haley: And one.

The International Symposium on Health will provide a forum to explore a variety of ideas regarding health care in Alberta and hopefully will also look at the potential on the wellness side.

The actual idea of a wellness fund is not new, Mr. Speaker. It was in fact mentioned in the original Rainbow Report, and it is something that I think makes a lot of sense. But at the same time we need to constantly be reviewing the things that we are doing, such as the CFEP grants of $25 million a year. It's an awesome program that allows communities, in my area at least, to work on their recreational facilities. We were lucky enough to get a million dollar grant towards a swimming pool. Well, it's a $12 million swimming pool in Airdrie, but we were able to get a centennial grant, which really helped. Those are the types of initiatives that my communities are working on, and I'm glad to try and support them in any way that I can.

As well, as a parent when my sons were younger, one of the most important things, I think, that I could do for them was to encourage them to be in as many sports as was possible, and we tried them pretty much all, from swimming to football and basketball and volleyball and everything in between. We started out with just soccer, which was a very inexpensive sport for children to participate in. It was also something as a parent that I could get involved in with them.

So I think that not everything is about trying to spend $200 million. Perhaps it's more about getting people to reconnect with our beautiful province. If I actually had $200 million to spend, Mr. Speaker, the first thing I would do would be to try and invest it in our parks because I happen to think that that's an area that needs that kind of investment, but it would be a one-time investment, not an ongoing annual expenditure.

I would like to point out that if you combined our personal income tax, our health care premiums, the tobacco tax, the alcohol tax, you still wouldn't have enough money to pay for what one year of health care is costing us right now. So, clearly, wellness is an incredibly important issue, but never yet in all my years here have I seen anything that we've done in health care to help reduce costs actually reduce costs because the second that you find a way to do one surgical procedure for less, you end up doing two more of another one later. So there's never a reduction, and we have an aging demographic, so we also have to be cognizant of the growth potential in the health care sector.

I guess to conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to caution all of us on setting up funds like this for a dedicated revenue stream. I think that there's a risk that we set priorities today that 10 years from now may not be the priority for the government of that day, and we tie their hands by precluding their ability to change things like this. We make it very difficult with endowment funds and foundations in order to be able to deal with the current realities. Right now life is pretty good because we have a very nice surplus. Oil and gas prices are high. I remember a day when they were very high in the early 1980s, and everybody believed that they would stay high. Then I remember about 10 years where things were not so great in Alberta, and we ended up with major deficits and debt that we've just now finally concluded paying off. So I really think it's important that we not dream with taxpayers' dollars but, rather, try to find the best way to deal with the program needs that Albertans are actually asking us to deal with.

So on that note, Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting the motion, but I appreciate very much the opportunity to get up and address the issue. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we'd all agree that wellness is the preferred concept to date for us to talk about our physical and emotional well-being. In fact, a paradigm shift has taken place in which the emphasis has shifted from a biomedical model to a focus on social conditions. A recent report commissioned by the Alberta government, the 2004 report on comparable health indicators, affirmed that health is much more than just the absence of disease or disability. It is a state of physical, emotional and social well-being. Our education, employment, income and physical environment influence our health as much or more than the quality and availability of health service.

If we're really serious about our overall health and wellness, we must shift our focus. Roy Romanow wrote recently: we need to move from an illness model to a wellness paradigm that connects the dots of all of the factors that contribute to health for individuals and society at large.

This is not just an academic exercise. It's really a life and death matter. Over 80 per cent of cases of coronary heart disease, diabetes, and lung cancer could be prevented. We ignore the social determinates of health and wellness at our own peril. Tommy Douglas said: the ultimate goal of medicare must be the task of keeping people well rather than just patching them up when they're sick. The social determinants of health are the economic and social conditions that influence the health of individuals, communities, and societies as a whole, conditions such as early childhood, income, availability of food, employment, working conditions, and social services.

Of course, there have been studies on this for a long time. Beginning in the middle of the 19th century there was a famous classic analysis of the social determinants of health written by Friedrich Engels, 1845. It was entitled The Condition of the Working Class in England. He discovered that in Manchester death rates were directly affected by the quality of material conditions, housing for example. Rudolf Virchow, a German physician and the father of modern pathology, in his investigation of a typhus epidemic in Upper Silesia discovered that poor living conditions, inadequate diet, and poor hygiene fuelled the epidemic. So finding a direct relationship between social conditions and health is not new, and recent studies in Canada continue to confirm, and it's really a common-sense conclusion.

The 2002 York University conference on the social determinants of health identified 11 key determinants: aboriginal status, early life, education, employment and working conditions, food security, health care services, housing, income and its distribution, a social safety net, social exclusion, unemployment, and employment security. Mr. Speaker, the FCSS-supported agencies – and they do such a great job in Alberta – address all of these social determinants. A wellness fund directed to the social conditions just mentioned will lead to creating a healthier society and saving the health care system millions of dollars.

One of the most important social determinants of health, of course, is adequate income, the fact that people need a living wage. Study after study demonstrates that poverty is the biggest contributor to poor health. Low income is a determinant of the quality of early childhood, education, housing, employment, working conditions, and, of course, food security. Canadian children living in low-income families are more likely to experience greater varieties of illness, mental health problems, lower school achievement, early school drop out, family violence, and child abuse. Material deprivation often leads to greater consumption of tobacco, alcohol, and a lifestyle of poor diets and lack of exercise. I do not blame people living in poverty. There is too much of that kind of blaming the victim in our society.

Welfare is not enough. There must be support for full citizenship and participation in the wealth of our society. People on welfare are not just clients and recipients of welfare or the beneficiaries of the government's largesse; they are citizens and ought to be treated with dignity and respect. Without the self-esteem and self-worth of being treated with dignity, their wellness will be undermined and ground down, ensuring their dependence on the health care system.

So, Mr. Speaker, the most important question, I believe, for us in this Assembly is to ask ourselves: has government policy contributed to our wellness or undermined it by weakening the quality of so many social determinants of health? Rudolf Virchow, whom I quoted earlier, wrote in 1848: medicine is a social science, and politics is nothing but medicine writ large. One of the most important aspects of the Hippocratic oath of physicians is their commitment to not do any harm. So we must ask if government policy, especially since 1993, has contributed to our wellness or undermined our wellness. Has government policy done more harm than good? So it's not a question of blaming the poor; it's looking at ourselves and our own social policies.

I affirm the wellness fund. That's going in the right direction: to put money and resources where it counts, to enable Alberta to be a more healthy province. Roy Romanow put it best, and this is my conclusion:

Historians and health experts tell us that we have had two great revolutions in the course of public health. The first was the control on infectious diseases . . . The second was the battle against non-communicable diseases.

The third great revolution is about moving from an illness model to all of those things that both prevent illness and promote a holistic sense of wellbeing .

Motion 501 recommends putting our money and resources into dealing with the social determinants of wellness. If we do that, then the promise will come to pass. Albertans will be the healthiest people in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join the debate on Motion 501, which would have the government consider dedicating tobacco tax revenue to a wellness fund. There is no doubt that health care continues to be one of the greatest concerns in our province. Motion 501 would appear to be one way to address certain issues in the health care system; however, I do have several concerns with this motion.

While I am sure that the intent of the Member for Edmonton-Centre is to in some way further meet the health needs of Albertans, I feel that this approach will not be beneficial for several reasons. Mr. Speaker, in March of 2002 tobacco taxes were raised in our province in an effort to reduce the number of Albertans who use tobacco. This is part of the provincial government's overarching strategy to combat tobacco use in our province.

Prior to 2002 tobacco taxes generated roughly $350 million each year. In 2005 this will go up to $720 million, so a doubling plus. Currently these revenues flow into the general revenue fund, or GRF, of the provincial government. From here the government allocates revenues towards spending priorities, including health care, primary and postsecondary education, infrastructure, and other provincially delivered programs. By funding programs from the GRF, the government is better able to respond to changes in priorities and circumstances.

According to the wording of the motion, if the government were to accept Motion 501, this would mean that over $700 million per year would be dedicated to the proposed wellness fund. This is no small amount of money, and the effective removal of close to three-quarters of a billion dollars from the provincial budget would have a large impact on the budget process.

As an aside I must say that exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting is a little unclear. The wording of the motion seems to indicate that all revenues from the taxation of tobacco would be dedicated to this fund. However, the press release regarding this issue states that only $200 million would be directed towards this fund, so I may need clarification there. I appreciate the opportunity to debate the issues in this Chamber, but in the future it would be helpful if exactly what is being debated could be a little clearer, but I digress. The dedication of funds solely to one purpose could result in the limiting of spending choices by the government and hampering of the ability to deal with emergencies if they arise.

My second exception to this motion surrounds the issue of efficient program development. What is proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre would appear, in my humble opinion, to be a backward approach to program development. In order to have an effective, efficient program, it is best to design what would work best to accomplish a specific goal, then set out funding it. This way there are definite targets and strategies in place so that the program can achieve the original aims that it's created to fill. What is proposed in Motion 501 would appear to put the cart before the horse. In this case it would appear that the Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying: start out with a pile of money, and then we'll see what we can do with it.

Mr. Speaker, to be honest, this method of program development makes me nervous because of the very large chance that funds would be used inefficiently. In one scenario the level of funding would be inadequate to fully develop a program that would be effective, and the program will fail because of this. This will result in the waste of all the funds poured into the program. The other possibility is that there will be a surplus of funds to develop a program, and this will result in wasteful spending. Funds that could have been used to develop other programs in other areas will be locked into a dedicated revenue stream and could not be accessed. Either way, there exists a very large possibility of waste due to a lack of freedom and ability to adapt to changing needs within government funding.

Mr. Speaker, while I do not agree with the mode of funding that is suggested by Motion 501, I very much agree with the measures that are proposed in it. The proposed fund in Motion 501 would support wellness programs, public health initiatives, and research. As I have said, I agree with these initiatives entirely, which is why I am so glad that the government of Alberta has already had these programs in place. The provincial government currently has in place the measures which this motion would achieve. These programs have been in place for some time now.

I would like to briefly discuss the research program that is funded by the provincial government because there is some astounding work benefiting from this. The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, or AHFMR, was created specifically to fund medical research. Each year this foundation awards over $40 million in grants and awards to medical research. The funding for these grants comes from the endowment fund created by the provincial government for this purpose. The proceeds that are generated from the investment of the principal of this fund are used for the grants and endowments awarded by the AHFMR. Since its creation in 1983 the AHFMR has been recognized internationally as an outstanding institution, and the provincial government was applauded for its vision in creating it.

Mr. Speaker, as I have stated previously, I agree with what this motion seeks to accomplish, but I do not feel that I can support it because these measures are already being undertaken. To create a seemingly directionless fund with a vague purpose of wellness would be a disservice to Albertans. These are serious questions that surround the issues of health care, and the questions deserve serious answers, not vague promises of some form of spending.

I will not support Motion 501, and I would urge my colleagues in this Chamber to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand in support of this bill. As a physician in practice for the past 30 years in the province I've come to a real revolution in my own thinking about the way we're spending our health dollars. In fact, approximately 95 per cent of our health budgets are being spent on treatments and prescriptions, and it's not working.

The wellness fund is really about getting at root causes, not dealing with symptoms, not dealing with the results of lifestyles and social conditions that have created the problems in the first place. It's really about getting at root cause, not about prescriptions. That's hard even for medical people to understand. So it's a challenge to shift our thinking around from what we have been used to in the so-called health system, which is actually a sickness treatment system, to one in which we are creating conditions for people to live more healthy lives. The health system is consuming increasing portions of our budgets. It's clear that the returns are diminishing, and it's because we are focusing so much on the supply of services, not on the root causes of the conditions that are coming into the health care system.

In research done in the last 10 years it's increasingly clear that the health system can resolve between 25 and 30 per cent of the conditions presenting to it. This is because in our modern society many of the conditions that are presenting to us are having to do with environment, genetic issues, and social relationships. Many issues today are stress-related: self-esteem, loneliness, violence, addiction, anxiety, depression. We need to begin to address the broader determinants of health, and this fund is designed to try to do that.

Income supports are an example that was referred to earlier. The Quebec health system has investigated the proportion of users of the health care system and found that over 50 per cent of the users of the health care system are on the poverty side of the economic spectrum. Wellness is about how people feel as well as what their medical measurements may tell. It's beyond diagnosis and treatment. It's beyond pills and even beyond lifestyles, which are the symptoms of conditions from which people are struggling to be liberated.

People make choices on the basis of the opportunities and the barriers that they experience in their lives, especially their early childhood experiences. It's appropriate to recognize that this government is spending in some areas of early childhood enrichment. That is going to pay back bountifully in adult lives and health. Early childhood is a vital priority to improve health and to reduce health system use.

Real health promotion – and this is what the wellness fund is about as opposed to sickness management – begins with finding ways to increase people's sense of control, Mr. Speaker. That comes through improving living conditions. Health is about power and money in our culture. In this democracy there are many opportunities, and we need to find across the sectors – the health sector, social services, education, the justice systems – a common commitment to engaging with people and their communities in their responsibility for their health and their future. We can assist them in finding that joint responsibility for health.

This is the crux of wellness. This is the crux of a new paradigm we call health promotion – it's political; it's not medical – stimulating, liberating, caring, healthy communities. It's a challenge to all of us to think about who is responsible for health. The medical model says: we will take care of you. The wellness model says: together we can create healthy, caring communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking in favour of the motion. The notion of using a sin tax to promote wellness – in other words, turning a negative into a positive – has a sweet irony to it. Another example of irony or paradox is that this government has had no difficulty at all in terms of assessing Albertans and collecting over $900 million in the form of health care premiums, taxes by any other words, but seems reluctant or reticent to have what I see as almost found money, $200 million out of a fund of $660 million, set aside to promote wellness. The notion of promoting wellness is so much cheaper than the after-effects of disease.

The ideal would be through a comprehensive program of education combined with a total ban in public places including bingo halls, casinos, bars, and so on, to promote such a healthy lifestyle that there would no longer be any taxes to collect. And until that wonderful day arrives, we should be setting aside portions of this sin tax to fund healthy investments.

Investment in health is like an investment in education: it just continues to pay and pay and pay. It's not a matter of either/or, robbing Peter to pay Paul. Setting aside $200 million of a $650 million windfall from the unfortunate nature of smoking provides us with a kind of funding that can set aside community health support in the form of schools. Compare this kind of an initiative to simply mandating daily phys. ed. without providing either the infrastructure, the equipment, or the support for such a program. You can't mandate; you can only promote.

To get back to the notion of not robbing Peter to pay Paul, we have in this province in one sense the good fortune of our revenues from oil and gas, which this year are accounting for somewhere between $6 billion to $10 billion. So the idea that we can't set aside $200 million just, I'm afraid, is not a wise argument.

We must invest in health if we are going to move into this next hundred years with a healthier lifestyle than we currently have. We have a whole series of problems with regard to obesity, with regard to drug addiction. The latest with the crystal meth is causing a great deal of difficulty. If we can avoid these pitfalls through a wellness fund, which has an education component in it which states that this is the lifestyle we should be seeking, then we can convince youth to avoid the pitfalls of crystal meth and other forms of drugs. This $200 million could be used in part for programs like AADAC. We're having a bill come up later along that same line, where we're talking about the best treatment for crystal meth, but I'm not sure that we have sufficient funding for that program to be realistically implemented.

The government has said over and over again that health care costs are spiralling out of control. I take exception to this statement because since the 1980s as a portion of GDP our expenditure on health has not risen. It has stayed under that 10 per cent level, yet here we have a fund which by itself would provide an extra $200 million.

One of my former Calgary colleagues was concerned that the principles weren't laid out. Where was this money going to go? Well, I would point to the fact that it should be noted that this $200 million is not a one-time cost but an annual cost of $200 million each year. Funds would be expended on an annual basis, or as I indicated earlier, hopefully by having healthier lifestyles, we could do away with this fund, and health would be seen as an investment, not something that we had to provide a fund for. As to how the fund should be used and the notion that it wasn't delineated, that's what a committee of all representatives of this House could determine: how best should we be investing in health care funding and wellness?

In February I was fortunate enough to go to the University of Calgary and there attend a public health care international symposium. Doctor after doctor from around the world indicated that wellness was certainly a better option to what we currently have. Rather than a health care system, what we have is a sick care system. We deal with people who have succumbed quite often through no fault of their own, through a matter of family genealogy, and find themselves in need of health care. The opposite of that is to promote wellness. Save that money; invest in the future.

For 34 years I taught in the public school system. My most enjoyable early experiences were teaching elementary school when, before laws were too tight and curriculum was so designated, we had the opportunity to go for runs on a regular basis. And talking to my students 32, 34 years later, the times that they remember the most were when we were out there doing these healthy pursuits.

I would recommend to this government the notion of turning basically a sin activity into a heavenly pursuit: $200 million available, used over and over again, to promote wellness to the point where we eliminate the cancer-associated problems with first-hand and second-hand smoke.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first observation I have is that the hon. Opposition House Leader's motion is quite vague when she speaks about wellness programs, public health initiatives, and research. While I would agree that reforms of the health care system are certainly in order, the Ministry of Health and Wellness already does all of the things which this motion speaks to.

Tobacco taxes bring in approximately $700 million, while approximately $9 billion are already spent on health and wellness. So we can assume that every penny of the tobacco tax is already spent on health care. We already have a medical research endowment fund in the province of Alberta, and we already spend approximately $233 million on wellness programs. So if the hon. member is suggesting that $467 million more be spent on wellness programs, we would have to take away necessarily from some other health care programs. I'm not sure what those would be.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the motion is simplistic, and it is vague, and I would urge all members to vote against it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak from a geriatric nurse perspective. There are so many things that we can do to help keep our elderly out of nursing homes, which in the long run is or should be really what our aim is with our health/wellness dollars.

There was something I heard from the other side of the House that I had to really think about, the fact that if we took $200 million annually, that would tie up something that would happen or decisions that would be made 10 years down the road. I really can't help but think that 10 years down the road the thinking would be different, and the changes would be made according to how the future would call for it at that point in time. So saying that your hands are tied because you decide something today to me is a little bit frightening.

There was an analogy that I thought I could use about the $200 million out of $720 million, and as I was listening, it went from $350 million to $720 million. Who knows what it's going to be five years from now? I would like to sincerely believe that it would be lower because we don't have people smoking as much; however, we'll see how that works out.

But there is an analogy that I'd like to use in my own budgeting procedures. Many, many years ago I was taught how to budget with an envelope. I have little envelopes, and if I want a new car, I take that money, and it is specifically put aside for my new car. Now I have my new car, but guess what? In five years I'm going to need another new car, so my little envelope doesn't move. Those dollars are specifically taken, and I can figure out the rest of my budget based on that one thing.

I truly believe that by taking this $200 million out of the $720 million, it would be money exceedingly well spent. As a municipal councillor I have seen the benefits and the operation of FCSS first-hand. They address local issues, and they address them at the local level. So, Mr. Speaker, I would of course support this Motion 501, and I would ask that the hon. members in this House perhaps reconsider some of the things that we have discussed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, stand in support of this motion tonight. Considering my background as a health care professional, I understand and recognize the benefits to be realized if this motion is accepted and if the plan is adopted. I remind everyone in this Assembly about the old saying about the ounce of prevention. Mr. Speaker, what we are suggesting here is using a few ounces of prevention to save a whole lot more of pounds of treatment.

I disagree with the hon. members who went before me who suggested that this plan duplicates already existing government programs. This motion seeks to empower local communities and groups to promote health and wellness. It is not meant to replace what the government already has in place. The money collected through tobacco taxes just goes into general revenue. It is not spent on health promotion and disease prevention. Mr. Speaker, so do the health care premiums that we pay and the user fees that we pay. It all goes into general revenue.

There is no harm in setting aside some of that money to promote healthier communities and healthier individuals. Billboards and banners and TV ads telling people how to lose weight, how to drink responsibly, how to not smoke are simply not enough. We need to offer them a new tool, a new mechanism by which to operate, and I think this idea is wonderful, and I urge everybody here to vote yes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, shall I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to conclude the debate?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've enjoyed the debate tonight, and I thank my colleagues for participating in that and bringing a number of different perspectives to support the motion.

To those who spoke against the motion, I certainly respect your point of view, but I'd like to take the opportunity to address a few of the misconceptions that I heard there. The Member for Calgary-Hays talked about funds being used inefficiently, and I urge the Member for Calgary-Hays to investigate the excellent record that FCSS funding has held in this province for many, many decades. It's a primary funding source used by the provincial government over a very long period of time. So if the member feels that there might be inefficiencies, I think he's going to have to look at his own government involvement in this very long-running program. As I said, the provincial government funds 80 per cent, compared to 20 per cent municipal support for the programming.

I think what's important here is that we don't want to spend more money. We are spending more money on health care. We're spending more money on health care all the time. We're seeing more money spent on acute care, and we're now spending a 10 per cent top-up to get a private health care provider to do knee and hip surgeries in Calgary. Talk about spending more money, there's a way to do it: let's give more money to private health care providers.

I think what we need here is less sickness management. What we want to have is less use of health care services by having healthier people overall. The idea behind a wellness fund and dedicating tobacco tax revenue specifically to a wellness fund is to have those initiatives that will help our Alberta population achieve a better level of wellness and therefore use health care services less. So I'd be very surprised to see government members on the side opposite voting against an initiative that was to promote healthier Albertans and reduce the costs on the health care system.

I once again urge all members to vote in support of this motion and thank you very much for the opportunity to bring it before the Assembly tonight. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:49 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Orders 31 and 32 basically, effectively, deal with what we're doing now. This is called a division, and one of the interesting parts about the division is 32(4). "Every member remaining in the Chamber must vote on the question being put." There is no choice.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

head: Government Motions

4. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Mrs. McClellan:
Be it resolved that the Assembly do resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

Spring Recess

6. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns on Thursday, March 24, 2005, at the regular hour of 5:30 p.m., it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 4, 2005, at 1:30 p.m.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's the Easter break motion and basically proposes that we have an Easter break. This year the stars are aligned. Normally we have to tussle over whether we take a spring break with the Edmonton school break or with the Calgary school break or with the rural break, which is normally aligned with the week following Easter. This particular year all three weeks happen to be the same week, and therefore it's very easy to suggest that the last week of March be a break from the session.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

Adjournment of Session

7. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the spring sitting of the First Session of the 26th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this, again, is the routine adjournment motion. I always get razzed for raising it so early in the session. People say that we're already talking about going home, but in fact it's just prudent to get these routine measures on the table so that they are available for us when the appropriate time comes.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mrs. Fritz]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to say a few words about my reasons for being here, who I am, and what I hope for the future for Alberta.

I'm a husband, father, and recent grandfather and, like many of you, revelling in life at this stage. The opportunities and gifts of life seem greater than ever, perhaps also because at our age some of us have lost as much as we've gained, and we're getting ready for later-life experiences. So I come from a place of gratitude and especially in Alberta, Canada, a place of great abundance. After 30 years in medical practice, including work in developing countries, I'm also counting my blessings. E.E. Cummings probably expressed as well as anyone my feelings today: "I thank you God for this most amazing day: for the leaping greenly spirits of trees and a blue true dream of sky; and for everything which is natural which is infinite which is yes."

I experienced the reality of our democracy deficit personally in this last year in my firing for speaking out in support of the Kyoto accord, and more broadly I experienced it as I witnessed the lack of public involvement in many of the key issues of our day, from justice and peace issues to taxation to social programs to environmental protection and preservation. Healthy debate is essential at all levels to minimize the impact of vested interests in our policies. This deficit is clearly connected to people's sense of control and their health. This has been identified in a large body of research from medical sociology and epidemiology.

I want to speak briefly to these issues: what we mean by health and democracy, what we can do to ensure the appropriate balance of economic, social, and environmental health into the foreseeable future.

Proud as we all are of our hundred years as a province, we as custodians of our future must articulate a meaningful vision and a plan for the next hundred years that inspires Albertans to be all we can be, working together with citizens, elected officials, and nongovernment organizations, a huge and growing sector across this country, to create the rules and conditions for sustainable, healthy communities.

I want to be part of a new politics of trust, integrity, transparency, accountability, and honesty. Our reputation as politicians begs improvement. As a physician in clinical medicine for 10 years and public health for 15 years, having worked on five different continents, I bring all of this perspective to the Legislature. I'm fundamentally concerned with health, which I have found fundamentally to be about relationships. Relationships are largely about mutual trust and caring. I've come to believe that a vision of health on the planet is essential in our work for a better world to avoid the twin deceptions of self-interest and fear.

Health for me means maximizing participation in decisions, maximizing people's sense of control and freedom, balancing the interests of the short term with the long term. I'm reminded from time to time that these are dangerous times. There's an urgent need to find a new way of living and relating to each other. The mentality of us and them, winners and losers, good and bad is not serving us or the environment.

Huge challenges have developed: economic interdependence, burgeoning populations, water sustainability concerns, habitat disruption, resource depletion, an increasing divide between rich and poor, and increased religious fundamentalism. These challenges are connected to our Alberta concerns, and if we do not learn from the exploitation of other times and places, we will find ourselves in the same circumstances as many countries in the world in history and at the present.

I would like to talk a bit about the future. I dare say that all of us entered political life in order to make a difference to some of these pervasive and persistent problems, and I want to use this opportunity to call us all again to our common agenda or vision, both globally and locally, to democracy, to community, and to a sustainable economy. Too often I hear the economy pitted against the environment and quoted in this dichotomy: do you want jobs or environment? It's abundantly clear to all that the economy depends fundamentally on a sustained, healthy environment. To believe it can support uncontrolled growth in anything, including the economy, is to court disaster. Uncontrolled growth is the definition of cancer in the medical field. Nothing in the natural world supports the notion of uncontrolled growth.

There must be checks that protect the natural environment, or we will leave, as other parts of the world attest, a wasteland to our children. This necessarily means intervening in the free market, where demand and supply govern everything. My constituents are telling me to confront the truth. Business must no longer determine the rate and conditions of resource extraction in Alberta, either renewable or nonrenewable resources. This is not a partisan issue. It's a matter of decency, humanity, and sustainability, and it will require of us in this new dispensation the courage to think freely about our deepest values, to speak out on our convictions, and to be the change that we and our constituents want to see. In short, it means renewing our commitment to the long term of the province and to the people of Alberta above all else, even our own parties.

Besides my personal experience in the Palliser health region there were two key reasons for entering politics: number one, the recognition that the average citizen feels disconnected from each other and from the political process and, secondly, that many citizens, including myself, believe that the public interest has not been adequately served in Alberta over the long term. Essentially, then, I entered political life because of the weakening of democracy and its connection to balancing financial self-interest with protection and preservation of the environment.

I want to say just a few words about those. As a physician I've always been keenly interested in what makes people healthy and what undermines people's health. A definition of health I've come to appreciate has a spiritual dimension to it. It was coined 3,000 years ago by St. Irenaeus when he described health as to be fully human, fully alive. I found it helpful to apply this to my own condition from time to time and to assess the needs that I need to make for change in my own life.

Work in a number of countries in Africa and southeast Asia as well as northern Canada has also opened my eyes to how other cultures view and experience the limits of modern medicine. When people do not feel significant, listened to, in some control of their lives, including what they say and how they live, their health is eroded. Support of family, friends, and workplaces is vital in keeping people well. We are in this environment of winners and losers, I quote, rapidly losing a sense of that security that comes from these social supports. At a larger macro level the policies and system supports similarly can either strengthen or weaken people's sense of control, and so we are increasingly seeing stress-related disorders, anxieties, and addictions that relate to people's loss of a sense of control. So from South Africa to Medicine Hat I've noticed the importance of strengthening civil society and of inclusive politics to assist people's sense of control and thereby their health.

Since my firing two years ago many people in the health professions, teaching, and social service systems have expressed their concerns also about feeling unable to talk about certain controversial issues in their own sphere of influence. I have increasingly realized that democracy is only a word. Living democracy requires every one of us to think our own thoughts, speak our own truth, and take action on what we believe most deeply.

Someone said that weakness corrupts: absolute weakness corrupts absolutely. I take this to mean that when the electorate relinquishes its responsibility to be fully human even to elected officials and does not make them accountable for key decisions, the elected people predictably respond to dominant pressures – wealthy lobby groups, party interests – and not necessarily the public interest.

My political campaign opened many doors in my constituency, literally and figuratively. The constituency of Calgary-Mountain View, the second largest in the province, about 42,000 people: one-sixth are immigrants; two-thirds have a postsecondary education; the average income is $60,000 per year. I developed a new appreciation for how people are living and what is important to them. Voter apathy is widely discussed in the media. I began to hear beyond the words of people to actually a feeling of being discounted, hopeless, and weary of a process that doesn't seem to include them. Feeling disconnected and powerless, many had little capacity to get involved in another election exercise.

I had the door slammed in my face as soon as I identified myself as a politician in some cases and as soon as I identified myself as a Liberal in other cases. I take that to mean that people are not interested in politics anymore, and that's a real scary thought to me. Yes, there are people who have stopped caring. But I have to ask: what experiences have they had in life to leave them so wounded that they no longer care enough to participate?

In our world of winners and losers, us and them, good and bad, we are often polarized and alienated from one another. I have begun to experience that here in this Legislature. Though not unexpected, it does lead me to ask the question: is this the best that we can do? We must be careful not to demean anyone if we are to model the kind of living we want to see around us. Actions, ideas, and plans can be challenged, but the person must not be undermined or we damage our own health as well as that of our democracy. That contributes to the distrust and hopelessness that we talked about earlier.

If we are not contributing to trust and hope in the Legislature, can we really be believed when we say that this is what we want for our province? It's like health professionals prescribing healthy lifestyles and not practising them. There's a major disconnect here, and I don't believe it's inevitable. I here make a public commitment: I will not heckle nor put down any person in the Legislature for any reason. I have three reasons for saying this and making this commitment to all of you. First, it doesn't accomplish my goal, which is to get the truth and to make the decisions; secondly, it undermines my own credibility when I put someone else down; and three, health is too important to me to sacrifice for expediency.

The bigger question is: how do we prepare people to take their roles as citizens in our democracy on behalf of our communities and on behalf of our environment? I'm discovering how fragile our democracy is and how much I need a large, caring base to help me reach those who for whatever reason find it difficult to talk to me. Democracy, like the doctor/patient relationship, lives in honest conversations. Who is responsible for the democracy deficit? All of us, of course, including those of us privileged to be elected. We need to make it clear that we're open to discuss all perspectives on issues.

I'm also here because I believe that the long-term interests of people, of Alberta, and indeed the planet have become secondary to narrow economic and vested interests. What has moved me most powerfully are two things: the experience of largely preventable disease in our society and the evidence of huge decline in the natural environment. In both cases, individuals and the environment, I recognize difficulty in being heard and addressed in a holistic and a lasting way. I'm therefore doubly aware of my responsibility to tell the truth, to care about the healing needed, both my own and that of others, and to persist in searching out the root causes rather than the quick fix. It is a truism that if I fail to be concerned about the security of my neighbour, including you, I threaten my own security.

Mr. Speaker, we are living beyond the means of the planet, and no one wants to call a limit on production and resource extraction. If we're committed to people's health and the environment, we must create limits to growth. In addition, we need to have the courage to speak and to be the change we want to see. In our use of resources like water, electricity, and automobiles we need to model change as representatives of our people. We must use our dollars to stimulate responsible business practices, building renewable products, and minimizing waste.

Our greatest responsibility as citizens and elected representatives is to show our children the way. This means each of us deciding to take less, a radical notion in today's society. We must search our hearts and minds for ways to express our integrity as fathers, mothers, sons and daughters, citizens of Alberta, and citizens, increasingly, of the world. For our sake and for the sake of the planet we must place limits on our growth.

I began with a creative expression of gratitude and hope, and I end with a stark expression, but one that's still of hope, by Leonard Cohen.

Don't really have the courage
To stand where I must stand
Don't really have the temperament
To lend a helping hand

Don't really know who sent me
To raise my voice and say
May the lights in The Land of Plenty Shine on the truth some day.

I'll close with the rallying cry of The Hunger Project on transformation: If not this, what? If not now, when? And if not me and you, who is going to make the change?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'd like to remind all hon. members that under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes is available for questions, comments, and responses. Anyone wish to rise on that?

Seeing none, I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate each and every member of this House for their success in the recent election. It is always a great honour to have the trust of the constituents and to serve them to the best of our ability. I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on another successful bid to be the Speaker of this House, and also my congratulations go to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on his elected role as our Deputy Speaker.

I would like to congratulate the Lieutenant Governor for his appointment to this important position. I believe he was correct in asserting that he has big boots to fill, but I feel confident that the footprint he leaves will be impressive. Mr. Speaker, the late Lois Hole was a great Albertan. I thank the government for recognizing her contribution to this province and for establishing the lasting tributes to Her Honour. As a member of this House I had many opportunities to attend various events with Mrs. Hole, and I can attest to the magic of her presence and the lasting impression she has left on the people of this province. She will be missed but never forgotten.

I want to draw your attention to the recent election. It is a great honour to be re-elected, and with great help from my campaign team and my volunteers and the trust of my constituents, I have the privilege of serving again. I would like to thank all the people who have participated in the democratic process, their dedication with time and resources. It takes a lot of effort and commitment to run a campaign, and there is far too much work for one person to do it successfully. I could not have done it alone. I sincerely thank all of those who have helped me. My campaign team, headed by Mr. Bob Gray, who designed and orchestrated a strategy that was open, honest, and ethical, allowed me to return to this Assembly serving Alberta with you.

Mr. Speaker, the voice of democracy has spoken again in the last election, and I thank all those candidates who ran an honest and ethical campaign. This type of integrity is absolutely necessary for us as legislators to be able to properly represent our constituents. Being ethical and accountable is of utmost importance as we cannot function properly unless we have the confidence of our electorate. I thank the candidates of Calgary-Fort for running honest campaigns. This is the least our voters can expect from us.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to call on all candidates in the Calgary-Fort constituency to work with me to serve our constituents. Yes, if you have ideas to improve the quality of life for our constituents, I would certainly welcome them. To my constituents I can pledge with certainty that I will serve them and Albertans at large to the best of my ability based on four principles: being ethical, patient, effective, and economical in life, at work, and in politics.

Mr. Speaker, the boundaries of my constituency have changed. The new community of Forest Lawn has been added, and I would like to welcome all the residents of this historic area to the constituency of Calgary-Fort. In the beginning of the last century Forest Lawn was a flat prairie inhabited by no more than half a dozen families. The area had no transportation and was slow to develop. As a way to spawn interest and growth in the area, two land promoters bought hundreds of railway ties and laid them out to the centre of Forest Lawn from the Calgary boundary. Then the promoters started a rumor that the streetcar was coming, and lots started to sell soon thereafter.

The area grew and developed into three separate, distinct hamlets: Albert Park, Forest Lawn, and Hubalta. The name was thought to be attractive to the real estate speculator, so it was named to encourage purchases. In 1934 the three districts of Hubalta, Albert Park, and Forest Lawn were incorporated into three villages. However, no one would run for an elected position, so the provincial government combined the three villages into one, and the village of Forest Lawn was formed. On November 29, 1952, the proclamation was official, and the three districts became the town of Forest Lawn. Then the people of that community voted in favour of annexation in October, and Forest Lawn became a part of the city of Calgary on December 31, 1961. The town's population was 13,000.

Mr. Speaker, today Forest Lawn is a beautiful and vibrant community. Its high school consistently produces outstanding graduates that move on to become leading doctors, lawyers, engineers, various other professionals, even politicians. These individuals bring a great deal of pride to the eastern side of Calgary.

My vision for Calgary-Fort and indeed for all of the eastern part of Calgary is to work with community to raise their profile. I want to see more of the provincial government's services in this area: more schools, more transportation, and more housing for seniors. The hard-working people that live here deserve more, and it will be my most important commitment to ensure that they will get it.

One way eastern Calgary will get recognition is through the further development of 17th Avenue southeast. This road is now known as International Avenue in Calgary. I will support improvements in this area as I believe that Albertans and Canadians can capitalize on our international diversity. We are unique in that we are made up of such a large variety of cultures, yet we unite under one flag. International Avenue allows us to display our diversity and learn from each other's experiences.

I also proudly support events such as the international fireworks festival, that takes place every year now at Elliston park. Events like this will give us more opportunity to come together and to celebrate our culture.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-Fort's land is as diverse as its people. We have major roads, parks, schools as well as residential areas, commercial areas, and even a fish hatchery. This hatchery is located in a wetland park, and it is very good for education about the environment.

Calgary-Fort is the home of an outstanding Canadian Olympic gold medalist, Kyle Shewfelt, who won the first-ever gold medal for Canada in gymnastics in Athens in 2004. I had the pleasure of speaking to this resident of the community of Dover, and his winning spirit was an inspiration to me. My great feeling was to see Kyle on TV performing his routine and standing on the podium receiving the gold medal, and my great thrill was to rush to his home right after he came back and hold the shiny gold medal in my hand.

Mr. Speaker, it's amazing that Alberta has only 10 per cent of Canada's population, but we won 2 out of 3 gold medals for Canada. I wonder if our government's policies have anything to do with it, but I believe so. By giving citizens the self-reliance and choices, they will propel themselves to the highest levels.

Mr. Speaker, I'm inspired by the vision of this government for recognizing that the key to the prosperous future of this province lies in the education of our children. I welcome announcements such as the scholarships and fellowships program, that will help a total of 300 masters and PhD students through their studies. I look forward to seeing opportunities present themselves to students with the addition of new spaces in the province's postsecondary institutions.

Alberta's kindergarten is very important. From kindergarten to grade 12 students currently lead their peers across the country and should therefore be able to move on and become top students in our postsecondary system. They should not be prevented from achieving all their talents, not allowing them to achieve because of money constraints. Alberta has too much prosperity and its students have too much potential to allow this to happen. For this reason I applaud the government for commitment to creating a new tuition policy ensuring that tuition and schooling costs aren't a barrier to learning in this province.

I also commend the government for its announcement on the development of an Alberta-wide digital library. This is an example of how this government uses today's technology to overcome the problems of yesterday. With the Internet comes endless opportunity and innovative efficiency. Alberta will reap the benefits of such initiatives, and I thank the government for naming this library the Lois Hole digital library as a tribute to her dedication to libraries, literacy, and books. This highly symbolic gesture will connect the dedication of a great Albertan from the past with a generation in the future.

Mr. Speaker, this year we will celebrate our centennial. This occasion will allow all generations to come together to commemorate all the achievements we as a province have accomplished. Our position in the federation has changed from that of a western province with more livestock than people to Canada's leader. This accomplishment is due to our strong values, that include hard work, relentless dedication, respect for family, fiscal responsibility. We have a lot to be proud of this year.

I also thank the many seniors in Calgary-Fort, who have provided me with their insight and experiences into the many matters that affect the community. I will work hard for you, I could say to my seniors, to ensure that your opinions are heard in this government and that your ideas are represented in this House. This year's centennial will give us the unique opportunity to learn about how the sacrifices of your generation are affecting this generation's present and great future.

Mr. Speaker, the future of this province looks bright, and I thank my constituents for allowing me the opportunity to once again have a role in making it even brighter. I look forward to working with the people of Calgary-Fort, Albertans at large, and the members of this Assembly to make it good for all Albertans. By working together, we shall build Alberta's greater future.

Mr. Speaker, a personal point of pride, I may say, will come from listening to the Alberta song, which will be played time and time again throughout this year. I thank my colleagues for supporting me in this initiative. May I end this with a refrain.

Alberta is calling me.

Home sweet home, it's where I'm proud to be.

Alberta is calling me.

Livin' right I'm feelin' free.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise under Standing Order 29?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you. It's an honour to rise as a newly elected member in this Assembly. I want to thank my family first of all for their encouragement and support. They constantly point out that I must have the dreamer's disease. It isn't necessarily a bad thing. It's a good thing, in fact, when you think about the combined possibilities of the ideology and the personality. These are the things that make a person. My family encouraged me to run, and they saw that with the community as well.

I would also like to thank the many volunteers who helped with the campaign for their time, money, and other donations. They were very generous. There were friendships created as a result of the election which will last a long time. This is more than I could have imagined, and for that I am truly grateful. I owe the volunteers, friends I call them, more than I can say, and I will do my best to represent all of the constituents within the newly named riding of Edmonton-Decore.

I would like to thank Bill Bonner, the Liberal MLA for Edmonton-Glengarry, for the past eight years of service to the people of this community. I think it's very fitting that a Liberal be the first elected to the newly named constituency of Edmonton-Decore, honouring the late Laurence Decore, who served Edmonton as an alderman, a mayor, an MLA, and, finally, a Leader of the Opposition whose vision of a debt-free Alberta is almost realized except for the fact that Alberta still has debt in areas of infrastructure, causing municipalities to go further into debt, borrowing money for things that should be funded by this province; education, not having enough money to pay for arbitrated settlements negotiated by third parties, causing boards to lay off teachers only to rehire them later; health care backlogs and waiting lists and roadway construction in which we have to form partnerships in order to fund projects. All this when we boast a debt-free Alberta.

Alberta will celebrate 100 years, and I wonder if this is what the first members, while sitting in the Thistle curling centre rink, the first Legislature, had envisioned for Alberta 100 years ago.

Edmonton-Decore is truly a unique constituency, some neighbourhoods older than 50 years and some not yet established. I know these areas well from having served a great many of these constituents as a school board trustee for the area. I spent most of my life growing up in the Killarney area, attending the local schools from Glengarry, Mee-Yah-Noh, Killarney junior high, and finally finishing at Queen Elizabeth high school, but not all residents were as fortunate as I was to have neighbourhood schools in newly developing areas. They continue to bus children out of the area, so after 20 years of bussing we leave the environment with more pollution and nothing more to show for it. In some areas of the city the school boards are actually considering closing schools, further hurting communities' dreams of growth.

Edmonton-Decore is rich with diversity, and rich with groups able to call it home in the newly established boundaries, allowing for a mix of newly developing along with well-established neighbourhoods. Not all of these people that I met during the campaign share the Alberta advantage. In fact, many people question why we still have the high cost of gas and electrical prices in our rich province. Many of the people not on fixed incomes still feel the burden of these payments while raising families. In some cases they seem like mortgage payments, they indicated to me.

The lack of affordable housing, seniors' complexes as well as assisted living, is very concerning in the area. There are long lists to get into these facilities and when successful, if successful, it's very expensive to be able to stay in these places as well. For those who are not able to wait for the need and the housing, they're often shipped off to other neighbourhoods, having been long-term residents, expected to move to unfamiliar locations.

Other questions that surfaced during the campaign range from: why the delay in surgeries? We have such a rich province. Why does a waiting list continue to grow for these people, except for the fact that we're paying for quicker services and they refuse to do that when they're on fixed incomes? Other questions during the campaign: why does this government still fund abortions while we still have expanding health care concerns? Our health care is the envy of other countries, although not perfect, yet it needs solutions to ensure that it's sustainable for the next wave of the needed use, when the baby boomers will put the system to its greatest test.

Postsecondary was also raised as well as costs of access as well as debt repayment. Youth who are considering enrolling and those who are enrolled certainly face the reality of debt and the repayment. There is outrage, at least, from the approach of the funding of universities during election time, when Albertans are expecting long-term, predictable, sustainable funding that they can count on.

These needs need to be met with more public debate to ensure Albertans' voices are heard and considered. At the end of the day, I think we all seek the same for our communities; it's the Alberta advantage. As an elected member and a member of the Official Opposition, it is my job to ensure that the government is held accountable through questions raised by myself through conversations with day-to-day constituents.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will state that I am honoured and humble to be here to represent all the viewpoints of the constituents of Edmonton-Decore. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would be recognizing the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a tremendous honour and privilege that I rise on this, my first occasion to address the Assembly, in response to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate His Honour on his appointment.

It is with a heavy heart that I say a fond farewell to my dear friend Her Honour Lois Hole and thank her family for sharing with us the queen of hugs. She will forever remain the queen of our hearts. May she rest in peace.

I would also like to congratulate my colleagues and wish them the best during this 26th Legislature, with a special acknowledgement to the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for his acclamation once again as Speaker of the House and to you, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, for your election as Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, as the new Member of the Legislative Assembly for the Leduc-Beaumont-Devon constituency I am humbled and honoured to extend thanks to my constituents and assure them that their interests locally, provincially, and nationally will be represented to the best of my abilities and with these interests as my guide. I'm able to stand here because of the encouragement and support from my wife, Brenda, my children, many other family members, and an exceptional team of friends and supporters who believed in me and worked hard on my behalf. I would like to thank them all very much.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon is located just south of Edmonton and reaches from Devon in the west to an area east of Round Hill, which is northeast of Camrose, some approximately 60 miles. The other communities I represent include Armena, New Sarepta, Hay Lakes, Kingman, Beaumont, the city of Leduc, and portions of Leduc and Camrose counties. The constituency may have a new name, but the boundaries are essentially the same as the old Leduc riding with the addition of two unpopulated quarter sections west of the town of Devon. With a population of approximately 34,000 people the communities contained within the constituency are situated just far enough outside of Edmonton to enjoy the amenities of a large urban centre with the serenity and friendliness of small-town, rural Alberta.

Manufacturing and retail are the largest employers in this riding, which also has a strong agricultural base and is home to Nisku, western Canada's largest business park, contributing to average household incomes of approximately $73,900, which, Mr. Speaker, is above the Alberta average. With all of these wonderful blessings, it is the warm, friendly, and resourceful people that make me proud to call this area my home.

Mr. Speaker, the population of this constituency is very stable, reflecting that two-thirds were born in Alberta while some 7 per cent are immigrants to Canada. I'm very proud to be a part of that 7 per cent. As a native Jamaican I'm extremely proud of my heritage and my roots. I am equally proud to call Alberta my home since I arrived in Leduc in 1975.

Mr. Speaker, my 17 years in Jamaica provided me with a foundation that allows me to fully appreciate all the wonderful opportunities that our province has to offer. These years along with reminders from my dad, Hal Rogers, who was, by the way, a much-loved grade 5/6 teacher who passed away at the young age of 53 in Leduc, taught me that "if you wan' good, you nose hafi run," a Jamaican term which in everyday language means nothing comes without sacrifice or hard work.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a proud graduate of NAIT with a diploma in business. This foundation provided me with the ability to work successfully in the oil industry and in municipal administration between 1980 and 1991. More recently I was a successful realtor from 1992 to 2004.

In 1992 the citizens of Leduc placed an enormous trust in me when I was elected by a record number of votes as an alderman. That trust was further extended with the municipal election of 1995. In 1998 I was elected as mayor, and that privilege was further extended with the 2001 election. During my tenure on council I was elected over 10 years by Alberta municipal colleagues to the board of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. I served four years as vice-president and two years as president. This role allowed me to promote and champion the needs and challenges of Alberta's communities to the provincial and federal governments as well as other stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, these are a few of the tools that I bring with me that I believe will help me to make a positive contribution to this House and to the constituents that I represent.

I would now like to discuss a few of the many positive contributions the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon has and continues to make to the province of Alberta and how the commitments made by government through the Speech from the Throne will help to contribute to the success of these extraordinary communities.

When the majority of Albertans hear the word Leduc mentioned, they think of the famous discovery at Leduc No. 1 in 1947, and rightly so. It was a major turning point for our province. In a local history book Harvey Maloney describes the discovery that transformed Alberta as turning much of the province into something resembling a geological pincushion. With the discovery of oil at Leduc No. 1 the grainfields northwest of Leduc were soon dotted with drilling rigs, and by the early '50s it seemed that all of Alberta was bathing in oil and perfumed with gas.

Albertans have much to be proud of and to be grateful for as we enter our centennial year and prepare for the celebrations that will be taking place and the visit from Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. The discovery in Leduc has played more than a substantial role in making Alberta's first century a great success. Our natural resources will continue to play a crucial role in Alberta's future. It was, however, reassuring to hear that the Alberta government will continue its very strong commitment to a healthy and sustainable environment.

Mr. Speaker, although the discovery of oil has played a large role in defining the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, we are also very proud of the diversity of the region. This diversity ranges from agriculture to industry and has provided the region with stability and confidence in good and bad economic times. The economy of the area originally revolved around agriculture, and still today we are at the centre of one of Alberta's richest and most diversified farming regions. Dairies, livestock operations, and grainfields are plentiful and flourish.

An example of the success of the region during the current challenges faced by the agriculture industry is the agrifood business incubation facility announced last fall by the minister of agriculture, the Alberta Agriculture Value Added Corporation, and its partners. This facility will help take Alberta's value-added food processing industry to new levels of success, helping entrepreneurs make the transition from product development to the marketplace. The facility will house a food processing business incubator, which will help start-up companies move from product and process development to the establishment of their own facilities. The incubator is currently under construction next to the food processing research centre in Leduc and will be managed by Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Speaker, it is innovative developments such as the incubator that propelled the Leduc region to the head of the agricultural sector in Alberta. It makes me extremely happy to hear through the throne speech that Alberta will continue to stand by agricultural producers and increase the expansion of value-added products.

I was also impressed to hear that the government will work to strengthen the agricultural sector by advocating market choice for wheat and barley. Many of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, will agree that the Canadian Wheat Board has for far too long dictated the market value for Alberta wheat and barley in what should be a free global marketplace. It is reassuring that the government continues to recognize and support rural communities through these commitments as well as through the recommendations of the rural development strategy, which will sustain and strengthen rural Alberta.

With my history in municipal politics I was encouraged by the commitment to work with municipal partners by the government's commitment to allocate $3 billion to address municipal infrastructure needs. A new spelling, Mr. Speaker, for the word "relief." Mr. Speaker, the Alberta advantage is the product of activity in individual communities across our province. It is vital that local communities have the sustainable fiscal capacity to provide and adequately maintain infrastructure, both hard and soft, which is critical to the advancement of the Alberta advantage.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the government on its commitment to education during Alberta's centennial year both through Bill 1 and enhancements to K to 12 already in progress. I have been blessed with three wonderful children, all of whom are currently thriving in Alberta's education system from grades 9 through to university. I therefore have a very personal stake in this area. I know the trials and tribulations that students can face when attempting to follow their dreams. If those dreams are achievable anywhere, they must be achievable in Alberta. Our children are our future. As leaders we must lay a sound foundation for them to prosper. Bill 1 goes a long way to laying this foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate surrounding these topics as well as the many other discussions that will take place in this House. It is a privilege and an honour to be here as the humble servant for the constituents of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I thank you and my colleagues for this opportunity to speak tonight.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd move that the House stand adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 9:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 8, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 05/03/08
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I have a set of introductions today. The first is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very special guests seated in the public gallery today. Richard Crier, Anne Locke, and Craig Auger work diligently to raise awareness of aboriginal issues in our province. Richard is from the Samson band in Hobbema. He grew up in an environment of drugs and alcohol, but he has turned his life around and is studying at CDI College to become a computer technician. Anne Locke grew up in foster care. She works hard to spread awareness about specific issues affecting young aboriginals and now works for the Edmonton public school board. Craig Auger uses the power of drumming to increase awareness of aboriginal issues. In fact, last Thursday some of you here may have seen him outside the Legislature Building demonstrating traditional native drumming. That's when I first met him. I'd ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My other introduction is of a visiting school group, one of the very best and brightest classes not only in Edmonton-Riverview but possibly the entire world. Now, they're from St. Martin Catholic school, and they are students registered in the Ukrainian bilingual program. They're seated in the public gallery, and they're accompanied by their teacher, Natalie Harasymiw. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this House two distinguished gentlemen sitting in the members' gallery. The first gentleman requires very little introduction to Albertans, and that is Mr. Harley Johnson, who is the Métis settlements ombudsman. Seated next to him is, of course, the Métis settlements adviser to the ombudsman and an investigator, Mr. Chuck McBurney, who is also a constituent of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege today to rise and introduce the Bethal Recycled Teens, a very important group individually and collectively that is represented here today. There are 27 in the audience. I believe they are sitting in the members' gallery, and they are here with their leader, Phylliss Stein. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to introduce to you and through you guests from Edmonton-Mill Woods. We have two grade 6 classes with 45 students from Mary Hanley school along with teachers Steven Bain, Melanie Mazurek, Kim Schellenberg, and parent volunteer Mrs. Colleen Sommerfeld. I'd like to ask these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the introduction sheet, but I understand that a group from NorQuest is joining us today, so through you and to all members of the Assembly I'd like to introduce a class joining us from NorQuest College. Their instructor, Allan Carlson, has been very good about bringing groups down here, and I'm going to visit this particular group later in April, I think. I'd ask them, if they're in the Assembly, to please rise. There they are, a very inquisitive group and committed to citizenship. I'd ask you all to please welcome them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly two people sitting in the gallery. They are Mr. Bill Irons and Mrs. Eileen Irons. They are my best friends. I request them to please rise and receive the welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First, I am more than happy to stand and introduce to you and through you on the occasion of International Women's Day four women who are very important to me: my wife of 13 years, Somboon Eggen, whose love and support means everything to me; as well, I would literally not be here if not for my next guest, my mother, Marion Eggen, who has always gone above and beyond the call of duty to assist me in all of my endeavours.

An Hon. Member: She had to.

Mr. Eggen: She had to, yeah.

And, finally, Louise Barr, a tireless volunteer and supporter and my auntie; also, a woman who keeps me all together in my constituency office, my constituency manager, Arlene Chapman. If those ladies could please rise.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, as you know, every member in this Chamber is here because of a very hard-working and dedicated team of volunteers and supporters, who have worked tirelessly to get us to where we are today. My case is no different, and I am very honoured that a group of people I would like to call my secret of success is able to join me here this afternoon. Without the work of these people I wouldn't have the privilege of sitting in this Assembly here today. I would like to call each of their names, and they can rise together and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Mr. Ron and Mary Deeprise; Lance Burns; Gilbert Charest; Sylvia Krogh; Denise Alston; Brent Bartlett with his wife, Paula, his sons Nicholas and Lucas, and his daughter Abigail; Tom Bremner; and Christine Bremner. Please give them the traditional greeting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a good friend and colleague from the Alberta Alliance Party. Marilyn Burns is a communications vice-president on the provincial council of the Alberta Alliance Party, where her work and dedication has been a great asset. She is indeed a pillar in the party. I'd like to ask our honoured guest, Marilyn Burns, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Calder mentioned that today is International Women's Day, and I have the pleasure of introducing a very powerful and influential woman seated in the public gallery. She is a friend and a neighbour and also happens to be the driving force behind our Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Her name is Rita Agnihotri. I'd like the Assembly to give her the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we call Orders of the Day this afternoon, I will provide a ruling to the House with respect to the question period and the rotation.

First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The use of taxpayer-funded aircraft by this government is scandalous. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why a paid lobbyist for a new rail link to Fort McMurray, Rod Love, was given exclusive use of a government aircraft to fly from Edmonton to Calgary last year just a week before the Premier floated the idea of that rail link publicly?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. But I'm sure that the Auditor General will be reviewing all aspects of the use of government aircraft by all people, including those from outside government, so I'll await the findings of the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Could the Premier explain why Mr. Love was on a government aircraft to Fort McMurray March 29, 2004, the same day a press conference was held to announce that the province was granting over a million dollars to Mr. Love's client to study the feasibility of a rail link to Fort McMurray?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no, I can't. I have no knowledge of that particular incident.

An Hon. Member: You should.

Mr. Klein: Across the way someone shouted, "You should." Well, Mr. Speaker, I have responsibility for virtually all of these portfolios and all of the duties of the MLAs, and this is – I don't know – a $23 billion or $24 billion or $25 billion operation. I can't devote my attention to who might be or might not be on an airplane on a particular day.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier undertake to inform the Assembly how much of that taxpayer grant was paid by the railway lobby group to Mr. Love for his lobbying work?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea, Mr. Speaker, nor is it any of my business. How much a private-sector operation pays a consultant is entirely up to them.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Investments in Tobacco Companies

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the same time the government has been talking wellness and tobacco reduction, it has been taking millions of taxpayer dollars and investing in tobacco companies. According to the most recent listing available for the heritage fund, the Alberta government has invested over $10 million in some of the world's largest tobacco companies, including Imperial Tobacco, R.J. Reynolds, and Philip Morris. Once again this government says one thing but does something else. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the government been investing millions into getting Albertans hooked on smoking?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the inappropriate preamble, it is the duty and the function of the heritage savings trust fund and all officials associated with that fund to maximize the investments.

I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is exactly that. There is a separate investment division. I think it's their responsibility – and I think everyone in this House would agree – to invest those dollars in the heritage fund in manners that bring the greatest return to this province. The minister doesn't generally interfere in that, and in fact I don't think you would approve if we did. As I say, we have a qualified group of investors. I think their track record shows that they do an excellent job of investing that fund, and the returns to the people of this province have been enormous.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the Premier: given that the Liberal members on the heritage savings trust fund asked and were told by the then minister that ethical investing was not possible because it would increase the risk, which risk is this government more concerned with, the risk to investment or the risk to Albertans' health?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're cognizant of the need for some kind of antismoking legislation, and indeed that will be introduced. But to relate that somehow to use of the heritage savings trust fund is somewhat confounding.

Mr. Speaker, now I forgot what – she said something.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the government now do the right thing and pull all taxpayer dollars out of investing in tobacco companies?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, heritage savings trust fund dollars are accumulated mostly from oil and gas revenues.

But I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we've entrusted a group of very knowledgeable and very talented people to manage the investments of the heritage fund. I'm not sure that this House or the people of this province would want us to be micromanaging each and every one of those investments. I'm not sure that that would be the best way to ensure that we get the maximum benefit from those dollars in the fund that are invested.

There is a committee of this Legislature that certainly talks to people around this province on their various trips, talking about the heritage fund. To the best of my knowledge – and I review most of the information that comes back from that – this particular incident has never been raised by the public. I think, Mr. Speaker, there's some scrambling there.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Market Surveillance Administrator Review of Enron

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government can no longer ignore the mounting evidence that Enron colluded with Powerex to drive up electricity prices in Alberta. Enron traders joke on tape of going to jail for price-fixing and making Alberta's power market, quote, a gong show. Well, electricity deregulation has certainly been a gong show, and this government is fully responsible. My first question is to the Premier. Why did the government allow Enron to start and then continue to price gouge Alberta electricity consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this is the subject of an ongoing investigation. The market surveillance administrator has uncovered new information relative to Enron that was not previously available and has asked the federal Competition Bureau to reopen the Enron investigation. I would suggest that all members of this Assembly await the outcome of that investigation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. The investigation is not sufficient. How many times did the government meet Enron officials regarding the planning of electricity deregulation? How many times did you meet with Enron?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a very argumentative statement. I would suggest that he direct that statement to the market surveillance administrator or to the federal Competition Bureau and tell them that their investigation into this matter is not sufficient.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that Enron officials stated in the year 2000, quote, to date the government has been amending documents and rules fairly freely, end of quote, how many documents and how many rules did this government amend on Enron's behalf so they could rip off Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we are all concerned about this new information that has come to light, and if the hon. member has any further information, I would invite him to provide it to the market surveillance administrator or the Competition Bureau. The Minister of Energy assures me that the market surveillance administrator has been diligent in his job as a watchdog on behalf of all Alberta consumers, and as I said he has uncovered new information. That information has been passed on to the federal Competition Bureau with a request to reopen the investigation, and I would ask that he await the outcome of that investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On May 28, 2004, the provincial government made the following promise to Alberta municipalities: "On April 1, 2005, municipalities will no longer fund ground ambulance services and will be able to allocate funds currently dedicated to this service to other municipal priorities." The Conservatives even put this promise in writing. My question is to the Premier. Will this promise, made to Alberta municipalities in May of 2004 on ground ambulance service funding, be just another broken promise of this government?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's not a broken promise. Basically, the scope of the program changed dramatically, went from $55 million to $128 million. We will be proceeding with two discovery projects, one in Palliser and the other in the Peace country. But I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, today we have provided for the municipalities of Alberta funding in the amount of $55 million to assure, had any of them perceived that they would be vastly inconvenienced by this continued review of the transfer, that they would not be caught short by that. Over and above that we will be providing the two pilots, or discovery projects, as a separate funding chapter. So in total in this coming year the support for ground ambulance in Alberta will be at least $65 million from this provincial government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that all evidence is that $65 million will be significantly inadequate, when will the government be able to tell this House the full cost of transferring ambulance services to the provincial government?

Mr. Klein: That is an interesting question. Mr. Speaker, it was determined through extensive study by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer that $55 million would be adequate. That figure was audited, as I understand it, and it was deemed to be sufficient. So how that ballooned to $128 million is somewhat of a mystery, understanding the simplicity of the program and how it was to be undertaken in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister has pointed out, she is doing all she can to remedy the situation as it affects those municipalities that took some steps on the assumption that ambulance services were to be transferred to the regional health authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is not a trained administrator and not responsible for developing programs, why did the Premier take his word for it instead of asking for a proper administrative analysis of this situation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, both members had sufficient support from very talented and very educated and very skilled members of the public service, and it was those people who really compiled much of the information and made detailed examinations of the information to make sure that it was correct.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Lynnview Ridge

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that environmental protection is very important and the fact that the pollution cleanup in Lynnview Ridge residential area in the Calgary-Fort constituency has been disputed and delayed for over three years, my question is to the Minister of Environment. Could the minister explain what caused this delay and how it happened?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A few years ago environment protection issued environmental orders. In actual fact, at that time there were many stakeholders that had been party to this important initiative because the protection of our environment and the residents is first and foremost from an environmental ministry's perspective. I can assure the hon. member, though, that as we go forward, there is a mediation process that is taking place as we speak with the multitude of stakeholders in order to arrive at the desired resolution to this important initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the same minister. What measures are taken to ensure that a government environmental cleanup order is carried out when it is issued?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, through our environmental enforcement orders I can assure all members of this House that the mediation is carrying on. Having said that, I want to assure all Albertans that the protection of the environment and the residents pertaining to this issue with all the stakeholders will clearly be covered on this initiative through mediation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. To me it's a matter of wealth and health of my constituents, so when can my constituents in the affected area expect to see some cleanup action?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, if the mediation goes as we anticipate, it is my hope and, shall I say, direction that by the end of this summer the mediation will be carried out and, furthermore, that, again, the environment protection and the residents' safety will be first and foremost towards this important initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

School Utilization

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School closures threaten the viability and survival of communities as small as Bruderheim to the established communities within Edmonton and Calgary. Meanwhile, the public education stakeholders have for years pointed to serious flaws in the school utilization formulas there. My question is to the minister of infrastructure. Will the minister finally commit to changing the utilization formula to protect such public schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when the utilization formula was put in, it was put in for a distinct reason. We had a lot of schools that were at the 15 to 20 to 40 per cent utilization. I do believe it is time to evolve this formula, and we are currently looking at different and varied ways that we can evolve it. Hopefully these announcements will be made soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister commit to adopting a community-based utilization formula for urban schools, as has been recommended for rural schools in the government's rural development strategy?

Dr. Oberg: No, Mr. Speaker, because I feel we can get a better formula than that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why has the minister not followed the recommendation of the Learning Commission and moved capital funding for schools back under the education ministry, where it belongs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because that was one recommendation that was turned down by the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a very related topic, the Edmonton public school board right now is conducting what they refer to as a cluster study, which I am led to believe might result in the closure of some schools. Can the minister explain to us why it is that school boards undertake such studies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I understand is happening in northeast Edmonton is that the Edmonton public school board is looking at three schools that are relatively close to each other that have occupancies anywhere from one-third to two-thirds full.

What they are looking at doing is taking the whole class, the teacher and everything, and moving them to one of the three schools and potentially two of the three schools. They've anticipated that by doing this, there would be a cost saving of about $200,000 per year.

So they're taking a look at it. My understanding is that it's going to the Edmonton public school board meeting tonight, and that they will either make decisions on it or they will table it for further discussion, Mr. Speaker.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the anticipated changes in the utilization formula and the results of such cluster studies result in an enhanced ability of school boards to build schools in city sprawl areas such as Castle Downs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there is an excess of space right around Alberta. If we were to take a complete picture of the amount of school space, there are roughly 100 extra schools. Combine this with a school population that is actually decreasing as opposed to increasing, and we're in a very difficult situation. Compounding this is the fact that the schools are simply not in the right place.

So I do feel that by changes to the formula it will enhance the schools to be put in the right place. It will allow local decision-making by the public school boards, and I think that it will be something that is greeted very positively. Mr. Speaker, I really must stress, though, that we still are working on this formula. I think it's going to be a good formula, but we're currently in the consultative phases with the school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Daycare System

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The national daycare program being established by the federal government is meant to help all children. This government first refused to sign any deal and then was not able to work with other provinces to establish an agreement. To the Minister of Children's Services: why is the minister continuing to hold up an arrangement that will give money to parents that require care for their children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do appreciate the question. I think it's important for the hon. member to understand that when we were at the negotiating tables, at the federal/provincial table, it was important for me as the minister responsible to do what's right for Alberta and to do what's right for Alberta parents, and that is to give the Alberta parents choice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister supports development in the for-profit sector, what plan does the ministry have to avoid abuses of government grants by private companies, like in Australia, where a company can make a profit of $100,000 per year per daycare?

The Speaker: Well, this is not Australia, hon. minister, but . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should understand that what Alberta supports is parents' choice. Whether it's for-profit, whether it's nonprofit, whether it's kin care, or whether it's day home, that's what we believe in. We do not have any big Australian daycare or what Minister Dryden refers to as Wal-Mart for-profit daycares. What we do have here are small mom-and-pop daycares. Again, I think it's important for the hon. member to understand that it's about choice, and it's about what's in the best interest of the child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has not increased daycare subsidies since 2001, what is the plan to aid parents in affording quality daycare if this government cannot come to an agreement with the federal government?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact we did get other provinces onside at the federal/provincial/territorial meeting because they listened to what Alberta had to say. They listened to what was important to Albertans, that it was in the best interest of the child.

I will let the hon. member know that we're cautiously optimistic about closing the deal with the federal minister – again, it's about choice – and then, when we get the money from the federal government, we can make those decisions about raising the subsidy, giving stay-home parents tax incentives. All of those are important. We will continue negotiating the best interests of the parents who live in this province and the best interest of their children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Foreign Workers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a lot of attention recently on the hiring of foreign workers in some of our large industries and in some construction. In Red Deer we have one very successful food processing plant that is hiring a number of temporary employees from central America, and some of my constituents are concerned about hiring people from other countries. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Are there not enough people here in Alberta and Canada to fill these jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. Thanks to a good government we are blessed here in Alberta with thousands of jobs, and no doubt most jurisdictions in North America would love to have the challenges that we have.

Of course, when it comes to jobs, priority will always be given to qualified Albertans and Canadians first, Mr. Speaker. In addition to that, groups underrepresented in our labour force – aboriginal people, people with developmental disabilities – and other low-income Albertans will also be given the opportunities.

In relation to the foreign worker, Mr. Speaker, employers first of all have to exhaust all avenues in relation to getting local employees in place, and if they can't do that, then they have to apply to the federal government's temporary foreign workers' program. It's a challenging and complicated process and can be costly to the employer, so I'm sure and I have confidence in the employers in Alberta that every opportunity will be given first to Albertans and Canadians, aboriginal people, and people with disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is your department doing to develop a skill base of Albertans in order to meet the demand for skilled labour?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, Alberta shines in this area because I believe Alberta trains 25 per cent of all the apprentices in Canada, and that's commendable. The apprenticeship and training industry is vital to Alberta's future economic success in relation to resolving the labour skills shortage. My department alone processes and funds over 4,600 apprentices to go through the program annually. We also spent another $280 million in that program, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question is to the Minister of Economic Development. How many foreign workers have come to Alberta under the provincial nominee program? Do they need English language skills? Does this program displace Alberta workers?

Mr. Dunford: The last part of her question talked about displacing Alberta workers. This can't happen under the program because, as the Minister of Human Resources and Employment had already indicated, any of these kinds of programs are only after the skills that are required are exhausted amongst Albertans and, in fact, Canadians. I would remind the House and you, Mr. Speaker, that Economic Development, Human Resources and Employment, and Advanced Education some time ago released the report called Prepared for Growth, and we talked about the fact that it would be Alberta first, then Canada, then offshore.

But we are going to have to go offshore. People that were listening to the answer previously of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation heard about the decline in numbers of school children, and so when we look ahead and we look at the demographics of what's happening in Alberta, we simply are not going to be able to fill the demand that we are going to be faced with in the future. So we have to work with the federal government. We have to work on the issue of English. Perhaps the standards are too high. We need people. Like the 1920s, Mr. Speaker, we need a full-front initiative in this province at some time to bring these people here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are paying the highest auto insurance premiums in this province's history while insurance companies rake in record profits. Meanwhile, the Minister of Finance has been sitting on the Automobile Insurance Rate Board report. To the minister: why won't the minister disclose the Automobile Insurance Rate Board report immediately?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will bring a recommendation forward very soon, but I think if the hon. member is following this – and I'm sure he is – he would understand that the last of the filings of the companies is just in the process of occurring. What we had was preliminary information, what I had from the Automobile Insurance Rate Board after I wrote to them and said: in view of anticipated high returns, would you please look at this and provide me with a recommendation? The hon. member probably knows that they would do that review in October. What I had asked them to do was to bring that review forward. I have met with the insurance company group. I have asked them their intentions and asked them to come back with what their intentions are in the very short term.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, then: given that the minister will not release the report today, will the minister provide instant relief to Alberta drivers by at the very least eliminating the 3 per cent hidden sales tax on auto insurance?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, it's not hidden, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there's a 3 per cent tax. It's been there for years and years, and if we did eliminate it, there's no assurance that that savings would go, in fact, to the people who insure their vehicles. There is no tie there. I think what we should concentrate on is exactly what this government has concentrated on, and that is to ensure that people who have to insure their vehicles under PL and PD, which is compulsory insurance in this province, have a reasonable way to do that. This government has done that.

Albertans enjoy some of the lowest insurance rates in the country. I've heard a lot of call for public insurance by the people across the way, and I'm not sure if they want British Columbia insurance here or whether they want some other public insurance. My understanding is that B.C. insurance – public insurance – is in fact much higher. Saskatchewan is lower.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister won't release the report. She won't eliminate the hidden tax. Why doesn't she just do the right thing and institute a lower premium public auto insurance system?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, really the only people in this province that I've heard calling for public insurance are the Liberal Party and the NDs. The private sector is alive and well in this province. There are 72 companies that insure vehicles. Their agents are in every one of our communities. We want to make sure that people who must insure their vehicles to operate a vehicle in this province have opportunity for insurance that is reasonable and right. We approached it the right way: you drive, you have a good driving record, you have a lower insurance premium. You are a bad driver, you will have a higher insurance premium. We have removed the age and gender from it.

We've had less than a year, in fact about six months, to see these reforms work and, Mr. Speaker, they are working. One thing is that I have not refused to release what the auto rate board sent me. I have said that you must consider it in the fullness of all of the information. In this government we have a responsibility to act on full information, not partial, which is what this hon. member is asking me to do today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Government Air Travel

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reply to my questions yesterday, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation acknowledge that in addition to the government air fleets the government also does on occasion charter aircraft, including private jets. The minister then committed to making public information about the chartering of these aircraft, including flights on private jets. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Exactly who popped on these private jets that were chartered to travel across Canada, and how much did it cost the government of Alberta?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, under FOIP a lot of that information is private, but I certainly will undertake to get as much of the public information as possible to the hon. member. These records are public, and we will get them to him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. If chartering aircraft only takes place occasionally, will the minister then order his officials to compile the necessary information, including cost, frequency, who went where and when, and table it in this Assembly? The FOIP process is very expensive, and it's difficult too.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, consistent with the FOIP Act I'd be more than happy to do that.

Mr. Eggen: Given the minister's admission yesterday that the government has chartered private planes to fly across Canada on up to six different occasions, why didn't the Premier or government ministers use commercial instead of chartered jets?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, each and every time an airplane is chartered or an airplane is utilized, it's for different circumstances. I don't believe that you would want me to stand here and talk about each particular time on the six or seven occasions that were there, but I would certainly undertake to provide the information to the Legislative Assembly that I promised.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Affordable Housing in Fort McMurray

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The unprecedented growth in our provincial economy and the steady stream of new individuals and families coming to our province, not to mention the individuals living in other communities that commute, have led to a significant increase in the need for affordable housing and housing development in high-growth communities. This is especially true in Fort McMurray, where the population has grown almost 20 per cent since 2002 and the growth rate is forecast to be at approximately a hundred thousand in the next 10 to 15 years, the third largest city in Alberta, if I can mention. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What has this minister done to assist those people who cannot afford the market rate rents in high-growth communities such as Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member indicated, Fort McMurray is a vibrant community, and it is very fast growing. Along with that growth, of course, comes the need for housing, especially in the area of affordable housing.

In Fort McMurray the way that we have assisted is through the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program, which was established in 2002. It's an excellent program, where we as a provincial government match funding along with the federal government, and I'm pleased to let you know that $6.7 million has been allocated over the past two years to provide 310 units in Fort McMurray. But more importantly, along with that, Mr. Speaker, through the rent supplement and community housing program we've also provided assistance for another 365 houses.

So, yes, there is a problem in this area, Mr. Speaker, but we are working hard to address it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that the availability of serviced lots or land for development is in short supply, can the minister advise what her department has done to address this challenge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, in keeping with Fort McMurray, not only is it affordable housing that is necessary but also housing in general. What we are working toward, hon. member, is providing land as quickly as possible on the market. Last year we transferred 470 acres from the Social Housing Corporation, and we made that a direct sale to fast-track the development, which worked very, very well. Just two weeks ago we closed a tender on approximately another 400 acres in the area.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the goal – well, it's a philosophy that we've been discussing over the past three months while I've been in the ministry – is to make the land that is available in the Social Housing Corporation available very quickly in total, as a total package, to the community of Fort McMurray. I'm hoping that this will address the situation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Danyluk: With the challenge of the availability in affordable housing at this time my next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can the minister advise how he plans to address the influx and the increase of traffic on adjacent transportation routes from communities such as Edmonton, Lac La Biche, St. Paul, Athabasca, specifically highways 63 and 28?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly 63, 28 – you add in 881 – are all parts of our plan in order to help Fort McMurray. I'm currently in the process of sitting down with the oil industry, with the four or five major plants that are in the Fort McMurray region, to come up with a collaborative solution on how we can move forward not just on people transport but also on the transportation of goods and services as that's going to be critical considering that we have some $80 billion or $90 billion worth of projects that are in that particular area. We are going to be sitting down, and hopefully a solution will come forward on these.

In the meantime we are proceeding with paving 881, and we are proceeding with improvements on 63, but realistically, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, I would really like to see these improvements come along quicker than they are at the moment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

SuperNet

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been told for the third time that the completion of the SuperNet is imminent. The latest deadline is now for October 2005, more than a year after the initial deadline. My question is to the hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. If public/private partnerships genuinely transfer risks to the private sector, why has the government refused to use the provisions in the contract that would hold the private-sector partners accountable?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. As the hon. member mentioned, the SuperNet project completion is indeed overdue. I'm pleased to pass along, though, particularly to my rural colleagues, that more than 400 rural communities will be connected to SuperNet by the end of April. A vast majority of these facilities that we're talking about – government buildings, health care buildings, libraries, schools – will be connected to the SuperNet by the end of June, with the total network being completed by the end of September, giving us just one more reason to celebrate our centennial in style with the Alberta SuperNet advantage.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: given that public agencies have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars installing their own networks because they couldn't wait for the SuperNet, will the minister commit to reimbursing these groups for the cost of the upgrade?

Mr. Ouellette: No, Mr. Speaker, we won't.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister then: can you assure municipalities, school boards, and other public agencies that they will have the funding necessary to maintain access to the SuperNet?

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that they will have the funding available, and we're working on all of that right now.
Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Canadian Forest Products Ltd. Mill Closure

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Canfor in the MD of Clear Hills near Hines Creek has served notice that they will close their mill this summer and consolidate their operations in Grande Prairie. This will result in the loss of over a hundred jobs in some of my communities, increase log truck traffic on our highways and the Dunvegan bridge, loss of municipal tax revenue, and again the movement of our raw resources to the south. Furthermore, this decision will no doubt affect other mills in the area that have had joint agreements with the Hines Creek Canadian Forest Products Ltd. mill. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the minister doing to minimize the impact of this pending closure on all those affected, including the possibility of probably retaining some of this timber in our local community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Coming from a small community myself, this is a very grave concern and something that I had empathy for when we visited that community. It is important to note that this was not a government decision but a company decision, and it was strictly based on business. To remain competitive in the global marketplace, companies today are finding that they have to make decisions to consolidate their mills and to find efficiencies.

When I first learned about this closure, at the request of the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace we made the attempt to go up and meet with the four affected communities. I have to say that I appreciated their concerns, and we listened to them express their concern about transportation and safety, questions about jobs and the viability of their community, schools, and residents, and concerns about their future in terms of economic development.

I've spoken with my colleagues from Economic Development and Infrastructure and, as well, Human Resources and Employment about the future of these communities, and I know Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development have talked to them as well. We'll continue to work with the company to look for employment opportunities as they have promised. As well, timber allocations for the future are being reviewed by our department for the future of that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that a potential of 10,000 truckloads will travel on highway 2 and over the Dunvegan bridge crossing the Peace, what is being done to assure the safety of all drivers using this road and bridge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Dunvegan bridge poses a considerable problem when it comes to logging trucks coming down the hill. What is occurring right now is there is a significant turn just prior to the bridge, and the logging trucks are going to have a difficult time manoeuvring that turn. When you add into the facts some of the road maintenance issues that we have experienced on the Dunvegan bridge, we really have to take a very serious look at how we can alter the route onto that bridge. Through you to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, we are currently looking at and studying that, and we will very soon be coming up with a solution to how we can help these logging trucks on the Dunvegan bridge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is his ministry doing to minimize the negative economic impact this decision has in my constituency, including the impact on many small businesses that benefit from the spinoff economy?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, we have one of our regional economic development alliances in place in the Peace region, and we also have an office in Grande Prairie. With the staff and the people that are involved in the alliance, we've been trying to deal with this matter in the same way which we do in other communities, and that's to start looking at then: what other economic development opportunities will there be? We look into things like tourism. We look into value-adding in terms of the industries that might be up there. But again, hon. member, within the context of economic development where we're catalysts and not bankers, we'll continue to do our work, providing the kind of information, working with the people in the area to try to get the stimulation that they're going to need moving on into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that discussions have resumed regarding a potential negotiated solution to the current Canada/United States lumber dispute. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can he kindly update this House on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Canada has been developing an outline of a potential agreement in consultation with provincial governments and industry in hope of presenting to the United States some form of a beginning of a consultation and try and deal with this ongoing softwood lumber issue for years. In developing the proposal from the province of Alberta, it is the responsibility of the minister of sustainable resources to contact industry and build that recommendation, which then we will forward to other provincial governments and to the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who is responsible for forest management in this province. Can the minister advise the House what the current status of discussions with other provinces and the industry is now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in this House last week, we will work effectively and diligently with the provinces of Canada and the federal government and consult regularly to discuss how we can move forward with this very sensitive softwood lumber issue. Through these discussions we are committed with the federal government to a pan-Canadian approach, and we're working to develop the agreement for that pan-Canadian approach. We think that there's some good common ground so that we can restart these negotiations.

As I also committed to last week, we will continue to work with our industry, with our Softwood Lumber Trade Council, and our close colleagues at International and Intergovernmental Relations to make sure that we come through to a successful conclusion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. There's been much talk and much concern over the potential impacts of the interim Métis harvesting agreement on the sustainability of our wildlife resources. Can the minister inform this House as to the instruments we have available to ensure hunting sustainability in the province of Alberta while respecting aboriginal rights?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, our role, as with all hunting, all trapping, and all fishing, is to ensure that there's proper monitoring, proper enforcement, and proper management of the resources. We already have in place in Alberta a process to register species that are of management concern and of management concern to all Albertans. These registries enable us to monitor the harvest that is occurring and make decisions about that harvest and how it affects the resource that is being hunted. Where necessary we can and we do establish closures for conservation purposes, and it's important that we recognize that we do this now in our key wildlife corridors.

The agreement that the hon. member is talking about respects closures. It also imposes limits for conservation purposes, and that's the key of the entire agreement. As with all hunting and fishing laws and regulations, Mr. Speaker, if there is a violation, we are committed to the enforcement practices that have been put together in this province to protect all resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Further to the same minister: could he specifically address the issue of fisheries and what the province can do to ensure the sustainability of sport fishing in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we have many management methods to ensure that sport fishing is sustainable, again, for all Albertans. We know that sport fishing is affected by domestic fishing, and where there are conservation concerns, we have to close lakes when appropriate. The agreement respects these closures. We require all domestic fishing activity, including Métis fishing, to be licensed so that we know where this is taking place and we can manage the lakes effectively. This is part of our monitoring responsibility, and we will continue to do that under this agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister. A supplemental to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: can the minister inform the House as to whether or not the Métis community is supportive of conservation measures, and will such measures guide future negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say at the outset that the agreements balance the need to respect Métis rights but also ensure that we protect Alberta's precious wildlife resource. On the issue of the Métis, Alberta's Métis community has been very supportive and continues to be very supportive of any measures regarding conservation and safety. On that note, as a matter of fact, the Métis waited a full year before they began to harvest anything, and we wanted to make sure that we had the structures in place in order for us to address those very concerns that they had. They wanted to ensure that they knew who could hunt, where they could hunt, and when they could hunt, and it was with that in mind that we brought it forward.

In terms of the interim agreement, Mr. Speaker, what we want to do is monitor what goes on to be able to take into consideration all the issues that will come forward, and then we can go towards the finalization of the final agreement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you very much for your co-operation today. All 16 members who advised the chair that they wanted to raise a question were able to raise a question. So in the last three days it's been 14, 17, 16, which is very good.

head:

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Statements

The Speaker: I indicated several days ago that before the end of today I would provide the ruling with respect to the operation of question period for the 26th Legislature, and I'm prepared to do that now.

The chair wants to thank all honourable members who participated in the discussion Monday afternoon about what should be the proper rotation of questions for Oral Question Period. As most members noted in their submissions, question period is of fundamental importance to our parliamentary system of government. The chair recognizes the gravity of this matter and has carefully weighed the various submissions against the history and traditions of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

In those submissions some members encouraged the chair to apply the rules that existed for the 21st Legislature, which commenced in 1986. As the chair noted yesterday at page 58 of Hansard, there were many differences in 1986 with respect to the operation of question period. At that time a person asking a question was entitled to three supplementaries, and then anyone could ask another supplementary. So there were four supplementaries to every question, and one of those rotated among the parties. That practice ended in 1989, and the chair has no intention of reviving it.

There were arguments advanced about moving the New Democrats up in the order of questions. The chair would note that while the New Democrats have doubled the size of their caucus, they are still one-quarter the size of the Official Opposition. After the 2001 election they had two members to the Official Opposition's seven members, which was a little more than a quarter, but retained the fourth position in the question period.

The Official Opposition has had the first three questions since the 1993 election, when they had 32 seats. Of course, there was no other opposition party until 1997, when the New Democrats elected two members. They had the fourth question then, as they did in 2001.

In their presentations members referred to practices in other jurisdictions across Canada. While this chair has always welcomed advice on procedures in other jurisdictions, it is fair to say that after 99 years of being a province, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has developed its own practices and traditions, which we can draw upon. As the chair has noted, the practice across Canada with respect to question periods varies widely, with the length running from 15 minutes to one hour.

In the final analysis, the chair sees little reason to depart substantially from the rotation that applied for the previous Legislature and the Legislature before that. For this Legislature, like in the 25th Legislature, the Official Opposition will be entitled to ask the first three main questions. The New Democrat opposition will be entitled to the fourth question each day. On three out of four days a member of the government caucus will be entitled to the fifth question. On those days the Official Opposition will be entitled to the sixth, eighth, and 10th questions, and private members of the government caucus will be recognized for the seventh and the ninth questions. The New Democrat opposition will be entitled to the 11th question every day. A member from the government caucus will have the 12th and the 14th questions. The Official Opposition will have the 13th question.

The chair was gratified that those participating in yesterday's discussion generally endorsed the 45-second rule for questions and answers that the chair put forward on Thursday, March 3. The chair believes that this time limit will result in more questions in the question period. Members reviewing the chair's ruling of April 11, 2001, will note that in the last Legislature government members were entitled to the 14th and subsequent questions every day. In light of the 45-second guideline it is entirely conceivable that there may be more questions asked each day than in the previous Legislature.

In recognition of the greater number of seats held by the Official Opposition, they will be entitled to the 15th and 17th questions on three out of four days. The government will be entitled to the 16th question. In recognition of the increase in seats by the New Democrats, a member of that caucus will be entitled to the 18th question.

The chair indicated that this is the rotation that would apply on three out of four days. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who is the sole representative of the Alliance Party in this Assembly, must be entitled to ask questions in this Assembly. While he is one of 58 private members, allotting the 58th question to him would seem to invite logistics problems. For instance, should the member displace the Leader of the Official Opposition if his turn corresponded with the first question on a given day? While the chair takes very seriously the role of protecting the interests of the minority, he also wants to ensure the orderly progression of the business of the Assembly. Accordingly, the chair finds that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner will be entitled to the fifth question of the day every four days.

On those days the sixth, eighth, and 10th questions will go to government members, the Official Opposition will be entitled to the seventh and the ninth questions, the New Democrat opposition will have the 11th question, the Official Opposition will have the 12th, 14th, and 16th questions, government members will have the 13th, 15th, and 17th questions, and the New Democrat opposition will have the 18th question.

Hon. members, this rotation means that on most days, assuming 17 questions, the Official Opposition would have nine questions, government members six, and the New Democrats two. Every fourth day the Official Opposition would have eight questions, government members six, New Democrats two, and the Alliance member one. If there were 15 questions asked a day, on most days the Official Opposition would have eight, government members five, and New Democrats two. On the fourth day the Official Opposition would have seven questions, government members five, the New Democrats two, and the Alliance member one. If there were only 13 questions asked a day, then most days the Official Opposition would have seven, government members four, and the New Democrats two. On the fourth day Official Opposition members would have one fewer question, and the Alliance member one.

In approximate percentage terms, whether there were 13, 15, or 17 questions asked a day for a week, the Official Opposition would have just over 50 per cent of the questions, government members between 30 and 35 per cent, New Democrats between 12 and 15 per cent, and the Alliance member between 1.5 and 2 per cent.

The chair has, as members know, made sure that copious statistics were kept on the time allocated to the different parties within the Assembly. Based on the time spent on questions and answers in the four sessions of the 25th Legislature, with a similar rotation, the Official Opposition's questions and responses accounted for between 48.4 and 53.7 per cent of the time spent. Government members' questions accounted for between 28 and 34 per cent, and the New Democrats, between approximately 17 and 18 per cent.

The chair has been advised that there may be an agreement between the House leaders about replacing the items of business

Members' Statements and Recognitions with an item called statements. However, until the appropriate changes are made to the Standing Orders, the chair will apply the rules that exist for Members' Statements and Recognitions. Based on the standings in the Assembly, for Recognitions over a four-week period government members would be entitled to 35, the Official Opposition 16, the New Democrats four, and the Alliance member one. To remind members, seven members may make a one-minute statement of recognition or congratulation every Monday and Wednesday.

With respect to Members' Statements, over a seven-week period government members will have 35, the Official Opposition 16, the New Democrats four, and the Alliance member one. Members' statements are two minutes in length, and there are four such statements every Tuesday and Thursday.

So starting tomorrow, Wednesday, March 9, 2005, the members of the government caucus will be entitled to four recognitions, the Official Opposition two, and the New Democrats one. Rather than take any more time, the chair will ask the Clerk's office to contact the caucuses with respect to who will be entitled to how many members' statements and recognitions on any given day in the future.

In conclusion, the chair wishes to emphasize that the general rules for question period noted last Thursday will continue; namely, a short preamble to main questions and no preamble to supplementary questions. The practice of providing a list to the Speaker's office of members who wish to ask questions will continue. Of course, should circumstances change, the chair will revisit this allocation of questions. This ruling will take effect Wednesday, March 9, 2005. March 9 will be day 1 for the implementation of this ruling.

Thank you very much.

Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four members to participate, but in the interim might we revert to Introduction of Visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

World Schools Debating Championship

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to talk about the World Schools Debating Championship that was held in Calgary from February 9 to the 18th. The brightest of high school students from 31 countries around the world debated for the world championship. Calgary's students acted as ambassadors, timekeepers, and hosts. In addition to debating, the international teams travelled to Banff, skied and snowboarded at the Canada Olympic Park, attended a Calgary Hitmen hockey game, and spent a day debating at the Siksika and Tsuu T'ina nations. The grand finale was held at the Hyatt Hotel, downtown Calgary.

I want to recognize the organizing committee members: Ron Lee, David Tupper, Norman Leach, Ken Goosen, and Brad Copas. They did a fantastic job four years ago to successfully bid for the prestigious world event, bringing it to Calgary as part of Alberta's centennial celebration.

I was very pleased to support this event since the beginning and to join the members for Calgary-Lougheed and Calgary-North Hill at the closing ceremony. I also want to thank the Minister of Education and the Minister of Gaming for some matching funds for the event.

The first World Schools Debating Championship was held in Australia in 1988. At that first-ever event Canada's team won the championship and was named the best in the world. The Canadian team was made up entirely of Albertan students. Since that premiere year the competition has grown to over 50 participant countries. Canada has been frequently represented in the top eight finalists, and, notably, Albertan students have been in the national team ever since 1988.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Deaths of RCMP Officers

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The national tragedy which took the lives of four young RCMP constables last week has left Albertans and, indeed, the entire country shocked and appalled. This incident brings the number of police officers slain in our province to 88.

These men were members of families who loved them and communities who respected them. They were members of a brotherhood of firefighters, paramedics, and police officers who depend on each other and trust each other with their lives every day. The families of these officers, the communities who knew them, and the brotherhood to which they belonged are now in a period of deep mourning. I would ask that all Albertans and all Canadians respect the grieving process that is necessary for those left behind.

Mr. Speaker, there are some who are attempting to make this a political issue, and to them I ask this: please honour the memory of these four constables by giving those who knew and loved them the time needed to heal. There's been a fatality inquiry called, and this process will bring out the details surrounding this senseless loss of life. There's no need to aggravate the situation during this initial period of mourning.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank the Solicitor General for the kindness, the understanding, and the compassion he has shown to the communities in which I live. His thoughtfulness and words of strength have helped us through this difficult time. In closing, I remind all members that the government has set up books of condolence in the rotunda. I invite all of my colleagues to show their support for the families at this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

International Women's Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Women's Day, a day to celebrate women's achievements and, for those of us that are activist, to continue to advocate for needed change.

The Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women recently issued a resolution to declare the next decade, 2005 to 2015, a decade of difference for aboriginal women in Canada. Mr. Speaker, aboriginal women were the last group to receive the franchise to vote, and they continue to struggle mightily to be safe, healthy, and to have their voices heard. These women face intolerable levels of violence, and addictions, chronic health problems like diabetes, and bone-crushing poverty also impair their ability to share equally in the life of this province. The institute's resolution asks for a coordinated, dedicated community approach to bringing about positive change.

The issue of violence against women continues to hold many other women back from full participation. We need to provide full, predictable, long-term funding for women's shelters. Please fund enough for shelter staff to be paid at fair market value and to have their salaries indexed as MLA salaries are. More concrete support for traditional housing is also a must.

Finally, I continue to press the government to find a way to fully fund the operations of sexual assault centres in Alberta. Not the piecemeal, project-by-project, narrowly focused method used to date but actually fund the operations of these centres, please.

On this International Women's Day who will step up to the plate in defence of women? Political will and a champion are needed on the government side. Please step forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

International Women's Day

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise today to recognize International Women's Day as we celebrate and recognize the many achievements of women in Alberta and around the world.

This year's Canadian theme is You are Here: Women, Canada and the World. It encourages Canadians to recognize women's accomplishments and to consider the road ahead. International Women's Day is a celebration of Alberta and Canada's women. Combined with our centennial, these two events give Albertans a special opportunity to recognize the women in their lives and the contributions they make to our province and to Canada.

Women in Alberta have made great strides towards different things. They can be proud of their accomplishments in the past hundred years. Women's educational levels have vastly increased, and they've found many successes in nontraditional careers.

Mr. Speaker, for just a moment I'd like to speak about a special woman in my life that had what I'll call a traditional career: my mother. She didn't have national standards or rules to help teach her how to teach her children or any formal training. But she loved us, and she taught us to be honest, to work hard, and to help those around us, and I value the input that she had in my life.

Since 1977, when the United Nations established March 8 as International Women's Day, we have dedicated this day to address the advancement of women's issues and to assess the challenges facing women and to consider future steps to enhance the status of women and to celebrate gains made.

I ask all Albertans to join the Minister of Community Development and myself in acknowledging the achievement of women in Alberta and around the globe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary estimates, I wish to advise that I provided the government's 2004-05 quarterly budget report for the third quarter to all MLAs on February 28. On this same day I also made this report public, as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2004-05 supplementary estimates. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and 20 departments of government. When an election is called, a special warrant can provide interim funding authority. The Assembly will be asked to approve the supplementary estimates and thus ratify this special warrant. When passed, these estimates will authorize increases of $1,944,494,000 in voted operating expense and equipment inventory purchases, $102,351,000 in voted capital investment, and $40 million in lottery fund payments.

Mr. Speaker, I am now tabling the quarterly budget report for the third quarter pursuant to section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. This amended fiscal plan is also required by section 8 of the Government Accountability Act when a second set of estimates is tabled.

I am also tabling the third-quarter activity report describing the major achievements of our government during that period.

Likewise, I am tabling the third-quarter update for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, would you like to move Motion 8?

8. Mrs. McClellan moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2004-05 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion.

The hon. Minister of Finance to conclude debate, or should we just call the question?

Mrs. McClellan: Question.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

9. Mrs. McClellan moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2004-05 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund shall be two days.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

head: 3:10 Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Stevens]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be given this opportunity to address this Assembly as the representative of the Edmonton-Calder constituency. Calder is a place where I have worked very hard during these past years, and I am both humbled and honoured to serve the people of Edmonton-Calder as a member of this Assembly.

Edmonton-Calder is a large urban constituency that straddles the northwest side of the city from 97th Street on the east all the way over to 232nd Street on the west. Calder is an important and historic constituency, with its communities forming part of the heartland of Edmonton north of the river. People in Edmonton-Calder work hard for their money and take a great deal of pride in their communities, people like Kevan and Una Warner, who have lead the charge to save their neighbourhood schools in Wellington and Athlone – and that motion is before the board of Edmonton public tonight – or Karen and Olga at the community drop-in centre, who devote hundreds of volunteer hours to make Calder one of the most vibrant and successful community centres in the province. I think of Bryan Stokes in Prince Rupert, who worked hard to keep the grounds of his apartment building looking good and his condo association firing on all cylinders.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Edmonton-Calder have sent me to this Chamber to look after their interests, to get the political machinery of this province back to working for them rather than the other way around. They have asked me to take action on their energy bills, their car insurance, their schools, and their medical care. They have asked me to make sure that those less fortunate are given the means to live in a dignified and healthy manner. The people of Edmonton-Calder and Alberta speak loud and clear that they do not want their physical environments to be compromised and that there must be reassurances that the lands, the air, the water, and the natural bounties of this province will be there for their children and for generations to come.

The critical portfolio areas for which I am responsible are grouped together for a very specific reason: to build new energy for this province on the strength of a balanced relationship with our environment. Energy is the economic and physical lifeblood of this province, and it will lead the way to change the way that we do things here in this province. This change can be a great economic stimulus for diversification and to build a more equitable society for all Albertans to enjoy.

I've heard someone say that to be born in Alberta was like winning the lottery. Well, maybe that's true for a fortunate few, but for many Albertans there are plenty of disturbing and difficult issues to resolve. The insistent, grinding poverty that thousands of Albertans must live under is no sweepstakes winner. The dark pit of indignation and hopelessness into which so many of our injured workers fall is no scratch-and-win prize. In this brave new Alberta we have created this past 30 years, children born into poverty are likely to stay right where they are: in poverty. More seniors than ever are likely to descend below the poverty line after they retire, and Alberta workers must work longer hours and with less purchasing power than they did back in the 1970s.

For certain, money that flows from oil and gas revenues and booming construction drives a remarkable economy in our province, but just where does all of that money flow to? How we look after the people who are most in need in our society is a measure of our strength as a people. Most Albertans are only one accident or a health problem, a series of unfortunate events, or a few missed paycheques away from themselves living, too, in poverty. We have the ways and means to eliminate poverty in Alberta, and there is no economic, logical, or moral excuse that should keep us from accomplishing this task.

In this new Alberta century people are looking for ways to get our natural advantages working for us, for all of us. We have a strong economy, the wealth of natural resources, the people, the money, and the space to build something remarkable, something to be proud of. What we are lacking, I believe, is a firm commitment to a set of guiding principles that can make these natural endowments work for us to make the best possible life for every single Albertan in this province now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest a list of guiding principles something like this. Number one, "higher education shall be equally accessible to all" on the basis of capacity by every appropriate means and, in particular, by the progressive introduction of free education. I took that quote from the UN charter of rights and freedoms. Postsecondary education is the way that people can get a leg up and improve themselves economically, intellectually, and spiritually. A good education makes everything better. Let's look past endowment plans and elitist models and make sure that everyone has a real chance to improve themselves through education.

Number two, the right to work at a job with humane conditions, with sufficient hours, pay, and benefits to earn a living; the right to enjoy some rest, leisure, and reasonable and periodic holidays with pay. We might pride ourselves here as the hardest working province in Confederation, but for many people that means that they are being worked to death. Now is the time that we can put into place labour laws that lay out reasonable parameters for work, pay, and benefits.

Number three, let's bring democracy back to the people of Alberta. People in this province used to vote a lot more than they do now because they believed that the system was working for them then. Now, as I have said before, it's more like the opposite is true. The disconnect between what people want and what people get out of government is wider and deeper than the deepest stretch of the Peace River Valley these days.

Proportional representation would help. Rules to limit campaign spending would be a good idea. Giving back the power to school boards and the right to elect health board authority trustees would be useful too. But more than this, people in Alberta will come back to vote and care about politics when the system starts to work for them again, when the provincial government starts charging decent oil and gas royalty rates and puts the money back into the hands of the people that it belongs to, when the government begins to fund public education and health care the way it should, when government starts to protect our health and the health of the natural environment on which we most vitally depend.

Everyone knows that we are on an unsustainable path in regard to our natural worlds. It's becoming patently obvious that we cannot continue to exploit the land, the water, and the air as we have been accustomed. So why don't we turn a corner when we still have that option? We won't lose money by employing measures to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions. We will gain diversity and strength in our economy, we will lessen our dependence on increasingly expensive traditional fuels, and we will gain a measure of peace of mind knowing that we are finally doing something about a problem that we all know is not getting any better as time goes by.

There are innumerable other benefits to taking action on our dependence on carbon-based fuels. Our health will improve as pollution from gasoline, diesel, and coal is reduced. Cities will grow to accommodate more rapid transit and pedestrian streetscapes. New economies based on conservation and alternative energy production will help to strengthen and diversify our economy.

The oil and gas industry will be with us for a long time to come. It is our ace in the hole, an insurance policy we all hold together that will help to underwrite this new Alberta century. But let's start looking at it for what it truly is: an industry in transition with an uncertain and, ultimately, unsustainable future. What it can do, however, is help to underwrite the transition to the future, a future where every Albertan can count on a decent living and be proud of the choices we make together as a democracy for now and for the future of this fine province that we live in.

Mr. Speaker, environmentalism is not just about blue boxes and fluorescent light bulbs. It's about how we value the physical world in which we live as an extension of ourselves. Drilling sour gas wells in urban areas is not just a human tragedy waiting to happen; it is also an assault on the sensibilities that we have as human beings, on how we value the places where we live, and on how we value ourselves and each other. Big box store clusters and the blights of billboards on our main drags, Macleod Trail and Gateway Boulevard and Gaetz Avenue, don't just kill pedestrian-friendly main streets and cause traffic problems; they are an attack on how citizens interact with each other and their city. We can do better, and we will.

In this new Alberta century let us remind ourselves about something important. The oil and the gas and the coal and everything beneath our feet is ours. We own it, the people of Alberta, not the energy companies, who seem so bent to extract every last drop as fast as they possibly can. The cities and the countryside are ours, too, as are the schools, the roads, the hospitals, the water that flows around us, the air that we breathe. It's time we stand up and say how we want to use these assets in the best possible way for everyone in this province. It's time, in this new Alberta century, that we choose a more equitable path for our future.

I thank you for this opportunity to speak, and I look forward to working with this Legislature to effect positive change for the people of Alberta. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 if anyone wishes to ask a question, they may do so now.

There being none, the chair recognizes the Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address this Chamber in my maiden speech. I would like to begin by recognizing my predecessor, Don Tannas. His contributions to the communities in the Highwood constituency and his representation of his constituents earned him the trust and respect of the area for 16 years as an MLA. It was only upon his announced retirement that I considered running, and he has left some pretty big shoes to fill. His hard work, determination, and tenacity at representing Highwood will be missed both here and in the constituency. I wish him the best in his future endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Highwood is one that has been greatly changed since this Assembly last sat. The amazing population growth that our province has witnessed did not bypass any constituency, and this resulted in the borders of Highwood being greatly altered. Some parts of the new area now constitute Foothills-Rocky View, some are now part of Livingstone-Macleod, and others now call the offices of Banff-Cochrane to speak with their MLA. I know that Albertans in these areas will be well represented by the MLAs in these areas.

Mr. Speaker, I have called this constituency home for all of my life. In fact, my parents emigrated to this province and to the Highwood area in the early part of the century. My father's brothers had come to Alberta from Holland in 1926. After a time in this province they had written home of their successes and invited others from their family to come over as well. My parents decided to emigrate in 1929 and started the long journey to Alberta, first by boat and then by train across this huge country. Travelling with three small children was no picnic, but the trip, so I am told, went surprisingly well, uneventful all the way to Calgary.

However, upon arriving in Calgary, their good luck seemingly ran out as there was no one there at the train station to meet them. So my parents were there with three children, no way to contact my uncles, and unable to speak English. Well, through the good graces of some strangers they were able to arrange a taxi to take them to my uncle's farm. The only problem was that neither my father nor the driver who had agreed to take them knew exactly where my uncle's farm lay. Not to be deterred by small details such as this, they set off in the general direction. Four hours and $22 later they finally pulled into what seemed to be the correct yard. The only problem was that everybody was out in the fields working, so no one was at home.

When they got to the house, my father immediately thanked the driver because he knew that he had found my uncle's house. Bewildered, the driver looked around for a sign or a nameplate or some indication that would explain my father's sureness. Finally, this man asked my father how he knew. There was no name, no person in sight, and the farmhouse looked no different than a hundred other ones across the prairie.

By way of explanation my father pointed to the front step of the house, where the driver saw shoes lined up neatly next to the door. He was about to ask my father what he meant, when he realized that there was something different about these shoes. Upon a closer inspection he realized that they were all wooden. My father had known that he found his brother's house because of all the wooden shoes lined up at the door. The telegram my parents had sent from Winnipeg helpfully arrived four days later.

My family has lived in this area ever since, and this story of my parents setting out across the world looking for a new life, and apparently some wooden shoes, has embodied the free nature of Albertans.

I would like to take this opportunity to introduce the Chamber to the new constituency of Highwood. This riding contains a diverse group of Albertans that make their living in as many ways as can be imagined. The northern part of the riding contains communities that have grown exponentially in the past few years. Many of the people in this area make their living in Calgary but have chosen to live in a more rural setting.

The west of the riding is dominated by the foothills of the Rockies, and in the east there is the broad expanse of the prairies. The constituency is bordered by the Bow River on the north and stretches a good portion of the way to Nanton in the south. The riding is bisected by No. 2 highway, and as you travel along this road from Calgary, you can see the population density start to thin and an increasing amount of agricultural land come into view. The land in this area is rich, and the farmers and ranchers are able to raise a variety of crops and livestock, from canola to cattle and cereal grains to poultry.

I have the privilege of representing the Stoney Nakoda people, who make the Eden Valley reserve their home. Theirs is a proud history of the plains people, who made the vast prairies and the foothills their home throughout western Canada and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Highwood are as varied as the geography and are a great cross-section of those who call Alberta home. For all their uniqueness my constituents share common concerns with each other and other Albertans. Postsecondary education, health, infrastructure, and the maintenance of the environment for future generations are all priorities of Albertans. The Speech from the Throne demonstrated that they are the priorities of their provincial government. The Speech from the Throne, given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, charted a course that will build on the four pillars of the 20-year plan first discussed in this Chamber last February.

Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear of the government's commitment to moving ahead with the water for life strategy. Highwood is a part of the Bow River watershed, with both the Sheep River and the Highwood River flowing into the Bow. Over the years that I have lived on the banks of the Bow River, I have seen the changes that development has initiated on our rivers and streams. I am proud to live in a province that is committed to such an aggressive environmental protection program and continues to show this commitment in actions and not just words.

As I mentioned earlier, a good number of my constituents have chosen farming and ranching as their lifestyle. The Speech from the Throne outlined the government's continued commitment to stand by this province's agricultural producers. Alberta has long been known for our primary agricultural products, and now it's time to build on that reputation and shift the focus to more value-added products. The continued closure of the American border to our live cattle highlights the continued need for us to develop a larger homegrown slaughter and meat-packing industry. By increasing domestic slaughter capacity and focusing on the development of more processing plants, Albertans will be able to realize more benefits from the livestock that we raise. Moving in this direction will create more jobs in our province and create a more stable structure for marketing Alberta's beef both nationally and internationally.

This move is not limited to the beef industry but also the grain industry. In the Speech from the Throne His Honour outlined the government's continued commitment to advocating for a marketing choice for wheat and barley. The development of market choice for wheat and barley will open the doors to benefits for individual producers. The power to choose who you sell your product to is afforded to every other industry in this country. Only wheat and barley producers are forced to sell to a monopoly. The promotion of choice among producers does not call for the elimination of the Wheat Board, only the opportunity to market wheat and barley elsewhere. It will also help in the development of value-added industries focused on grains in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the shifting focus to value-added industries in agricultural sectors is merely the tip of the iceberg. I feel that our province needs to advance a whole value-added strategy in all sectors of our economy. Our natural resource wealth is such that we are able to make decisions and investments that are not available to other districts. In order to move away from being a primary-product economy, we need to look not only to value-added industries but to all knowledge-based industries.

As was discussed in the Speech from the Throne, the government is committed to increasing the capacity of Alberta's postsecondary education system a total of 60,000 spaces by the year 2020, and this is exactly the type of forward thinking that is necessary to help Alberta make the transition into a leader in knowledge-based industries such as computers, medical technology, and nanotechnology.

Mr. Speaker, the final point I'd like to touch on is the added investment in Alberta's infrastructure, that was discussed when His Honour delivered the Speech from the Throne. In my constituency there is a need for overpasses at busier intersections. I feel that spending on infrastructure in this way will have a positive effect on safety on Alberta's highway system. Casualty and fatality traffic accidents are a tragedy that no jurisdiction is immune to.

The Speech from the Throne discussed the pressing need to increase safety on Alberta's roads. I believe that one way to do this is to reduce the number of level crossings on busy highways such as the number 2. On the northern edge of my constituency, on the immediate outskirts of Calgary, there are three secondary highways which cross the number 2 within a 30-kilometre stretch. The ever-increasing volume of traffic on highway 2 combined with the ever-increasing volume of traffic on the secondary roads in my constituency means that the issue of traffic safety is becoming more and more prominent. The province's investment in infrastructure is a way to deal with this.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a land of endless opportunity, and we are in a position to seize it. By working with our constituents, we'll be able to provide the government that Albertans chose and give the services that Albertans need. I look forward to working with the people of Highwood and my colleagues here in the Legislature to make the Alberta advantage an even better one.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 if anybody wishes to ask a question, you may do so now.

Okay. There being none, any other speakers? The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure for me to rise today to deliver my maiden speech as the representative of the people of the constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. It's with a great deal of pride that I'm able to respond to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate you and your two colleagues on being elected to your honourable positions. I'm sure your experience and guidance will help myself and the many new members adapt to our roles as MLAs.

I'd also like to formally congratulate all the members of the House on their recent election, especially those who are here for the first time. When the constituents of the areas we represent went to the polls last November, they gave us the trust to do what is best for them and what is best for Alberta. I must admit that I find this a very daunting task. The decisions we make inside this Chamber touch every aspect of the lives of Albertans, and I'm extremely honoured that the constituents of Cypress-Medicine Hat put their faith and trust in myself and the entire Conservative Party team to make the right decisions. While I realize that as a government we won't be able to please every single Albertan, I'll be very diligent in my role to ensure that whatever is done is done in the best interests of Alberta.

As I was preparing what I was going to say for this response to the Speech from the Throne, I was looking back at many speeches and articles from the years past, some as far back as 1971. I initially thought that these speeches, being given by a variety of those community leaders and previous MLAs, would be out of date and out of touch with the needs of Albertans at the dawn of this new century, but after reading a few things by a vast number of orators, I quickly discovered that I was wrong. Mr. Speaker, Albertans' attitudes and entrepreneurship haven't really changed.

As each decade passes, there hasn't been a great variance in the issues, just a change in technologies. The need for gravel roads has changed into needs for highway interchanges. X-ray machine demand in the health sector has moved towards MRI and CT scanners. In education the expansion of the consolidated one-room schools has moved towards having our rural schools hooked up to the SuperNet. Several schools in my constituency are hooked up to live video conferencing to allow students to interact with a variety of scholars and experts that they wouldn't have been previously able to without this new technology.

Even with the great leap of technological advances in all areas of our lives, the one common theme that keeps occurring over and over is opportunity. Albertans, I feel, are interested in having the opportunity to succeed. They believe that the best social safety net is a job. They aren't looking for handouts. They just want a chance to work hard and be successful through their own blood and sweat.

What has been very eloquently presented to us by the hon. Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, is the direction in which Albertans have always wanted their government to go. In years past the dark cloud of debt has loomed above, but thanks to my colleagues here in this House and many who are no longer here, including my predecessor Dr. Lorne Taylor, our future plans do not include budgeting for the debts of years past.

Now the focus is solely on the people of Alberta, which most definitely includes the constituents of Cypress-Medicine Hat. What do the people of southeast Alberta want from this province? Well, the southeast portion of this province was where the settlement of southern Alberta began. The prairies of southeast Alberta are filled with the remnants of those who, as our Lieutenant Governor mentioned, settled this land with all the hopes and dreams that we can only wonder about as we travel the back roads of Alberta and see the remnants of these hopes and dreams in the abandoned farmsteads. One can only imagine what drove these people to leave their homes and families to come overseas to settle here.

From working here, living here, and knocking on doors in Cypress-Medicine Hat, I've heard a great deal of stories of how they came to this beautiful corner of Alberta and what they expect for the future. The one thing I hear resonating through each and every discussion is the feeling of pride they have for their family, their career, and their province. This feeling of pride encompasses all aspects of their lives, whether it's pride in putting every ounce of their being into growing the best crops their fields can yield, using their skills in their respective professions, or working hard to pass that final exam at Medicine Hat College.

I know that the people associated with the large agricultural sector will be pleased with the direction you've put forward today. Agriculture is no longer just a way of life; it's also a proud business. When we provide increased domestic processing capabilities, press hard to expand our value-added sector, and push hard for market choice, we provide opportunity.

The agricultural industry through past droughts and especially the cattle and grain industries for what they've been going through in the past several years aren't sitting back and waiting for the government to give them a cheque. Instead, they want the opportunity to do what they do best, which is working hard and taking pride in what they do. But there are times when the weather or a prolonged border closure threatens the very core of the industry. Government needs to provide assistance. Industry is very appreciative of the assistance this government has provided in the past. Our past programs and future plans outlined in the Speech from the Throne are providing a hand up to industry, not a handout.

I'm quite proud to say that we are continuing to provide opportunity to our agricultural sector. Opportunity for increased domestic processing and value-added products can sometimes require more than hard work. With the continued growth of the global marketplace, farming isn't just planting seeds or taking feed out to cattle. It's big business, and we need information technologies to succeed. Our youth are coming back to the farm with a firm grasp about how new technologies can improve yields and have a more efficient operation.

Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure that our rural communities remain vital components of Alberta. A healthy and strong rural Alberta strengthens the entire provincial economy, and it enhances the quality of life for all Albertans. I'm very excited to be a part of the Rural Development Strategy Task Force, led by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. We have such a wealth of creative and innovative individuals on this committee. It's amazing the sorts of ideas regarding sustained growth of our rural communities that are already coming forth in the preliminary meetings of this task force. Rural communities have been the backbone of this province, and I look forward to helping to build upon the four pillars that have been initially developed through the rural development strategy.

Mr. Speaker, people kid us southeastern Albertans about being rednecks. It's true; we are rednecks. But that's just because we enjoy being out in the sun, enjoying areas of the province that haven't been discovered by most Albertans, like the Sweetgrass hills and the Milk River badlands.

I just want to clarify something: there really is no milk in the Milk River. My four-year-old grandson had just recently asked as we were driving through this region: Grandpa, are we really going to see a river full of milk? Like any responsible grandfather, I told him that wasn't the case and that it was named that way because of the muddy and murky appearance of the water.

Imaginative and inquisitive thinking isn't something us rednecks are lacking. We have the same dreams and interests in technology and innovation as every other Albertan. Southeastern Albertans are on the forefront of some technological research, particularly unmanned vehicle research. Mr. Speaker, representatives from countries around the world came to southeast Alberta last year to watch live demonstrations of unmanned vehicles at the Defence Research and Development Canada range at Suffield, just outside of Medicine Hat. This experience cannot be achieved anywhere else in Canada and in very few places in the world. Companies in Medicine Hat built the drones, the unmanned aircraft that are being used for surveillance in Iraq and Afghanistan. The Swedish navy came to the desert of southeast Alberta to demonstrate and purchase Barracudas, unmanned sea vehicles. Cutting-edge technologies have been developed and are continuing to be developed in southern Alberta.

To continue the economic development of the region, the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat need the education and information to compete globally. This is why I'm very excited to hear about Alberta's promise to make strengthening our postsecondary system a top priority, which includes the creating of 60,000 new postsecondary spaces by the year 2020 and the Lois Hole digital library. It can be costly to have well-stocked libraries in every single community in Alberta, and it's so exciting to hear that our constituents will have instant access to such a wealth of information. I find it very fitting and appropriate that this digital library was named after one of the biggest advocates for learning this province has been fortunate enough to be graced with. A remarkable woman who dedicated her life to learning will now forever be a part of all Albertans' lifelong learning.

Education will create the backbone of Alberta's economy as we move forward into the future, and I know that I along with the constituents of Cypress-Medicine Hat look forward to witnessing the direct impact this commitment to education will have on our communities. The commitment to education that has been put forward through the Speech from the Throne will be looked back upon as the proverbial starting blocks that launched Alberta's economy into a new era. While our natural resources will still play a prominent role in Alberta's future, with the access to the future we will be experiencing from the direction put forward in the Speech from the Throne, our economy will be diversifying with an extremely well-trained and educated workforce.

There's great opportunity in store for the future of Alberta. From the very beginning of this province 100 years ago whenever opportunity was present, the hard-working people of southeast Alberta have taken advantage of the situation and excelled. The Premier has set forth an agenda which will allow for each and every Albertan to share in the Alberta advantage. I thank him for that, and so do the people of Etzikom and the people of Manyberries, the people of Hilda and the people of Schuler. I feel quite fortunate in being given the opportunity to represent the great people of Cypress-Medicine Hat during these exciting times. The future of our province looks very bright.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: It's a great honour to rise in this House with much pride and excitement to deliver my maiden speech, pride because I represent the great riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie, excitement because I am looking forward to working for the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie, who have placed their trust in me.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on your election as the Deputy Chair of this House. Your reputation as a parliamentarian ensures that you will carry out your duties with confidence, nonpartisanship, and expertise.

I would like to thank my constituents from the bottom of my heart for the opportunity to represent them here in this Assembly. I extend my warm greetings to my colleagues on all sides of this House, I congratulate them on their election or re-election to this Assembly, and I am looking forward to working with each one of them to serve the best interests of all Albertans. We are here to best serve the public's interest, and I am confident that each member is as committed as I am to perform that commitment.

The throne speech is obviously an expression of this government's desire to pursue a certain level of action over the next four years. Mr. Speaker, what I find in this speech was clearly a reaction to the pressure the Alberta Liberals put on this government for years and years. What I heard was a collection of strong Liberal ideas watered down and repackaged as Tory policies. Alberta Liberals have long argued for increasing the minimum wage, restoring seniors' benefits, inflation-proofing the heritage savings trust fund, and an endowment fund for postsecondary education. These were the issues Albertans and the Alberta Liberal opposition have demanded action on for years and years.

It's great to see the government finally responding to overdue issues such as increasing AISH rates. There is still confusion in the area of health care in Alberta, and the throne speech did very little to clear things up. Albertans are anxious to see some more concrete plans. They want government to spend taxpayers' money wisely and build permanent wealth for this province.

I'm glad to hear that the government wants to honour a great

Albertan, the late Lois Hole. If the government is really, really serious about it, then they should adopt the Liberals' Motion 502 to eliminate library card fees from public libraries throughout Alberta and double the funds for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts as she was a strong supporter of more funding to public libraries and the arts community. I think a tribute for Lois Hole is something that would benefit all Albertans.

It seems that too often we find ourselves out to score political points. We are not here for the benefit of the media but for the benefit of the people of this province. Scoring cheap political points does nothing to help the people of this province. [some applause] Thank you. Only constructive criticism, original ideas will truly help the people each of us represents. Members must question government initiatives and oppose them when it is necessary and only support the government when support is warranted. Like all Albertans, my constituents have great expectations of all of us. The people are looking for their government to be guided by professionalism, to be true to the government's promise of an open and a responsible government, a government that is frugal when dealing with Albertans' purse strings. We promised Albertans that. That is what we will do for them.

Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the cultural diversity within the riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I intend to pursue the interests of my great riding, and I will do my level best to voice their concerns in this Legislative Assembly. I am proud to be an elected Member of the Legislative Assembly for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and I am proud to be an Albertan. I am committed to serving both Edmonton-Ellerslie and all Alberta.

Let me tell you and through you tell all the members of this House the real concerns that I heard as I went door to door seeking support for my election. The people of my riding want us to protect their public health care system from being a privatized, two-tiered system. The people feel that our health care system can be reformed by reducing the waiting times for medical treatment and surgery; by aggressively recruiting and training more sufficient numbers of doctors, nurses, and other professionals in the health care system; by actively encouraging the development of specialized surgical centres within the public health care system; and by increasing the number of beds in Edmonton as well as in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents also want us to improve their education system. They believe that the place to start is within the classroom, from prekindergarten through to postsecondary. Their belief is that our aim must be for excellence in our education system. My constituents want us to focus on strengthening the postsecondary system and increasing accessibility to education. They want every Albertan to have the opportunity to reach their personal potential by recognizing and supporting the classrooms.

The people of my riding want us to restore key seniors' benefits and to put measures in place which ensure that all seniors can live safe and comfortable lives.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie want to see improved law and order in this province. They are concerned, and rightly so, with the level of crime involving our youth. They want us to take a firmer stand in the elimination of youth crime in this province.

Thanks to the windfall of energy revenues over years and years, Alberta's economy is flourishing. History shows that this cannot last forever. The people of my riding want us to start translating our current energy boom into permanent long-term prosperity. They want the opportunity to build a truly remarkable future. Long-term, sustainable policies are required to preserve what we have today.

My constituents look to the government to focus on spending smarter, living more within our own means, and continuing to support the Alberta heritage trust fund.

Deregulation of the power industry has created many challenges for Albertans. They pay a high price for gas and electricity. If we restored affordable, stable electricity rates for homeowners and businesses, the people of this province would be able to reinvest more within Alberta.

There is so much room to make Alberta's future better. There is so much this Assembly can do to make it better. We can manage what we have so much better. We can reach so much higher. Let's all start building a better future for Alberta.

I pledge to all of you my respect and gratitude for helping make Alberta the best and the most prosperous province in Canada. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, this is the time when MLAs rise to react to the Speech from the Throne and then give their maiden speech. I'd just like to thank the government for making my job a whole lot easier today. The Speech from the Throne was such an uninspiring document that to comment on it would be like trying to write a review of an instruction manual. As a former newspaper editor I look forward to the cut and thrust of debate as we discuss changing colons to semicolons.

In a more serious vein, Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise today as a member of the Alberta Legislature, particularly so on this 100th anniversary year of Alberta's founding as a province. I am especially proud to say that the Tougas family has been part of Alberta since almost the beginning. My father, Richard, who is in the gallery today, turns 86 two days after Alberta's 100th birthday, and he is a born and bred Edmontonian. [some applause] I wasn't expecting that.

I'm genuinely humbled that the people of Edmonton-Meadowlark chose me to be their representative, and I would like to express my thanks to the small but very dedicated corps of volunteers who helped out an election campaign that began for me just the day before the election was called. I would especially like to thank Fay Stankov and Bonnie Rawlyn for their efforts on my behalf.

As exciting as it was to win the election, I harbour no illusions. Like all who assume elected office, it is important to remember that no matter how big or small your victory, only a minority of your constituents actually chose you. We as legislators should always be cognizant of the fact that we are here to serve not just those who voted for us or those who support our party but all of those who live in our constituency and our province.

Edmonton-Meadowlark represents a fairly typical cross-section of Alberta. There are slightly more women than men, a fact that is at odds with the makeup in this Legislature. There is a large and diverse ethnic community, with nearly 6 per cent of the population speaking neither official language at home. I found that out several days door-knocking. The largest ethnic group is Chinese, with the largest group of immigrants coming from the Philippines. Nearly 5 per cent of the population is aboriginal, a reflection of Edmonton's status as having the fastest growing aboriginal population of any city in the country. There's a strong seniors presence in Meadowlark, and shortly the Westend Seniors Activity Centre will be moving into a bright new location in the Terra Losa community. I would like to acknowledge the work done by the previous Edmonton-Meadowlark MLA, Bob Maskell, in securing the grants for the expansion.

Edmonton-Meadowlark is lucky to have the Misericordia hospital in its midst. The hospital survived a brush with death of its own a few years ago when reckless government downsizing left it a shell of its former self. Happily, the Misericordia is returning to form, and a major expansion and reorganization is in the works. The hospital's most outstanding contribution is the craniofacial reconstruction unit, called COMPRU, a world-class facility dedicated to the reconstruction of the face, head, and neck. It also offers the only publicly funded hyperbaric oxygen program in Alberta.

In most communities a hospital would be the most important structure, but in Edmonton-Meadowlark one structure dominates, West Edmonton Mall, virtually a city within a city. To those of us who live near the mall or drive by it every day, it has become part of the landscape that we take for granted. It's easy to lose sight of the fact that West Edmonton Mall is the largest shopping and entertainment complex on the planet and one of Alberta's top tourist attractions. The fact that the world's largest shopping centre would be located in a remote western Canadian city and built by a family of immigrants speaks volumes about the Alberta spirit and the Edmonton attitude.

Among the many attractions of West Edmonton Mall is something called the Palace Casino. Now, a generation ago the idea that a casino would be operating in the heart of a residential area of Alberta would have seemed preposterous, but today casinos are as much a part of the landscape as grain elevators once were. There is even going to be one in Camrose in the near future.

When I was asked by the Leader of the Opposition what portfolio I would like to oversee, I asked for Gaming. Over the years I have watched with fascination and growing concern as what was for most of Alberta's history considered a vice is now a major contributor to the Alberta economy. The progression of gambling from being a crime to a cash cow for government has been insidious, so gradual that it came upon us with hardly anyone noticing.

I remember well, when I was a kid growing up in west Edmonton, how my normally law-abiding father would occasionally purchase something called an Irish sweepstakes ticket. [interjections] Yeah, a few of you remember Irish sweepstakes tickets. Now, sweepstakes were illegal in Canada at the time, but for whatever reason the authorities looked the other way when it came to the Irish sweepstakes. My dad won a hundred pounds, by the way. Eventually Canada got into the sweepstakes game with the Olympic lottery, a $10 ticket whose million dollar prize draw was a major televised event. Now, just like income tax, the lottery was intended to be temporary, and we all know how that turned out.

As late as 1967 sanctioned gambling in Alberta consisted of dart throws, crown and anchor wheels, and hoop-toss games of chance, of skill at agricultural fairs. These quaint days would end in July of that year when the Edmonton Exposition was allowed to open its first temporary casino during Klondike Days. Two years later Calgary had its first casino during the Stampede, and by 1970 Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Red Deer all had casinos running during their agricultural fairs. Pandora's box had opened, and there was no closing it now.

Alberta's first permanent casino, the appropriately named Cash Casino in Calgary, opened 25 years ago this year, but it wasn't until VLTs and slot machines were introduced into Alberta casinos and bars that gambling in Alberta made the quantum leap from games that required skill and knowledge to something that anyone with a quarter and the ability to push a button could do. Alberta today has the highest per capita gambling expenditure on all forms of licensed gambling as well as the highest per capita VLT expenditures. While charities and casino operators have benefited mightily, it is the province that has cashed in on casinos in a big way. On average, Canadian provinces receive 3 per cent of their provincial revenue from gaming. In Alberta it's 4.8 per cent.

The big money streams in in the form of quarters, nickels, dimes, and now even pennies. There are more than 6,500 slot machines in Alberta casinos, and in 2002-2003 Albertans pumped approximately $9.3 billion into these one-armed bandits, most of which don't even have arms anymore because that makes them too slow to play. Now, it is true that most of it, $8.6 billion, was paid out in prize money, but that still left a $683 million profit. Compare that to the mere $122 million in profit from table games, and you see where the real money comes from in a casino.

So how did this happen? How did Alberta go from being closed on Sunday to having seven-day-a-week casino gaming until 3 a.m.? Well, the answer can be summed up in a line from my favourite TV series, The Simpsons. That's for you, boys. When Springfield was considering opening a casino to cure its economic woes, straight-arrow Ned Flanders asked Reverend Lovejoy to rule on the morality of government-run gaming. Reverend Lovejoy's answer perfectly describes how gaming came to become such an integral part of the Alberta community. In the words of the Reverend, once something has been approved by the government, it is no longer immoral.

The government's enthusiastic introduction of VLTs and casino gaming into Alberta has created a pyramid of addiction. The government is addicted to the easy revenue of gaming. As casino owner Montgomery Burns said in the same Simpsons episode, "I've discovered the perfect business. People swarm in, empty their pockets, and scuttle off." Charities and registered societies are addicted to casinos. Charities are walking away with $50,000, $60,000, or $70,000 for a few hours' work, the kind of money it would take years of hard work to raise by more conventional means.

At the bottom of the pyramid of addictions is the lowly gambler, the very people the government likes to call Martha and Henry. It's not the high rollers who are greasing the casino wheels in Alberta. The real money comes from Martha and Henry, who are whiling away the hours joyously pumping coin after coin into slot machines.

I went to Palace Casino last Sunday minutes after it opened at 10 a.m. Already slot jockeys, as they call them, were taking up their places behind their favourite machines based on comfortable TV shows like Wheel of Fortune, Jeopardy, or even the Munsters. I chatted with a charming older woman who enjoyed playing a slot machine based on the game show The Price is Right. She happily explained how the machine worked and, while doing so, promptly hit a decent payday. About $35 in nickels spewed out of the machine. "If I'm smart," she said, "I'd quit right now." I saw her again about a half hour later, still playing the same game, her stash of nickels dwindling down to nothing. Such is the power of the slot machine. Its mindless simplicity has turned thousands of people into addicts and destroyed innumerable lives.

AADAC estimates that 5.2 per cent of Albertans experience moderate to severe problems as a result of their gambling. We've all heard of friends, acquaintances, or loved ones, the Marthas and Henrys of Conservative mythology, whose lives have been destroyed by slot machine addiction. With three new casinos approved and a number of others on the way, the number of VLTs and slot machines will continue to rise. Yes, VLTs and slots have fattened the government coffers and made life easier for charities, but I ask a question that should have been asked a long time ago: at what cost?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must mention that the first of four funerals for the slain RCMP officers was held in Stony Plain this afternoon. The deaths of the four Mounties was a diabolical crime that shocked the nation and shook our belief in peace, order, and good government, that Canada was founded upon. On behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Meadowlark I would like to express our collective condolences to the families of the four brave Mounties who died in the line of duty.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor a few days ago. I guess that in one sense that was His Honour's maiden speech, and I want to congratulate him on that as well as all hon. members who have risen in this House and delivered their first speech. I actually wish this was my first speech because things were very different in 1993, and the opportunities today are so great for this province that I wish I was starting again.

Mr. Speaker, one of my passions in life is education, whether it may be at the primary, secondary, or postsecondary level, for all Albertans. An educated mind opens many, many doors for those who are willing to make the effort and the sacrifice to obtain an education. Having said that, there are some skills that are definitely more in demand than others, and this is nowhere more apparent than in this province. As the Lieutenant Governor stated, Alberta has an enviable quality of life, low unemployment, and a very high employment growth. It is this issue of employment that I want to spend a little bit of time on today.

The economic successes in our province have proven to be a benefit to most Albertans. Historically and currently natural resources have been the source of our wealth, fuelling our economy and driving our growth rates. The growth of the oil and gas sectors has been exponential, and with high natural resource prices it appears that this growth will be sustained for at least some time in the foreseeable future.

While natural resources are currently fuelling our growth, it takes many well-oiled parts to keep our economy functioning properly. The Alberta economy is currently looking at the possibility of shortages in one of its key parts, skilled labour. There is a growing body of evidence that suggests that Alberta as well as all of western Canada is experiencing a mounting problem with skill shortages. The Canada West Foundation authored a series of well-researched reports to examine the issue in western Canada, as has the TD Bank Financial Group, and also other reports put out by the Economic Development Authority.

The Canada West Foundation highlights an interesting trend. In specific areas Alberta and other western provinces are currently experiencing labour shortages, and the industries themselves feel that these shortages are going to get worse before they get better. Most notably, current shortages exist in health care and most of the trades, transportation, and equipment operation. In the future industry associations expect the shortages here to worsen but also to begin to have a greater effect on primary industries, sales and service industries, processing, manufacturing, and utility industries.

The shortage of skilled labour in certain industries in Alberta has been attributed to the rapid growth of the economy. In a sense we're looking at the possibility of becoming victims of our own success. This labour shortage is currently being felt most acutely in the skilled trades, and this is for several reasons. The demand for jobs in this area has grown, there are fewer Albertan students choosing to pursue a trade in these areas, and the demographic makeup of this sector of the workforce is one that is fast approaching retirement age.

The Speech from the Throne highlighted the government's commitment to postsecondary education in our province. This includes not only colleges and universities but also trade schools and technical institutes. There exists a large demand for skilled labour in specific industries in our province. In fact, this demand is so great that industry is beginning to look at international sources to fill this labour requirement. The creation of 60,000 postsecondary seats by 2020 will work to relieve the pressure being felt in these areas and ensure that the provincial economy does not falter due to a lack of skilled labour. Additionally, these seats will help Alberta make the transition from a resource-based economy to a knowledge-based economy. Mr. Speaker, by making Alberta a leader in learning, we can ensure that the prosperity we currently enjoy is passed on to our children and our grandchildren.

I'm most pleased to inform the House about a project that I'm proud to be a small part of, and that is the WorldSkills Competition, to be held in Calgary in September 2009. Mr. Speaker, over 40 countries will come to Calgary to compete in 38 or so skills and trades in what will be the largest international event to be held in Calgary since the 1988 Winter Olympics. In preparation for these competitions the government is working with the organizing committee to make a major difference in the skills and the attraction of the skills that we have in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's well known that there currently exists a bias or a culture within our society that favours university training. This exists all over the world. When I was in Switzerland in 2003 to look at the WorldSkills Competition to see if we should bring it to Alberta, there were people there from 40 countries, and they all had the same problem: how do we deal with the bias that we find in our schools with respect to skills versus university, how do we change the mindset of parents who want all their kids to be brain surgeons, and how do we excite our kids to the phenomenal opportunities that exist throughout this province? We're working to minimize this bias by better informing our teachers and our parents that one can have a great life in the trades while seeing every day the fruits of one's labour.

Mr. Speaker, we're taking steps to excite teachers and parents but most of all Alberta students to the fantastic opportunities that exist here in Alberta in any walk of life. We want to excite our young people earlier in life and perhaps provide virtual mentors via SuperNet. A turned-on student does so much better than one that is not.

Fifty years ago, Mr. Speaker, a great teacher of mine said some very simple things to me about career selection. He said: Denis, the term "vocation" comes from the Latin word "vocare," which is a voice from within. He said: you need to listen to your voice from within, find out what makes you energetic, what makes you lazy, what makes you happy, what makes you sad, and once you know yourself, you will know what to be in life. I never forgot that, and I really think that we need to in fact help our children find their voice from within, and we need to fan the flame, whatever it may be. As parents the best thing we can do for our children is to fan the flame of their passion in whatever direction they wish to go.

Another important element, Mr. Speaker, is ethics. The number one reason that our kids lose their first job in many, many cases is that they have a lack of work ethic. That's reported by most employers that you talk to as the reason why kids lose their first job. In other words, they don't care if they turn up on time, or they don't care what kind of job they do. So it's important to have a good work ethic.

One of the other elements that's being included in this WorldSkills Competition preparation is the inclusion of values and attitudes. It's the inclusion of all of those things that we want all of our kids to have with respect to work ethics.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm excited about the potential referred to in the throne speech and the vision of both of our ministers of education, in both K to 12 and advanced ed, and the new investment that is being promised for education in this province.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions?

Anybody else wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to be in this Assembly. It was some 30 years ago that I first walked into this building and walked up above you there in the press gallery and spent five years there. I spent another five years looking down on this Legislative Assembly floor, so it gives me a great deal of pleasure to come back and actually sit on the floor of the Assembly some 20 years later.

I'm also extremely honoured to be representing a constituency that has some incredible tradition and has been represented by some very special people. Karen Kryczka represented this constituency eloquently for two terms. Prior to Karen's representation, we were very fortunate to have Elaine McCoy as the representative for two terms. Prior to that, Peter Lougheed represented this constituency for almost two decades, and I think his legacy lives on. In Calgary-West we did experiment for one term with a Liberal, but we quickly decided that that wasn't the way to go, and we're back to electing Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-West is a constituency that I'm proud to say is the home of our new Lieutenant Governor. He will serve this Legislature extremely well, and he has, as by his own admission, big boots to fill. I did not have the pleasure of sitting in this Assembly when Lois Hole was the Lieutenant Governor, but I did have the honour of meeting her on several occasions, and like so many people have said so well, we will miss her a great deal.

Mr. Speaker, the boundaries of Calgary-West have changed so dramatically in those 20 years, and that is typical of the growth of that particular city that we call home. When the constituency was represented by Peter Lougheed some 20 to 25 years ago, for the most part the western boundary was Sarcee Trail. Today with the exception of the community of Glenbrook my eastern boundary is Sarcee Trail. So we have some 40,000 constituents now living in Calgary-West in an area that at one point in time was farms, acreages, CFCN, and the Hart house.

It is a constituency that has a high standard of living. People have good jobs. I always believed that we had the highest household per capita income. I'm now told that my good friend from Calgary-Hays has the constituency with the highest per capita income, but second isn't bad.

As I said, it's a constituency where people are well educated. They are proud to be taking part in the Alberta advantage. But one of the things that I noticed that came up consistently in the election on November 22 was that people were concerned that their children were not going to have the same opportunities that they have because they were unable to get, in many cases, the ability to attend postsecondary education. So it was with a great deal of pride when the Premier announced about a month ago that we would be increasing the number of postsecondary education spaces by 15,000 over the next three years. Mr. Speaker, that is an example of this government listening, caring, and acting on what Albertans want.

While my constituency has a high per capita income, the other thing that I heard at the doors was that we also have to take care of those people who are less fortunate. I heard on several occasions that we needed to review the payments to our AISH recipients. Again, our throne speech laid out what we are going to do for people who are on AISH, and I'm proud to say that I'm part of a government that is going to look after the people who are less fortunate.

The other thing that I heard consistently at the doors was: "Do not go on a spending spree. Yes, we are in a fortunate position with a surplus, but do not become a Liberal once you get to Edmonton and spend all of our dollars." Mr. Speaker, what I heard was: we have a heritage fund, we are proud of our heritage fund, we need to start to put the revenue from our heritage fund back into the heritage fund, and we need to start to commit a percentage of our nonrenewable resource revenue on an annual basis to the heritage fund. That is one thing that I am proud to say that I intend on pursuing in the next four years.

I'm also concerned, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I found that troubled me when I was going door to door was that more often than I wanted to hear it, people said: "Well, it doesn't really matter. I don't vote anyway." I would like to try to convince people in this Assembly that that is an area that we must take a serious look at and figure out how we can convince people that they do have a democratic right to vote. I recall a month or so ago when people were driving a thousand kilometres from Vancouver to Calgary to vote in the Iraqi election, and we have people in this country, 1 out of 2 people in the municipal election and the provincial election, who simply didn't take the time to vote.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak long. I want to conclude my remarks tonight by saying that I'm incredibly grateful to my family, to my campaign team, and to the 6,964 residents of Calgary-West who gave me the pleasure of sitting in this Legislature. For the 6,440 who did not vote for me and voted for another candidate, I intend to work very hard to get their support in the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn the Assembly until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m.]

12. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Cenaiko:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns at the regular hour on Wednesday, March 9, 2005, it shall stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday, March 14, 2005, to permit members' attendance at Thursday's memorial service for the deaths last Thursday of the four RCMP, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, officers in Mayerthorpe.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you tonight some dear friends who are here. All of these individuals worked on my campaign for election and continue to support me in my role as an MLA. It's an honour to have these friends here tonight: Mr. David Watts, Mr. Neil Evans, Ms Judy Axelson, Ms Delia McCrae, Mary-Michael Kennedy, and Sue Stephens. I ask you to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee

11. Mr. Stevens moved:

Be it resolved that

- (1) A Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed to review the Conflicts of Interest Act as provided in section 48 of that act consisting of the following members, namely Dr. Brown, chair; Mr. Shariff, deputy chair; Ms DeLong; Mr. Groeneveld; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. Martin; Dr. Miller; Dr. Morton; Mr. Oberle; Ms Pastoor; and Mr. Rogers.
- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most recent Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.

- (4) In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans.
- (5) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly or the office of the Ethics Commissioner.
- (6) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (7) The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the act, within one year after commencing its review.
- (8) When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Stevens: This is a relatively routine matter, Mr. Speaker. The act in question provides that this legislation be reviewed every five years in this fashion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and talk briefly about Government Motion 11. Certainly I for one and members on this side of the House do not consider this motion a routine matter. We need stronger conflict of interest guidelines and rules in this province. That is quite evident to everyone on this side of the House and to the majority of Albertans and hopefully to the government.

This committee is going to be dominated by government members. From this side of the House I'm pleased to see that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is going to serve on that committee as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who oddly enough – I was reviewing the history of the Assembly – is the first New Democrat member from the city of Edmonton to be elected to this Assembly. He has had a distinguished career as a parliamentarian, and I believe that these three members along with the government members will make a positive contribution to ensuring that not only are the conflict of interest laws in this province strengthened, but certainly they will be rigorously enforced as well.

I will look forward at the appropriate time to reading this report, and certainly I hope it's not like the Coverage of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta from the Alberta Risk Management Fund review, which was prepared for the government in December of 2001 but unfortunately was not made public by a tabling until last Thursday. So I'm sure the hon. member across the way is going to ensure that there are no lengthy delays in the final report becoming public.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very, very similar to the argument yesterday with regard to question period, I believe there's strength in diversity, and having a greater representational role from other opposition parties I think can only serve to increase the transparency and accountability of this particular committee. I would encourage the committee to extend its membership to include a member of the New Democratic Party, and I would like to see the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner be involved in at least two committees to get a sense of where the future of this province is headed.

Thank you.

8:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of this motion to strike this all-party committee to do an important job for this House and for citizens of this province. I served on one other committee which was made up of all parties representing the House several years ago and that was struck on the initiative of the then Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Mr. Havelock. That committee's work and proceedings as it travelled around the province was most warmly received by Albertans. Albertans appreciate all-party committees holding public hearings inviting public input on public forums, and many of my colleagues who are now on the front benches on that side were also on that committee. So I strongly support the striking of this committee and wish well for the work of this committee over the next year.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else? The hon. Minister for Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just simply wish to thank the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Gold Bar for the very strong support of this motion.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

Report on Risk Management Fund Coverage of MLAs

10. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the report entitled Coverage of Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, Risk Management Fund, Cambridge Strategies Inc., 2001, tabled in the Assembly on Thursday, March 3, 2005, be referred to the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services.

Mr. Stevens: The nature of this report, Mr. Speaker, is that it deals with coverage afforded to members of this Assembly under the risk management fund. That particular fund has its derivation as a result of a request from this Assembly that came out of the all-members Special Standing Committee on Members' Services some time ago.

There are a number of recommendations, and it makes sense from my perspective, Mr. Speaker, that this report be referred to that committee for review and consideration and perhaps for some decision on behalf of the members. Of course, the members have this matter in their hands. Should they wish not to have it dealt with but simply have the matter tabled and leave it there, that is up to them, but it seems to me that it is a matter of concern to all members. We're asking that it be sent to an all-members committee, and therefore all members from the recognized parties in this Assembly will be able to comment and debate this particular report with Hansard capability.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased on behalf of the Official Opposition to join in the debate this evening on Government Motion 10. As I said earlier, I was astonished to see how much time had passed between the time this report was finished and the time it was released to the public.

The authors of the report from Cambridge Strategies Inc. talk at length about freedom of speech and freedom of expression and the role of an MLA. Sometimes the role of an MLA can be difficult, and they are required to make public comment on sensitive issues. Certainly, I think the authors of this report have made some good suggestions. There is certainly no doubt about that.

When one walks through this Assembly these days, Mr. Speaker, it's early spring, there are beautiful flowers in the rotunda – the staff has done a marvellous job with the circular arrangement there – and one realizes just how lucky one is to be able to participate in parliamentary debates in this place. You travel another five feet from that circle, and you see the photographs of the gentlemen who unfortunately lost their lives last week in defending this community, this province, and this country. Hopefully, the smell of a funeral parlour will disappear, but we will be reminded always by those flowers in the Assembly of those who are willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to protect us. But at the same time we must ensure that we ourselves do not through the course of our duties libel others.

The risk management fund is always a difficult issue. There certainly are recent difficulties with the administration of this fund. I spoke earlier about the interval of three years and three months from the time this report was prepared until it was tabled here in the Assembly last Thursday. During that interval of over three years, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition and a national daily newspaper tried to pry from the reluctant hands of this government all the information regarding the use of the risk management fund in the matter between the former Treasurer of the province, Mr. Stockwell Day, and a gentleman in Red Deer.

Now, certainly, the risk management fund coverage extended to Mr. Day at that time was well in excess of $700,000. I think this report cost in excess of $70,000. I could stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. I can only imagine the internal costs to this government and eventually to the taxpayer that were accumulated or incurred to prevent both myself and the national newspaper, in this case the Globe and Mail, from receiving the information regarding the use of this Alberta risk management fund.

I had a good look at this report, and it talks about other cases with other members, but it fails to mention why there was a refusal by the Alberta risk management fund to cover the legal costs of the former Member for Edmonton-Glenora, Mr. Howard Sapers. Why he was denied coverage is not addressed in this report, and that is really important because we can't have selective coverage. It has to be for everyone, regardless of which political party they're involved in. It just can't be for some. And the rules on this coverage have to be made available when people want to know. People have a right. It's public information.

Now, I have one other observation in regard to this report at this time. It will be interesting to see just exactly what this select special committee does with this, whether they table it or whether they use this as some form of final guideline. If this report were to become part of the risk management fund administration, who would compile this list of lawyers that one could receive advice from? I'm going to quote, Mr. Speaker. This is on page 10.

Just as MLAs are able to approach the Ethics Commissioner should they have a question about an intended course of conduct, so should they be able to access a select pool of lawyers, at public expense, should they have a question about something they intend to say or otherwise publish.

Now, I would be interested in hearing how other members of this Assembly feel about this. A select pool of lawyers? Who would compile this list, and how does one become eligible to be on this list? Certainly, I hope that we wouldn't be creating a political football here. I don't think that is the intention of the authors of this report, but that is my major concern. Are we going to make this process political by having a poor selection process for these lawyers?

With that, Mr. Speaker, that concludes my comments in regard to this report. Certainly, it is interesting to see that there was this long delay while we fought valiantly, and lost, to try to unveil the secrecy that surrounds the risk management fund, but hopefully something will come of this. It's springtime, and I, too, am optimistic.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce someone who I came to know very well during the election campaign as one of my most valued and trustworthy volunteers. This gentleman continues to serve me in the role as a co-manager in my constituency office. He's in the public gallery. I'd ask Daniel Langdon to please stand and have him receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. It's my pleasure to welcome a dear friend who worked very hard on my campaign and continues to support me and is here tonight, Mr. Abdi Karim Bakal. Please stand, Abdi, so that we can give you the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Any other guests for introduction?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Motion 10, I believe it is. The motion, of course, is about referring this report by Cambridge Strategies Inc. This report is dated December 2001. It was over three years ago that this report was received by the government, and it deals with the coverage of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta from the Alberta risk management fund.

It's the delay in this report's arrival on the floor of this August Chamber that has been a matter of concern for many of us, including myself. After having waited and made inquiries behind the scenes for several years in various ways, I finally put a private member's motion for return on the Order Paper last week, seeking the release of this report.

I am pleased that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General took action on his own in the opening days of this Legislature last week to table this report. I want to thank him for his quick action on this although I do want to express regret about the three-year delay in the process of this report reaching all members of the Assembly. Seventy thousand plus dollars of taxpayers' money was paid to get the report ready, and I think Albertans and members of this Legislature had the right and due expectation to receive a copy of it as soon as the report was submitted by this consulting company.

There's a second point I want to make. The report was not made based on public hearings, public hearings that were held by an all-party committee going around the province, nor was it a report prepared by a commission appointed by the Legislature or by this government. It's a private consulting company's report, and that should be kept in mind.

Having said that, I think the recommendations contained in this report do merit consideration. They don't necessarily answer all the questions to the satisfaction, perhaps, of all of us. Nevertheless, they do go some way, it appears, in addressing some of the key concerns that many of us had expressed on the floor of the House, outside to the media, and in our interviews with the authors of this report. I as the then leader of the New Democrat opposition was interviewed at length by the authors of this report, so I speak from personal knowledge of the concerns that I conveyed on behalf of our caucus to this committee. I'm sure the same was the case with the Liberal opposition. Its leader, I think, was interviewed, and many others might have been interviewed. I'm not sure who the others were who were interviewed.

But based on my conversation with the authors of the report, I notice that the recommendations reflect some of the steps that we were proposing and thought needed to be taken in order to make changes in the existing arrangements, existing arrangements which, our experience has shown, were very seriously flawed.

My colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has drawn attention to two cases. In one case coverage was denied and no reasons were given, and we had no recourse as elected members to appeal that decision. The decision was final, made outside of this Legislature, beyond any influence or access that we could exercise over that decision. That was regrettable, the case of Howard Sapers, who at that time represented Edmonton-Glenora. Then, of course, the case of the former Treasurer, Mr. Day, brought into focus even more serious flaws with the current arrangement. So it was those two events, I think, that triggered the commissioning of this report done by consultants.

Now, with respect to the referral of this report now to the Members' Services Committee, I want to make a few comments on that. I think this committee report should be seen as a report prepared by a consulting group. It should be received as information, and the Members' Services Committee should obviously debate the recommendations and see if there are gaps that need to be filled, if there are recommendations that need to be amended and modified in order to strengthen them and make them more appropriate for the purposes that we want it to serve.

Thirdly, I think there's a great deal of merit for an issue like this to be debated more broadly, publicly, and one way of taking it out for dialogue and debate with Albertans would be perhaps for the Members' Services Committee to hold some public hearings or at least invite public input, and I want to underline this.

I think there's a great deal of concern on the part of Albertans that resulted from the failure of the current risk-management arrangement, that casts doubt on our own integrity as members of this House. I think that that doubt needs to be dispelled for good. In order for that to happen, I think that public input, to be invited by the Members' Services Committee, would be a very effective way of approaching that problem. We need the trust in us restored on this issue by all Albertans, and that will happen if you go out to them, seek their advice, and seek public input. So that's my request and advice to the Members' Services Committee.

Finally, once the Members' Services Committee has had the benefit of deliberations within its own ranks, members, and then, hopefully, beyond it go out to get the advice of Albertans, then the recommendations of the Members' Services Committee should come back to the Legislature for approval because this is a very important matter on which all of us need to have the opportunity to have a final say.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in support of this motion. I hope that the Members' Services Committee will do this important task in a way that will be satisfactory not only to us as individual members who are directly affected by whatever decision is made, but also it will serve to satisfy Albertans who have had serious concerns about the way this current arrangement has operated in the past. They want us to do a better job now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Once again I just simply wish to thank the members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Gold Bar for supporting the motion. I also wish to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for the kind words with respect to the voluntary release of the report, but I think he should on behalf of his party take full credit, given the opportunities are few in this House, because after all Motion for a Return I asked for it. It was probably under the pressure of that motion that I was persuaded to do what I did.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Liepert]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this Assembly this evening with much humility and an overwhelming sense of responsibility as the newly elected Member of the Legislative Assembly for Edmonton-Rutherford. The tradition, as you know, is to share a little bit about myself, the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, and some of the cares and concerns expressed to me during the most recent provincial election.

Before doing so, however, I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong, for his delivery of the Speech from the Throne last Wednesday and congratulate him on his appointment as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor in this our centennial year. I would also like to applaud our Prime Minister, the Rt. Hon. Paul Martin, for showing the wisdom and leadership he did when selecting His Honour after the passing of the beloved Lois Hole.

Congratulations are also in order for our colleagues from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for having been selected to perform the roles of Speaker and Deputy Speaker respectively and, of course, to you, Mr. Speaker, for your selection last week as the Deputy Chair of Committees. I have complete trust that all of you fine gentlemen will hold true to the commitments that you made when appearing in front of the Official Opposition caucus prior to having been elected to these positions. Quite clearly, we should also be congratulating all 83 members of this Assembly on their election wins on November 22, 2004.

It is especially gratifying for me as a rookie MLA to have 15 Liberal colleagues in the House with me, something that many in the media and probably many in this House didn't think would be possible. I'm indeed pleased for the people of Edmonton-Rutherford to see a much larger combined opposition in this Assembly, and I truly believe that all Albertans will be better served by having such a talented and diverse group of individuals to hold this government accountable.

I'd also like to extend a special welcome to the newly elected Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, Mr. Speaker. I know he's already received a bit of a rough ride from some of the members opposite, and I suspect that that's merely a foreshadowing of what might be to come.

On November 22, 2004, Mr. Speaker, the very wise citizens of Edmonton-Rutherford voted overwhelmingly for change. They were not alone. Across this province 53 per cent of those who voted voted for change. We as legislators and especially my hon. colleagues across the floor must always be mindful of that fact as we debate bills and motions that will shape the future of this province.

Now for a little history lesson. In the early spring of 1966 Arthur and Barbara Miller moved their growing family of three young boys – Richard, Lesley, and Donald – into a two-storey home on 52nd Avenue in the south Edmonton community of Pleasantview. They were soon to be joined by a daughter, Denise, in May of that year, and the family would grow and flourish with the neighbourhood.

Mr. Speaker, as the eldest child in that family I have many vivid memories of those early years on what was at that time the outskirts of the city. I particularly remember watching movies on a drive-in theatre screen from a second-floor bedroom window in our home. The drive-in theatre sat where the Southgate Shopping Centre is now located. Behind the drive-in theatre, Mr. Speaker, lay wide open farm fields for as far as my eyes could see. That vast expanse of farmland was the future constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, which would later be renamed Edmonton-Rutherford following the redistribution that took place in 1993.

Almost as soon as we had moved into this neighbourhood, construction began on the communities of Duggan and Petrolia. I literally watched the Edmonton-Rutherford constituency grow as I myself was growing up. Over the years as young families grew, so did the community around them. Schools were built, shopping centres were added, freeways were constructed, parks and playgrounds were bustling with children. I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that this part of Edmonton was reflective of the general growth and prosperity that was sweeping across the province in the late 1960s and throughout the 1970s. The Miller family continued to grow and in 1972 was completed with the addition of my youngest brother, Howie.

In the 1980s, Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Rutherford continued to expand southward. But the recession of 1983 created many challenges for all Albertans, and the residents of this constituency were certainly no exception to that.

By 1989 the people in Edmonton-Whitemud had become so restless and disenfranchised with the government of the day that they did what many had considered unthinkable. They elected my friend and mentor, Mr. Percy Wickman. In doing so, they unseated a sitting Premier even though his government did manage to maintain a majority. Throughout the 1990s Edmonton-Rutherford continued to grow southward past 23rd Avenue to the current boundary of Blackmud Creek and beyond.

Now, this little history lesson of mine is not without a purpose. As you know, Mr. Speaker, newly elected MLAs are provided with copies of the maiden speeches given by their recent predecessors. I would like to take a minute or two to share with you some of the quotes from the late Percy Wickman's maiden speech, which he delivered in this Assembly on June 5, 1989. Percy said: "The thing I find most remarkable is that people are asking, requesting, or demanding honest, open government." Does that sound familiar to anybody in this Assembly? I've certainly heard it before. He went on to say:

It is particularly disturbing when you go to high schools, like Harry Ainlay, and you hear . . . from students who say: "Why should I become involved in politics? Why should I be concerned, when I can't look up to my political leaders and have the respect I should?"

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to digress for just a second here. I want to thank the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for establishing the School at the Legislature program. I've often been known to lament the lack of participation in politics by today's youth, and I think that this program in particular is an excellent initiative to try to reverse that trend.

Mr. Speaker, Percy Wickman went on to raise some serious concerns in 1989 about transportation, municipal affairs. In particular, he was concerned about the funding formula of the day. He had questions about health care as it related to Edmonton-Rutherford, education, the environment, the plight of the disabled, labour strife in the province, the lack of any real economic diversification, the waste of time and money on a senatorial election that nobody wanted, and the decline of the family farm. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that the more things change, the more they really do stay the same.

Percy sums up by saying of the June 1 throne speech that year: I don't see a vision, a blueprint; it should be a master plan. Now, I imagine you know where I'm going with this. The concerns that Percy had heard from the electorate in 1989 are pretty much exactly the same concerns that I heard time and again from the people of Edmonton-Rutherford in 2004. Quite frankly, my response to last Wednesday's Speech from the Throne is pretty much identical as well. The people of Edmonton-Rutherford want and deserve a plan for the future that is truly visionary. I believe that in large part the Alberta Liberal Party's election campaign outlined what that vision should be, and I believe that the results show that the people of Edmonton-Rutherford share that vision.

Our leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, spoke of it in this Chamber on Thursday. The Alberta legacy act would see a concrete action plan instituted to ensure that all Albertans today and tomorrow would benefit from the truly unbelievable natural resource revenue that we are now experiencing. Our leader spoke about democratic reform and renewal, about allowing the people of this province to choose for themselves what changes they might want to see in our electoral and parliamentary systems.

Mr. Speaker, he spoke of the need to preserve a publicly funded health care system. I can assure the Premier and this government that the people of Edmonton-Rutherford are not interested in a third way or even a second way and certainly not a fourth way. They just want to know that the health care system will be there when they need it. They want to know that they can get an ambulance in an emergency and that there will be a hospital bed, not a hallway gurney, awaiting every patient. They want to see the elimination of the health care premium tax, and they certainly do not want to pay $500 or $600 a month for health insurance. Establishing a wellness fund, creating a public drug plan, and improving long-term and seniors' care centres: these are visionary ideas that are attractive not only to the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford but to all Albertans.

Funding the recommendations of the Learning Commission might not be visionary, but it is very clearly what people want, and we should be doing it now, not later. The Liberal plan for community schools is visionary, Mr. Speaker, and would prevent several school closures that we are likely to be seeing take place in this coming year. I, myself, am very pleased to see that the government is moving towards an endowment fund for postsecondary education. If we could only convince them now to adopt the Official Opposition's plan for reinvesting in the heritage savings trust fund, then we would be doing something that would benefit all Albertans for generations to come.

Speaking of vision, only the Official Opposition talked about creating an endowment fund for the arts and the humanities. With the wealth that we have in this province, we should be forward thinking and doing everything we can to ensure that our children will grow up and live in a well-rounded society and have as much exposure to the arts and culture community as possible.

Public auto insurance and a return to the regulation of the electrical and natural gas industries. Again, Mr. Speaker, this might not be seen as visionary, but it certainly is a recognition that there are some things that the government must be involved in. There is no doubt in my mind whatsoever that the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford would agree.

Mr. Speaker, there was no mention in the throne speech of the proposed high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary. If this Premier is truly looking for a legacy project, I want my grandchildren and my great-grandchildren to marvel at the fact that their forefathers did not wait until it was needed before we began planning and building something that we all know is a service that will be required eventually.

Mr. Speaker, last fall I personally visited nearly 10,000 homes in Edmonton-Rutherford. I spoke to literally thousands of residents, and those were some of the concerns that were expressed to me, some of the plans that they had hoped to see their government introduce. While the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford may not have been successful in achieving the scope of change that they had hoped for, I have committed to represent them and their desire for that change to the very best of my ability in this Assembly.

In closing, I would like to take a moment to thank some of the people that have helped me over the years and some of the people that have helped the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. I would be remiss if I did not thank Mr. Ian McClelland for his three and a half years of service in this Assembly, so on behalf of all of the people in Edmonton-Rutherford I say thank you to Ian.

Mr. Speaker, I have an immeasurable debt of gratitude to my incredible team of campaign volunteers, who contributed in so many different ways to the very successful campaign last November. Of course, you will know that behind every candidate, win or lose, there is a supportive family entrusted with holding the home front together while we are out on the campaign trail. I would not be here today were it not for the support of my wife, Lois, our children Christopher and Kimberly, along with the watchful eye of our guardian angel, Nicole.

Lastly and most importantly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a very gracious thank you to the voters of Edmonton-Rutherford for they have entrusted me with the responsibility of representing them during this our 100th year as a province and beyond. I believe that I am up to that task, and I have no intention of disappointing them.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in, if anyone has any questions.

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations on your recent nomination.

It is an honour and privilege to stand and give my maiden speech in this Chamber. In November I was humbled by the trust that the constituents of Calgary-Hays placed in me to represent them in the Legislature. I look forward to representing their interests and addressing their concerns both here in the Chamber as well as in the constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to formally introduce myself to my colleagues in this room. When I was elected to represent the people of Calgary-Hays, it signified the start of my third career in public service. In 1970 I joined the Canadian armed forces and served 10 years and retired with the rank of sergeant. During this time I had various postings, which included the Middle East, Cyprus, and Germany. I joined the Calgary Police Service in 1980 and served there for approximately 24 years before retiring in 2002-2003. During my previous two careers I served the public interest of all Canadians and then the citizens of Calgary. I look forward to continuing to represent the public interest of the constituents of Calgary-Hays and of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, in the past few months I have had the opportunity to meet and speak with many members of the communities I now represent, first as a candidate during the election and afterwards as their elected representative in this Legislature. These conversations allowed me to hear and respond to the issues that weigh most heavily on Albertans who call Calgary-Hays home.

Education, health care, and infrastructure were identified as the top three concerns. My constituents want to know that the government they elected will ensure that schooling, both primary and postsecondary, will be available and affordable for their children now and for years in the future. They want to know that their health care system will be able to handle the demands that are placed on it and that their grandchildren will be able to access the same if not a better level of care than we do today. Finally, they want to ensure that our road systems and other infrastructure will be up to the task of handling the volumes of traffic and usage that these systems will see as Alberta continues to grow.

The Speech from the Throne, delivered by the Lieutenant Governor, built on the pillars of the 20-year plan that were raised a year ago. Financially our province is in a very enviable position. We will soon be able to completely retire our debt. This will free up extra funds in the budget to address issues across the province.

As some of you may know, Calgary-Hays is a newly created constituency. Prior to last fall's election this constituency was the eastern part of Calgary-Shaw, but due to the explosive growth of this area two-thirds of Calgary-Shaw was split off to form Calgary-Hays. This riding is bordered by the city limits on the east, the Bow River on the west and south, and, it says, Glenmore Trail on the north, but that's not correct. It's the Bow River also on the north.

While this is a new constituency, we have had the great fortune to have one of the most innovative and forward-thinking projects being undertaken within its borders. The construction of the newest hospital in my constituency is a fantastic example of the provincial investment into health infrastructure. The planned facility will give Calgarians and people in the surrounding area another point of service to access health care. The planned opening of the first phase in 2009 will add 350 beds to the health care system.

This health campus, as it is being called, will not only be a hospital; it will be an innovative facility. It will allow for multiple postsecondary educational institutions to train health care professionals in an entirely new way. This health campus represents the best in cross-ministry initiatives, where the goals of improving provincial infrastructure, increasing Albertans' access to health care, and ensuring that Alberta continues to be the leading edge in advanced education can be met through the completion of a single project.

Mr. Speaker, on the eve of our provincial centennial celebration Alberta is well positioned to continue being a world leader in many areas. With investments into projects such as the south Calgary health campus, Alberta is breaking new ground and discovering new solutions to old problems. I look forward to working with my constituents and colleagues here in the Legislature to ensure that the quality of life we enjoy today exists for future generations.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to have the opportunity to rise tonight and respond to the Speech from the Throne. As I begin, I would like to congratulate our Lieutenant Governor, the Honourable Norman Kwong, on his appointment as our Queen's representative in Alberta, and I wish him all the best in his new position.

As this is my first speech in this House as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, I would like to take a moment to thank also the people of Lacombe-Ponoka for electing me as their representative.

Mr. Speaker, before I go any further, I would like to take this time to introduce my wife, Pauline, who is sitting up in the nosebleeds here on the other side. This afternoon you met my son Wayne. He was down from Fort McMurray. We also have three other children: Julia, who is studying for her master's degree in divinity in Vancouver; a son Mark, who is studying for his medical doctorate degree in Calgary; and Lorne, who is studying business at NAIT.

An Hon. Member: Your retirement fund.

Mr. Prins: That's my retirement fund. Correct.

Lacombe-Ponoka is a new constituency that was formed after the realignment of boundaries in 2004. Our constituency lies on the golden corridor in central Alberta. We enjoy both the benefits and challenges of an extremely active and growing economy. The Lacombe-Ponoka constituency is home to the largest ethylene plant in the world and about 20 additional related petrochemical plants which produce all kinds of products from ethylene: anhydrous ammonia, CO₂, nitrogen, oxygen, and many other products associated with these plants.

At Alix we have the largest single-cell malt plant in the world, processing more than 500 tonnes of barley per day and making it into malt. This is enough malt to make about 3 million litres of beer per day. Most of this malt is exported to the U.S. and Asia. [interjections] I think we do keep some at home.

Lacombe is home to a federal government agriculture research station, which includes a meat research lab, and a provincial government agriculture research and plant breeding station. Plant breeding is important to both the feeding industry and the malt industry. The Lacombe provincial ag research station just released two new varieties of barley that outyield previous varieties and will soon be available to our farmers.

Lacombe-Ponoka is also home to a highly intensive agricultural industry. We have among the highest densities of livestock, both dairy and beef, hogs, chickens, vegetable greenhouses, seed potato farms in the province. This is in addition, of course, to all the traditional forms of crop production, which would include wheat, barley, oats, canola, corn, hay, and silage crops.

It is really an honour to represent my constituents, and I look forward to working with all my colleagues in tackling the issues that face our province. There are many areas addressed in the throne speech, but I'll restrict my comments to a few that are especially important to me and my constituency.

I was born in Lacombe to an immigrant family. We were not rich; we were not poor. We never lacked anything we needed. We always counted our blessings. My father came to Canada from Holland in 1939 at the age of 19. Soon after he arrived, the war started, and he enlisted in the Dutch army, which had actually started a unit in Stratford, Ontario. He served for five years in the Caribbean. At the end of the war he found himself in Holland again. This time when he came back to Canada, he brought with him a Dutch war bride. My mother came in 1947. They're both 84 years old now. They've been married almost 58 years. My father was here last week for the Speech from the Throne, which he enjoyed very much.

I have been a farmer for more than 30 years, and in representing a rural constituency, I believe the continuous support and expansion of our agrifood sector is one of the keys to achieving further diversification and prosperity for people throughout rural Alberta and all Albertans wherever they may work or live. While much work has been done toward growing the ag industry, there are many opportunities that remain untapped, particularly on the value-added front. With this in mind I encourage our government and the private sector to collaborate on diversification strategies, such as the rural development initiative, and encourage funding in ag research, especially plant breeding and crop sciences.

While I'm on the subject of agriculture, I know I'm not alone in expressing my disappointment with the recent court ruling in Montana which has delayed the opening of the U.S. border to Canadian cattle and beef products. This is extremely frustrating for our producers and everyone employed within this sector. However, I am confident that the provincial and federal governments will work with our neighbours to the south to resolve this impasse and have the border open to normal trade again.

In the interim our cattle producers have shown incredible resourcefulness and determination in adapting to the challenging economic realities. We've had some farms that have not survived this disaster. This is regrettable, and it caused some terrible hardships. We will continue to work with the cattle sector to help them through this difficult time.

As a member of the Standing Policy Committee on Agriculture and Municipal Affairs I'm looking forward to working with my colleagues and cattle producers toward the goal of normalizing trade relations with the United States and other international markets. We must ensure that our beef exports, be it cattle or packaged products, are safe and of the highest quality. However, this incident just reinforces the need to develop our own packing and processing industry within the province so that we are not as reliant on export of live animals, especially those over 30 months. Without a doubt,

Mr. Speaker, freedom of market access is extremely important to all our livestock farmers, not only those producing cattle and ruminants but also those producing hogs, which are affected by trade issues at this very time.

Listening to the Speech from the Throne, I was encouraged to hear that our government will continue to advocate for marketing choice for wheat and barley farmers. Providing Alberta wheat and barley producers with a marketing choice is a matter of fairness and marketing freedom. The combination of the global marketplace and marketing on the Internet is opening up new opportunities for producers to grow, process, add value, and market their products independently of the Canadian Wheat Board and generate greater revenues for farmers and producers. Technology has enabled producers to access niche markets, negotiate prices with buyers, organize transport arrangements independently of the CWB, and allowing these producers the freedom to choose how to market their products will enable them to take advantage of these opportunities and will finally place them on a par with their counterparts in eastern Canada and other countries, who have enjoyed this free market access for decades.

As I have previously mentioned, Mr. Speaker, development of rural Alberta is essential to our economic diversification and to the future prosperity of our province. One of the major prerequisites to having viable and sustainable rural communities is ensuring that they have access to all of the necessary resources and services, including water. It is too bad, but surface water is not a resource that is evenly distributed across this province. As a result, there are numerous communities which depend on groundwater or aquifer water in order to satisfy their domestic or municipal needs. This places great pressures upon existing groundwater resources.

From my personal experiences I have become increasingly aware of the challenges associated with freshwater distribution. Over the past years I have travelled several times to Africa, in fact six times to Sierra Leone in west Africa, to help build safe and reliable water systems that can be used both for human consumption and for commerce. These were very simple systems, but they produced immediate results in social and economic spinoffs.

Here within our province I've also been active in this particular area. As reeve of Lacombe county I was a founding member of the North Red Deer River Regional Water Services Commission, which collaborated with various levels of government to gain approval and, hopefully, funding for the construction of the North Red Deer River regional water project. And I say "hopefully" because at this very moment in time they tendered out the project. It was about $4 million more than what they had hoped for, and the communities will probably be back to the government to see if we can help them out again.

Once completed, this system will distribute much-needed water from the Red Deer River, treated by the city of Red Deer, to the towns of Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, the counties of Lacombe and Ponoka, and the First Nation reserve at Hobbema. Aside from providing water services to these communities, the north Red Deer River regional water system is considered an environmentally sound solution, as it helps conserve groundwater resources, which, instead of being used to satisfy municipal demands, can be used for farm and agricultural purposes. We hope such an arrangement will enable our farmers to enjoy a reliable source of water for domestic use and livestock watering needs while also helping preserve the groundwater aquifers.

The town of Lacombe, currently with a population of around 10,000, uses about 220 million gallons of water a year; it's about a billion litres. This amount of water is approximately equal to what about a hundred average size livestock farms may consume annually. So you can see that as the town of Lacombe was using water, 220 million gallons a year, it was starting to affect the availability of water on the nearby farms.

I would like to point out that interbasin transfer systems are consistent with the Water for Life strategy, which calls for better management of our water resources and supplies. I'm fully convinced of the merits of this system, and I look forward to working with the ministries involved in this project and expanding it throughout the province and helping ensure that our water resources are preserved for generations to come. I also look forward to working with my colleagues to determine an affordable and sustainable solution for funding municipal water systems.

Speaking of future generations, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend two of my colleagues, the Minister of Advanced Education and the Minister of Education, on their commitment to ensuring that our education system remains sufficiently funded and that our students receive the best instruction possible in the greatest schools in the world. Our schools have excellent teachers, programs, and curriculum. Our students have a good choice of schools to attend and have shown their excellence by posting world-class results in achievement tests.

During the Speech from the Throne I was pleased to hear that the government has a plan in place to improve access to advanced education. As the hon. Lieutenant Governor announced, the province plans to add 60,000 new spaces to our postsecondary system by the year 2020, 15,000 of which will come in the next three years. I commend the government on this commitment, and I hope that the province fully supports all postsecondary institutions, public and independent alike, in their efforts to create more student spaces.

The Canadian University College, located in the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency, is one of several independent, not-for-profit postsecondary institutions accredited to grant specific degrees at the university level. Many of these independent institutions are expanding their capacity and contributing to the goal of creating new spaces for Alberta's postsecondary students. Although independent universities are assisting the province in its long-term goals, efforts to expand their capacity are not being funded by the province.

Once such example, Mr. Speaker, is Edmonton's King's University College. This year King's is investing $6 million to create about 400 new spaces to meet the growing demands and help keep many of our students here in Alberta. Also, Concordia University College in Edmonton is currently spending $10 million on an expansion program at no cost to the government. While these projects are not huge in comparison to the U of A or the U of C, it is important to note that these institutions are not coming to the government looking for capital funding. They are paying for their own expansion projects using donations from supporters.

Being from a constituency that boasts about 1,500 to 2,000 students attending the independent schools, one of the highest concentrations in the province, I am aware of numerous independent schools that are providing cutting-edge education to our students. I believe these schools are a huge asset, as they not only provide choice and quality education to their students, but they also help alleviate some of the pressure on our public school system. As any other institution they teach the mandatory curriculum that is prescribed by the province, and for this portion of their instruction I feel they should receive full and equitable funding from the government.

Ensuring that these schools are financially healthy means that they can continue to complement our public and separate school systems and help keep class sizes down. If any of them had to be shut down due to inadequate funding, the public system would have to absorb, in some cases, large numbers of new students. This could increase class sizes and place additional financial pressure on the public system. With this in mind I believe that fully funding the independent schools, both K to 12 and postsecondary, for the mandatory portion of their curriculum is not only in the best interests of our students but the province as well.

The last topic I would like to briefly touch upon, Mr. Speaker, is seniors. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I'm pleased the province is continuing to respond to the needs of our seniors. Throughout their working lives our seniors have been dedicated to seeing Alberta grow into a prosperous province and a vibrant society. They were instrumental in creating the Alberta advantage, so I believe that as they reach their golden years, we should be compassionate and responsive to their needs to make sure that they are able to enjoy the fruits of their labour. With this in mind I'm committed to working with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and all my colleagues in this House in finding ways of reducing burdens upon our seniors.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you again for the opportunity to speak today and to voice my optimism for the future of our great province. I look forward to working with my constituents.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Anyone have any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first time speaking to this Assembly is not my first time speaking from this floor. Thanks to an invitation from the Model Legislature in November my first time speaking here was with youth of the province, part of a provincial community with whom I've spent the last 30 years of my life.

My life journey began in the Crowsnest Pass and led to the capital region. It's a journey I shared in part with my husband of 32 years, Dick Mather, who served on the Edmonton public school board and on city council. My being here today marks the end of one vocation and the beginning of another. It marks a return to the classroom to experience life again as a student. It is the beginning of a new set of associates, colleagues, and new friends. Yet with these new beginnings, Mr. Speaker, there are some things that I'm not leaving behind. Chief of these is my constituency, in which I've served as an educator and which I now represent.

For three decades I've worked in one of Edmonton's most diverse and dynamic communities. Thirty-five years ago Mill Woods did not exist. The town that makes up Edmonton's southeast quadrant has grown from nothing to become a community of close ties and co-operation. For the past 10 years I've sat on the Mill Woods President's Council, where I've seen a growth in strength, achievement, and self-respect.

Edmonton is Alberta's most diverse city. It is a representative Canadian city, multicultural before the word became fashionable. Mill Woods is built on and has extended that tradition. The people of Mill Woods with whom I work hold passionately to Canadian values and believe in the Alberta opportunity. They care for each other and take their citizenship seriously. To serve this community is a privilege and a responsibility, and I sincerely thank them for giving me the opportunity to serve as their member. I thank them for their encouragement as I went door to door, and I thank those who volunteered on the campaign trail and my family for its support. I acknowledge my predecessor, Dr. Don Massey, whose 11 years as an MLA were a model of service and representation that I intend to follow.

A majority of my constituents are new Canadians, Mr. Speaker, yet many of them have a clearer sense of the Canadian identity than some of my generation who have lived here for a lifetime. Catering to our diversity has not weakened our social fabric; it has made us stronger. My constituents' range of religious beliefs and practices is not something we have to tiptoe around. It is a source of strength, an opportunity for exploration when we get together. One of them said to me recently: you know, it doesn't matter what we call God. I have been blessed and enriched to be part of talks where we have shared our deepest values. Our values, what really matters to us and not just what we say we believe, are an expression of what binds us together.

Another part of my past life that I've not left behind in coming here is my commitment to education. Alberta led the country in the adoption of progressive education in the 1930s under the hon. William Aberhart. Mr. Aberhart was an educator himself who served as Minister of Education as well as Premier. While he held conservative religious views, he defended the teaching of evolution as part of a liberal arts education, a heritage he prized. In the past decade Edmonton has led the continent in the offering of educational choices.

Education is a lifelong experience. We are learning from our time in the womb until we draw our last breath. We are aware of seniors who have gone in search of new adventures, of physical challenge, travel, and university degrees, and we hear regularly of new findings of incredible learning feats by the very young. It is in this connection that I raise the shadow portfolio I have been assigned, that of Children's Services.

The children's services undertaken by this government began with a safety net for those who, as a result of poverty, family breakup, and other factors, found themselves without the supports once provided by the extended family. In the current debate on national child care I sometimes come up against the belief that it's not the job of the state to be providing a universal care system that many people prefer to undertake for themselves. Yet no one I've talked to who may feel this way doubts that there is a place for the state in education.

Mr. Speaker, we have made an arbitrary division between child care and education. No one who has worked with children and youth in the public education system as I have would doubt that a large part of effective education consists of providing a supportive environment of caring relationships where learning can take place. Likewise, no one can spend time with young children in their own homes, nurseries, daycare centres, and play groups and doubt that education is taking place.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to expand our focus on children from the basic mandate of a single department. In the 1970s the Lougheed government established early childhood services, an amalgam of health, social work, education, and psychology that became the basis of this province's public kindergarten program. Its focus extended beyond preschool to an integrated and organic approach to life and learning. Its benchmark was not standardized testing but an ongoing assessment of social, physical, intellectual, cultural, and emotional growth of each child. In the past decade we have lost this wider focus on children, and we need to regain it. It is not enough for us to repeat that children are our future and then look at them as an endless supply for our workforce and as consumers for a well-oiled economy. We need to start with children now and be aware of how choices we make in all areas of life and public policy impact on them.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the government's launch of Alberta's Promise initiative for children, and I thank my worthy opponent the hon. Minister of Children's Services for sending me a little red wagon so that I can show my support of this initiative. I urge the government to expand the leadership and participation of this program beyond party and sector so that all who are involved in work with children can relate to it in some way.

I also invite the government to assess the impact of all areas of public policy on children. Such an assessment would include Alberta Health, Education, Justice, Environment, and small business. In fact, it would be incumbent for an agency to show how its work does not affect children. The mark of an advanced society is seen in how it treats its smallest and youngest members. Let us show that Alberta in its second century belongs in that league.

A third part of my life I expect to continue to practice in my new vocation is the role of communicator. That's a role I learned and partnered with my husband, Dick, who worked in media before entering politics. It's a role I fostered in my leadership at J. Percy Page high school in the planning and building of the TeleLearning Centre. It's an inherent part of my role as a representative in the Legislature, for to be a representative is to 're-present' views and experiences until they become part of another's reality.

To be a communicator is more than to be a speaker. It's more than to be a spokesperson for the people I represent. It's to be a builder of consensus. Communicate and communion share the same roots. To commune is to spend time together. It means to listen and observe as well as to show and tell. It means to encourage others to find their own way to say something rather than to get them on side with me.

It is in this conviction that I have taken the step into the world of politics. I believe there is far more that we hold in common than the issues that we say divide us. The most pressing issues of our time, as the Asian tsunami brought into focus, are not the divisions of Liberals or Conservatives or Alliance or New Democrats or even Canadians or Albertans; they are human issues, and our response to them will depend on our human values.

I've received welcomes from members in all quarters of this building. To you, Mr. Speaker, and to the security staff and Clerk's office I give my thanks for easing my transition here. This has been a reminder of another new beginning, when I had to learn to get around in a new way after a car accident. My work in this Assembly will be in the same spirit.

To my counterpart in the government, the hon. Minister of Children's Services, I have promised to do my utmost to raise the profile of her portfolio with her cabinet and caucus colleagues. To my neighbour the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner I extend my concerns for the rural constituencies of this province at a challenging time. With him and others on this side of the House I share a belief in our need for a more grassroots democracy.

To conservatives who want to live by the principle of conserving what is best in our society as well as in our environment, I add my support against a cynicism that feels that we must roll over before the strong and powerful in order to be on the winning side. To democrats who are willing to explore new ideas for renewing our democracy, I offer a sympathetic ear and an open mind. Last, to my colleagues to whom the word liberal is more than a label but a description of a wise and tolerant generosity, I pledge my part to articulate a new vision for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I see an Alberta where urban and rural communities recognize each other's value and can support each other's concerns. I see an Alberta where youth and seniors see each other's strengths and hear their stories. I see an Alberta where resources contribute to the quality of life and where people are not human resources but our focus. I see an Alberta where workers are cobuilders of the dream and management takes initiative to facilitate leisure and family life. I see an Alberta where our outdoor spaces stretch our inner spaciousness and the environment is not the concern of lobby groups but the treasure of all. I see an Alberta where faith is not competing creeds but a shared valued and hope is not wishful thinking but energizing confidence in the gifts we share.

Mr. Speaker, the members of my party, in common with some members of every party in this Assembly, believe there is a better way to do the business of government. Parties may differ in their social and spending priorities, but many of us truly believe in a democracy that is open to the best input from our fellow citizens, with decision-making closer to the people who live with the impact of these decisions.

Alberta Liberals are not positioning ourselves to become the next dynasty to rule the province for 40 years. In fact, if we are successful in the democratic reforms we are proposing, we will close the possibility for any party to develop that kind of headlock on government. No party has a monopoly on truth.

If the government brings in proposals that are good for this province and its peoples, I and my colleagues will not be opposed. If the government changes proposals that we criticized earlier and its changes are positive, we will not blame it for changing its mind. When we criticize, we will be constructive. We may propose alternative legislation even if it never comes to a vote. Mr. Speaker, there may be times when, faced with a measure we believe to be harmful, all we can do is to oppose. When we do this, we are still the loyal opposition. The ultimate loyalty of all members of this Assembly is not to a party or leader but to values that unite Albertans.

What are these values, above party and politics? Let's look at our provincial motto. Alberta's motto, strong and free, is also a line in our national anthem. What are these qualities we've chosen to highlight, to stand on guard for?

It takes strength to admit mistakes or to change our minds. To be rigid or self-righteous isn't strong; it's brittle. It takes strength to be vulnerable and compassionate. To be hard, unfeeling, to keep all comers at bay isn't strong; it's defensive. It takes strength, courage, character to be in a tough situation without complaining, blaming, or throwing one's weight around. To be pushy or loud isn't strength; it's aggression. We show our strength and influence in the quality of our presence.

We show our freedom in our willingness to think outside the box. To say that we don't need anyone and can go it alone doesn't prove that we're free; it shows that we're afraid of dialogue and discussion. To be free is to be able to listen to and consider many points of view. To say that nobody's going to tell me what to do isn't freedom; it's stubbornness, slavery to habit. To be free is to be able to enter relationships, to be connected to others, to admit our interdependence. To refuse to be tied down isn't freedom; it's fear of commitment.

To be strong and free isn't to strut or swagger; it's to move and speak with dignity. It takes presence, it takes empathy, it takes conviction, and it takes class. That's the kind of member, the kind of model, the kind of citizen, and the kind of human being I seek to be.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29? Any questions?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for a very eloquent maiden speech. I do, however, want to ask her one question, to ask her if she knows that children are a primary focus of this government and that we have numerous programs for our children because we know that they're the number one concern that we have.

We have initiated programs like Amber Alert; parental leave; parent link centres; supports for families of children with disabilities, a new program in Canada that's there primarily to give family support so that they don't fall apart because of the extra needs of special needs children; the accredited child care programs that are among the first in Canada; the Great Kids awards, that recognize kids that aren't necessarily the brightest or the smartest but have contributed to their communities; a Youth Secretariat that recognizes our youth and has them participate in our programs; the youth at risk and youth in care bursaries that we provide for kids that aren't the smartest and don't have parents and we're their guardians and we want them to go on further in education; a new approach to adoption, which gets more kids into loving homes; a new child welfare program, called Alberta Response Model, that makes sure that we don't tear them out of their homes but try to teach parents to be better parents first because we know that tearing them away from their family is as traumatic as whatever is going on in that home; the bicycle helmet law; the child prostitution laws; the FASD initiatives that are among the best in Canada, that we have here in Alberta; our crystal meth workshops that had the youth participate. I just wanted to ask if you were aware of those programs.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this segment was supposed to be brief questions, brief responses. I'll accept that for now.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, if you so choose, you may respond; you're not forced to.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will respond briefly.

I am aware of all of those wonderful things in Alberta. I believe that we need to stretch even further and go beyond that. We live in the richest place on earth. There should be no child in poverty. There should be no child living without security or safety.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: There being no other questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured and, in fact, amazed that I am standing in this room, the Legislature of the province of Alberta, and about to deliver what is known as my maiden speech. It's been a very long time since the term "maiden" has been applied to me, but I'll take it.

The swearing-in ceremony was for me a very moving moment. I am awestruck when I remember your words that only 763 people over the 100-year history of this Legislature have actually been sworn in with the responsibility to govern their fellow citizens, an awesome responsibility when you really think of it, and I do take these responsibilities that I swore to uphold seriously. I want to govern with fairness, openness, and accountability.

I would like to congratulate the Lieutenant Governor, His Honour Norman Kwong, on his investiture. I have great confidence in his ability to carry out his duties with humility and wit. He will leave his mark on the history of this province. I had the privilege of signing the memorial book for our wonderful former Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole. I wrote that her example of courage, compassion, and caring, and her strength of character to stand up for what she believed in set an example for all of us and one that I would fashion my public life after. Only time will tell.

Mr. Speaker, how appropriate that today is International Women's Day because I am going to honour the women in my life: those that gave me life, those whom I gave life to, and those who sustain and influence my life. I do not stand here alone. I did not get here alone. Behind me are my three daughters – Florence, Shelagh, and Bridget junior – my granddaughters Kerstin and Skye, and my son-in-law Kirk, who, although he is badly outnumbered, has learned to hold his own, also a large family of siblings and their families, who are spread all across Canada, and, in particular, my only sister, Florence, a Manitoba Liberal.

Mr. Speaker, I returned to school at 45 years of age and became a nurse, which awakened in me the latent belief in social justice taught to me so many years ago. I come from a long line of strong women who understood the paramount importance of fairness. The first immigrant ancestor five generations ago was une fille du roi, a girl of the king. They were the young women from France who came alone to the new world to create life and build life to a viable society. The hardships were many. My mother, Florence, was from that line. She owned and ran a manufacturing agency in 1935 which sold taps, dies, drills, and wooden axe handles to Ashdowns. I can guarantee that she was the only woman in that game. My three aunts, who had successful professional careers, remained maiden as a result of all the men who did not return from World War II.

I was educated by nuns. Believe me; they don't come any tougher. By that I mean that they set high standards for social justice. Caring for the poor amongst us and being good stewards of the blessings given to us were at the top of their lists. I come by my Liberal leanings honestly.

But I did not get here by myself. There were many people who believed in me and what I stood for. They believed in the importance of all voices, opinions, and diverse views being heard. They believed, as I, that open discussion is paramount to good governing practices. They believed in the clear, well-thought-out policies and the vision of the Liberal Party for this province. Many of those policies were developed in no small way by Dr. Ken Nicol and successfully articulated by our present Alberta leader, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

I did not get here by myself. Adelle Downs and Kirk Mearns and their small but very effective election team worked extremely hard to get me elected. Sixteen-hour days, seven days a week were the norm, and there were thousands who showed their confidence in me by voting for me, and they do expect me to ask the tough questions and debate the issues.

His Honour the Lieutenant Governor said he had big shoes to fill. I, too, have big shoes to fill as I am representing the constituency of Lethbridge-East, formerly held by Dr. Ken Nicol, the former leader of the Alberta Liberal Party, a man who set the bar high in terms of the respect he garnered in this House, in the province, and in the constituency. Mr. Speaker, between Lois Hole and Ken Nicol I sure have my work cut out for me.

My constituency is one-half of the city of Lethbridge, and I believe that because of that division the city is uniquely represented to this body in a balanced way. I share the representation with my Assembly colleague on the other side of the House, the hon. Minister for Economic Development. The representation is male and female, Liberal and Conservative, business and humanities, experienced and inexperienced, all of which in my mind equals the many diverse views that are held in our city. It represents balance. Mr. Speaker, balance is good.

Lethbridge has a population of 72,712, continues to grow, and with new census figures to be released this fall, I'm sure it'll be the third-largest city in Alberta.

We have the University of Lethbridge, whose business school and education faculty are renowned across Canada, a university that recognizes the importance of wellness and is building a wellness complex that will serve not only the university but also the southern Alberta community. However, Mr. Speaker, this infrastructure does not come cheap, which is why it's important for this government to step up to the plate and fund projects that affect our future in a very significant way. We have the Lethbridge Community College, that has worked with industry to try and encourage apprenticeship programs. We have two research stations, and Lethbridge has the greatest number of PhDs on a per capita basis in Canada.

Lethbridge has the lowest cost of doing business and the lowest personal cost of living. Lethbridge has a 25-member, community-based economic development office which has been successful in attracting five new, large businesses to our community within the last two years. However, Mr. Speaker, despite this good news I can't say enough about BSE and the devastating effect it has had on my constituency and the extended community.

We have the Prairie Baseball Academy, where the young men of summer come to dream in the winter. Our academy, under the dedicated leadership of coach Blair Kubicek, trains young men not only to play baseball but to grow into mature and responsible citizens. Coach has sent many a young man to play in the majors or earn scholarships to American universities. The boys go to university or college and must maintain at the very least a 2.5 grade point average.

But, Mr. Speaker, it isn't all la-la land. There are great concerns. As a former municipal alderman I was very disappointed to see a P3 relationship for the ring roads for Calgary and Edmonton and only $3 billion. I can't believe I just said "only $3 billion." That's a lot of money. But I did, and I know that after years of downloading infrastructure responsibilities by this government onto municipal governments, there are huge infrastructure needs that $3 billion will only begin to address.

In southern Alberta it's imperative that highway 3 be twinned from the Saskatchewan border to the B.C. border. The Canamex highway will bring goods from the north, but not all are destined for the far south. They will branch off and go east and west as well as the goods that come from the B.C. interior that will use highway 3 and then go south.

Mr. Speaker, as a resident of Lethbridge I am horrified that this government would allow blatant discrimination in this province on a geographic basis. I speak of cutting off southern flights, for instance south of Calgary to the municipal airport but continuing to allow flights from the north to land. After all, Edmonton is everyone's capital. The famous flights of our Premier to that very airport would surely point out the authenticity of this argument.

The North American trend in the airline industry is for charter aircraft to provide more direct routes to small city airports. For instance, Denver has many airports allowing choices of where to land depending on what part of the city you're going to do business in. More importantly, it saves many hours off a trip by not having to go through large and overly busy international hub airports when the objective is not to make a connection. Most North American cities, given this new paradigm of travelling for business, would kill to have the opportunity to have a city airport for fixed-wing aircraft. Helicopters' costs are prohibitive to most business travelers.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my last kick at the cat, at least for tonight: the need for provincial standardized care for our vulnerable elderly or those in long-term care. We would not let babies cry. Why are we letting our vulnerable seniors cry? Seniors don't cry out loud. They sit and they inwardly pray: please answer my bell; please come; I only want to go to the bathroom; I just want to be turned because my arm has gone to sleep, and I can't; I just need to be fed; I just want to feel human. They wait because of staff shortages or, in the case of assisted living or designated living, having to pay extra costs for these services because what they're entitled to is so minimal. I pray that none of us here in this House, or more so our parents, will experience that indignity, the indignity of only being a commodity on a bottom line.

We can as a collective Assembly do better, and we must. We owe it to ourselves and to the people who expect us to govern fairly, openly, honestly, and to be accountable. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in.

Nobody wishing to ask a question, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne and to address this Assembly for the first time. I'm truly humbled to be counted amongst the hon. members on both sides of this August body, and I will try very hard to further the work of inspiring members present and past.

May I begin by offering my congratulations to the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock on his return to the Speaker's chair. I also offer my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and indeed to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to briefly introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the Peace River constituency that I am so proud to represent. Lying in the extreme northwest corner of this province, settlement in the Peace River constituency began when the North-West Company established a trading post on the Peace River between Fort Chipewyan and Fort Dunvegan. This post, known as Fort Vermilion, was established in 1788 and is the oldest agricultural settlement in the province.

The original post was moved five miles to its current location in 1831 as settlement in the area expanded, and it exists as a thriving community today. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the old Bay House still stands after many years of service as the family home for Hudson's Bay Company representatives. During its service it even housed the family of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and indeed fostered his early career. The house is an empty shell today, but it remains an important historical feature in the community, and I commend the hard-working group of volunteers there who have fought to preserve it.

Other settlements grew in the area, also established as trading posts to facilitate the growing fur trade. Most notable of these is the area of the present-day town of Peace River, which began life as St. Mary's House in the early 1800s.

As the province of Alberta was established, the constituency of Peace River came into existence in 1905. It has changed shape and undoubtedly character since then, but it has always retained the name. The first elections were held, and the constituency sent its first representative to the Legislature in 1905. That didn't work out too well, Mr. Speaker, so we sent another one in 1906. Peace River has been ably represented ever since, most recently by the hon. Gary Friedel, whose hard work and dedication I would like to recognize here.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency has always been characterized by a pioneer spirit, and this continues even today. Where once we were at the edge of the expansion of the fur trade, we later found ourselves at the edge of agricultural expansion in the province. Still later the forest and energy industries pushed their way northward and today play a vital role in the area economy.

Mr. Speaker, as the economy grew and diversified, the region grew, and today the constituency is home to over 30,000 people. These people are diverse in heritage and culture and language and religion, but they are united in a belief in and a love for the north. We believe that the north is the new economic engine of the province and is poised to assume its role in supplying the benefits that all Albertans enjoy.

Because of these beliefs, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to hear the agenda of this government as set forth in the throne speech. I am pleased that the government has outlined such strong support for rural communities across the province and for their agricultural base. We in the north are concerned for our rural future, and I am pleased with the commitments made. I am also pleased by a strong commitment to innovation in health care, for I believe that continued spending expansion will harm not help our health care system. I am very pleased to see such a strong commitment to postsecondary education access and delivery. This is the vital engine that will indeed provide our access to the future, and I agree that now is the time to act.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'm perhaps most pleased with the strong commitment to infrastructure. I believe that Alberta can fuel its continuing economic miracle by supporting regions of expansion in this province. These regions need help to build healthy, safe, and attractive communities that are able to draw and support people and services. I agree that we should make Alberta the best province in which to live, work, and play. Our continued economic prosperity is vital to this goal.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the government has recognized that there is work to do to ensure that all Albertans benefit from the prosperity we enjoy, and I support the initiatives outlined.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would again offer my congratulations and my thanks to you for your support. I would also like to thank the people of the Peace River constituency, who have chosen to place their trust in me. I wish to convey to them that I deeply understand the responsibilities this includes, and I would like to provide now my solemn promise to be a tireless advocate for the Peace River constituency during my time here.

With your permission I would now move that we adjourn debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 9, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/03/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Sadaaki Numata, ambassador of Japan to Canada, and his wife. Also joining us today is Mr. Takeuchi, Japan's consul general to Alberta, and his wife.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was pleased to host our honoured guests at an official luncheon, and I was very pleased to learn that one of His Excellency's hobbies is folksinging. He quoted in his speech today Alberta's songwriter laureate Ian Tyson with a verse from Four Strong Winds. He commented on the weather and how the winds had brought him here to the province of Alberta. I had suggested to him that there might actually be another song that Ian Tyson wrote that would be most appropriate. It's called Springtime in Alberta, and it goes something like this:

Just like springtime in Alberta
Warm sunny days and the skies of blue
Then without a warning
Another winter storm comes raging through
And the mercury is falling
I am left all alone
Springtime in Alberta
Chills me to the bone

Mr. Speaker, Japan is Alberta's largest overseas trading partner. Annual two-way trade between this province and Japan totals nearly $2.5 billion. But of course our relationship goes far beyond commerce. This year marks the 25th anniversary of Alberta's sister province ties with the prefecture of Hokkaido.

I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: I sit in apprehension of St. Patrick's Day, March 17.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't sing, so we're not going to be hearing me sing in this Legislature.

I have two introductions this afternoon. First, it's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a very accomplished young man, Mr. Robert Dixon, who is with us today in the members' gallery. Robert is the 2004 4-H Premier's award recipient, the highest honour the Alberta 4-H program bestows on a member. This award recognizes young Albertans that demonstrate strong project management, leadership, and communication skills plus dedication to their community. Winners are selected based on their 4-H and community involvement and performance at the Alberta 4-H selections program. Like many 4-H members Robert is now pursuing a future in agriculture. As a past 4-H member it's a pleasure to introduce Robert, his mother Barb, Mark Muchka, and Corinne Skulmoski from our 4-H branch. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and be recognized in this House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It is my pleasure also to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Miss Krista Wurz, a grade 5 student from the Morinville Colony school. Her poster on farm safety was selected as the winning entry in a recent farm safety poster contest organized by the Stony Plain Multicultural Heritage Centre. Miss Wurz is accompanied today by her family members. Also in the gallery I'd like to introduce two women who organized the farm safety poster contest, Mrs. Jeanette Smith and Mrs. Judy Kesanko of the Stony Plain Multicultural Heritage Centre. They are all seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 45 students, parents, and teachers from the Boyle school in my constituency. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly here today a 17-member advisory group of principals and vice-principals who are serving as volunteers on a committee that was appointed by the former minister of learning to conduct a review and to make a recommendation regarding Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 78, which asks the government to consider establishing a new council of education executives.

I will ask each guest, as I call their names, to please rise and to remain standing until I have introduced all 17: from Lethbridge, Carol Steen; Joe Lepage, Strathmore; Mark Francis, Athabasca; Carol Grant-Watt, Airdrie; Ross Tyson, Edmonton; Rob Cowie, Vulcan; Larry Albrecht, Okotoks; Dave Elwood, Rocky Mountain House; Karen Bartsch, Brooks; Ray Battochio, Stettler; Marc Frey, Fairview; Gord Walters, Red Deer; Bob Tredger, Edson; Dianne Yee, Calgary; Dave Brecht and Irene Washylk from Edmonton; and the group leader from Rocky Mountain House, Mr. Jimmy Clark. Please welcome our guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly guests from Edmonton-Mill Woods. We have 75 students from Meyonohk elementary school along with their teachers, Mr. Victor Wang and Mrs. Trudy Warkentin. I ask our guests to please rise and receive the traditional and warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two influential members of the Alberta Women's Liberal Commission, Mary Amerasinghe and Trudy LaRose, who are seated in the public gallery. I'd like them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today and it is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Rob Burton, an extraordinary young man from my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. This young man is studying in a home-based self-education program and this June will be going to Europe on a study tour of 13 countries. He has raised his own money for this educational trip by starting his own business. He is both a talented basketball player and a skilled pianist. He has a keen interest in constitutional law and a strong desire to make a difference for the good. This fall he'll be attending George Wythe college on an early entrance Andel character prize scholarship, which is awarded to one youth leader per year. For the last two weeks Rob Burton has been a volunteer here for me at the Legislature and has been a great asset. I would ask Rob Burton to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition. The first Official Opposition question.

Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another scandal. An Enron commissioned report on Project Stanley in Alberta states that "strategies by many players to influence prices appear to have been fairly common." Engage Energy Canada was active in Alberta's electricity market during the time Enron was ripping off consumers. To the Premier: knowing that market manipulation was common in Alberta, why did the government employ a former executive of a company that cashed in on electricity deregulation, Engage Energy, to be the market surveillance administrator?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the answer to that, and I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to first and foremost say that during the transition period when this was happening, all Albertans were protected by legislative mechanisms, that despite any price volatility or even if there were alleged manipulation, hedges were in place that Albertans would not be paying the price of any price volatility during that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Energy then saying that there was no price manipulation during that time in the development of Alberta's deregulated electricity market?

Mr. Melchin: What we are saying is that during a transition it was anticipated that as you're adjusting to new rules, everybody has to get used to what the rules are in a new marketplace versus the regulated marketplace. To allow that, Albertans would be protected for a number of years, and that went through to August of 2000 before the power purchase arrangements were sold. Through that time of transition Albertans would pay a legislated hedge protected on what they were paying in the past for the old generation since Albertans had paid for that generation in the past. In that sense it is possible that some— they are alleged at this stage; investigations are going on. That is why Enron has been referred by the market surveillance administrator to the Competition Bureau. They are taking this seriously, and the matter is now before the Competition Bureau.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, that should be a simple yes or no question. Is the minister saying there was no market manipulation during that period of the development of Alberta's deregulated electricity market? Yes or no?

Mr. Melchin: Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the matter is being investigated, has been investigated in the past with respect to Enron, and we are and will take it very seriously if any evidence is found rather than just allegations. We are seeking to find and support that there is evidence to support abuse, and the market surveillance administrator along with the Competition Bureau take that seriously on behalf of protecting all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Market Surveillance Administrator Review of Enron

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the background of the market surveillance administrator, will the Minister of Energy replace him with someone willing to investigate Enron's scandalous price gouging on behalf of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This still is about protecting all Albertans. The market surveillance administrator has acted and continues to act on behalf of Albertans. In this sense it's important to see that we do look for the facts and the evidence as presented. At this stage that's being reviewed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the interest of looking for the facts and the evidence, why isn't this government and this Minister of Energy directing the market surveillance administrator to investigate Enron's price-fixing?

Mr. Melchin: The market surveillance administrator has been in front of this. They have been asking and requesting information from the Snohomish utility with respect to allegations made against Enron.

You've got to remember that the Snohomish utility in Washington is being sued by the bankruptcy trustee for Enron in that they owe a substantial amount of money to Enron's bankruptcy trustee. They are going to continue, I suspect for some time, to look for all evidence, allegations, or otherwise to support their case. In that light, we are also interested in any evidence that they bring forward, and we're staying on top of it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why do the people of Alberta have to depend on the county of Snohomish, Washington, to defend their rights and dig up the information into Enron's price gouging of the people of Alberta? Why aren't we doing this under this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't get involved in the mechanics of an investigation. Relative to why this particular county is involved, I'll defer to the hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: The market surveillance administrator is acting as a watchdog to protect all Albertans. They are acting in their role just in doing that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Nonsmoking Legislation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has entered the debate surrounding a private member's bill on a workplace smoking ban, but instead of protecting the workers, the Premier has announced the government's intention to put workers' health at risk by introducing amendments that will create exceptions to a workplace smoking ban for bars, casinos, and bingo halls. My questions are to the Premier. What justification does the Premier have in protecting the health of workers in some workplaces but not protecting the health of workers in bars, casinos, and bingo halls?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of procedure this issue is now before the Legislature, and the hon. member along with all members of this Legislature will have the opportunity to debate the bill and whatever amendments might be introduced.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: why is the government prepared to create a policy for an unlevel playing field, especially for small business, by allowing some establishments an exemption from the smoking ban?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, the bill is before the Legislature and will be duly debated in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: why is government policy or government proposed policy focused on smokers' rights rather than on workers' rights to good health?

Mr. Klein: Again, Mr. Speaker, the bill is before the Legislature, and this member will have an opportunity to debate it at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No question today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development talked about Alberta's six-point recovery strategy. One of the elements of the strategy is inventory management; that is, compensating producers who are willing to set market-ready cattle or calves aside in exchange for compensation for their feed costs. While this program has admirable goals, could the minister please explain why some producers have yet to receive a program payment even months later?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question, and we are getting calls on this issue. The uptake that we had on the calf set-aside program and the fed cattle set-aside program has been very, very high. It's been tremendous. So far there are 502 registered bidders for the national fed cattle set-aside program. The auctions are held almost every week of the program. In addition, more than 13,000 producers applied to set aside 2004 calves. That represents 675,000 animals.

So far we've paid more than 7,000 of the 13,000 applications, and we're sending out more payments twice weekly. However, there may be some producers who have not yet received their payments, and if this is the case, I would urge all hon. members to let them know to contact the rural services division of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. Another key element of the six-point recovery strategy remains the CAIS program. What is the minister doing to ensure that this program is reacting appropriately to the needs of Alberta producers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta continues to work with our federal and provincial counterparts on the CAIS program, and all of the provincial ministers as well as the federal minister want to ensure that it's responsive to producers' needs. In that light, today we announced that we have extended the election deadline for the 2005 program year from March 31 to May 31, 2005. That will give our producers more time to consider the benefits of the program and allow them to make the right decision for their farming operations.

We also addressed an inequity that exists for CAIS participants who made their deposits before the requirement was reduced to one-third for the 2003 and 2004 program years. Now producers who contributed over the one-third level can access those deposit funds almost immediately, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is for the same minister. Are there any additional changes to the CAIS program in the works?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are, as I said, working with our industry and federal counterparts to develop alternatives to the current deposit requirement. All federal and provincial ag ministers will review these alternatives later this year. Alberta is hosting the federal/provincial meetings in July of this year, and we have asked our departments to work with us on alternatives. Alberta wants to be a leader in setting this program's direction, and we're going to continue to strive for that by working with our federal/provincial counterparts as this is a fed/prov agreement.

I might add that all of the provincial ministers regardless of party stripe, Mr. Speaker, believe that this is the program for the farmers of the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Government Investments

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government has a history of allowing the heritage savings trust fund to be invested in companies that are deemed to be dangerous to human health and even human rights, such as Talisman Energy, numerous tobacco companies, and now even Lockheed Martin corporation, a leading weapons manufacturer. My question is for the Minister of Finance. Is there any company that this government would not invest in?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, we have very competent investment managers that are investing billions of dollars on behalf of Albertans. Our first priority, obviously, is to gain the greatest return on those dollars for current and future generations, and we look for investments to do that.

Investing billions of dollars is very complex. We entrust that to our investment group. It's not simply a matter of buying a few shares of this and a few shares of that. We have a very, very small amount of the heritage fund that's invested in tobacco companies.

I would remind the hon. member and this House that the heritage fund in particular has its books reviewed by an all-party committee of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister then: would the minister please explain to Albertans why this government believes that the bottom line is more important than moral or ethical standards?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't agree that that's the case at all. What I do agree with is putting the investment into the hands of very competent investors to ensure that Albertans get the greatest return.

I will remind the hon. member one more time that the heritage fund books are reviewed by an all-party committee of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the same minister: will this minister please commit to establishing a firm strategy to deal with ethical investment of public funds?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I will commit to ensuring that we invest wisely and that we invest well, and I will also commit to any recommendations that I receive from the standing committee on the heritage fund.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution-related Offences

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that prostitution activities are harmful to the safety and security of residential neighbourhoods. Nearly two years ago a bill was introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and this Assembly passed it. It gives police the power and authority to seize the vehicles of johns soliciting prostitutes. Reflecting the wishes of my constituents, my question is to the Solicitor General. It's been two years. Why haven't there been any seizures yet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. In the year 2003 I did introduce a bill in the Assembly, which you're very aware of, and at that point in time the bill did pass unanimously in this House. I have seen the devastation that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has just described in his community as well as in my own of Calgary-Buffalo. These are tremendous issues that not only deal with the causes of devastation to a community and neighbourhoods but as well to young women that are addicted to drugs and alcohol abuse.

I understand that Alberta Infrastructure and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation have set up a review of the seizure of vehicles with regard to this bill as well as all seizures of vehicles, and I'd ask the minister to supplement this answer, please.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. In fact, my next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When can we expect the enforcement of this piece of legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the advent I would say that the legislation that was brought forward was very good legislation and continues to be good legislation. It's legislation that I as Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation strongly support.

One of the issues that we're having, Mr. Speaker, is quite simply the constitutionality of how this is going to work. We're also looking at the logistics, exactly, as to how this is going to work. The seizure of vehicles is under my department – it is under infrastructure – and we are currently looking at this. I sincerely hope, through to the hon. member, that we will have closure on this issue consistent with the hon. Solicitor General's initial bill that will be put forward very, very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: No more questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

School Utilization Formula

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the Edmonton public school board voted to begin the process of closing four schools, yet yesterday in this Assembly the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation indicated that he's busy evolving the formula. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why are you allowing these school closures to proceed when you've stated publicly that a new utilization formula for urban schools is in the works?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton public school board has taken a very difficult step for a school board, which is that they are looking at potentially closing some schools. I believe that the Edmonton public school board has done it for the right reasons. They're looking at programmatic changes, and I believe that even last night – and I apologize for saying this in the Assembly, but I actually watched the news – one of the principals said that it would be very, very difficult to provide the programming needs when the number of students in the school is getting down so low. I believe that they are doing it for programmatic reasons. There also is the potential to save $700,000, which is taxpayers' money, after all, from the operation and maintenance for the Edmonton public school board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: will the development of this new formula delay further approval of new schools such as the Lois Hole elementary school, proposed for St. Albert's underserved northeast quadrant?

Dr. Oberg: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about two separate issues here: operation and maintenance versus the building of new schools and new capital construction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister enlighten the public as to what this new formula for urban schools will look like and how it will better the community school proposal for rural areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm a firm believer in elected officials, and I'm a firm believer in school boards. I think it is their prerogative, being closer to the grassroots than anyone else. They're ultimately the ones that should be making these decisions on opening or closing of schools. The formula that we're designing will give much more flexibility to the school boards as to what they need to do and what they should do.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will commend the Edmonton public school board for their decisions because they are looking at how they can provide a better learning environment for their children, and ultimately that's what a school board's responsibility is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

2:00 Foreign and Non-union Workers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In December 2004 the government gave Canadian Natural Resources Limited major project status for the Horizon oil sands project. Building trade unions say that the company may be attempting to reduce project costs at the expense of union members and fear that their members will be displaced by foreign workers. To the minister: what does the division 8 designation granted to Canadian Natural Resources Limited mean?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are blessed here in Alberta with a good, diversified economy that's booming and a good government to run the province also.

A division 8 designation allows the parties to negotiate terms and conditions of employment that will be specific to the project only. If an agreement is reached, no strike or lockout could take place until the agreement expires. Mr. Speaker, this designation, of course, is only allowed on projects that have a major economic impact to the province. As you are no doubt aware, the oil sands project is a $10 billion project. There are going to be about 6,000 jobs during construction, and once the operation starts, it will be about 2,000 jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Union members are upset because they feel that their jobs are at risk as a result of the special project status granted to the Horizon oil sands project. Therefore, is it true that the designation granted to the Horizon oil sands project is a union-busting exercise?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker, of course not. You know, like I said earlier and the same yesterday in question period, I mentioned that our economy is well diversified in Alberta. It's very strong. There are jobs for everybody. In fact, the designation assumes that there is a unionized environment. It has no application to non-unionized workers, of course. Again, the purpose of this designation is simply to facilitate a special bargaining process, and the negotiations are voluntary. The Alberta government does not get involved in the process.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that in 2004 about 5,500 temporary foreign workers came to Alberta through the federal government's temporary foreign worker program, will the Horizon oil sands project open the door to cheaper foreign labour in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: No. That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Definitely not cheaper because all the workers that come to Alberta have to meet the Alberta standards we have in place. Of course, I mentioned yesterday during question period also that the employers that are looking at workers and foreign workers first of all have to exhaust their attempts to hire Albertans, Canadians, aboriginal people, people with developmental disabilities. That is the number one priority. If they cannot find the employees they want, then they are allowed to make an application. It is a complicated process and costly, but the application actually goes through the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to hear the questions from the previous member.

In looking at how the provincial cabinet granted this quick and quiet, rare labour code exemption to CNRL for that huge Horizon oil sands project in early December, Horizon was given this power to impose these terms for union and non-union workers under the same long-term contract. My questions today are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will this minister release the documents that led to the decision to grant this controversial division 8 exemption?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't class this as a controversial decision. The process took a long time to arrive at the decision. It doesn't happen overnight. I will review the submissions and what was reviewed and advise you further.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why didn't the minister consult with major stakeholders such as the Alberta building trades, for example, on a matter so important to Alberta's economy and the development of our precious oil sands resource?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I know the previous minister consulted with all parties that were interested. Since my appointment to the ministry I've met with a number of these groups: the unions, non-union members, company officials. I've had meetings constantly with these people, and I don't see any conflict in this issue. Only the Liberals would see it as a conflict and negative, like they always see everything negatively. Any jurisdiction in North America would love to have the challenges that we have here in Alberta: a strong economy and a good government.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: are there any other division 8 applications pending?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, only the opposition, thinking negatively, would assume that there are things happening that we don't know of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Dr. Pannu: With respect, Mr. Speaker, no question today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. McFarland: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was taken aback – to the back of the row.

To say that agricultural producers in Alberta are facing challenging times is quite an understatement. I know that the Canadian agricultural income program and the Alberta hail and crop program are designed to alleviate income issues, but a lot of the producers in our area are expressing frustration with the CAIS program in particular. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. If the CAIS program is supposed to alleviate and moderate some of the income coming into a farm, why are some of the producers still waiting for the finalization and the processing of their applications for this program, particularly those who applied back in September of 2003?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again a very, very good question. I know there are a number of producers out there with concerns on the CAIS program, and as with all programs that are national and have various agreements in them, we've had some growing pains in the CAIS program. It's no exception. It has had overwhelming interest from producers, and for the 2003 claim year alone more than 24,000 Alberta producers submitted applications and almost half of those in the last two-month period after the original deadline was extended. So getting CAIS payments and advances out to producers took longer than we'd hoped.

AFSC has spent a great deal of effort trying to improve their system. We recognized the acute cash flow problems and went with the advance payments, which some other provinces don't do, Mr. Speaker. We're about 80 per cent complete on the 2003s as I stand today. I know that on Monday I mentioned we were at 70 per cent. We're moving closer to the 100 per cent. So far $186 million in payments for the 2003 year. We're anticipating about $256 million to complete final payments for 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, some of the frustrations that particularly grain producers are passing on are their concerns with eroding margins, where PROs for barley have fallen 20 per cent and yellow mustard is down maybe 33 per cent. Could the minister tell us if changes to the CAIS program could be implemented to more accurately reflect the gradual, steadily diminishing margin that we experience?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brings up a very, very important point, and that is that Alberta's agricultural industry has been hit hard in the BSE sector, but that's not the only sector that's being hit hard. Certainly, we should remember to focus on our grain and other sectors of agriculture. They are being hit hard.

When we were in Ottawa last week with the federal/provincial ministers' meetings, the issue of margins and the reference margin was brought up. As I mentioned, we are reviewing the CAIS program this summer with federal and provincial counterparts. Our intent is to address those issues and try to come up with some alternatives that will not, Mr. Speaker, cause us undo stress under the World Trade Organization because agriculture support has to be based either on a producer's most recent three years or on what we call the Olympic average, which is where we are.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Government Aircraft

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of infrastructure has repeatedly refused to table the government flight logs, citing privacy and security reasons. Would the minister please explain through this House to all Albertans what concerns contained in month-old, year-old flight logs are more important than transparency and accountability?

Dr. Oberg: Oh, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I'm not in any way meaning to lecture the hon. member, but there was a freedom of information and privacy act that was passed in this particular Legislature that is paramount to what has happened here. So the answer to the question is the FOIP legislation. I believe strongly in transparency, and for that reason we gave the Liberal opposition access to the flight manifests, and indeed they were even able, I believe – they may not have taken that ability – to photocopy them.

When asked by the New Democrat opposition about whether or not we would make the flight manifests public, I said quite simply: certainly, anything that we can. We are limited though, Mr. Speaker, as you yourself would know very well, by the FOIP legislation.

Mr. Chase: Will the minister quickly table the flight logs, not the manifests, from May through December 2004?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker – and I do apologize for having to say this again – we will table anything that has been through the FOIP process.

Mr. Chase: Will the minister follow the transparent example of the federal government in publishing its flight logs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, transparency and federal Liberals: I'm just having a really difficult time in dealing with that right now.

But we certainly will make our effort. If I do remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is absolutely minimal information that is put on from the federal government about their logs. Indeed, our manifests, I believe, have more information than the flight logs that were actually put on the Internet by the federal Liberals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

High School Completion Rate

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Education. Higher education is increasingly necessary to enable our young people to compete in a global economy. However, many of our students are failing to complete their high school studies, to the detriment of their own success and that of our province. In fact, our high school completion rates are amongst the lowest in Canada. To the minister: can the minister advise the House what steps are being made to address the question of high school completion rates in view of the recommendations of the Learning Commission that 90 per cent of our high school students complete within four years?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to clarify that it's the three-year high school completion rate that rates amongst some of the lowest in Canada. I'm not proud of that, but I just wanted to confirm the fact. In fact, however, our five-year high school completion rate is on the increase. It's up around the 75 per cent mark. I recognize that there's work to do, but that at least shows that some of the initiatives we are undertaking are working.

I will conclude by simply saying that the completion rate isn't just up to the school system. It's also up to the individual and to the individual's family and the community. Some people, Mr. Speaker, do leave the education system in around the grade 10 or 11 level perhaps for one year to earn some money or whatever it is that they wish to do, or they're facing other socioeconomic or related community factors. So it's not just the education system that is a stakeholder in that outcome.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the House when Alberta will achieve the performance goals recommended in the Learning Commission report of 90 per cent completion within four years?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, our target is to increase our high school completion rates every year, and that's why I'm happy that we're on the right trend so far.

But I also want to just say quickly that we have a number of initiatives that we've either taken on that are ongoing or some that are new. For example, I instituted an internal task force just a while ago to review this issue completely and thoroughly with our stakeholders to see what new strategies we can add to enhance our high school completion rates. At the moment, however, we have a number of things that are impacting that question in a very positive way such as our Alberta initiative for school improvement, such as our First Nations/Métis/Inuit strategy, such as the class size reduction initiative, which is increasing our students' abilities to learn, and a number of other things.

I expect, Mr. Speaker, that the short answer will be that it'll happen sooner than later.

Dr. Brown: For the same minister: why are Alberta's high school completion rates lagging behind those of the other provinces?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's the three-year rate that I'm not pleased with. I think that if you read the rest of the StatsCan report, you would probably find there where something in the order of 89 per cent of Albertans in the age bracket of 25 to 34 have completed high school. So there's a period of time that sometimes evolves during which people do return to finish their high school, and that's a very good thing.

The specific answer of why is a very complex one, and it's one that we're studying now to try and, in fact, answer in some detail. I don't think that any single jurisdiction out of the 62 school boards that I've met with would give you an exact answer to that, and I say that having surveyed almost all 62 of them. But the fact is that it has been brought to their attention, it has been brought to mine, and there will be more information within a few weeks on how we're going to address improving our high school completion rates, and we will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Canadian Forest Products Ltd. Mill Closure

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 3 Canadian Forest Products Ltd. announced that it was ending operations at its Hines Creek sawmill. The closure of this mill will mean a loss of over 100 jobs and $6 million in yearly salaries that will have a devastating economic impact on Hines Creek and surrounding communities. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. In the throne speech the government stated, "Vibrant rural communities are vital to this province." Then why is the government not ensuring that Hines Creek remains vibrant?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did make that comment in the throne speech, and I want the member to know that the rural development strategy is part of the top three initiatives that we have under way within Economic Development. Certainly, the Hines Creek situation is at the forefront as we speak, and thank you for raising that particular issue. I mentioned yesterday on a question from another hon. member that the Peace region economic alliance was involved currently with that situation as well as our Grande Prairie office.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This minister stated yesterday: "What other economic . . . opportunities will there be? We look into things like tourism." Can this government tell us what tourism opportunities can replace the lost jobs at Hines Creek? [interjection]

Mr. Dunford: I didn't hear that, so I don't know what took place.

In terms of the comments that the hon. member has neatly picked up out of Hansard, certainly we're looking at tourism as one, of course, of the obvious economic development activities that we look at throughout Alberta and particularly want to look at beyond just Calgary, Edmonton, Banff, and Jasper. You know, there are value-added areas in terms of secondary manufacturing. The value-added strategy that we have in terms of our number one strategy inside Economic Development is really to look at developing secondary manufacturing as it relates to wood products. So we think we have opportunities there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this government commit to taking action to protect Hines Creek from becoming a ghost town?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I wish the hon. member wouldn't be so pessimistic. I mean, there are good people in Hines Creek, as you know if you've taken the time to be there as our Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has. These are good people, they're Albertans, they're ambitious, they are inventive, and we think that in working with them, we'll be able to reorganize the Hines Creek area so that they'll continue to be a viable part of Alberta. I'm actually disappointed and disturbed that a rookie MLA would walk into this place and start talking in such a disparaging way about a fellow citizen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:20 Capital Grants for Major Fairs

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have expressed interest in and I might say support for the capital grants for major fairs that were announced in the 2004-2005 third-quarter fiscal update, released on February 28. Some are curious to know which fairs will be funded and what this means for them. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. As the minister responsible for the Alberta lottery fund which fairs are going to receive grants, and what will the grants be used for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that my first question in the House allows me to stand and talk about the wonderful things that flow from the Alberta lottery fund. It was announced in the third-quarter fiscal update that $40 million is being provided to seven regional fair and agricultural societies. They're located in Camrose, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Lloydminster, Medicine Hat, Olds, and Red Deer. These funds will be used to upgrade buildings and facilities at these regional facilities. They're extremely excited about it, and I know that they're all looking forward to putting this money to good use.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister then: why did the government identify major fairs as a priority for this $40 million in funding?

Mr. Graydon: These seven boards are very regional in nature. You know, I can remember as a young lad – I can remember back that far – living in Lacombe, Alberta. The highlight of the summer was to go to the Red Deer fair, and it's still going on to this day. This weekend I am returning home to my constituency and attending the 20th annual Agri-bition at the Evergreen Park in Grande Prairie. It's a huge regional agricultural fair and provides tremendous economic benefit to the region, allows the rural community to come in and show their stuff.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister then: why are only these seven fairs getting this money?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, these seven are just the tip of the iceberg, if you will. For the past several years this government has provided the 283 additional ag societies – they're in smaller communities. There's not a small community in Alberta, I think, that doesn't have an ag society or fair board or something. There are 283 of them, and each year Alberta Lotteries provides funds to Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, an unconditional base grant of $17,500 for operating. That's unconditional, but on top of that, they submit the list of activities that they've hosted the previous year and are allotted extra money based on how busy they were in the previous year. As well, Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Stampede receive more than $7 million each for their activities over the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the Edmonton public school board, to the bitter disappointment of parents that attended the public school board meeting, voted to begin the process of closing four public schools. This government must return authority for public school structures to the Minister of Education, where it properly belongs. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Why doesn't the government provide block funding for public school buildings and get out of the job of counting spaces?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton public school board does a very good job against some very unique circumstances, and I've followed with interest and I've met with them and discussed with interest some of their initiatives. Unfortunately, these things, like declining enrolments, do happen from time to time, and in this case they're faced with some very, very difficult decisions, which I think the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation answered a bit earlier.

But I think the key part in the question is with respect to the utilization rate in that formula, and that's one reason why we are reviewing that rate formula right now. Perhaps some relief will be forthcoming that will address this problem from that point of view.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. To the same minister: how can this government support a policy that tears the heart out of the communities by closing their community schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't exactly consider the high regard in which North America holds the Edmonton public school board as tearing the heart out of anything. They're the number one school board, and that's why they frequently receive visitors from around the world to come and have a look. So they are doing a very, very good job. But the fact is that we do need to review some of these difficulties where we see student enrolment going down and costs skyrocketing upwards, and the school utilization formula is the key part of that, regardless if it's done in this ministry or if it's done in the ministry of infrastructure.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: has this government considered moving some of its offices in the capital city to share space with underutilized public schools? Save some money.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Save some money. Well, there are a number of initiatives that the school boards are looking at that might bring that very thing about. In fact, that's part of our renewed funding framework, which I'm sure the member knows about; that is, to allow maximum flexibility. Under the renewed funding framework school boards have asked for and they have received that particular flexibility formula to work with. Now, I am reviewing those budgets as we speak to see where some additional support might or might not be possible and see what kind of utilization we can have for these schools.

I would tell you, though, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the new schools that are coming on stream do have a fundamentally different approach to their design that will make them quite useful in later years for either continued school purposes or for some other community use purpose, and that in the long run will save all taxpayers money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, while this may be the only time that we do get to question 18, unfortunately I have no questions today. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and I have six additional members beyond that. No shortage of members.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton City Centre Airport is a vital facility to my constituents and indeed, I believe, to all Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister inform this House as to the government's position on the importance of the Edmonton City Centre Airport?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, some time ago there was a committee that was put together to look at the City Centre Airport and some of the issues that were surrounding passenger flights in and out of that airport, and that committee presented a report then to the board of directors of the Edmonton Airports Authority. Unfortunately, not all of the recommendations were accepted. So it's put the government now into a position, in terms of economic development, of now taking those recommendations and looking at it in the juxtaposition of what the authority actually did and trying to determine what is in the best interest now of all Albertans.

I've charged my deputy minister with that responsibility as recently as this morning, as a matter of fact, and we'll have to develop, then, a strategy from an economic development perspective and then, of course, take that through the internal process to try to develop a government position as to the City Centre Airport.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. To the same minister: can the minister offer Albertans any assurances that we'll be able to access our capital city through the City Centre Airport in the future?

Mr. Dunford: Well, yes we can. Again, as far as the recommendations made that were accepted, I've been assured by the airport authority through its chair and its president that the business model that the City Centre Airport will be working from indicates that those airlines that are currently bringing passengers in and out of that City Centre Airport will be allowed to continue to do so off into the future as long as the individual airline's business model makes sense for it to do that.

So they have assured me that they're not in a position and will not take the position of removing any further airlines from that airport. The difficulty, of course, is that they've already removed a couple, and that's where the tension continues to circulate between members of this House, including myself as the representative of Lethbridge-West, and the airport authority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister. To the same minister: can the minister inform us as to the current status of the City Centre Airport and what changes, if any, we can expect with respect to this vital facility in the near future?

Mr. Dunford: As we speak, there's a meeting that's taking place at a hotel here in Edmonton. It's been organized by a group now called CAANA, and I believe that stands for Commuter Air Access Network of Alberta. Many of the people here on the floor of this House will remember a previous member that we had with us, Gary Friedel. We have a situation where Gary has organized this group. There are players from all across the province, including Edmonton's city council, the representatives of the airport authority, and mayors of various communities including my own community of Lethbridge. I was part of a panel there this morning.

We're trying to get the issues dealt with, and the call that I made, hon. member: it's time for us to be candid. There's been too much of this talk, parallel talk where, yeah, maybe people are happy; maybe they're not happy. Let's get all of the cards on the table over this issue, and let's get it dealt with.

The Speaker: Hon. members, something very historic happened today. This is the first time in the history of Alberta that the chair was able to call on 19 members to participate in the question period. My apologies do go to the eight additional members who sent me notes wanting to get in the question period. Perhaps Monday we'll be able to do just a bit better.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: I indicated before that I would provide a historic comment of the day. I want all hon. members to know that in March of 1941 the Legislative Assembly under the leadership of Premier William Aberhart amended on this day in 1941 the provincial School Act, making it illegal not to salute the Union Jack.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of several members to participate. Hon. members, prior to introducing the first of several members to participate in Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my lovely sister Susan Backs and my dear dad, John Backs. Susan has acted on many stages including London, New York, Toronto, Calgary, and of course in Spruce Grove. My dad recently received an award from the Crown Prince of the Netherlands for his work as a member of the Stootroepen regiment in the Second World War. That, of course, was the crucial regiment that was formed from armed underground resistance fighters that fought with the Canadian army to help liberate the Netherlands in many crucial battles that ended the Second World War. I'd like you to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, as per the ruling yesterday, today we'll be proceeding with four recognitions from government members, two from the Official Opposition, and one from the third party. I guess that I have to ask for clarification. Is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona proceeding this afternoon with a recognition, or should we fill it with someone else?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You are going to proceed?

Dr. Pannu: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Youth Science Month

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year thousands of young Albertans take part in local and regional science fairs. Each of these young scientists works diligently to develop projects that demonstrate innovation, initiative, and imagination. This year the very best of our province's science fair participants will represent Alberta at the Canada-wide science fair to be held in Vancouver in May.

Mr. Speaker, one only has to attend one of the many regional science fairs held throughout the province to meet the many exceptional young science students of Alberta. They are truly the innovators and leaders of tomorrow. It is vitally important to nurture a generation of scientifically literate young people who will push forward the boundaries of our knowledge and improve the culture of innovation in our province. This is why I'm happy to join the Youth Science Foundation Canada and the Alberta Science Fair Foundation in recognizing March 2005 as Youth Science Month in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Western Canadian Blind Curling Championship

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Calmar Lions Club for once again successfully hosting the Western Canadian Blind Curling Championship. This championship was originally born in 1971, when a rink of blind curlers came down to Calmar from Edmonton to challenge the Calmar Lions Club in the first blind curling bonspiel. This quickly turned into an annual event, which expanded a couple of years later to include teams from both Edmonton and Calgary. A few years later it expanded once again to include two blind curling teams from each of the western provinces, thereby creating the Western Canadian Blind Curling Championship.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the curling you may be watching at the Brier this week, blind curling allows five-member rinks, with one sighted skip and one sighted sweeper. At least one member must be completely blind; two others may at the very most have partial vision.

This year's western Canadian championship was won by a B.C. rink, with an Alberta rink placing fourth.

I would like to commend the Calmar Lions Clubs and surrounding clubs for their decades of commitment to the sport of blind curling. Mr. Speaker, for what the participants might lack in sight, the Lions Club more than makes up for in vision.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Ken Flesher

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again in this the week of the Brier in Edmonton it gives me great pleasure to recognize a very exceptional senior from the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. Mr. Ken Flesher of Devon was recently successful as the Alberta champion in the provincial Masters Curling Championship, and Ken will be representing Alberta in Brandon, Manitoba, the weekend of April 8 to 10 as the skip for the Alberta rink. I would like to recognize Ken on behalf of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

British Commonwealth Air Crew Memorial

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 3, 2004, a six-metre high statue of a uniformed airman was unveiled by the Premier at McDougall Centre in Calgary. This memorial pays tribute to the more than 1,600 Albertans in the air service who lost their lives during the Second World War. This unique group of individuals were all graduates of the British Commonwealth air training program, with 18 of the 360 training schools located right here in Alberta.

I am honoured and humbled, Mr. Speaker, to remember their service to this province and to their country. I find it appropriate during our centennial year to recognize the sacrifice these Albertans and their family have made. They contributed to making this the prosperous province it is today and made these centennial year celebrations possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to thank those involved with the establishment of the memorial, notably former Member of Parliament Mr. Arthur Smith, who was a strong voice for the air crews and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Youth Emergency Shelter

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pride that I ask this Assembly to recognize youth shelters in this province for the invaluable service they contribute to our society. I especially want to recognize the Youth Emergency Shelter Society in Edmonton.

This program helps youth between the ages of 15 and 18 who are homeless. Over 68 per cent have been physically, sexually, or emotionally abused, an increasing number with serious mental health problems. Most attempt to numb their inner pain by using drugs and/or alcohol. The youth come from every neighbourhood in Edmonton and surrounding communities. They all have different economic backgrounds and are of every race and religion. Some are high school dropouts while some are honour students.

The Youth Emergency Shelter provides basic necessities along with opportunities to become strong, independent, and learn life and decision-making skills, giving youth at risk a chance to become productive and successful individuals.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Democratic Process in the Ukraine

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the people of Ukraine. This past fall when Ukrainians felt that the presidential election had been tainted, they stood up despite the threats of violence from the government, and they refused to accept the results. Ukrainians showed the world that peaceful change is possible. We do not have to accept corruption, and when our political process fails us, it's up to each and every one of us to stand up and correct the wrong.

I want to recognize Ukrainians who supported either candidate in the presidential election. I heard from Canadian election observers of the amazing commitment to the democratic process from the supporters of the candidates on both sides. I've heard of friendships being forged between political adversaries and the desire to make democracy work regardless of the outcome.

Ukrainians showed that it is possible to right a wrong, to stand up to injustice, and to work together as one for the good of all. Ukrainians have taught us how to make democracy work, and their lessons should never be forgotten.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

International Women's Day

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to take this opportunity, the earliest one available to me, to recognize International Women's Day. International Women's Day is a time to recognize and celebrate women's struggle for equality and women's ongoing work to build a more just and compassionate world.

On behalf of the NDP opposition I would like to reaffirm our commitment to women's equality. We will continue to work with child care advocates for low-cost, high-quality child care centred on early childhood learning and development, for laws and policies that prevent harassment and discrimination, for adequate funding for women's shelters, for community policing and safer communities. The NDP opposition will also continue to work with women's groups and others for public health care that includes a full range of women's health needs including midwifery and reproductive choice and will stand up for women regardless of their sexual orientation, country of origin, or economic status.

This International Women's Day, Mr. Speaker, the NDP opposition reaffirms its commitment to bread and roses for all Alberta women. Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 14, the Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005.

Just so that there is no confusion, Mr. Speaker, this does not embody the new and improved formula for student finance or student affordability but really is just housekeeping with respect to items that have been left over in the past. We can look forward to more and better new, exciting legislation later on the other topics.

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups of tablings today. For the first I would like to table the annual reports for the year 2003-2004 for the following health authorities: Chinook regional, Palliser regional, Calgary health region, David Thompson regional health authority, and East Central health. That's the first tabling.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the requisite number of copies of the annual reports of the following colleges and associations: the Alberta College of Optometrists' annual report 2003, the Alberta College of Pharmacists' annual report 2003, the Alberta College of Medical Laboratory Technologists' annual report 2003, the Alberta College of Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists' annual report 2003, and, finally, the Alberta Opticians Association annual report 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take the liberty today to table four copies of a document entitled Projected Government Business for the week of March 14, 2005. Given that we will not be sitting on Thursday of this week, I thought it appropriate to table the document and would ask, if it pleases you and the Legislature, that perhaps on this occasion only it could be printed in the Order Paper in the same manner as it's normally printed when it's asked for and read out on Thursdays.

The Speaker: Official Opposition House Leader, no difficulty with that, is there? It's a unique situation: we're not sitting tomorrow.

Ms Blakeman: It is indeed unique, and I appreciate the efforts of the Government House Leader and would appreciate having it printed and shared orally, if possible, at the end of the Routine.

The Speaker: No disagreements with any members? So be it.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter dated March 8, 2005, from the constituency office of Edmonton-Gold Bar to the chairperson of the Edmonton public school board, and it's CCed to all school board members. This is requesting that there be a stop put to the closure process until the provincial government introduces its new utilization formula.

The second tabling is a letter that I received as chairperson of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts dated June 9, 2004, from the Auditor General of Alberta. The Auditor General is explaining to me why he cannot release to me information in regard to management letters that reference both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter from a Mr. Don Lind – he's an outfitter in High Prairie – regarding his concerns over the Métis harvesting agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release issued by the University of Alberta Students' Union on March 2 of this year which expresses serious concerns about whether the government's proposed measures for postsecondary education will satisfactorily address issues of affordability and accessibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Projected Government Business

The Speaker: Hon. members, a minute or two ago under Tabling Returns and Reports the hon. Government House Leader rose and did something. The reason he did it: if you look at Standing Order 7(1), it says that it is only on Thursday that we can deal with Projected Government Business. There's no provision to deal with it without unanimous consent on Wednesday because it is a Wednesday. So the hon. Government House Leader used the opportunity to deal with the tabling. The hon. Opposition House Leader agreed to that, and you all agreed to it, so it's been done. We worked the rules, I guess, so to speak, as to how you can be efficient with respect to this matter.

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Oberle]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and a great honour to stand and deliver my maiden speech in the Assembly today on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Currie. I want to start by expressing a deep debt of gratitude to my wife, Martha, for her love, her support, her encouragement, and her patience – some of those who know us both are so impressed that she's put up with me for 22 years that they've nicknamed her Martha Theresa – to my nearly adult children Scott and Jenny for being everything a father could hope for, and to one of the most awesome teams of campaign workers in Calgary history: 146 dedicated volunteers, many of whom joined in without even being asked and few of whom needed to be asked more than once, who stepped forward to help me in spite of myself.

I spent a lifetime being politically aware and interested but as an outsider, a journalist and a talk show host. Although I've always considered myself a small "I" liberal, because of how I earn my living, I was never a member of any political party until I decided in September to run for the big "L" Liberals. Look, since I was old enough to vote, I voted provincially and federally for just about every political party there is at one time or another.

My dear old late Nova Scotia grandfather, Charlie Walker, was as dyed-in-the-wool Liberal as you could get. If the Liberals down there were running Elmer's dog against Nova Scotia Tory Robert Stanfield himself, Charlie Walker would have voted for the dog. When I won election, my Aunt Shirley, his daughter, said to me: if your grandfather were still alive, he'd be so proud of you.

Me, I've always preferred to take a different approach to elections and vote for the candidate or the party or the leader whose views and policies aligned most closely with what I as a voter thought the country or the province or the city I was living in needed at the time. So my campaign team didn't exactly rally around me because I'd been a good big "L" Liberal. I hadn't. In fact, I counted among my friends hardly anyone who was politically active in any party. In my past life I spent a lot of time talking about politics at work, so over the years Martha and I have formed most of our friendships with decidedly apolitical people precisely to make a clean break from work.

So why did they rally around me? Well, because they picked up on the same appetite for change, the same desire to see things done differently in this province that I picked up on from the callers to my talk show in the months leading up to the election. It was a buzz that many of the pundits and many in the media missed. My own boss laughed at me when I said that I was going to run for the Liberals. But there was and is among the people of Alberta and the constituents of Calgary-Currie impatience with the status quo and a feeling that we can do better.

So, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you and the hon. members gathered here today a little bit about the constituency of Calgary-Currie, the people who live there, and what they value and believe.

Calgary-Currie is an inner-city riding close in to the downtown core of what we modestly like to call the greatest city in Canada. It is an eclectic, diverse, vibrant, and interesting mix of communities from the old downtown neighbourhoods of Mission and Cliff Bungalow through the mansions of Mount Royal, the condos and apartment buildings of Lower Mount Royal along the Red Mile. Across 14th Street is Bankview, an established, funky collection of houses and apartment buildings, each different from the next, very much like the people who live there, built on a series of hills that exudes almost a bohemian atmosphere in the sense that you might be someplace in San Francisco.

To the south are the neighbourhoods of South Calgary and Richmond-Knob Hill, in the midst of rejuvenating and reinventing themselves, a mix of houses from the very old to the very new; the Marda Loop business district, like 4th Street and 17th Avenue a destination area with its storefronts, coffee houses, ice cream shops, and restaurants. Each one of those three areas is unique, but what they all have in common is that they attract people from the adjacent neighbourhoods and from the far-flung suburbs, people who park their cars, get out on foot, and explore, enjoy, and engage themselves with their surroundings at street level. These are not mall crawlers, at least not while they're in Calgary-Currie.

Further south, Garrison Woods, a new community built on part of the old Canadian Forces Base Currie barracks, which gives my constituency its name, has attracted families from other parts of Calgary as well as from big cities across North America who were drawn there because they wanted that close in to downtown, big city feel.

South of that is the mature residential community of Altadore, which itself is starting to see some new infill development and houses undergoing substantial renovation, and to the west the neighbourhoods of Killarney, Glengarry, Glenbrook, and Glendale, good neighbourhoods filled with good people.

Mr. Speaker, you can look at the demographics of Calgary-Currie and, depending on your point of view, take away different impressions of the makeup of the constituency. Some have noted that Calgary-Currie has a disproportionate percentage of young single residents. It also has a significant population of seniors. It's also home to a substantial number of married, two-career couples with children. There is some real poverty in my constituency and some unbelievable wealth and everything in between. It is in many ways a microcosm of Canada.

There is, however, one demographic that stands out no matter how you read the other numbers, and that is the incredible level of education in Calgary-Currie. The single biggest percentage of the adult population, 31 and a half per cent, has a bachelor's degree or higher. Another 17 per cent have a college certificate or diploma, and a further 10 and a half per cent have a trade certificate or diploma. In all, 77 per cent of the adult population of Calgary-Currie has at least some postsecondary education.

As I went door to door during the campaign, Mr. Speaker, I encountered deep concerns and great annoyance among my constituents with the declining state of postsecondary education in this province. That's not surprising. The people of Calgary-Currie understand that accessible, affordable, excellence in advanced education is crucial to the future success of today's students and tomorrow's Alberta. They and I will be watching closely to see whether the platitudes and promises about postsecondary education contained in the Speech from the Throne are actually acted upon, and we will be watching with the understanding that even if they are, the systemic problem in Alberta's advanced education system will not be addressed unless and until the government substantially increases base operating grants to the institutions and adopts a new, more equitable, and realistic way of calculating just how much a postsecondary student in Alberta is worth. There was no mention of this in the throne speech.

My constituents, many of whom learn, teach, and work in support roles at Mount Royal College or are friends or neighbours of those who do, are also watching and waiting for this government to do the right thing and make Mount Royal into a university. Calgary is the biggest city in North America without a second university. Mount Royal is ready, willing, and able to fill that role as soon as this government grants its approval. The proposal has been in the hands of the government for two years now. One wonders what possible reasonable excuse there could be for delaying this decision any longer.

Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset that I wanted to talk about what my constituents value and believe. Those values and beliefs are informed by an urban, inner-city, downtown attitude. These are people, by and large, who live close to the downtown core by choice, because they prefer it to the suburbs. They like being able to walk out their front door and down the street for a couple of blocks to shop or dine or go for a drink. They prefer being a short public transit ride away from work to spending an hour or more every day stuck in traffic. They like the proximity to arts and culture, to theatres, museums, the opera, ballet, the philharmonic, the folk festival. They understand that vibrant arts, entertainment, and cultural sectors add to the quality of life in a city and to that city's potential for greatness. Frankly, many of the constituents I met during the campaign think that this government has let us down badly in that department.

They value and embrace diversity for the way in which it enriches their lives. They have a tolerance for ways of doing things that are different from their own, and they have a hard time understanding what all the fuss is about over same-sex marriage. They care about fairness and equity, and to them politicians who are more concerned about blocking a loving couple from declaring their commitment to each other in front of friends, family, and the wider community than they are about improving the lives of the elderly, the sick, and the disabled by raising AISH payments and restoring seniors' benefits are politicians who have their priorities mixed up. The people of Calgary-Currie don't always embrace change – I mean, who among us does, other than the consultants? – nor do they always resist it. They do however understand that real progress is measured by more than just profit.

The people of Calgary-Currie value community. By definition community is a group of people with a common interest living together within a larger society, individuals bound together by common cause, if you will, for the common good. Community is about more than shared values, for if the only value people share is this self-interested pursuit of personal wealth and happiness, well, then that's not really a community. What you have there is a collection of strangers who agree to respect each other's property lines and stay out of each other's way.

Community is about caring about what happens to others and knowing there are people who care about you. It's about feeling safe when you go out for a walk, and feeling secure in letting your children out to play because you know the entire community is looking out for its own. It's about knowing the neighbours, understanding that we're in this together, and getting it that society works best when everyone has the opportunity to participate. Community allows us to leave this world a better place than we found it by combining our efforts through strength in numbers. The people of Calgary-Currie want a government that understands that common cause and common good sustain the human spirit and quality of life in a way that self-interest does not, a government that appreciates that its job amounts to more than merely creating conditions for the rich to get richer.

The people of Calgary-Currie care about the land. Why wouldn't they? They live on the edge of what is quite possibly the most beautiful place on earth, a land so beautiful that it pierces clean through to the soul. I've yet to meet a constituent, whether by birth or by choice, who doesn't feel a deep connection to the awesome natural beauty that surrounds us. It sustains us and can sustain our children and their children but only if we sustain it through conservation, responsible development, and caring stewardship. The notion of undeveloped, unexploited, undisturbed wilderness as sterile land must end.

My constituents were proud to send me to this Legislature. I'm proud to be here and to serve them. Mr. Speaker, thank you for your time today.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should any member wish to take advantage of it.

If not, then might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly this afternoon several individuals who are here to hear my maiden speech later this afternoon. I'd first like to recognize Mr. Stan Schumacher, a former Member of Parliament, a former member and Speaker of this Assembly. Thank you for joining us this afternoon, Stan. I'd also like to recognize that we've been joined by one of Alberta's newest Senators-in-waiting, hopefully soon to be appointed, Mrs. Betty Unger.

Like everybody else in this Chamber on both sides, I'm here partly by my own efforts but more because of the efforts of all the volunteers and friends. There are a lot of volunteers and friends here that I'd like to ask to stand in a moment, but, of course, like everybody else the person I owe the most thanks to and apologies, probably, for getting into this business, is my wife, Bambi. I'd like to ask the rest of my family, friends, and supporters who are here today seated in the public gallery to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on an introduction, as well.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my brother Stan Backs, who's in the public gallery. Stan, could you please rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Consideration of His Honour

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to add my comments to those already offered by my colleagues in consideration of the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to congratulate you and offer you my best wishes on your re-election, and I truly hope that the fate that befell several Speakers of the British Parliament in the 17th century will not afflict you this session.

Mr. Speaker, Foothills-Rocky View is a new constituency. It is comprised of the territory from the former constituencies of Airdrie-Rocky View, Banff-Cochrane, and Highwood. Our territory lies to the west of highway 2 and the city of Calgary. It stretches from Crossfield and Madden in the north to Black Diamond and Turner Valley in the south. It includes the acreage communities that surround Calgary on the west: Bearspaw, Springbank, Elbow Valley, Priddis, and De Winton, and the beautiful hamlets of Bragg Creek and Millarville. It also includes the Tsuu T'ina Nation, one of the most dynamic and well-governed reserves in Canada. Our greatest asset, however, is the people of Foothills-Rocky View, some of the most successful, well-educated, and community-minded citizens of this province and whom I'm honoured to represent.

Mr. Speaker, Foothills-Rocky View is truly the crown jewel of southern Alberta. We're the gateway to the Rockies. The sweeping Canadian prairies end at our eastern doorstep. Our rolling foothills are nature's staircase to the craggy peaks that fence us on the west. We share this special place with the deer, elk, and moose, cougars and lynx, black bears and grizzlies, and hundreds of God's lesser but no less important creatures.

Mr. Speaker, living in Foothills-Rocky View is a privilege, and we're determined to protect and preserve the natural beauty and environmental integrity. So we're especially pleased with the throne speech's commitment to help in this effort. In Alberta our quality of life and life itself depends on having a healthy and sustainable water supply. Foothills-Rocky View straddles the central section of the eastern slopes watershed. A river flows through it; not one, not two, but three of the most important rivers in the South Saskatchewan River basin: the Bow, the Elbow, and the Sheep. Managing the waters of these rivers in a sustainable and environmentally responsible way is among the very highest priorities of my constituents, so we're pleased that Alberta will continue to implement the Water for Life strategy.

Foothills-Rocky View is also home to some of Alberta's earliest cattle ranching. The beef industry remains an important pillar of our local economy and has been hurt by the U.S. border closure. We applaud the throne speech's commitment to increased domestic slaughter capacity, and we are proud that one of the most important new plants, Rancher's Beef, is being built in the MD of Rocky View.

Mr. Speaker, Foothills-Rocky View is uniquely tied to Calgary. The water that flows through the taps of Calgary flows first through the rivers and streams of Foothills-Rocky View. We have serious waste-water issues in Bragg Creek and Springbank. Our problems are also Calgary's problems, so we applaud the government's commitment to invest in water infrastructure to provide a safe, clean water supply.

The residents of Foothills-Rocky View value being close to Calgary but only close to, not part of Calgary. We do not want to be swallowed up by mindless urban sprawl. We value our working rural landscapes and open spaces, and we want to keep them that way. So again we applaud the government's commitment to a new land use management framework, and we encourage the government to embrace the concepts of natural capital and smart growth.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne informs us that "strengthening the postsecondary learning system is the government's top priority during this centennial year." As a professor who has taught at the University of Calgary for the past 24 years, nothing could please me more. Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, commits 4 and a half billion dollars to our universities, colleges, and technical institutes. These funds "will lay the groundwork for investments that will allow Alberta to continue to prosper in the increasingly globalized, knowledge-based economy." Much of this learning will be technical and scientific, but it will also include the humanities and social sciences, which include history and, specifically, Alberta's history.

As the throne speech declares, "As this province's 100-year history illustrates so unmistakably, Albertans have what it takes to be leaders." So I would like to take this opportunity to revisit the role of political leadership in Alberta's history.

Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate the great occasion of our centennial, we should recall that provincehood did not come easily to Alberta. Sir Frederick Haultain, the Premier of the North-West Territories began in the late 1890s to push the idea of extending provincial status and responsible government for the western territories.

Initially, the Laurier Liberals were receptive, but for the first time but not the last politics in Quebec dictated Ottawa's treatment of the west, and Laurier rejected the call for provincehood as premature. Happily for us, Premier Haultain refused to take no for an answer. He abandoned his embrace of nonpartisanship and plunged into the 1904 federal election as a candidate for the Conservative Party. In that campaign he declared to his supporters:

Let us fight for our rights with all the energy we can command. The only way to show the Liberal government that we are in earnest is to turn them down at the polls. Give them a crushing defeat and we will get the rights we demand.

I'm sure my Liberal friends are quick to point out that Haultain lost that election. But he won the war. The Laurier Liberals carried the west, but conceded on the issue of provincehood the very next year.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to Frederick Haultain's spirited defence of democracy, Alberta achieved provincial status in 1905 but not on the terms demanded by Haultain and the other western autonomists. Ownership of natural resources was not granted to the two new provinces. This was a radical departure from the practice in the rest of Canada, under which all existing provinces did control their own natural resources. Thus right from our birth equality of the provinces has been the battle cry of Alberta. The transfer of natural resource ownership to Alberta was pursued in virtually every session of this Legislature for our first 25 years. Not once but twice this Assembly enacted mineral taxation legislation to try to recoup the revenues that were supposed to be coming to this province but were being denied, and not once but twice these laws were disallowed by Ottawa. Did Albertans become discouraged? Did Albertans give up? No. We persisted, and in 1930, under the persistent leadership of Premier John Brownlee and the United Farmers of Alberta, ownership of natural resources was transferred back to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the prosperity that Albertans enjoy today did not happen by accident. It happened on purpose. It happened because of the bold leadership of men like Frederick Haultain and John Brownlee.

No decade was as harsh and cruel for Alberta as the Dirty Thirties. The Great Depression forced thousands of Alberta families off their farms and into bankruptcy. The government was forced to default on its bond payments, and into this breach strode William Aberhart and the new Social Credit Party.

Premier Aberhart enacted a suite of Social Credit policies designed to stimulate consumer spending and revive our prostrate economy. These acts, however, were quickly disallowed by the Liberal government in Ottawa. Undeterred, the following month Premier Aberhart reconvened this Legislature and passed the same three acts again, only slightly amended. Within weeks these new acts were struck down again, this time by Alberta's own Lieutenant Governor. Aberhart immediately challenged in court this striking down as an unconstitutional attack on responsible government and provincial rights, and to make sure the Lieutenant Governor and Ottawa got the message, in the next budget, in the spring of '37, the Aberhart government cancelled all provincial funding for the Lieutenant Governor, including his residence, his car, his driver, and his secretary. They got the message.

Writing in 1954, 20 years after this, J.R. Mallory, one of English Canada's leading constitutional scholars, observed: "One of the most significant facts which emerges from a study of the disallowance power is that the power has been used primarily against the West . . . The disallowance power [was] an imperial device for holding other provinces under the sway of the predominant economic interest of the central provinces." These words were written in 1954 not by an Alberta separatist but by a revered McGill University professor, but the message they conveyed was understood 20 years earlier by a strong-willed Alberta preacher. To his credit and to our benefit William Aberhart refused to accept the antiwestern bias of the political status quo.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps William Aberhart's greatest gift to Alberta was his second-in-command and Alberta's longest serving Premier, the Hon. Ernest C. Manning. Ernest C. Manning was the Moses of Alberta. His steady hand guided Albertans from the economic desert of the '30s to the promised land of economic self-sufficiency and prosperity in the '60s.

Today I want to draw attention to only one of Premier Manning's many important legacies, provincial control of natural gas transmission. Premier Manning saw that the economic value of Alberta's emerging natural gas industry depended on export markets. He also understood that every time a gas pipeline crosses a provincial or international border, it falls under federal jurisdiction. Thus, in 1954 Premier Manning created the Alberta Gas Trunk Line, the AGTL. The AGTL was designed to transport Alberta gas to provincial borders and the U.S. border, thus keeping gas shipment under provincial jurisdiction. In later years Premier Manning explained this strategy. "Theoretically . . . if we'd ever had a constitutional hassle over the export of gas under that arrangement, you could just simply turn the tap off at the border."

Contemporary Alberta's prosperity and control of its resources did not happen by accident. It was made possible by far-sighted decisions of leaders like Ernest C. Manning. Ernest Manning mused about the possibility of conflict with Ottawa over Alberta's oil and gas revenues. For his successor, Peter Lougheed, this was not mere speculation. During his 15 years as Premier Alberta was constantly under attack by a rapacious federal bureaucracy. Thankfully for us, Peter Lougheed rose to the occasion. He had hardly been in office two years when in September of 1973 Mr. Trudeau surprised him with the announcement of the federal oil export tax. Lougheed's response was direct and unequivocal.

This appears to be the most discriminatory action taken by a federal government against a particular province in the entire history of Confederation. . . . The natural resources of the provinces are owned by the provinces under the terms of Confederation. The action taken by Ottawa strikes at the very roots of Confederation. And why just an export tax on oil? Why not on lumber from British Columbia, potash from Saskatchewan, nickel from Manitoba, pulp and paper, asbestos, and gold from Ontario and Quebec? Why only Alberta oil?

But Premier Lougheed was not anti-Ottawa; he was pro-Alberta. This explains why over the protest of the oil and gas industry he raised provincial royalty payments in March of 1974. Peter Lougheed wanted all Albertans to share in the province's resource wealth, but this was too much for Ottawa. Less than two months later, in May of '74, the Liberals brought in a new federal budget declaring that provincial royalties would no longer be deductible from federal corporate income tax. This punitive measure provoked a sharp rebuke from Peter Lougheed and also sent a lot of drilling rigs out of the province immediately. Lougheed denounced the Liberal budget on nondeductibility of royalties as "the biggest rip-off of any province that's ever occurred in Confederation's history."

Premier Lougheed's unflinching defence of Alberta resources brought several years of peace, but the energy wars erupted again in October of 1980, when the Liberals announced the national energy program. Lougheed lost no time in responding. In a televised speech that same afternoon the Premier told Albertans, "We have made it abundantly clear to the federal government that we would not, as a matter of principle, accept a . . . royalty upon Alberta's oil."

Lougheed did not just talk though; he took action. He announced the shut-in of 60,000 barrels of oil daily. He also launched a constitutional challenge to the natural gas export tax, a challenge, I might add, that Alberta won in the courts. This strategy worked and forced Trudeau back to the bargaining table. Lougheed subsequently cemented this victory over natural resources into the Constitution. Trudeau gave in to Lougheed's demand for a new and strengthened recognition of provincial responsibility for nonrenewable resources. Lougheed also shaped the new constitutional amending formula in a way that protected Alberta. From 1970 Lougheed had fought for the principle of provincial equality of all provinces with respect to a made-in-Canada amending formula.

Premier Lougheed took the lead in opposing Mr. Trudeau's attempt at unilateral patriation in 1980, and his persistence was rewarded in the final amending formula adopted in the 1982 Constitution in which no province received special treatment, thus ending the de facto constitutional veto enjoyed by Quebec. No Alberta Premier has achieved more for our province in the constitutional field than Peter Lougheed.

Last in time but first in responsibility for our province's current financial strength is our own Premier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. When he assumed the reins of leadership in 1992, our province was drowning in debts and deficits, but the Premier led this province out of the annual operating deficits in just three years. The Alberta model, first scorned by political and media elites, soon was being copied by other provinces and eventually even by Ottawa.

This is the ultimate kind of leadership, leadership by example.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) applies. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Standing Order 29(2) does allow for up to five minutes of further comment and debate, I'm just wondering how the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View would conclude his speech had he been given another four and a half minutes.

Dr. Morton: I'll abuse the privilege. I'll go back to a section of the speech that I left out.

The Rutherford scholarships recognize the role that Premier Alexander C. Rutherford played in the establishment of higher education in Alberta. Today in the spirit of nonpartisanship I want our Liberal friends to know that I am wearing an original campaign pin from the 1905 campaign with the likeness of Alexander C. Rutherford on it. I'll be happy to let you see this afterwards. It will remind you of the distant days a century ago when the Liberals governed this province.

Returning to my conclusion, which will take 75 seconds, Premier Klein's prudent fiscal management soon produced a second and even greater legacy. He paid off our $24 billion net debt. The result, as the throne speech notes, is that Alberta enters its second century with a strong economy, no debt, nation-leading rates of growth and employment. What a way to turn 100. When the history books are written, they will show again that Alberta's enviable status was not by accident but on purpose, and it was the legacy of the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Foothills-Rocky View are happy with the government's throne speech. We are excited about Alberta's second century because we agree with the throne speech that this province's 100-year history illustrates so unmistakably that Albertans have what it takes to be leaders. A society that forgets its past has no future. The path to our present can serve as our guide to the future.

Our Alberta strong and free did not happen by accident; it happened on purpose. It happened because of the wise and deliberate choices made by the statesman who has served as Premier of this province. I congratulate the government for a throne speech that proposes a plan of action that will continue this proud legacy. As Peter Lougheed liked to challenge his adversaries in Ottawa, how do you make Canada stronger by making a province or region weaker? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is: you don't. An Alberta strong and free is the best way to ensure a Canada strong and free.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My congratulations, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. That's the second time today that innovative use and knowledge of the Standing Orders allowed certain things to happen. This is good.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with tremendous pride and with a sense of great honour that I rise today to present this my maiden speech to this Legislature.

First, of course, I thank the voters of Edmonton-Manning. Edmonton-Manning is a diverse riding. It's one of the largest urban ridings in the province. Even though being in the city of Edmonton, it has a very large rural component, with many families whose homesteading history goes back to the late 1800s and with farm families on those places for generations. There are also many diverse communities of very different ethnic and cultural backgrounds, there are many languages heard, and it is an extremely vibrant community. It is their support, those voters of Edmonton-Manning, that made me their voice in our Alberta Legislature.

I also thank the many volunteers that helped put me here, and I hope and pray that I can live up to their expectations. It is incredible the amount of work that goes into an election. The tens of thousands of pamphlets dropped, the tens of thousands of phone calls, the thousands of signs erected, the money donated and raised, and the many other volunteer activities all attest to the huge amount of work that was done to put me here. I cannot give enough thanks to those that helped.

It was a hard and difficult campaign in some ways. I extend again my sympathies to Premier Klein for the loss of his mother in the early stages of this campaign. It is extremely difficult to have such a difficult event in the middle of the emotional extremes of an election battle. I also give condolences to the family of our dear departed Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole. Also, my own dear and much beloved mother, Helen Backs, passed on to her heavenly reward on November 7, 2004, just 15 days prior to election day. I don't know if I've quite personally accepted that yet. I thank my extended family and friends, who provided great support for me in that difficult time, and I'll dedicate these humble words to my mom. I offer prayers to our Lord to all those who have lost a loved one in recent times.

I am a proud Albertan. I was born in Calgary and grew up on the city's west side. My dad immigrated to Canada from Holland in 1948. My mother's side of the family came to western Canada in 1871. Dad learned a trade, attended night school at SAIT, and developed a successful construction business and a lumberyard, which he later sold to go ranching in the Peace country near High Prairie. But he got design awards, a 12-page spread in Better Homes and Gardens for his houses, and he did well.

I went to the University of Alberta in Edmonton but always helped him in his businesses both in the south and the north of this province. We broke 140 acres of bush for a couple of years, and I've worked countless acres of land and worked on equipment, tended cattle, and ridden herd for many days. I even had five quarters myself for a while. Like most young guys on the farm I went off to work in construction except in the peak seasons. I got into industrial construction and pipeline. In Alberta I worked at many sites including Suncor, Syncrude, Sundance, Kepphills, Genesee, Joffre, Dow at Fort Saskatchewan, Hardisty, many other sites, and I pipelined from Brooks to Rainbow Lake. It's an experience that many Albertans have worked in and enjoyed.

Like most farm families and with an offer that really couldn't be refused, we eventually sold the farm. There's maybe one family living and farming on the old road, where there were probably 10 a quarter of a century ago. That's what's happened to farming in Alberta. I ran crews and later moved on to a lot of work in labour relations representation and labour market analysis. I've been an operating engineer for nearly 30 years. For many of those years I also had a place in Edmonton.

I've also travelled and worked in 45 countries in Europe, Africa, and South America. I've done a lot of wildlife photography. I've been to every province in Canada as well as the territories as well many of the states in the U.S. and Mexico. A year and a half ago I even made it north of Ellesmere Island and Greenland on an icebreaker expedition.

I've been involved in many election campaigns and have done some political work. I first door-knocked in what is now Edmonton-Manning nearly 20 years ago. I have great respect for the memory of Bettie Hewes, Laurence Decore, and Percy Wickman, all of whom I helped extensively and draw inspiration from. I hope that those varied experiences and knowledge of those people will help me in my work as an MLA.

We are in a tremendous process of change. Technological advances, environmental challenges, globalization, international terrorism, and the demographics of the baby boom all pose tremendous challenges which cry out for leadership. Albertans in the last election told me that they do not want a smug, self-satisfied, and complacent government. They want a government with a sense of purpose and a mission for our future.

In going door to door, I was told that even with our well-earned prosperity, people are afraid for their future and the future of their children. It is good to see this government finally wake up and begin to recognize the value of education and the real justice of investing in the future of our people. Such investments will pay dividends a hundredfold if only this government could fully and completely understand the idea and provide the full-meal deal called for by Alberta Liberals for education and postsecondary education in the last election.

Many seniors supported me in the last election, and I am indebted to them. Indeed, the huge increase in long-term care rates foisted on fixed-income elders led me to decide to join the race in Edmonton-Manning. My aunt was hit like a sledgehammer with that particular money grab. I couldn't believe how any government with one bit of a sense of respect for its pioneers could pull such an act. It's all about dignity; it's all about respect. We must show and our government must demonstrate that respect to those people that have built our province.

We must also be compassionate to those that are less fortunate. AISH and other supports are embarrassing. I heard that loud and clear.

There are some things that government has done well over the years. Our apprenticeship system still holds up against any in the land, even though there are some unscrupulous and exploitive types, I think, that would have it degraded. We must maintain and improve the apprenticeship system and decrease the cost of access to trades apprenticeship. We must also have a multifaceted approach to ensure that those who take up a trade stay in it. Many trades – and I've talked to many of them – lost a majority of their new apprentices in the last few years because of mass layoffs in industry after projects were finished and intermittent work, and the people just couldn't keep their young families provided for by that apprenticeship. There has to be change in the way that is done.

There is also too much hype and misinformation on the demographic time bomb of the baby boom. Do the arithmetic. World War II ended in 1945. It took a while for the boys to get back, get families started, and there's this common thing of a nine-month delay. Boomers started coming on in about 1947-48, and the baby boom lasted until the mid-60s. The first boomers will be 65 in 2012, the middle boomers in 2022, and the late boomers are still having kids. I really wonder how many will actually want to retire at 65.

There has certainly been far too much one-sided hype on shortages in the trades, yet there are shortages in health care occupations. So many health care professionals were let go in the government-led purges of the last decade that it's no wonder that it's hard to find nurses and doctors who want to work in our system. There are shortages in residential construction because this government downgraded the trade of carpenter. Yes, there are shortages from time to time in some trades, but Alberta can handle it, together with a proper and paced development, without recourse to temporary foreign workers to take their jobs.

There has been a working trades labour mobility system in place in Canada for generations. Immigration has also been an important part of that process. Oft reported studies speak to demand, like Todd Hirsch's excellent survey of employers/organizations for the Canada West Foundation. These do that, though they only speak to demand. To only survey demand from employers for workers down the road is like surveying a grade 3 class on the supply of candy in two months: there will never be enough. There have been precious few public reports on the supply side. Some pending studies have been kept private or delayed, but I personally asked many of the trades organizations just last week if they could supply now and in the future. They said that they have no problem in supplying the major oil sands projects, and they said that there was availability from the traditional areas in the United States as well.

The temporary foreign worker program can only be one huge mistake. It will drive away apprentices. It will grab the best jobs and take the wages away. It will not work. You cannot treat labour like a commodity. I have heard some foreign companies come in and say that they should be able to come up to the tar sands and build their plants, like they do in the Persian Gulf or in Indonesia, and just grab 10,000 workers away from some country, just come up here and do that. Well, I don't think that that's right for Alberta.

Over 20 years ago, after the failure of the Alsands project – and there were great difficulties at that time in Alberta – I lobbied to grant royalty holidays for oil sands developers. Eventually this took hold, and I believe it has been a great success for Alberta and the development of our oil sands. For many Albertans and certainly for tradesmen there has always been a trade-off, a quid pro quo, so to speak. That quid pro quo for many Albertans is that in exchange for support for deferred royalty holidays for oil sands development there must be opportunity for Alberta businesses, opportunity for those top wages and benefits for Alberta workers, and development of our own economy for the benefit of Alberta. These opportunities provide taxes, develop our economy, and pay for the many advantages that we hold dear in our Alberta.

There's also the environment. Albertans want clean, clear water. Don't give us a water disease disaster like Walkerton in Ontario. Albertans want clean air. Clean up the pollution hanging increasingly over our cities. Why is it that the air quality in the pristine eastern slopes near Rocky Mountain House is worse than in downtown Vancouver? What about sour gas? What about agriculture? Do something for Albertans, not just the big American outfits. We must have fiscal responsibility. Enough said. But I wonder about the supplementary estimates released just yesterday.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are looking for a government of decision. The throne speech did not reflect that. Albertans are looking for change. I suspect that that will only happen in the next election.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be questions.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair did not intervene when the last two speakers gave their remarks when they mentioned the name of a member in the Assembly, and he did that in deference to the fact that these were their maiden speeches. But it is against the rules to mention the name of an existing person in the Assembly, and there's a reason for it. There's a reason for it. Every once in a while there arrives a name that perhaps can be pronounced in a number of different ways and if slurred improperly gives the wrong impression, at which point in time the phones in my office would light up incredibly. So the tradition is set to protect everyone. We mention only the name of the constituency.

Now the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure and pride that I rise today to give my maiden speech in this the 26th Legislature of Alberta before you, whom I congratulate on your re-election, sir, and before our hon. colleagues on both sides of the House, whom I also congratulate on their recent election.

I would like to begin by saluting the pioneers of our fine province, who have taught us all that we can turn stumbling blocks into stepping stones, obstacles into opportunities, and, yes, even bust into boom if we choose to. Our forebears were dealt many raw hands in the past 100 years, and because they played their cards right, we have all benefited. To their credit they applied the advice of Winston Churchill, "If you are going through hell, keep going." In many ways those who have come and gone before us have turned our small corner of the globe into a little piece of heaven, perhaps because they truly understood Charles Darwin's notion that it is not the strongest that survive; nor is it the most intelligent. It is those who are most adaptable to change. I believe, as our grandmothers and grandfathers must have, that the sky is the limit as long as we develop and implement the right attitudes, actions, resources, personnel, luck, and dreams.

Mr. Speaker, we've had dreams in the past, we have dreams in the present, and we will have dreams in the future. As such, I would like to thank all the residents of Calgary-Lougheed who have made a dream come true for me by electing me to this Legislature. I applaud all of my constituents in the extreme southwest corner of our city, which includes the communities of Woodbine, Woodlands, Shawnee Slopes, Millrise, Evergreen, Bridlewood, and the western half of Canyon Meadows, those who exercised their democratic right to vote during the last election. Whether they cast a ballot for me or for one of my political opponents, they participated in one of the most fundamental aspects of a free society, and I appreciate that they took their precious time to do so.

In my travels over the years I've met people around the world who struggle daily for the kinds of opportunities that many of us take for granted in this great province and country. We take it for granted all too often. As an example of this, we recently watched on television as the people of Iraq turned out in record numbers to risk their lives to line up at polling stations, even as they were being bombed, just to cast their single ballot. Such images of great human perseverance to participate in our electoral process should remind us of the great responsibility that we have been bestowed with by those who have elected us to represent them here today with honesty and with integrity.

I appreciate that the people of Calgary-Lougheed have put their faith in me, and I'm honoured with the great task of representing these wonderful people. It's a rather daunting proposition, but it is not in my nature to back away from a challenge. As some of you may know, it was certainly an uphill climb to earn three university degrees, work with the federal government for three terms, serve as an educator and administrator at all grade levels in three countries, and run my own business internationally, as well as climb Mount Everest twice. [some applause] Thank you.

I'm certainly grateful for these opportunities as they've led me to this place right here right now. I'm very excited to utilize the insights I've gained for the benefit of those in Calgary-Lougheed and the rest of the province, and I cherish this monumental mandate as I pledge to do everything possible to achieve the greatest good for the greatest number of people. I will do so by drawing upon the many lessons I have learned quite humbly over the years.

Mr. Speaker, I've often been asked what I have gained during some of my so-called Everest experiences. I can tell you that I've learned how tiny and insignificant yet how powerful each of us is. I've learned a little bit about how to relate to and encourage and empower others facing huge obstacles in life, whether they be mental, physical, emotional, spiritual, cultural, or financial mountains in life. I know first-hand that no one can climb a mountain for anyone else, and at the same time we never climb a mountain all by ourselves.

When I compare mountaineering expeditions to political endeavours, I note that both require calculated individual application as well as well-planned teamwork. They're both very time-consuming projects and are difficult missions that some would never, ever care to even attempt. I'd also like to point out that, interestingly enough, it is the descent, not the ascent, that is the most dangerous part of an expedition.

Similarly, in Alberta, although we have scaled to the summit of our mountain of debt, I really believe that we have to watch our steps very carefully right now. We need to continue to power the engines of small and big business that got us here, and we need to reinvest in education, health, infrastructure, and transportation. That's exactly what I heard my constituents in Calgary-Lougheed say, and thankfully that's exactly what our legendary new Lieutenant Governor, Normie Kwong, shared in his inaugural Speech from the Throne.

This brings to mind one of my favourite quotations from our dearly beloved and recently departed Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole, who once said: "Money is like manure. If you spread it around it does a lot of good. But if you pile it up in one place it stinks like hell." Why would we do well to spread it around? Well, as the Austrian economist Ludwig von Mises stated: "Those fighting for free enterprise and free competition do not defend the interests of those rich today. They want a free hand left to unknown men who will be the entrepreneurs of tomorrow."

Mr. Speaker, our future is at least partially influenced by our past, and I will share a short personal reflection along these lines. In my youth I was both attracted and repelled by politics. I can relate to social activist and rock star Bono, who said: in my teenage years I just despised politicians, but now I have more faith in them than I ever could have imagined.

I was first attracted to politics as a teenager as a delegate to Youth Parliament and the model United Nations. I suppose that in certain ways I may have been looking forward to this day ever since my high school social studies teacher imparted the idea that politics, when done well, is perhaps the greatest agent of positive social change that is available to us on this earth. Perhaps for this reason I have long believed that being a public servant is a mission, a vocation, an honour, and an obligation, something that gives meaning and purpose to life.

As politicians I believe that we're in a perfect position to help facilitate the incredible conditions under which we can create a new and improved province together. In my vision of Alberta's next century we will create and maintain a sustainable balance between industry, environment, and recreation. Alberta will be the best place in the world to live, learn, do business, and raise a family.

In the 21st century we will cultivate a diverse economy, with much more than just oil revenues to keep us from running a deficit.

We will never allow the next Alberta to go into debt. We will tax reasonably with huge return on investment for ourselves and the future of our children and our children's children. The Alberta of tomorrow will quite simply see us provide those children with the best education system in the world. We will plan the development of our communities together much earlier than we have in the past, and we will not spend hours sitting in traffic on our way to and from work.

I see a province in which we will all have equal access to excellent health care, and we will also have options to choose from in this regard. No one, especially seniors, will ever have to wait 18 months for an operation. I see an Alberta in which we treat the less advantaged with dignity and grace. We not only allow but we encourage and empower them to be the best that they can possibly be. In the microcosm we will live by good old-fashioned family values – we'll take care of ourselves, and we'll take care of each other – and in the macrocosm we will enjoy an even stronger Alberta within Confederation.

I believe that my Progressive Conservative colleagues have a similar vision, and I know that they have many more wonderful ideas to share, as well. As such, I would like to thank my PC brothers and sisters for sharing their incredible gifts and talents with our caucus and with our province.

I would also like to thank the members of our team who have represented Calgary-Lougheed before me, Judge Marlene Graham and the hon. Jim Dinning. These two have left very large shoes to fill, but it is affirming to follow in such great footsteps, and I wish them nothing but the best in their future endeavours. These predecessors have helped to lead us into these interesting times that we now enjoy, and I believe that it's only going to get even more exciting.

To address this future reality, our forward-thinking agenda, as laid out so well in the throne speech, is a testament to the tireless work of all former MLAs, current colleagues, and of course our esteemed Premier. As was outlined in the speech, I know that the people of Calgary-Lougheed are very excited about working towards an Alberta with the best educational, economic, health, and social systems in the world.

While my team and I knocked on 8,000 doors in our riding during the nomination and election, thousands of my constituents shared their thoughts with regard to how they think this government should tackle the issues of our time. But it was also what my constituents did not say that I think is worthy of note. I did not hear my constituents say that they wanted to be average citizens, and I did not hear them say that they wanted an average government. My colleagues heard this message as well, and as such they have planned a very ambitious agenda: to be national leaders on the issues that matter most to Albertans. While this is a tall task and while there is a predominance of doom and gloom in the news and in the beliefs of certain interest groups, I believe that we have a world-class system here in Alberta and that it will only improve with time. But from what people tell me, we need to do more now, and we will.

As this government pledges to open up 60,000 new spaces in our universities and increase training in nonacademic career paths, we will have the most-educated and well-trained workforce in all of Canada. Thankfully, this spending will not only benefit those who wish to attend postsecondary education in the next few years, since Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, will create an endowment fund to ensure that the youth of this province continue to benefit for decades to come. This is a reminder of one of the most endearing legacies to come from the Speech from the Throne, that being the Lois Hole digital library, based at the University of Calgary but providing vast knowledge to all Albertans, that will help them overcome their educational obstacles.

However, there is one thing that the library cannot completely help us overcome, and that is our individual health status, which doesn't necessarily improve with a strong economy or great returns on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Instead, it is dependent on people making informed choices on how to live their lives in a positive manner and being able to quickly access quality health care when they really need it.

As the newly-appointed chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission I look forward to the challenges and rewards of acting as the liaison between the health minister, AADAC, the Premier, cabinet, and my fellow colleagues in the Legislature. Substance abuse leads to a great number of health problems, as we all know, not just for the individual but for the family and friends of those who are addicted. We can spend a huge amount of funding in health facilities to treat the secondary symptoms that result from substance addiction, but unless we focus on the causes of these types of addictions and abuse, we'll never see the light at the end of the tunnel with respect to the elimination of substance abuse. I know that that is exactly what AADAC and its fine personnel strive to do every day.

So I believe that there are many reasons for hope. I anticipate that great strides will be made for those involved with substance abuse partially because of the commitment that the minister of health has made toward Alberta being the healthiest province in Canada, and I look forward to working with the minister, our Premier, and my colleagues on this.

Together we are faced with very innovative opportunities with regard to health care delivery. Many Albertans have told me that they want a health care system that provides them with the services that they need, with very careful attention as to how their health dollars are spent. As someone who has used our health system in the past, I honestly believe that we have very good people in the health sector, who provide Albertans with the best possible care that they can. Is our system perfect? Of course not, but we'll continue to make it the best it can be.

As we plan for the future of our health care system, I know that the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed want a system that works best for Alberta, one that includes aspects of a wide variety of models. The proposal to amend legislation that will allow for innovation in the health care field will create a very healthy debate and will explore all of the health care delivery options so that we won't miss out on any of the excellent approaches that are being utilized in systems across the world. The people of this province will be watching very closely as we make very important decisions on this matter, and I will be watching very closely, as well, to ensure that whatever systems we choose, every single Albertan will continue to receive quick and high-quality health care, regardless of their ability to pay.

In addition to these issues, I know that the people in Calgary-Lougheed are concerned about a clean and protected environment. Like many constituents and colleagues I also put a great amount of value on environmental conservation.

Sorry. Am I out of time? I'll sit down.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to hear what the concluding statement of this maiden speech would be, please.

The Speaker: Hon. member, proceed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, hon. member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. One minute to go.

As I've mentioned, in addition to health care and education, I know that people in Calgary-Lougheed are concerned about a clean and protected environment. Like my colleagues and constituents I put a great amount of value on environmental conservation. Perhaps this is at least due to the close proximity of our fine riding to the beautiful Fish Creek provincial park.

When I draw attention to this, please note that I'm not speaking out against all industrial development. I believe that we sometimes pit environment and industry against each other, sometimes very unfairly. While future generations of Albertans deserve to have a healthy environment passed down to them, I believe that this does not need to be at the expense of this province's great economy. I am very proud to say that I believe this government has performed a great balancing act with regard to environmental protectionism and industry growth. Through strong government policy I'm confident that this relationship will grow even stronger in the future.

The last concerns of Calgary-Lougheed residents that I will mention today are those of transportation and infrastructure. I certainly share this concern, as well, but after speaking recently with the hon. minister in charge, I have never been more optimistic in this regard. Additionally, with the city of Calgary receiving $1 billion recently and considering the arrangements for the southwest portion of the ring road being closer to reality than ever before, as evidenced in today's paper, I'm confident that we will continue to move in the right direction at an even faster pace than before.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the future is bright for all of us, and I look forward to the challenges ahead as we move onward and upward, building the legacy of Calgary-Lougheed and the future of Alberta together.

In closing, I would like to thank my personal hero, my wife, Jennifer, who is also the co-founder of our organization entitled the Mountain of Heroes. I'd like to thank my assistants, my campaign teams, my campaign manager, who is a 22-year-old former student of mine named Keith Marlowe, and of course my family and friends for their support and inspiration.

I would like to once again express my appreciation to the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed for the opportunity to be their representative, and I very much look forward to their continued feedback over the years. I want to assure them that I will do everything possible to keep their issues at the front of the Alberta agenda.

Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me an extended period to share my thoughts on the past, present, and future of our fair province.

The Speaker: Before I call on the next speaker, hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, you have a special introduction? Proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It makes me extremely proud and pleased to rise today and acknowledge the one person I love the most in this world, more than anybody else except for our two children: my wife, Marwa, who is sitting in the public gallery. I would like her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Wow, you earned points.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I get the chance to congratulate you on your re-election as the Speaker of this esteemed Assembly, and I would like to also convey congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chair of Committees.

I'm extremely pleased to have the privilege of responding to the Speech from the Throne and delivering my initial or inaugural address, and I thank you for this opportunity today. It is with great pride that I stand before you today representing my constituency and the constituents of Edmonton-McClung.

My constituency is named after Nellie McClung, of course, one of the Famous Five, a visionary, a brave person, a person who fought for equality and fairness. She was an individual who had the courage and resolve necessary to challenge the status quo. She had the courage and vision to change people's lives for the better. I am honoured to be representing a constituency named after her.

I am also proud to be living in a neighbourhood by the name of Lymburn, which represents a sizable portion of my constituency and is named after the hon. J.F. Lymburn, this province's Attorney General between 1926 and 1935.

Edmonton-McClung has a population of about 38,000, and about one-sixth of them, Mr. Speaker, are school-aged children and youth. The people of Edmonton-McClung live in both rural and urban settings, and they are predominantly middle- to upper middle-class citizens, where the average household income exceeds $80,000 per year.

I plan to work hard to ensure that the residents in my riding, in my constituency, continue to have prosperity and enjoy a good quality of life. Whether they're still working or retired, they are or were hard-working individuals and families, and for that they deserve recognition and support. Their achievements have to be highlighted and their contributions to society rewarded.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Having said that, we also have an incidence of low income in our riding of about 12 and a half per cent. This is 1 in 8 families, Mr. Speaker, so obviously this is an area which requires our immediate attention, and I plan to work on finding a solution.

The population in Edmonton-McClung is generally on the younger side. However, we highly value and recognize our seniors. It is a growing group, and more and more households in Edmonton-McClung now have at least one elderly person living with them. Mr. Speaker, I have always had a soft spot in my heart for both children and youth and for senior citizens, and that's probably going back to my years of community pharmacy practice, where most of my patients and clients were either young people or elderly. The seniors of this province have worked very hard to get us where we are today, and they deserve our recognition and care. We should be asking them for advice and input, and we ought to build on their wisdom and expertise. The young people, on the other hand, represent our future, and looking after them today is a sound investment for a better tomorrow.

Next I would like to congratulate all members of this 26th Legislature, new and returning, and wish them well in carrying out their duties. I remind them and myself that we chose to be servants of the public. We answered the call for a life of selflessness and dedication. May you all have the courage and insight needed to help the people of this great province, and may you gain satisfaction and pride in the work that you do for all Albertans.

I need to take a moment now to recognize my dear wife, Marwa, my two children, Zeyad and Jana, my parents, my brother, my sister, and my sister-in-law. I would not have made it this far without their love and support. To my family, thank you sincerely for being with me, by my side, and behind me.

It's important that I thank the many volunteers who believed in me and worked tirelessly day and night on my campaign. The youngest person on my campaign team was 12 years old, and the oldest person was in his 80s. Without my committed team of volunteers, without the community support I would not be standing here today.

To my volunteers, my friends, and my neighbours in Edmonton-McClung, I want to tell you all: thank you very much. I love you all, and I appreciate all you have done. We ran a spirited and structured campaign. We had a message to deliver, and my team and I delivered it effectively and efficiently. We kept to the high road, and we stayed above board throughout the writ period. It was undeniably difficult, and the task seemed enormous at times, but we had fun, and we made many friends. Our hard work and dedication resonated very well throughout the riding – and it's not a small riding – and the people of Edmonton-McClung reacted very favourably.

It is those people, Mr. Speaker, who I would definitely and ultimately like to thank and appreciate, the voters of Edmonton-McClung. They have put their trust in me to be their MLA. I have lived in this constituency for the past 15 years and have come to know many of its people, young and old. I am blessed to have also worked in the constituency for 11 years, and I am proud of the many wonderful people who have frequented my pharmacy and entrusted me with their health. Now they've hired me to represent them here and defend their interests.

I quote H.L. Mencken's remark when he said: "It is inaccurate to say that I hate everything. I am strongly in favour of common sense, common honesty, and common decency. This makes me forever ineligible for public office." Mr. Speaker, this is where we differ. Many people, including myself, who are in favour of common sense, honesty, and decency are recognized by people around them and are voted in. The people of Edmonton-McClung wanted a hard-working MLA to represent their points of view and deliver their ideas to the higher circles of government, so today I am going to repeat and renew my promise to them. I will always tell you the truth and share all the facts with you, I will honestly work for you and wholeheartedly defend your interests, I will constantly seek your input and direction, I will always be visible in the community, and my team and I will remain accessible to all of you. Again, to the voters of Edmonton-McClung, thank you and God bless you and your families.

Further, I would like to thank and congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, who led our campaign with class and style. We are a party with a vision, and our platform is full of ideas for a brighter future. I am honoured and humbled to be a part of this wonderful team. As the Official Opposition we promise the people of this province that we will leave no stone unturned. We will ask the hard questions, and we will advocate for their causes. As the youngest caucus member I promise to be a quick study. I'm looking forward to working alongside my esteemed colleagues to restore accountability and transparency, bring back faith in politics and politicians, and revive the democratic process in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share the following quotation by George Jean Nathan with the people of Alberta. "Bad officials are elected by good citizens who do not vote." Voting is a right and a privilege people in other parts of the world, as my hon. colleague there alluded to, fight for and die for. So it cannot be stressed enough that all of us as electors and as voters exercise this right and use the tool that's available to us to decide our own destiny and future.

When I moved to Canada 15 years ago, I knew this was a great land. When I chose Alberta, I felt this was the one part of Canada with the most potential. When I embraced Edmonton, I knew its people would become my big family, and when I picked Edmonton-McClung, I was sure it would be my neighbourhood and the people in Edmonton-McClung would be my friends. Mr. Speaker, I was right. I'm proud to be a Canadian, an Albertan, and an Edmontonian.

Four months ago I was a successful health care professional and a businessman. Today, Mr. Speaker, I am an MLA, a legislator, and a critic. I assure you that I will work to serve all members of this Assembly, the constituents of Edmonton-McClung, and all Albertans to the best of my ability regardless of their political affiliation or ideology. I will do my best as an MLA and as the Official Opposition critic for Government Services and Innovation and Science.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this privilege of speaking today. I look forward to working with you and learning from you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a new member it is a pleasure and an honour to rise today on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Foothills and address the Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. This is my first opportunity to formally address the Assembly, and in doing so, I would like to provide some background information on both the constituency of Calgary-Foothills and myself.

First, I would like to begin by congratulating all of my colleagues in the Assembly on achieving the opportunity to represent their constituents and to represent Alberta.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for his election as Deputy Speaker of the House for the 26th Legislature. I'm well aware of the distinction you bring to the chair and the House, and I look forward to participating in what will be a constructive and meaningful session under your watch as well as the watch of the Speaker, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Speaker, as a new Member for Calgary-Foothills I have some extremely large shoes to fill. Calgary-Foothills has been held by Conservatives for the past three decades. The late hon. Len Werry was the first member to serve our constituency, from 1971 until his untimely death in 1973. His thriving political career was cut prematurely short by a tragic automobile accident. The hon. Stewart McCrae then served the constituency from 1973 to '82; the late hon. Janet Koper from '82-89; and of course the former Finance minister, the hon. Pat Nelson, who served with remarkable diligence and distinction from 1989 to 2004.

I'm honoured, Mr. Speaker, that the constituents of Calgary-Foothills have provided me with the opportunity to represent them here in the Legislature, and I look forward to carrying on the tradition of virtue and integrity established by those past members, that helped establish Calgary-Foothills as the best constituency in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, today is an especially proud occasion for myself and my family. It was almost 30 years ago, on May 21, 1975, that my father, Dr. Neil Webber, rose in the House to deliver his maiden speech as the Member for Calgary-Bow. He served 14 years in the Legislature under the Lougheed and Getty governments and served with honesty and integrity. There are two hon. colleagues in this House, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw and the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who, I am sure, feel as I do today, and that is feeling tremendously proud of our fathers and tremendously proud to carry on the family tradition of public service.

Mr. Speaker, I was reading through my father's maiden speech recently, and I came across a portion that I would like to share. In the education segment of his speech my father made a reference to Bertrand Russell, a noted English author, mathematician, and philosopher. Lord Russell felt that education is, as a whole, "the strongest force on the side of what exists and against fundamental change."

My father went on to explain that although many tend to agree with Russell's philosophy and that educators have never come to grips with what education should be, he believed Alberta's education system needed to be geared towards helping people progress toward their own goals of self-fulfillment. This meant support for research in our universities and colleges for the improvement of the quality of learning, support for well-planned programs for early childhood education, support for continuing educational opportunities for adults, and support for specialized programs for the handicapped and the gifted. He concluded his remarks on education by stating that "we cannot overlook the challenge to provide for future generations the best educational opportunities possible."

Mr. Speaker, while I read that, I could not help but think about how far we've come in 30 years but at the same time how far we have yet to go. During the Speech from the Throne my father's remarks kept coming to mind. Through Bill 1, the commitments to keep tuition fees affordable and increase spaces for students in Alberta's postsecondary institutions, the government is ensuring that future generations of Albertans are provided the best educational opportunities possible.

Mr. Speaker, before I address some other specifics of the throne speech, I feel it is important to bring some attention to some unique qualities of Calgary-Foothills. As a born-and-raised Calgarian I have watched the constituency change from rolling hills of native grassland and grazing cattle to the thriving residential communities of Edgemont, Citadel, Hamptons, Hidden Valley, and Sherwood. With the recent boundary changes citizens in the far south were shifted to the Calgary-Varsity constituency while the riding was expanded west to take in an area formerly of Calgary-North West. From a bird's-eye view the riding is located at the top northwest corner of the city limits.

Calgary-Foothills has a population of just over 40,000, the majority of which are families which have achieved a college or university education, own their own house, and have an average annual family income of close to $100,000. It is interesting to note that more than 70 per cent of individuals residing in Calgary-Foothills are postsecondary graduates. That's the second-highest percentage of postsecondary graduates in Alberta. I know what most members are thinking: the June and Ward Cleaver family, including Wally and Beaver, live in Calgary-Foothills. But I can assure you that these are mere statistics. Calgary-Foothills is very much an economically diverse constituency with many hard-working families of all ethnic and religious backgrounds. We have representation from almost every profession. Professional and retail services are the most common jobs in Calgary-Foothills. Six point eight per cent of the residents are low income, with 4 per cent of the riding's income coming from government transfer payments, the third lowest rate in Alberta.

My background in construction and in the trades has brought me especially close to the many tradesmen and women living in the constituency. These individuals are the backbone of our vibrant economy, and I feel privileged to represent them here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier how far we have come in 30 years but that we have a ways yet to go. That sentiment rings true throughout remarks made by past Calgary-Foothills members. In 1983 the member for Calgary-Foothills mentioned that it was not uncommon for students at the University of Calgary to line up even in the middle of the night for time on computer terminals. Many classes were filled to overflowing, and some were even conducted by closed-circuit television. That was over 20 years ago. Today the majority of Albertans and students have computers in their home and do the majority of their class work through the Internet. Obtaining class notes, contacting classmates and professors, submitting assignments, and even obtaining graduate and master's degrees can all be accomplished on line.

The technical advances that are being introduced daily only strengthen the enormous possibilities for what the future has in store for education in Alberta, and the Supernet is a large part of that. Alberta is one of the most wired jurisdictions in North America, and that is instrumental in ensuring that Albertans have access to the information and possibilities they deserve.

Yet there are still not enough spaces in Alberta's postsecondary institutions, and the limits placed on registration have increased the competition to a level beyond anything most Albertans can conceive. The effects of these limits are closing the door to advanced education for a number of Albertans. Tuition fees are rising at a rate that is making it extremely difficult even with funding assistance for some Albertans to attend postsecondary institutions. I was pleased to hear that the Alberta government is taking action on tuition fees across the province, freezing them this year and working towards a tuition policy that will strengthen the Alberta advantage.

As was the case 20 years ago and the concern of my father 30 years ago, individuals that want to advance their education are not always provided that opportunity due to a lack of open spaces at Alberta's universities, colleges, and technical institutions. The government's commitment to increasing the number of available spaces by 15,000 in the next three years, 30,000 after six years, and 60,000 by the year 2020 is something that Albertans can be proud and excited about. These commitments, along with the promises made in Bill 1, a long-term plan to keep Alberta's education strong and successful, an endowment fund, the creation of a centre for Chinese studies, and the Lois Hole digital library are an incredible centennial gift for a debt-free Alberta and all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the constituents of Calgary-Foothills are also extremely excited about the $3 billion committed to municipal infrastructure. I'm sure that my colleagues will agree along with our constituents that it will go to good use and is a very welcome addition to the future of the great city of Calgary.

In conclusion, I would like to also quote Lord Bertrand Russell.

Men fear thought as they fear nothing else on earth – more than ruin – more even than death . . . Thought is subversive and revolutionary, destructive and terrible, thought is merciless to privilege, established institutions, and comfortable habit. Thought looks into the pit of hell and is not afraid. Thought is great and swift and free, the light of the world, and the chief glory of man.

I thank the hon. members for their attention, and I encourage a debate deep in thought culminating in an Alberta that will ensure another hundred years of greatness. I look forward to a fruitful session.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar in regard to the Speech from the Throne which was delivered by His Honour Norman Kwong, Lieutenant Governor, in this First Session of the 26th Legislature.

Certainly, this is a wonderful year for the province as we celebrate our 100th anniversary. I certainly hope that there are not many dark days this year like we had last Thursday. I have a great deal of confidence, as the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar do as well, in the future prosperity of this province. We still have a lot of work to do to make this province better for each and every citizen.

I'm pleased to see at this time that the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House is reading, but I would remind that hon. member that newspapers, as I understand the rules of the House and the decorum in this House, are not to be opened and read in that matter in this Assembly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look at this province and we look at all the constituents that are represented by the 83 of us, we have to stop and pause, and we have to reflect on exactly what is good for everyone. We have to look at all the issues, not just some of the issues some of the time but all of the issues all of the time. We can start on the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, which now is made up of communities on both sides of the North Saskatchewan River. We're looking at the communities of Cloverdale, Strathearn, Holyrood. We're also looking at Ottewell, Capilano, Gold Bar of course, Terrace Heights, Forest Heights, Hardisty, Fulton Place, Riverdale, Boyle, McCauley, Commonwealth areas. Edmonton-Gold Bar is a diverse constituency. I am proud to now represent the neighbourhood around Commonwealth Stadium. I'm proud to represent the neighbourhood that's affectionately called Little Italy in the city of Edmonton and parts of the Chinese community east of 97th street. In fact, all hon. members of this Assembly, if you're looking for any good restaurants with extensive menus and varied prices, I would urge you to visit some of the finer establishments in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mrs. McClellan: I've never seen you in any of them.

Mr. MacDonald: Even the Minister of Finance. Certainly I know that the hon. minister is very busy, but she, too, would be welcome in the eateries in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

An Hon. Member: Are you buying, Hugh?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I'm not buying, but certainly hosting budgets don't seem to be limited with this government, and I'm sure arrangements could be made.

Now, I would like to formally thank the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar for re-electing me as their representative. I was joined by many people who worked very hard on our campaign, and during the campaign the citizens told me that they would give me another opportunity to represent them in the Legislative Assembly if I would hold this government to task, hold this government accountable, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to do my utmost to keep in mind exactly what they told me. In a democracy there has to be government and there has to be opposition, and the opposition has a duty and an obligation to hold the government accountable. I was given instructions to hold this government accountable.

On behalf of all the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would like to congratulate each and every member of this Legislative Assembly on their election victory. I would also like to congratulate the Speaker and all others that were successful in the internal elections that were recently conducted in this Legislative Assembly. It is very important that we always remember during this term the citizens, the taxpayers.

Now, Edmonton-Gold Bar would be no different than a lot of other constituencies in this province. People are doing very well economically, yet there are some people who are not. There are issues around poverty. There are many people in the constituency who during the last election certainly wanted AISH rates increased. They did not want to wait and have this studied any further. They wanted an immediate increase in AISH rates. People in this province can no longer afford to get by on as little as $855 a month, and I don't think it is the right thing to do to expect people on fixed incomes in this day and age to try to get by on as little as that. Certainly the minimum wage needs to be increased.

There has to be, also, more work done on the whole issue of homelessness. People have remarked to me that in the last 10 years the number of homeless people not only in Edmonton but also when I visit Calgary has increased. We can do more, and we can do it better. Regardless of whether it's in the middle of the winter or in the summer, if any Albertan wants to go somewhere to seek shelter and perhaps have a shower and get a meal, those facilities should be available for them.

I had an interesting opportunity to visit one of the faith-based charities in Edmonton-Gold Bar that provides breakfast for citizens, a hot breakfast, three mornings a week. I was astonished in the time that I was there to observe the number of elementary-aged school-children who came in, and that was their first meal of the day. I certainly hope, Mr. Speaker, that it wasn't their only meal of the day, but it was their first meal of the day before they went off to school. I don't think that that is part of what we all talk about in this province as being the Alberta advantage. I just don't think it is.

Now, the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, doesn't address, in my view, this whole idea of importing temporary replacement workers in Alberta. Certainly I was as astonished as many others were to hear last June that this was going to be a way that we're going to deal with these perceived labour shortages in this province. I would ask respectfully of this government to have another look at that policy.

Youth unemployment in this province is double the provincial average. Close to 10 per cent – 9 and a half per cent – of Alberta youth between the ages of 16 and 24 are unemployed. Why are these people not getting apprenticeships? Why are they not going up to Fort McMurray and participating in the economic boom? That's one group. Alberta First Nations citizens have a chronic rate of unemployment. They are not included in this. There are other Canadians. There are many different groups that should be contacted and should be encouraged to take out apprenticeships, if we have this perceived trade shortage, before we resort to importing temporary replacement workers into this economy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here from the Legislature Library the Employed Labour Force in the agricultural sector of Alberta. There has been a significant decline, a 23 per cent drop between 2002 and 2003, in the number of employed people in mixed farming. Where did those people go? Who knows? But I think that before we have seminars at NAIT and SAIT and dream up ways to get temporary workers into this province, we have to have a sound policy to encourage farmers to get certification in some of the compulsory trades so that if they want during these difficult economic times to work out off the farm, then they can get the maximum amount of money for their labour. I would encourage the government at this time, in light of the BSE issue and the fact that farm incomes in this province are declining significantly, that that would be an initiative that we could implement before we allow these guest workers from who knows where to be imported at what wage rates.

Also with the agricultural sector, and I certainly hope that we will address this sometime. I don't see directly mentioned in the throne speech the money that we're investing in BSE scientific research. I would urge the government at this time to take, whether it's part of the $30 million package – I would hope that part of that money is going to be used for scientific research into a live blood test to detect BSE, a live test that could be conducted for a modest amount per head, maybe $5, maybe $7, maybe $10 a head, an accurate, live blood test for BSE. Maybe that's what some of this money is going to be used for, and this hon. member is not aware of it.

Now, in the time that I have left, there are a number of issues but certainly education. Many hon. members in this Assembly have talked about public education, postsecondary education, and I'm glad to see that the government has at least taken some plays out of the Alberta provincial Liberal Party's playbook and are now finally recognizing the seriousness of the underfunding of postsecondary education in this province. Don't declare it a victory that after allowing tuition fees to skyrocket for the best part of 10 years, to freeze them and think that that is enough. It's not. I know that this government did that with health care premiums, allowed them in the last term to go from roughly $600 million to well over $900 million and then used that tax increase – and it was a tax increase – to allow a modest reduction for some citizens. Seniors certainly welcomed that tax reduction, but don't forget about the rest of the citizens.

Now, the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar is a settled community. It is well established, and it's going through transition. Because it's going through a transition, it is not necessary to be forcing the public school board because of this government's utilization policy to close neighbourhood schools. An hon. member earlier in his speech talked about Peter Lougheed and some of Peter Lougheed's views and Peter Lougheed's visions. Well, Peter Lougheed's vision was also a community school, the idea that a community school was a part of the community, a big part of the community and was not necessarily just open from 8:30 in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and once the children and the staff left, that was it. A school was part of the community, and it could be used for many things other than the routine school day. This has been forgotten by this part of the Progressive Conservative dynasty.

I'm disappointed that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As seems to have become the tradition in the House this afternoon, I too very much would like to hear the conclusion of the remarks from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: I had many issues I was hoping to discuss this afternoon on behalf of the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Certainly, education and the closure of our schools is an important one, but also during the campaign whether I was at the Capilano Mall or I was at the Italian Centre, people would come up to me and say: we realize the government is spending money. I would say: they certainly are. In my time in the Legislative Assembly the provincial budget has increased by over 50 per cent, and constituents and voters would look at me and they would say: "Where's the money going? We still have problems. We still have long lists for health care access. We still have potholes bigger than hubcaps in our streets. We still have bridges that need repair. We still have major roads that need to be built. We need hospitals in Calgary. We need schools on the outskirts of Edmonton." All this money is being spent, but the citizens don't know where it's going. They demand accountability from their government, and they feel at this time that they're not getting it now.

For instance, how fast this government spends money, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is a valid example. We've expanded the size of government.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you're rising on a point of order?

Point of Order

Question and Comment Period

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 29 with respect to time limits on debates, 29(2) provides for the five-minute question-and-answer period. I think both the strict wording of the rule and the intention of the rule was that there be an opportunity for members to ask questions and get brief answers.

Now, I can appreciate that one might read into the comment by Edmonton-Rutherford, "I would like to hear the conclusion of the debate," a question as to, "What was the conclusion of your debate?" It certainly didn't invite a lengthy continuation of the debate. It asked for the conclusion, and a brief answer to the request for a conclusion would have been appropriate, but a lengthy conclusion is certainly not under that rule.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you want to respond to that?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker, briefly. I'll be brief because I would certainly like to conclude my speech whether the hon. member wants to hear it or not. Certainly, a precedent was set this afternoon, not by members on this side of the House but by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor and by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. The Government House Leader perhaps should discuss that with them privately, not on the floor of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you have anything more to add, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if nobody objected earlier, that's not my problem. The fact of the matter is that there is a rule, and it ought to be interpreted appropriately. Just the fact that the practice was let go, perhaps, earlier this afternoon is not an answer to the question of whether the rule is being appropriately used.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you for the opportunity to make my first ruling as Deputy Speaker. I would believe that the Speaker has ruled on this earlier today by allowing this, and I would allow the hon. member to take up the rest of the five minutes. That may be very short by this time.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, an example of government spending and the growth of government is the creation of the new ministry, affectionately on this side of the House referred to as RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency. This department has only been in existence, by the time this quarterly report came out, for a little better than six weeks, yet we have a $38 million line item associated with it. Thirty-eight million dollars. That is just one example of government spending that in my view is out of control and not accountable. We don't have $200,000 to keep a school open in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar, but we can spend money like this.

Also, electricity deregulation is an ongoing concern for the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it's not addressed in this speech, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker. We need, really, to get to the bottom of electricity deregulation, and we're not, unfortunately. I would urge this government to unplug electricity deregulation and take another idea from this side of the House and adopt our low-cost electricity plan. Consumers demand it.

The Deputy Speaker: Your time has elapsed, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: It's up?

The Deputy Speaker: I apologize, hon. member. Apparently, it's not. You have two minutes. I was in error. Please carry on.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation is a very complex issue, and I appreciate the extra time.

Now, when we talk about electricity deregulation, we have to talk about what has happened in the last seven years in this province. We have seen time after time after time citizens expressing their outrage at the cost of electricity. What caused these prices to go up? We had one of the stablest, one of the most affordable electricity generation and distribution systems in North America, and it just went crazy starting in 1999, year 2000, year 2001. It was just before the 2001 election that this government capped electricity prices and then returned money to the citizens. However, it was the citizens' own money.

This system that was developed by this government, this government is totally responsible for. It had big loopholes in it. Outfits from across the border, Enron in particular, looked at the rules that were set up by this government and, as far as my research indicates, came up with this whole notion of Project Stanley, which was . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'll get to that later.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: I would just like to, before I recognize the next speaker, also point out to the hon. members that Standing Order 13(4)(b) says, "When a member is speaking, no person shall . . . interrupt that member, except to raise a point of order." There were a number of interruptions there that could have been called as well.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the House today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. In his address the Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, reiterated the government's commitment to a superior education system in this province. This year the focus is on making adjustments to the postsecondary system so that it is more tailored to respond to the changing environment.

There have been many exciting events in the Wetaskiwin-

Camrose constituency since we last sat in this Chamber. On July 1, 2004, Augustana University College became the Augustana Faculty, the newest campus and faculty of the University of Alberta. This partnering with the University of Alberta creates a centre of education that will provide greater opportunity for students to study in rural settings as well as increasing the number of university seats in Alberta. As a result of this change, my constituency is fast becoming a hub of learning, with the University of Alberta campus in Camrose, the NorQuest College campus in Wetaskiwin, and Maskwachees Cultural College in Hobbema. The Wetaskiwin NorQuest campus is their largest outside of Edmonton and provides students with the opportunity to study high school credit courses as well as computing, financial, and other job preparation programs.

Leading in learning is one of the four pillars upon which Alberta's 20-year plan is built. The plan to expand Alberta's postsecondary spaces by 15,000 in the next three years, with more to follow, and the announcement of Bill 1 of this Legislature will mark the start of Alberta's reinvestment in the postsecondary education system. By continuing to invest in the education of Albertans, we will be strengthening our workforce by providing the opportunities for them to increase their skills. We will also be providing the human capital necessary to build on the next pillar of the 20-year plan, namely unleashing innovation.

Mr. Speaker, the research and development industry is growing at a fantastic rate in this province. We have world-class universities where leading-edge research is taking place in a variety of fields from medical technology to agricultural research to nanotechnology. However, research in this province is not conducted solely in our universities. Industry partners with government agencies to conduct research and develop innovative ideas in the province.

In particular, I would like to speak today about the Alberta Research Council, or ARC, an organization of which I am pleased to be the chair. ARC was created in 1921 to help Albertans harness its resources for greater economic impact. Over its more than 80-year history the organization has leveraged public investment to create economic opportunities designed to maintain and enhance the competitiveness of Alberta industries. It was this principle that led ARC to understand how to use aspen poplar to create an oriented strandboard, OSB, industry in the 1980s, a $2 billion industry today, and now has ARC looking at doing the same with straw and other agricultural fibres to help establish a strong bioproducts industry in Alberta.

Today ARC continues to work hand in hand with industry and in collaboration with governments and universities to make Alberta a leading centre for technology development and commercialization. The organization supports the growth of innovative companies by providing research and development services and helping companies apply and commercialize technology. Its close to 500 highly skilled scientists and engineers work in key sectors that drive Alberta's economy: manufacturing, energy, life sciences, forestry, agriculture, and environment.

Energy and life sciences are key strategic economic thrusts for Alberta, and the Alberta Research Council is contributing with the technical underpinnings and applied research and development to move these industries forward. In energy ARC's activities are driven by the need to build government/industry/academic collaboration across the research continuum to acquire, develop, adopt, and adapt transformational energy technologies.

ARC has aligned its energy, integrated resource management, and enabling technology activities to deliver on the six core programs of Alberta Energy's innovation network, known as the EnergyINet strategy. These include clean coal, resource recovery, carbon dioxide management, water management, and alternate energy.

ARC has also identified a number of crosscutting themes to enhance the impact of the EnergyINet process. These are advanced materials, flow sensors and controls, economics, risk assessment, process integration, system engineering and modelling, and technology commercialization.

In the area of life sciences ARC's focus is on helping local companies get their new products and processes to market more effectively and on creating value-added opportunities for future business built on life sciences. ARC's nutraceutical and pharmaceutical services business has adopted a new model to support local biotechnology companies realize their product development goals. The organization also acts as a catalyst in helping to create a strong regional bioproducts cluster in the greater Edmonton region.

In this regard the organization is providing a gateway for bioproducts development in Alberta, which is one aspect that enhances value-added industry in Alberta. For instance, ARC is a founding member of the new institute for agricultural sciences Alberta, sometimes known as IFASA, along with the University of Alberta and Alberta Agriculture. Bioproducts are one of six priority research areas for this institute.

ARC has also recently initiated construction of an agricultural fibre pilot processing facility, expanding its existing physical infrastructure to support the growth and development of an agricultural bioproducts industry in Alberta. This new bioproducts processing and scale-up facility is expected to be on stream and operating early in 2006. It will include laboratories and pilot scale processing capabilities that will support collaborative bioproduct based research and product development between the three founding partners of IFASA, industry, and others.

While the initial focus will be on agrifibre-based products such as paper, fibreboard, and plastic composite materials, the facility will also provide a critical building block to the infrastructure and capability required to add value to Alberta's agricultural crops. This facility will also serve to support existing and emerging industries as well as the training of new graduate students from universities and other educational institutions.

Mr. Speaker, this is but a glimpse of the work that ARC is currently involved in, and ARC is but one of several institutions within the province that are designed to drive research and development in key areas in Alberta. By supporting our postsecondary institutions and nurturing research centres such as the universities of Alberta and of Calgary and of Lethbridge as well as ARC, we can help Alberta continue to move towards a knowledge-based economy. The advanced education agenda discussed in the throne speech is vitally important to my constituency and to the research initiatives and programs in our educational institutions of higher learning and research centres such as the ARC. Surely, this will ensure success and prosperity in Alberta for our next century.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise and address the hon. Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne, given on March 2. First, I would like to congratulate His Honour on this appointment to the Lieutenant Governor's position. The speech His Honour gave was done very well, and I would like to commend His Honour on the fine job that he did. I look forward to working with the Lieutenant Governor in the coming years.

As well, I will take this time to pay tribute to his predecessor, Lois

Hole. She was a remarkable lady who brought so much dignity and warmth to the Lieutenant Governor's office. Her Honour was such a beloved Albertan, and she loved this province greatly. It was a delight to work with her, and she is surely going to be missed.

I would like to begin by thanking the people of West Yellowhead for returning me to serve here in this Legislature. I appreciate the support, and I'd like to thank you all for your confidence in me. I will represent you to the best of my ability and will always assure that the interests of West Yellowhead are heard at the government table.

I would also like to thank those who helped me with my campaign this year. I especially wish to send special thanks to Darlene Beckstrand, who took time off to assist me with the challenge of seeking re-election. I greatly appreciate her help, and she has decided to return as my assistant here at the Legislature, which shows me that she is extremely strong to be able to keep me in line. I look forward to working with her over the next four years. As well, I wish to thank all the volunteers who helped me. Without them I would not be here today.

Mr. Speaker, the West Yellowhead constituency has been through its ups and downs over the last six years. I think that the region is a great representation of the entire province and a fine example how diversification is so important for economic sustainability.

In the Speech from the Throne His Honour mentioned that the next Alberta will have a diverse and growing economy, and I could not agree more. Diversity is the most important economic strategy that this province must take hold of. Dependency on one industry to continually maintain an economy is just too risky for any economy. I was very proud to hear that this government is pushing for more diversification, and I think this government realizes the importance of this strategy.

Diversification is something that West Yellowhead is greatly involved with right now. Grande Cache, an extremely beautiful community in the West Yellowhead constituency, shows the importance of diversity. The town of approximately 3,800 people is moving forward and developing other industries outside the mining industry to ensure that there will be long-term sustainability. Long-term growth is at the forefront of their minds, and they are developing industries such as tourism to keep themselves moving forward in this province's new century.

West Yellowhead constituents also encourage diversification through the development of the Grande Alberta Economic Region. The Grande Alberta Economic Region is an alliance of 13 rural municipalities, towns, villages, and one associated member, Jasper national park. This is a nonprofit corporation. It's made up of businesses, government, and industry stakeholders as an agency on behalf of its member municipalities. It began in 2001 and has been strengthening every year since.

The goal of this partnership is to ensure that the region can take what industry it has and make it better and diversify. The alliance realizes the greatest opportunity to diversify the five major industries: agriculture, oil and gas, mining, forestry, and tourism. For instance, the oil and gas industry is extremely hot in the constituency. The industry is providing so many jobs not only in the oil and gas industry, but the spinoffs for small business have been remarkable. Alberta as a province depends on the oil and gas industry, as do many in West Yellowhead. It is an important economic driver but not the only one. Many communities are looking to develop other opportunities to supplement the industry.

I mentioned tourism a few minutes ago, and with the development of the tourism levy West Yellowhead is in great shape to market itself to the world. The levy is a great example of how the Alberta government is committed to diversification. The entire constituency will take advantage of new funding, encouraged that they have another industry to draw on. There are so many opportunities for the communities in West Yellowhead, and I am excited to see how they take the challenge of them over the coming years. The levy will also strengthen the municipality of Jasper, which relies on tourism as their main industry because of being in the national park. Hopefully, more tourists will head to the Jasper region because the more that go, the more business it will bring.

The Speech from the Throne also mentions how important postsecondary education is to the diversification process. I agree because a highly educated society means that there are more advancements made in research, and research is very important to West Yellowhead and to this province. The oil and gas industry has allowed the economy of West Yellowhead to grow at a rate that it has not seen for many years. Because of solid research in the forest industry the Edson, Hinton, and Grande Cache economies are growing, and the towns are booming. It is because of this that West Yellowhead is more and more excited about what the next Alberta has to offer.

Even though the constituency is diversifying, it is also expanding traditional resources. Coal mines around the constituency are rebuilding and providing many jobs for the people of West Yellowhead. This is a welcomed development for everybody that depends on that industry. I know that the research that is being done includes research into clean coal technology, and it is beneficial to Alberta as a whole. It is important that the government of Alberta continues to push research. New technologies are allowing small communities across Alberta to become stronger and better able to serve their people. Those small communities around Alberta, all similar to those in West Yellowhead, are rural Alberta, and this government is showing its resolve in this speech to ensure that rural Alberta is strong.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne was met with optimism by the people of West Yellowhead. We are all looking forward to the new century of this province and what it's going to bring to us. We love this province, and we're not afraid to move outside of what we know to ensure that we are sustainable. We look forward to seeing how this government is going to continually build this province, and the people of West Yellowhead are very excited at the prospect of helping. We are looking forward together, and we'll strengthen ourselves and this province.

I thank you for this opportunity to speak to you today, and I look forward to the years to come. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on 29(2)(a)?
May we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you and through the members of this Assembly I would like to extend a welcome to Mme Lillianne Maisonneuve, a leading member of the communauté Franco-Albertaine here in our great province. I would like to have the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly extended to her, the centennial ambassador for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you.

head: Consideration of His Honour

Mr. Lindsay: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak today in response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm privileged to be delivering to the House my maiden speech in this Assembly. I'm honoured to have been elected to represent the people of the Stony Plain constituency.

I'd like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for delivering his Speech from the Throne, which outlined how the government will deal with the many issues that are facing the province. I commend His Honour in doing an excellent job in delivering his maiden speech to this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your election as Deputy Speaker. I would also like to congratulate the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock on his acclamation as Speaker of this House. I would also like to congratulate the Premier on his re-election to his fourth term in office and in leading our party to another majority election victory. I would also like to congratulate all other members of this House on their election or re-election. I look forward to working with all of my new colleagues to ensure that Alberta remains the best place in Canada to live.

Mr. Speaker, the last election has shown us that Albertans still have confidence in their government. The current government has a strong record of responding to the desires of everyday Albertans. Alberta leads the country in economic development, education, and health care. In Alberta we are enjoying all of these benefits while paying the lowest taxes in the country. This is a record that any government would be proud to have. However, as outlined in the throne speech, I am pleased to see that the government is not content to rest on its laurels and is proceeding with a bold vision for the future.

I would like to begin by thanking the previous Member for Stony Plain, which was Stan Woloshyn, for his many years of service. The people of Stony Plain have seen a true example of what representation is and what effective representation can do. I look forward to following in his proud tradition and will represent the people of the constituency of Stony Plain to the best of my ability. Mr. Woloshyn leaves big shoes to fill.

I am honoured to be the 730th person to be sworn in as a member of this House and one of only 753 Albertans to have had the privilege of serving the province of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I would not be here today addressing this House without the support and encouragement of my family, and I would like to thank them all for what they have done for me. I would especially like to acknowledge my father, George Lindsay. My father immigrated to Canada in 1905 from Scotland and contributed in his own way to the development of this province. My father was also proud to serve our country in the First World War. My father was a great role model, and I hope to be able to emulate his success as a contributor to the community.

I would also like to thank everyone who came out to help with my election campaign. I appreciate the effort and dedication that all of my volunteers displayed. Their countless volunteer hours are the main reason that I am standing in this House today.

Mr. Speaker, the Stony Plain constituency covers a significant part of the area between our capital city and Jasper national park. My riding runs for 85 kilometres west from Edmonton to the Pembina River, with the Yellowhead highway shadowing its northern boundary and the Saskatchewan River as the southern boundary. This region of our province is home to both a very diverse landscape and people, just like Alberta.

My constituency mirrors Alberta. All of the industries that make up Alberta's economy are present in the Stony Plain constituency. Agriculture, power production, mining, tourism, retail, construction, small business, and oil and gas are all present and contribute to the local economy. Because of the diverse local economy often what is happening in Stony Plain is happening all across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, having a diverse economy is important for all rural areas of the province. In order to maintain the economic successes of rural Alberta, proper transportation infrastructure needs to be in place. With proper roadways we are able to ensure that inputs are able to reach rural areas and that finished goods are able to reach the market. The key to sustainable rural development is the ability of the province to provide infrastructure. That is why I am pleased to see that the government has made such a strong commitment to infrastructure in the throne speech that His Honour read on March 2.

The government's new rural development strategy contains a plan for action to provide real assistance to rural communities like Entwistle, Tomahawk, Seba Beach, Fallis, and Wabamun. These communities are struggling to remain economically viable and watch as young members of these communities leave for larger urban centres. The rural development strategy will help to provide young people with a reason to remain in their communities by helping to develop the infrastructure and services that currently draw youth toward the larger urban areas.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Stony Plain are hard-working, but despite the relative prosperity of their region, there are still those who are in need of some assistance. There is a real need in our communities for affordable housing and assisted-living accommodation. By providing affordable housing to people, we're helping to provide them with a hand up and not a handout. Assisted-living accommodation will address the needs of an aging population in my constituency.

I would also like to acknowledge the excellent work that the government has done in limiting class sizes. The government's goal of leading and learning is certainly something that I support wholeheartedly. In order for Alberta to remain as strong as we are today, it is important that our education system be strong. However, Mr. Speaker, there is more to providing a quality education than ensuring that our students are in small classes and instructed by world-class teachers. School facilities are important to students' overall educational performance. The composite high school in my riding is showing its age. Built in the 1950s, the school is in need of replacement. Replacing aging schools such as Memorial composite high school will help us to be a leader in learning.

Just as the Alberta economy is becoming more knowledge-based, so must our education system. The opportunities available to young Albertans are endless, and our education system must reflect this. Facilities are important to the learning process. Without a proper computer lab students cannot learn a skill that all employers are looking for. In order for our system to continue to produce the best graduates in the world, schools like Memorial composite must be updated to keep pace with their excellent teachers and curriculum. Having quality education facilities in rural areas also makes it easier to recruit and retain quality professionals that are needed in our community.

Mr. Speaker, nearly 1 in 10 people in my riding are aboriginals. As the first inhabitants of Alberta our aboriginal people have made great contributions to the Alberta mosaic. Their culture has enriched Alberta. I'm pleased to see in the throne speech that government is developing measures to increase the supply of skilled labourers and that these measures will contain an aboriginal component. We need to continually work with our aboriginal communities like the Paul band and Enoch to improve their socioeconomic conditions. Increasing training facilities will help to increase their socioeconomic standing.

Mr. Speaker, energy is another concern to the people of my constituency, which is currently home to three coal-burning power plants. Together the plants in my constituency contribute approximately 40 per cent of installed generation in this province. These plants have provided many years of reliable, cost-effective, and environmentally friendly electricity to Albertans.

We are now at a time when we need to begin examining ways of moving electrical production forward. A major focus of the government should be placed on joining with industry to develop new technologies that will allow us to burn coal more efficiently and cleanly. Concern needs to be given to both the environment and the cost of producing electricity. Coal is an important economic source of energy for the province of Alberta. Through research and development of clean burning technologies Alberta can be a leader throughout the world in environmentally safe electrical production.

Emerging clean coal technologies will allow for coal to be used to produce electricity in a manner that is as environmentally friendly as using natural gas. If we are able to invest in clean burning technologies and expand their use, then we can reserve the use of natural gas for higher value uses without suffering a negative environmental impact. Using cleaner production methods will allow Alberta to maintain its energy advantage, that has benefited all Albertans. The government's energy innovation strategy and innovative technologies program is an important step in the right direction. There is an economic opportunity for the use of clean technologies. Further research will help us to develop newer and cleaner energy-generating technologies.

Mr. Speaker, the ranchers of the Stony Plain constituency, as I am sure all Alberta ranchers, are anxiously awaiting the opening of the U.S. border. The recent court decision was certainly a setback. However, I'm glad to hear of the commitment that the Premier has made to continue to help our ranchers and farmers. In the history of farming in Alberta there has not been a single more devastating event to the agriculture industry. As a result of BSE our economy has lost hundreds of millions, and countless lives and dreams have been shattered. I'm extremely pleased to hear His Honour mention in the throne speech that the government is fully behind our cattle industry and is committed to continuing to help ranchers to improve their economic viability.

As Alberta begins her journey into her second century, it is important that we lay a foundation that will allow future generations to prosper. Being debt free is an important component of that. The 20-year strategic plan that the government has laid out provides us with a long-term vision for the province. Unlike the path taken by many governments, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to see that the throne speech has focused on building the future.

Both the people of Stony Plain and I are looking forward to celebrating the province's centennial, knowing that we have not had to mortgage the future of Albertans. The strategic plan provides our province with a framework for growth that will ensure that Alberta continues to be a leader in education and health, is a province with strong and viable communities both large and small, and is a great place to live, work, and play.

Mr. Speaker, the agenda laid out in the government's strategic plan and this throne speech captures the spirit of Alberta. Like the people of this province the government is committed to ensuring that all Albertans share in the Alberta advantage and the quality of life we maintain today is not only maintained but enhanced.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great honour that I take my place as a member of this Assembly. Although I have had the opportunity to hold public office before, being a member of this House supercedes those honours and responsibilities. I would like to thank again the people of the Stony Plain constituency for entrusting me with the privilege of representing their interests.

I would like to close, Mr. Speaker, by saying to the people of Stony Plain that I'll represent their interests with the honesty and integrity that is expected of an elected official.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

If not, the hon. Deputy Premier and Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this first opportunity to congratulate the Speaker, to congratulate yourself as Deputy Speaker and, of course, our Chairman of Committees, and to congratulate His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor on his presentation of our throne speech. Of course, congratulations on his appointment, and appreciation for his ability to take what might have been an awkward situation with our sound system during the speech and make the whole atmosphere more comfortable for all of us. I'm sure that we will enjoy more opportunities to get to know our new Lieutenant Governor, and he will serve us well.

I certainly appreciated in our throne speech the tribute to Her Honour the late Lieutenant Governor, Dr. Lois Hole, who was not only our Lieutenant Governor but a friend to many of us, a personal friend known to all of us through her works for libraries, for education, and of course for her love of the land, the love of agriculture, and the great contribution that she has made to this country nationally and, I'm sure, internationally with her expertise in nurseries. Much of our province is much more beautiful today because of the efforts of the late Mrs. Hole and her family.

I want to add my congratulations to all members that were elected in the recent election, and this is, of course, our first opportunity to come together in this House as elected members. I want to make just a few comments. I have not heard all of the speeches in the Legislature on the throne speech, but I've been impressed with many. I want to add my most sincere congratulations to the new members who have made their first speech in the Legislature, which we affectionately call your maiden speech. You've done a fantastic job. Some of the best speeches I have heard in this Legislature in 18 years have come from you new members, and I wanted to comment on that.

I'm not going to take a long time to talk about the speech. Many have been very eloquent. But what really impressed me was that this was a speech that reminded us of how humble beginnings with people of talent, determination, and grit have made this province in a short 100 years a place to be proud of, a place to be proud to do business, to raise your families. It spoke of the people who came here who didn't really have an understanding of how difficult it would be to tame this wild, wild west, if you wish, how difficult it would be to build bridges.

I'm reminded of the Rochfort bridge just out of this city, the longest wooden trestle bridge, I think, in the country and maybe in others, and I'm reminded of the bridge at Lethbridge that takes the railroad across. I'm sure that people who came here to start this process had no idea how difficult this would be. I'm reminded of the aqueduct, which is now an interpretive part of our history. But the importance of that work that developed southern Alberta and the irrigation systems and the water management systems that we have in this province – and, you know, all of us can go around this province and see those things in every corner of the province.

We owe an incredible debt of gratitude to those who came here with their hopes, their dreams, their talents, their commitment to make this a place to live, work, and raise their families. I think the province of Alberta today is what it is because those people had that determination, had that pride, and were convinced that this was a land that could contribute to future generations and families. We are seeing those results.

What a wonderful year to be in Alberta and to not just celebrate the year but to celebrate the past and look with great optimism to the future. The people who left this province to fight in wars because they believed in freedom – and we have, of course, on our grounds and in our building a commemoration of members who joined in that – is indicative of the commitment that the people in this province have to the province.

But we move on to the next Alberta, the new Alberta, the continued Alberta, the wonderful future of this province, and we look to continuing to be, I believe, leaders in learning. I'm proud that our students in this province today score the highest in almost every subject not only nationally but internationally. That's due to the dedicated men and women who teach in our schools. I admit to a little bias there; I do have somebody who was educated at the University of Lethbridge that I think contributes to that on a daily basis. We look to continue that excellence in learning and to ensure that our students have a place for postsecondary education. We know that a great deal of what has brought us success is an educated workforce and an educated people, and we have to continue that to reach our potential in the future. So I applaud and support the commitment to advanced education, to the people who work in that field, to the researchers that come to our province.

I should mention that we attract a great number of researchers. In fact, at the University of Alberta – the minister might correct me – I believe there might have been 26 new research chairs that came here in the last year. That's phenomenal, it's fantastic, and it's indicative of the commitment that we have to learning. I just mention this university – we are in this city – but we have similar opportunities in all of our fine institutions.

The work in wellness is incredibly important. We know that the best way to make our health system sustainable is to concentrate a great deal on wellness, prevention, a healthier family. I believe you start with the very young. You start in the very early years in school. I can tell you of some experience with my children and now grandchildren. When they come home from school after they've had a lesson, we get very politely, usually, told that maybe some of the things we're doing are not quite appropriate. It came home to me in a farm safety session, when we had a farm safety person at our little school, and we quickly understood that there were some hazards around our farm that we just hadn't really been paying attention to. Children are the same with healthy eating and healthy living if they learn it at an early age. I support that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I see wonderful opportunities ahead for our province. The first steps of the new century, the new mandate are in this throne speech. It's really up to every one of us in this Legislature to see them fulfilled.

I thank you for your time, and, Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 9, 2005 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 05/03/09
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. You may be seated.
 Hon. members, might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly visitors from Preceptor Gamma, Edmonton, who are lead by their president, Val Lavarato. They are a chapter of Beta Sigma Phi International, a world-wide organization of women whose motto is Life, Learning, and Friendship. This tour is part of their cultural program. They would like to congratulate the province and its legislators on the occasion of the centennial of our province, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Consideration of His Honour
 the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mrs. McClellan]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am deeply honoured to rise in the House today on behalf of the constituency of St. Albert. This is my first opportunity to speak within this magnificent building, and I thank you for the privilege.

Mr. Speaker, every Member of the Legislative Assembly is sharing a special moment in time. We are members of the House during Alberta's centennial year. I represent the community of St. Albert, one of the original 25 constituencies that made up our first Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Liberals played a lead role in forming this province. Alberta's first Premier, Alexander Rutherford, was a Liberal as were our federal MPs who lobbied for within the Liberal government led by Prime Minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier to create this province and the province of Saskatchewan.

My community has a long history of sending strong advocates with a passion for St. Albert to this House. Previous hon. members include people such as Dick Fowler, Len Bracko, and Mary O'Neill. They have each added to the expectations set out by our first MLA, also a Liberal, W.H. McKenney. I hope to live up to the excellent standard that these people have set.

St. Albert's history is rich and unique. St. Albert was the first community founded outside a fort. Our community was founded by Father Albert Lacombe. It was founded by Catholic francophones, and their legacy is still evident today with an abundance of French immersion and francophone schools. Our public school system, St. Albert school division No. 29, established 140 years ago, is still a Catholic school system. Over the years a Protestant school system was added, further enhancing the quality and choice for an excellent education.

Mr. Speaker, our community, like virtually all communities in Alberta, has grown incredibly over the years. St. Albert's population in 1905 was about 500 people. Today we are almost 55,000 strong and reflect an incredible cultural mosaic. This diversity and our commitment to education and enhancing our quality of life will keep us strong as we move into Alberta's second century.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the founders of our province would think if they could visit us today. My father came to Alberta when he was 18 years old. He helped build the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad and met my mother here. They were married in 1918, and he spent 42 years working as a CN railroad conductor. He was fortunate enough to be the conductor on two royal visits. My mother worked as a buyer for the ladies clothing department of Thompson & Dynes. She worked to support her parents who eventually joined our family in Alberta from Valleyfield, Quebec. Two of my brothers served in the air force during World War II.

As a young man I spent many nights sitting on the back porch of Dr. Greiger's home with Eddie Keen waiting for Lois and Ted Hole to close up shop at their fledgling garden market so we could sip tea and watch the setting sun.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many great memories that have been enhanced by the beauty of this magnificent province and the people who have made it their home. Just as it is important to reflect on the past when we reach a milestone, so is it important to take stock of the present and look forward to the future.

Present-day St. Albert is a community rich in heritage, culture, and performing arts. We take pride in our schools and our parks, our trail systems, our recreation facilities, our renowned International Children's Festival, all things we have worked hard to build and maintain. Our children are exposed to a multitude of opportunity, and our community supports people of all walks of life, all cultures, all levels of financial background.

Mr. Speaker, St. Albert is working toward building a multicultural leisure centre to enhance the quality of life. St. Albert is also working toward building a western bypass road to enhance the safety of our streets and ease traffic congestion. Our community hopes to have this bypass designated as highway 2.

We are working to make improvements to our library and to many other public facilities and public spaces that will serve the current and future needs of our community. The provincial government has a strong record of supporting these types of projects throughout Alberta, and I hope to assist St. Albert city council in maintaining and building on that support for our community's current endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, we also guard against the parochialism of the present. We must guard against losing our way, against the temptation to spend without thought, against the ease of glossing over real problems and challenges because they may not fit the theme of the celebration. This is the time to establish a long-term vision. When I say "long-term," I mean much more than the four-year election cycle. We need to create a vision that looks well into the century. We need to be imaginative, creative, and bold. We have a unique opportunity to invest our incredible good fortune and current wealth into Alberta's future. Our natural resources will eventually run out. We must invest now so that our children and their children will be able to look back with appreciation of our efforts and planning.

It is too easy to spend our wealth away and have nothing to show for it. We have all heard of the stories of the lottery winner who filed for bankruptcy within years of winning. Alberta has won the biggest lottery in history. We need to turn that winning into a generation of wealth and opportunity for all Albertans. This government's current practice will not take us there.

It is very important that all Albertans share in our prosperity. Too many of our children go to school hungry. Too many Albertans cannot afford to save money to buy homes, to send their children to postsecondary education, to keep up with ever-rising costs of living. This is especially true for our young families and for our seniors. Too many young Albertans are dropping out of schools, too many are being hooked on drugs like crystal meth, and too many lose hope believing that there is no place for them in today's Alberta. Further to this, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Member for Red Deer-North talk of Bill 202 recognizing the problem of drug addiction facing young Albertans and the importance of the family.

Our current system of achievement testing must be reviewed. There is absolutely no excuse for this 25 to 30 per cent high school dropout rate. We need to stop thinking of children as failing the education system. We need to view the huge dropout rate as our education system failing our children, and we need to fix it now. We must start diagnostic testing early to identify challenges that individual children have with language arts, math, and all subjects. We need to empower teachers and ensure that they have the classroom and school-wide supports to ensure all children experience success in learning.

Our children are under pressure to perform and are constantly measured against the students in the next class, the next school, the next community. Where is the sense in judging grade 3 students on a province-wide bell curve? Elementary education is crucial. We need to ensure that they enjoy going to school and enjoy learning. We need to create a system that teaches our children they are valued, able, and when they apply themselves, will be successful.

This is an urgent and significant problem. When children are convinced that they can't learn, when they are convinced they aren't smart enough, when they are convinced they have no hope of achieving success, at what point does this government finally wake up and say, "The way we are doing this isn't helping children"? If the system is creating such massive problems that 25 to 30 per cent of the children are dropping out, it's time to do something about it.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education told me his department is all about kids, and I trust that he is sincere and that he has starting building a solid plan to make some required changes. We all agree that our children are our future. Surely we can do more to support them and encourage success. Surely this is a legacy worthy of the centennial.

It is appropriate for Alberta schools to have common indicators across systems. Provincial achievement exams do serve as an indicator and provide independent verification that students are learning what they should be learning. Only about 30 per cent of achievement grade is really predictable on the basis of instructional skill. Other factors that account for lack of success in provincial achievement exams are the following: student personality, temperament, and task persistence on the part of the student. Support that students receive from their homes in terms of encouraging completion of homework and studying is very important. These and socioeconomic factors are real achievement variables. These along with intelligence levels amount to achievement scores.

Let us not forget that the amount of support a school provides for academic versus sports, fine arts, and other activities may also be a factor. We need to value education of the whole child – body, mind, and soul. However, we have students that fall through the cracks. For example, students who have learning challenges generally are having difficulties keeping up with demands of the curriculum. Over time, given the stress and anxiety of schooling, they end up falling further and further behind and specialized programs are required.

Also keep in mind that inner-city schools are special needs. Comparisons of achievement testing results relative to other schools is not relevant as they have far greater percentages of special needs populations, minority groups, English as a second language groups, and so on. It is my contention that K to 3 should be a place where students develop a solid foundation in the core subjects for successful schooling. Students requiring special help need to get the help they need. Diagnostic testing identifying students requiring modified curriculum in reading, language arts, and mathematics is a must. Education in the province, specifically K to 3, must become more student centred.

My grandson in Okotoks was screened prior to entering into an early childhood program. This screening was done by a student services team, and it discovered that he lacked fine motor skills. This is being addressed, and hopefully he will acquire good handwriting and drawing skills much better than his grandpa's.

Mr. Speaker, the Klein government some five or six years ago gave extra money to health and education jurisdictions in various regions of this province to acquire family and school liaison counsellors, school counsellors, social workers, and nurses. They provided funding for psychological, medical, and psychiatric assessment for students that have very specialized needs. All of this is very good and should be continued, but the level of support, in my view, is often not adequate and doesn't meet the needs of the kids. I believe that this must be addressed to prevent the high school dropout rate that we are currently experiencing.

Mr. Speaker, a well-known professor at the faculty of education who has visited schools once or twice a week for the last 35 years is holding up a red flag. He has stated in a letter of February 26, 2005, that he has seen and is seeing a dramatic rise in behavioural, psychological, and emotional problems in students, including drug use. Further, he states that the government has made an effort to provide extra funding to assist these students at the school level, but it is not sufficient, and too many students, therefore, fall out of the system or quit altogether.

Somehow we have developed two very different points of view in Alberta. It is today that we should create a legacy for the future. We cannot continue to focus on testing results rather than completion results. We cannot continue to focus on the quality of roads while ignoring the quality of a low-income child's life. We cannot continue to focus on the centennial legacies while losing sight of seniors forced to sell their homes in St. Albert or drug grow ops springing up in rural parts of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we must work together to build the legacies that this government is contemplating. They will enhance our province and help take us into the future. However, we must also ensure that we don't get so caught up in building these capital projects that we overlook real problems facing our educational systems and our Alberta citizens. We have the ability and the responsibility to make our legacy too.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

I recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to congratulate the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker on their elections. I'd also like to congratulate all those who were elected during this last campaign. I am both honoured and humbled for being elected to represent the people of Cardston-Taber-Warner. I consider it my duty to represent all the people of my riding. I would like to thank all those who helped me before, during, and since the election.

My constituency starts in the southwest corner of this province, in the beautiful park of Waterton national park with beautiful mountains, beautiful lakes, and beautiful rivers. It heads out east up over the Milk River ridge, another beautiful area, and down into the valley and into the hoodoos of the Writing-on-Stone provincial park. Then it heads north and goes through numerous irrigation districts that are the breadbasket of our province.

I'd also like to go on to thank the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, who earlier today helped me reduce my speech by 15 minutes. It would have been a dilemma to include all that wonderful history in the allotted time that I have.

It's exciting to me to be here at the turn of the century, and I would like to thank Premier Klein for allowing us to start it debt free. In 1905 we were faced with similar challenges of infrastructure, schools, and now health care. History has shown Alberta as a leader, and this being the international day to recognize women, it's only fitting to realize and remember that in 1929 the first woman was elected to the Legislature, which was the first in the British Empire. In the 1980s Alberta led the way once again, and Premier Lougheed introduced the notwithstanding clause in our constitution, which enabled Albertans to keep a check on government and to keep those things that are true and important to us.

Now Alberta must take the lead once again. It's going to go beyond being just simply good government; we need to be a better government. This is a hard road but certainly an achievable one and one well worth travelling. We need a new way of thinking. As the Premier pointed out earlier this week, it is about science not politics. We have been injured because of the protectionism of our neighbours to the south, and protectionism does not serve the interests of the people.

The proper role of government is to protect the rights and the freedoms of the people and then to leave them free to exercise their rights so long as they do not infringe upon the rights of others. Alberta has prospered in the past because we have had the freedom for our entrepreneurial, innovative, and industrious people to choose for themselves and create the province that we live in today.

All of us in this great Assembly derive our powers from the people of Alberta. I know that the best administration is the one that is the closest to the people. The smallest government is the best government. We have to ask ourselves: what type of government do we want in the future? If we were to compare our government to a tree, we can ask: do we want a fruit tree or a shade tree? Government can create no wealth, but proper laws protecting our rights and freedoms allow the people and the country to prosper. However, if the branches of the fruit tree are not kept trimmed, the tree will not bear the fruit to its fullest capabilities. We have trimmed our health care, our schools, and our municipal funding. All the while the branches of our government have grown. Now is the time to trim the growth of our government. It is not only necessary; it is the right thing to do.

Government needs to be open, transparent, and accountable. Since we derive our power from the people, it must therefore be accountable to the people. We must continue to reduce taxes, user fees, licences, and eliminate our health care premiums. With these we can allow the people the freedom from the overburden of taxation and protect the people from the government. With lower taxes that rival even the biggest economies, we can fight on a global stage and drive into a new century of leadership. Thomas Hobbes stated, "Unnecessary laws are not good laws but traps for money." It is critical that we protect the autonomy of Alberta and stop the inequitable redistribution of wealth.

In 1907 Edward VII gave us our motto: Strong and Free. To maintain that freedom and strength, Alberta must be a leader in our dealings with the federal government. Canada is founded upon the principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law and guarantee the rights and freedoms that can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. Thus, it is within Alberta's constitutional rights to protect Albertans under the law. We must recognize this defence of the individual rights, not protecting individual benefits but rather protecting freedoms. The proper role of government is to maintain these ideals.

It is critical at this time, as we go forward, that we balance the government. We can compare it to a bird. If on the left wing we have compassion and security, we cannot fly, but if on the right wing we have freedom, we can continue to soar and the sky is our limit. It is my hope and prayer that we in this Legislature will work together on common grounds and put our best ideas forward so that we can serve the people of Alberta.

I'd like to close with a little story of a miner that was lost in the desert. As he was travelling along – it had been two days since he had any water – he was struggling and figured that he was finished and done. Then he came across an old shack, and by that shack there was an old pump. He pumped vigorously on that pump but was unable to get any water, and he collapsed. Upon collapsing to the base, he found a glass jar with water in it. On the instructions on the outside it said: "This pump has been fixed and repaired. If you prime it with the water, the leather will soften and you can pump and get all the water that you need. All I ask is that you fill the water in the bottle before you leave." Weeks later the owner came back, only to find a dead man beside there and an empty bottle of water.

We've been blessed with a second chance here, and it's our opportunity to take the economic security and the benefits from our resources and prime the pump for future Albertans. I'm very pleased that we've started the educational foundation for our future. Our greatest assets are our kids, and we need to make the effort that every individual family does to protect and educate them. This is a huge opportunity that we have. We also need to look after our elderly and the sick and the afflicted, that we do have the ability to be compassionate and to reach out and to serve those people. By doing those things, our society will be better.

Society has the right to choose to be better or to choose to become decadent. It's my desire that we will be leaders here in this House and show by example and through sacrifice that we choose to be better, that we'll make laws that will protect freedoms and innovation and the desire for people to succeed as they have ideas to go into the future. In that we will be blessed, and it's a great joy to see that next generation as we look to them and see how they have succeeded. It's been encouraging to listen to the different members and the success that they have with their children that have gone on to education. I hope that we use our resources wisely for the benefit of all Albertans and that we can stand proud a hundred years from now on the things that we've accomplished at the turn of this century.

Mr. Speaker, I would move to adjourn the debate now.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd rise to move Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, this is a flagship piece of legislation. I think it's the first of its kind in Canada, perhaps in North America. It sets a course for Alberta's second century with bold new initiatives that will create and enable Alberta's advanced education system to reach even higher levels of excellence.

Mr. Speaker, this province has come a long way in the past decade. Albertans have worked hard to ensure that the government's finances are in order and the debt has been paid off. Now, with a strong fiscal foundation Albertans are looking ahead to the future, as is their government.

Albertans have told us, both in the process that led up to creating this 20-year strategic plan and through the It's Your Future survey, that a portion of future budget surpluses should be invested in higher learning. We ought, Mr. Speaker, to endow the future with our nonrenewable resource revenue, and that's exactly what this legislation does. It puts in place the mechanisms by which the government can set aside in a wise and prudent manner unbudgeted surplus funds, when they occur, for use in driving postsecondary education.

Bill 1 proposes that this be done in three ways. First, Mr. Speaker, a separate $3 billion postsecondary endowment will be created within the heritage savings trust fund by contributing an additional $3 billion to the fund, to be allocated to a separate account within that fund which will grow with the fund as the fund grows for inflation to retain its value. From that endowment 4 and a half per cent of the contributed and growing amount will be paid into the new access to the future fund annually, providing a stable, regular source of additional funding for postsecondary education. At full funding of the $3 billion, $135 million per year would go to the access to the future fund for that purpose.

The funding, Mr. Speaker, will not be for the standard operating costs. It's not intended to replace the operational costs that are budgeted on an annual basis to keep our postsecondary education system operating. In fact, it adds nitro to the fuel to fund new and innovative projects and initiatives within the system; in other words, it'll help to make a great system even better.

Mr. Speaker, in the throne speech we heard about two projects that were identified to give examples of how this fund might operate. The first is the centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta. That would be a matching gift program, where a substantial gift is to be made to the University of Alberta in the area of Chinese cultural material. The value of that gift could be matched, and with the gift and the matching funds together with other funds raised, the University of Alberta will be able to establish a pre-eminent centre of knowledge and understanding about Chinese culture, economy, and knowledge in the western world. Right here in Alberta, right here at the University of Alberta we will have the pre-eminent centre of knowledge about Chinese culture and the economy.

Now, what a benefit for Alberta, Mr. Speaker, because as we all know, the Chinese economy is one of the fastest growing economies in the world. As we move towards competing in the global economy, improving our ability to find markets out in the world, at the root of that is relationship building. Where better to build relationships than to have a knowledge and understanding of one of the largest economies, if not the largest economy, in the world, that of the country of China and the Asia Pacific area?

So you can see from that example and that project that the access to the future fund will have a significant impact not only in expanding the opportunity for study and the opportunity for knowledge and transfer of knowledge but to do it in an area which will create a pre-eminent centre of excellence and knowledge and understanding about another area of the world that's going to be absolutely key to Alberta's continued future growth.

The other project that was announced in the throne speech was the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library, and it was a honour and a privilege to be able with the permission of her family to name the new digital library after Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. With the lifetime commitment that she had to knowledge – to the advancement of knowledge, the transfer of knowledge – and to libraries, Mr. Speaker, there couldn't be a more fitting memorial to her.

The Lois Hole library is a project which demonstrates the other aspect of the access to the future fund which does not require matching funds but which will allow a project, which I call an ingenuity project, a new example of a way to deliver knowledge or transfer knowledge, extend the reach of knowledge within our province, which could be funded from the access to the future fund. So the digital library concept will see us digitizing library resources whether they're books or periodicals, expanding the number of digitized resources that are available through the digital library, and perhaps digitizing any other three-dimensional collections that our universities and postsecondary institutions have.

That could even extend to art collections and the Alberta Foundation for the Arts – many ways through the SuperNet to take knowledge that's collected and resident in our postsecondary institutions, make it available to postsecondary students across the province and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, eventually to all Albertans. It's a dream which has huge possibilities for the transfer of knowledge in this province. It's a great project that's been under way for some time in different initiatives, in different institutions but headed up by the University of Calgary, a project which they have proposed for Campus Calgary. Now we've taken it the one step further to Campus Alberta and perhaps in the future to be able to extend it to all Albertans.

So two projects which demonstrate the length and breadth of the access to the future fund, being able to encourage the contribution of funds from private capital, from private donors, from corporate donors in areas that would expand access, quality, or affordability or projects which expand the way in which we make knowledge available across Alberta into rural Alberta to help build the rural development strategy, to help make sure that people in rural Alberta have access to the same knowledge resources that people in urban centres have, and to make sure that students right across this province have access to all of the three-dimensional resources and print resources that are available.

Mr. Speaker, it's a phenomenal opportunity, and it's an opportunity which will now be made possible in part by the access to the future fund. Those are just two examples, but we had those examples from the throne speech to show the absolute value and the power that will be in the hands of the access to the future fund.

Of course, there's a great thirst. Most of the postsecondary institutions in this province are raising funds for various projects which will expand access and expand quality. This is not a new concept by any means. In the 1970s there was a tri-university fund which matched private donations and endowed chairs, some of which are still operating today at universities in the province. But it's expanded in a couple of very important ways. One, it's endowed, which means it will always be there; we'll only spend the interest. Very important. The other funds that were established in the 1970s were spent down, were concluded. They did good work, but they're not available any longer. This will be endowed. It will be there forever, and it will create an income stream which will continue to grow and help make these new projects, these exciting projects possible.

Mr. Speaker, this is a responsive project in that it was raised, as I said, through the 20-year strategic planning process. It was raised by an individual who talked to many of us I'm sure, both in government and opposition, promoting the idea of an endowment fund, a somewhat more modest amount but an endowment fund to do exactly this. I've talked to him, and he's indicated it would be all right for me to indicate that Mr. Harold Bannister had some small part to play in promoting this concept and setting it up. I think the first time he called me or wrote me on this one was about two years ago. So it's a credit to him to have the foresight to push this as, in his concept, a centennial project.

Then, of course, the Edmonton-Riverview Constituency Association of the PC Association of Alberta I have to give a nod because they brought forward a resolution to our annual general meeting last year, and it was passed, I believe unanimously, asking for government to endow the future in this manner.

So this is very responsive to requests from Albertans, both individual Albertans, groups of Albertans, people who know that our renewable resources are not ours alone today. They're not there just to fund the current Albertans, but they need to be also used to endow our future, to build and grow our future. What better way to do that, to underpin our 20-year strategic plan, than by expanding knowledge? So it's an exciting fund, and I'm absolutely delighted that we're able to set it up and get it running.

The second feature in Bill 1 is that the current Alberta heritage scholarship fund, which again was set up in the 1970s, would grow by $1 billion, again from surplus funds, again a very important acknowledgement of the need to build knowledge and innovation in Alberta, to expand our knowledge base, and to expand our education in Alberta so that Albertans will be able to take advantage of the opportunities that will be here in the future.

Mr. Speaker, as we move from a carbon-based and a commodity-based economy to a knowledge-based economy – and by no means does that mean that we're giving up on oil and gas or that we don't think oil and gas will be around – we have to add knowledge and technology to our traditional economy in order to be prepared for the future as well as to look to the new knowledge-based economy. That's the innovation section of the 20-year strategic plan.

Scholarship funds will help to finance students so that they can get that education, so that finances will not be a barrier to getting an education. This project, under Bill 1, will make the scholarship fund five times larger than it is now, and the income will allow government to ensure that postsecondary education is affordable through scholarships, bursaries, awards, and other initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, the third thing that Bill 1 proposes is doubling the Alberta ingenuity fund, currently endowed at $500 million, with an additional $500 million from unbudgeted surpluses. Again, the ingenuity fund has been in place since the year 2000, funding research and innovation across the province, and this expansion will allow and encourage even greater levels of innovation and ingenuity in Alberta.

I've already spoken, Mr. Speaker, about the need for that ingenuity, but you need to look no further than the oil sands, that we know is adding huge amounts of economic development to our province and producing a great deal of oil and gas. The current technology in the oil sands is SAGD technology, steam-assisted gravity drainage. You get steam from water, which is a scarce resource, and you have to use gas to create the heat to create it. Gas is also a scarce resource. So it's self-evident just by looking at the technology that's extant there that new technology is going to be needed in the very near future if we're going to be able to capitalize on that resource and continue.

Innovation is essential whether we're looking at a traditional economy, adding value to wood fibre, adding value to agriculture products, or whether you're looking at the new economy of nanotechnologies, biosciences, and life sciences. Absolutely essential. So increasing the ingenuity fund for research adds to our knowledge base, adds to our ability to create knowledge in this province, adds to our ability to have the best and the brightest attracted here to educate other Albertans and to continue to improve our knowledge and technology base.

All told, Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 commits to $4.5 billion in investments in higher learning opportunities for Albertans, $4.5 billion in endowing the future. If I may add to the point, the $500 million that was announced in January to be added to the Alberta heritage medical research fund makes it $5 billion worth of endowment for the future, which is to me very, very exciting. There could not be a better way to enter into our centennial year in our new century. No province in Canada has made this kind of investment. We're blessed with the ability to do it, but we're also blessed with the obligation to make sure that we use those nonrenewable resource revenues in some small way to endow the future and to make sure that Albertans are ready to reach those opportunities of the future.

Albertans can be very proud, Mr. Speaker, of their hard work and their sacrifice, which has made this level of investment possible, and the clear direction that they've given to this government is enabling it to happen.

Mr. Speaker, those are the huge items in Bill 1. Those are really exciting, but I'd be remiss if I didn't mention the other very important aspects that are included in Bill 1.

Bill 1 also lays the groundwork for the introduction of a common postsecondary application process. Mr. Speaker, we hear often of students who are applying to two or three different institutions in order to make sure that they get in to one, and sometimes more than two or three, sometimes five or 10 and perhaps sending a deposit along with each application. When we have a common application process, a student will be able to apply online through one portal, pay one deposit if a deposit is necessary, and be able to indicate which institutions they would like their application considered by. We'll be able to track the success of each applying student to make sure that there is a space for every student who wants a space, for every Albertan who's qualified to go. And quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, every Albertan is qualified to advance their education.

So the common application process is a very significant step forward, but we also suggest in Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, that a framework be put together for a common application process for scholarships. Again, I don't know if other members of this Assembly have had the privilege of helping a child or perhaps for themselves going to postsecondary education and looking to see what scholarships might apply to them. There are a myriad of scholarships and bursaries and financial assistance available out there, but you have to be somewhat of a detective to find all of the opportunities, and you have to be very persistent to find the ones which apply to you. So if we can design and build a common application process so that a student can log on and find those scholarships, bursaries, and financial assistance processes which apply to them and apply through one common portal, that will be a huge assistance to students who want to get an education and have to deal with financial aspects of doing so.

It will also, Mr. Speaker, allow for improved transferability and recognition of prior learning experiences. We have in this province – and I'd like to say it in this Legislature and acknowledge it – the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer, and it is a model for the country. People come from other jurisdictions to take a look at our Council on Admissions and Transfer, the transferability, the seamlessness to a great extent by which people can move from one type of postsecondary education into another and be able to transfer their course credits across. But it's not perfect, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot of work that can be done. Even though we have the best in Canada, it's not good enough.

We need to work with the postsecondary institutions and with the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer to make sure that there is no dead end to an education in Alberta, that from wherever you are now, you can go to somewhere else if you wish to advance your education. If you're taking an apprenticeship program and you become a journeyman, that experience, that education, and that work experience should be able to be applied to the next level should you decide you want to take it there. So through Bill 1 we'll be working to expand those opportunities, but prior learning assessments are also important. There are many people who haven't had the opportunity to take advanced education or even, perhaps, finish their high school, but they have got a great deal of learning in a practical way in their work. We need to find a better way to recognize at what level they ought to be able to enter a postsecondary education process should they desire to do so.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, people coming from other parts of the world who might be bringing credentials from that part of the world which may or may not be consistent with our credentials here: we have a great program through IQAS to recognize foreign credentials, but in the event that they need to bridge those foreign credentials to Canadian or Alberta credentials, there need to be better ways to do that, better ways to maximize the human potential that we have. Bill 1 will assist us in moving significantly in that direction.

The legislation will also represent that we need to develop better ways to involve those people who are underrepresented in our postsecondary system and in our advanced learning processes, to represent them and bring them into the system. Mr. Speaker, it would come as no surprise if it was suggested that for aboriginal and First Nations people we need to encourage and promote and inspire the passions and make the systems available so that more and more people, First Nations people and any others that are not now able to or do not now have access to postsecondary education or an opportunity to advance their learning, have that opportunity.

The legislation, Mr. Speaker, has a strong focus on quality, recognizing that while access and affordability are important, having an advanced education system with the highest quality is equally important. If we're going to be competing in a global economy, it's not going to be on commodities alone. In fact, it's not going to be on commodities really at all; it's going to be on knowledge. What we're going to be selling in the future out to the world is a knowledge base. Whether we use that knowledge to advance the value of our agricultural products or to advance the quality of our environmental technologies, which we do now sell out into the world, that's where our advantage is going to be. So access and affordability are absolutely important. Quality: we have to be among the best in the world if we're going to compete in that knowledge-based economy.

The legislation allows for and requires, in fact, that we develop a comprehensive examination of postsecondary standards and outcomes with the aims of ensuring that the system meets or exceeds national and international standards. Mr. Speaker, it's not good enough for people to read Maclean's magazine to decide where their postsecondary institutions rank with others. That's just not the appropriate level of assessment. So in its entirety Bill 1 will ensure that Alberta has a world-class advanced education system, poised and equipped for the challenges of the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, it's an exciting time to be involved in Alberta. It's an exciting time to be involved in postsecondary education. It's a grand vision for advancing education in Alberta, whether you're moving to literacy or moving to a PhD. I would encourage all members to vote for Bill 1.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to start out my part of the debate this way, but I think I will by referring to what is not the central theme or the central point of Bill 1 at all, of course, but which is worthy of consideration, the common application process for entrance to public postsecondary institutions. I'm going to start there because the minister mentioned, quite rightly, about having experience with people who are applying to a number of different institutions because they're trying to get into postsecondary education, and they're applying to different institutions with different deposits that they have to hand in and all the rest of that at the time because there isn't this common application process.

I'm starting there because it struck home with me. My son turns 18 in about a month and graduates from grade 12 at the end of June and is going through the application process as we speak. He has applied to three different institutions. Unfortunately, two of them are out of province, and he's done that because of the sense that he has and that his fellow students have that postsecondary education in the province of Alberta isn't quite up to snuff, and that's where we need to start this debate.

I'll give you another sort of real-life example, that goes back to probably the college and university campus days of a whole bunch of us here in the Chamber today. You think back to your days in university, and you probably knew somebody, a fellow student, who had an old car. I remember a guy who had I think it was an old Datsun B-210, and it was basically rusted out. It barely moved, but, gosh, it had a good stereo system. It had a stereo system that was worth more than the whole car, and there's an analogy to be drawn with Bill 1. You know, there are many good things about Bill 1. It is a bold new initiative lifted from the pages of the Alberta Liberal election platform and then watered down.

Ms Blakeman: Whose Liberal platform?

Mr. Taylor: The Alberta Liberal platform.

It doesn't solve the problem to put great big honking speakers and a subwoofer in the trunk of a car that is barely roadworthy. Now, maybe I overstate the case. Our postsecondary education system is certainly more than barely roadworthy, but it has been starved. The minister himself said some weeks ago that it's time to take postsecondary education off its starvation diet. It has been starved by 12 years of underfunding, funding that has not kept up, has not kept pace with inflation and increased enrolment. Since 1993 government funding to postsecondary education in the province of Alberta in real terms has decreased 28 per cent per full-time student while tuition, adjusted again for inflation, in real terms has increased 183 per cent per student.

The fundamental problem, the systemic problem is that the system is hurting from underfunding. What Bill 1 does not address and what I hope this government will address later on in the budget is a fundamental need to increase substantially base operating grants to postsecondary institutions in this province and take a look at the formula by which they determine base operating grants and come to a real understanding of the basic worth of a postsecondary student in the province of Alberta.

I'm pleased that the government has seemingly taken a renewed interest in advanced education with Bill 1. It's about time after 12 years of underfunding. Investing in quality educational opportunities for students and in the creative contributions of our postsecondary faculties is almost certainly the best investment that we can make as a society. Creating world-class educational environments that are affordable for every Albertan with the drive to succeed is a duty of this government. It also represents a unique opportunity to combine the dual goals of economic competitiveness and social equity. I heard what the minister said. The minister gets much of this – much of it – and I'm glad he does. It's one of I think the most positive signs we have seen in postsecondary education in many, many years in this province, Mr. Speaker.

High-quality, affordable education from early childhood education right through to graduate degrees is the foundation for creating a society with equal opportunity for all. It's also vital to remember that such investments pay off not only in terms of economic competitiveness in a new knowledge economy but also by creating and sustaining the conditions for a vibrant, diverse culture and an informed, engaged democratic society. Higher education is critical to meeting our demand for skilled labour and ensuring that our students are equipped to compete in the job market.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the sum total of what higher education is all about. I'm hopeful that Bill 1 represents the end of an era when spending on higher education was considered a cost to be minimized and an understanding now that it is, in fact, an investment in the future of today's students and tomorrow's Alberta. The goal seems to have been for the last 12 years to simply produce as many degree and diploma and certificate holders as possible for the lowest cost possible, to churn them through. You know, it's a suitable approach for producing widgets, but it's not so good for facilitating the growth of citizens.

We must recognize that higher education is a great public investment, and we must be ready to invest in a way that supports the multiple roles that higher education plays in our society. This is certainly something Albertans have been demanding for a long time, something the Liberal opposition has been pressing for for years, so I'm gratified that this government seems to be responding in some measure to Bill 1.

But in what measure, Mr. Speaker? The minister says that this government is committing to put $4.5 billion into higher education, into postsecondary education, through Bill 1, but it's not really a commitment, unfortunately. It's not a firm, unshakeable commitment to put that money in. On the Liberal side our commitment was to take 35 per cent of every annual budget surplus no matter how big, no matter how small every year and put it directly into a postsecondary education endowment fund with no cap. You know, I'll grant you that this government's proposal may actually get more money into the access to the future fund more quickly than the Liberal plan would have, but once it hits $3 billion, if it hits $3 billion, that's all she wrote. That are it. No more. Uh-uh. Finis. We're full.

The Liberal plan conceivably could have seen a billion dollars a year go into that postsecondary education endowment fund so that at the end of 20 years there would be $20 billion. I didn't just pick that number. I didn't just pick that number out of a hat because $3 billion for a system with 140,000 full-time learning equivalents is not sufficient. It permits some interesting tinkering at the margins, but it won't really provide the financial foundation for a world-class system.

Let me give you some comparative figures. Harvard University's total endowment is $20 billion, not $3 billion for an entire province, an entire system, but $20 billion for one institution. Princeton's endowment is approximately $1.3 million per student. Alberta's $3 billion, even at current enrolment levels, represents less than $17,000 per student. It's not enough. And that, Mr. Speaker, is contingent on this government really putting in the money that it says it will, that it might, that is scheduled to go into this account within the heritage savings trust fund, to be allocated as considered appropriate by the Minister of Finance after April 1, 2005.

So the Minister of Finance is the final arbiter of how much money goes into the fund, and the Minister of Finance has the opportunity to say, "You know, I don't think we can afford to put any money into the fund this year," or "I don't think we can afford to put in more than – I don't know – $100 million, $50 million." Pick a figure. Maybe the Minister of Finance will say: "Boys, we've got $3 billion sitting here. I'm putting it into the fund right away." Of course, then it's capped. Then it's capped. It doesn't get any bigger than that.

Maybe the Minister of Finance will say: "We have a BSE crisis on our farms. We have yet another summer where the forest fire fighting budget has gone through the roof because it's been a much worse fire year than we thought it was going to be." Maybe there's another crisis that comes down the pike. "I need the money. I need the money that should go into the access to the future fund to pay the farmers and pay the firefighters and do that sort of thing." You see, the thing is that there's not a guarantee in here. There's a commitment in principle, I guess, but there's not a firm commitment to put the money into the fund.

The same thing goes for increasing by a billion dollars the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, and the same thing goes for increasing the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund, in each case by $500 million. In each case it's in amounts considered appropriate by the Finance minister. I'm not suggesting that the Finance minister doesn't want to do the right thing. I'm suggesting that other issues may come up. We need more certainty than Bill 1 offers. Bill 1 is a start down the right road, but it's not certain enough.

The other problem that I have with the money and where it goes is that it tends to go, as is very often the case with this government, into areas that deal with applied knowledge and applied research. The Alberta ingenuity fund, for instance, funds especially applied research in science and engineering. Arguably, this contributes to harnessing public education to industry interests. You know, there's a role for that within the broad scope of advanced education, Mr. Speaker. There's definitely a role for that. But the whole system should not be geared up to the needs of industry. There needs to be a place within the context of the broad scope of advanced education for the pursuit of learning for its own sake, for the pursuit of creative thinking and pure inquiry, for the pursuit of arts and humanities.

There just isn't the commitment to arts and humanities that the Alberta Liberals would like to see. We, of course, had a plan. Again. This part wasn't adopted by the government. We had a plan to put 5 per cent of every annual budget surplus into a fund to complement the federal Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. We think that the government should do the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, there's a delicate balance that needs to be struck in our public institutions between ministerial control and institutional autonomy. I'm wondering if there aren't some clauses in this bill – and I don't mean to go through it clause by clause – that threaten to tip that balance. Institutions are public, but they can never become partisan or be made simply to perform pet partisan projects. Institutions, including board members, presidents, and all faculty, need to be assured that they can speak out on important matters of public policy without fear of reprisal. It's also vital that qualified academics are empowered to set academic policy and standards at their institutions.

In some respects the degree of ministerial or governmental control that this bill provides is somewhat troubling. The fund, if and when fully funded, will provide the minister with, we think, an excessive degree of discretion to pick winners and losers among the institutions or to reward and punish according to how accommodating the institutions are. The conditions of making those grants will not be subject to legislative debate approval since they will be made through regulations passed by orders in council, which this government is wont to do.

The minister also appears to want to establish, albeit "in consultation" with institutions, enrolment targets and entrance requirements. Now, institutions currently and appropriately are empowered by the Post-secondary Learning Act to establish admission standards. There seems to be a conflict between Bill 1 and the PSLA.

The minister is also empowered to appoint all the members of the council, his advisory council. Institutional stakeholders, we feel, including administrators, faculty council, students should be empowered to formally nominate representatives to the council. A good advisory council is made up of good advisors from the areas that you want advice from. You don't just hand-pick people you like; you allow these organizations to put forward the names of people they know can contribute to your council.

The purpose of the fund is "to promote the . . . attraction and retention of the faculty, staff and graduate students." We hope that that is not going to undermine current collective agreements and the ability of faculty and staff associations to freely bargain. I don't think the province of Alberta right now needs temporary Venezuelan professors, Mr. Speaker.

The other point that I wanted to make is on reporting and accountability. This minister is to be commended for trying to make the system more accessible, more affordable, and more excellent. He is to be commended for wanting to "develop and implement mechanisms to monitor, evaluate and report on the quality of advanced education in Alberta." He's to be commended for wanting us to have the best system in the world. But postsecondary institutions, already underfunded, are burdened by numerous accountability and reporting requirements. Entire institutional bureaucracies have been created to handle the reporting demands of the ministry, and, you know, there's never been any extra money for that. If institutions are expected to participate in substantive ways in establishing or administering common application processes, financial aid inventories, prior learning recognition and transfer arrangements, participation or affordability plans, or quality assessments, then they must be provided with the resources required to fulfill these duties. This has not been the case in the past.

You know, I've heard from so many stakeholders in the advanced education field that this government repeatedly demands from the institutions four-year business plans, yet they cannot get back from this government the commitment to more than one year of funding. Sometimes they're very, very perilously close to the end of their fiscal year before they can get the commitment for the next year. Fair is fair, Mr. Speaker. If you're going to demand a four-year business plan, then present certainty of funding with a four-year funding policy.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to debate Bill 1 through second reading, through Committee of the Whole, through third reading. My colleagues are going to have much more to say about it. I think that gives you an overview of the Alberta Liberal opposition point of view on Bill 1. It's a good start, but it needs a lot of work. It's kind of like that Datsun I referred to. It needs some real body work, hopefully better than Bondo. It needs some real body work and perhaps a mechanical tune-up as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to commend in sort of a backhanded way the effort and sort of the idea of creating the best postsecondary system in the world here in this province. Certainly all members of this province and students going into postsecondary deserve such a thing. We can afford such a thing. But I think that perhaps we have to look at a larger picture here besides just the endowment fund to make it a reality.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my comments this evening by outlining some of the structural difficulties that our postsecondary system is currently experiencing. Alberta has had the fastest rate of tuition increases across Confederation in the last 13 years. The average student debt is over $20,000 per student. That's only public debt. The student loan system is so inadequate that many students are going into private debt and credit cards to get by, not to mention the good graces of their parents and relatives. Imagine if you had to live on $700 a month. That's what the student loan system currently gives Alberta students.

Base operating grants to universities and colleges do not keep pace with inflation in this province. While government posts multibillion dollar surpluses, postsecondary institutions are cutting programs, laying off staff, and eliminating student services. At the University of Calgary they're looking at 20 per cent cuts over the next four years under this current fiscal situation. Teaching and learning conditions have suffered as a result. Four hundred people crammed into a lecture hall is not an educational experience, Mr. Speaker; it's a mere shadow of what a meaningful educational experience should be.

The arts and humanities have suffered the most. Students are paying more and getting less. Departments are cutting resource materials and support staff and not replacing retiring faculty at replacement levels. Class sizes are going through the roof, and quality suffers as a result. Even with the tuition freeze institutions are charging more fees this next year because their budgets are still too tight. At Red Deer College students are looking at a $40 new fee just for their athletic teams. This sort of thing should be coming out of the base budget, not out of students' pockets, but institutions are just trying to get by, and these other extra billing fees are coming in.

The Premier said that they're rewriting the tuition fee policy for 2006. He says that it will be, quote, an entrepreneurial tuition fee policy. What exactly does that mean? Parents taking on a second mortgage? Students having to run bake sales outside universities? It sounds to me like another misguided market solution, which has been proven disastrous in every other jurisdiction that has tried it, such as Australia and New Zealand.

The tuition fee policy in 1991, '96, 2004, and now again – students will get nothing out of this new policy other than what they have gotten in the past 14 years: more student debt, higher tuition, lower quality education. Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is not inclusive enough to address these concerns.

The Deputy Speaker: I'd like to remind the hon. member that we're not in Committee of the Whole. You have to be in your seats.

Carry on.

Mr. Eggen: I, too, have difficulty with that rule. Mind you, I'm a new guy, so perhaps I had an excuse.

Anyway, Bill 1 is not inclusive enough to address these concerns that I've just outlined. We need a long-term, independent look at the future of postsecondary education here in Alberta. We need a postsecondary learning commission similar to the Learning Commission that we had for the K to 12 sector.

Specifically, our criticisms of Bill 1 are as follows. Now, the government is saying that they are reinvesting; but how exactly? They are relying on unbudgeted surpluses in order to fund what should be long-term investments. This is questionable funding as well as being confusing public policy. If there's a downturn in the price of oil and natural gas and future budget surpluses evaporate, Alberta's postsecondary students will either have no endowment at all or a significantly smaller endowment than was first advertised. If endowments such as the one proposed for postsecondary education are set up as outlined in Bill 1, the cost of doing so should be built into the budgets up front.

I am also concerned about the increased involvement in the private sector, which will be in this new endowment fund. No one stipulates that the endowment fund money will be given out to institutions that find matching funds from private donors or the private sector. This doesn't allow institutions to plan ahead for the future. Postsecondary institutions will have to take some focus off teaching and learning and now on to raising money and on increasing the role and influence of the private sector. Also, smaller institutions will have more difficulty raising this matching fund because the money will naturally gravitate to the larger universities in Edmonton and Calgary.

This has very disturbing implications for academic freedom as well. Academic freedom is seriously compromised when developing new programs, faculties, and areas of inquiry is dependent on structuring funds from the private sector. Postsecondary institutions must be able to ask difficult questions, must be free to pursue knowledge for the sake of seeking knowledge, and must be able to operate freely from the constraints of vested interests.

Mr. Speaker, seeking matching funds from the private sector or from large private donations also fails to build a new century for the arts, humanities, and social services in our universities and postsecondary institutions. Private donations to the social sciences and humanities are usually far lower than they are to the so-called hard sciences. Under the Tory scheme, as we see from Bill 1, the arts and social sciences will continue on the decline in this province because Bill 1 does not allow for increased base operating funding, which is what arts and social sciences programs need to be sustainable.

Alberta's new century must be built on a solid foundation of informed, well-rounded citizens. It is no surprise that today's CEOs and business executives often look to graduates from the social sciences and humanities for their new workers. This is an increasing trend because arts graduates have an ability to write, to think critically, to solve problems quickly, and to look at the world in a broad context. The Conservative government continues to underfund and underappreciate the arts and social sciences, but they will do so at their own peril. They do so at the peril of starving the very lifeblood of democracy: a well-informed, active, and engaged citizenry.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my comments, and I now beg leave to adjourn the debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Consideration of His Honour

head: (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have seven minutes left. Do you wish to continue?

Mr. Hinman: I'm finished.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for the opportunity, and congratulations on your job, something that not many of us care to fulfill. It's not a challenge to a lot of us. I do want to congratulate you, the Speaker, and the Deputy Chair on your elections. I also, like many others here, want to congratulate His Honour for his speech. Mine is a rather informal bunch of comments and reflections at this time.

When I was a young kid, my dad used to go down to Lethbridge to a function called the Lethbridge sportsmen's dinner, and I still have a baseball that dad brought home to me signed by – now I guess I have to call him His Honour. He was then a pretty fabulous star with the Edmonton Eskimos, and I can also remember his nickname, and it was a term of endearment. I would imagine that in this day and age of political correctness, they'll have to rewrite the history book to eliminate that reference to him as well. I won't even mention what it is here because I'll get myself in hot water.

I would also like to pay respect to Her Honour. You know, not too many of us didn't have an opportunity to get a hug, not too many of us didn't have an opportunity to see her. I can remember the kids in a little small community in our constituency called Little Bow. The community was Lomond. It's about 208 people, and they had the grand sum of six kids graduating from grade 12. Her Honour had been invited down there and managed to escape all the protocol, give all the kids a hug, and helped a little handicapped graduate not onto the stage, but instead of making him feel a little different, she brought all the kids down onto the main floor so everyone was part of the graduation ceremony.

I wanted to reflect a little bit and tie this into the throne speech in this our centennial year, where we've come from and where we're going to. I know that it was 13 years and five days ago that I made my maiden speech after a by-election, and I can imagine that those of you who have given speeches today were pretty darn nervous like I was. I know that the thing that appealed to me the very most was your references to your family, your background, and an appreciation for the people that got you here.

I don't think I'm any different, but in this our centennial year I have to think back to my great-grandpa who came here in 1898 to an area south of Pincher Creek. If the family still had the land today, they would have received the farm century award, but unfortunately with progress the old homestead is under the Waterton dam. He raised horses for the North West Mounted Police, and I reflect today of the sadness that everyone will think about and attend tomorrow.

I'm also reflecting on the fact that looking in the newspaper accounts at a picture of a young officer out at the Mayerthorpe detachment, I recognized the name and did a phone call and found out, lo and behold, that it's a cousin to my very best friend that I grew up with in the little town of Carmangay. It is miraculous that she wasn't one of the unfortunate few that had to attend the scene.

When I think of our riding I'm really quite amazed that in the 13 years I've been here, it's grown about 40 per cent geographically. We've got a wonderful riding, really. Another reason that I wanted to give you a thumbnail sketch was for those of you who haven't been in southern Alberta to our riding called Little Bow. It's actually a very large riding, one of the ten largest, and it starts about 70 kilometres north of the American border at the south end of the county of Lethbridge. It goes all the way north to within 22 kilometres of the southeast part of Calgary, one of the newer communities, Copperfield. If you swam across the river, you'd be literally 15 minutes from one corner of our riding over to Calgary, and down in the southeast we're only within 60 kilometres of the city of Medicine Hat. A huge area, over 20 municipalities, and every one of them has something to be very proud of.

The county of Lethbridge, for instance, is probably best known for the fact that it has the largest total number of intensive livestock operations, not to take away from the county of Lacombe. I know that they have the largest number of confined feeding hog operations, but the county of Lethbridge has the largest number of cattle, swine, dairy – you name it, they seem to have it – over 680 confined feeding operations.

And, you know, neighbours get along. Yes, they're concerned about water, but you know the irrigation systems in the area have a far higher quality of water than many of the treatment plants that we have in our towns and villages.

They also are the home to the Lethbridge regional airport, something that quite a few of us in the Assembly want to see maintained, not only the viability of the airport but the airline that services our capital here in Edmonton. It's one of the only airlines that has a direct flight, 75 minutes, second-longest in the province other than one of the flights coming in from northern Alberta, all without a washroom, mind you, but it is a critical service to go 75 minutes nonstop and not to have to go through an international airport and security.

The county of Lethbridge is also the home to probably one of the world-class agricultural research stations, and it's a marvel in itself because it's a joint federal/provincial venture that's been in place for years. That sits outside the city in our riding, as does a provincial jail.

We have the entire county of Vulcan, and that's primarily an agricultural community, again. The largest centre, the town of Vulcan itself, has a history of being one of the few flight training centres in Alberta during the Second World War, training over 1,200 RCAF pilots. Today when you think back to those guys who trained in Harvards, now their theme, their tourism draw, is the Star Trek theme. It's my understanding that this year they'll host a grand national assembly of Klingons attending in Vulcan from all across North America. It's the second week of June if anyone wants to go.

You know, it doesn't really relate to the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, but it does when we think of where we were a hundred years ago. The technology and the education and the things that we kind of take for granted today, a lot of it speaks in my mind to disposable income. You know, the fuller our stomach is, the more we want to whine and the more we expect and the more we want to keep up with our neighbours.

I was one of the very fortunate few, I think, of my generation. I was the oldest in the family, and it was a dream that I should go to postsecondary. But none of my other brothers or sisters were able to, you know. We just didn't have the money. I'm very fortunate. My wife and I have four children, and all four have been able to attend some form of postsecondary. When the kids today talk about how much it costs to go to school, it's true: it costs a lot of money. But I remember when I went to the U of C for a brief time before I went to SAIT. You got by on a hundred dollars a month, and that was big living. Mom and Dad had to scrape like crazy just to make that available.

I'll even go back to our oldest son, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 at the U of L they were paying $1,200 per semester, and we were looking at a 3 per cent increase in tuition fees, and the kids were going wild. Well, I happened to speak to a parent from Massachusetts that same year, and he had his son attending what they call a land grant college in the state of Massachusetts. I said, being a nosy farm kid from southern Alberta, "How much is it costing you to send your child to go to school?" He looked at me, and he said, "Eleven thousand." I said, "What? For one year?" "Yup. For my own state college. Eleven thousand dollars."

I knew at the time, as many of us in this Assembly have spent time on municipal and city councils, roughly what our tax rates were, and it was suddenly arousing my curiosity. I said, "Up at home for about a 1,500 or a 1,200 square foot home, we pay about $1, $1.10, $1.15 a square foot for property taxes. What do you pay?" His answer was: "Seventy-five hundred dollars." Have any of us ever thought of what a wonderful province we actually live in?

You know, I've got quite a few other communities, and the problem with speaking of one, then you forget the other one, or somebody says that you didn't mention our town. Well, we've got a couple other really neat ones. Coaldale. It's the largest community in our riding: 6,500 people. It's the home of the oldest Mennonite settlement in the riding, maybe even in Alberta, a gem of the west. It's an old church that a group of volunteers have restored by taking advantage of the CFEP program, and it hopes to be a tourism, educational recollection of old antiques and what things used to be. Bring kids in and show them how their great forefathers farmed the land.

It is also the home of the Alberta Birds of Prey Centre, and it's state of the art. It's probably one of only four in North America that takes birds that have been injured in the wild, treats them, and then releases them out. I encourage you to come down and see it.

It also is the home of a centenarian this year. Mr. John Gettman is going to be 102 years old, and he still sets up the tables when the seniors have a meeting in the lodge, and he's got almost as much dark hair as I do. He's an amazing guy.

We have Vauxhall. It's the potato capital of the world. Again, not a big town, 800 people, but you know when I went to the high school graduation last year, over 80 per cent of the kids were on the honour roll. Not too shabby, is it? We've got a poor education system, don't we?

When I went to Vulcan, you know, the same thing. A couple of years ago they were ranked third in all of Alberta for the high school ratings. People can't stay at number three all the time because there's always another school that wants to compete and beat them and be better.

Picture Butte. It's the feedlot capital of Alberta. Some call it Feedlot Alley.

You know, there are all kinds of communities. Champion, if anyone is ever down there, has Little Bow provincial park. For 25 years the people in the county hoped and prayed and planned through droughts to develop a water management thing, a thing called a dam, that was, yes, going to displace a few people, but you know the community came together and realized they wanted municipal water that was safe and secure to fight fires with, that they wanted a recreation area, that they wanted to be able to develop private irrigation, and that will allow 10,000 acres of private irrigation to come on stream. No government money to do that, they do it on their own. They invest over $500 an acre just in the capital to put a pivot system on their own land.

Speaking of irrigation, we've got three irrigation districts. St. Mary's is shared with Cardston-Taber-Warner and Little Bow. We've got the Bow River irrigation district on the east side, Lethbridge Northern irrigation in the middle. This is a positive thing, I believe, for all of Alberta. It's not a grab. It's not an empty trough of wasted money. It's 4 per cent of the agricultural land generating 22 per cent of the agricultural revenue.

The neatest thing is that a little community called Barons teamed up with the Lethbridge Northern irrigation district, and this spring they unveiled a 10,000-acre expansion to the district in the Barons area totally enclosed in pipe. Not one drop of evaporation. All the guys now are irrigating with pivot systems with low-drop, low-pressure systems. You know, talk about being innovators and talk about being responsible.

I think I've almost wasted my 10 minutes, and I probably had 10 minutes more, but I did want to . . . [interjections] Pardon me? Keep on going? Okay. Well, I'll try to speed it up just somewhat.

You know, that Little Bow dam – it's called Twin Valley dam and reservoir right now – will provide a recreation area not just for people in our constituency. We're about a hundred miles from the Little Bow provincial park and Twin Valley from the city of Calgary, and it's booked by Wednesday night on any long weekend. It provides an escape for the people from urban centres who want to come out and get some fresh air and do some waterskiing, get some nice sun, lean into the 80-kilometre an hour winds. You know, those kinds of things are what Alberta is made of. The only thing is that all of these facilities that we have south of Calgary that are called bodies of water are manmade. Only two are natural resources.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to our tour.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

9:30

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't planning to speak tonight to the Speech from the Throne, but as I have to move to adjourn debate, I don't want to miss my opportunity to make a few short remarks before I do that. [interjection] Is that an invitation to treat?

Mr. Speaker, I was absolutely enthused by the Speech from the Throne delivered by our new Lieutenant Governor, and I, too, want to add my congratulations to the Honourable Norman Kwong as our new Lieutenant Governor. He has big rubber boots to fill indeed, as he noted as he delivered his remarks to our House, the remarks about the next Alberta and even the titles throughout it: "The Centennial: A Century of Achievement," "The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Learning," "The Next Alberta Will Have a Diverse and Growing Economy," "The Next Alberta Will Be the Healthiest Province in Canada," "All Albertans Will Share in the Alberta Advantage," "The Next Alberta Will Be a Leader in Canada and the World."

Mr. Speaker, last year this government published a 20-year strategic plan, a strategic plan that talked about Albertans being self-reliant and entrepreneurial, that talked about building on four basic pillars: unleashing innovation, leading and learning, competing in a global economy, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Mr. Speaker, those pillars, that direction, that vision for the future of this province is reflected in the Speech from the Throne and the action that this government is going to be taking over the next year and the next period of time with the three-year business plans and, indeed, over the next 20 years to make that vision a reality.

Mr. Speaker, the focus on education is absolutely key. It's not just one of the pillars of the four pillars of the strategic plan, but it's the underpinning of the whole strategic plan. You cannot unleash innovation without education, and it's necessary to unleash innovation because in our economy if we do not advance knowledge, if we do not apply knowledge to our economy and make Alberta a leader in knowledge, we will not be competing in a global economy.

All you have to do is to look at our traditional economy, oil and gas. The investment that was made in research and development by our predecessors had tremendous foresight, and it's resulted in us being leaders both in the traditional oil and gas development and also in synthetic crudes in the oil sands. It was investment in technology that's made that happen. It's investment in technology which will take us to the next level, to the new technologies which will continue to allow us to extract values from those resources, to move into clean-burning coal, to move into coal-bed methane, both in an environmentally sustainable manner.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at other areas of our economy as well. Our fibre economy. It doesn't make sense over the long term to be shipping wood fibre relatively unprocessed to other places in the world. We need to add technology to add value to keep those jobs here, and that happens through the pursuit of knowledge and innovation. In the agricultural economy it makes no sense for us to ship our agriculture products relatively unprocessed to the United States or to other parts of the world. We must be adding knowledge, adding value, using technology to increase the value here and keep the jobs at home.

Moving to the new economies of biosciences, life sciences, and nanotechnology requires innovation. It requires knowledge. So the first pillar of our 20-year strategic plan, unleashing innovation, is absolutely underpinned by the expansion of knowledge, the expansion of education, the advancing in education that's referenced in His Honour's Speech from the Throne.

Leading in learning is self-evident. We need to have basic education. We need to inspire our students to complete their high school education because we know that in the future – I think one of the statistics that's often thrown out is that 67 per cent of all future jobs created are going to require a postsecondary education. We need to inspire our students to finish their high school and to move into an advanced education.

We need to recognize that advancing education is not just about completing high school. It's the full, broad continuum of education. It's those people who need, moving to literacy as well as those people who want, moving to a PhD or beyond. So advancing education and being leaders in learning are pivotal to the new economy and to the next Alberta.

Competing in a global marketplace. Absolutely essential for Albertans. With 3 million people, even if we grow to 4 million or 4 and a half million people, Mr. Speaker, we need to trade out into the world, and we're not going to be trading out into the world effectively with our current commodity bases. We have to trade out into the world with new commodities, with advanced commodities, with high-value commodities, and with knowledge, particularly with knowledge, competing in a global economy.

What's going to make it possible for us to compete in that global economy, Mr. Speaker? It's, again, our human capital, the people who we have here in Alberta with a good education, with a strong, innovative and entrepreneurial ability. One thing that we seldom reference about Alberta but which is particularly true is that we are a complex, cosmopolitan community with friends and relatives from all over the world, and in the new economy those friends and relatives, the fact that Albertans come from everywhere, are related everywhere, is going to be so critical to us not only in the basic makeup of our modern economy and our modern society in this province. It's what makes our society an interesting and diverse place.

We live together here in harmony better than virtually any place in the world. Compare Alberta, compare Edmonton to any place in the world, and you won't find the kind of diversity we have and the ability to live together with that diversity, to value that diversity, and the ability that that gives us to trade out to friends and relatives all over the world. Just one high school in this city, Harry Ainlay high school, at one time had 88 different language groups represented in that school. It's phenomenal. It's a very, very valuable resource that we have in human capital of this province, and it's something that we need to value. So competing in the global economy, absolutely important. We're well positioned to do it. We need a knowledge base to be able to do that.

Making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit, the fourth pillar of our 20-year strategic plan. It's not about beating our chests and saying that we're number one, Mr. Speaker. It's about having the quality of life which makes people want to live here and makes living here worthwhile, valuable, and a place where our children and our grandchildren can be.

What makes it worthwhile? Well, it's being stewards of our environment: the clean air, the clean water, the great mountains, the wonderful place that we have to live. That's what's important. That's where we provide stewardship. We must leave as small a footprint as possible so that future generations can enjoy the same Alberta that we enjoy.

It's about having a good education system so that our children can grow up having the advantages of an education system which will enable them to take advantage of the opportunities which present themselves in the future.

It's about having a health care system that takes care of our children and our parents when we need it. It's about having safe communities. That's the type of thing which makes our community a livable place.

It's about the arts. It's about the quality of life which makes life enjoyable and celebrating the arts. That's a very important part of our community. I had the opportunity to go to an IRDC conference in San Antonio, Texas, a number of years ago, when I had the portfolio of intergovernmental affairs. IRDC is an organization of senior executives that looks for the next place for their corporation to invest. When you ask what the criteria are that they're looking for, sure they're looking for low taxes; that's important. They're looking for low input costs; that's important. They're looking for a well-educated workforce and a well-education population; that's important.

But what they really want are the creative costs. What they really want is a place where their employees, their senior executives, and the senior executives' spouses and their employees will enjoy living because when they have an enjoyment of life and when they know that their children have a place where they can be educated, be healthy, have a quality environment, and have the arts, they will be productive, happy employees, and they will make the economy sing. So it's a tautological thing, Mr. Speaker. It all comes together. It's what the strategic plan is all about and is so ably reflected in the issues that are set out in the Speech from the Throne.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the Speech from the Throne this year and the avenues we are taking to make the strategic plan for this province sing.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, with tomorrow's sombre observances in mind, specifically the national memorial service for the four Alberta RCMP officers murdered last week in the line of duty, I move that the Assembly stand adjourned pursuant to Government Motion 12 agreed to by this Assembly yesterday until 1:30 Monday afternoon, March 14.

[Motion carried; at 9:38 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 14, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/03/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, and welcome. At the conclusion of the prayer would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members, we'll be led today with the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would you please participate in the language of your choice?

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Before calling on the Premier for Introduction Of Guests, let me just provide to members a little information with respect to our history. On March 14, 1979, a general election was held in Alberta; that's 26 years ago today. Of the 79 MLAs elected, 74 were PC, four were Alberta Social Credit, and one was NDP. Included in that election were the fathers of the current members for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and Calgary-Foothills. Their fathers then represented the constituencies of Barrhead and Calgary-Bow respectively.

The hon. Premier.

head:

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature four visitors. Every year Grant MacEwan College hosts a Mad Hatters Ball. This is a very successful dinner and silent auction fundraiser. My guests today were the successful bidders on a lunch with the Premier.

An Hon. Member: Was there any orange juice?

Mr. Klein: There was a little orange juice and sandwiches, very expensive sandwiches.

It was my great pleasure to host Mr. Pat Buffalo, Mr. Trevor Swampy, Mr. John Szumlas, and Ms Diane Strashok, all members of Peace Hills Insurance's board of directors. I'd like to thank them for both their company and their generous support of the college, and I'd ask that two of them, Diane and Trevor, stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure for me to introduce eight individuals visiting from Ontario. They're participating in the Ontario Legislature internship program, and they'll be attending meetings in the Legislature with government and opposition members both today and tomorrow. It's a pleasure to introduce Nicola Hepburn, Audrey Lemieux, Adam McDonald, Kaila Mintz, Ben Rossiter, Rebecca Sciarra, and Beki Scott. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that everyone give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a number of people that are here to watch the introduction of Bill 21, the tourism levy act. We have with us Mac Makenny, who is the chair of the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council. Mac has been our chair now for about a year. With him is Bob Scott, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Economic Development. And either here or on their way are Ken Fiske of Edmonton Tourism and David Kaiser of the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association. I'd like the Assembly to give them a warm, traditional welcome.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you Mr. Herb Robinson and Mrs. Angie Lemire, who are teachers from the Jasper junior/senior high school. Along with them they have 30 bright young individuals. Some of them have been here when they were in grade 6, but now they've graduated to grade 10. They're all from the municipality of Jasper and wonderful by nature. That's what it is. So I'd ask them to all rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce today to you and through you to members of the Assembly 21 students from St. Luke school in South Cooking Lake. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Mhairi Miskew, and parents Mrs. Lesley Serediak and Mrs. Brenda Olsen. I'd ask them to please rise in both the members' and the public galleries and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 23 very experienced teenagers. They are, in fact, a group of seniors from the community of Beaumont, which is in my constituency. They're 23 seniors along with their leader, Mrs. Raymonde Boyachuk, and their bus driver, Mr. Ouellette. I'd also like to mention that they include the mother of the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace. It is my pleasure to ask this group to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two folks that work very hard for Catholic education in this province. Marilyn Welsch is from Pincher Creek, and joining her today is Stef Michniewski. Stef is the executive director of that particular organization. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests who I think will give me cause to expect a particularly spirited and inspired debate today in the Legislature. They are three seminarians from St. Joseph Seminary in Edmonton. They're in the public gallery. I'll ask them to rise as I read their names. Lee Leslie, seminarian for the archdiocese of Edmonton, formerly worked at the Legislature on maintenance staff. He's a first-year theologian. Marc Cramer is a seminarian for the archdiocese of Edmonton. He's a third-year theologian and may be ordained as a deacon this year. Our third guest is Aaron Roth, who once worked in our caucus staff and is a seminarian for the archdiocese of Edmonton and a first-year theologian. They're touring the Legislature today and observing us and perhaps even praying for us in question period. I'd like everybody to give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the Keenooshayo grade 6 class and their teacher, Mrs. Hubbard, and parent helpers Mrs. Deb Caney, Mr. Jason Biggs, and Ms Michelle Riches. Would they please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Donna Chovanec. Dr. Chovanec is my constituent, a former student, and presently an assistant professor in the department of educational policy studies at the University of Alberta. Her focus of research for the past several years has been related to women's challenges and strengths. Her most recent research has been in two distinct areas: women's movements in Chili and women's dependence on substance use. Dr. Chovanec is sitting in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, also in the gallery today and here to observe the introduction of Bill 21 is Don Boynton. Don is the director of communications for Travel Alberta, and I'll ask Don to rise as we provide him with a warm welcome from the Assembly.

Thank you very much.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Process

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being on time, on task, and on budget is a basic responsibility this government has lost. Regional health authorities, municipalities, school boards, and government departments have complained that they cannot plan and manage properly when their budgets are not finalized until the fiscal year is already months under way. Every single Albertan is affected by budget delays, from AISH recipients to students and farmers to taxpayers, who expect better from their government. My question is to the Premier. Why is this government is such disarray that it can't deliver a budget on time?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're not in disarray, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance speak to the budget.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we will be introducing a budget roughly in the same time frame as we do in most sessions. The hon. member would know that the session began two weeks later than we maybe normally would. But I think the important thing and what I hear from school boards and health authorities and all of the affected municipalities is that they want the budget in as quickly as we can but that more important than the day the budget comes in is the content of the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what steps is the Premier taking to improve budget discipline so that this year the budget will actually be followed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the point is well taken, and the hon. Minister of Finance is taking her time with the budget to make sure that there are no in-year adjustments.

Dr. Taft: My last question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Given the widespread breakdown of the budget process, what recommendations will this minister be making to improve the government's efficiency in budgeting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that our Treasurer is doing a very good job with budget, and I don't think I have to look at that at this point in time.

Thank you.

Chartered Air Travel

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, last summer Premier Klein refused to do his health care . . .

The Speaker: Please, please, please. That's a no-no. Go ahead.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Last summer the Premier refused to do his health care homework by meeting with the other Premiers at the Niagara-on-the-Lake conference. Then in September of 2004 the Premier, having spent less than one day at the three-day Ottawa health conference, headed over to the casino in Hull, Quebec. This rambling, gambling, private-chartered jet junket flight cost the Alberta taxpayer almost $42,000. To the Premier: how can the Premier justify such extravagance to Martha and Henry?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, many officials attended that conference and stood in for me, not at the casino but stood in for me at the conference. So when we charter aircraft, we weigh the costs of flying commercial against the costs of chartering.

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier: given that the health care summit date was set months in advance, why didn't the Premier either fly commercially or on one of the government's four private planes?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, we weigh the costs of flying commercially, not on government aircraft because I can tell you that I've taken government aircraft to Toronto and Ottawa. It's two stops on the way back, about 11 hours and about seven hours down. So it's a matter of expediency.

Mr. Chase: Finally, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that eight of the Premier's chartered flights of fancy cost Albertans in total a quarter of a million dollars, isn't it time that this government clipped its wings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that these people realize how important a job our Premier has, and we have to get him places as fast as we possibly can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Market Surveillance Administrator

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2002 the EUB ruled that Engage Energy Canada charged the transmission administrator $126 million for demand power to balance the electricity system when the value of the deal should have been only $66 million. The EUB ruling forced Engage Energy to refund $63 million within 28 days. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why did the government appoint in 2003 as market surveillance administrator a former executive of the company that overcharged the transmission administrator $63 million in the year 2002?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of questions in there. First, with respect to the facts I don't have the information in front of me, so I can't really judge as to what the merits of that specific instance were. I'd be happy to look at it if he'd send us the information.

With respect to the individual that was hired on as the head of the market surveillance administration, he comes with a tremendous amount of industry experience, the kind of people you want to look for that can head up these agencies.

Mr. MacDonald: Industry experience but no experience protecting consumers.

Why is the market surveillance administrator now refusing to investigate electricity market manipulation and price gouging that occurred between 1999 and the year 2002?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I want to again say that the individual in particular, the head of the market surveillance administration, does come with a high level of competency, expertise, and the ability to assess these things to ensure that the public is protected. He has acted on this case. They have done their investigations, and they've also forwarded some of that to the Competition Bureau.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when will this minister remove the market surveillance administrator because of this conflict of interest and replace him with someone who is independent and will represent the interests of overcharged, frustrated consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that one could probably try and say that anybody with experience might have some conflicts of interest. It's precisely the kind of people that you wish to have. You wish to have someone that understands, has the experience and background in these topics, very technical, and this individual comes very highly qualified.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

1:50

Electricity Billing

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem of billing errors on power bills lives on. Recently the Capital health authority was overbilled $125,000, and the error was only spotted because Capital health hired an outside expert to help read its power bills. Because of deregulation the average residential or farm customer faces a dizzying array of new line items and charges on their power bill, making it harder to spot overcharging and billing errors. My question is to the Premier. What does it say about the sorry state of deregulation in Alberta when health authorities, which should be focusing on patient care, are forced to hire outside experts to comb through their power bills to spot errors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the specifics relative to the case with the Capital regional health authority, but I can tell you that deregulation applies only to the generation side, and problems related to billing have to be sorted out with the retailer and the customer. We have an advocate and a person who will assist not only the Capital regional health authority but any individual with these problems.

Mr. Mason: Assist the power companies.

While hiring outside experts may be a solution for large electricity users such as Capital health, where does it leave Martha and Henry of this province who can't afford to hire professional energy watchdogs to spot errors on their power bills?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I pointed out that there is help available to individuals, the Marthas and the Henrys of this province, to help them sort through their utility bills. I'll ask the appropriate minister to supplement if he wishes.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has clearly stated, there is help available to anyone that has a problem with reading their bills. Within Government Services we have the Utilities Consumer Advocate, which has done a remarkable job of sorting out a lot of these problems as it relates between the retailer and the consumer.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier defend a situation where only big electricity consumers get credits for errors on their power bills while small residential and farm customers are stuck paying higher power bills because of overcharging and billing errors that go undetected and uncorrected?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that statement to be true, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, where there are errors that have been found, through the advocate's office there have been refunds. There have been errors corrected on occasions. I've got to tell you, though, that because of the activity of the consumer advocate, we are seeing a reduction in the number of errors. In a lot of cases when we find that some people think there is an error, there are some corrections as it relates to the distribution and transmission time frame and the energy consumption time frame. So you get those variances, and they can be sorted out through the advocate.

Shell Chemical Plant Vapour Release

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this morning there was an incident in the northern part of Strathcona county involving a chemical plant. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister please provide an update to this Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. At 9:45 this morning Alberta Environment did receive a report that I have in front of me pertaining to a vapour pressure release from a tank at the Shell chemical plant near Fort Saskatchewan.

The compound is believed to be a mixture of ethyl benzene and styrene, which are used to make plastics and Styrofoam. In fact, it's somewhat like a paint stripper, and it smells like gasoline. I'm really pleased to say that the company has reported that there have been no casualties. We have sent our investigators in, but this is a collaborative effort with Emergency Management Alberta as well as the EUB through Alberta Energy and also with Strathcona county.

I want to say that in terms of acceptable levels essentially 300 parts per million is what is considered an acceptable guideline. What we've discovered at this point is about 80 parts per million.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, my only supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister please tell us what role Emergency Management Alberta has in this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously the government takes incidents such as this very seriously, and I'm pleased to report that my latest information indicates that this particular incident has been contained.

Nevertheless, it's important that all members know, Mr. Speaker, that each municipality is responsible for maintaining an emergency plan. Those plans are tested on a frequent basis, and the role of Emergency Management Alberta is to co-ordinate with both the private sector and the first responders to ensure that these plans are adequate. As of this point in time my officials within Emergency Management Alberta are on standby and will respond if requested.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Policing Review

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 this government released the results of the MLA policing review committee, a comprehensive review of the Alberta Police Act, which is 17 years old. Society has obviously changed, and there is a pressing need to change the Police Act. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that the government has had over three years to consider these recommendations, can the minister explain why there has been a delay in implementing the core themes identified in the report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are 34 recommendations within that report. It did take about two years or two and a half years to actually complete the whole review and take it through the government process. There are some tremendous challenges within that review. Some of those challenges we're going to be addressing within this next fiscal year, but as well with regard to the Police Act those legislative changes will be before this Assembly I'm hoping later this month.

Dr. B. Miller: Again to the same minister: will this government commit to amending the Police Act to ensure that the police are governed by a transparent, objective, public oversight?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, we do have amendments that will be coming before this House with regard to civilian oversight, with regard to establishing and ensuring that public oversight is entrenched in legislation and is part of the process with regard to investigations regarding police conduct and/or the opportunity for a complainant from the public or a police officer to have the ability to appeal their complaint to the LERB, the Law Enforcement Review Board.

Dr. B. Miller: Again to the same minister: given that the current Police Act prohibits the Solicitor General from calling for a public inquiry, will this government listen to Albertans and show true leadership by amending this provision and giving the Solicitor General the authority for full public inquiries?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, there is legislation in place right now regarding the Fatality Inquiries Act. There is legislation in the Police Act regarding a commission inquiry as well as a law enforcement review inquiry, so there are avenues that are available there. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora will have to wait till legislation comes before the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pheasant Hunting

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first of two questions is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development regarding pheasant hunting in Alberta. Recently a constituent asked about an Alberta government program where pheasants which are raised in hatcheries are released into certain areas of the province each year for hunting. I understand that pheasants are released primarily only in southern Alberta with the exception of one location north of Red Deer. My question for the minister is: why are pheasants not also released in north-central Alberta to provide the same opportunity for hunters there?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. Pheasants in this province are a limited resource and most are released in southern Alberta for several reasons. Some of it, of course, is to be cost-effective and to be practical. It is necessary to release pheasants into areas where they will have the greatest chance of survival and have the opportunity to augment the wild populations. Because of varying factors, including weather, agricultural practices, and the actual pheasant habitat itself, pheasants have a better chance of thriving in southern Alberta than they do in the wild.

It must be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, that some other species are being hunted, for example bighorn sheep, in only certain parts of Alberta, and sometimes if people wish to hunt pheasants, they must be aware that opportunities largely make themselves available in southern Alberta, where most of the habitat is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My other question is to the same minister. Can something be done in future, then, to better support pheasant hunting in central Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, my department works very diligently to make sure that we balance conservation and allocation amongst all its stakeholders, and we take into account various parts of the province where possible. Department staff will continue to examine all the factors in determining whether an area of Alberta, whether it's south or central, is suitable for pheasant release sites, and we will continue to release some pheasants in the Buffalo Lake area. I can reassure the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose that we will continue to release pheasants in those particular sites so that he and his constituents and the person that he's representing can go out and hunt pheasants.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Wellness Initiatives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 11 the Premier said: "Talking about the future leads me to the fourth component of the Third Way for health renewal. And that's to get serious about wellness." My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. If wellness is the fourth plank of this government's third way, why is the government putting regional health authorities like Capital health in a position of cutting early intervention treatments like physiotherapy?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there is not a cut in the physiotherapy budget or service being provided by Capital health. What they have chosen to do is look at the acuity of some of those people who need to receive treatments, particularly for low income and seniors and so on, and they will get those services without interruption as required.

Mr. Speaker, these are again services that are not listed that are provided in Alberta. More physiotherapy services are sponsored in Alberta than in any other province, and the services that are being provided through the dollars that are being allocated, and not cut or reduced dollars, will go to help those that have the greatest need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: if wellness is the fourth plank of this government's third way, why does this government oppose the Alberta Liberal idea of creating a wellness fund?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are many ideas that we will consider in the discussion about the third way. On the conference dates of May 3 to 5 we'll have an opportunity to hear from people worldwide with best practices. Currently the wellness fund has been well expended to the extent that we have communities with the Wellpower challenge. Healthy U has been very effective, and there are numerous other budgets, in fact, throughout this government, through other ministries that address wellness in Alberta.

The consolidation of a wellness fund is an idea that could be looked at, but it would be one of several that we will explore over this next year as we look at innovation and best practices worldwide.

Ms Blakeman: You voted it down last week.

Again to the same minister: if wellness is the fourth plank of this government's third way, why isn't a comprehensive workplace smoking ban already government policy?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Order Paper today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Seniors' Benefit Programs

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my senior constituents are indicating that they're looking forward to a more enhanced optical and dental plan. Can the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports advise us whether she is looking forward to enhancing optical and dental plans for our seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize the important contribution that seniors make to our province, and we provide programs that enhance the quality of life for our seniors. As you know, an important part of healthy aging is in the area of dental care and optical care, which is why, hon. member, we are introducing in a couple of weeks – I guess it would be after budget – a dental program that's enhanced as well as an optical program. That program is important because it's going to be easy for seniors to access. As well, it will provide maximum assistance to seniors that are lower income, who we know need our help the most, and some assistance to seniors that have a moderate income, and that will be in the area of coverage for basic dental health procedures as well as for prescription eyeglasses. I will announce more details about the program as it becomes finalized in a few weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors are also concerned with the high cost of hearing aids. Is the minister also looking at that particular benefit?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, recently the responsibility for the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program was transferred from the Ministry of Health and Wellness over to this ministry, and that means that now we have two programs that will assist seniors with hearing aids. First, the Aids to Daily Living program will provide up to $945 for low-income seniors and up to $756 for other seniors toward the purchase of a hearing aid. In addition, there is an opportunity for the special-needs assistance program to top up the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program, up to $1,200 for a first hearing aid and up to $1,200 for a second hearing aid if it's required. We are working very hard, as I indicated earlier, to ensure that our seniors have the resources that are needed for their care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. My last supplemental: what kind of income and asset testing is the minister considering for these programs?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know and as I mentioned earlier as well, the dental/optical program is income tested. It's focused on those who need our help and need our help the most. The programs will provide some assistance to seniors with moderate incomes.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important that you know that our seniors' programs are not asset tested. That's a well-known fact. While some of the programs are focused on seniors with lower incomes, we also provide programs that are for all seniors regardless of income. For example, last year we eliminated health care premiums for all Albertans over the age of 65, and also all our seniors receive premium-free Blue Cross prescription drug coverage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, at a news conference with the Premier in February the Minister of Human Resources and Employment promised a minimum wage increase within 30 days. He then backed off and announced that the 30-day consultation would only happen after a three-month waiting period, when this Legislature will no longer be sitting. A question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will the minister guarantee that when this curious three-month wait is over, there will be no further delay and that he will quickly increase the minimum wage to his promised $7 per hour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question because I'd like to clarify the situation. When we did announce the process, we said that within three months a decision will be made after consulting one month with the industry, and that's exactly what will happen. We will definitely announce the program.

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister guarantee that there will be no two-tier minimum wage with lesser rates for servers in restaurants and bars?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, at this time we are proposing $7 an hour.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the government is now in a long consultation process on how to implement an increase, why was there not a plan in place before there was the announcement of this increase?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, yes, we do ongoing monitoring of the wages. Issues like this are always discussed within caucus, within cabinet, and within ministries. We do work closely with our own ministries to ensure that if changes need to be made in any area in government, we can do it. Yes, we have been working on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Diploma Exam Grades

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Education made serious mistakes with this year's math 30 diploma exams, and as a result some 4,000 students may have had their marks rolled back by 3 per cent. For many grade 12 students considering postsecondary education, a 3 per cent mark reduction will deny them honours standing and thousands of dollars in scholarships and awards. To cover up and compensate for their own bungling, the department officials are asking teachers to tinker with school-awarded marks. My question is to the Minister of Education. Will the minister guarantee that Alberta Education's bungling will not result in any student being denied a Rutherford scholarship, other student awards, or entry into a postsecondary program?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there was no bungling of any sort. In fact, the issue that I think the hon. member is referring to is called the equating process, which was actually brought to our attention as a necessary step by the Auditor General some five or six years ago. The department responded by bringing forward what we felt was a reasonable and fair way to provide consistent standards over time.

This is extremely important, Mr. Speaker, because what it does is it provides basically in the first year, the only year we do this in, a baseline exam to be arrived at against which future exams can be compared, and that, in fact, is extremely important to universities and colleges and other postsecondary institutes right across all of North America. So we've done our best to address that. It's been done in physics, chemistry, and math this year. It was done in social studies last year. Now we have those baseline exams, and we're in better shape for it.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the government asking teachers to tinker with school-awarded marks when it is the Alberta government's policy and practices that need correction?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, diploma exams typically count for about 50 per cent of the student's grade, so there is an entire semester of study during which students are expected to perform as well. This particular situation, however, doesn't always result in final scores being adjusted downwards by 1, 2, or 3 per cent. In some cases, in fact, those students' scores went up.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the minister, although he hasn't answered my second question: will the minister make public how many students lost credit or honours standing due to the Department of Education's botched departmental exams?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would not berate the school system or the students or the outstanding teachers who are associated with them. I frankly think that it's quite an insult to pursue this line of questioning.

What I can tell the hon. member is that we had approximately 3,800 students write one form of the exam and the other several thousand write the other form. There was a set of common questions on each, and then there was a set of differing questions. The issue of equating has brought about now a standard which, as the Auditor General brought to our attention, was very necessary, as also was brought to our attention by several of the universities that our students are competing for entrance toward. Now, if there's a statistical figure available in that respect, I'll certainly try to find it for the hon. member.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that we spend the most money of any province in Canada per capita per student in this province, and our students are number one in the world in many, many respects and certainly number one throughout Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Contracted Employment Training

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are several not-for-profit, nongovernment organizations that have been doing great work in providing skilled training for Albertans who need a hand up so that they can participate in Alberta's labour workforce and enjoy a higher quality of life, and one of them is the MCC Employment Development program in Calgary. I have met several of their successful graduates and their happy employers. My question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is the government policy to help those organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I mentioned last week in this House the challenges we have with a good diversified economy and some of the processes we are using to try and provide the training that's necessary.

First of all, I'd like to commend the organizations like MCC in Calgary and many other organizations who assist us in this transitional process for doing such a fine job. We've spent $7 million in the last two years in training, and in the next two years we're going to spend another $7 million, Mr. Speaker. Over a thousand Calgarians will benefit from the whole process. The whole department is around $280 million in training for the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. How is the government assistance delivered to those organizations?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we do tender out contracts, and they are retendered every two years, so it gives us an opportunity to assess the success and the value of the programs. In 2004-05 13 organizations did get different contracts and continue to operate them in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. To be specific, Minister, what is the government assistance to help the effective program of MCC Employment Development in Calgary?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we had a number of telephone conversations with the people from MCC, and I am planning to meet them in the very near future here in Edmonton. In fact, we are funding two programs with them right now and working very successfully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary Egmont.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the Powley decision of the Supreme Court this government negotiated the Métis harvesting agreement, which allowed all Métis to hunt and fish year-round. In response to the same Supreme Court decision the Ontario government negotiated an agreement with the Métis Nation that restricted the number of hunting licences issued and limited hunting to traditional Métis territory. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why didn't your ministry adopt this reasonable and environmentally responsible agreement as a model for the government's Métis hunting accord?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta certainly entered into these agreements to fulfill its obligations relating to the said Powley Supreme Court decision. We were at the table with Alberta Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development regarding the decision, and our reason for being there was based on conservation of the resources. With all of our involvement in the resources across this province our role with all hunting and with all fishing is to make sure that proper conservation happens with the resource, and that's our role in this particular agreement.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: given that the Ontario agreement puts a cap on the number of hunters and the Alberta government's agreement does not, are there any plans in place to monitor the unknown number of hunters in Alberta as a result of this agreement?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we knew that as soon as we put conservation on the table as one of main benefits of the decision, we would have to do a lot of monitoring. Certainly, because our job is to manage the resource and monitoring is part of that, we will also be involved in the enforcement if necessary. All parties that agreed to the interim agreement agreed that the Powley decision does not necessarily mean that it's open season for hunting in this province. The Métis associations agreed with that, and they also agreed to respect closures and limits that are imposed for those very things, the conservation reasons that we were involved with.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: will the minister commit to including specific and enforceable conservation measures in the final Métis harvesting agreement?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is ongoing monitoring from within our department. We will make sure that the information that we provide as this goes forward, whether or not it goes into an actual full-time agreement, will be based on a lot of the information from our department, working with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development as well as the Métis councils, and comes forward in a constructive way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

School Board Consultations

Mr. Herard: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Education recently visited all 62 school boards in this province. To the minister: what was the main purpose of your visits to all 62 school jurisdictions?

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell the main purpose was of course to get acquainted with these elected trustees and at the same time to also discuss with them some of their successes and some of their celebrations and at the same time again to do a little bit of surveying on some of the remaining recommendations from the Alberta Commission on Learning report and ultimately to listen to what some of their issues, challenges, and concerns might have been. It was very successful. I'm deeply grateful to all of them for having come out in such large numbers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would you please summarize the key issues that boards brought to your attention?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the key issues was declining enrollments for K to 12 education throughout a large part of the province, with increasing costs everywhere in the province. Certainly, there were some issues that surfaced with regard to sparsity and distance and travel, busing in particular. I think there were some issues that arose with respect to operating and maintenance funding, issues that are primarily in the area of infrastructure but certainly an area where we have concerns. Issues pertaining to funding were prevalent with respect to English as a Second Language – we have a large influx of individuals who need that particular attention – as well as special needs, libraries. There was a real gamut of issues that were brought forward, that's for sure.

Mr. Herard: My final question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker, is: what do you plan to do with respect to dealing with these issues?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest challenges that our province faces in the K to 12 system is to take an already excellent and outstanding school system and try and maintain it and, where possible, make it better. So we're doing that as we go through these discussions with the school boards, trustees, and their senior officials. We're doing it also by providing additional monies for the class size reduction initiative, which has been extremely successful. We're doing it with the continuation of Alberta initiative for school improvement funding, for the First Nations/Métis/Inuit funding, with a renewed funding framework, and a lot of other exciting things with respect to the curriculum to ensure that our students get the greatest opportunities possible so they can continue their education to the largest and best extent available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Reclamation of Oil Well Sites

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil and gas sector is now requesting that their liability for old sites end with the issuance of a reclamation certificate. Approximately 90 per cent of these sites are not inspected directly after reclamation, leaving the likelihood that government and therefore the taxpayers will be forced to assume any further responsibility for cleanup. My question to the Minister of Energy: is this government prepared to give the oil companies release of responsibility and to transfer this massive, unfunded liability to present and future Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The industry actually operates in a very environmentally responsible manner. I'm going to have the Minister of Environment respond as well.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, we in the Ministry of Environment are examining that exact point that the hon. member raises. First and foremost we want to ensure that we protect the interest of all Albertans relative to liability that is out there. To put it in context, laws were not in place 30 or 40 years ago. Based on very good work by industry, they are of course remediating a lot of the sites that are taking place based on what they view as their corporate responsibility. But at this point in time it remains on the balance sheet and will continue to until we come to a successful resolution in protecting the interest of all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Minister of Energy: with approximately 40,000 inactive wells, how can this government assure Albertans that they will not bear the burden of any costs associated with reclamation of these sites?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the industry takes this very responsibly too. No one wants to be left with reclamation such that the environment is not put back into order, and the Energy and Utilities Board and all of the standards are set such that we will see that after the activity has occurred, there can be reclamation of all of the industry activity.

Thanks.

Dr. Swann: To the Minister of Environment: given no increase substantially in inspectors, how can this government assure Albertans that all of these are remediated adequately and Albertans will not be on the hook in the future?

Mr. Boutilier: Number one, I can assure this Assembly and the hon. member that Albertans will not be on the hook. If I could use the example: we don't inherit this land from our ancestors; in actual fact, we borrow it from our children. That context will continue to be a priority of this government relative to reclamation of these sites that the hon. member has mentioned.

Calgary Area Road Construction

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the province and the Tsuu T'ina Nation signed a framework agreement to at last construct a portion of the southwest ring road in Calgary. My question to the Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure is: what checks and balances are included in this agreement that will ensure all parties meet their time commitment and get this road constructed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1947 these negotiations were started, and here we are. Close to 60 years later they have finally taken a significant step forward. Included in the framework agreement that was signed on Friday after a great deal of negotiations by myself and my department are timelines that basically say that if there is not something done by a specific date, then an arbitration process will kick in. All this is done with the view of having a draft final agreement by November 1 of 2005.

Mr. Speaker, some people will say: well, what do you mean by draft final agreement? The issue comes down to that unless the federal government agrees to this whole process, it will not go ahead, because ultimately these are federal government lands that the reserve is on. Both the chief and myself feel that the federal government will come onside and that we will hopefully have these negotiations completely done and the road under way and going by September 1 of 2006. I think it's absolutely critical that there were timelines put in this agreement.

Mr. Liepert: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, now that the portion of the road across First Nations land is being planned, when will work begin on dividing highway 8, which has become one of the most dangerous stretches of road in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Typically we look at twinning a road when there's anywhere between 10,000 and 12,000 vehicles per day. Highway 8 is currently sitting at around 8,000 vehicles per day. I do believe that before it is twinned – and it certainly is in the future to be twinned – there are some improvements that need to be made specifically to highway 8. One of them, in direct reference to the hon. member, is that that intersection of highway 8 and highway 22 will be worked on. There will be work on that to ensure that it is a much safer intersection than it is now.

Just for the Assembly's interest, though, I must say to the hon. member that 43 per cent of the accidents that are on that road at the moment are actually caused by wildlife and animals running across the road.

Mr. Liepert: As a final supplementary: is the minister considering any form of redirection of truck traffic off highway 8 pending the upgrading?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, personally, I think that is a very good idea. My department has not looked at that, but we'll certainly take that under advisement. I think the whole idea of having highway 22 in the south and highway 1 to the north will certainly expedite truck traffic. I think we have to ask ourselves the question of whether or not there needs to be a lot of truck traffic on that. The whole goal of our highway 8 strategy is to make the road safer for those people that travel on it, and that's what we will be doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, and the ND opposition has the 18th question, but they have not advised if they choose to use it. If not, we'll recognize, then, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only 12 per cent of Alberta's land has been set aside or protected as parks. Eight per cent of the parks and protected areas are national. The remaining 4 per cent remain as provincial parks. My question to the Minister of Community Development: given that Albertans have expressed their desire to preserve Alberta's heritage in the form of new parks and protected areas, will this government halt the future sale of public lands to private developers?

2:30

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I would want to say that Albertans recognize the value of parks throughout the province of Alberta. They're very proud of them. We have almost 500 parks and protected areas and recreational areas throughout the province. I can tell the hon. member that every Albertan, regardless of where they live in this province, is within 100 kilometres of a park. We do have plans to move forward on improving our parks and restoring them. We know that there are issues related to the infrastructure of some of our parks that requires some fix up. It's our plan to move forward on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the federal government has begun to invest millions of dollars in repairing decaying infrastructure in Alberta's national parks, will this government commit to following this example and reinvest in our provincial parks?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. member would refer to the Blues of my most recent answer to his first question, he'd find that I said exactly that.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: will this government commit to reopening and fully staffing the many conservation offices that have been closed throughout this province?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, our commitment is to the parks. We recognize that they are an important part of the economic development of rural Alberta. It is part of our rural strategy. We will be moving forward on making sure that we are able to enforce the rules within the parks that we have. So my only comment to the hon. member in answering his question is that he should wait for budget day.

Policing Services

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, according to Statistics Canada, Alberta has the lowest number of police officers per capita of any province west of Prince Edward Island. Despite the partial restoration of public municipal police grants last year police services in this province continue to be stretched too thin, risking both public safety and the safety of the police themselves. The NDP opposition is calling for an additional 500 front-line police officers to improve policing services throughout the province. My question is to the Solicitor General. Why has the government been dragging its heels on providing the necessary resources to get more police onto the beat, serving our communities large and small?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government isn't dragging its feet. Last year the government added $50 million to the budget. At this present time we're reviewing the budget. As you are well aware, the budget presentation will be in early April, and we are looking at a number of strategies with regard to providing policing services throughout Alberta.

Mr. Eggen: My second question is to the same minister. Does the government, then, have a plan for getting more police onto the streets in our rural communities, and if so, what is that plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do. We are working on strategies right now, as was released in a news release this morning. We're working with the Alberta chiefs of police tomorrow – and the Minister of Gaming will be in attendance as well and officials from the department of corrections – to look at strategies with regard to the deployment of resources, with regard to sharing information and sharing resources, integrated opportunities in the future, and looking at deployment models throughout the province. So, yes, these are some of the things we're looking at.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: what actions will the government take to ensure that municipalities with populations above 5,000 residents are provided with additional provincial government dollars to allow them to hire more officers, thereby improving policing in their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member will have to wait until the budget is released. He'll notice that then.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Education would like to supplement an answer now. Our rule is that we allow that to happen. The hon. member who raised the question during the question period can raise an additional question.

The hon. minister.

Diploma Exam Grades (continued)

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to add to the question and the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that those students, those parents who feel that they have a case that they wish appealed may do so regarding the equating process. I think that's important to note, Mr. Speaker and all hon. members, because the Special Cases Committee, which must receive such an appeal in writing, will be meeting on March 17. So if there is interest in this particular area, they're welcome to call: 422-4848 I believe is the number in Edmonton; toll free, 310-0000.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: That's fine, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, and I thank the minister for the information.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. members. Today, what a good pace again. Eighteen members participated, and I very much appreciate that. My apologies to only one member. Unfortunately, we couldn't get you in. We'll try better tomorrow.

Before we proceed to the next item, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly – with us today in the members' gallery is the previous MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat, Dr. Lorne Taylor. Though retired from this government, it's obvious that his heart is still with this government. I would ask Dr. Lorne Taylor to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Dr. Taylor should note that he's always welcome to sit in the Speaker's gallery should he return. Actually, I always enjoyed keeping him under my thumb, but it was never successful.

In thirty seconds from now we'll move to Recognitions, but in the meantime let's all recognize happy, happy 5-0 for the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Team Ferbey

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and recognize Team Alberta for their exciting win at the Brier yesterday. With their 5-4 victory over Nova Scotia, skip Randy Ferbey, third Dave Nedohin, Scott Pfeifer, and lead Marcel, otherwise known as Shot Rocque, became the first team with the same lineup to win four Briers.

The back-and-forth match came down to the final shot as Nedohin made an open draw to the four-foot to score the final, winning point. Earlier today the Premier sent a personal letter of congratulations to the Forbey foursome. That letter will be tabled in the Legislature today at the appropriate time.

An Hon. Member: It's Ferbey.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It's the Polish way of pronouncing Ferbey.

Mr. Speaker, this Brier win is all the more exceptional because it happened in front of a hometown crowd right here in Edmonton. Let's congratulate them on behalf of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Great Kids Awards

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today and recognize Alberta's Great Kids. I had the honour of attending the sixth annual Great Kids award ceremony yesterday afternoon. Premier and Mrs. Klein and the hon. Minister of Children's Services presented awards to 19 outstanding Alberta children and youth for making a difference at home and in their communities. Mr. Speaker, I was so impressed by the broad spectrum of talented recipients that were represented, each one an inspiration to everyone around them.

These Great Kids were selected from among 181 nominations. As the chair of the Youth Secretariat I was privileged to sit on the selection committee this year, and I can tell you that the quality of applications was beyond imagination. We are blessed to have so many excellent young people contributing in so many important ways in our province.

This year's awards make a total of 100 Great Kids honoured across Alberta just in time for Alberta's centennial year. As the Premier said yesterday: it's a great time to imagine what amazing things all of these kids will do in the next 100 years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

2:40 Alaina Smith

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to recognize an outstanding Albertan from Bonnyville. Alaina Smith is one of the recipients of this year's Great Kids awards.

Beginning in her grade 10 year, Alaina worked diligently to host a conference for young women in the Northern Lights school division. This conference, which brought in speakers from across the country, encouraged young women to pursue nontraditional careers, engage in positive risk taking, build support networks, and take an active role in their schools and communities. Alaina spent over 300 volunteer hours in making her vision a reality. The conference was an outstanding success.

Mr. Speaker, I believe one of her teachers, Heather Bartling, explained why Alaina is so deserving of this award when she said, "Alaina Smith is the type of kid that exemplifies what this award is all about by truly being a great kid." I could not agree more.

Congratulations, Alaina.

National RCMP Memorial Service

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the historical importance of the national memorial service at the Butterdome, which we all attended last Thursday, March 10. It was an historic occasion. The tragic deaths of four young RCMP constables elicited an unprecedented outpouring of grief and sympathy by the people of Alberta and the people of Canada. The attendance of so many thousands of police officers and emergency services personnel was evidence of a tremendous loyalty and solidarity with their fellow officers.

We commend all of the organizers of this memorial service. We commend the city of Edmonton for its handling of all the logistics of such a large event. We commend the Premier for his remarks, his sensitivity, and understanding. We applaud the families for sharing with us their memories and hopes.

Above all, we commend the RCMP. Repeating the words of Commissioner Zaccardelli, we say to all of the men and women of the RCMP, "Our community, our country grieves with you and commits that we will never forget."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Alyse Geiger

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year Children's Services honours outstanding children and youth who make positive contributions to their families, schools, and communities. Today on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud I wish to recognize Alyse Geiger, a recipient of the Great Kids award. She's a 13-year-old student attending Vernon Barford junior high school, which is located in his constituency.

As a student Alyse has exemplified amazing citizenship skills and is an outstanding youth role model and mentor in building her community and at school. Her qualities in leadership, her passion, her selflessness, and her strong spirit of service are an inspiration to her schoolmates, friends, and community. As well, Alyse is an outstanding youth ambassador for Parkinson's disease.

In the two years Alyse has been involved with the annual Superwalk for Parkinson's, an annual national event, she has raised thousands of dollars for support services and research and has helped to increase awareness of the challenges of living with this disease. She is fully aware of the devastating effects of Parkinson's disease as her grandfather has had this disease over the past 20 years.

In her first year of fundraising she raised a remarkable $1,400. In the second year she raised $8,741. Out of the 74 national Superwalk for Parkinson's events held across Canada Alyse was recognized as the top under-18 fundraising student in Canada. I'm pleased to report that Alyse's fundraising for 2005 is well under way.

This young lady is a true example of someone who takes great pride in giving back to her community. She's a credit to her parents, her family, her school, and her community. It's an honour to recognize Alyse Geiger, a truly Great Kid truly deserving of this award.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Tim Hortons Brier

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to congratulate all the people involved in putting together the Tim Hortons Brier in Edmonton. A special recognition must go to the hundreds and hundreds of volunteers who made this event successful. This is a testament to Edmonton's as well as the province's love of curling. People came from all across the country to watch this week's set of draws, and the city of Edmonton put on a real showcase of hospitality for everyone.

I also would like to congratulate Alberta's rink, skipped by Randy Ferbey – I think this time it's right – who has accomplished an amazing feat, winning four Briers in the past five years. This is truly an Alberta dynasty. Congratulations to the Brier champions and to all of those who made this event successful and memorable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

U of A Pandas Hockey Team

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to recognize the University of Alberta women's hockey team. Following their fourth straight Canada West women's hockey conference title, the seventh in team history, the Pandas captured the silver medal at the Canadian interscholastic women's hockey championship in Montreal yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, their loss in the gold medal game was their first after an astonishing 110 straight victories. They are to be congratulated for their dedication, commitment, and athletic achievement. They are an exceptional group of highly skilled individuals, who serve as role models for young aspiring players, and we look forward to more exciting games in the future.

On behalf of the Minister of Community Development and all members of this House we extend our congratulations to coach Howie Draper and the entire Pandas hockey team for continuing a rich tradition of athletic excellence at the University of Alberta.

Speaker's Ruling

Recognitions

Referring to a Member by Name

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move to the next order, just a couple of comments because of the notes that I've just recently received. First of all, recognitions are one minute. The chair did not intervene today out of respect for the quality of the presentations, at least the subject of the presentations. There will be occasions where members will go beyond one minute, and members will really totally dislike what one hon. member is saying. So the reason for intervention and the reason for one minute is to basically give you total freedom for whatever you want to say but only within one minute. But, please, there's a risk associated with this.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the chair interjected during the question period when the hon. member stood up and used the name of a member of this Assembly, and that was correct for the chair to do that. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul used the name of the wife. Our rules do not prohibit that. So that should avoid those kinds of messages coming forth with respect to that kind of a question as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, sir. I move that we move this bill onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to request leave to introduce Bill 23, the Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005.

This new legislation will clarify the jurisdiction of all boards and tribunals relating to questions of constitutional law and will greatly reduce court challenges on this basis. The act provides that no board has the jurisdiction to determine questions of constitutional law unless jurisdiction is conferred by regulation. The act also provides a mechanism for boards to refer questions of constitutional law to the court where the court is a better forum to decide the question. The act is expected to streamline the regulatory process and help boards get on with business.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 24
Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005.

This bill makes several amendments to the Fatality Inquiries Act arising from a review and stakeholder consultation completed in 2003. Stakeholders told us where the system could be enhanced, and we are taking this opportunity to benefit from their experience. New provisions in this bill will clarify and improve the fatality inquiries process from the time a death occurs to the release of the judge's final report. The inquiry judge's recommendations after a public fatality inquiry can provide important information for preventing future fatalities in this province. Amendments will ensure that a judge's report will be publicly available.

Bill 25
Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 25, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005.

This amendment will allow judges to retire and then be appointed to sit full-time for six months of the year. A major benefit will be that highly experienced and competent judges will be attracted to continue serving in our justice system after retirement. To be eligible for part-time service a judge must be at least 60 years of age with a minimum of 10 years' service or age 70 or older. Appointments for judges over the age of 70 would be for one-year terms, which would be renewable for additional one-year terms to the age of 75. The amendment is the result of our work with the Provincial Court to develop new ways to improve the justice system.

Bill 203
Report on Alberta's Legacy Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 203, the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act.

Bill 204
Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting)
Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 204, being the Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005.

The purpose of Bill 204 is to make it more difficult to obtain amphetamine and methamphetamine by classifying these drugs as schedule 2 under the Pharmacy and Drug Act.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table one copy of one complete set of audited financial statements of school jurisdictions for the year ended August 31, 2003. One set weighs about five pounds, so the additional copies, as required, have already been filed and provided to the Clerk's office.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take this opportunity to table in the Assembly today five copies of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research 2005 calendar with the 2003-04 financial highlights and the consolidated audited financial statements for 2003-04. A copy of this document has been sent directly to all members of the Legislature from the foundation.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise before the House today and table five copies of the 2005 Alberta guide to fishing regulations. Awareness and understanding of the rules of sport fishing are essential to the wise use of Alberta's fisheries resources. These guides are also available upon request from licence issuers and fish and wildlife officers throughout the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the Fourth Session of the 25th Legislature, covering the committee's activities in 2004.

The second tabling I have is for the benefit of all members of the House. These are taped conversations of Enron employees in regard to Project Stanley and other matters, and these are dated through 1999. It would be of great interest to all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is bringing forward concerns around prompt and thorough investigation of complaints against physicians by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, including concerns about monitoring, discipline, disclosure, public access, and public warning of high-risk physicians. That's from Gloria Campbell, of Edmonton, and I'll table the appropriate number of copies.

My second tabling is from Ruth Hanna-Fath of Vulcan, who notes that the Vulcan hospital has gone from 37 beds to 25 beds to 15 long-term care and 8 active-care beds. She is proposing that they look at adding wings for long-term care patients and switching the 15 long-term care to active acute-care use in Vulcan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required number of copies of letters addressed by the Premier to Randy Ferbey, congratulating him and his teammates on their fabulous win yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five letters here, each with five copies, from a stack of letters I have, all handwritten. They are from Albertans that have a great deal of concern about the issue of foreign replacement workers. Interestingly enough, just looking at them, they're all from the ridings of government members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence from a gentleman by the name of Ted Frederickson, who lives in Strathmore, Alberta. He is writing to express his grave concerns about the issue of Métis hunting rights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the program from the national memorial service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a study entitled "Reduced incidence of admissions for myocardial infarction associated with . . . smoking ban," and it shows a significant association between workplace smoking bans and a reduction in heart attacks.

The second is called The Economic Impact of a Smoke-free Bylaw on Restaurant and Bar Sales in Ottawa, Canada. It shows that there is no evidence of any adverse effect on bar and restaurant sales associated with the smoke-free workplaces bylaw in Ottawa.

Finally, I would like to table a press release from the New York city department of health and mental hygiene citing an increase of 1,500 jobs in the first four months after the introduction of smoke-free workplace legislation in that city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 201
Smoke-free Places Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. members. Good afternoon, everyone. It is a pleasure to rise today as I move second reading of Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. As chair of AADAC and as one of the many new faces in this House it's an honour to bring forward Bill 201 as my first piece of legislation and as the first private member's bill of the First Session of the 26th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, we are in Alberta's centennial year and are in the midst of a rejuvenation of Alberta's call for a prosperous and healthy future for all Albertans. Bill 201 reflects this intent, specifically with respect to the commitment that this government has made to an effective and successful tobacco reduction strategy. This strategy was introduced in 2002 and provided AADAC with the mandate to lead and co-ordinate tobacco reduction efforts on behalf of the government of Alberta. AADAC co-ordinates the strategy through partnerships with various government ministries, agents, and community organizations.

Mr. Speaker, studies indicate that tobacco use is the leading cause of preventable disease and death in Canada. Smoking causes cancer, lung disease, heart disease, and many health problems.

On March 3 Statistics Canada released the Canadian Tobacco Use Monitoring Survey, results on smoking rates in Alberta and Canada for the first half of 2004. The good news is that the results indicated that the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy is working. The overall smoking rate in the province declined from 25 per cent in 2001 to 20 per cent in 2003. That said, we now have the opportunity to complement the tobacco reduction strategy and address the significant issue of second-hand smoke.

Second-hand smoke is a serious health concern for a number of Albertans. AADAC reports that two-thirds of the smoke from a burning cigarette is not inhaled by the smoker but goes directly into the surrounding environment. Studies indicate that second-hand smoke has twice as much nicotine and tar as the smoke that smokers inhale. It also has five times the carbon monoxide, and 50 of its 4,000 chemicals are known to cause cancer. These chemicals are inhaled and absorbed by nonsmokers when they are exposed to second-hand smoke and can lead to respiratory disease, heart disease, and lung cancer.

Children are particularly vulnerable to second-hand smoke because their lungs are still growing and developing. Children who are exposed to second-hand smoke can develop respiratory diseases such as bronchitis and pneumonia as well as middle-ear disease and asthma. Infants who are regularly exposed to second-hand smoke before birth are at increased risk of sudden infant death syndrome.

Mr. Speaker, I have received over 1,200 letters and e-mails in the past few weeks from Albertans, and over 90 per cent are in support of a province-wide smoking ban in work and public places. Eighty-four of 353 Alberta municipalities have some form of nonsmoking law, but 78 per cent of Albertans are currently exposed to second-hand smoke in public places such as restaurants, bars, shopping malls, arenas, bingo halls, and bowling alleys. Importantly, 80 per cent of Albertans do not smoke.

Bill 201 isn't just about protecting the health of individuals who work in the hospitality industry and may be exposed to substantial amounts of second-hand smoke; it also protects the health of every Albertan who is involuntarily exposed to second-hand smoke in an enclosed public or workplace, independent of the amount of exposure. According to AADAC approximately 350 nonsmokers die each year from second-hand smoke-related cancer, and approximately 3,500 people die from second-hand smoke-related heart disease. Mr. Speaker, these numbers are alarming, but what I find even more alarming is that these numbers are simply not new. The harmful effects of second-hand smoke have been known for almost 20 years, but the majority of jurisdictions are acting only now.

The majority of economic impact studies indicate that legislation prohibiting second-hand smoke in hospitality venues does not negatively impact sales and employment over the long term. For example, when the city of Ottawa, the state of California, and the country of Ireland introduced smoke-free legislation, business dropped off slightly for about three months in the hospitality industry, but it was quickly back to normal, and in Boston business actually increased.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other dangers in society that individuals are involuntarily exposed to both now and in the past. Some examples include lead in paint and asbestos in construction. These substances were and remain serious hazards to the health of children and adults, but once they were recognized as a danger to the well-being of individuals, they were designated as hazardous substances, their usage was discontinued, or it was carefully regulated.

Second-hand smoke is a hazard to the health of Albertans, and while the minority of the population who smoke are free to put their own health at risk, they should not have the right to put the health of others at risk. Thankfully, we're in a position to set the standards for the next hundred years of this great province, and I believe that recognizing second-hand smoke as a preventable health hazard and limiting its involuntary exposure are small steps towards protecting the health and future of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my introductory remarks, I'll address just some of the terms used in Bill 201. When discussing this legislation, the terms "public space" and "workplace" will often be used, and I am sure that the exact definitions of these terms will be examined thoroughly in the Committee of the Whole debate. However, I'd like to provide a few examples of what those terms mean as defined in 201.

As expected, Bill 201 would make any enclosed public space or enclosed workplace a hundred per cent smoke free, and this includes outdoor eating and drinking areas, such as restaurant and bar patios. Bill 201 would also allow municipalities the right to implement more stringent anti-smoking bylaws should they see fit. This legislation would set a minimum standard throughout the province and provide a reasonable level playing field or equal economic footing for all businesses and municipalities.

As I mentioned, the definitions and specifics of Bill 201 will be more thoroughly discussed during the Committee of the Whole debate. I just wanted to highlight a few points that I felt were important.

In conclusion, the ill effects of second-hand smoke were first documented almost 20 years ago, and we can no longer ignore the health risks and costs it presents. The time to act is now, and I encourage all members to carefully contemplate Bill 201. I hope they will agree that this legislation is trying to accomplish the best for our people, and I trust that they will lend their support. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I do look forward to this upcoming debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

If additional members want to participate, would you let me know?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Official Opposition critic for Health and Wellness I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak as the second speaker in second reading for Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. I'm very pleased that we have got to the place where we are today because I'll tell you that for a while there I was really worried we weren't going to get here, so I'm delighted that we've made it all this way. Originally this came up in the public's eye with the Premier speaking in context of his new third way and the Minister of Health and Wellness taking a leap of faith and saying: well, then, let's look at a smoking ban. I commend her for doing that. Then it became a very public debate with the Premier saying, no, he wasn't in favour of that.

If we look in context of the information that's available to us on smoking and exposing workers to second-hand smoke in the workplace, we can see that Alberta has not been coming up to the mark in protecting its workers and protecting Albertans. In fact, I think we got a failing report card on health that was put out by the coalition of—no, I'm not going to get that title right. It's a coalition of groups that worked for smoke-free workplaces, and we failed in having smoke-free workplaces, we failed in having smoke-free public places, and I think we didn't do very well on the retail display marketing and didn't do very well with having pharmacies not selling. So we really scored pretty badly there.

Around the issue of display, which I think is not addressed in this bill—and maybe there's a way to work it in in an amendment because it would certainly strengthen the bill if we could address the displaying and advertising, but particularly the displaying, at locations where cigarettes are sold, their ability to display cigarettes and cigarette advertising prominently. In fact, in Saskatchewan they had their bill struck down. They were trying to argue that it was freedom of speech to be able to advertise and display smoking products, and that, in fact, was struck down, Mr. Speaker. So if I can do any encouraging here to the sponsoring member, perhaps we can look at an amendment in Committee of the Whole to strengthen the bill even further.

I think the bill is strong, and I am glad to see that thus far it has not been watered down. I'm glad to see that it's a complete ban on smoking in the workplace and a complete ban on smoking in public places. So really the only place where the government does not come into it—and they shouldn't—is in private residences and private vehicles.

Staying on the idea of the studies that we've had and somewhat in refuting the Premier's comments when he first stepped into this debate, certainly every credible scientific study that has ever been done says that smoking is harmful to your health and so is second-hand smoke. What I came into this debate with was that, you know, you have to protect all workers, paid and unpaid. Why do I say unpaid? Because when we look at casinos and bingos, we have a lot of volunteers there, a lot of moms and dads out there earning money for amateur hockey. We've got arts and cultural groups. We've got health groups, for heaven's sake, and support organizations and friends-of-groups where their volunteers are subjected to second-hand smoke in casinos and bingos, and they should be treated with no less protection than a paid worker in my opinion.

When I heard that, oh, well, maybe there were going to be all kinds of variations of this and we might protect workers in some places but not protect workers in others, I thought to myself: how can that be? How can you justify protecting workers from a known problem, a known health hazard, in one area but not protect them in another area? Just to put this in context, insert the word "asbestos." Well, yeah, we're going to protect workers from asbestos, which we know to be a known health hazard in this occupation, but not if they happen to work in a bar or in a casino or in a bingo hall. Excuse me? No, no. You have to protect all workers equally. You cannot differentially protect workers based on their workplace. You have to protect them all, and this bill has come through to do that.

The other issue touched on briefly by the sponsor of the bill—and I think it's a very important one—is that we have an unlevel playing field right now. The municipalities stepped in where the province was not and gave themselves some restrictions, and those are different restrictions. We can even have some circumstances like Lloydminster, where the Saskatchewan half is nonsmoking and the Alberta half across the street is smoking, and that very much creates an unlevel playing field, particularly for small businesses. The Alberta Liberals have been known for a long time for being supporters of small business, and I just do not want to see anybody put in that position.

There was an example in the standing policy committee, in which I was only allowed to be an observer of course, that was raised where they said, "Oh, well, you know, it has impacted differentially on the casinos in Ottawa," and the question was raised: "Was there an equal smoking ban in Hull? Well, no." Well, that creates the unlevel playing field then. All they had to do was walk across the bridge, and they could gamble and smoke all they wanted. So, of course, it impacted negatively. You've got to have a level playing field there, and that means a complete smoking ban. That's what makes it fair.

I know that there was some talk at one point of having designated ventilated smoking rooms in some areas, but what you've got to think of there is that that door opens and closes. I worked with one woman that worked in a hospital wing where smoking was allowed. She was at the nursing station, and the ventilated smoking area was right across from her. Well, of course, every time somebody came in or out, whoosh, a great big puff of second-hand smoke came at her. She wasn't being protected from that second-hand smoke even though it was a special designated room. She got a gust of it every time that door opened. So that's the problem with the designated smoking rooms. Those doors open and close, and the air still gets out.

I am personally very supportive of what I see being brought forward in Bill 201. This is a private member's bill, and the Alberta Liberals insist on free votes for their members on private members' motions and bills. There's no whip on in our caucus. I as the critic have made a recommendation to my colleagues that they should support this bill as it is, and a number of them have already signed up to speak to it. I encouraged them strongly to support the bill, but as I said, it is a free vote on our side.

I think that the member has done a good job here, and I certainly hope that we're not going to see anything like a reasoned amendment or a hoist, which would take the bill off into the ozone never to be seen again. I think it's important especially for the 80 per cent of Albertans that don't smoke and, further beyond that, for those that are interested in having smoke-free workplaces to see how their MLAs are going to represent them here. I hope that we will be able to actually reach a vote in second reading, which is commenting on the principle of the bill, and, furthermore, be able to take this bill through Committee of the Whole and, indeed, into third reading.

A couple of things that again I'm hoping to see, just a few small issues to be raised. Perhaps the member could think about it. You know, in section 11 it's not clear, if in fact the municipal bylaws are stronger than what is anticipated in the bill or, heaven forbid, if this bill got watered down a bit and then we had a number of municipal bylaws that were stronger, whether this bill would trump the municipal bylaws. I think we have to be very careful there. If there's stronger stuff in place, that should be able to stand. Perhaps we'd want to look at some fine-tuning of the language there.

The second thing is around section 14, the commencement, the act coming into force on proclamation. I'm a little uneasy about that because this section is standard in government bills, but in a private member's bill it allows the government to stall on proclaiming it, and I will give you a reference on that. In fact, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act was passed in 1999 but not proclaimed by the government until 2003, Mr. Speaker. So I'd like to see that given a specific date for proclamation, and then we would all know that it would happen. The government has been very involved in this private member's bill, and I'm a little uneasy that they would continue to stay involved and would somehow be playing around with the proclamation date. I think that if this passes second, Committee of the Whole, and third and it's passed by members in this House, it should in fact get a definitive proclamation date.

So I'm very pleased to have the time that I did. I speak in favour of second reading on Bill 201. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 201, and I'd like to bring perhaps a slightly different perspective to the discussion.

Going back several years now, the government of Alberta had made a decision to encourage municipalities to deal with this issue. The belief then and now, from my perspective, was that local authorities had a better ability to reflect the values, needs, and wants of their residents as it pertains to this issue. Mr. Speaker, municipalities have done an amazing job, whether by smoking bans, smoking bylaws, or ordinances on specific buildings. From the figures provided to me, between 2.4 million and 2.7 million Albertans are currently covered by some sort of smoking restriction.

That reaps the question, Mr. Speaker: who would we be passing this law for? I'd like everybody to think about that. Would we be passing it for our First Nations? I have a real and significant doubt that a provincial law would apply to a First Nations reservation. Perhaps we would be passing it for the 52,000 farmers and their families in this province. Maybe it's for the thousands of acreage holders in the province, or perhaps it's for some of the smaller summer villages with 20 or 30 homes in them.

I have great respect for this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. It is our role to pass laws, but I would sincerely hope that when we are passing them, we would make them meaningful. I think this is a bandwagon bill; let's all get on the bandwagon and do something that is already pretty much being done by our colleagues in the municipalities. Someone does a poll that says that 70 per cent of the people think there should be a province-wide smoking ban, and I ask you: on what is it based? Was the poll done on the basis that people knew that the vast majority of residents, such as in Edmonton and Calgary, were already covered by a smoking ban? Or was it, in fact, another example of statistics being used to come to a conclusion that we want them to?

I remember similar polls being done on the gun registry. Sixty-eight per cent of Albertans believed that we needed a gun registry. It was a great big headline, Mr. Speaker, and I'm equally confident that the majority of people polled didn't know that there were already gun laws in place and that the gun laws pertained to controlling the purchasing and transporting of most guns, nor did they know that it would cost a billion dollars and that it wouldn't work.

Sixty-nine per cent of Albertans were in favour of the Kyoto protocol, which is an amazing consistency in numbers about polling data, Mr. Speaker. Having said that, there was a campaign of fear generated by environmental groups indicating that without the Kyoto protocol we would probably cease to exist, no recognition of a growing economy, our standard of living, or in fact that Alberta had been leading Canada in the control of emissions for years. Now the feds are telling us that Kyoto will likely cost $10 billion to implement, and no one knows if it will work.

So here we are again with similar polling data, and now all we want to do is pass yet another law. The bill would in fact be a major shift in government policy, which was to let municipalities make this call after due consideration. I remind all members of the House that this is a private member's bill, not a government bill. The minister of health is working on a wellness strategy, which I would hope smoking cessation would be part of.

In the October municipal election the residents of Airdrie voted for a smoking ban. They had two options on the ballot, and they voted in favour of the stricter law. At the same time, in Peace River the community there defeated an outright ban. Different communities, different results, both totally democratic. Now we come along and say to the residents of Airdrie: "Well, well done. Would you mind terribly if we passed yet another law over top of the one you already have? It won't mean anything. It won't change anything for you, but we'll do it anyway." Better yet, we say to Peace River: "Well, democracy is all well and fine, but you guys must have been wrong. We gave you a chance to decide. You blew it. You chose poorly, so here's our law. Enjoy it."

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if we all stopped trying to make every decision for every Albertan every day and instead focused on what we really want to do, which is to encourage Albertans to stop smoking – I also think it's even more important to prevent our youth from ever starting. If this bill were more focused on that side of the coin rather than on this all-encompassing legislation, maybe I could support it. Perhaps we need to be responsible as a government and do our best to ensure that Albertans are aware of the dangers of smoking, working with the Lung Association and the SmartCare organization on cardio-obstructive pulmonary disease to help with the cessation programs, to help our youth understand that the downside does not apply to somebody else; it applies to them. Perhaps we could actually accomplish something here today other than frustrating the 25 per cent of Albertans who can still legally purchase this product, the vast majority of whom are already covered by a smoking ban.

We need to continue to educate Albertans on the dangers of smoking, particularly those in rural Alberta that are also exposed to other pollutants, such as grain dust, coal dust, emissions from the forestry, oil, and gas industries. I believe the COPD group would agree that in recognition of the problem in rural Alberta, we need to be more proactive in educating all of our residents.

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, I wish we would spend more time, well, even a moment's more time, talking about illegal drugs and what they are costing our society along with this issue and not just this issue in isolation. I worry when we as a society become so fixated on something that is already being controlled in so much of our province. The belief being, of course, that if we can just ban it, it will go away. Reality says that it won't, but education, from my perspective, is the key to this issue.

Section 7 of the Municipal Government Act gives councils the authority to pass bylaws for municipal purposes respecting protection of people and property as well as activities in or near public places or a place that is open to the public. If you want to pass a law protecting children, I will support your bill. If you want to regulate what an oil field worker does in Zama Lakes, Red Earth, or High Level, I won't. If you want to help people quit smoking and prevent young people from starting, I will support your bill. If you want to regulate what workers do in a feedlot, I won't support it. What works well in Edmonton and Calgary, Red Deer, Lethbridge, or Airdrie does not always work as well in our rural or remote areas. Our approach should focus on helping Albertans quit smoking and on preventing young people from ever starting.

I will support this bill as it goes into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker, and if amendments are forthcoming, I will look carefully at them at that time. If the changes are sufficient, I will in fact support it as it goes forward. As it stands right now, I could not support this bill in its current form going to third reading, but as I mentioned earlier, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 30 years of working in medical practice, I'm keenly interested in and supportive of this initiative. Let me say that having worked both in the Calgary scene and in Brooks and Medicine Hat, where we managed to get municipal bills relating to smoke-free spaces, it was a tremendous lot of work, a tremendous duplication in many instances, and in many cases a frustrating initiative for many participants with a lot of lost time and income. Indeed, many councillors in those jurisdictions indicated that they would have supported a provincial legislative bill in order to save them from the harangues and difficulties that went along with this.

Some of the issues that were raised by the previous speaker are legitimate. Yes, indeed, air quality, air pollution anywhere should be addressed in any work site, and the occupational health and safety standards are lacking in the area of second-hand smoke. They may be present in terms of other chemicals, and they must be addressed stringently in these and other areas.

With respect to polls in the province, people were asked, in fact, whether they supported a new bit of legislation that related to smoking in the workplace where it did not exist. Indeed, over 70 per cent of Albertans said that they wanted and supported legislation that would protect workers, workers of all ages, and indeed many are younger workers, Mr. Speaker, young adolescents and others who have no choice about where to work. So we are talking about protecting all age groups, including, may I say, the pregnant women who are working in these conditions and place their own and their unborn offspring at risk.

I would compare this legislation in the workplace to guaranteeing clean water and compare it to where people in airplanes simply are not allowed to smoke over the course of seven to eight hours at times and manage to do that without a great deal of suffering.

Indeed, the workers in the air industry are keenly supportive of this particular measure. A research report out of the British Medical Journal recently studied the effects over the course of one year of hospitalizations and deaths associated with the factor of environmental tobacco smoke. That report shows a very stark reminder that death is contributed to by environmental tobacco smoke.

Over 350 municipalities in Alberta are struggling with piecemeal legislation that creates, as we've heard, an unlevel playing field. That means others are struggling with benefits and risks to their businesses. It's clear that we've been asked by the people of Alberta to take some leadership here and along with five other provinces and territories in Canada follow the trend across the world to reduce risk to our workers. I stand very much in support of this bill and commend the hon. member for this introduction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I rise to speak to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. This is a very timely and important debate that we're going to have today and that will carry on I'm sure beyond today or the discussion even of this bill.

This issue, Mr. Speaker, is being discussed in every coffee shop in this province. This issue was a referendum in many municipal elections around the province in the last municipal election. One in particular in my constituency was where the town council was acclaimed. There was no need for anyone to vote, yet they had one of the highest turnout of voters in the history of the municipal elections in that community just to defeat a municipal bylaw similar to this. Regardless of how people feel, whether they're in support of this bill or opposed to this bill, whether they're advocating for choice and freedom, or whether they're advocating for the health of Albertans in general, everyone is passionate about this issue and takes a stand somewhere.

Before I move on to explain why I am opposing this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I find it very interesting and ironic in today's society, just in this country in general, that sometimes we seem to have funny priorities. We're discussing all over not just this province but this country about whether or not to ban smoking while at the same time we discuss whether or not we should legalize marijuana. We debate whether or not we should give needles to heroin addicts, but we don't have enough debate about whether or not we should give them to people who have diabetes.

Mr. Speaker, I was a teacher before I ever became a politician, and I had many discussions with parents, with colleagues about parenting. I would like to use that as an analogy for why I think this is the wrong approach to this bill. Many of my colleagues agreed with me when we discussed it that there are generally two types of parents. There are parents who make decisions for their children all the time because they really don't want them to get hurt. They don't allow them to make simple decisions, so they never evolve to making complex decisions. Those children very rarely ever graduate to taking on responsibility and understanding the consequences of the choices that they make. The other types of parents typically give decisions to children that are small, and they graduate to larger and more complex decisions. Those decisions that are made lead the child to acquire more of a sense of responsibility and a sense of the consequences for the decisions that they make.

With rights and freedoms and choice come responsibilities. Now, Mr. Speaker, that's why I oppose this bill. The entire premise of this bill is that the government knows what's good for everybody. We should try and deter people from smoking; we should tell them what they can and cannot do. But when you do that, you take away people's freedoms, their rights, and their responsibilities. And, of course, that is an issue, but that's not the sole issue.

Some people in this Assembly are going to argue that this is about freedom of choice. That's part of it, but it's not the complete picture. Freedom of choice is important to give people because then they learn consequences and responsibility. If we're going to make everyone's decision for them, perhaps we should discuss some other issues. Of course smoking is unhealthy, and so we want no one to smoke because it costs the health care system a lot. It's expensive for public health. But, Mr. Speaker, hanging out around in back alleys at 3 o'clock in the morning is also unhealthy, golfing in the rain is unhealthy, not getting enough sleep is very unhealthy, not eating properly is very unhealthy, and not exercising is unhealthy. How much should we make illegal?

Now, I'm not just talking about the back alley instance, but eating is unhealthy. Perhaps in the interest of public health and safety, we should legislate the amount and type of food that we can eat according to the Canada food guide. I know many people who are overweight who eat extremely unhealthily, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps they should be told when, where, and how much they can eat. Obesity is reaching epidemic proportions. It costs the health care system more money than smoking, and it costs more lives in this country than smoking does. It causes heart disease, stroke, diabetes, and countless other ailments that cost the health care system incredible amounts of money. If we're going to tell people what they can and can't do and what is good for them, why don't we address the issue of obesity?

Mr. Speaker, the intent of this legislation is to deter people from smoking, to make it more difficult. The conservative approach to this would be not to tell people what they can't do but rather ensure that the consequences for their choices are very evident.

If we're worried about WCB premiums and the liability that they might face from smoking in the workplace, we have to remember that WCB is insurance and that insurance premiums are supposed to reflect risk. If the risk is increased from allowing smoking in the workplace, the people who own that business should pay higher WCB insurance premiums for allowing that to happen.

Health care premiums. I mentioned obesity. I mentioned a lot of different issues, Mr. Speaker. When you get life insurance – and I think most people in this Assembly have life insurance – you know that they swab your mouth, and they can tell if you have smoked within the last year. They did it to me. I had to do it. Why can't health care premiums reflect whether or not you are a high risk because you smoke? Why can't health care premiums reflect a higher risk if you're overweight? There is a body mass index ratio that some insurance companies use to determine whether or not you're in shape, whether you eat too much, whether you don't get enough exercise. Perhaps we could charge premiums based on whether or not you smoke, based on body mass index, based on a health report from a doctor, based on a lot of different issues that would encourage people to make their own decisions.

Some suggestions for real reform I've just made, and I hope those are dealt with in the future. I could support this bill if it dealt with a couple of the primary issues which would be government's responsibility, Mr. Speaker. That's places where children can go. I could support this if that was the intent of the bill instead of dealing with everybody and telling them what they could and could not do.

Mr. Speaker, when the amendments come forward, if there's some discussion, I could also support something that still allows adults to determine when and where they'll smoke. I hope that all of these things are considered and, until they are, I'm afraid I cannot support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of this bill, and I think that it's one that should not have arguments that trivialize its importance, you know, that show that this Legislature is willing to take leadership on this issue and to get away from the hodgepodge of regulations, all of which deal with smoking and are different and make it difficult for businesses that are looking to invest in certain industries in our province.

It is a workplace issue, and as the critic for Human Resources and Employment I'm pleased to speak for this. People must work. The government is quick to say that a job is the best social program, but there are people with asthma; there are people with other respiratory problems; there are people who just can't stand smoke. Many people are kept away from their ability to advance in our society because there is no way to stop smoking in places where they would like to work.

There are those who would say: just don't work where there is smoking. Mr. Speaker, many people just don't have a choice of the place where they can work. Many don't have the power to say that there shouldn't be smoking around them, and, yes, there are those who will not respect those who ask that they do not smoke while they are in fact working. That is why we must have a law that has some teeth and that it must be respected.

The point that should be emphasized here is the need for a smoke-free workplace. Society is moving quickly on smoking. Knowledge of the harm to individuals from smoking is clear. Knowledge of the cost to the health care system is widespread. Knowledge of the harm to families from smoking-related early deaths is saddening. But it is the workplace where the challenges are growing. If the government doesn't move soon on the issue, I expect that we will begin to see huge insurance liability issues, a greater WCB liability, or a call from business to move on this issue to ensure a safe and productive working environment. Many businesses already have strict anti-smoking provisions in their workplace.

Some questions must be posed. One is: do workplace bans really work in protecting employees? According to a joint study by the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, and the Roswell Park Cancer Institute, workplace smoking bans really do work in improving the air quality and protecting employees. In July 2003 New York state introduced a ban on smoking in indoor workplaces and public places. According to the study, the ban greatly improved the quality of reduced exposure to second-hand smoke. Other findings from the study:

Partial measures such as cordoning off smoking areas from nonsmoking areas or installing a more powerful ventilation system are not the answer, Roswell's Hyland said.

That's Andrew Hyland, PhD, a researcher at the Buffalo-based Roswell Park Cancer Institute in the State University of New York and one of the authors of the study findings.

“[Employers are] fooling themselves if they think that’s going to be an effective solution. It doesn’t provide protection from a known human carcinogen in the workplace. If they endorse a policy that allows smoking in the workplace, potentially I could see they’re opening themselves up to litigation,” he said.

Workplace smoking bans have an indirect benefit, he said.

“Smokers who work in an environment that’s smoke-free are more likely to quit [smoking]. There are other studies that show smokers have decreased productivity – extra time taken on smoke breaks, increased sick days, increased health care costs,” he said.

Another question is: do smoking bans hurt business? In the long run the only business that smoke-free regulations hurt is the tobacco business. According to the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene:

In 1998, all of California’s restaurants and bars went smoke-free. According to the California Board of Equalization, sales at places selling beer, wine, and liquor increased every quarter in 1998, 1999 and into 2000 (the last period for which data are available). What’s more, sales increases at these establishments outpaced – by nearly 8% – increases at all other types of retail outlets.

Experience shows that support for a ban grows among bar patrons once a ban is in place. The experience in other jurisdictions is that once a workplace smoking ban is in place, support for it grows among the patrons. Again according to the New York Department of Health and Mental Hygiene:

Smoke-free workplace legislation has become increasingly popular. While 65% of bar patrons in California “strongly” or “somewhat” approved of the law in 1998, almost three-quarters (73%) felt that way by 2000. Also by 2000, 87% of bar patrons in California reported they were “as likely” or “more likely” to visit bars since they had become smoke-free.

A province-wide workplace smoking ban could be even beneficial to business. Businesses with smoke-free policies experience less absenteeism when nonsmoking employees are no longer exposed to second-hand smoke, Mr. Speaker, which can trigger asthma attacks and other respiratory illnesses. Employers also see lower house-keeping and maintenance costs because they longer need to clean ashtrays, they no longer need to sweep up cigarette butts, and they have a much cleaner workplace. We don’t allow smoking here in the Legislature where we work, Mr. Speaker, in the Assembly. They don’t have to replace burnt carpeting or clean fabrics and other materials nearly as often. In addition to the cost benefits, studies show that smoke-free policies reduce costs for cleaning and fire insurance and there is less damage to equipment and furniture.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

It is often argued that service industry businesses such as restaurants, bars, and hotels will suffer if smoke-free policies are introduced. However, studies in Canada, the United States, and Australia all show that smoking bans do not result in lost business.

What about designated smoking rooms? The problem with designated smoking rooms is that they still do in fact give workers who are working in those places the need to work in those designated smoking rooms.

It’s clear that it’s time to move on a cost-effective, full workplace ban, and the time is now. It’s time for a cleaner and healthy workplace in all areas of our great province. It’s time to end the cop-out, the hiding from this issue, that has constantly been the position that’s been taken by the government of Alberta. It’s time to end the patchwork of municipal bylaws and come out with a strong law that deals with the problem, that makes it simpler for people to deal with investing in the different areas of Alberta and not have somebody just working on smoking regulations.

I urge the government to act quickly and decisively, and I urge the members of this Assembly to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak on Bill 201. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing this piece of legislation forward. Health promotion bills like this will always encourage Albertans to become the healthiest people in the country.

For a long time smoking was considered an acceptable, even desirable act. We can still watch reruns of old movies on TV and see the favourite Hollywood stars inhaling cigarettes with passion and drama. Without a doubt such scenes led to people lighting up cigarettes and imitating the stars.

As science progressed, however, we began to learn that smoking is actually very dangerous. In addition to this, we discovered that second-hand smoke is also bad for our health. The research into this harmful effect has produced a slow but steady change in attitude toward smoking and second-hand smoke and has caused legislators to respond to this attitude by creating laws that limit the effect of second-hand smoke. Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is late but necessary to respond to the harmful effect of second-hand smoke.

I would like to spend a few minutes talking about how science has changed the attitudes of people in the United States of America and how it relates to Alberta. About 50 years ago evidence started surfacing about cigarette smoking causing harm to people’s health. Then in 1964 the first Surgeon General’s Report on Smoking and Health was released. This report stated that “cigarette smoking causes cancer and other serious diseases.” This major announcement began the transition in people’s attitudes toward smoking, but it did not lead to any legislative changes.

In 1986 the U.S. Surgeon General published another report, and this report was about the association between second-hand smoke exposure and the adverse effect of it on nonsmokers. Next, the Expert Committee on Passive Smoking concluded that second-hand smoke could cause lung cancer in otherwise healthy adult nonsmokers. In 1992 the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency released a study which confirmed the Surgeon General’s report which was released in 1986. This report released by the Environmental Protection Agency led to the classification of second-hand smoke as a group A carcinogen, which is the category reserved for only the most dangerous cancer-causing agents in humans.

Mr. Speaker, after so many studies and announcements there are no longer any doubts about the harmful effects of second-hand smoke. The science behind it is over 50 years old. We all know that cigarette smoke contains over 4,700 chemicals, over 200 poisons, and another 50 human carcinogens. As far back as 1993 an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association concluded that “waiters and waitresses have almost twice the risk of [contracting] lung cancer due to involuntary exposure” to second-hand smoke. Also in 1993 it was determined that second-hand smoke kills approximately 53,000 Americans per year. This is about the same number of Americans that were killed during the Vietnam War.

Mr. Speaker, during the timeline I discussed, not a single government in North America acted on these announcements and studies. The point I make is that although the science is proven and time tested, legislators have been reluctant to protect their constituents from these harmful effects. In fact, California was the first jurisdiction in North America to legislate a smoking ban. I used to live there, and my family members are still there. In 1994 the state of California passed a smoking law that prohibited smoking in all enclosed places of employment. This legislation was fully enacted in 1998 to include bars, clubs, and halls.

Mr. Speaker, California was the first jurisdiction in North America to take a stand against a killer. The legislation was fully implemented 34 years after a major announcement that smoking is dangerous and 12 years after it was announced that second-hand smoke is also dangerous. Here in Alberta legislation was not introduced to limit the harmful effects of second-hand smoke until 1997, 11 years after the announcement in the United States that second-hand smoke is dangerous. This legislation, however, was very limited in that it only protected workers who worked in public buildings that were owned and operated by the Crown.

The time to act in the interests of all Albertans is now. It's been 18 years since the very important health authority in the United States warned about the dangers of the effects of second-hand smoke. Long-term exposure to second-hand smoke leads to increased risks of lung cancer and coronary artery heart disease in nonsmokers as well as a number of other serious health conditions. According to statistics, people who live with smokers have an increased risk of heart disease by about 25 per cent. Imagine being a bartender or waiter who is exposed to 50 or 100 smokers for eight hours a day.

Mr. Speaker, about 347 nonsmokers die a year in Canada from second-hand smoke-related lung cancer and 3,470 from second-hand smoke-related heart disease. These numbers are too high. We are not talking about death from old age; we are not talking about death from accidents. We are talking about the worst kind of death, preventable death.

In Alberta about 27 per cent of people smoke. Unfortunately, we cannot force these people to stop smoking as we violate their rights. I can understand and support the protection of minorities and minority rights. I can understand the rights of smokers, but I can draw the line when those rights infringe upon the health of non-smoker constituents, when going to work means enduring cancerous poisons, when, while making a living, somebody else's habit may be contributing to your early death.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is a simple bill. By passing it, we will be contributing to the health of Albertans who do not smoke, and we will save the health care system from many unnecessary costs. With some luck, by reducing the places where people can smoke, we may even reduce the number of smokers. This is the root of the problem. Although Bill 201 is good because it will reduce the harmful effects of second-hand smoke, the real need is to reduce the number of people smoking.

To this end there exists a need for public investment in programs that help people to kick this dangerous habit. Besides education to prevent people from getting into smoking, I call for more public and private investment in programs helping smokers to kick this nicotine addiction habit and to replace it with something more healthy, perhaps healthy pleasures, I'll call it.

Another idea that works well is to increase the so-called sin tax on tobacco products. This way people still have the choice to smoke but may think twice when they realize how much smoking costs them. Furthermore, such a tax can help to pay for a program that helps to reduce smoking levels across the province. Such a program could be targeted at youth as a means of educating them about the harmful effects of smoking and the difficulty associated with addiction. Or money from the so-called sin tax could be used for the creation of smoking areas with proper ventilation or to set up environmental standards for smoke emissions in workplaces or giving Alberta a balance between the right of nonsmokers and smokers. After all, isn't it all about choices?

Mr. Speaker, we have 50 years of science telling us that smoking and second-hand smoke is deadly. Bill 201 proposes to do something about this fact. In principle I cannot oppose any legislation that deals with this effect, so I urge the members to support this bill in principle.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for taking the same heroic stand in political life as he did in his former private life. Being a fellow Calgary rookie, I appreciate his personal bravery in advocating such a strong, inclusive smoking ban despite the fact that he was chastened somewhat by his caucus for his eagerness and singular pursuit in the face of Everest-like obstacles.

This bill will not only save lives but millions of dollars in health care due to its proactive, preventative stance. This bill recognizes what the opposition proposed in our wellness motion 501, which advocated using $200 million annually from the $650 million of tobacco tax revenues. With this bill we would get rid of smoking in all public and workplaces, saving Albertans' lives. No one has the right to bring a concealed weapon into a public place, never mind discharge it, yet government members opposed to this bill are willing to put nonsmokers' lives at risk. If an individual wants to risk their own health, their suicidal choices shouldn't be allowed to put others' lives in danger. Cancer doesn't pick favourites; it's an equal opportunity killer both for first-hand smokers and second-hand smoke victims.

We have mandated the use of seat belts, which save lives and health care dollars. We have mandated helmets for children riding bicycles and for motorcyclists. This is a bill designed to protect Albertans' well-being. I look forward to the day that I can enjoy the music jams in bars and public places throughout the province without compromising my personal health.

I hope that government members will be permitted a free vote, which will parallel the 80 per cent demonstrated support of their constituents for an uncompromised, total smoking ban. Vote with your conscience. Vote for your constituents. Vote in favour of this proposed complete province-wide smoking ban.

Thank you, Member for Calgary-Lougheed, for your leadership. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and address my concerns with regard to this Smoke-free Places Act, Bill 201, tabled by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I certainly understand the health effects of smoking and the health effects of second-hand smoke. I don't dispute them. I support smoking restrictions, but I don't support Bill 201 as presented.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere alluded to a situation in Peace River. I'd like to use that situation to explain my viewpoint a little better. In October of 2004 the town of Peace River faced a plebiscite about a smoking bylaw. The proposed bylaw was a full ban on smoking in all workplaces, bars, restaurants, gaming establishments. It also extended to private residences where employees were in a home business. In fact, it extended outside of businesses, six metres outside the doorway of a business. The plebiscite was defeated not by a landslide but certainly by a healthy margin in large part, I believe, because it was viewed as a draconian measure even by a number of nonsmokers that I talked to.

The application to private residences was strongly resisted. The idea of banning smoking outside the doorway of a business was seen as almost ridiculous by many people. Certainly, the fact that businesses were liable for the actions of their customers was viewed as unreasonable. There was some fear in the community about the business impact to bars and gaming facilities and, therefore, to the nonprofit societies operating within the community.

It was a divisive and acrimonious battle, no doubt, but something positive, I believe, emerged once the dust settled. There actually was clear support for a bylaw that invoked smoking restrictions in the town of Peace River, just not one as draconian as the one proposed. First of all, the protection of children and the application to all businesses that admit children was actually strongly supported. There was, I believe, quite a bit of support for exempting bars and gaming facilities from that bylaw and certainly for exempting private residences from that bylaw.

I believe there's a lesson here. Certainly, there was one for the town of Peace River, but I think there's one for the province as well. I believe this tells us that choices are important and choices are different in different communities. In Peace River there was support for reasonable restrictions but little support for it to apply to bars and gaming facilities. I think that that stems from a recognition that some facilities are entered by choice, not by necessity. As I said, there was little support for the bylaw applying to private residences, and there was very strong concern expressed in the community about the impact on businesses.

Now, I recognize that there are studies, some tabled today, that show that there is little to no economic impact. I would suggest that there are other studies indicating otherwise. This is one of the fears I have. I echo the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. This is a bit of a bandwagon issue, and I resent the fact that studies that are tabled that show that there is an economic impact are virtually automatically labelled as noncredible, just as arguments against the smoking ban are labelled as trivial, as the Member for Edmonton-Manning just did. I resent that. I think that there's some reasonable middle ground here and that we should seek to find it. I believe that it's incumbent on us to seek to find it.

The other concern that arose in Peace River: there was little support for measures that would place an undue enforcement burden on the community. I think that we have enough burden on our communities as it is. As I said, there was strong support where access to children is involved. Overall, I believe there actually is strong support for a reasonable, tempered approach to a smoking bylaw in the town of Peace River, one that recognizes and respects choice, recognizes that private residences should not be involved, recognizes that the protection of children is of paramount importance, and recognizes that there is a financial burden or could be a financial burden on some businesses, especially rural ones. I believe that wherever possible we should allow businesses to decide what's good or bad for business, not the government.

I will support Bill 201 if amended to include these considerations, and I support it moving to Committee of the Whole for further consideration and discussion. In short, I will support a bill that lays down the basis to protect children in public places from exposure to second-hand smoke but allows local decision-making beyond that point.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my thanks and respect to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for having and demonstrating the courage of his convictions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. There is no question in my mind and certainly not any in those of the people that I've spoken to that this is primarily a health concern, and that's really the way we should be treating it. If this government is so hot on wellness, then I would ask the members opposite who are speaking against this bill today to please take that into careful consideration. There is simply no disputing the medical facts as they relate to the damage that smoking and second-hand smoke cause to those that are exposed to cigarette smoke.

By and large what I'm hearing from people across this province as I discuss this issue is also a question of fairness and consistency. I know it's been mentioned by a number of the other speakers this afternoon that when there's an imbalance in terms of the local municipal rules, you open up all sorts of problems and all sorts of unfairness to local businesses. We've had that example many, many times already today. I'm involved in several charities that work bingos and casinos, and they have serious concerns about the Edmonton smoking ban coming into force on July 1 and how that will impact them when people can drive to a community just outside Edmonton and practise their gaming in a facility that allows smoking.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity mentioned seat belt use, and I would just like to touch on that for a second. Many of the same arguments, Mr. Speaker, that we're hearing today about rural Alberta and farmers and oil field workers, and so forth, not necessarily being willing to comply with a smoking ban – those same arguments we heard very strongly several years ago when mandatory seat belt legislation was first introduced. I'm proud to say that today Alberta is shown to have some of the highest seat belt compliance rates anywhere in Canada. That includes rural Alberta. It includes the farmers and the oil field workers, and so forth. So peer pressure, as we know, can be surprisingly powerful. That's not only true of the teenagers that start smoking, but it's also true of the adults when we're trying to get them to stop smoking.

Mr. Speaker, I would certainly hope that this government is not as addicted to the revenues that it realizes from investing in tobacco companies as it sometimes appears to me that it is. Again, I certainly hope that the opposition members that are speaking out against this bill today are not taking that into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Fort alluded to the fact that there are literally thousands of deaths a year that are attributed either directly to the use of tobacco or the exposure to second-hand smoke. I would just like all members to ponder carefully that if the same sort of fatality rates were being seen, let's just say as an example, as a result of amusement rides, you can only imagine the outcry that there would be. I would use the argument that the Member for – I'm not sure.

An Hon. Member: Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. R. Miller: Battle River-Wainwright, thank you. It used to be called Wainwright, I think.

... that the Member for Battle River-Wainwright alluded to, and that is that people are doing this of their own free will. Well, most people will get on an amusement ride of their own free will, Mr. Speaker, yet if there were thousands of deaths a year on amusement rides, even though people got on those rides of their own volition and recognizing the risk, the outcry would be tremendous, I'm sure.

I would like to just reminisce for a second about my years at Strathcona composite high school. At that time there was a designated smoking stairwell, actually, Mr. Speaker. I was smart enough – perhaps I was one of those that the Member for Battle River-Wainwright was referring to – to avoid that stairwell like the plague because I recognized, as did many of the other students, that that stairwell was perhaps the most dangerous place in the whole school. We definitely made a point of using another way to get upstairs or downstairs.

Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I stepped outside to chat with a fellow who was a visitor in the public gallery today, and we were standing in the hallway by one of the ministers' offices. He was astounded at the smell of cigarette smoke emanating from that minister's office. He did not know and, I suspect, most Albertans do not know that smoking is allowed in this building, this Alberta Legislature, which is arguably one of the most public workplaces in all of Alberta. He was astounded at that, and as I said, I wouldn't be surprised if most Albertans don't find themselves fully aware of that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to applaud the initiative of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed in bringing this bill forward. I certainly support it at this stage and will continue to do so barring any major amendments that would water it down.

Thank you very much.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. Before us is a bill which is quite a contentious issue for the members of this Legislature and for the constituents that we represent.

The one area of this issue that we can all be in agreement on is that tobacco smoke, whether it be directly inhaled through smoking or through second-hand smoke, is a contributing cause of lung cancer, heart disease, and a large number of other health ailments and diseases. This is not up for debate. It has been proven time and time again that smoking is as dangerous for those who smoke as for those who are around people who smoke.

Is it right to move Bill 201 forward and enact a broad prohibition on smoking in all enclosed workplaces across this province? I think it is. As a government we have an obligation to provide safe workplaces for all Albertans, not just for those who work in office buildings where smoking is not usually allowed. We have laws and regulations in place that keep Alberta's workers safe in regard to safety devices for construction workers working on tall buildings, for oil patch workers working on the hundreds of rigs across the province, but we don't have protection for the thousands upon thousands of individuals who are subjected to second-hand smoke each and every day in their workplaces.

The argument may be put forward that these individuals don't have to work in the types of jobs that require them to be around second-hand smoke. Usually this involves some type of hospitality industry. I just don't think that this type of argument is strong enough for me not to support this bill. Mr. Speaker, science has come far enough, and too many people have become sick or have died because of second-hand smoke for us not to put forward legislation that protects individuals from second-hand smoke in their chosen profession.

When this government is dealing with the issue of safety guards and restraints for construction workers who work on high buildings, we don't accept the rationale that falling from a high building is just a risk of construction and if these workers don't want to plummet to their death, they should just find another profession that isn't as dangerous. Instead, we put forward legislation that will help make those construction workers' work sites as safe as possible. Bill 201 is the safety restraint that hospitality workers across this province have never had.

Mr. Speaker, jurisdictions across Alberta, Canada, and all corners of the world, regardless of their political leanings, are moving forward with laws which are very similar to the bill proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. The general acceptance of the prohibition of smoking in public places is here. I emphasize enclosed public places because in no way does this bill restrict what Albertans can do in their own homes or vehicles.

By not supporting this bill, we are just temporarily putting off the inevitable, and in the process we might be opening ourselves up to possible litigation due to the fact that government was aware of the dangers of allowing workers to be subjected to second-hand smoke. The Ontario Workplace Safety and Insurance Board initially ruled in favour of a woman who was diagnosed with terminal lung cancer after working as a waitress for most of her life to receive worker's compensation. Mr. Speaker, while these types of rulings are not common, it does show that precedent is beginning to be set, and by not taking action, we potentially open ourselves to WCB claims. We are aware of the danger of second-hand smoke in the workplace, and the government could therefore be held in neglect of the health of Albertans by not taking action on this issue.

I will be supporting Bill 201, and I urge all members of this House to do the same. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing this bill forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I too want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing Bill 201 forward. I support this bill because I believe it is the right thing to do.

I do not want to repeat what has already been said in support of this action. I would like to respond to the suggestion that we should allow children to make their own decisions to help them grow and develop into mature adults. My background is also education, and I can think of countless times when students did not or would not make wise decisions because they did not have the facts, the critical thinking skills, or the experience that would be required to make good, informed decisions. Our responsibility as adults is to guide them or override them when necessary to ensure their safety and security. Sometimes we must intervene in the best interests of people. Although I am speaking of youth, there is no magical age when individuals become responsible.

On the basis of discussion with parents and students in my constituency I must support this bill. Some of these constituents are smokers who actually believe that a smoking ban would have helped them overcome their addiction and who want to do whatever they can to prevent others from becoming addicted to tobacco.

I also want to mention that we have lots of evidence behind a total workplace smoking ban and the health that it creates and the assets that that would bring. This is about protecting the worker, not about the smoker. Smoking cessation programs in the workplace may also achieve substantial cost savings as well as productivity benefits. Workers who have stopped smoking for at least one year lose significantly fewer days of work and have fewer admissions to hospital than those who continue to smoke. Smokers take time from their jobs to go and smoke and have their breaks. If that's not happening any longer, that can contribute to better productivity.

I support Bill 201 as I see it as a health concern that must be addressed in our wellness mandate. Our mandate is provincial. This Bill 201 offers an opportunity for province-wide consistency and better health. Once again I applaud this initiative.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I begin my remarks, I'm mindful of my own home and my children years ago who, enthusiastic with what they were hearing at school, rushed home to talk very seriously with their father about the evils of smoking. Children during the period of the '70s and '80s grew up with that delightful program Participation, that made them all little health and wellness teachers when they came to their homes. I think that for me the memory of my oldest son most seriously illuminating what he believed was a travesty in behaviour relative to smoking will be one of my most poignant memories as a parent.

As health minister one of the things that I'm most conscious of is that children tend to start smoking when the adults around them smoke, and no matter what the adults say, they usually can't dissuade the child from doing something different. That is an important reason in support of Bill 201, to look at a broader outreach on the tobacco reduction strategy and, in fact, look at a provincial ban.

Thankfully, my children today, adult men of 36, 38, and 40, still do not smoke. It was the teaching about the misuse of tobacco that taught them that this was definitely something they wanted to make a choice about.

So, Mr. Speaker, today as we discuss Bill 201, I want to talk a little bit about the strategy that's already a part of the tobacco reduction strategy in Alberta. In fact, it was launched in 2002. The purpose, of course, is to increase the wellness of Albertans and to decrease health care costs through the denormalization of tobacco use. The strategy addresses prevention and education, cessation and reduction, research and evaluation, leadership, co-ordination, taxation, and legislation.

We have taken strong antitobacco action on many fronts, including tobacco taxes, making it illegal for youth under the age of 18 to smoke in public places, and comprehensive advertising campaigns showing the adverse health effects of smoking.

The smoking rate in the province for people 15 years and older declined from 25 per cent in 2001 to 20 per cent in 2003, which represents approximately a hundred thousand fewer smokers in Alberta. This reduction represents an annual cost savings to the economy of approximately $465 million. This amount is a 40 to 1 return on the Alberta government's investment in the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. For the first time ever the smoking rate in Alberta is lower than the smoking rate for Canada, which is 21 per cent. Our goal is to reduce this number to 17 and a half per cent by 2011. Mr. Speaker, I hope to wake up one morning and realize that Alberta, in fact, has no smokers.

We cannot be complacent. While we're having success already with the tobacco reduction strategy, we face numerous challenges on the tobacco front, including discount brands, the low cost of loose tobacco, and the number of young people who are still smoking. While smoking rates overall have declined, the smoking rate in Alberta remains high among young adults aged 20 to 24 at 31 per cent. In the 15 to 19 age category 18 per cent of young people smoke. We want to lower the number of smokers in the 15 to 19 age category to 12 per cent in the next six years.

Mr. Speaker, recently I noted a commercial in a theatre that talked about the image of beauty and young women, and it's sponsored by the Dove Foundation. What I liked about it is that it challenges young girls particularly but also young women to consider that they are beautiful no matter what they look like as long as that inner beauty shines. I fear from my discussions with young girls in particular that many who are still smoking are smoking because they really want to become slim. The image of Virginia Slims lingers in my mind as one of the cleverest albeit the least ethical types of advertising that would encourage one to feel like they will be slimmer if they smoke, in fact, a slim brand of cigarettes.

Cigarette sales in Alberta are up 7.5 per cent for the nine months ended December 2004 compared to the same nine months in the year prior. Discount brands now make up a substantial part of Alberta's tobacco marketplace. These brands sell at $2 less per pack than premium brands, thus negating our tax increase of two and a quarter.

Mr. Speaker, tobacco use remains a critical health concern in our province. Tobacco use is the leading avoidable cause of illness, disability, and premature death in Alberta; 3,400 Albertans die annually from tobacco-related illnesses. Just recently we attended a chronic obstructive pulmonary disease session with SmartCare and a number of Albertans, and they advised us that this particular disease is a disease which kills one Canadian every hour. SmartCare is chaired by a wonderful gentleman – I'll call him Jim – who identifies that this irreversible lung condition attacked him because he was a heavy smoker.

We must protect the health and development of our children. Their lungs are still so much in a growth phase that second-hand smoke is particularly dangerous for them. Eighty-eight per cent of Albertans agreed two years ago that smoking should be banned in places where children are allowed.

We must be vigilant because Alberta has fallen behind other Canadian jurisdictions regarding tobacco legislation. With the exception of Alberta every province has adopted or is developing some form of comprehensive tobacco control legislation. While the reduction strategy is working, we know that it can be further reduced. One of the targets for the strategy includes reducing the consumption of tobacco products in Alberta by 50 per cent over the next 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that smoking and its effects are major barriers to wellness in our province. I am concerned that Alberta does not have sufficient legislation limiting tobacco use and exposure to second-hand smoke. Numerous studies indicate that neither workplace nor public place smoke-free policies have long-term negative economic impacts. In order to create the healthiest citizens in the entire country, we must address the issues that inhibit wellness.

Mr. Speaker, today I am challenged as health minister with the fact that we are spending 2 per cent more than our gross domestic product in Canada, in France, and in many other countries of the world. The only way that we can really successfully attack health reform, in my opinion, is when we attack those things that mitigate against wellness: when we attack things like obesity, that has been mentioned, like tobacco, like pollution, like all of those things that, in fact, subtract from our capacity as Albertans to feel well, when we get every Albertan to have a healthy and positive outlook on life, to sleep well, to exercise properly, to eat the required and proper foods every day, to do things that protect their health, like not smoke, like not overindulge in alcohol, like not overindulge in any unhealthy or high-risk behaviour, and when we encourage Albertans to wash their hands.

We know, in fact, that there is a pandemic that has been discussed and is on the horizon, and, Mr. Speaker, it will be the healthiest people in Canada that will survive. For those that are vulnerable, for those that threaten the vulnerability of others, I say this. This bill may be ambitious. There are many sides to the debate and many that we have heard this afternoon. However, I ask our colleagues for very careful consideration of Bill 201, and I compliment the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for his courage and commitment in bringing forward this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 201, and I would like to commend the hon. member opposite for introducing this bill. I think that it's very timely, and I was pleased and I would like to believe at least that the motion that's been tabled by the New Democrat opposition calling for a full smoking ban had some role in precipitating this bill. That's exactly what we hoped to see.

This is first and foremost a workplace health and safety issue. For thousands of Albertans who work in the hospitality industry, in bars, restaurants, casinos, bingo halls, and other establishments, cigarette smoke is a clear danger to their health. The Premier of this province has repeatedly said that his opposition to a province-wide smoking ban is based on the fact that an 85-year-old man in a Youngstown bar parlour has the right to light up a cigarette. The Premier seems to have no explanation for why the 85-year-old man's right to smoke a cigarette in a place of work trumps the right of his 20-year-old waiter or waitress to work in a healthy and safe environment.

Second-hand smoke contains more than 4,000 chemicals including 69 known carcinogens such as formaldehyde, lead, arsenic, benzene, and radioactive polonium-210. It is a scientifically proven cause of serious health problems including lung cancer, heart disease, and chronic lung ailments such as lung cancer and asthma. Studies have shown that employees who work in smoke-free indoor workplaces are at least 25 per cent more likely to make quitting attempts and are more likely to achieve cessation than those who work at work sites that permit smoking. Smoking bans help people quit smoking, Mr. Speaker.

Nonsmokers are exposed to the same carcinogens as active smokers. Even the typical levels of passive exposure have been known to cause lung cancer among people who have never smoked. Second-hand tobacco smoke is carcinogenic to humans. There's evidence that smoking bans are linked to decreasing incidents of heart attacks. When Helena, Montana, imposed a ban from June 5, 2002, until it was struck down in court on December 3, 2002, the incidence of hospitalization for myocardial infarctions dropped significantly, by about 40 per cent, compared to before and after the law was enforced and compared to neighbouring regions.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the dinosaur on this issue. It reminds me of the Far Side cartoon about the real reason for the extinction of dinosaurs. If anyone's ever seen it, it's got various dinosaurs smoking cigarettes.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the Premier said about an urban-rural split on this issue, the vast majority of Albertans do support a smoking ban. Many other countries have smoking bans or intend to implement them very soon. The Canadian Medical Association reports that Ireland, Zimbabwe, Thailand, Pakistan, Iran, Uganda, and Sweden have smoking bans in place. Most other provinces, including our neighbours to the west in British Columbia and to the east in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, also have province-wide smoking bans.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's intransigence is hurting our border towns. In Lloydminster, for example, the mayor is concerned that Saskatchewan businesses are suffering unnecessarily because there's no level playing field between Saskatchewan and Alberta law. Alberta's policy is also hurting businesses in other places. In Clareview, for example, many businesses are losing out to restaurants and bars in neighbouring Fort Saskatchewan and Sherwood Park. The patchwork of smoking bylaws is the reason why the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association is supportive of a province-wide smoking ban in the workplace.

There is some very real resistance to a province-wide smoking ban within the Tory caucus, including, I might add, the Premier. The rationale is that we cannot infringe on the private sector's right to allow smoking in their establishments. There is a further rationale that restaurants, bars, and casinos will lose money if a province-wide smoking ban is implemented.

Mr. Speaker, let me start with the first assertion that the province has no right to infringe on private business. Now, we know how harmful second-hand smoke is, we know that smoking bans are effective in terms of encouraging current smokers to quit, and we know how costly smoking is. We also know that there are provincial regulations for all kinds of health and safety requirements in the workplace. Workplaces are required to have ventilation systems. They are required to have a certain air and water quality. They are required to have sanitary food preparation and waste disposal. We have all of these rules to protect human health. All the facts show that a smoking ban would serve the same purpose.

Now, the second assertion that restaurants, bars, casinos, and so on would become ghost towns is just patently false. There are so many jurisdictions that are ahead of Alberta that we have a treasure trove of evidence and proof to the contrary. For example, the Ontario Tobacco Research Unit examined the effect of Ottawa's smoke-free bylaw on that city's hospitality industry. Far from having a negative impact as detractors had warned, the smoke-free bylaw appears to have had substantial economic benefit. Some further quotes from the Ottawa study:

- Using two statistical approaches, and allowing three possibilities for the timing and pattern of the impact, we found no evidence that the Ottawa smoke-free bylaw adversely affected restaurant and bar sales.
- Our results and those of [other] previous studies indicate that communities considering implementing smoke-free bylaws need not be concerned that bars and restaurants will be adversely affected.
- Studies of the health and social costs of smoking and of the impact of bylaws on smoking behaviour suggest substantial economic benefit to the public from 100% smoke-free bylaws.

A report commissioned by the city of Ottawa to examine the impact of its ban on smoking in bars and restaurants found that the smoke-free bylaw has had little or no negative impact on the industry as a whole.

In California a comprehensive poll was undertaken by Field Research of bar owners, employees, and patrons. The poll found that five years after California implemented a smoke-free bylaw, a majority of stakeholders approved of the law. Seventy-nine per cent of bar patrons surveyed said that it's important to have a smoke-free environment inside clubs, bars, lounges, and restaurants with bars. This represented a 20 per cent increase from that reported in 1998. Seventy-seven per cent of bar managers and their employees said that complying with the law has been very or fairly easy, and 87 per cent of patrons, including smokers, said that they are more likely to visit bars or have not changed their bar-going behaviour as a result of the law.

The New York City department of health and mental hygiene released information in July 2003 showing that employment in city bars and restaurants since implementation of the Smoke Free Air Act "increased by about 1,500 seasonally-adjusted jobs", for an "absolute gain of nearly 10,000 jobs" since the implementation of that act.

It is true that there is an adjustment period for businesses in the aftermath of a province-wide ban, but this adjustment period, if it is applied to everyone, is far less damaging than the halfway solutions and patchwork bylaws that we now have. It is temporary pain for long-term gain.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there are health care costs to consider. In May 2004 the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, represented here by the minister over there, reported this.

- Over one third of all deaths [that is, 36 per cent] are due to cardiovascular disease . . .
- More women (37%) than men (35%) die of heart disease and stroke.
- Heart disease and stroke cost the Canadian economy $18.5 billion.

Even the infamous Mazankowski report recommended action on smoking in the workplace as a good way to reduce health care costs.

Mr. Speaker, the government seems to want to take the Mazankowski report's advice on privatizing the health care system, charging more user fees, and allowing more for-profit medicine, but it is not enthusiastic about doing something that would really lower health care costs, and that is to implement a province-wide smoking ban.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members to follow the advice of our health minister and support this bill. I believe that it is an excellent piece of legislation, a progressive piece of legislation, and it should be passed unamended by this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I'd also like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward such an important bill as this as it proposes to ban smoking in all enclosed public spaces and workplaces. Given that nearly every day we are bombarded with new studies outlining the harmful effects of second-hand smoke, Bill 201 clearly is a good idea in principle.

Second-hand smoke is of particular concern because of the fact that it is a health risk that is imposed on a person by the actions of another. There is a role for government to play in situations such as these. Whenever the rights of one citizen have the potential to harm another if exercised, then the government has a legal and moral obligation to step in and curtail the exercise of that right in order to ensure the greatest benefits for society. Government also has a special obligation to protect children from harm. However, Albertans should have a reasonable expectation that they are free to go to public places without having to worry about being exposed to second-hand smoke, and Albertans over the age of 18 should also have a reasonable expectation that they are free to choose how they live their lives.

Mr. Speaker, what Bill 201 proposes to do is extend to the provincial level a process that has already begun in municipalities in this province and across Canada. I can remember that back in the 1980s championing a cause such as this, which I did, was a very lonely, lonely exercise. As the minister of health is smiling across the way, she can remember when we shared going to municipal conventions. The only smoke-free table at the lunch was the one I sat at because I reached in my pocket and brought out a sign and set it on the table, and it soon attracted other nonsmokers to that table, and that's how I started.

Now, I always believed in leading by example, and as a municipal councillor I also set out to eliminate the cloud of smoke from my own municipal buildings, starting with the Kneehill municipality, and it became the first municipal administration building in the province to go smoke free. I then got on the hospital board of the Three Hills hospital, and to my knowledge it was the first hospital in the province to have any smoking restrictions at all. And, yes, believe it or not, back in the 1980s you couldn't go into a hospital without smelling smoke in any room in any part of the building. Even this building. My research tells me that in the early 1980s in this very Assembly smoking was prevalent and quite common.

As an encouragement to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed we've made a lot of progress, or to paraphrase the advertisement of the cigarette company that the minister of health mentioned, Virginia Slims: we've come a long way, baby.

Numerous American states have passed similar legislation to this, and Cuba, a country where smoking is culturally ingrained, has also moved to limit smoking in public places. It's important to note that if Alberta adopts legislation to create a baseline for smoking restrictions across the province, it must protect children and respect municipalities' and organizations' rights to meet local needs. By creating a provincial standard, we can ensure that all Albertans are assured of a basic level of protection against exposure to second-hand smoke and that children are protected. Should municipalities want to further restrict smoking in public places, I believe it's their right to do so. There was a recent plebiscite in one of my larger municipalities during the last municipal elections, and it was defeated. So, Mr. Speaker, I think I've got at least a little bit of a feeling of what my constituents feel about being too restrictive on this issue.

Bill 201 in its current form will protect all Albertans from exposure to second-hand smoke in enclosed public places but does not allow for municipalities to respond to the needs of its local citizens. It does not allow for them to have a less stringent ban, nor does it allow for private organizations to set their own rules. Restrictions should only apply to enclosed public spaces and workplaces where minors are permitted. A public space is a place where members of the public are free to enter and interact with each other. A private club such as the Legion is not open to the public and has restrictions on who can enter. Because of this definition, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 201 should not apply to exclusively private organizations.

As legislation across Canada similar in cause and effect to Bill 201 has been introduced, the Royal Canadian Legion has voiced its concerns. The Legion is concerned that proposed blanket smoking bans will harm the organization as they depend on smokers for their bottom line. Bill 201 if applied to private clubs would be especially penalizing. Public facilities like restaurants and bars are worried about their bottom line as well; however, being a public establishment, they are more able to replace customers as everyone is free to enter their facilities. [Mr. Marz coughed] That's not a smoking cough, Mr. Speaker.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Private clubs, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, apply directly to a specific segment of the population and are only open to members and their guests. With each passing year it becomes harder and harder for Legions to survive. According to the Brandon, Manitoba, branch president, his Legion lost 30 per cent of its business immediately after the smoking ban was put into place. Legions play an important role in the lives of veterans and in communities. In 2003 the Alberta Northwest Territories Command donated $9 million to charity and countless hours in community service to help other veterans run youth programs and sponsor senior housing programs.

When members leave the Legion, their dues and talents leave with them. A loss of the local Legion can be devastating to local communities.

Mr. Speaker, private clubs should be considered exempt as they are clearly not public spaces. Other jurisdictions have made exceptions for bona fide private clubs. In its bylaw the city of Toronto allowed for Legions and service clubs to be excluded and stated that the bylaw did not apply to banquet halls or restaurants when they are hosting private functions. The reason for the exception to smoking bans lies in the definition of a public space. A private club is open only to members and their guests, all of whom still choose to belong to that organization despite its smoking policy. A private club, if it chooses to allow smoking, does not have to allow minors on its premises. Private clubs like the Royal Canadian Legion are not competitors to other public entities. They cater to a certain clientele, and they do not try to attract business from a broad cross-section of society. Therefore, by ensuring that bona fide private clubs are exempt from this legislation, we're still allowing for a level playing field. The argument that allowing private service clubs an exemption would create a market distortion is simply inaccurate as private clubs occupy a separate niche in the economy.

Mr. Speaker, the Legion also caters to a segment of the population who grew up with smoking being acceptable. While the view of mainstream society has changed, the opinion of many Legion members has not. By ensuring that the private clubs are left out of the legislation, we're able to satisfy a generation of individuals whose sacrifices created our free society while at the same time acknowledging the hazards of second-hand smoke, bringing our policy in line with the views of the average Albertan.

Bill 201 is an important piece of legislation, and there can be no denying the harmful effects of second-hand smoke. This House has the responsibility to protect Albertans from harmful substances. That's why it's so important to prevent smoking in enclosed public spaces and workplaces where minors are permitted. Private clubs, however, are not public entities and should therefore under the definition of the proposed legislation be allowed to have smoking areas accessible for their members.

Bill 201, with the proper definition of public spaces, strikes a correct balance between freedom of choice, protecting public health, the rights of smokers, and the rights of nonsmokers. I will support this bill in second reading and look forward with great interest to what amendments may be forthcoming in the committee stage, and I will make my final decision then.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to speak to Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act. I admire the stand of my colleague across the floor for his tenacious challenge with this bill, and good luck with it. I believe adults are models here. Smoking sets a very poor example, and by example we teach.

During the municipal election in St. Albert three candidates ran on the basis of coming back and having the smoking ban removed. These three candidates were removed and were not elected, so that may have some message to our political hearts.

In visiting schools, which I have done since becoming the Education critic, I note a fairly large number of kids still smoking, and it seems to me just on a limited observation that a number of them are women, young ladies. This really has an impact on the future in terms of health costs.

There are simple reasons why I support this bill. I believe it brings us better health, I believe it will cut costs, I believe it will make a better and healthier business environment, and I believe it will promote the well-being of people that are employed and also people that visit establishments that they must go into to do economic exchange, business. Therefore, I do believe that we should support Bill 201. It will set a province-wide standard.

There's one other thing, Mr. Speaker, that I think is very, very important. It would also tell people across Alberta that this Assembly can work together to make Alberta smoke-free and make Alberta a healthier place to live. I think that's really worth fighting and standing up for.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to be able to rise and speak to Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act. I listened to the comments from my colleagues here in the Legislature regarding Bill 201 with interest. I am sure every member here is receiving arguments and positioning both for and against this legislation while being approached by their constituents and in reading all the letters, faxes, and e-mails their constituency offices receive.

This is a very tough bill that's being brought forward. The health benefits to quitting smoking are obvious, and I don't think I need to go into any detail here as a few members of the House have already done an exceptional job outlining the dangers of smoking and second-hand smoke to nonsmokers. I am a reformed smoker and, I would suppose, one of the harshest critics.

As a government I do believe that we shouldn't be responsible for making sure every Albertan makes the healthiest choice at every corner. If this was the situation, as mentioned previously this afternoon, we would be legislating what foods Albertans eat, how much exercise they must perform each day, and we would be monitoring how much mindless and idle activity we participate in every day. Obviously, this isn't the case, and Albertans are free to make the choices that they feel are best for themselves.

AADAC does a great job in providing resources for individuals who choose to stop smoking but are having a difficult time doing it. As a former smoker I know it can be a difficult habit to beat, and I would be supportive of a bill that would in some way help discourage everyone, especially our youth, from ever starting smoking. Even with the dangers of smoking fully known by our youth, we still have young children starting to take up smoking. Although there are fewer youths starting to smoke than in the previous decades, we still need to protect children from taking up the habit.

Resources need to be there for those who choose to stop smoking. When people make the decision to stop smoking, we should be focusing on providing the services and support they need to kick this tough addiction. Wouldn't it be better to encourage adults and children to quit smoking instead of telling businesses how to operate? By focusing our efforts on eliminating where people can smoke, all we're doing is changing the locations where parents will be subjecting their children to second-hand smoke. It doesn't matter whether we create incentive programs or some type of tax credit. We need to start addressing how to encourage people to stop smoking, not just limit where they can smoke.

When I look at Bill 201, the biggest impact I see coming from it is that smoking will no longer be allowed in bars, restaurants, casinos, and other hospitality-related businesses. Will we be creating other hazards to people's health by having groups of people smoking in front of restaurants? People will have to pass through the group of smokers to get to the smoke-free restaurant. I am not alone in Alberta with the discomfort around smoke. Many Albertans feel the same way I do when around smoke. We choose to go to businesses or restaurants that don't allow smoking. This is what my main contention with Bill 201 is as it currently sits. This bill in its current form will legislate hospitality businesses and dictate how they cater to a specific segment of the population.

I fully support prohibiting smoking in health facilities and most public buildings, but I have a hard time supporting legislation that tells a businessperson how they should run their private business. Perhaps we should look into developing better signs to warn people that certain businesses allow smoking. I want to emphasize: working with business, not dictating to businesses should be how we deal with the smoking issue.

Alberta has become a great province not because we're best at making laws but because of the entrepreneurial spirit that flows through our blood. I don't know if we really make a difference for the health of the public if we make it illegal for welders or any other shop owners to smoke in their own facility. Our farmers don't want Ottawa telling them where they have to sell their wheat and at what price. They want the option to be able to market their own products. They're smart enough to grow their farms into successful businesses, so it's insulting for them to be told that they're not smart enough to market their own wheat themselves if they choose to do so. I think that this directly applies to how we could be treating small business owners in relation to how they must run their own private businesses.

Is there such a high demand for nonsmoking establishments? The keen and smart businessmen that we have in our province will make sure that there is a smoke-free environment for these people who spend their money. The businesses that do allow for smoking are making a conscious decision to cater to a continually decreasing segment of our population. I really think that there will be a point when businesses that choose to allow smoking will eventually have to switch to nonsmoking because the actual numbers of smokers will be so little as not to be able to keep their business profitable. But until that time comes where either private businesses cannot be profitable with allowing smoking or until smoking itself becomes illegal, dictating how a business should be run is not the government's business.

As to this bill helping to protect the health of Albertans who work in public places where smoking is currently allowed, I don't think the debate for this is much different than if it was the province's business owners choosing to have their establishments free or not. To use serving as an example, people may choose where they work. There are so many options with smoking and nonsmoking establishments that the serving profession is not being subjected to second-hand smoke unless they choose to, just like the customers choose to frequent an establishment where smoking is allowed.

It simply comes down to personal choice, and this bill as it sits hasn't addressed a variety of other options that still need to be explored. Are the small nonsmoking signs that municipalities require businesses to post significant enough? How much authority do we extend to municipalities in regard to allowing smoking in public places? Why are we trying to interfere with local economies and the autonomy of the local municipalities? People should be able to decide how they will operate their businesses. We have seen a great number of municipalities move towards nonsmoking in almost all public places, but we have also seen many communities that will continue to allow businesses to choose what is best for their business.

I do feel that this bill is moving in the right direction, but I think further consultation and amendments are necessary before I would completely support this bill. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing Bill 201 forward and evoking such great debate.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this Bill 201 today, and I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing this important bill to the House.

At this time, I have a few questions that I'd like each of us to ask ourselves. We as legislators are empowered to bring forth good bills to protect those who cannot protect themselves, and though we've taken a good step so far with this bill, I still have questions. Are we really looking after the children of our province here? At this time a parent cannot take a child to town without strapping them in a seat belt. Children have a 1-800 number if they're physically or emotionally abused. Yet I ask the question: who's protecting the children in their home if their parents have chosen to smoke?

While this bill moves forward in the right direction, I still question that we don't protect those who cannot protect themselves. I would hope that as we continue to address and debate this bill, we will consider those in it and have the desire to strengthen this bill after this one passes to a stronger one that will protect those who cannot protect themselves.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise today and join the debate on Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. I'd like to compliment the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for having the courage to bring forward this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start by just talking about three different instances in my own life. The first one was when I was 10 years old. At that time, my grandfather moved in to live with us, and he was in the final year of emphysema. He was in the next bedroom to me, and I would often hear him coughing. His lungs had gotten to a point where he could no longer cleanse them. They no longer worked for him adequately, so they would fill with phlegm, and he would cough. He had lunch bags, wax-lined lunch bags. He would cough so much that he would fill those lunch sacks with phlegm, and it was my job to take the lunch sacks out of his bedroom and dispose of them. For a 10-year-old girl that was a gross thing to do.

But worse than gross, Mr. Speaker, was actually that year living in the next bedroom, listening to him slowly choke to death. That made an impression on me that I've never forgotten. Emphysema is a terrible disease. It's not a disease that you'd want anyone to experience.

I'd like to fast-forward for just a moment to probably 10 years after that. I was just a newlywed. My husband and I were both in university. I was expecting our first child. We returned to Calgary right after things had been very tough, you know, after the crash, and we desperately needed both of us to work in order to be able to go on that next year in university.

I finally found a job after a few weeks of really searching. Unfortunately for me, I ended up in a very small office with another worker who was a chain smoker. Now, back then I could say nothing. The reality was that I needed the job worse, in some ways, than other conditions. So I put up with it. I couldn't complain. I couldn't ask him not to. In fact, there was a window in that small office, and I tried to open the window so that I could air out the environment a little bit because I was concerned about being pregnant and being in such a smoke-filled environment. Unfortunately, my co-worker had a terrible case of asthma, so he couldn't tolerate the window being open because it so adversely affected his asthma, but I could tolerate the second-hand smoke.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was some 25 years ago. I'd like to think that today we have progressed from that point. I'd like to think that we have better knowledge today. For many years the tobacco industry left us in a position where they didn't want us to create a causal link between smoking and lung cancer. Sometimes I feel like we're doing the same thing.

The Speaker: Hon. Member, I hate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(5)(I) we've now reached the point in time where I must call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close the debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing but respect for each of the people who has risen in this Chamber before me to address this issue. I express my appreciation for the time and talent that they've put into their remarks. No matter what they might happen to have been, they've been very well thought of. Obviously, people have been speaking with their constituents. We all want to do the best thing for the people of this province.

I will not add to what has already been said here earlier today. Instead, I will ask for your guidance as we take this forward. We will now have the vote, I presume. Is that correct?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 14, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/03/15

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

You have an introduction of guests?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I would like to seek unanimous consent to briefly revert to introductions, please.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm most pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of young New Democrats who have joined us this evening to view the proceedings. They are members of the New Democrat club from the University of Alberta and the newly formed New Democrat club at Grant MacEwan College. First of all, from the University of Alberta I have Roland Schmidt, Scott McAnish, Andrea Ennis, and Tahnis Cunningham. From the Grant MacEwan New Democrat club I have Barry DeFord, Chris Harwood, Geneva Harwood, Katie Van Tighem, Patrick Lau, and from our own caucus tonight Anand Sharma. Could I please have them rise and get the warm traditional welcome from the House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of guests tonight. They do volunteer work at the Cross Cancer Institute, which is in my constituency but serves people across the province and, indeed, from beyond. Among their work is work in the cafeteria, the gift shop; they help in the rooms. They also operate the Edmonton Mennonite Guest Home, right across the street from the Cross Cancer Institute. They're here this evening on a tour of the Legislature and to watch us in our discussions for as long as they are welcome. They're welcome to until the bitter end if they want, but I can't imagine they'll stay that long. Anyway, I'll ask them to rise as I read their names: Elmer Esau, Joann Esau, Melinda Wiebe, Adriana Unruh, Verna Hershberger, Hildy Fehr, Sherri Koehn, Bethany Ensz, Lenora Penner, and Jerry Penner. I would ask all of you to give them a warm welcome, please.

Thank you.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Elimination of Library Card Fees in Tribute to Dr. Lois E. Hole

502. Mr. Agnihotri moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate fees for library cards in all public libraries in tribute to the late the Hon. Dr. Lois E. Hole to honour her belief in the importance of literacy and in the principle that access to libraries should be free for all Albertans.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The libraries are the basic services to all walks of life. It's an investment in building intellectual resources and also a cornerstone of a democratic society.

Lois Hole was a strong supporter of public libraries. Because of this, this government has proposed the development of an Alberta-wide digital library in the name of Lois Hole. The government has also created the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship for postsecondary students. However, on a number of occasions she expressed her view that public libraries' membership should be free.

Most recently at a library event in Banff in July 2004 she said, "Giving free library memberships to all members of the community is a wonderful idea, and like you, I believe it should become standard practice throughout Alberta." In this centennial year let us reaffirm in legislation the principle that was embodied in Alberta's very first Public Libraries Act in 1907. That act stated clearly: "All libraries and reading rooms established under this Act shall be open to the public free of all charges."

Public libraries started out in the early years of this province's existence as open-door institutions, free to all Albertans, but in recent years, starting in the late '80s, public library after public library across this province has introduced annual membership fees in order to generate funds. As a consequence, today in Alberta every major public library, with only two exceptions, charges an annual membership fee that Albertans must pay if they want to borrow books. In this practice of charging residents a fee to belong to their local public library, Alberta is alone in North America with the sole exception of Quebec. Everywhere else in North America public libraries are free to the local residents, whose taxes support the libraries' existence.

Public libraries are a municipally based service. Municipalities contribute 80 per cent of the funds, provinces about 10 to 11 per cent, and the rest through user fees and other sources. Ninety-two per cent of the head librarians in Alberta agreed with the principle of free public libraries but said that they would need some form of revenue replacement before they could eliminate the fees. To replace this funding, it appears the easiest way to do this would be to increase the provincial funding portion for public libraries from the existing level of 10 to 11 per cent to an adjusted level in order to replace the lost revenue.

Over the last two decades provincial funding for public libraries has been far from generous. From 1986 to 2002 the library operating grant funding formula was $4.04 per capita, and today it's $4.29 per capita to determine their grants. This province should increase its share of the funding formula to increase the funding available to public libraries and compensate municipalities for the lost revenue from charging a fee for library cards.

Mr. Speaker, if the access to a well-funded public library is vital to all Albertans – and surely all of us believe it is – then we in this room must take our share of the responsibility. For less than $4 million a year the province could increase library operating grants so as to compensate most libraries for the loss of membership fee revenues. This is a very, very small investment with huge returns on its effect upon the lives of Albertans.

When the Edmonton public library introduced $10 fees in 1994, enrolment immediately dropped significantly. Even now, 11 years later, despite new libraries and population growth library enrolment has not recovered.

Our late Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, was a passionate supporter of democracy, literacy, community, and lifelong learning. She correctly saw public libraries as both a manifestation of and source for these values and believed strongly that public libraries should be free for all Albertans as they are elsewhere. It would be ironic indeed if, when the new Lois Hole library opens its door later this year, patrons have to pay to obtain a borrower's card.

The death of Lois Hole was a great loss to this province. She was an excellent Lieutenant Governor, an outstanding Albertan, and an exceptionally warm and caring person. We have lost her, but we can take this opportunity to pay tribute to her and to enshrine the values for which she stood in the legislation of this province. Our province has the resources that enable us to provide excellent funding to our public libraries to assure both their viability and their accessibility.

I propose that a very appropriate lasting tribute to this remarkable human being, Lois Hole, would be an endowment in her name to provide ongoing funding to support the annual provision of a free library card to every Albertan. This motion promotes fundamental values that were dear to Lois Hole and which, I am sure, all members of this House support. The values that underlie the existence of public libraries are the very values that public libraries support; namely democracy, literacy, community, lifelong learning. This is our opportunity to honour a great Albertan. Let us adopt this motion and eliminate library cards throughout Alberta as a tribute to Lois Hole.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do applaud the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for the worthy objectives of his motion, which are particularly the recognition of the late Lieutenant Governor and also the encouragement of public library usage.

However, I do not believe that the motion achieves the objectives for several reasons. First of all, by seeking to impose a blanket prohibition across the province, we would be making a significant intrusion into the authority of the local decision-making bodies whether they be municipalities or the library boards. My own view has always been that the authority is best vested in the local government and the local governing bodies, where they're closer to the people that they are affecting.

Secondly, while the fees charged are relatively modest, they do provide some resources for the library system, and in so doing, by depriving the libraries of those specific resources, we are in effect depriving them of the resources they need to fulfill the very objective which my learned friend has sought to achieve.

Thirdly, there may be valid reasons beyond the actual monetary payment for charging a fee for the issuance of that card. Particularly, I'm thinking of the ability of the library system to keep up a current list of the users of the system and to keep the addresses current and to make sure that those people that are actually on their lists are the current users of the library system.

Fourthly, by paying a modest fee, the library users may actually be empowered to have a sense of ownership of that library system. They may value the privilege of library membership more, and in fact they may be encouraged to use the library system even more than they would have otherwise.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to oppose the motion, and I ask my learned colleagues to do likewise.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak in support of the motion of my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie.

You know, the amount of money we're talking about for library fees is not a lot. In Edmonton it's $12, I believe, and an additional $8 for other family members. So to anyone in this building right now it's not a lot of money, but unfortunately there are a lot of Albertans, a lot of Edmontonians to whom that is reason enough not to buy a library card.

If you start to lose people because of the fee attached, you're losing the people who most desperately need a library. These would be the people who can't afford books or who count on libraries' magazine and newspaper collections to keep up with the world. Libraries provide CDs and even DVDs these days. Now, it's a shame in a province with the riches of Alberta that we would be underfunding libraries to the point where libraries feel compelled to raise additional revenues from memberships.

Of course, it is optional for libraries to charge fees. Now, this is kind of a sneaky way around the underfunding of libraries. You don't give them enough money, and then you give them the option of charging user fees. Of course, most libraries will take the opportunity to charge for memberships because they need the money. So it's hardly fair to say, "Gee, it's your choice, so don't blame us" if the libraries charge fees. That's like putting a cookie jar in front of a hungry child and telling them that they have the option of having a cookie.

It's discouraging to see that Alberta is one of only two provinces and states in all of North America that allow library fees. It's maybe understandable for a have-not province or some of the poorer U.S. states to do this, but it's just not right for a province that is awash in cash and one that is about to pour billions more into postsecondary education to nickel and dime Alberta library users.

Mr. Speaker, this motion does not break the bank. It does not set a precedent that will result in other organizations coming cap in hand to the government for money. It's a relatively inexpensive gesture of support to encourage reading and education. I support it fully, and I hope that my colleagues in the House will support it as well.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to share with the members of this Assembly my first experience as an elected official at the municipal level, which actually goes back to when I'd just graduated from university in Boston, Harvard. I came back to become mayor of Fort McMurray. I was the youngest mayor, I think, in the entire country at the time.

The issue was the library. I want to share with you the experience where at the time the municipality was looking at how we could deal with things. When we were looking at libraries, we found out that everyone had to pay a $5 fee. At that point the library board, which I sat on as mayor, discovered that in actual fact the public policy that was in place was trying to accommodate not the minority but the majority. What we observed was that 99 per cent of the people that were coming into our library were wearing be it a Sun Ice jacket or they were doing very well, yet our policy said that no matter what your income level was, you still had to pay $5 for the membership.

The position of the council of the day was that we didn't even think that they should have to pay the $5. Yet for those who could well afford it, what responsibility did they have in caring for those less fortunate who could not afford it? At the time the headline the next day was: only the rich would be able to pay. But that wasn't the case at all. It was about what our responsibility was, those who could well afford a library fee. By the way, I might add, what great value you got for $5. If it's free, I don't know if people appreciate it.

The actual library board in Fort McMurray raised the fee from $5 to, in actual fact, $20. You know what? For that person who couldn't afford it under the policy before, now they didn't have to pay a cent because for those who could well afford the fee, the public policy was in place to care for those who were less fortunate. I only impart to you today that, as much as the headline in the newspaper was, "Only the rich can read," from a public policy perspective we have to make sure that we make public policy that can serve the majority so that we can even do a better job serving the minority who cannot afford the actual fee.

As mayor it was really frustrating, to say the least, because it truly is a municipal responsibility, but we formulated a policy where those who were paying the $5 had no objection to paying more to care for those who did not have the opportunity to pay for it. I want to say today that our public policy remains in place. It is strong. People are caring for those who can't afford it, and at the same time we have a public policy that can accommodate so many people. Not only that. We've been able to strengthen the interest in the library for those who are able to pay that $5 and the additional fee that went into it, and I can say without fear of contradiction today, Mr. Speaker, that our library is even stronger for it in terms of embracing those who were willing to pay for good value.

So I only say today that we moved forward, and we were able to develop a public policy that even served all of our citizens, those who could afford it but also those who could not. It really, truly says that something that is free is not valued. Ultimately, we were able to develop a policy that says that by paying, we're showing that we care for those less fortunate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:20

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in favour of the motion and perhaps just a couple of comments in regard to the hon. Minister of Environment's arguments. With all due respect, you know, on this idea that if something is free, it's not going to be respected or valued somehow, I think it's difficult to put a value on that.

I think we can see some very obvious numbers, though, say from the Edmonton public library. When they had to impose this $10 fee in 1994, they were expecting approximately $1.5 million in revenue from that thing that they had to do. You know, they were very reluctant to impose this. It was only as a result of severe provincial and municipal cutbacks that this had to take place. They were expecting $1.5 million in revenue. They only received half of that, which is $750,000.

Now, to say that it's free – of course, we're all paying through our taxation system. Perhaps, you know, the hon. minister making this comment about $5 or $20 is a good argument for a larger argument, Mr. Speaker, about progressive taxation, which is: what should we be paying for libraries in this province in the first place? Right? A properly funded provincial library system paid by taxpayers is indeed what we did have for most of the history of this province as well as what we're asking for here today.

As this Assembly well knows, the late Lois Hole was a very ardent supporter of literacy and learning, and supporting libraries was certainly one of her most cherished goals. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie mentioned, I think this would be a very appropriate legacy for her name as well as to restore a basic need that we have in our society to fulfill barrier-free knowledge and to promote literacy as well.

Removing library fees would allow everyone access to libraries. Libraries are based on the democratic right, Mr. Speaker, of all citizens to have access to knowledge, barrier-free access, as the Edmonton public library states in their constitution.

As the members of this Assembly are no doubt aware as well, the public library in Banff is a good example of how removing the fee structure allows for a great deal more public access to libraries. They removed their $10 fee, I believe, a couple of years ago, and within a month they had a 40 per cent increase in usage as well as a 60 per cent increase in their circulation rate. Mr. Speaker, this is what libraries are made for: for the books to be used and for people to be reading them.

Although a $10 or $12 library fee may seem like a small price to pay to most Albertans – right? – in fact, it does act as a deterrent. This is very similar to other fee structures introduced by this government, Mr. Speaker. Although it may seem like a small amount of money, really it's a question of embarrassment for feeling that you have to ask for something that otherwise, you know, you're entitled to as a citizen of the city or of the province. The Edmonton library policy is that if somebody asks, then they will waive the fee, but you can imagine what it's like to be in the lineup in a public place and saying that you can't afford $12. You know, it's hardly a way to make yourself feel valued in this society. Why should people be doing this in the first place? These libraries are set up for education. This government has put in place this valuing of education for the new Alberta century. Well, this would be a most appropriate way to show that commitment to that value.

According to an organization here in this province, one out of every three adults in this province has reading skills that limit their ability to deal with written material they encounter every day. One in seven adults in Alberta are at the very lowest literacy level and have serious difficulty reading printed materials. One of the consequences of Alberta's poor literacy rate is low levels of participation in postsecondary education. I would venture to say as well, Mr. Speaker, that it's part of our problem with our participation rate in voting in the provincial and federal elections.

The key to a successful library bill, I believe, is to make it impossible, in fact, for libraries across this province to charge a service fee and to make sure that libraries receive adequate funding. There are two things that must happen here, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we must get rid of the library fee that's put into each place around this province and, number two, put the funding back that was taken away more than 10 years ago in this province.

The late Hon. Lois Hole once said that librarians are the secret masters of the world, in a sense; at the very least, [they] wield great power. But unlike many of those who wield political power, librarians are not afraid to share their power, to freely give away the knowledge that makes them powerful.

Indeed, powerful words.

Only Alberta and parts of Quebec charge to use public libraries. As part of this new Alberta century let's make knowledge and technology available to all here in this province, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

An Hon. Member: A question under 29(2).

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry. It doesn't apply in these motions. My mistake the first time.

Go ahead.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and join second reading debate on Motion 502, which proposes to eliminate library card fees across the province. Access to the wealth of resources a library has to offer is very important to having a well-educated and forward-thinking society. As the late Lois E. Hole said, books are the gateway to a better tomorrow, for books challenge us to use our minds, to find better ways of conducting ourselves and managing the great problems of human existence . . . Libraries are the cornerstones of civil society, of the liberal democracy that we've come to cherish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, she was an amazing woman, and she will be missed by all of us, and I can't think of a better person to honour in any way, shape, or form, but I'm concerned about whether or not this is the proper way to do it. Accessing books in a library shouldn't be dependent on an individual's income. Correct. This system also rings very true for our health care system, where any Albertan receives the best health care delivery regardless of their annual income.

Services, whether they be library, educational, or health related, are not free, however. They are paid for by the hard-working taxpayers of Alberta. We must get past the myth of free services anywhere. Unless you don't pay taxes, you are paying for the services, just not directly. It is not such a scary idea for individuals who can afford it to help directly fund the services they utilize through a very small yearly fee.

Library boards use card fees to generate approximately $3 million each year to help recover costs associated with individuals borrowing materials, obtaining items through interlibrary loans, and basic information services. The people who are using these services are being asked to pay a very nominal fee to help with some of the costs that are incurred by using the services. I know that some members of this House try to demonize the term "user fee," Mr. Speaker, but I think the average Albertan doesn't mind paying a very minimal fee for accessing and using the great resources our libraries have to offer.

When I say a minimal fee, it really is minimal. The fees in both Edmonton and Calgary are a very reasonable $12 for adults to help support the services they are utilizing, and the costs are comparable in rural Alberta. I understand that for some individuals and families a fee of any amount is a financial deterrent to using the library, but it's clearly stated by both the Edmonton and Calgary public boards that the card fee will be waived for those individuals who are unable to afford the fees, and I know that most rural library associations do the exact same thing. Those who can pay pay, and those who cannot afford to pay don't usually have to.

I think that any member in this House would agree that it's reasonable to have individual Albertans purchase their own books when they go to a local bookstore, so it's not a stretch to have an individual pay just a single dollar a month if they can afford it to access thousands upon thousands of books in addition to the great services our libraries provide on top of that. Those Albertans who utilize the great resources and services our libraries offer acknowledge that their use of the library materials puts additional wear and tear on the materials, that need to eventually be replaced. It is very reasonable to assume that those individuals who use libraries chip in a little extra to help replace and maintain the resources.

The members opposite seem to think individual Albertans don't want to take responsibility and help fund the services that they particularly use. I, however, along with my colleagues, believe that Albertans appreciate having the lowest personal income taxes in Canada and they don't really mind taking personal responsibility for the services they use.

Library boards have been permitted to charge fees for library cards since the 1930s, and I can't even seem to recall the fees for library cards ever being a barrier for an individual from utilizing our great libraries across the province. I've never received a single call from anyone in my constituency on that issue especially since Alberta's library boards are so willing to accommodate low-income individuals by waiving the library card fees for those people who are unable to pay. The only barrier I see with this motion is one that will prevent libraries from being able to have the choice on how to best serve their communities, to charge people who can afford to pay to add extra resources into the library system.

Mr. Speaker, I have a difficult time supporting this motion because it removes personal responsibility from individuals who use library services and will just hide the actual costs of using libraries in individuals' personal income taxes. We already have the mechanisms in place to ensure that low-income individuals in this province will continue to not have to concern themselves with paying a library card fee.

I do applaud the member on his motion and his desire to honour the Honourable late Lois Hole for her contributions to this province, but I do have to say that I believe this is the wrong way to do it, and I don't support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to express my support for this bill and quote again the Honourable Lois Hole in her comments about literacy. She said:

Without true literacy, democracy itself becomes impossible; the real battle of the 21st century, I believe, will be between those who would use ignorance to serve their own greed, and those who selflessly open the doors of knowledge to anyone who cares to listen.

By building a culture that venerates the principles of literacy, we may yet save ourselves from a grim future of literary haves and have-nots.

Mr. Speaker, I think access to knowledge in this knowledge age is a human right, it's an access also to health, and it's an issue of equity. Many of us here don't use libraries because we have access to the Internet, where we have, indeed, access through that vehicle to most of the books in the world. I for one have taken this for granted, and I recognize that many people find a barrier to go to an institution where they feel they will be charged even if they have that option. This access to free library services will provide people an opportunity to inform themselves, to acknowledge their human rights, to find their own sense of power in a culture that is so dominated by knowledge and expertise. There should be no barriers for people in this knowledge culture, and it should not be based on any ability to pay or a perceived barrier to pay. Those most in need clearly are those who are most excluded here.

From a health perspective knowledge accessible through libraries allows people to understand themselves, their world, their community resources for health more fully. It helps support through the contributions of those who can pay – and taxation has provided that facility – to make available to all dignity, opportunities for health, and for democracy.

Lois Hole would be proud to be honoured by this renewal of access beyond people's ability to pay, and I hope all members of this Legislature will support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by commending the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing forward this motion in a relatively clever way. It's a very noble and very proper idea. I don't think anyone here would argue either side of that because he's very skillfully combined two elements of greatness in this one motion. One, of course, is the great success of our public libraries throughout this province, and the second, of course, is the greatness of the late Lois Hole. It's very cleverly done how one element is crafted and couched with the other, but I think we need to separate those two streams for purposes of not getting too emotionally attached to the central issue here.

The late and very Honourable Lois Hole was a friend to many in this Assembly and to many outside the Assembly as well. I shared a tremendous friendship with her for some 30 years. I think that in the last three years alone I probably spoke with her or met with her something in the order of 200 times – that is no exaggeration; that is a fact – because I had the pleasure of being responsible for public libraries, and I know that libraries were her number one topic along with the arts and gardening and education and a number of other issues. When we got speaking about libraries, we talked about some of the important things that libraries stand for in our communities.

I think it's important to point out, Mr. Speaker, that our publicly run libraries have something in the order of 36,000 community-based programs throughout Alberta, which includes reading clubs and story time clubs and courses on various subjects from photography to resumé writing to what have you. In fact, almost half of our libraries serve communities of under 1,200 in population, where they are important information centres. So we are all, on all sides of the House, very supportive of our public libraries.

In fact, it would interest members here to know that in a typical year 30 million items can be borrowed or exchanged amongst the various libraries or borrowed and used or whatever. That's a phenomenal amount of usage amongst our libraries, and it's not just restricted to library borrowings but usership in general. As our population grows, so does the pressure grow on our libraries. I see libraries as being very innovative, very creative in how they're meeting the increased demand to share the treasures that they have. So Albertans are provided with first-class access to information in many different forms.

It's also important to note that in some provinces libraries cannot charge for cards, but they do charge for other services that sometimes we don't focus in on; for example, fees for interlibrary loans, video, online databases, audio materials, and so on. However, since 1930 libraries, according to the Libraries Act, have had the right to charge a fee. Not all libraries do that, obviously, but we need to allow those libraries at the local level the ability to make whatever decisions they want. So there's no argument about the importance of libraries. Now, the second great element, of course, is Her Honour the late Lois Hole, who came from a very strong rural background. She was a trustee, she was a chancellor of our University of Alberta, an award winning author of at least six gardening books that I'm aware of, a director of the Farm Credit Corporation, honorary chair for the 27th congress on criminal justice and for the children's millennium fund, and the list would go on for another half hour if I were to read it all. In 2003 she founded the Lois Hole library legacy program, so we see these two elements now coming together.

In fact, the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta arts award program was also established during her tenure, and I was very pleased through Community Development when I was in charge to have provided a $1 million grant in support of that awards program as part of our Alberta 2005 centennial partnership, so our centennial is woven inextricably into all of this as well.

I should point out to the members, particularly the new ones, that we have had many centennial legacy grant projects given around and to library causes. For example, the Claresholm library received a significant grant under the centennial program. The Beaverlodge public library also did. The Edmonton Strathcona branch library did. The Hinton municipal library received $580,000. Taber and district public library received $500,000. Vegreville public library received another $500,000. We also funded the Lieutenant Governor's walkway at Erin Ridge Park in St. Albert. That was a quarter of a million dollars. When Her Honour passed away, she knew about these projects that were out there and she knew what we had done. Not to forget, of course, the Lois Hole pavilion, the hospital pavilion at the Royal Alex, which we were there to unveil a few months ago.

We have also established other forms of recognition. For example, the province just recently added three more programs to honour Her Honour: the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship, the Lois Hole digital library, and the Lois Hole garden at the Legislature. I know that those are important projects to focus in on because they talk about the other great element.

Let me just conclude, then, by saying that while I support the thrust and the gist of where this member is coming from, I think rather than supporting the motion as it's worded, I would rather see some significant increases be made as soon as possible to the per capita rate for public libraries and also some increases to our library system boards. These are initiatives that I have worked on for the past couple of years, and budgets pending and dollars pending, maybe one day we'll be able to see those significant increases because those are the kind of increases that would maximize those boards' abilities to provide the kind of programming that they're after.

This motion in and of itself won't quite do that. In fact, according to a 2004 survey carried out by the Department of Community Development, 75 per cent – 75 per cent, Mr. Speaker – of the respondents either agreed or strongly agreed that libraries should be able to charge. In fact, they said that they should charge library card fees, and those fees range anywhere from $2 a year up to about $30 in the maximum case per year.

So if we sort of harness the debate and focus around what's important in this matter, we would agree that the recognition it offers to Her Honour is a noble gesture. We would agree that we should do whatever we can to attract more resources for the libraries, but waiving fees for library user cards won't do it, Mr. Speaker.

I've spent a number of years in this area, and I'm a passionate library user, as my record will indicate, and I'm so sorry that I'm not able to support this motion as it is currently worded. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join the debate on Motion 502 tonight, the elimination of charging fees for library cards as a tribute to the late Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole. Certainly, there have been a lot of discussions as we have debated this motion. I, too, would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing this forward. I think it's an excellent idea, it has merit, and it's time we certainly support it.

There is no doubt that at this time we can afford this. If we look at the last time the Alberta Liberals were in power, Alberta's first Public Libraries Act in 1907 decreed that all libraries "shall be open to the public free of all charges." I'm sure that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is going to continue with those ideas and make sure that everyone, regardless of income, does not have to check their pockets before they go into a public library, Mr. Speaker.

That's what this is all about. The late Lieutenant Governor would be supportive, just as she was supportive not only of public libraries but public education.

It is true that the late Lieutenant Governor was passionate about public libraries but also was passionate about public schools. She stood up occasion after occasion and spoke out for public schools, unlike this government and the current Minister of Education and the current Minister of Infrastructure, who are content to see good public schools closed against the wishes of the citizens in the surrounding communities. That's wrong. That is totally wrong.

Now, other hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly talk, quote, if it is free, it is not valued, end of quote. Well, does that also apply to airplane rides on the government's fleet? Certainly, that has been abused in the past. Let's stick a user fee on that, see how much the government members like it. I can't believe that they would advocate – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder was talking about this earlier in his remarks, Mr. Speaker: if it's free, it is not valued. Well, that certainly applies to a lot of things other than library cards. Perhaps, if there was a user fee of maybe $50 or $100 or $200 on these airplanes, then they would be in the hangar a lot more often and people would be taking commercial aircraft and maybe saving money in another manner and we could afford with little effort to finance Motion 502 by the hon. member.

An Hon. Member: A lot of them don't work when they get on an airplane.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, many people, hon. member, in the business community, whether they travel economy class or first class, get their work done from an airline seat just as well as we get our work done from this seat. So you don't have to travel on a government plane to get work done. That's just not correct, hon. member.

Now, the elimination of library fees. Full access to public libraries and promoting universal literacy, as I said, were passions of the late Lieutenant Governor. I would urge all members of this Assembly at this time to support this motion. We have the money. The amount of money that will be spent to support this motion is money well spent. If we have to cut back in other areas, I'm certain we can do it – we've done this before – but libraries should be accessible to everyone.

Hon. members of this Assembly, there's no access fee for us to go downstairs and utilize that wonderful library, so why should not the citizens of this province enjoy the same privileges that we do?

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to speak to Motion 502 this evening. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing forward this motion.

Mr. Speaker, this motion proposes that the government prevent libraries from charging a fee to individuals obtaining a library card. I believe that this motion has the potential to deprive libraries of a much relied upon source of revenue.

I share the hon. member's desire to recognize in a special way the unique and lasting contribution that Dr. Lois Hole made to our province. Dr. Hole had a passion for reading and learning, Mr. Speaker. She felt that libraries were an important source for communities and wanted to instill in all of us a love of reading. I acknowledge that libraries are important to lifelong learning. I am committed to encouraging her sentiment within Alberta and am pleased to hear the government outline its plans to create a new digital library at the University of Calgary in her memory. The creation of a new digital library is an appropriate way to honour the memory of our late Lieutenant Governor.

This new library will help bring Alberta's libraries into our province's second century. As we move forward, Mr. Speaker, digital resources are becoming more and more important to our way of life. Data can now be stored on CDs and DVDs as opposed to microfilm and microfiche. Data in digital form enjoys a greater longevity and can be stored in a much more compact and accessible format.

Building a new library provides a constant reminder of all that Dr. Hole held dear. This new Alberta-wide library provides students and faculty with access, regardless of their location, to all the resources held in our postsecondary institutions' libraries. This new library will remind the people of the legacy Dr. Hole left to Alberta in ways a library card cannot.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps in bringing forward this motion, the hon. member is concerned that library card fees limit the ability of people to access libraries. Libraries are considered by most to be a public good, the result of which has been the extensive subsidization of libraries in all jurisdictions across the country. It is important that all Albertans have access to libraries, as libraries benefit society in ways that cannot be underestimated. The cost of library cards is minimal. However, this cost helps the libraries raise small amounts of own-source revenue that assists the library in offering some of its important functions.

As the sponsoring member for this motion is from Edmonton, he may be aware of the Edmonton public library. Any Edmonton resident can go to a local library and get a library card for only $12, and those under the age of 18 are given library cards without charge. In addition to being able to access the library's collection at all 16 locations, an individual is automatically granted an Alberta library card, which gives the user access to interlibrary loan material from most Alberta libraries.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, a program is available for people with low incomes. Library card fees are waived by the Edmonton public library for those individuals who cannot afford it. Given that the fee for a library card is minimal, I cannot see how the fee could be conceived of as being unaffordable. Twelve dollars, if my math is correct, works out to $1 a month. That cost is only paid by those who can afford to pay it.

Mr. Speaker, $12 is equivalent to renting two videos, purchasing three gourmet coffees, or borrowing one softcover novel and is less than the admission to most movie theatres. Going to the library is one of the cheapest forms of entertainment available in this city. I can think of nowhere else where you can go and borrow as many videos, CDs, DVDs, or books as you want for only $12. Furthermore, the cost of an individual's library membership card is not based on his or her usage of the library. Most other entertainment services are priced on a per-use basis. However, libraries, being a public good, benefit from having a flat fee. Charging a flat user fee means that use is not discouraged as it does not cost to borrow more, the more they use the library.

This cost is not exuberant nor is it prohibitive, Mr. Speaker. It is important that children are exposed to libraries so that they can develop a love of reading at a young age. This love of reading will help them blossom into intelligent young adults with a desire to be lifelong readers and learners. Currently, children are exempt from paying library fees in Edmonton.

Her Honour was particularly concerned with helping Albertans. Therefore, when this House gives consideration to honouring Dr.

Lois Hole, we must attempt to understand which action will have the largest impact. Given that the fees charged for library cards are not prohibitive to users, I would believe that the creation of a new and modern library will be of greater benefit to Albertans in the long run than free library cards would be. The creation of a digital library will leave a lasting footprint on Alberta's library system. This is the type of project that will have the impact of literacy that Her Honour desired to see in Alberta. This library will ensure that Albertans have access to the most advanced resources and that these important resources from our first century can be enjoyed and accessed throughout our second century.

While I applaud the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his understanding of the importance of libraries, I would suggest that if he truly wanted to honour the legacy of Dr. Lois Hole, he support the government in its endeavours to create a digital library. This House should not agree to this motion, Mr. Speaker, as it will not enhance Albertans' ability to access libraries, and it will reduce an important source of funding to Alberta's libraries. I believe the member has honourable intentions in bringing forward this motion but has failed to think of the unintended consequences that such an action may have. Given the importance of libraries to our society, I do not feel that we can run the risk of reducing their funding without the realization of a corresponding benefit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a privilege for me to rise and speak about this topic, and I think people are having selective memory about Her Honour Lois Hole and what she stood for. Speech after speech she connected the two themes of education and poverty. I've heard many of the speeches, and in one speech that she recently gave at a banquet of the Mahatma Gandhi Foundation for World Peace, at which she received an award in the name of Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr., she talked about poverty. She said:

I cannot help but mourn all the progress the human race has lost to poverty. How many brilliant young minds are withering this very moment because of malnutrition or lack of access to education . . .

The truth is, the poor people of this earth need our help. And since it is our children who have the potential to build a better tomorrow, part of our help must come in the form of investment in education.

Then she quoted from one of her personal heroes, Nelson Mandela, who once said:

Education is the great engine of personal development. It is through education that the daughter of a peasant can become a doctor, that a son of a mineworker can become the head of the mine, that a child of farm workers can become the president of a great nation. It is what we make out of what we have, not what we are given, that separates one person from another.

Lois went on and just said this, and I end with this quote.

This quote [of Nelson Mandela] is a great inspiration for me, and reinforces my determination to support public education and public libraries here in Canada and in all the corners of the globe.

Mr. Speaker, I knew Lois Hole quite well also, and I invited her to participate in an organization we formed in the city of Edmonton called the Quality of Life Commission. For a number of years we gathered stories from people living in poverty, and one story I remember quite distinctly was about a young, single father with two children. He was on social assistance, and he had to walk miles to attend a job training course here in the inner city because he couldn't afford to buy a bus pass. He couldn't afford to feed his own children. He couldn't afford the $12 for a library card. He said to us that all he could do with his children was simply walk by museums and other public institutions where there were user fees because he couldn't afford them. So the issues of affordability and accessibility to libraries are issues that Lois Hole would have been concerned about. I think that this proposal, this motion is truly a motion that honours the memory of Lois Hole.

Why should a person experience the indignity of having to go into a library and beg for a library card? Of course, in Edmonton the public libraries, if you do not have adequate income, waive the cost of the library card, but why should a person have to go through the indignity of having to beg for a library card? We should enable all Albertans to participate fully as citizens in this province and be able to go to a public library and read the books and participate.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to join in the debate on Motion 502 this evening. It is an interesting motion, and I appreciate the opportunity to share some of my thoughts. I think that we would be hard-pressed to find any member in the Legislature who would not at some point in their life have used a public library to find information or for entertainment or for research of some kind.

I want to say that when the discussion comes to the Hon. Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole, I had the privilege of serving with Lois on the school board for many years and have known her for a lot of my political life. We became very close friends, and at no time did she ever mention to me that she felt it was unnecessary to have fees. We talked extensively about her passion for education, her passion for reading, her passion for learning, and her passion especially for libraries. Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any individual that dedicated her life to libraries more than Lois Hole. I again repeat to you that I at no time heard her say that she believed that for individuals that used libraries it was important that they had free access.

I can speak of rural Alberta, and presently we are in a situation where the government does support municipalities for library operations. We are very fortunate in rural Alberta to have a network of library systems that operate very effectively and efficiently and allow access to those libraries with minimal or no cost to the patrons that use them.

We also have . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two representatives from the Alberta Institute of Agrologists. Agrologists are scientists who provide scientific services in environmental protection and agriculture production. Representing the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, which boasts over 1,500 members, are incoming president Mr. Dave Lloyd, and Mr. Ken Davies, the executive director and registrar. Also, from the Department of Human Resources and Employment Mr. Adrian Pritchard, the manager of professions and occupations. As you see, they have risen, and maybe I could ask everybody together to give them the warm applause of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

Second Reading

Bill 17
Agrology Profession Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 17, the Agrology Profession Act.

I would like to acknowledge the significant contribution of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, which has worked closely with the staff of Human Resources and Employment to develop this new legislation. The membership of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists strongly supports the provisions contained in this bill. In addition, stakeholders from government, private industry, other professional associations, academic institutions also support this proposed legislation.

The Agrology Profession Act will repeal and replace the current Agrologists Act with new legislation that provides for greater public accountability, transparency, and equity in the governance of Alberta's agrology profession. The act follows other professional statutes, notably the Regulated Forestry Profession Act, in making the agrology profession's governing legislation consistent with Alberta government policy regarding the self-regulation of professional associations.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, there are over 1,500 professional agrologists in Alberta who provide professional services in agriculture and in the environmental sector, which are vital to our Alberta's economy. This act was developed to enhance the quality of agrology services in the province by improving the regulation and professional standards of Alberta's agrologists. Ensuring the highest standards of agrology practice contributes to the protection of Alberta's environment as well as the protection of agricultural land, crops, and livestock.

The Agrology Profession Act is modelled on administrative registration, continuing competence, professional conduct, business arrangement, title protection, regulatory and by-law provisions of the Regulated Forestry Profession Act.

I would like to go over some of the key highlights in this legislation, Mr. Speaker. An important part of this legislation is that it strengthens the role of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists. This professional organization ensures that its members are qualified and competent to provide knowledge and advice on agriculture, food, and associated natural resources. The act specifies the requirements of an annual report and increased public membership as well as the composition role, responsibilities, and delegating powers of the institute's governing council, registrar, committees, and tribunals. The act also specifies the institute's application and registration requirements, including the mandatory registration of those persons who meet the institute's academic, professional, and experience requirements.

The act strengthens the professional conduct of the institution members by specifying the requirements for complaint investigation, hearings, and appeals, the use of alternate resolution processes, and the procedures relating to decision and disposition of records. The act also requires that the institution comply with record retention requirements of the Personal Information Protection Act to ensure personal privacy. It also follows other professional legislation in allowing complaints to be referred to the office of the Ombudsman.

The act also specifies the protected titles, words, and abbreviations which may only be used by the institution members. There are also penalties and injunctions associated with the illegal use of such titles, words, and abbreviations. When you see the letters in quotations "PAG" behind a name, you know that you are hiring or working with an agrologist who meets the highest standards of professionalism.

Another positive aspect of the legislation is that it allows for the establishment of subcategories of institution memberships such as the agrology technologist. This is important because it enables these individuals to become institute members and make a positive contribution to its activities.

In conclusion, the Agrology Profession Act establishes clear accountability requirements and provides authority for the Alberta agrology profession. It responds to the public expectations for more transparent and consistent professional legislation, and it strengthens a profession that provides important services to Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to move adjournment of this debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4
Alberta Science and Research Authority
Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005.

This amendment act follows up on the commitment in the 2004 Speech from the Throne allowing for the establishment of an information and communication technology institute as well as a life sciences institute. ICT and the life sciences are important components of the province's innovation agenda and are critical to our future prosperity and quality of life.

We already have three successful research institutes operating in the province. These are the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute. The proposed institutes will mirror the operating structure of these organizations and facilitate increased collaboration on shared research agendas. We have seen excellent results come out of the existing research institutes; for example, the strategic focus for investments in each of the institutes, the Agricultural Funding Consortium, the initiation of joint initiatives like bioenergy and blended fibre research and development as well as EnergyINet.

It is important that we maintain specific expertise in key areas like agriculture, energy, and forestry, but it is also important that we look to expand our capacity by establishing research institutes that focus on research and development that cuts across sectors and require multiple-disciplinary teams to find solutions. By establishing research institutes in ICT and life sciences, we can expect to bring more collaboration to our common innovation agenda and to find more cross-sector opportunities.

A life sciences institute will show a further commitment to fulfilling the life sciences strategy that was approved by government in March 2003. We will focus on such areas as bioproducts, which includes bioenergy, biochemicals, and biomaterials. It also focuses on health innovations, including BSE and prion science. It'll focus on sustainable resource management in water, climate change, biodiversities, and sustainable production on the land. As well, it will focus on the platform technologies including genomics, nanotechnology, and bioinformatics.

It will provide direction for the province as we look to build our capacity and our capability in this important sector. An ICT institute will provide necessary leadership and co-ordination to further our ICT strategy, and it will drive the implementation of that strategy. It will also build on previous government investments in iCORE, which of course is the Informatics Circle of Research Excellence, and the Alberta SuperNet as well as postsecondary education opportunities in ICT. It will focus on areas such as leading the development of a focused strategic plan for ICT, it will develop and implement R and D and commercialization programs consistent with that plan, and it will work with other provincial research institutions to ensure that that plan fits within a provincial, national, and international context. Lastly, it will focus on attracting world-class ICT researchers to Alberta.

Significant opportunities exist for the province in ICT and the life sciences, and establishing research institutes to provide strategic advice and direction is a logical and necessary step. This is important legislation to ensure our future economic prosperity and quality of life, and I encourage the Assembly to provide their support for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 4.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To begin, while we as the Official Opposition do not disagree with the proposed amendments to the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, I want to briefly comment on the following issues. First, I would like to highlight the fact that both the Alberta information and communications technology institute and the Alberta life sciences institute have significant public policy implications and can have a profound effect on people's lives in areas like modes of service delivery as in government, education, and health and privacy and security issues, commercialization potential, applicability, and so on. Therefore, I strongly urge this government to remember that what drives us all here is what makes life easier, healthier, and more enjoyable for all Albertans, and that research has to be geared to and directed towards this outcome.

If this amendment is meant to streamline the operation and expand the scope of the Alberta Science and Research Authority to benefit the people of this province, then we're for it, and we will support this initiative. However, it is still necessary to emphasize that this government insists on excluding arts, humanities, and social sciences, and that's possibly because it perceives them not to have immediate market value. By contrast, the Alberta Liberal platform in 2004 advocated funding for these areas through the surplus revenues.

Also, the fact that the three existing research institutes – namely, the Agricultural Research Institute, the Energy Research Institute, and the Forestry Research Institute – have failed to consistently provide publicly accessible annual reports is disturbing. Such reports may be provided to the minister as per the legislation, but that's not adequate in this day and age, Mr. Speaker. The public should be able to access this information freely, timely, and efficiently. It shouldn't cost the ministry much to post these reports on its website, for example.

Lastly, there is also a concern that all board members of these institutes are appointed by the minister. Appointing officials seems to be the preference of this government today. At least one of these board members must be an MLA, and the chair of each of these institutes must also be an MLA. These are clearly patronage appointments, Mr. Speaker. What are the chances that an opposition MLA would be invited to join one of these boards? Highly unlikely. These appointments are political in nature, and these individuals may not be the best candidates for that job.

So, to conclude, the Official Opposition agrees in principle with adding the two institutes under ASRA, but we want to ensure more transparency and accountability. The Official Opposition is not here to complain and whine. We're willing to work with the minister if he can assure us that these amendments are useful to Martha and Henry and that they are beneficial to the average Albertan, not to a select group of stakeholders or certain industries which stand to gain from cheap, government subsidized, market-targeted research initiatives.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science to close debate.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just starting to look at the website for the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, and it provides a wealth of information that the hon. member was just requesting. The same information would be there for the other institutes as well, but I will take the opportunity and read his comments and at committee provide some further comments of clarification.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 5

Family Law Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to move Bill 5, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2005, for second reading.

The Family Law Amendment Act makes several changes to strengthen the Family Law Act before it is proclaimed on October 1, 2005. Overall, the amendments fall into three categories. First, amendments have been made to joint guardianship provisions of the Family Law Act so that mothers and fathers are given a more equal opportunity to be guardians of their children; second, the amendments clarify the powers and responsibilities of persons who are guardians of their children; and third, there are a number of minor housekeeping amendments to correct small errors and oversights. I will speak to each of these in turn.

Section 5 of the amendment act amends section 20 of the Family Law Act. Once proclaimed, the Family Law Act will repeal and replace the Domestic Relations Act. The joint guardianship provisions of the Family Law Act are modelled after the joint guardianship provisions of the Domestic Relations Act. Every child needs to have a guardian until the child reaches the age of majority. The current provisions provide that the mother is always the guardian of a child. The father is a guardian only if he is married to the mother or if he lives with the mother for 12 consecutive months during which time the child was born. In other words, the current provisions say that the mother and father are joint guardians of their children if there's a sufficient relationship between the parents. If there is not a sufficient relationship, there is a default to the mother as the sole guardian of the child. If the father is not automatically a guardian, he can apply to the court to be appointed as a guardian.

The Domestic Relations Act provisions have been criticized by the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta for failing to treat fathers and mothers equally in their ability to be the guardians of their children automatically and so are contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The amendment to section 20 of the Family Law Act will treat fathers and mothers more equally in terms of who is automatically a guardian of the children.

The current relationship provisions for acquiring guardianship are contained in subsection (2). Subsection (2) says that the mother and the father are both the guardians of the child where the parents are married, cohabited with each other for 12 months during which time the child was born, or are adult interdependent partners at the time of the child's birth. The major change to the relationship provisions is the addition of adult interdependent partnerships to the list of relationships. Where any of these relationships exist, both the mother and father will automatically be guardians of their children. Most parents will fall into one of these categories. However, subsection (3) changes the default provisions where there is not a relationship between the mother and father. Instead of defaulting to the mother as sole guardian, the law will default to both parents until the child acquires a usual residence with one or both parents. At that point, the parent or parents with whom the child usually resides will become the guardian or guardians.

Subsection (1) allows the court to make an order or the parents to enter into an agreement which would be different than the legislation would otherwise provide.

Subsection (4) provides that if a child has resided with a parent for a year, that parent continues to be a guardian even if the child no longer resides with that parent. By defaulting to both parents until usual residence is established, either parent is able to make important medical decisions.

I'd like to reiterate that most parents will automatically be guardians by virtue of the relationship provisions of the legislation. What the amendment does is create a level playing field for parents where both the mother and father have an interest in being involved in their child's life and are willing to assume that responsibility.

For fathers in short-term relationships who may not want to be a guardian, the usual residency provisions will allow the mother to become the child's sole guardian without difficulty. If the father does wish to be a guardian, the parents can enter into an agreement regarding guardianship powers.

The amendments to section 20 are consistent with the principle that both parents should be encouraged to take an interest in and responsibility for their children and that collaboration between parents in raising their children is usually in the best interests of the children, and they address the Charter equality concerns in the clearest possible fashion.

Section 6 of the amendment act amends section 21 of the Family Law Act. Currently the Family Law Act lists the responsibilities and powers of guardians together in subsection 21(5). The intention of the legislation is that guardians have certain responsibilities that are mandatory and that they have a number of powers that may be exercised in order to fulfill their responsibilities. To ensure that the difference between powers and responsibilities is sufficiently clear in the legislation, the proposed amendment separates the two.

Responsibilities will now be found in subsection (5). Powers will now be found in subsection (6). Currently the exercise of powers is to be done in a manner consistent with the evolving capacity of the child. That remains unchanged, although this is now placed in its own subsection (7). Simply put, this means that a guardian is expected to treat an infant differently than a five year old, a five year old differently than a 12 year old, and so on.

Also, as is currently the case, subsections 21(2) and (4) do not apply to decisions of child welfare directors. The right to be consulted about decisions, for example, is inconsistent with the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, rather than the Family Law Act, governs the rights of parents and guardians whose children are in care, and that remains unchanged.

The remaining amendments are housekeeping amendments that correct small errors and oversights in the original wording of the Family Law Act. I'll go through each of those briefly.

Section 2 amends section 1(o). A respondent will now mean a person against whom proceedings are brought under this act rather than a person who answers a response to an application under this part. Under the current definition a person would have to respond to an application to be a respondent, and that needed to be clarified.

Section 3 amends section 3(2)(a). This adds section 10 to the list of sections over which the provincial court does not have jurisdiction. The provincial court does not currently have jurisdiction for constitutional reasons over section 9, which is the ability to make the declaration of parentage for all purposes. Section 10 allows the court to confirm, set aside, or make a new declaration where there is new evidence. If the provincial court does not have jurisdiction over section 9, it should not have jurisdiction over section 10.

Section 3 amends section 3(2)(b) by repealing clause (b). This subsection currently prevents the provincial court from making trusteeship orders under the Family Law Act for constitutional reasons. Since all of the trusteeship provisions of the Family Law Act were repealed by proclamation of the new Minors' Property Act, this subsection is no longer required.

Section 4 amends section 8(1)(d). Section 8 establishes the circumstances in which a male is presumed to be the father of a child. The language of section 8 is being changed to reflect a similar change to the language that is going to be used in section 20(2)(d), which is the relationship subsection establishing automatic guardianship. Section 7 amends section 23(7) by striking out "section 24" and substituting "section 25." This speaks for itself. The wrong section number was inadvertently used.

Section 8 repeals section 51(6). Section 51(6) repeats section 51(5) and is, therefore, redundant and is being repealed.

Section 9 amends section 66(3)(a) by adding "or" after "sum." Currently the section allows a court to make an order for a lump-sum payment periodically which does not make sense as these are intended to be alternative orders. The amendment will allow the court to order a lump-sum payment or periodic payments.

Section 10 amends section 77(4)(a) by striking out "as" and substituting "including those." The current language would require the child support guidelines which are being developed by regulation to identify all the possible changes of circumstance that could justify a variation order. We just want to be able to specify some circumstances that would justify variation. We do not want the regulations to be the exclusive source of circumstances that would justify variation.

Section 11 amends section 87(c) by adding "judgment, finding or declaration" after "order." The intent of this section is to allow one court to admit into evidence findings made by another court, and we felt that just using the word "order" was not broad enough.

Section 12 amends section 107 by adding a regulatory power to allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to define "party" for the purposes of the act. Section 1 provides that "party" will be defined in the regulations but that power was accidentally left off the list of regulatory powers in section 107.

Section 13(a) amends section 108(5) by striking out “terminated” and substituting “set aside.” This subsection allows the Parentage and Maintenance Act order to be dealt with under the Family Law Act. Terminating an order is not available under the Family Law Act. The correct remedy is setting aside an order. This amendment corrects the language used.

Section 13(b) amends section 108(7) by striking out reference to “access enforcement order under this Act” and substituting “enforcement order made under Division 4 of Part 2.” This amendment corrects the language used since enforcement orders under the Family Law Act are not called access enforcement orders.

Mr. Speaker, this gives an overview of Bill 5. As I’ve indicated, it amends several points in the Family Law Act so that when we proclaim it, it will be clear and easier to implement. It’s a huge undertaking to revise family law in Alberta, and we want to ensure that we do it right.

I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 5, Family Law Amendment Act, 2005, presented by the hon. Minister of Justice. We would agree with almost everything he has said. There are lots of housekeeping changes put forward in the rewriting of this act, which is very helpful in clarifying language. I’m not going to follow and mirror the journey that our hon. minister has . . .

An Hon. Member: Thank you.

Dr. B. Miller: You’re welcome.

Most of it’s quite acceptable. But I just wanted to speak for a few minutes about the central core of the bill. The purpose of the amendment is to correct the inequality between the mother and the father in respect to guardianship. Of course, the rationale for such equalization is that differential treatment between mothers and fathers is contrary to the equality provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so this is something that we ought to do.

The most important change is to section 20, which in its present form assumes that the mother is always the guardian of the child, and the father is recognized as the guardian only under certain circumstances. So this is, of course, a serious question. When is a father or a mother recognized as the guardian of a child? I think that all would agree that really the test for guardianship is the best interests of the child. The law should enable the recognition of guardianship in the best interests of the child. I have no doubt that that is the motivation behind this bill: to recognize the best interests of the child and to recognize the quality of a mother and a father.

So in the proposed rewriting of section 20, “the mother and the father of a child are both the guardians of the child where,” then there follows a list of categories defining the grounds for the recognition of guardianship and the principle of equality is honoured. In general, the mother and father of the child are both guardians where the parents are married or living together, cohabiting. If they are not married or cohabiting, if they’ve separated, then the parent with whom the child resides is the sole guardian, or both parents are guardians where the child resides with each of them for “equivalent periods of time.”

I assume that when we go into Committee of the Whole, we’ll get to debate some of these points. This particular point about “equivalent periods of time” I’m not sure about. If one of the parents is working in the far north and is only home a quarter of the time, does the parent lose his or her eligibility as a guardian? It seems that there might be a problem there. I realize that the development of these definitions and rules is driven by actual court cases, so it’s important to make these changes. The bottom line is the nurture and care and love for the child – that’s what’s important – and our courts, I think, should have the flexibility to assess a variety of possible arrangements in respect to guardianship in order to ensure that the child is really cared for. That’s what’s important.

Let me add that there is one interesting element here that I’m sure the government members haven’t thought about, or maybe they’ve thought about it but don’t want to think about it, and that is: what will be the implication of the legislation before the House of Commons on same-sex marriage when that becomes law?

Now, Ontario anticipated this and went ahead and changed the language of 85 statutes, removing all gender-specific language. It seems to me that Alberta will have to do the same thing eventually, so maybe we should anticipate that and begin to work on that now because among the many family arrangements that are recognized and should be recognized in our society, same-sex relationships should be recognized too. They are relationships that involve guardianship and the nurture of children. So apart from adoption issues it seems to me that two women living together should be recognized as guardians as much as two men living together raising children.

Well, the amendment of section 21 – this is the last thing I’ll say – separating out the responsibilities of parents in respect of the child from the powers that a guardian may exercise is quite fine. It looks good, but I’m not sure what difference it makes to fix it up this way. But I really like the content there, the content that all parents in Alberta should become aware that there are responsibilities and, indeed, there are powers in the exercise of being parents.

There is an addition of subsection (7). I agree with the intention of this, that guardians should exercise their parental powers of daily decision-making “in a manner consistent with the evolving capacity of the child.” I’m not sure exactly what this means. The minister talked a little bit about that. Secondly, I don’t know how it would ever be enforced, unless there’s going to be a proposal that we should all have parenting courses, which is probably a good idea. Certainly parents have a lot to learn about raising a child, and we have to make decisions in relationship to the evolving capacity of children.

I guess my final comment is just that it’s difficult to interpret a bill like this when it all is coming out of court experience, and it’s difficult to understand the rationale behind specific clauses here. In general, it’s a good amendment, so we support it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I’d like to thank the hon. member for his general support of the amendment. A brief comment regarding guardianship in situations where only one of the two parties who would be parents is either the mother or the father. Under the Family Law Act we’re talking about mothers and fathers. It makes little difference whether you’re talking about an opposite-sex or same-sex situation as it relates to parents who wish to be guardians. If there is a situation where only one of the parties is a mother or a father of the child in question, then it is necessary for either would-be parent to adopt. In that particular case the guardianship provisions flow from the adoption, and that particular situation and the rights and obligations, if you will, are found under the adoption legislation here in Alberta. They’re not found under the Family Law Act. So that is where one looks to find the answer to that particular question.

I would now call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for a very enlightening evening of good and thorough debate. That being the case, I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:37 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, today marks the 99th anniversary of the opening of the First Session of the First Legislature in Alberta in 1906. Also on this day in 1972 the first radio and television coverage of regular sittings of the Alberta Legislature began.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Speaker graciously hosted a special ceremony in the rotunda of our Legislature to mark the beginning of 15 days of celebration called Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie to highlight the contributions of the francophone community across Canada and to mark International Francophone Day on March 20.

The president of l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta was present in the rotunda to celebrate with us. He is in your gallery this afternoon with members of his executive and members of two francophone provincial associations. It is my pleasure to introduce them to the Assembly. I ask them to stand and remain standing as I call their names: M. Jean Johnson, president, Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta; three of his four vice-presidents, Ms Dolorès Nolette, Ms Adèle Poratto, M. Patrice Gauthier; the executive director of the association, M. Joël Lavoie. Also accompanying the group are M. Zacharie Tardif, the president of the francophone youth organization, and Mme Agathe St-Pierre, the president of the seniors' francophone group. Also accompanying them is the director of the Francophone Secrétariat, M. Denis Tardif. Please join me in giving them the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Brigadier Kuldip Singh Randhawa and his wife, Mrs. Amarjit Randhawa. They're seated in your gallery. Brigadier Randhawa is a professional engineer, recently retired from the Indian army after 30 years of distinguished service. He's a recipient of the distinguished service award of the government of India. The Randhawas are visiting here, and of course they also stopped over in Ireland on their way to Canada. They're spending the next two weeks with their family and friends in Alberta to discover and enjoy the beauty of this province and the hospitality of their friends. As I said, they're seated in your gallery, and I would now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Jean-Michel Halfon. Mr. Halfon is country manager for Canada of Pfizer Global Pharmaceuticals and the president and chief executive officer of Pfizer Canada Inc., the Canadian operations of Pfizer Inc., one of the world's leading research-based pharmaceutical companies. I had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Halfon today to discuss research and development innovation and Alberta's 20-year strategic plan and how we meet the innovation agenda in Alberta and the role that Pfizer might be able to play in assisting us to do that. Mr. Halfon is joined today by Laura Fitzgerald, the senior manager of patient access and health policy in Alberta and a resident of Edmonton. I'd like them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have family in the gallery today, and I would like to introduce them to you and through you to the other Members of the Legislative Assembly. My cousin Mae Lake and her husband, Jim, are here with us today as well as my wife, Gwen Green. Now, Mae and I grew up in Portreeve, Saskatchewan, but Mae now lives with Jim in Swift Current. We're glad to have her here as a tourist in Alberta and, as a matter of fact, on the day that we actually debate a tourism bill. How about that? I wonder if we could give them the warm, traditional welcome as we normally do for guests of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from the Alberta College of Social Workers. They are Mr. Rod Adachi, executive director of the college, and council person Ms Linda Golding. I'm so pleased that they could join us today, which is during Social Work Week. My ministry knows well the important work of social workers, as do many other government ministries, nonprofit organizations, and the private sector. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to introduce to you and all members of this Assembly a group of 24 bright grade 6 students from the Clive school. They are accompanied by Mr. Robert MacKinnon, their teacher. He is here on his 17th trip to the Legislature – this is my first group coming here – accompanied by Mrs. Shauna Philip, a student teacher at Clive, and parent helpers Mr. Scott Clark, Susanne Schweer, Mona Woods, Alice Green, Margaret Reynolds, and Denne Rowley, their bus driver. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House four young people who've been pushing hard for tuition relief in Alberta, part of an organization that has been doing so for years, student union executives from the University of Alberta: Jordan Blatz, president; Alex Abboud, vice-president external; Graham Lettner, president-elect; and Samantha Power, vice-president external elect. I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fine young woman who's been an active philanthropist on the local, provincial, national, and international scales. I will give more detail on the Mountain of Heroes Foundation, which she cofounded, during my member's statement on Thursday. This committed Albertan has also managed a small business on a global scale, organizing speaking engagements for children, charities, and corporations and guiding trekkers on adventures from the Rockies to the Himalayas. She's been invaluable to the constituency of Calgary-Lougheed, and she's been invaluable to me personally, professionally, and politically as well as to a little puppy named MacGyver. I'm speaking, of course, of my wonderful wife, Jennifer, who is in the members' gallery, and I will ask her to stand now to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Leila Houle of Goodfish, who was recently crowned Miss Edmonton. Ms Houle is flying to Toronto this evening to compete in the national Miss Canada competition later this week. Leila also works with Treaty 6 chiefs and is a tremendous role model and an ambassador for Alberta's youth. She's accompanied by her very proud father, Ernest Houle, a private consultant from Goodfish. They are joined by Donna Potts-Johnson, the director of social development for the Samson Cree nation, and Susan Houle, a student at the U of A, also from Goodfish. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

Impacts of Oil Sands Expansion

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Fort McMurray serves as the litmus test for the lack of infrastructure support for municipalities shown by this government. Fort McMurray has insufficient schools, hospitals, roads, sewage treatment, and affordable housing. Like other rapidly growing municipalities, it is struggling to cope while the provincial government swims in oil revenues. To the minister of infrastructure: will the government commit to improving the dangerous, indeed often deadly, highway heading to Fort McMurray before approving further oil sands expansion?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we want to be in the position where we work with the oil companies to ensure that these expansions can take place. In the past two to three years there probably have been four to five different examples of plant expansions in the Fort McMurray region, and certainly that has put a tremendous amount of pressure on the infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, we are currently looking at what to do exactly with highway 63. We're over halfway finished paving highway 881, which provides an excellent route for trucks to come up to Fort McMurray. We're in the process of putting in staging areas that allow these huge loads that are being transported up to Fort McMurray to have a place where they can pull over and wait until the early hours of the morning, when it is their time to go through Fort McMurray.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd love to be able to stand here and say that we had all the answers to what is going on in Fort McMurray, but the best things that I can say are: we're working with the oil companies, we're working with the municipality of Fort McMurray, and we will find solutions to this very good issue to have.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the government commit to providing the hospitals, schools, roads, and sewage treatment facilities that are so badly needed in Fort McMurray prior to further expansion of the oil sands plants?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate my answer. We are working with the oil companies. Certainly, we recognize that Fort McMurray has seen unprecedented growth, and we will continue to work with them to build schools, to build hospitals, to build the necessary infrastructure. As a matter of fact, as you well know and the hon. Premier announced a while ago, there'll be $3 billion that will go to the municipal infrastructure program. Fort McMurray will receive around $50 million to $60 million to $70 million, depending on how fast they grow. So there's a lot of infrastructure that can be built for that, but the key to this is working together, finding solutions for just an absolutely great problem to have for Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The minister refers to the $3 billion they've committed, but there's an $8 billion infrastructure deficit. Given that, when are we going to see the remaining funding put forward to address the issues faced by municipalities?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the estimate for the municipal infrastructure deficit was around $3 billion. The $8 billion that the hon. member refers to is actually included in this three-year business plan, where we're looking at spending $9 billion in the next three years.

The Deputy Speaker: Second main question of the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has bragged that it is committed to sustainable development: the balancing of social, environmental, health, and economic values that will preserve the quality of life and natural capital for future generations. Fort McMurray is our test case on who is calling the shots on resource extraction and its impacts on the people and the environment in this province. My question to the Premier: how is the government accounting to citizens for the total impact – social, environmental, and economic – of this development?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation pointed out, we are dealing with this matter. This was not unanticipated. Certainly, it's been known for some time that some $97 billion Canadian worth of new construction will take place in the Fort McMurray area relative to the oil sands by the year – what? I think it's 2010. This is a phenomenal amount of construction.

There will be a meeting in short order, as I understand it – I believe it's April 8 – involving a number of government ministers including the MLA for the area, the hon. Minister of Environment, the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, the minister of human resources, industry players, as I mentioned, and other people from the private sector to address the infrastructure issue.

We have identified some priority areas. Certainly, one of the priority areas is the area of housing. The hon. minister has made available some public lands to accommodate more housing. Another area is the area of health and education. Both ministers are working to make sure there are adequate schools.

The other area of interest is the area of transportation, ostensibly highway 63 and highway 881. I can tell you with respect to highway 881 that the paving of that highway and the upgrading of that highway is proceeding at a very rapid rate as well as the upgrading of highway 63, plus infrastructure north of Fort McMurray to accommodate additional oil sands development.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this government show leadership by shifting from its focus on GDP and begin to measure genuine progress indicators, GPI, or the triple bottom line, to assess the true cost accounting of these activities?

Mr. Klein: It's a good question, and it's a very subjective one, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if this hon. member is willing to go to Calgary right now and tell Mr. George of Suncor, "Stop your expansion," or if he's willing to go to Calgary and talk to Mr. Markin of Canadian Natural Resources and say: "You cannot expand. It's against the law. It's against my law." It's against the doctor's law to expand. As I say, the question is very subjective. Now, if this hon. member will stand up and go to Calgary and tell these people that if the Liberals are elected, you will not have expansion until all the infrastructure needs have been addressed, then I invite him to do that.

1:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the commitment of this government to share the responsibility for climate change and to reduce greenhouse gases, when will the government put the brakes on emissions?

Mr. Klein: I think we're doing very well. The hon. Minister of Environment may wish to supplement, Mr. Speaker, but certainly in conjunction with industry we have brought in legislation which addresses greenhouse gases and global warming but does it in a much more reasonable way than the internationally contrived Kyoto protocols.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To supplement what the Premier has said, of course, in actual fact in oil sands development emission intensity has gone down by 50 per cent because of new technology that was made right here in Alberta. So technology is a key principle as we continue in terms of protecting the environment with new technology, and that's exactly what we delivered with the federal government at COP 10 in Argentina recently.

The Deputy Speaker: Third main Official Opposition question. The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Still on the topic of Fort McMurray, as has been noted in this House before, because of the oil sands Alberta's energy reserves rival Saudi Arabia. Such potential. And it's great to see the potential continuing to be realized, but Alberta citizens are being shut out of the work this bonanza is creating. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what plans does the minister have to revamp the apprenticeship program to ensure an ongoing supply of trained Albertans to fill the jobs in the oil sands?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member would know or should know that Alberta's apprenticeship program is the model of this nation. In fact, the apprenticeship program in this province produces 20 to 25 per cent of the new apprentices and new journeymen in this country at a red seal level, which is a very high qualification level.

Do we need more people? Absolutely, we do. There's no shortage of place in our advanced education institutions for apprenticeships. The shortage is in placement. So we're working with industry to encourage industry to hire more people so that we can enrol them in apprenticeship programs, and we'll continue to work with them to make sure that those places are available so that Albertans can have access to the advanced education they want and to the jobs they need.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since the number of people going into the apprenticeship program has doubled in the last 10 years, how come there's only been a 22 per cent increase in the number of certified apprentices coming out the other end?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are all sorts of reasons why people go into programs and perhaps choose to change programs. In fact, in our advanced education system you'll find that no matter what program people enter, a very large percentage of them change programs before they exit. That is not a bad thing. That's called choice. That's called finding your passion. That's called finding the place where you want to advance your career and advance your education. Is the hon. member opposite suggesting that once a person enters a program, that's it for them? That's what they should do for the rest of their lives?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as I continue to ask the questions, can the Minister of Advanced Education explain why the government calculates its apprenticeship completion rate using second-year apprentices as the baseline when to use first year would make the numbers look so much worse?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that, and I'd be very interested in reading Hansard to find out what the hon. member just said and in finding the answer to that.

The Deputy Speaker: First main question for the leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fallout of the province's complete bungling of the ambulance transfer agreement continues. Today the city of Red Deer launched a major public appeal urging the citizens to get involved to hold the government accountable. The city of Red Deer says that the so-called government fix announced last week leaves them facing a $1.6 million shortfall in 2005 and a $4.1 million shortfall in 2006. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier justify saddling the citizens of Red Deer with a likely tax hike to pay for ambulance services when it was the Conservative bungling of the transfer that led to this unacceptable deficit in the first place?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, just as a preamble before I turn it over to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, there are claims, undoubtedly, from some communities, including Red Deer, that they were over- or undercompensated. The fact is that these claims are based on cost estimates that are now being verified, and that's why we suspended the transfer. We need to know what the actual costs are before going further, and that's why we embarked on the two pilot projects in the Peace region and the Palliser region, where they are ready and set to go. But I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we wanted to get dollars out as quickly as possible to the some 300 municipalities that weren't covered in the two pilot projects. When you use a per capita methodology, there may be some that gain more and some that gain less. In the circumstance with Red Deer, Red Deer had worked and had verified their figures with the regional health authority. However, over this next year with the governance advocacy and advisory group we'll review not only the discovery projects in Palliser and Peace, but we will review actually why ambulance services and costs in some areas were widely different from some of the other areas.

Certainly, in the case of the city of Red Deer they have an excellent ambulance system. No doubt that will continue, and no doubt the advisory council will be very interested in working with the city of Red Deer and all other municipalities across Alberta to confirm just exactly what the costs are, what the methodology should be. If, in fact, we assume responsibility through regional health authorities for delivering ambulance services, we will know full well what the costs are and be fully accountable for them, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why is the Premier defending the $55 million figure when the government's own draft ambulance services report from 2001 identified the cost to be closer to $106 million, and we now know that the estimates are closer to $128 million? Why is he surprised?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right when he says that the costs have been identified as $128 million. It's my best information, based on the report, that the original estimate was $55 million, but I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think one of the grave difficulties that we have encountered is that when the regional health authorities looked at assuming governance and operations, costing for particularly integrated ambulance service delivery may not have been accounted for in exactly the appropriate way. It might have been, for example, a municipal authority's opportunity to account for ambulance in the fire service delivery. So in extrapolating those costs for ambulance, they were quite different.

Yes, there were costs identified in the report on ambulance service delivery that included the figure of $106 million, but there were also dollars that were accounted for that were on the revenue side of the equation that may have not been fully looked at at the time that the amount of $55 million was put in as the true cost – the true cost – of governance and operations of ambulance in the submission that was put in the budget the year previous while we were looking at transfer.

So we can play a lot with numbers here, but the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that what we're doing now is trying to find the best way of assuring that the continuity of safe patient transport continues in Alberta, that proud tradition is maintained, and that whether or not in the future ambulance services are delivered by municipalities or health authorities or a combination of both, Albertans will feel secure that they have the best ambulance service delivery system possible.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, let me put this directly to the minister. Why was the government using the $55 million figure as late as a month ago when on May 23, 2002, your own MLAs' report on ambulance services used a figure of $106 million?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at the time the budget was approved for 2004-05, the identifiable figure for true costs was estimated for the budget year '05-06 at $55 million. The exponential increase to what was described to me as a soft number of $128 million was considerably higher, and what was even of greater concern to this minister was that I was told by several parties in Alberta that it could be as high as $180 million. I thought it was responsible to do a thorough review of that. That's what we're doing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Following in the flavour of the development of oil sands, another new multimillion dollar project has been announced north of Fort McMurray. Yesterday Suncor announced a $10 billion project that will mean, as mentioned earlier, even more strain on the existing infrastructure of the city of Fort McMurray. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. With Suncor's announcement of the $10 billion Voyageur project can the minister tell us what other projects are anticipated for the area?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's announcement clearly was another one of the very major announcements. These are very large megaprojects that continue up in the oil sands. It's because of the work, really, that the government's done over the years to set the right climate, to attract the investment to see that we could realize the opportunity that's before us today. With that comes huge challenges, and those are the things that we'll be talking about.

I thought I'd mention a little bit of the scope of the activity, too, that's happening. It's not just that $10 billion project. You can look at CNRL, that recently announced their willingness to go with another 10 billion plus dollar project. You've got Shell, that's also looking at an expansion of their projects. You can look at UTS, who's partnered recently with Petro-Canada. So you've got quite a bit of expansion. In all, you could see up to a hundred billion dollars of investment in this area alone in the province over the next 10 years.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what type of support will the government of Alberta provide to this part of the province, and will some unique approach be necessary to cope with these added pressures?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As he rightly said, this area of the oil sands actually expands beyond just even the oil sands. If we looked into the heavy oils just to the south of that area – the member himself is involved with it and the members from the Vermilion-Lloydminster and Bonnyville-Cold Lake areas. Very large deposits of heavy oil. So the combined region has some extraordinary issues that are going to have to be looked at.

It does have a special and unique case in the size of investment, in the quantity of infrastructure demand that this government will have to facilitate and accommodate. We've heard some responses already from the minister of infrastructure.

There is also a regional working group of the senior vice-presidents of the companies that are involved in the oil sands and the heavy oils, and we'll be meeting with them, actually, and the mayor of Fort McMurray later this week. That's been an ongoing working relationship, and we continue to see how we can facilitate and ensure that we realize the benefit of this great deposit in that area.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much. That's my last supplemental. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder. We're striving for a 45-second time limit on questions and answers.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many parents and educators and school boards are concerned about the on- and off-again funding for education in this province. Albertans clearly can't afford to repeat the teacher layoff disaster of 2003-04, from which most schools are just recovering. My question to the Minister of Education: can the Minister of Education assure Albertans that the money will be there to support fairly bargained or arbitrated settlements with teachers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, every local school board has the right, the authority, and the responsibility to negotiate in good faith at the local level with their local ATAs. We provide the money in unenvolving fashion for them to do that, and as part of that unenvolving we brought forward the renewed funding framework, which has even given them more flexibility with respect to costs related to all education matters, and that includes the negotiated settlements. There are varying degrees and lengths of time involved in some of these agreements, and I feel quite comfortable that our local school boards are doing their very best to address ever-increasing costs with ever-decreasing enrolments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the envelope is large.

To the same minister: what specific measures is this minister considering to support school boards and educators in places like Fort McMurray, where even in the aftermath of a new agreement teachers can't afford to live?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, teachers can afford to live there, but the fact is that I think the costs of living there are somewhere between 10 to 30 per cent higher than elsewhere in the province, so the local school board does have an allowance for that built into their negotiations. I think they just came to a conclusion to that effect a couple of weeks ago, at least the public system did. We'll wait and see what the Catholic system does shortly.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, there will be a group coming to Edmonton for a special visit, as our Premier alluded to earlier, and I will be part of that meeting. In fact, I will be advancing some of those very issues. I did meet with several hundred teachers during my rounds, and I did meet with a group in Fort McMurray as well. I am acutely aware of the difficulties they are having in attracting and retaining teachers in that area, and we will do our best to address it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister abandon his effort to impose a one-size-fits-all province-wide bargaining model and concede that teachers and school boards should be allowed to negotiate local matters locally?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important question, and I'm actually grateful to the member for having raised it. The fact is that the Alberta Commission on Learning report did make a recommendation in this respect. It's found under ACOL recommendation 81, I believe.

Now, in response to that, the government has asked for additional work to be done as we try and steer our way through to a conclusive answer, and I will be striving for that very shortly. In the meantime, we do have groups like the Alberta School Boards Association, which at a meeting on November 22 voted two-thirds to find some sort of a model and bring it back to their general membership and thereafter provide it to me for further consideration. After I've received that input and after I've heard more from the local school boards themselves and from the ATA, ASBA, and a number of other players, I will bring forward a decision for this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Jetsgo Bankruptcy

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With Jetsgo grounded, many of my constituents are concerned about the dollars they spent on air travel. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. What can my constituents who have bought and paid for tickets from Jetsgo do now that the company has folded?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it's terribly unfortunate when any airline goes under and, in fact, people are stranded and don't get the services that they paid for. We would recommend that any individual that has bought a ticket and was unable to use it get in contact with their insurance agent. Many people have bought travel insurance, and they may be eligible for a refund on the ticket.

Secondly, if a person has paid for the travel by credit card, it could very well be that the credit card company will be in a position to – as a matter of fact, a number of the credit card companies have stepped up to the plate and offered to refund. Also, if a person has purchased the ticket on the Internet in Alberta, they're rather fortunate because under the Internet sales contract regulation you're guaranteed to get the service. The credit card companies have up to two months to credit the person. [interjections] It's very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, all the chirping over across the way, that those folks aren't interested in hearing how a consumer can get their money back on this type of an issue.

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, what can Albertans who travel do to protect themselves in advance if an airline goes out of business?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things, and we've been recommending for some time that if you feel that you need to pay by cash, then you look at purchasing travel insurance so that you are covered. We do also recommend that you use a credit card because the purchase of a travel ticket is pretty well covered through that mechanism.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, what are we doing to help protect Albertans in the event of future airline failures?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, the airline industry is under federal jurisdiction. One of the things that we are going to be doing this summer is actually going with our other provincial counterparts and talking to the federal government about setting up some kind of an insurance plan, some kind of a protection program so that when these kinds of events do occur, then the persons that have purchased tickets would have some kind of coverage.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day and the Enron scandal in Alberta continues to grow. Yesterday at an energy conference a senior executive stated that unnamed companies are unethically bending the rules six years after Enron exploited loopholes in electricity deregulation in this province, yet this Progressive Conservative government continues to keep consumers in the dark regarding this growing scandal. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that industry insiders now admit that power companies are still bending the rules, what will it take for this government to finally call for a full, independent public inquiry into this $8 billion electricity deregulation disaster?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to first say that the market surveillance administrator does take very seriously their role. They act on behalf of Albertans to ensure that they are protected. They have acted on this. The investigation of Enron is six years old. They acted on it then. They're repeating investigations again today. They've also involved the federal Competition Bureau. So they continue to do the role for which they are there, and that is to ensure that Albertans are protected.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that it has also been stated that various companies have behaved in a way that has been not particularly ethical, which companies are unethically bending the electricity market in Alberta, and why are you so reluctant to name them?

Mr. Melchin: When we say "various companies," everyone here seems to be reluctant to actually bring forth any evidence. It's easy to bring forth allegations. That's what the market surveillance administrator is there for. If you have evidence, I'd suggest that we do bring evidence before the appropriate authorities. They can act on it if there is evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that Enron and other companies have used the Alberta-B.C. tie-line to manipulate Alberta's domestic electricity market, why isn't the market surveillance administrator investigating electricity imports?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there are many things in regulation to ensure that our marketplaces do work. They have worked effectively, and in this respect the market surveillance administrator continues to watch as a watchdog on behalf of Albertans. We are all interested, just as the market surveillance administrator is interested. We want to ensure that things continue to operate as they are designed to do. If there is evidence, please bring it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

First Aid and CPR Training in Schools

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, when a bystander uses cardiopulmonary resuscitation, otherwise known as CPR, on someone who has collapsed from a cardiac arrest, the victim's chance of survival dramatically improves. In Edmonton the survival rate has increased some 10 per cent because of frequent early bystander action, including CPR. The message is simple, Mr. Speaker. CPR by family members or bystanders could save the lives of hundreds of people in Alberta. My one and only question to the Minister of Education: would the minister consider implementing mandatory CPR and first aid courses in Alberta's high schools, which could be instructed by St. John Ambulance?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we already do provide some courses with respect to both first aid and CPR training. To my knowledge none of them are mandatory yet, not at this stage anyway. I know that at the grade 9 level we also provide some additional components through first aid and emergency care.

We have been talking now about something that we could do through the mandatory physical education 10 program, beginning in the fall of 2006 perhaps, where we could provide some type of additional training for our teachers so that they could pass on those skills to the students. In that respect, I'd be happy to chat further with the St. John Ambulance folks to see what role they might be able to play in guiding us along. I think it's an excellent idea, and I commend the member for raising it. We will be looking at this very closely.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been three years since the release of the Mazankowski report, over two years since the Graydon report was completed, and over a year and a half since the release of the Westbury report. Despite all these reports, Albertans are still in the dark about the government's latest attempts at reform, termed the third way. In fact, it seems that the third way is really no way at all. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How much longer will Albertans have to wait before finding out the details of this government plan?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, early in January our Premier spoke to the Canadian Club, and he announced several things including the work that will be done this year, commencing in a more accelerated fashion so that we can achieve a target of an electronic record by January 1, 2008, which will be one step to making sure that we are linking the system and working more cohesively together. He talked about an innovative mental health fund. He talked about the supports for the kinds of things that could be done to make sure that our children were well looked after, particularly in the area of mental health.

Mr. Speaker, we've been talking now for a few weeks and even invited the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition to be a part of the international symposium which will gather a number of ideas of best practices from people world-wide to see whether or not those would be appropriate opportunities for us to link with some of the other initiatives that are going on in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the third way is not about any single, one idea but about a series of very good ideas that can be implemented in a very focused way across Alberta. We can assure Albertans that we are working towards one goal, and that is quality health care as quickly as possible for all Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. No details.

Back to the same minister: can the minister tell us whether the third way would mean more contracts with private providers like the Health Resource Centre in Calgary, which the Premier termed in January a health care success story?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Premier was very clear. He said that we were not going to try and challenge the Canada Health Act, we were going to unleash innovation and invite our health care providers, the regional health authorities, to bring forward methodologies for improving health care. The bottom line is that we are working on the assumption that we will complete the recommendations in the Mazankowski plan.

We will look over the next few weeks and months at the things that we can do to build on the primary health care reform. I say: stay tuned. I think that there are wonderful things happening in Alberta. The bottom line is that Albertans should remember this: no matter where they go, the best health care system in the world exists in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that yesterday the minister said that "a wellness fund is an idea that could be looked at," why did government members vote down the Alberta Liberal motion for a wellness fund just last week?

2:20

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I said that it could be looked at in the context of other ideas. We are not going to simply react to every idea that comes along at the time it is presented. We have to look at a package of how we are presenting the very best possible strategies. In fact, today with the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation we talked about the great success of the rural seat belt strategy, which has seen an improvement in the use of seat belts. Twelve ministries are involved in strategies to improve the health and wellness of Albertans, particularly as it relates to seat belts. So to have any one fund or any one consolidation is something that we'd have to examine very carefully so that we were assured that we were getting all the pieces of it. It's not as simple as agreeing to a motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Policing Services

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years the Conservative government has failed to adequately support policing services, which has resulted in Alberta having the lowest number of police officers per capita west of PEI. Adding 140 offices a year, as the government proposes, fails to put policing services on par with those in other Canadian provinces. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Why are Albertans being forced by this government to put up with a lower level of policing service than residents of every other province west of Prince Edward Island?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The 5,000 officers that we have in the province of Alberta are well respected by the communities that they work in throughout this province. The issue that we're looking at in the future is the resources we have in rural Alberta as well as in the urban centres, but we want to look as well at the deployment models that we have and build on the integration that we have right now as well as building on other models that we want to look at across Canada, which includes regionalization.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the Solicitor General commit to increasing provincial police numbers, whether RCMP or municipal, by 500 additional front-line officers as proposed by the NDP opposition so that Albertans receive the same level of policing service as other Canadians do?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The 500 officers that the hon. member speaks about are a tremendous amount of officers to obtain. The officers that we want to see employed in the next year, two years have to be trained. They're not in place now. We can't hire them April 1. Some of them we can, but we're going to have to do this over a period of time to ensure that the training process takes place. Again, it's not just putting officers on the street. It's looking at the ability to deploy these officers properly in the areas where they need to be deployed, and that includes integrating our policing services so that the seven municipal police services and the RCMP are working together as one.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: while better approaches to fighting gang violence are needed and the minister is exploring them, will he ensure that most of the additional provincial money will be earmarked to strengthening community policing and thereby better prevent gang violence from taking root in the first place?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we talk about integrated models and we're looking at joint force operations between either the Calgary Police Service and the RCMP or the Edmonton Police Service and the RCMP, we're also talking about intelligence-led investigations. In order to fight organized crime or in order to fight gang violence, the intelligence base that's required is tremendous. That's where we have to stress our services in the future: to develop the intelligence we need to go out and arrest these guys.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Exploitation of Children

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Modern technology is a double-edged sword that has put many people at risk including our children, who are very vulnerable. Some nasty elements of our society use technology such as cellphones, e-mails, and Internet chat rooms to prey on children, and through digital photography and the Internet they share pornography of all kinds easily and freely. My question is also to the Solicitor General. Why are we lagging behind? Why haven't we followed Manitoba's lead and created some kind of agency to protect our children?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government takes the protection of children very seriously, and several ministries are working together right now. The Ministry of Children's Services as well as the Ministry of Health and Wellness have programs in place that are working with those children that are in need. We also consider child pornography and Internet-luring as child exploitation, and we are building on the protection of these children. In fact, Alberta has the only specified Crown prosecutor that deals with these issues in Canada.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: when are we going to create an integrated child exploitation team?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, at this present time we don't have a provincial integrated child exploitation team, or an ICE team, but I can tell you that the Edmonton Police Service, the Calgary Police Service, and the RCMP each have a member that is working in those areas. They do collaborate together. They do work with each other and are ensuring that the information collaboration is flowing between them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: what are we doing to protect our children?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, in the budget that the Minister of Finance and Deputy Premier will be presenting in early April we'll be looking at, as well, resources for the integrated child exploitation team, and I'd ask that member to wait until the budget process is complete.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Funding for Youth Programs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Children's Services has failed to properly fund shelters for Alberta's youth. The government annual grant system does not give the shelters across Alberta any security. To the Minister of Children's Services: why does the ministry refuse to guarantee funding to youth shelters past one year?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we do. We provide Edmonton about $13.2 million through FCSS, and it's up to them to determine how best to spend their dollars. We've also done some very innovative things with some programs through the ministry. If there's a particular youth shelter that the member is concerned about, I'd ask her to bring it forward, and I'll look at it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that shelters like the one in Grande Prairie and day programs like the Kids in the Hall Bistro have to be at risk of closing before receiving funding from the province, when will this government provide stable funding so they don't have to be in dire need before they get help?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did do that. It was brought to my attention, I believe it was in December, for the Kids in the Hall program, and if I remember correctly, we provided them with $150,000. That funding is going to continue.

As I explained, if the member is aware of someone who is in a difficult situation, I'd be more than pleased to meet with her, sit down and talk to her or even the agency. None of these agencies, Mr. Speaker, have brought this matter to my attention. Please bring it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Children's Services commit to a new funding regimen that would provide sustained, stable, and sufficient funding with annual reviews instead of contract renewals every year that leave agencies begging for money?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, if the member has a particular organization or shelter that she is deeply concerned about, I'd ask her to bring it forward to me. We'll look at it. We provide money, like I indicated, to Edmonton FCSS. They receive $13.2 million. That's another one of the stakeholders that have to be contacted because they get the money out to them too.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday there was a vapour release at the Shell chemical plant in northern Strathcona county. This incident raises some important questions about emergency preparedness. This is similar to questions that were voiced after the BP ethane well fire in the area in 2001. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What's the government doing to help keep Alberta communities safe during incidents such as these?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I did yesterday, I want to assure the hon. member as well as all members of the House that this province's municipalities are very well prepared to respond to disasters and emergencies. Municipal Affairs through Emergency Management Alberta, or EMA, works closely with municipalities to ensure that they are prepared for and can respond to and recover from incidents such as the one that occurred yesterday. All Alberta municipalities have emergency plans in place, and these plans are validated annually and tested at least once every four years. In addition, Mr. Speaker, EMA has expanded and maintains the Alberta emergency public warning system, which allows local officials to transmit information and warnings to affected municipalities via television or radio.

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: since the BP well fire what has changed in terms of municipal emergency response?

Mr. Renner: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the actions of officials and first responders from Fort Saskatchewan and Strathcona county as well as those of Shell. From the moment that they learned of the vapour release, they responded in a timely and effective manner, and they continue to do so today. Thanks to our experiences during the BP well fire we gained an opportunity to tighten up and improve the communication and information aspects of municipal emergency response.

I'd like to highlight two of the important improvements. First, communities and industry worked in the Heartland Industrial Area in partnership to design and implement a community notification system for the entire region. The system, Mr. Speaker, is unlike any other, and it enables officials to send telephone emergency warnings directly to affected residents. The system complements the radio and television warnings available through the emergency public warning system.

Secondly, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board in co-operation with EMA updated the emergency response plan for upstream petroleum industry incidents to have a far more stringent call down the system, which is regularly validated through exercises and very real events.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Medication for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A University of Lethbridge study of 1,500 residents in 24 Alberta nursing homes found that there is a high use of sedative and antipsychotic drugs, almost double the use in Europe and the U.S. These drugs are potentially dangerous given their side effects and, in particular, the fear of falling. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What will the minister do regarding these reports that Alberta seniors are being drugged to make up for staff shortages in nursing homes?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that we are working diligently to try and accomplish the objective of having quality health care for long-term patients in our institutions. The regional health authorities along with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and myself have met on a number of occasions to talk about ways that we can improve the quality care in these various facilities. I'm very satisfied that there are great strides being made by many. For example, we are looking at the continuum of care from the time that home care is delivered right through to the seniors. Long-term care facilities vary throughout the province. Nursing home services, including levels and types of staffing, should be based on individual need.

As to the particular question about the use of drugs for seniors in these facilities, we're working with health authorities and with the attending physicians to make sure that they are used in an appropriate fashion. Mr. Speaker, for the largest part I'm satisfied that they are. I realize that questions have been raised publicly by a couple of the facilities in Alberta, and we are exploring what the alternatives are. But Dr. Jerry Predy's work with a long-term care facility to introduce Cold fX as a measure of prevention for flu and other anomalies associated with the frail elderly I think is a positive example of use of drugs of a preventive nature in long-term care facilities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Following that commercial, the question is to the same minister. What is this government doing to ensure that continuing care facilities have enough funding to provide adequate staffing so that sedation is not necessary?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the funding question will be very appropriate once the introduction of the budget comes forward. I think one of the great challenges for regional health authorities dealing with long-term care facilities is the mix of patients with various levels of acuity in the facilities, which formula basis staffing is arranged to look after them. It's difficult, Mr. Speaker, to measure just exactly what's needed in every facility, but that work is being done. As to further funding that might be provided for long-term care facilities, I would say to the hon. member opposite: stay tuned; the budget will be out in a few weeks, and we'll have that discussion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the minister of health: despite waiting for the budget, what guarantee could you give the families of nursing home residents that this won't be happening over a period of time, that their loved ones are not being unnecessarily sedated?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, you know, with great regret it sounds to me like there is some sense of allegation here that doctors are overprescribing for their patients in long-term care facilities. Clearly, families, if they have that concern, can approach the physician that's attending that particular person, can speak to the matron about it, and explore whether or not the appropriate level of drugs is being provided for that patient. But I think that unless there's a specific case in point that the hon. member wants to raise privately with me, it's my view that the physicians are doing the prescribing, and any other concerns could be addressed on a private individual basis.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we go into Members' Statements, I'd just like to say that we've done 15 questions today, a tad shy of our previous high standard that was set. So I would encourage us all in the future to focus more on brevity.

Could we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute privilege and honour to be able to introduce to you and through you 43 people from Rolling Hills, Alberta, who have journeyed here to see us in the Legislature. There are 33 students with teachers Gail Sapergia, Christopher Zottl; parents Gerjan Stikker, Kelly Shackleton, Michele Hemsing, Jackie Sereda, Irene Nannt, Kimberley Fletcher, Carmen Thomsen; and, of course, Jay deJong, who has brought up many people as a bus driver. I would ask them all to stand and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly several of Alberta's chiefs of police and their representatives. We are meeting this afternoon to develop strategies in our fight on organized crime. They are each on their own tremendous leaders in our Alberta communities. I'd like to ask these individuals to please rise and remain standing as I introduce each of you: Acting Chief Darryl daCosta and Acting Deputy Chief Dave Korol from the Edmonton Police Service, Inspector Tom McKenzie from the Lethbridge Police Service on behalf of Chief John Middleton-Hope, Chief Marshall Chalmers from the Camrose Police Service, Deputy Chief Rick Hansen on behalf of Chief Jack Beaton of the Calgary Police Service, Chief Norm Boucher of the Medicine Hat Police Service, Chief Bill Zens of the Lacombe Police Service, Chief Terry Dreddy from the Taber Police Service, and Chief Superintendent Knecht from the RCMP. I'd ask that these individuals receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: We will call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for Members' Statements.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui c'est un plaisir pour moi de présenter à la Chambre une explication d'un événement canadien qu'on appelle Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie se déroulent à la grandeur du Canada sur une base annuelle. Cette année Les Rendez-vous ont lieu du 4 au 20 mars. Durant cette période de temps on célèbre les communautés francophones afin de promouvoir la langue et la culture françaises tant par ses activités sociales et ses célébrations que par sa dimension humaine et communautaire.

Les Rendez-vous contribuent à renforcer les liens entre les anglophones et les francophones du Canada et favorisent un plus grand respect entre ces deux communautés.

De plus en plus nos municipalités albertaines se joignent aux Rendez-vous en tenant des cérémonies pour reconnaître leur communauté francophone; parmi ces municipalités cette année on compte Red Deer, Lethbridge, Calgary. Félicitations à ces municipalités.

Comme je le mentionnais lors de la présentation des mes invités spéciaux, ce matin à la rotonde de la Législature le Président de la Chambre était hôte d'une belle célébration dédiée à la reconnaissance de la contribution des francophones à notre province. C'est un geste que la communauté apprécie beaucoup, si on en juge par la participation importante de la communauté.

Je tiens aussi à remercier mes collègues de l'Assemblée qui se sont dérangés pour assister à la célébration.

Cette septième édition des Rendez-vous revêt une signification spéciale parce que le thème de cette année porte sur les centenaires de l'Alberta et de la Saskatchewan avec un accent sur les communautés francophones de ces provinces.

Pierre Sabourin, un jeune artiste franco-albertain, est présentement en tournée canadienne avec un groupe d'artistes francophones de l'ouest pour promouvoir Les Rendez-vous et le centenaire de notre province.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to provide the Assembly with information on a wonderful Canadian event called Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie are held throughout Canada on a yearly basis, and this year they run from March 4 to 20. During that period of time attention is focused on francophone communities with the idea of promoting French language and culture as much through community and human relations as through social activities and celebrations.

Les Rendez-vous contribute to the reinforcement of links between francophones and anglophones in Canada by fostering greater respect between the two communities. More and more of our municipalities are joining in Les Rendez-vous by holding ceremonies to recognize their francophone communities. Red Deer, Lethbridge, Calgary are some of the municipalities that held flag-raising ceremonies to mark the launch of these celebrations. Congratulations to all of them.

As I alluded to earlier while introducing my special guests, this morning the Speaker of the House hosted a wonderful ceremony in the rotunda to recognize the contributions of the francophone community to our province. It was very much appreciated by the francophone community, judging by the large attendance. I also want to thank my colleague MLAs who took time off their busy schedules to stop by.

The seventh edition of these Rendez-vous takes on a special meaning because the theme of this year's event is centred on the centennial of Alberta and Saskatchewan with a focus on the francophone communities in these provinces. Pierre Sabourin, a young Franco-Albertan singer from Edmonton, is part of a group of western francophone artists presently touring Canada to promote Les Rendez-vous as well as our centennial.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Chase: Aujourd'hui je voudrais reconnaître la fête de la Francophonie, une célébration qui a eu son début en 1998. Cette fête célèbre les accomplissements et les contributions de millions de Canadiennes et de Canadiens français. Pendant leur/notre histoire les francophones de l'Alberta et à travers le Canada ont dû se battre pour les droits de langue dans leurs églises, leurs écoles, et même pour le droit de parler français au sein de l'Assemblée Législative de l'Alberta. Les organisations comme Les Bons Amis et la Société St-Jean-Baptiste et l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta continuent toujours la lutte.

J'ai commencé mes études de la langue française au quatrième niveau d'une école élémentaire sur la base militaire de Namao à Edmonton. J'ai continué ces études à un lycée à Ottawa avant de suivre des cours de français, mon premier choix, à l'Université de Calgary. J'ai enseigné le français aux enfants et aux adolescents pour plusieurs années à Calgary.

Je voudrais remercier les francophones de l'Alberta pour leurs cadeaux d'arts et de culture, et surtout merci à ceux qui ont contribué au succès de cette province. Merci, et bonne fête.

[Translation] Today I would like to recognize the annual get-together of French-speaking Canadians, a celebration that began in 1998. This festival celebrates the accomplishments and contributions of millions of French Canadians. During their/our history French-speaking Albertans and those across Canada have had to fight for language rights in their churches, schools, and even for the right to speak French in the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Organizations like the Good Friends, the St. John the Baptist Society, and the French-Canadian Association of Alberta constantly continue this struggle.

I began studying the French language as a grade 4 student on Edmonton's Namao air force base. I continued these studies in high school in Ottawa before majoring in French at the University of Calgary. I taught French at the elementary and junior high levels for several years in Calgary.

I would like to thank French-speaking Albertans for their gifts of arts and culture and especially for their contribution to the success of this province. Thank you, and happy birthday/holiday. [As submitted]

National Social Work Week

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today and recognize that March 13 to 19 is National Social Work Week. As a former social worker I understand that their work can be a difficult yet extremely gratifying profession. Social workers in our province make a difference in the lives of so many Albertans, from the youngest to the old. As Albertans we should all be proud of them.

This year's theme is Social Work: Fairness and Well-being, which is a very fitting theme for a profession that seeks to achieve equality and wellness for each person they serve.

Social workers perform a variety of roles as they work with people in need. They could be part of a family counselling agency providing services such as parenting and marriage counselling. Many work as part of health care teams, working with patients and family members to overcome emotional, behavioural, social, and financial difficulties. Others work with youth and adult offenders in correctional services.

Social workers are part of our educational system, providing services for students, parents, and teachers. Government departments also benefit from the help of social workers to deliver social programs, including income-support programs, child protection programs, child care programs, and foster care and adoption programs. Community agencies also employ social workers to meet community needs and address problems such as homelessness, family violence, addiction, or racism. There is a great diversity in the work they do, just as there is diversity in the many kinds of people they serve. Social work is a demanding profession requiring patience, sensitivity, and an understanding of others' beliefs and values.

Earlier the Minister of Children's Services introduced Mr. Rod Adachi and Ms Linda Golding from the Alberta College of Social Workers. I, too, am pleased that they could join us today. I commend the men and women who take on this rewarding line of work. Their efforts too often go unappreciated. I hope that this week we all take time to celebrate the vital contribution social workers make in the lives of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Construction Labour Trades

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 40,000 highly skilled tradespeople represented by the affiliated unions of the Alberta Building Trades Council were recently dealt an unnecessary and unfair blow by this Conservative government. On December 6, 2004, the provincial cabinet issued an order in council unilaterally changing the rules under which the Horizon oil sands project, a major oil sands project north of Fort McMurray, will be constructed. The order in council was granted under the little used division 8 of the Labour Relations Code after a request from Canadian Natural Resources Ltd., owner of the Horizon project. There was no prior consultation with the affected building trades unions.

This division 8 provision allows CNRL to unilaterally negotiate terms and conditions of work outside existing collective agreements. Instead of having to negotiate with the building trades unions, the company can instead use company-friendly unions such as CLAC or the non-unionized Merit Contractors. CNRL will be allowed to bring in lower paid foreign temporary workers without first having to demonstrate that there are no qualified Canadian tradespeople available to do the work.

This unilateral change of normal collective bargaining rules is fundamentally undemocratic and completely unjustified. There have been two decades of labour peace in the construction trades in this province with no major strikes or job disruptions. This labour peace has been one of the foundations of Alberta's sustained economic growth. Alberta's building trades are playing a crucial role in building all of the major multibillion dollar oil sands projects. These skilled tradesmen and -women do hard, dangerous work often far from home. Alberta's building trade unions are warning this government that the imposition of the division 8 provision will lead to job site conflict, less qualified, inexperienced tradespeople being hired, and as a result, lower quality work and more accidents.

Mr. Speaker, answers have been hard to come by as to why the Conservative government made this provocative move against unionized construction trades. I urge the government to abandon its policy of confrontation and move quickly to re-establish a co-operative labour climate in the oil sands so Alberta's continued economic prosperity can be ensured.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I present a petition signed by 1,088 people in Calgary and Edmonton urging the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation that will provide immediate tuition relief to students attending post-secondary education institutions across the province [of Alberta]."

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am presenting a petition signed by 87 parents and constituents from Edmonton and Sherwood Park who are in support of Bill 202 and are urging the government of Alberta to introduce legislation that will allow parents the authority to place their children who are abusing drugs into mandatory drug treatment and fund urgently required youth treatment centres.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 26

Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 26, the Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 26 amends the Alberta Corporate Tax Act to parallel federal provisions, including measures to ensure that tax cannot be avoided by transferring property out of a corporation at less than fair market value and does make some other technical changes. It also amends the ABC Benefits Corporation Act to facilitate payment in lieu of tax programs for Alberta Blue Cross.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table in the Assembly the requisite number of five copies of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta annual report for the previous year, 2003 to 2004.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a Statistics Canada table that shows Alberta to have the lowest number of police officers per capita of any jurisdiction in Canada west of P.E.I. and Newfoundland and Labrador.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a press release issued by the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, dated March 11. The release describes Capital health's cut to physiotherapy as "robbing Peter to pay Paul" and "another example of Albertans being forced to assume an increasing cost for health care."

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is from a constituent, a student at the University of Alberta who writes to the Premier in response to the Premier's comment that the $180,000 severance was not a lot and notes that as a student with a lot of debt, enrolled in four classes this semester and working an average of 20 hours a week at a part-time job, it matters to him and it is a lot of money.

My second tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is an announcement from the city of Red Deer commenting on their "dismay over the delay of the province-wide transfer of ambulance services from municipalities to Regional Health Authorities" and noting that it will cause a deficit for the city of Red Deer and a possible almost 3 and a half per cent increase in their tax rate as a result of this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings from James Carss, the president of the University Heights Community Association, located in the southwest corner of Calgary Varsity. In a letter to the Premier and in a second letter to the residents Mr. Carss expresses the community's grave concerns about the marked lack of stakeholder input regarding the widening of 16th Avenue N. What used to be a vista view of the Bow River to the south and the Rockies to the west, an idyllic parkland setting, is about to be turned into a sound wall penitentiary bisected by lengths from the Foothills hospital to the new Children's hospital, which was pigeonholed into their community without their permission or meaningful consultation. Two hundred and forty-eight trees are about to be bulldozed to make way for road expansion . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I'd like to remind the hon. member that it's just for tabling, not for making a speech.

Anyone else with tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the EUB decision numbered 2002-103, dated December 19, 2002, and for the information of the Department of Energy and the minister this is the document that indicates that there was an overcharging by Engage Energy to the transmission administrator of $63 million.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is further information in regard to the Enron scandal in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. This is an e-mail from Richard Sanders, a legal adviser for Enron, dated December 2000, and it indicates in this e-mail that Enron's "intelligence indicates that the government's investigation is not moving forward in any organized manner."

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have very voluminous reports to table under Tabling of Returns and Reports: the annual report for Capital health for 2003-2004, the Aspen regional health authority annual report 2003-2004, and finally the Peace Country health annual report for 2003-2004. The required numbers are here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few tablings here today, and I have the number of copies available here. One is a unanimous resolution from the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta – that's all the reserves in northern Alberta – and it's condemning the government as "irresponsible and short-sighted and offensive" to their people and to their treaty regarding their employment immigration policies.

The second is a letter from the Treaty 8 First Nations grand chief speaking to the same issue and stating that it is creating an "extremely irresponsible and potentially explosive" situation.

And another group of letters from a number of concerned Albertans – I understand, again, all from government members' ridings – deriding the government on their temporary foreign replacement worker policy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's good to see that you were able to get that straight because earlier today I received some mail from your office for the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who has the same last name as I do.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to have the opportunity to rise today and table the appropriate number of copies of an electronic mail that I received from a constituent and her family. Actually, there are five of them altogether: Sharon Hawrelak, Kris and Jason Kropiniski, and Nick and Nancy Hawrelak. They are writing today to their MLA to express a great deal of support for a total smoking ban in Alberta.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of letters, again an electronic mail, that comes from a lady by the name of Wealtha McKenzie in Red Deer. She is the president of the Alberta Bed & Breakfast Association, and she writes to raise some minor concerns that she has with the Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, that we're going to be debating later today.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr.

Boutillier, Minister of Environment, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act: the Ministry of Environment, environmental protection security fund annual report, April 1, 2003 to March 31, 2004.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Deputy Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates for certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2005-06 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government until June 1, 2005. By that date, it is anticipated that spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $5.1 billion for expense and equipment and inventory purchases, $136 million for capital investment, $32 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and $316 million for lottery fund payments.

Interim supply amounts are based on departments' needs to fund government programs and services until June 1. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of each quarter and at the beginning of the fiscal year, and some payments, Mr. Speaker, are seasonal.

13. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2005-06 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 13 carried]

14. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2005-06 interim supply estimates shall be one day.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 21
Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy)
Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. members. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 21, the Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, 2005.

This legislation has not been amended since it was introduced in 1987, so there are technical improvements, clarifications, and administrative issues that need to be addressed through this process. There are also changes that will benefit administration of the hotel room tax, tourism levy, and bring it into line with other tax programs that we administer. That said, there are some very key components of this bill that will indirectly but undoubtedly contribute to the strength of our province.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I love this province and its many wonders and natural attractions. We have great beauty here that is beyond compare, and we truly have a lot to offer in Alberta. This bill will provide another way for more people to take advantage of what we have to offer and, in turn, benefit our economy. This is an important bill, particularly to Alberta's tourism industry as it continues to work diligently to strengthen Alberta's position as a great destination for visitors and effectively compete with other regions for guests.

One of the key elements of this bill is that it will be a factor in increasing funding by an estimated 75 per cent for tourism and development in Alberta. Basically, the way it will work is that on April 1, 2005, the bill will change the name of the tax from the hotel room tax to a tourism levy and reduce the rate from 5 per cent to 4 per cent. The revenue that's generated from this levy will be put into the province's general revenue fund, and the proceeds collected from the levy will be used to determine the funding levels for tourism, marketing, and development.

Mr. Speaker, there are some that may feel that the 1 per cent reduction alone may not seem significant to the guests staying one night at a hotel, but if you look at the collective savings based on this year's numbers, it is more than $11 million. As with most tax reductions, people will choose to spend, or invest, that reduction back into the economy.

Mr. Speaker, there will also be a smooth transition for operators. There will be no substantial change in the process for operators in the province as they will continue to collect the levy from their guests and remit it to the province. One of the key reasons there will be a smooth transition for industry is because of the valuable input from the industry itself. Government has been working with the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association, with Travel Alberta, and with others in the industry over the past few years for an improved way to benefit both the consumer and operators and for ways to help Alberta compete for tourists with provinces like B.C., Ontario, and Quebec.

In our province's centennial year this bill will help stimulate further travel to our province by lowering the cost of accommodations, and it will provide another avenue for improved funding to promote Alberta in the years to come. I urge all members to give their support to Bill 21, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate today to all of the members in the Assembly that the only way taxes go in Alberta is down. What we have today, again, is an example of the fiscal responsibility of this government. This has been the keynote of this administration since we were elected in 1993, and I'm pleased to state to all that are represented here today that this remains, then, the keystone as we move forward into the future.

There are a few people that I want to thank and congratulate for bringing forward the bill today. First of all, we've just heard the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, and I want to thank him both from the standpoint of the government caucus and also individually for his support of this bill. Now, we don't want to forget, of course, the Minister of Finance. That is the department that is bringing forward this bill. Again, with her guidance and encouragement we've been able to proceed through the processes, then, that are necessary in order to be able to bring a bill to this House. I would urge all members, of course, to support the bill, and we'll get into some reasons why we might wish to do that.

First of all, let's talk about a bit of the history. My colleague that sits to the right of me, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, back in 1994 was chair of a committee that first started looking at what we might do with the tourism industry here in the province. While the tourism industry for a long time has been very strong in Alberta, we felt that perhaps there were ways in which we could strengthen it. I'm reminded continually of a frame of reference that my colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill uses, and that is that just because we're doing good doesn't mean we can't do better. I think this is a great example of that.

Now, where the discussion first started was: what were we going to do in terms of the pillow tax? It was certainly not called that by any act of legislation here in this House, Mr. Speaker, but on the street that's how the situation was referred to: the pillow tax. Of course, there's been lengthy discussion throughout the province as to what might be done and what could be done over time. It was actually quite controversial at various points because there was reason for support for it because, of course, this was a way in which, then, to provide revenue into general revenue.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Of course, the main objective that we have had since 1993 and, certainly, I had in even getting involved in politics was not only to eliminate deficit but was to reduce debt to zero. So it wasn't an easy thing to be able to give up existing revenue patterns. But, again, my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod and others persisted, and through the years I think we saw a gaining of momentum in this project.

It wasn't until my predecessor Minister of Economic Development put together an MLA team, a strategy team, that really went to work on this particular initiative and actually was successful, then, in bringing it forward and having the government agree that this would be approved. We're now here today talking in terms of a government piece of legislation.

I haven't had time to look at the tabling that was made earlier today and purported to be, perhaps, an objection to the bill. I'll have to spend time later today to look at that and will certainly do that prior to this bill going to committee, but I'd be very surprised to learn of any serious objection, really, to this piece of legislation.

What we have of course is not only the reduction of a tax, but by moving from a hotel tax to the tourism levy, what we do have are funds that are going into and will continue to go into general revenue. In fact, then an equal amount will come out of general revenue and go into, actually, the budget of Economic Development and into our tourism file. So as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed had indicated, about a 75 per cent increase in that particular budget line item.

Now, how will we use it? Well, Mr. Speaker and fellow members, what we will be doing with it is dedicating it to the development of marketing plans for tourism in Alberta and also in terms of the development of tourism facilities. Now, all of us are aware of the four pillars of tourism in this province – i.e., the city of Calgary with its Stampede, the city of Edmonton not only with the West Edmonton Mall but its becoming a festival city, and we want to encourage that, and then, of course, the majestic mountains and the resort areas of Banff and Jasper – but, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, and as we've heard in the maiden speeches on the Speech from the Throne as this session has unfolded, there's a lot more to Alberta than just these four pillars.

I want to indicate to you that as many of us travel around the province, we see the sights that strike our imagination. My personal indicator as to whether something is impressive is whether or not I get the goosebumps. I want to indicate to my fellow colleague that would represent the High River area but also Cayley that if you have had the opportunity like I have – and I'm sure that you have. Every week I get to drive south on the number 2 highway south of High River. When you get to a little place called Cayley and you come up over the rise, there is Alberta.

If you ever want to see Alberta, there's where you want to go. Mr. Speaker, it will give you goosebumps, I tell you. Over to the east you have territory that is as flat as the floor of this House. You can see for miles. You could watch your dog run away for three days. Over to the southeast is the town of Nanton, an historic town, a town that is involved in the rural development strategy and has become, perhaps, a centre for antique shopping. If you see the signs on the side of the highway, they're not only offering an opportunity to get involved in antiques, but they have walks where you see murals, then, that are on the sides of the buildings.

Straight ahead of you, Mr. Speaker, are the Porcupine Hills, a beautiful, beautiful sight, and you can see immediately why they are called the porcupines. Then over to the southwest and to the west of you – mind you, I'm keeping my eyes on the highway as I'm doing all of this, and I'm well within the speed limit – you will see, of course, foothills and again those majestic mountains. It is a wonderful, wonderful sight.

Recently in Germany I got talking about tourism, and of course the German people love Alberta. They love the aboriginal situation. They love the cowboy heritage that we have. But I got talking about the hoodoos, and I got quite excited about the hoodoos, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to the people that are around – my mind has gone blank on the name of the park.

An Hon. Member: Writing-on-Stone.

Mr. Dunford: Writing-on-Stone. That's it. Again, if you were to visit this site, nobody – nobody – could come away without being impressed by the wonderful sights that you see.

Now, in the coulees in Lethbridge we don't quite have the hoodoos, but we've got the next best thing in terms of the coulees and especially on full moon nights. I invite every member in this Assembly with your spouse or your significant other, whatever the case is, to come with my wife, Gwen, and myself on a full moon night. Midnight is about the best time because you have the angle then of the moon on these coulees. It's magnificent, it's breathtaking, and it's exciting. I can't tell you the word I used in Germany to describe this, but there are staffers that you might know in my office that will surely tell you. If I knew the German translation, I might be able to get away with it in the House. In any event, I want to tell you that this is a spectacular situation.

I have no idea how much time I have left, but I'm trying to instill in everyone that there is a lot of product in Alberta that can be developed. What we have to do, Mr. Speaker, is go, then, beyond the corridor, go beyond these four pillars and move into the rural areas of Alberta and develop that tourism product.

Ms Calahasen: Yes, and northern Alberta too.

Mr. Dunford: Yes, absolutely. Northern Alberta: beautiful, beautiful, beautiful sites and arrangements of trees. Actually, being from southern Alberta, I want you to know that I'm becoming a bit of a timber expert because I saw a tree.

These are situations, again, in this province, Mr. Speaker, that we want to congratulate.

Now, on the more serious side with the time that is left, despite a bit of the fun that I'm having – perhaps I'm showboating for my family that's here; you know, say it isn't so – I want you to know that within Economic Development, within the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, within our administration we have the kind of minds, the kind of dedication, the kind of energy that we believe will stand you in good stead in approving this bill, in allowing the tax levy dollars to be given to us and taken into our possession. We promise that we will use them to the benefit of all Albertans from a marketing standpoint and from a tourism development standpoint. This is so important that we get this work done because we want to take the tourism industry, right now about a $4 billion industry, and we want to move that up. We want to make it stronger in Alberta.

We want to do this for a number of reasons, not only the obvious economic development reasons, but I remind all of us who are becoming more in tune with the ecology, becoming more environmentally oriented that this is clean industry. This is clean, sustainable economic development. We want it, of course, not only to grow but also to prosper, then, as we move on through the years.

I would be again surprised, maybe even disappointed, to hear objections to this bill. I hope that people can see the wisdom of what the government is doing with this bill and can support it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say thank you to everyone for their kind attention, and I look forward to them supporting the Member for Calgary-Lougheed on this particular bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, earlier today the hon. Deputy Speaker provided an historical vignette for the Assembly. I would now like to provide a geographic vignette. Edmonton is in southern Alberta. The geographic centre of Alberta is located 110 miles to the north and west of this city.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the government is in a bit of a rush to have this bill proceed, and I can appreciate that. It was, as the hon. member mentioned, first introduced in 1987. It's been some 18 years now that the industry has been waiting for some changes to be made. Here we are two weeks away from the date on which they were hoping to have it implemented, and it's first being discussed in the Legislature today. So I recognize the need for some hurry up.

However, having said that, I had hoped to be the first member opposite to speak to this bill, and I was a little perturbed, quite frankly, that the Speaker in the chair at the time, for whatever reason, did not see me prepare to speak. I was certainly prepared to speak. Anyhow, that's an issue to be discussed later.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we can always ask for unanimous consent of the House to let you go on. But proceed now. Let's see what we've got for the first 15.

Mr. R. Miller: We'll see if I can fill that time up, Mr. Speaker. I may have to call my family in and reminisce about some drives down the highway in order to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I am in fact pleased to have the opportunity to commence the debate on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on Bill 21, the Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, 2005. We live in a province with almost unspeakable natural beauty, from the grasslands of the southeast – here I go now; I'm starting to wax eloquent here – to the vast, wide open prairies all the way up to the beginning of the great Canadian Shield, the incredible sight of the Alberta Rockies, the rolling foothills which lead into the eastern slopes, the Lakeland district in the northeast, the hidden treasures of the Peace country. I'm not sure that I can even name them all.

I have been fortunate enough in my 44 years to have travelled to every corner of this great province, and I consider myself even more fortunate to have met many tourists from all over the world, many of whom have become really good friends. We have a plethora of tourism facilities and attractions in this province, Mr. Speaker, and endless opportunities for ecotourism, shopping, cultural events, and urban nightlife.

According to the Economic Development ministry, approximately 120,000 Albertans are employed in the tourism industry, and they rate tourism as one of Alberta's fastest growing industries. In fact, it is estimated that tourism generates somewhere between $4 billion and $5 billion in business each year in this province. So it is clear to me and, I think, clear to most Albertans that this industry is one that requires our attention, and dealing with the hotel tax is an appropriate thing for this Legislature to be doing.

As you well know, the current hotel tax, as I mentioned earlier, was implemented in 1987. At that time it was an effort to deal with the ever-increasing yearly deficits that our province was experiencing under a Conservative government, I might mention, and it was to have been a temporary measure, somewhat like most taxes. When they come in, it always seems as if they're designed to be temporary measures.

Somehow, 18 years later, Mr. Speaker, this tax is still alive and kicking. The deficits are long gone, thanks in large part to much higher than expected energy revenues that we've experienced over the last many years but also thanks in part to the many sacrifices that Albertans have made as a result of government cutbacks. The debt is also gone. At least, that is to say, we have enough money to pay off the debt, and that's a good thing although, in reality, most of us know that we're going to be paying off the debt for another three years or so. Yet the hotel tax remains.

Mr. Speaker, this tax has been an unpopular thing with the industry ever since it was first implemented, and it's been the focus of discussion and possible changes for many years now. Five years ago, in fact, the Treasurer of the day was considering eliminating the tax altogether at the urging of the industry. At exactly the same time the mayors of Alberta's two biggest cities were lobbying the government to allow the municipalities to collect the tax and use it to promote local tourism initiatives.

Now, more recently the hotel and accommodation industry has been working with the government to have the tax changed into a levy, and the hon. Minister of Economic Development alluded to the fact that there has been very close co-operation. That's obviously a good thing, and hopefully it will allow this legislation to move forward with a relatively smooth ride. The new levy, Mr. Speaker, would generate monies or, at least, is designed to generate monies that would be earmarked for the promotion of tourism and travel to and within Alberta. Hence, we have this legislation before us today. As I indicated, the government has been working closely with the industry on this legislation for some time. There is a great deal of support from industry for the bill, and I'm glad to see that.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill in principle during second reading. Legislation which will result in a lower rate of taxation and at the same time provide some assurance to the industry that the levy imposed will be used to promote the industry certainly sounds like a good thing on the surface.

I do have a number of small concerns and one major concern, Mr. Speaker. The major concern that I have as it relates to this bill is as follows: the government has made a lot out of the fact that this bill will change the hotel tax into a tourism levy, the intent of which is to provide stable and predictable funding to the industry in order to promote itself and the wonderful opportunities that exist for visitors to Alberta and, indeed, to Albertans themselves. I was spending some time on the website this morning, Mr. Speaker, and it very much trumpets the fact that this will channel money specifically into promoting the industry, yet there is not one word – not one word – in this legislation that commits the government to ensuring that the levy collected will actually be earmarked for the promotion of the tourism industry.

The bill talks about reducing the tax from 5 per cent to 4 per cent. This is good. Taxes are going down. I think we all like that. Certainly, the people renting hotel rooms, staying at bed and breakfasts will appreciate the fact that the taxes are going down. But nowhere does it talk about ensuring that this money will actually go to promote the industry, and that is supposedly the main reason why we're discussing this bill today. In fact, a phone call to the Finance ministry this morning indicated, and the Minister of Economic Development confirmed it here a few minutes ago, that the revenue generated will flow into general revenue.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm kind of new to this game. I don't mind admitting that. But if the intention of the bill is to commit more money to the promotion of tourism in Alberta, then why doesn't the bill make any mention of this at all? I would have presumed that the legislation would have some mention of where the funds collected would be held, how it would be proposed that those funds would be managed, how they would be spent.

It's very much, Mr. Speaker, like the tire recycling fund. Right now we collect I think it's $4 on every new tire that's sold in Alberta, and there's a process outlined that determines exactly what that money will be used for, how it's going to be collected, how it will be used, what's going to happen to it. I would have thought in this legislation there would be something similar. If this is the grand vision of this bill, to promote industry and to make sure that the money collected goes to industry, it should be in there.

Mr. Speaker, there's been, what I've perceived to be, at least, and I think others would agree, a growing trend by this government to do more and more business by regulation as opposed to legislation, and I'm afraid that this may be just one more example of that. It leaves us and, in fact, the industry with no choice but to take the government's word that the levy that is collected will be used in the promotion of the industry.

There's another concern. The Minister for Economic Development alluded to the letter that I tabled earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It's not necessarily opposition to the bill, but it is a concern which I will be raising when we get to Committee of the Whole. There was up until now and presumably until March 31 a $25 commission per reporting period that is allowed to be claimed back by the operator when they file their hotel tax submission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, $25 may not seem like an awful lot of money to larger hotels and motels, the larger operators, but for the small operator of a bed and breakfast operation that $25 allowance is, I think, some recognition of the amount of time and paperwork that's required on their part to fill in this remittance. In most cases it would be for a very few number of rooms, a very few nights of stay. Nevertheless, it requires a certain amount of paperwork and time input on their behalf. It would appear on first blush – and I know the Minister of Economic Development indicated not, but until we get into the details, we won't know for sure – that there will be perhaps even more bookkeeping required than there was before, and as I say, that $25 commission is gone for those small operators.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that I'm new. I don't mind admitting that. I'm on a rather steep learning curve right now, but one thing I have learned rather quickly is that there are often cross-jurisdictional contradictions between ministries. This is another one of the concerns that is raised in this letter from the president of the Bed & Breakfast Association. It would appear that both Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Human Resources and Employment have legislation on the books which treats establishments that accommodate more than eight guests as a motel or a hotel, yet this legislation as it's currently written, and indeed the proposed new legislation as well, contemplates four or more bedrooms in defining which would be a lodging that would be required to collect and remit the tourism levy or, as it is now, the hotel tax.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this raises a little bit of a question in terms of contradiction. On the one hand, you could have fewer than eight people staying in your facility and you wouldn't have to comply with certain regulations that apply to hotels and motels, and on the other hand, four bedrooms is the number. I would just like to see some consistency across the ministries.

Now, I also mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that there have been concerns raised in the past about the way the money would be used to promote tourism in Alberta. Last year in this Assembly there was a motion, Motion 506, debated and ultimately passed. It was presented by the Member for West Yellowhead. It called on the government to establish just such a levy as we are discussing today and to dedicate that money to the province's tourism marketing framework. There was considerable debate at the time as to how to best promote the province and the various tourism possibilities that exist here.

I have to admit that my first thought when I was reading through last year's debate was that I would be worried as a citizen that we would be concentrating on what I call the big three; namely, the Calgary Stampede, the Banff corridor, and the West Edmonton Mall. Mr. Speaker, of course we all recognize that these are world-class attractions, and in fact they're world-famous attractions, but at the same time Alberta has so much more to offer. I certainly would hope that we don't lose sight of that fact in any future promotional campaigns that we undertake. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure there's probably 83 members in this Assembly, quite frankly, who would have some very strong ideas on how to best promote tourism in their province and particularly as it might affect their individual constituencies.

When I look at the numbers that have been bounced around a little bit both on the government website and by the Minister of Economic Development, I wonder if perhaps we shouldn't be allocating even more money to this endeavour. The proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, according to the Finance minister's own press release would boost funding for tourism by approximately 75 per cent to somewhere in the area of $42 million in the coming fiscal year.

According to published newspaper reports from last August, Ontario was spending $144 million on tourism promotion, Quebec was spending $125 million, and even British Columbia was spending $50 million promoting the industry in their province. Given that tourism is bringing in such tremendous revenue, as we said, somewhere between 4 and a half billion dollars, $5 billion, and we recognize that it is a major employer in this province – certainly, it's seen as a growth industry – I think it could be reasonably argued that perhaps $42 million is not enough.

In summary, I think I'd like to just tell all members that I believe that anything that we can do to help revive an industry that has been ravaged somewhat in recent years by the events of 9/11, the SARS outbreak, and more recently the onslaught of BSE, anything we can do to ensure that our tourism industry continues its recovery and goes on to thrive and prosper, Mr. Speaker, would be a good and noble thing for us to be doing.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now in effect. Five minutes for comments and questions if there are.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are you taking advantage of Standing Order 29, or are you participating?

Mr. Taylor: No. I'd like to speak to the bill if I might, Mr. Speaker, and I won't take a long time. I just have a couple of points that I wanted to bring to it from the perspective of somebody who is an Albertan by choice. A very large part of the reason that I made that choice is because I fell in love with this province as a tourist some three months before I moved here.

I remember, as you drive through Strathmore headed towards the mountains on highway 1, on the Trans-Canada highway, there's just a little rise as the highway comes up out of the town. At that point, with my wife driving and me sitting in the passenger seat, I got my first glimpse of the Rocky Mountains, only at the time I didn't know that that's what they were.

I saw this shimmering white on the horizon, and I thought, oh, there's a bank of clouds coming in to ruin what had been till that point about three beautiful cloudless days in a row. I made a comment like that to my wife, and she sort of smiled because she'd been out here before and I never had. She didn't say anything, and we drove on maybe for another five minutes, and I said: "Those aren't clouds. Those are mountains." From that moment, Mr. Speaker, I was hooked on the awesome natural beauty of the province of Alberta. Three months later, as I said, we were living here.

So I understand the draw that this place has and the hold that it can develop over you once you've seen it. The issue, I guess, is to get more people to see it and stay here and take advantage of it and, in so doing, spend their money on Alberta.

I'm reminded of something else that happened before I first laid eyes on this province and on these mountains, when I was living back in Toronto and I was doing a radio show there. This probably would have been in the late '70s, maybe early '80s; I don't remember exactly. Two representatives from Travel Alberta stopped into the radio station and paid us a visit. They were there to promote tourism in Toronto. I remember asking them, "Why did you come all this way?" I mean, seeing that Alberta was so far away. Of course, you have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that when you live in Toronto, you think that you're in the centre of the universe, and you think that, you know, Hamilton is a day's journey away because you see no reason to go there. But I digress. They said: "Well, you know, there are a lot more people living in Ontario than there are in Alberta or Saskatchewan or British Columbia or Montana or Idaho. We need to draw business. We need to draw tourists from further afield."

At that time there was money in the budget, obviously, for Travel

Alberta to send representatives far afield to promote the natural beauty, the natural wonder, and all the attractions of this great province in which we live. I remember most specifically them promoting – now, I'm not sure which ranch it was. It might have been Bar U; it might have been one of the other guest ranches. But going: wow, there really are ranches and real cowboys still left in the world. I wanted to see that although it took a couple of years to get around to getting out here.

Why I bring this up is because it seems to me that we could do more in this bill to fund tourism marketing and promotion than we are. If we put all the money that the tourism levy will generate as proposed in this bill into tourism marketing and promotion, it will generate about $42.5 million in around that figure. As my colleague pointed out, Ontario spends roughly three times that amount. Of course, when you're as devoid of mountains as Ontario, you might need to spend more money to make people think that there's any reason to go there.

But we could spend more. We could do more to promote tourism. It is our fourth biggest industry in this province. This is arguably the most beautiful piece of geography on the North American continent. We could, we should do more, and I would urge that when this bill gets on to committee, that we take a look at that.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Additional speakers?

Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close the debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Economic Development for giving us all goosebumps during his poetic address. I would also like to thank the hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Calgary-Currie for their comments. But I see no need for further comment from me at this time, so I would like to ask to call the question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 6

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005.

The Fair Trading Act came into force in 1999, when it combined seven statutes into one. Amendments are now needed to fine-tune and update the act. Government services received overall support from stakeholders on these amendments. Over 8,000 stakeholders were consulted, ranging from cheque cashing agencies, electricity marketers, moving companies, natural gas marketers, payday lenders, and time-share operators.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, will clarify the interpretation of certain definitions and principles in the act; ensure that certain business practices such as negative option practices are prohibited; provide that consumers give express consent for continuous agreements; expand the list of individual representatives of a business who can be sued when the business deals with consumers unfairly; increase the amount of access and control that individuals have over their personal credit information stored by credit reporting agencies; require individuals to provide their express consent to credit reporting agencies before these agencies can provide credit reports about them unless the report is provided to collect a debt; specify when loan brokers can charge a fee for their services; strengthen the director's authority in the areas of licencing, investigation, and enforcement provisions; improve the act's provision for investigations, prosecutions, and remedies including removing the $100,000 cap on restitution payable by offenders to consumers; add regulation-making authority to deal with issues such as identity theft, reverse mortgages, and loan brokering; and expand regulation-making authority in the areas of credit reports, licencing, debt collection practices, and public options.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will tighten the legislation, increase administrative efficiencies, and add flexibility to address existing and future marketplace and consumer problems. I look forward to hearing the comments during second reading. Should there be any questions or concerns raised, I undertake to respond to them at the next stage of the bill process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. The hon. member serves as the caucus critic in this area. Please proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this time to commend both the hon. Minister of Government Services and the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for sponsoring Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005. We as Official Opposition realize the value of good legislation. We will support any and all government initiatives if they're meant to facilitate good market and business practices and if the paramount goal is to always look after the consumers and taxpayers of this province. This act appears to be geared towards doing just that, and for that, we will throw our weight behind it and support the minister and the hon. member.

The Official Opposition is more interested in constructive dialogue and co-operation with the ruling party for the good of the people than in idle debate and wasteful bickering. This is a common goal that ought to be shared by all parties and ideologies represented in this Assembly, and as the Official Opposition critic for Government Services I must say that I was pleased with the co-operation and information that I received from the hon. minister and his staff and from the hon. member when we briefly met, I think yesterday.

Having said that, it's noteworthy to mention that from our side we're trying to set a tone in this Assembly today which fosters trust and co-operation and avoids animosity and friction. When we as opposition members – and I hope I am speaking for all 21 of us – raise certain concerns or ask a question with regard to a particular bill or a motion, we're not adversarial or confrontational. We simply want an answer to a question. Nothing more, nothing less.

I like this bill because it seems to address certain issues and areas which are very important to most Albertans if not all. One point in the bill that caught my eye was the item about protecting consumers from contracts that may include unknown renewal clauses or other attributes which were not previously agreed to. The hon. member alluded to negative billing, for example, and probably on numerous occasions many of us have experienced that in one way or another. Things like the book of the month or the tape of the month or the video of the month: once your initial period has expired, you are faced with a new bill, and usually it's for an amount that's more than what you agreed to initially.

There's also another area which makes all credit reports that banks use when loaning money more open to all Albertans so they are better informed on the process of loan approval. Many people in the public would go to a bank, apply for a mortgage or apply for a loan, and be denied when, in fact, they actually went ahead and did their own research and say, "My credit report is okay; I should be entitled to that loan or that mortgage," not knowing that the banks and the collection agencies have different pieces of information that are available only to them but not to the applicant.

It changes the rules on sales contracts for time-shares so that consumers have more time to look over the contract. I think it extends it from seven days to 10 days now. Again, maybe relating to a personal experience, many of us would attend a presentation or a dinner or take a cruise not knowing that we're expected to attend a sales meeting. Usually it's between 90 minutes and two hours in length, and basically what the company is trying to do is sell you a time-share. You know, many of us would actually feel pressured, and there is no way out. You're on that cruise. What can you say? Let me off? You cannot say that. So it extends the period during which you could actually review the contract you have been entered into by 10 days, which is good.

It also protects Albertans from all lending institutions using wage assignments. I think this is particularly important because more and more Albertans are subjected to a heavy debt load which is not proportional, or representative, of the income that they're earning. To prevent wage assignments is actually a good thing.

I also like the particular point about providing that a reporting agency cannot furnish a report unless the consumer has given express consent. I think this fits quite nicely and snugly with the requirements to protect personal information and privacy, so I commend the hon. member for bringing that forward.

The point about requiring a principal, director, manager, employee, or agent of a corporation or a partner in a partnership to be held accountable or guilty of an offence if they aided or abetted in perpetrating a crime makes a lot of sense. It was only previously extended to corporations, but now it also offers the same definition to partnerships, and I think that this is a commendable addition.

Also, it ensures that criminal record checks can be performed before providing a licence, and I think this is timely. It was overlooked in the first main act, but I think it's timely to bring it in today.

It makes sure that investigations into companies that may be performing fraudulent activities are run more smoothly and that investigators have better access to the information. There were some minor loopholes in the previous act, you know, through which certain areas could not be investigated, so this streamlines it.

It also stops companies from running ads with misleading information. Many of us have seen false ads in the media promising quick and sizable incomes stuffing envelopes or working at home reselling some stupid report on a CD or, you know, just schemes that were meant to extract money from the unsuspecting public where no product or service is furnished. You fall prey to scam artists, basically. Multilevel marketing in some malicious way could also be added to that definition.

Media outlets have to be held accountable and stop running such ads if they're alerted to the falsehood that it promotes. An ad in a paper or on radio or on television may be construed or perceived as being trustworthy just because it's run in a media outlet, and the public actually thinks it has that weight behind it and all that merit because it's in a paper or on TV or on the radio. So I think the government is taking a progressive step forward to ask media outlets to stop running ads propagating falsehood, and I think the natural thing to do for the media outlets is to basically show some leadership and follow the government initiative and stop airing or running those ads in their outlets.

Having said that, we still have minor concerns that I would tremendously appreciate some clarification on from the hon. member. We're concerned that there appears to be a trend developing where this government removes the core components of bills and laws and loosely puts them into the regulations. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also mentioned the same point. While we realize that sometimes the ministry or the department needs to make a timely decision in response to emerging practices or new situations, it's still a little alarming because regulations are set and changed without full consultation or input from a cross-section of the affected public. The minister at the time and some board members would decide which regulations to add, which ones to omit, and which ones to amend.

I fully understand the rationale that certain decisions have to be made when this House is not sitting, but perhaps this might take us to the argument that this House is one of the shortest sitting in the western hemisphere. I, for one, and all my caucus colleagues don't mind sitting twice as many days so we can collaborate and work with the government. We feel that this preferred government approach gives the minister too much power and discretion and effectively eliminates any need for consultation or opinion seeking.

Who decides who ends up joining these boards? Who sits on those boards? Who qualifies to sit on those boards and draft those regulations? Also, which companies or stakeholders were or will be represented on these regulations boards? Will the meetings planned for changing the regulations be open to the public? Can Joe Average or, to quote the Premier, can Martha and Henry attend those meetings or at least even submit written recommendations or suggestions?

Lastly, I urge the hon. minister and the hon. member to ensure that the sections which are going to be repealed do end up in the regulation sections. They have to be clearly stated to ensure that the continuation of consumer protection is implemented, and I'm mainly referring to sections 46 and 48 pertaining to credit reporting. It's an area, actually, that is receiving a lot of attention in the media recently. Many people have written to me as the opposition critic regarding credit reporting and the practices, you know, with respect to student loans, previous finances, mortgages, and so on. I am a little concerned that they're being repealed from the existing act, and I would like to see them highlighted and emphasized in the regulations after.

Citizens who felt that the initial Fair Trading Act was brought forward to protect them and offer them tools to evaluate and possibly repair their credit ratings are now concerned that repealing this section might just leave them with a bad credit report forever. I would hate for them actually to think that this government is letting go of its commitment, so I urge the government, I urge the minister and the hon. member to promptly and properly draft those regulations to alleviate this concern.

To end today, I repeat our agreement as the Official Opposition with the proposed amendments, and we look forward to working alongside our government colleagues. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this bill, and together with my colleague for Edmonton-McClung I will commend the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the minister responsible for bringing this legislation forward.

Speaking to some of the areas that it touches, such as identity theft, I think is really important considering the real problems we saw last year with the theft of identity information of many senior government people that got into the hands of alleged organized criminal elements. The ability to restrict the use of any information of their identity and to deal with that somewhat more effectively I think is very important.

Also, to deal with utility marketing schemes as different ways to make money seem to be arising through means of the way we govern ourselves and problems with time-shares and payday loan dealers and such. You know, these are things that must be regulated.

Of course, and to concur with my colleague for Edmonton-McClung, we must be wary of the inclination of this government to deal with things by regulation and orders in council. I think the division 8 debacle that we saw in December with the Alberta labour code has, you know, underlined that fact, and we have to be very careful in this province that we don't go too far with that type of thing.

I'm very pleased to see movement on the practice of negative options. That's where a consumer is not liable to pay for any goods or services received under a negative option practice. This bill strikes out "unless the consumer agrees in writing to pay for the goods or services." That's very good. You know, the negative option is something that just kind of really pulls consumers in without their knowledge, and to have something that effectively deals with this I think is a responsible move on the part of the government.

Some questions arise. It takes out the list of information an agency can and can't include in its reports and puts that in regulations. Again, it's a regulation problem. Most of the members duly elected by Albertans to look after their rights as individuals and consumers will not then have a say as to how this will be developed, and it will be approved behind closed doors. I think that's a concern of some importance.

It takes out of the act provisions demanding that a reporting agency must disclose a person's file to that person on request. I guess it begs the question: is there anywhere else that requires a reporting agency to disclose to an individual or their representative what's on their file once this is repealed?

It removes the whole section allowing a person to dispute the accuracy or completeness of information in their file. Once this section is repealed, is there anywhere else in legislation that gives an individual the right to dispute the information in their file in the sense of this type of important consumer legislation? It vastly expands the aspects of the act which, again, the minister can control through regulations. It's our major and biggest concern in this particular legislation.

The updates on the reverse mortgages are timely. We've all seen the ads there. I mean, it's something that must be looked at.

The receipt situation. It repeals the section requiring that every collection agency must acknowledge the receipt of any money collected from a debtor. Does that mean that they don't have to issue receipts now for payments made? It repeals the reporting requirements of a collection agency in the section prohibiting certain activities by a collection agency or collector.

4:00

Removing these sections, Mr. Speaker, makes the public more vulnerable to rougher treatment and possibly even harassment by collection agencies, even more so than happens at the moment. The removal of some of these prohibitions of certain activities opens the door for infringement on the debtor's privacy. There's also some vagueness. It adds failing to comply with other applicable legislation as a reason to refuse to issue or remove or suspend or cancel a licence. Well, what determines what's applicable? Sometimes legislation can be too broad, and you know, in the application of certain provisions and laws we have to be very careful in that area.

One other area that's related to that is the ability for the director to have the authority to do anything to enforce an order against real property. I think that is far too wide reaching. It speaks to the rights of property that many of us hold dear, and it is, I think, too much of a wide berth as it's termed in this.

I think the rights of consumers are very important in our legislation. I think that to uphold in this particular act respect for the law increases respect for the rule of law. I again commend the movers of this bill. We'll be in favour of that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Ducharme: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called. Are there additional speakers?

Then the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close the debate.

Mr. Ducharme: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Bill 1 Access to the Future Act

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Eggen]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of Bill 1 and want to say how much I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of many Albertans with respect to advanced education and investments.

I graduated in 1973 and was fortunate enough after six years of school, including four years of medical school, to complete that education without any significant debt. That seems to be a thing of the past, and increasingly, as a part-time teacher now in university, over the last decade I've heard from a lot of students about the longing they have to be less stressed in their pursuit of higher education.

The citizens of Calgary-Mountain View, where I am representative, have a fairly significant rate of postsecondary education. Approximately two-thirds have postsecondary training. Many of them expressed concerns during the last six months and during the election period about postsecondary education and about the future for their children and opportunities that they wanted to see and that they experienced but that have been less accessible as a result of some of the changes over the past decade in this province.

Most of my constituents are pleased that Alberta has paid off its debt, but the decade of cuts has indeed left people, including teachers and students, in a deficit position, stretched and stressed over the lack of resources for learning, the lack of support for learning, for infrastructure, and for building and maintenance. That was quite evident to me as I worked both on the main campus and in the medical school over this past decade. Many of them in the constituency are calling on government for sustained, reliable, predictable funding through an endowment, not depending on the ups and downs of our oil industry, that would allow consistent planning into the foreseeable future and the funding that would allow for quality education and supports.

My constituency happens to have the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, the Alberta College of Art, the University of Calgary medical school, and all have indicated tremendous support for this bill. Truly, our future does depend on attracting and retaining capable people in Alberta.

I'll talk just about two major concerns that I was party to, and those are student concerns and faculty concerns. In relation to tuition there has been a 250 per cent increase over the decade, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated earlier, I found it hard to justify the fact that I graduated after six years of university without significant debt, to turn to students and justify the fact that their tuition left them between $20,000 and $21,000 in debt on average. That is an average. That doesn't account nearly for the amount that many students incur because they're not supported by their parents, and up to $40,000 and $60,000 debts I encountered with some of my students.

Class sizes. I myself experienced where students had to sit on the floor because of the lack of space. Certainly, the lack of access has been well publicized over the past year particularly, when we had to turn away 14,000 students who were otherwise qualified in the Calgary area.

These were serious and recurring expressions from students, some of whom we had in the Legislature today.

I've heard from many young people about concerns in the apprenticeship area, the lack of access to apprenticeships. My own son is one of those who's trying to get into an apprenticeship program and struggling to know where to begin and how to ensure that there will be access and a job afterwards. So I would ask in terms of this bill that we try to address an approach to facilitate apprenticeships in various trades so that apprentices are not discouraged from trades of their choice and therefore not dropping out, as we heard earlier today.

They also expressed concerns particularly, obviously, from the Alberta College of Art, concerns about the lack of commitment to arts, humanities, and the social sciences. Truly, Mr. Speaker, these are integral to healthy human and community development. If we're talking about a sustainable future in Alberta, we have to invest not only in the hard business faculties and the professions but surely in the arts, humanities, and social sciences, which are integral to quality of life and, indeed, to reducing mental stress in our culture. I think we're paying a significant price in the health care sector, in which the health of people has been limited to looking at whether they have a job and whether they have a significant income, as opposed to what the arts and humanities bring to the total picture of our humanity.

Other issues related to disadvantaged people and immigrants and how to make more accessible loans and subsidies for their further education.

I alluded to some of the stresses that I experienced as a teacher at the University of Calgary, and I would say that our health system is dealing with a lot of these issues. We're experiencing another deficit, then, that has not been measured over the last decade, and that's a mental health deficit, especially among college students but also among faculty who have been forced to leave or downsize their expectations. The literature is showing an increasing number of mental health problems in our health care system, most particularly college students with increased rates of depression and anxiety and, indeed, suicide threats over this past decade.

These are all part of postsecondary education demands that teachers and other faculty on campus have to address and part of a deficit that is much more difficult to measure, one that is borne increasingly by the health care system. We need to find the roots of these. I'm not saying that they all lie at the base of the education system, but I am saying that we have an increasingly stressed and health-challenged population, and we need to look at roots and solutions into the future.

In terms of the faculty this decade of cuts has had significant impacts. There has been increasing concern about the targeted investments in postsecondary education, and I can speak for the medical school, where a number of very dramatic and influential special projects have been developed: bone and joint issues for example, the new Markin chair in health and wellness. These have been important contributions, but as another member has indicated, this should be icing on the cake of a continued, sustained operating grant system where people can count on a budget, can make plans for two to three years into the future, and can count on the classroom supports that they need to do what is a reasonable quality of teaching.

The lack of operating support extends also to the clerical and the secretarial and the communications side of the faculty, and many have expressed the frustration that unless the operating grants, the ongoing grants apart from capital and new budget expenditures, are addressed, many of our best teachers will leave and have left this province for other fields.

There is, then, Mr. Speaker, a need to rebuild trust in the whole process of postsecondary funding and a commitment to professors and infrastructure and students. This has been lost during this decade of severe austerity in postsecondary education. The public has repeatedly said that education is the best investment we can make for our future. All of us here agree. The question now is how and in what manner to sustain that so that people have confidence and not only come here but stay here as a result of the investment we're making.

I simply want to leave with a message of urgency to the government to move ahead as quickly as possible, to aid the population who holds the future, our future, in their hands. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to participate in the debate.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I applaud the initiative by this government towards a change. For most of the last decade students and teachers have been trying to cope with increased demands and inadequate and declining resources. While some of the erosion has been halted, much remains to be done. Albertans consistently rank education as one of their top priorities. Polls have indicated that Albertans want to see improvements in teaching and learning conditions.

Michael Fullen, renowned author, states that although change is unpredictable, you can set up conditions that help to guide the process. You must establish a sense of urgency, create a guiding coalition, develop a vision and strategy of what we want, communicate the vision, empower broad-based action, generate short-term wins, and anchor new approaches in the community.

We have a sense of urgency, and the government must now move to ensure that all Alberta families have access to the education they need, from kindergarten to postsecondary. We need the high school graduates for postsecondary, and our high school completion rates are determined by factors beginning with kindergarten.

Too many Alberta students are still trying to learn in overcrowded classrooms, where opportunities for individual assistance and support are limited. Education is investing in our future, opening opportunities for inner-city children to break the cycle of poverty by gaining access to a properly funded education. It is the right thing to do. Even our schoolchildren responded to the tsunami disaster, a way for young people to take their little money and invest in someone else because it is the right thing to do.

There is a huge variety of different careers young people must prepare themselves for in the future. Postsecondary education provides the backdrop for preparation. We need more resources for counselling students to help them make wise choices for their postsecondary training and careers because Alberta has the lowest average rate in Canada for students to move on to postsecondary education, and demand for postsecondary education is expected to grow. Seventy-nine per cent of all new jobs created in Canada and Alberta are expected to require postsecondary essentials and credentials.

Yet despite having paid down its fiscal debt, Alberta has allowed the infrastructure debt to balloon to between $7 billion and $8 billion. In the education sector spending on infrastructure has not been sufficient to provide high-quality learning environments for all Alberta's students. Key recommendations of Alberta's Commission on Learning have yet to be acted upon.

Alberta's Commission on Learning made many recommendations that if implemented would improve classroom conditions. These include ensuring that all students have access to adequate counselling, diagnostic, and other specialized services necessary for them to succeed; ensuring adequate support is in place when children with special needs are integrated into regular classrooms; providing classroom teachers with adequate support to develop and implement individual program plans for children with special needs; setting province-wide standards for the types of technology that should be available in every classroom; providing adequate funding not only for the purchase of hardware and software but also for necessary technical support, training, and continuous upgrading of equipment; providing significantly improved support for aboriginal students and their families; establishing parenting centres in communities across the province with close links to elementary schools.

The government has yet to provide targeted financial assistance to school boards to enable these recommendations to be implemented. Alberta's students are still waiting for improved classroom conditions. We need to address needs for education at all levels. We can create a guiding coalition. This government can do this.

Bill 1 is the beginning, but it falls short. We must develop a vision and strategy of what we want for Alberta education. We know the value of postsecondary education, without a doubt. At the very time when postsecondary is becoming more basic to individual success and more essential to the future of Alberta, this government has treated it as a high-priced option. We must support all postsecondary schools as the investment they are, beginning with kindergarten.

Finally, my focus, Mr. Speaker, is on the legislation's intent. In the preamble I find four 'whereas' statements that I take as goals. First is a belief in advanced education as a means of economic growth. Second is an intent to provide education for skill development and quality of life. Third is a commitment to ensure educational access to the qualified and motivated. Fourth is a support for innovation to facilitate access and eliminate barriers. I suggest these goals in aggregate because I support them in aggregate. I have difficulties with the order in which they appear, however. At present this implies that economic values are paramount and education is a servant of the economy.

An earlier Alberta government championed education in very different circumstances in the Depression. It supported education as a goal in its own right regardless of financial return. It may be that this government shares that belief and has simply not given attention to the order these objectives appear or the priority. I suggest a reordering of the goals in the preamble to Bill 1 to emphasize the individual and that the economy exists to serve the citizen and not the reverse. This vision can begin to provide an anchor for education in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to make a few brief comments on Bill 1. First, I'm happy to see that the government has finally begun to address the postsecondary funding issue in this province. Alberta has the money and the expertise to become a postsecondary beacon in North America, and I challenge the government to aim high and not settle for anything but being the best.

But as I look at this surprisingly thin bill, some questions come to mind. Without sounding too mercenary about it, I have to ask: what's in it for my sons? Now, two of my sons are college-age, certainly qualified for postsecondary education. The third is a junior high student who is intent on becoming an entomologist, of all things. You won't believe what we have as pets in our house.

I wish I could say that my two older sons are enjoying college life and all it has to offer, but I can't. They're at an age when they could be taking arts courses or perhaps exploring business or science, but they're not. Why is that? Well, simply put, postsecondary learning in Alberta has become so expensive that it has become a barrier to education, the one overarching concern of thousands of Albertans in the great, overlooked middle class. My son, for instance, wanted to take a commercial art course at Grant MacEwan this past year, but it would have cost him $6,500 for one term. That made him change his plans in a hurry.

You know, Mr. Speaker, just a little over 10 years ago the arts tuition fee at the University of Alberta was just $1,229. Today it's $4,537, and that's just for one year. To obtain a bachelor of arts degree at the University of Alberta will set a typical student back about $20,000. Once that student has the BA framed on the wall, what do they then do? Usually they go back to school. As wonderful as it is to have a BA, we all know that it doesn't set you out on a career path to riches. The sky-high cost of tuition in Alberta has made the admirable goal of education for the pure joy of expanding your mind into an out-of-reach goal for the great middle class. As far as I can see, there's nothing in this bill that addresses this problem.

Mr. Speaker, the bill promises "plans for ensuring that financial need is not a barrier to pursuing advanced education opportunities." There are also "plans to increase the participation in advanced education of individuals who are disadvantaged due to social, economic, geographic or cultural factors," which if implemented would be good news for Alberta's chronically overlooked and undereducated aboriginal community. But, again, I have to ask: what's in this bill for the middle class, the middle-class Albertan, the type of person who makes too little money to qualify for grants but not enough to be able to fund postsecondary education without going into serious debt?

This bill does not address the single greatest problem postsecondary institutions face: the lack of predictable, long-term operating grants. This has resulted in the University of Alberta, which is legislated not to run a deficit, doing exactly that. It has resulted in the anomaly of cranes dotting the skyline at the U of A as high-profile big-ticket buildings go up while the buildings around them decay. In Bill 1 we see promises of seed money for innovations, which is code, basically, for new stuff that we can show off to the world. We see more scholarships for Alberta students but not an overall decrease in tuition that would benefit every single student.

Now, maybe I'm missing something, Mr. Speaker, but as far as I can tell, in all these promises there's not one commitment to increasing the base operating funds for institutions. So while there may be money for high-profile new initiatives that make headlines for the U of A or the U of C, these new initiatives have to be sustained by operating budgets that can't keep up. It is the equivalent of building a new hospital but not supplying the money to staff it, clean it, or heat it. I can't speak on behalf of postsecondary institutions, but I would suspect that if you asked each college and university to compile a wish list, at the top would be: give us predictable, long-term funding, and let us do our job.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, as the debate over Bill 1 progresses, that we can expect some help for the middle-class students, the middle-class parents, and the low-profile but important faculties struggling to keep up. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I'm prepared to recognize additional speakers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I support putting more money into advanced education. Who doesn't support that? The question is how, and is this the right model, the right way to go?

I want to first make a comment about the title, Access to the Future Act. The key word in that title is not "future." Of course, universities prepare our young people for the future. The key word is "access." The key word in this name in terms of practical outcomes is the word "access." This is an important word, and in my experience it is usually associated with the capability of students with lesser financial resources being able to access higher education.

This is a huge issue in this province given the fact that Alberta has the lowest average rate in Canada of students who move on from high school to postsecondary education – it's at 43 per cent – and given that Alberta has the third lowest number of postsecondary degrees granted per capita in Canada compared to other provinces. So it's important to ask ourselves whether our students are getting access to advanced education and what are the roadblocks, the obstacles in the way of getting access.

Maybe on the list of definitions in this bill there should be a definition of the word "access" because most would think that access is about the opportunities and possibilities open to our students to get into university. Can they get access to the programs that they need? Can our students, no matter what their financial status is, get access to colleges and universities?

The one clause that I really quite agree with, 2(c), is the emphasis on "plans to increase the participation in advanced education of individuals who are disadvantaged due to social, economic, geographic or cultural factors." Many years ago I was involved in a program at St. Mary's University in Halifax, Nova Scotia, a program which was set up to admit disadvantaged people from the black community and also aboriginal students into St. Mary's, a program that enabled them to reach the required literacy levels so that they could compete in a university environment. That led to a number of students being able to get into university who wouldn't have otherwise qualified. So that kind of special emphasis on a special program to enable the disadvantaged to get access to advanced education is very, very important.

I think, considering that our universities and colleges are mainly in urban environments, it's very important in Alberta to look at rural education. Much innovation has gone into distance education. I for a whole year drove from Edmonton to Slave Lake to teach a course one day a week, and it was a great experience for me. Those students had an opportunity to take a university course without having to come to Edmonton, and I think that's very, very important. These kinds of programs are absolutely essential.

The rhetoric of equality of opportunity is not enough; there must be also equality of results. We have to put funding into programs that really do enable students who are disadvantaged to get ahead and to get the kind of education they need to participate in this great province. We need equality of results.

Mr. Speaker, the word "access" in this bill is not primarily focused on guaranteeing the kind of accessibility that I've been talking about. In this bill access seems to mean the ability of educational institutions to access funding, so an access to the future fund is proposed. The emphasis of this fund is on innovation and excellence, but that places the onus on the institution rather than the individual's potential. So we're no longer talking about a student's access to higher education; we're talking about a university's ability to prove that it's innovative enough to attract money.

Why should the ordinary student growing up in Alberta bear that kind of burden? Instead of access being determined by the real needs and abilities of students applying to go to university, access is determined by the decision of some kind of elite access advisory committee overseeing the universities and colleges and meting out or agreeing with this program or that program.

Mr. Speaker, in my education in Canada one of my favourite philosophers is the Canadian political philosopher George Grant, who taught us many years ago in all the books that he wrote that we in Canada are moving gradually toward the universal homogenous technological state, and it seems to me that this bill is encouraging that process to take place. What it's moving us toward is a kind of 'multiversity' in Alberta in which we would all have the same common application process. No matter where you want to go to school, there's the same common application process, which seems to me to overlook the tremendous variety of programs, the high-quality programs that are everywhere in Alberta. Students applying to an agricultural or forestry or nanotechnology program or whatever are applying to highly specialized programs, demanding that the student fit the program and so is able to choose the program of his choice. I don't understand this idea of a common application process. I don't know what that would mean. I don't really understand it, and I hope that that can be explained as we move through this bill.

Also, I want to raise a question. In terms of moving, it seems like we're moving in a formation of a kind of highly technologized multiversity for Alberta. We're moving in the direction of having a kind of super institution in which the ministry really hovers over advanced education institutions in this province in a way, as the bill says, "to monitor, evaluate and report on the quality." Well, I have a lot of problems with that. Mr. Speaker, I don't understand how this can be suggested given the tremendous traditions of academic freedom that universities have established.

Now, if Alberta wants to have world-class universities, then there has to be a respect for curriculum development, respect for university professors, their academic freedom. I've taught many courses at the University of Alberta, courses on the history of the occult, courses in spirituality, comparative religions, and I never felt that I was accountable to some superministry, some government out there, which would be evaluating the standards of excellence that I was following for my course. I, of course, was accountable to my peers and accountable to rich traditions of academic excellence that are well rooted in Canadian culture and life, but I really object to a kind of ministry hovering over advanced education.

Of course, that means that money that goes to universities and colleges in Alberta has strings attached to it. I find this ironical because this government is always criticizing Ottawa for transferring money to the provinces with strings attached, yet in this bill they're suggesting: "Okay. We'll give money to advanced education, the universities and colleges, but there are going to be all kinds of strings attached. You have to meet these various criteria in terms of proving quality."

I just submit to you as evidence of this a recent document that was presented to the House of Commons by the Confederation of Alberta Faculty Associations, which points out that in Alberta the government has imposed performance measures to ensure accountability in the postsecondary sector for 10 years, and it hasn't worked. It hasn't worked. There's been too much ministerial micromanagement, which doesn't work because there are not enough staff to ensure that it does work. So the conclusion of university professors is that restricted funds are not the way to go in terms of ensuring the tremendous excellence of our universities.

I point out that the University of Alberta, in their strategic business plan, specifies that the solution to the university's budgetary problems lies in securing "unrestricted revenue," not revenue with strings attached where they have to be accountable to some superministry that hovers over them but unrestricted revenue, "while continuing to manage expenditures effectively." When too much of an institution's revenue comes with restrictions on how it can be spent, the institution's ability to respond to change is greatly impeded.

So over and over again the connection between performance measurement and the restriction of funds just leads to tremendous problems in the advancing of education in this province. It takes a long time to build up resources in various programs. They have to have secured funding in order to develop those programs, in order to move in the direction of becoming world-class universities.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I think it's great that so many billions of dollars are being earmarked for higher education, but there has to be the insurance of the autonomy of higher education and the protection of academic freedom. The basic problem, as I said already and as has been mentioned again and again by the university professors that I have talked to, is the lack of secured, unrestricted funding. When you also couple that with the fact that Alberta only invests 5.2 per cent of its total expenditures on postsecondary education, making Alberta's rank second lowest in Canada, no wonder we have problems in the area of advanced education.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I just would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora where he reads in the bill that the provision of providing for some measurements and some understanding as to whether or not we're getting close to our goal of being a world-class educational system comes with strings attached, and if he doesn't read that in the bill or doesn't see a connection in the bill that says that money for universities and for colleges in advancing education in this province is not connected to those parameters but that the parameters in the bill clearly set out that we're trying to monitor whether we're achieving our goal, why he would make that up and then negative it.

Dr. B. Miller: It's the section under Quality. What does it say?

"The Minister shall develop and implement mechanisms to monitor, evaluate and report on the quality of advanced education." Well, isn't that some strings attached? How do you measure the quality of a course that I teach on the history of the occult? I mean, does the government have any idea how that could be done? Or a course on nanotechnology. Surely, how do you do that? How do you measure the quality?

Universities set their own standards of quality in conjunction with the professional societies of academics to which they are responsible. They have all kinds of ways of assessing the quality of their own classroom work and education. They're continually producing articles that receive feedback and criticism from their peers. They're part of organizations that involve faculty around the world. That's how you maintain the quality, through peer oversight and the responsibility to your peers. It has nothing to do with governments setting any kind of standards, so really I don't understand this section 3, quality. It sets up a kind of draconian emphasis in terms of this special fund.

The Speaker: The intention of this is short answers, short questions. Another question?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora would prefer that Albertans be reduced to reading Maclean's magazine in order to determine whether or not their universities and colleges and technical institutes are appropriately ranked or have some understanding of the quality. Understanding the hon. member's point about how you do determine quality and the need for independence of the institutions and not detracting at all from those commentaries about how institutions actually maintain their quality, is there a better way to have Albertans understand where their institutions rank other than reading Maclean's magazine?

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Okay. Additional questions? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Would it be fair to say that the hon. member's position is that the taxpayers of Alberta should give him or someone like him, really, an unmonitored amount of money so that he can teach the occult?

Dr. B. Miller: I think I don't have to justify the teaching of courses like the history of the occult because, I mean, in the history of the development of religious studies in various universities – my own degree is from the University of Chicago – this is the kind of curriculum that we develop to cover all the religions of the world in every different kind of culture. So there are good reasons for developing a fine program in comparative religions. We don't take our instructions from anybody beyond us, and we report, of course, through the proper channels. The president of the university has the responsibility of reporting to the public what happens in a university and so on.

Sure, you should be concerned that your tax dollars are being properly used, and there should be some kind of accountability, but what I'm dealing with is the issue of quality and standards. The quality of advanced education – it sounds very draconian to have some sort of superministry hovering over, determining, monitoring, evaluating. Just the reading of it sounds quite draconian.

An Hon. Member: They're unqualified.

Dr. B. Miller: That's right. They're unqualified to do that kind of work.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on this question portion?

Mr. Horner: A question, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted . . .

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. We've now expended the time.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to continue the debate.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin my remarks with a quote from a famous educator from my constituency, Dr. Chester Ronning: "Live until you're old, learn until you're old, and there's still so much [more] to learn."

As many of my colleagues know, my background lies in education. I had the pleasure of teaching and working at Augustana University College for many years, and prior to that I attended the institution as a student. My experiences have shown me that the value of an education cannot be overestimated. It is crucial that postsecondary education remains accessible for Albertans who have the ability and the drive to pursue one. Whether an individual is working towards the acquisition of a master's designation in the trades or a university degree, our future success as a province is tied to the accessibility of learning.

Bill 1 recognizes this fact and lays out a comprehensive strategy to ensure that Albertans are able to gain the training they choose. This will be accomplished through a variety of ways, such as developing new ways to share information. The Lois Hole digital library will increase accessibility to learning materials in our province. Using the infrastructure provided by the SuperNet, this library will allow Albertans throughout the province to access digital information and print materials that are contained in our postsecondary institutions. In such a large province as ours proximity to a large academic library can be an issue, and this initiative will facilitate lifelong learning in this province. The ultimate goal of this library is that whether you are in Peace River or Calgary, you will be able to access the same information.

Another concept that Bill 1 devotes energy toward is the issue of transferability. Bill 1 works toward improved transferability of postsecondary credits between institutions and from other learning arenas. This will recognize the skills gained through different learning experiences and make it easier for students to achieve their educational goals.

As well as addressing transferability between institutions, this act will also make it simpler for students to receive financial assistance, whether this takes the form of bursaries, scholarships, or loans. This bill calls for the investigation of the implementation of a one-window system where students will be able to browse and apply for financial assistance. In addition to this, Bill 1 calls for the addition of $1 billion to the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. This will increase the amount of funding that is available for scholarships, grants, and bursaries in this province. Having a greater number of bursaries available will benefit all students, ensuring that financial status will be no barrier to continuing education.

However, Bill 1 does not only work to increase accessibility to learning; it also introduces new avenues for learning in our province. The proposed centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta will provide our province with an amazing opportunity to learn more about this rich culture. As a province we already have a great number of ties with China, and the opportunity to learn more about one of the most populous nations in the world is one that I am sure many Alberta students will appreciate. I find it almost providential that this centre has been announced within a year of Augustana University College in Camrose becoming a campus of the University of Alberta. This stems from the passion that one of Augustana's former presidents had for China.

Mr. Speaker, I began my remarks today with a quote. These words, as I mentioned before, were spoken by the late Dr. Chester Ronning. This man was an academic, a teacher, an MLA, a foreign diplomat, and a personal friend of mine. Dr. Ronning was the principal at Camrose Lutheran College, which is now Augustana, from 1927 to 1942, after which he went to a career in the foreign service.

His special interest was China, where he grew up, and Augustana University College had put forth a concept to create a chair of Chinese studies at the college, which would be named after Chester Ronning. Unfortunately, this plan did not come to fruition as hoped, but with Augustana becoming a campus of the University of Alberta and the announcement of this new centre focusing on Chinese studies, Augustana has the opportunity to be involved and be a part of this.

Mr. Speaker, continued investment in postsecondary education through increased funding for scholarships and innovative ideas such as the centre for Chinese studies is but one part of the Access to the Future Act. Bill 1 also concerns itself with another issue which will greatly affect the province's future, and that is research. This is only fitting as postsecondary learning and research are inextricably linked, and increasing funding is one area that affects the other.

In Bill 1 the government commits to expanding the value of the ingenuity fund. While this will be beneficial for research in a variety of areas, there is one that I would like to highlight in particular, and this is the area of water research. Through the ingenuity fund the Alberta Ingenuity Centre for Water Research was born. This centre focuses on the broad picture when it comes to this precious resource, and it will be instrumental in the further development and application of the province's water for life strategy.

Water quality, water use, and water conservation are issues that are important to Albertans and to the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Of particular interest to myself and my constituents is the Battle River basin. Mr. Speaker, the Battle River flows through my constituency, and there is continuing research on this river because of the diverse flora and fauna it supports as well as its unique water source. The Battle River relies solely on surface water runoff and groundwater to feed it. It does not benefit from the snowpack runoff from the mountains and the foothills or the glacial melting that feeds many other basins in Alberta. As a result, this river has naturally low volumes, and this presents challenges because of municipal and agricultural pressures that increased development brings. Additional capital for the ingenuity fund could result in increased funding for water research into issues such as those that I have already mentioned as well as a wide range of energy, environmental, and life science projects.

Mr. Speaker, the Access to the Future Act addresses many challenges that are facing our province as we head into our second century. Through supporting our postsecondary institutions and research that is performed throughout our province, we will be well equipped to deal with any challenges that we may face in the future.

I support Bill 1, and I urge my colleagues on both sides of the floor to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although the government's proposed Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, may seem like a step forward, may seem like a long overdue look at the obstacles and hurdles faced by our postsecondary students, it still fails to address the core issues.

This government's philosophy resembles very much the band-aid approach. When we're playing sports and someone gets hurt, someone gets an abrasion or a cut, their coach tells them to bandage it and keep playing. Later, when time permits, when we have more free time, we may take a thorough look at it, and we may try to tackle the real issues. Sometimes the pharmacist in me resurfaces, and I make a reference to a pharmacy term. This bandage, Mr. Speaker, will not work. This approach will never work when we're talking about chronic issues, chronic problems which besiege our postsecondary institutions and hold our university and college students hostage. Our postsecondary education system is beleaguered by lack of space, lack of funding, and lack of empathy for the students.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that although Bill 1 may appear to be forward thinking—that's relative to the typical Conservative position—it still in my opinion is a little short-sighted. The Conservative government plagiarized our Alberta Liberal postsecondary plan right out of our campaign policy book, changed the wording a little, tweaked it a little bit, and laid claim to the idea. I am not terribly mad at the Conservatives because the end result would be one that would help alleviate difficulties which our students face in finding spots and in affording spots in our colleges and universities.

I could also go as far as saying that I understand the Conservatives' motives in scrambling to hastily put together what appears to be a plan to address voter anger at the Tories, to react to voter receptiveness to the Alberta Liberal platform, and to pretend to be listening to what Albertans told them in their very own It's Your Future survey.

I think I can find it in my heart to co-operate with the ruling Conservatives on this one if they accept the following guiding principles. One, removing the cap that they put at $3 billion on the endowment fund. Uncapping the endowment fund is the right thing to do, especially in our allegedly debt-free stage and with our huge surpluses. If we take the $3 billion and split it up amongst all students and apprentices in the province, they would each get something like $16,000. A place like Princeton, on the other hand, has an endowment fund of up to $1.3 million U.S. per student. So if we're talking excellence and talking setting the stage for Alberta students and Alberta universities and colleges and institutions to excel and be world renowned and world respected, we have to look at other places like Princeton and Harvard, for example, and see where we stand in comparison to them. This government, unfortunately, sees education as a liability. It looks at education as merely a budget line entry on the debit side. In fact, it's a sound investment in a stronger tomorrow.

Two, committing to at least 10 years of funding the endowment out of future provincial budget surpluses. This act talks about one year, and there is no assurance and no guarantee after April 1. Our postsecondary institutions are faced with uncertainty and vagueness when dealing with this government. If we treat them as businesses, or if we expect them to make decisions and long-term plans, the least we can do is to offer them some clarity and some certainty so they can forecast and plan. Leaving it to the whim of the minister at the time and his or her personal agenda or his or her personal preference or whichever lobbying group happens to have his or her ear at the time is totally unacceptable.

Three, we as the Official Opposition demand that an independent postsecondary education commission perform a full review of the entire system. We're talking funding, tuition, accessibility, quality, et cetera, not a cosmetic ministry public relations exercise or a make-work project for Tory MLAs. The planned affordability review, which will be performed by Tory backbenchers, will surely not be there to criticize the ministry so much.

Four, this government puts too much emphasis on the applied or marketable research, and it totally underestimates the value and merit of pure research. Again, this is a government looking under its feet, only realizing short- or medium-term gain. Investing in pure scientific research and fields like the arts, the humanities, or social sciences would provide a wider scope, and it's probably more useful to society at large, not only to select private interest groups. This bias has to end.

Five, the government has to investigate all options and try its hardest to ensure that students get actual physical placements in postsecondary institutions. Physical enrolment should not be replaced with virtual e-learning except in very select cases, very few cases, not the norm, and when offered as an option. So that student has to actually have that choice and decide whether they want to have distance e-learning from their home or whether they want and deserve to be bum in a seat in an institution, attending class.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I don't mind working with the government and accepting their Access to the Future Act if they in turn listen to our suggestions and take our proposed improvements into consideration. This is not a tit-for-tat position. Presumably we all want what's best for our province's students and what's best for our institutions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member is not somewhat ashamed of accusing the government of plagiarism when their own party platform actually borrowed from a resolution that the Edmonton-Riverview Progressive Conservative Constituency Association brought forward to an annual general meeting which was adopted unanimously, which actually has more bearing on the policy that's being reflected in Bill 1 than the Liberal platform, which came many, many months subsequent.

Mr. Elsalhy: No, I am not ashamed to say this. We listened to a report that was put forward, and we put it in as part of our campaign platform. We're proud to be listening to the people of this province. The Tories, on the other hand, accepted the policy that we brought forward and implemented it and laid claim to it after the election. They ran on empty during the election, Mr. Speaker. We had an idea that we adapted from a report, and we accepted it. We improved on it. So, no, I'm not ashamed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let me get this right. So when the Liberal Party borrows an idea from a PC constituency, it's called listening to Albertans and accepting good ideas. But when a Conservative government borrows an idea from a Liberal platform, it's called plagiarism and stealing. Am I correct in understanding that?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member could just clarify. He started off by calling the bill short-sighted, then claimed ownership of it as a Liberal policy, and then criticized it for being hastily put together. I wonder if he could just clarify whether he likes it or not. Is he for it or against it?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. To clarify to the hon. member, it was short-sighted because it was hastily put together without ensuring that it's to be continued after April 1. After April 1 we have no assurance in this amendment act to ensure that the endowment fund would continue to be funded from the surplus or from any other revenue.

We laid claim to it during the election. We ran with a strong campaign platform. The Tories, on the other hand, had nothing, and I think that what they're doing now is sort of damage control to try to please some of the voters who punished them. Two hundred and some thousand voters did not vote Tory this time because the Tories did not have anything to say.

An Hon. Member: But they didn't go over to you.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, some did. [interjections]

The Speaker: All right. Through the chair, please.

Hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, do you have a question?

Ms Calahasen: No.

The Speaker: Additional? We have time.

Additional speakers, then.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to speak on this bill. There are a number of items here I think the government is good to move on. You know, it's good to finally have something so that we can say to Albertans that the government is looking to try and improve access to education and trying to improve the ability of our educational system to deal with and for the future.

I very much like the $500 million in the heritage science and engineering fund. I have many relatives that are in engineering and in construction and in trades, and they look forward to doing this sort of thing. I have some that have been in research. I think that it's timely and can hold great benefit to Alberta just as such funds have done in medical research.

Mr. Speaker, placing a greater emphasis on postsecondary education is crucial to the future livelihood of all Alberta families. Even if the government is not going far enough to provide stable, long-term funding for our postsecondary institutions, at least the endowment portion of this bill is a start. At least the other aspects of this bill are beginning to look to the future.

Postsecondary education is not just the education which happens at our bricks-and-mortar institutions such as universities, colleges, and technical institutions. Postsecondary education is also the on the job training provided in our formal apprenticeship training and in other training. Access to apprenticeship has become increasingly difficult for young Albertans for a number of reasons. Work is often intermittent, even though at times it can be frantically busy. A good trades job can be no good to a young family if it only lasts for four months of the year and then they get a layoff. Heavy overtime and huge demand for apprentices' services often slack off into sudden layoffs, unemployment, and forced hanging around if there's not a new job to go to.

With dramatic development slated to take place over the next 10 to 15 years and even longer in the Alberta oil sands, it is key that the apprenticeship system be administered in a responsible manner.

This responsible approach must reflect the true needs and opportunities for individuals in our marketplace. Training must be responsible and at a sustainable and ongoing level.

We've seen such wide variations in apprenticeship training over the years, Mr. Speaker. There are gaps, almost a generational sort of appearance that we see. The generational age representations you see on many of our construction projects is because in some periods of our history we've trained very, very few apprentices, and you can see that right now on job sites.

It must be at a responsible level. Most responsible employers I've spoken to are adamant that there be proper apprenticeship ratios that give rise to good training. Many place that at about 3 to 1 in construction, for example. They know that this is the optimum level for the proper training of an individual in his or her chosen trade. Young apprentices get the opportunity to interact with different tradesmen to get the proper attention they deserve and require to know their trade. Too many apprentices make for a group grope, a what-will-we-do-now approach. Even there there may be more lower wage individuals on a job site. In fact, this can decrease productivity and raise costs because people really don't know what they're doing.

We've seen a number of projects where costs have ballooned and gone out of control. It's not really the labour aspect, but I think it's important that the best qualified crews and the best makeup of these crews be made available for our ever important oil sands projects. It's obvious on construction sites where apprenticeship ratios have been abused and the ever present problem of rework becomes a common and costly problem.

Better access must provide for more flexibility and indentureship. This is the system where an apprentice is sponsored over the years of his apprenticeship and works with his or her mentors. As apprentices often work multiple short-term jobs, it makes sense that the hiring halls and trades organizations which they work through be empowered to indenture. Then they can be assured that they at least can have some sense of steady employment.

When there are slow and excessively busy periods, we must recognize the interprovincial trades mobility agreements already in place in Canada. There's long been this safety valve system in place in our country. What happens in this process is that, for example, a contractor calls for a number of tradespeople that he or she may need, and those skilled tradesmen are then sent, or dispatched, to a job site. They will often call first for the ones they know and have experience with, and then the hiring hall will send others with the proper qualifications that are available.

If there are not enough people in northern Alberta, then these hiring halls will call their counterparts in southern Alberta. If there's no one available in southern Alberta, these hiring halls will then call their hiring halls in other provinces of Canada. On the rare occasion that this demand cannot be filled from Canadian sources, there are sources of trade supply in this system, in this interprovincial, intercountry system. In our continental system they can get people from the United States, and they have done so in the past, and Canada has sent people to the United States in the same way. This system has historically successfully supplied trades labour for all the megaprojects that have been completed in Alberta.

The government must recognize that this ability of skilled labour is a true availability of skilled labour for projects that are upcoming. It must recognize the ability of the system to trim the peaks and fill the valleys in labour demand, and it must develop some system which better targets labour market needs, surveys both supply and demand – I underline that: both supply and demand – and can give planning for Albertans, give the ability to Albertans to look and plan for their future to ensure that their families have some security and a real sense of involvement in the wealth of Alberta.

There are many groups that must be accessed in training. There are many unemployed farmers as people are increasingly leaving the family farm, with the steady and regular stories of more people in financial difficulty because of the situation there with BSE. We have unemployed youth, which are at the highest level in the country. We have underemployed landed immigrants. Many, many stories have been in the media about their inability to use their skills and to be utilized for the development of our province.

Of course, you know, we have our very important and underutilized aboriginal people. I'll quote from a letter that was tabled earlier today from the Treaty 8 First Nations, paragraph 3.

There are significant numbers of our people and other Albertans that, with some appropriate support and training beyond current practices that could fill the employment needs that industry and your government are concerned about. The forecast of shortages of people for employment in certain skills areas should be taken as a first challenge on the "home front" rather than a "quick fix" using foreigners that will backfire in the long run.

And in the sixth paragraph:

Should these actions take place it would be extremely irresponsible and potentially explosive. You and your government talk about an "Alberta Advantage" that to us means your words talk of the well being, caring and development of First Nations peoples, other Aboriginal peoples and in general all Alberta citizens. Importing foreigners without taking more serious steps amongst our members and within the Alberta population pool at large to qualify unemployed people should be unthinkable.

Mr. Speaker, I think that that statement speaks well to some of the feelings of the Treaty 8 First Nations, which are the reserves that occupy much of northern Alberta.

Just one more point. I think that our system must look not only to postsecondary education like the universities and the bricks-and-mortar institutions that look to academic skills, but they must also recognize those skills of the hands, the different types of intelligence that different individuals may have: you know, the tradesmen, the farmers, the artists of our great province.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, investment in Albertans, investment in our people, and investment in those special people for whom we all work, Alberta's children, I think is what is most important here. I look forward to further discussion on this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, and it is this. I was listening with interest to his remarks. What further steps would he like this government to take other than facilitating the recruitment of temporary replacement workers for jobs in the construction of the oil sands plants in the north? What steps would he like to see the government take instead of recruiting temporary foreign replacement workers, particularly with First Nations people, who have a very chronic rate of unemployment?

The Speaker: A fine question, hon. member, but I think we should adhere to the rules of relevancy. The bill that we have before us is the Access to the Future Act. If somehow this could be tied in together, proceed, but tie it together, please.

Mr. Backs: I think that the training of many individuals that are capable for this is certainly part of this act, and access to postsecondary education is certainly most important. The way that we look at postsecondary is not something, I think, that should be only looked at in terms of universities and technical institutions and colleges. We've got to look at it in terms of the many other sometimes innovative ways.

You know, I've seen aboriginal companies work very closely with some of our major employers like Syncrude and Suncor, and I've worked with some of these companies in the past to try and encourage aboriginal employment in a way that brings them into the mainstream of our economy and helps them to develop as citizens that are taking part in this Alberta advantage, as mentioned by the Treaty 8 First Nations.

I think there are many areas where we can look at this, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the questioner for the question.

The Speaker: Additional questions, hon. members? Additional participants?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar then.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. Perhaps the title of this bill could be the affordable access to postsecondary education in Alberta's future act because, unfortunately, access to postsecondary education for many in this province has become unaffordable. Many speakers this afternoon have discussed that.

Certainly, when we look at access, affordability, and quality of postsecondary education, we all know that they were important issues in the provincial election which occurred last fall. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is to be commended for bringing these issues forward and leading the charge, so to speak. I'm not saying that the government is copying many of our ideas that were presented during the election, but certainly I think this is a political reaction to what Albertans have known for quite some time, and that is, again, that postsecondary education has become unaffordable for more than a few young Albertans.

When we look at unemployment rates, if we want to talk about apprenticeships and industry training and how they're going to be affected by this bill, we have to ensure that young Albertans have access to postsecondary education so their unemployment rate goes down and it is the same as the provincial average of roughly about 4 per cent. It is more than double the provincial average at this time for the group between the ages of 16 and 24. I would certainly endorse this legislation if it would reduce that unemployment rate.

Certainly, I would like to see access for First Nations to postsecondary education so they, too, can see a significant drop in their unemployment rates. Surely, there will be partnerships developed with industry to ensure that First Nations young people are trained before we go about recruiting these temporary foreign workers.

I would hope that the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert at the next caucus meeting would take some of his hon. colleagues aside and say, "Look, before we continue with the recruitment through our technical colleges of replacement workers to work in construction in the north, perhaps we should develop a special program for some of the farmers who are facing financial difficulty right now and may want to work out and pick up a few dollars on the busy construction sites of this province." So perhaps we should have a targeted initiative to ensure, not only for the compulsory but the optional trades that are available in this province, that farmers come first. I think this would help a lot of farmers make ends meet in these difficult times if they could work out. If they could go to a place like Fort McMurray and have a trade ticket, a valid trade ticket, in their pocket, they too could participate in that construction boom. I would like to see this, and I certainly hope that access will become an issue, and we will look at training those individuals before we go searching far and wide around the world for people who may not have the standards of training of this province.

Now, under this current government, Mr. Speaker, funding for postsecondary education certainly has not kept pace with inflation or enrolment increases. This Progressive Conservative government cut funding to postsecondary education by 21 per cent in the three years between 1994 and 1997. More recent increases have not enabled institutions to recover or deal with rising enrolments or inflation. In fact, four Alberta universities alone project that they need $160 million in new operating dollars just to catch up with their peers. Now, other hon. members this afternoon have talked about this infrastructure deficit. We certainly have been successful in paying down the debt, the enormous public debt that was incurred by this same Progressive Conservative government, but now we must look at a lot of the infrastructure debts in the province, and we have to go no further than our postsecondary institutions.

It is unfortunate, as we debate this bill, Bill 1, that again most postsecondary education institutions are projecting budget deficits in one or more of the next few years. This has been brought forward by a group called Public Interest Alberta. I'm sure that the fact sheets that are put out by Public Interest Alberta are read with keen interest by government members. Certainly, I find some of the research that is presented by Public Interest Alberta informative and very worthwhile, and I thank them for making us a much better province.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, funding for postsecondary education in the past was often dependent on fluctuating government revenues. Funding, as a result of this, has become unstable and contingent on bureaucratic measures of performance. Financial uncertainty makes planning impossible. It doesn't matter whether it's the Department of Health or the Department of Environment or Human Resources and Employment. In order to plan, there has to be a standard. There has to be a commitment. Hopefully, with Bill 1 there will be a renewed commitment, a renewed interest by this government, and this won't be just fallout from the provincial election, but this will be a renewed commitment to postsecondary education.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look at some of the numbers surrounding postsecondary institutions in Alberta, we have to look at the amount of money. When we look at the amount of money adjusted for inflation and on a per student basis, transfers to postsecondary institutions in Alberta fell from $14,274 in 1992-93 to under $11,000 in the 2003-04 fiscal year. Now, if we look at funding for postsecondary education during this current Progressive Conservative reign – and for new members of the Assembly there are, you could almost call them dynasties; there are three. There was one from 1971 through to '86, then there was a second dynasty from '86 through to '92-93, and then the current dynasty. One has to wonder how long this current dynasty will last. In this last dynasty funding for postsecondary education fell as a percentage of provincial expenditure from 6.2 per cent to 5.1 per cent. This is a measure, one could say, of this government's commitment to postsecondary education, and I'm disappointed that Alberta ranks ninth out of 10 provinces on this measure.

There's a lot of work to do, and if my support for Bill 1 would help, I would certainly provide it and endorse this bill because while it may not be perfect, I think it is a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker.

Now, lack of funding has created a backlog of deferred maintenance not only in roads, bridges, schools, hospitals but also at universities. The two largest universities alone have deferred maintenance of approximately $1 billion. Again, this is information that's been provided by Public Interest Alberta, and I'm grateful to them for that. The government gets a real dollar return on its investment in postsecondary education. There's no doubt about that. And we need to see some commitment to repairing the infrastructure at our larger facilities.

We know that the business community would like to see a commitment to postsecondary education. The business community points out that for the long-term economic competitiveness and diversification of this province it's a number one public policy.

Mr. Speaker, we were talking earlier about affordable access to postsecondary education. Now tuition costs. It doesn't matter whether it's this government or other right-wing governments around the world, there seems to be this drive to limit access to education. I disagree with that. I think we should look at the Irish model and follow that. That model has been discussed over the course of time in this Assembly by many hon. members on both sides of the House, but let's not forget about it. If access is virtually free, many companies will want to set up shop because they know that the prospective employees will be able to read the manual, they will be educated, and they will be able to follow directions and be productive and, hopefully, very well-paid workers as well.

Now, institutions have been forced to increase tuition. For university tuition, Alberta saw the largest percentage increase in the country – in the entire country – between 1990-91 and 2004-05: 270 per cent. The average tuition for colleges and technical institutions has also increased, a little less but really a significant amount: 250 per cent.

Tuition increases have not consistently been accompanied by an increased level of access to student financial aid. Yearly tuition as a percentage of the Alberta student loan program: the maximum, in 1992-93, used to be about 20 per cent. It is now almost 40 per cent. Students make up the difference by working part-time and even full-time jobs. Almost 65 per cent of Alberta university students now work while in school an average of about 20 hours per week, or three shifts. The overwhelming majority of these students say that this negatively impacts their academic experiences.

Student debt, Mr. Speaker, has also risen substantially in Alberta. University students graduate with an average debt of over $21,000 and college students with $19,000. Seventy per cent of Albertans believe that university and college tuition is too high. Is Bill 1 going to be able to reduce tuition fees? This remains to be seen. We'll have to wait and see.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to Bill 1 for a minute. I'm very excited about the future and that we're increasing the opportunities for Albertans by opening up the universities and vocational education. I'd like to see the government perhaps look at an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. In Europe we see vocational schools opening up in grade 9. There are many kids in our junior and high schools that don't have the interest in academics and are falling through the cracks. Especially in the rural areas, there's lots of room in the schools. Some are only at 50 per cent capacity. If we were to spend some extra money at that level and open up vocational education for the students, I feel that we could benefit greatly.

There are too many kids in grade 12 that are graduating and have no skills because they didn't work hard while they were in school. They saw no need to, and then when they go out, they have nothing. But if we were to start having more educational opportunities and work employment in the early years, that would greatly improve their ability.

I just want to give my own personal example. In grade 11 I did not like all the options – band, art, and some of the other ones – and I went and talked to our school administrator. He set up a program where I was able to go down to the butcher shop and work for half a day. Consequently, when I graduated from grade 12, I had the opportunity to go and work in a butcher shop at an increased pay, as opposed to some of those kids who had no work experience and were unable to do that.

In many of our small towns, Raymond for example, there's a small business owner there who has a muffler shop and a wheel balancing place, and he's ready to retire. There should have been 40 or 50 students that could have gone through and learned that and bought that business when it shut down. Instead, the rural areas are dying because there are no tradesmen and craftspeople that are able to pick up on some of what's happening in the rural towns. We have cabinetmakers, all kinds of good opportunities. So I would urge this government to look at increasing their spending in the high schools and start that vocational program much earlier so that the students can exercise that right.

Also, we see with the sports programs and band and other ones that we have a lot of teachers that come and spend countless hours helping those students develop those talents, and I think that there would be a lot of students that would be excited to have teachers that would help them with carpentry, with mechanics, with electrical, all types of trades if in fact we were to allow them to have that opportunity. But the funding isn't there for vocational education, and it would be appreciated.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for about 12 seconds.

Hon. members, the Assembly stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 15, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/03/15

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order. This is the first time this Assembly, the 26th Legislature, has gone into committee, so I would like to note for some of the newer members that it's a more casual level of debate. Jackets for the gentlemen are optional. Also, members are allowed to occupy a seat other than their own. Sometimes this leads to some side conversations. I would ask that we still respect the member that has the floor. If your conversations need to get louder, perhaps they could take place out in the committee room.

Bill 21

Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 21, the Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, 2005. Our critic for Finance had laid out our Official Opposition response to the bill earlier this afternoon, but there were a couple of issues that I wanted to raise and, hopefully, get some response back from the sponsoring member or the minister. Hoping to, anyway.

As the critic laid out, the Official Opposition is supportive of the moves that are being contemplated here. I think it's something that the industry has been asking for for an extended period of time. I think the first time I heard about it would have been in about '96, but my notes indicate that the hotel room tax was introduced in '87. Well, I know that in '96 they were trying to get it turned into a levy and have that money redirected into tourism and marketing, so they've been trying to make that happen for at least nine years. Once again, we see that the wheels of the Legislature grind exceedingly slow. But we are happy to support this bill.

Just a couple of things that I want to note, and I believe the member raised them this afternoon, but I'll just underline them again. I think there is expected to be an increase in the amount of money that is available, but I note that it's still substantially below the money that's available for tourism marketing in most other provinces. I don't watch television very much, and I usually tape it, but I have noticed some commercials recently for Newfoundland and Labrador, really nice, well-produced television commercials, so they're socking a wad of money into promoting their province for tourism possibilities. I know that we always get a lot of advertising out of B.C. and Ontario. We're quite far behind in investing in that. I think we do have to look at this money as an investment in an economic driver because tourism is an economic driver for us, and we need to look at marketing dollars as an investment in that, in increasing our share of the marketplace, and I'm very supportive of that.

I think it's also important that the act not become unduly onerous with paperwork and reporting on behalf of the operators. You often hear from small business operators that talk about how many reports they've got to fill out and file and how onerous that is, especially if they're a fairly small business. I think that wherever we can simplify that, make e-filing commonplace, is very helpful.

We have heard from some very small bed and breakfast owners that they have concern with the present legislation. It's around definitions, I think, because something happens at a certain accommodation level, and below that they're treated differently than above that. Also, we get Health and Wellness defining a B and B by the number of people, eight or less, and the hotel act defining accommodation by the number of rooms. So there's a slight jurisdictional battle there that maybe can be addressed as part of this or worked out as part of this.

Now, the substantive part of what I wanted to discuss tonight is around two things. The first is: where's the money going? I could have missed something here – and I'm happy to be corrected by the sponsor of the bill – but as far as I can see in the act, the money is designated to be collected, but it doesn't say that it's going to go into a special designated fund, which tells me that it's going into general revenue. Since we're in Committee of the Whole, we can have a back and forth discussion here. I'll get the sponsoring member to get up and tell me on the record whether in fact this money is going to go into a special set-aside designated fund or if it just flows into general revenue.

My concern about this is that it's not secure funding. If we have a change in minister, a change in government – anything is possible – a change in government direction, none of this is nailed down. That 4 per cent levy . . . [interjection] We'll talk about ducks later. That 4 per cent levy/tax could not be directed into tourism marketing anymore unless it's going into a specific fund that is set aside for that purpose, and my reading of this bill indicates no such thing. There's no mention of a separate fund. There's no mention of designated, set-aside, tagged, enveloped money here, none of those things that we would usually look for when we're talking about money collected for a specific purpose that's tied to something.

So I'd like to get the government on the record with that one because what I'm seeing is that this is a tax that's being collected and flowing into general revenue, and then there's this sort of general discussion about: it will probably go back out to marketing. But that's not a very secure place for those hotel tourism operators to be hearing about. I think they're looking for some certainty here.

Let's face it. It's not as though this government doesn't operate with a number of tagged levies or royalties that are collected off particular sectors that are then set aside for specific use. Certainly, we see that with oil and gas royalties. Certainly, we see that with stumpage fees: collected, set aside. They're not going into general revenue. So it's okay to designate on the front-end load, but on this one, which perhaps you could say was a back-end load, there's great reluctance to tag it or to put it into a special fund. I'd like to hear some discussion around the choices the government has made with that one.

Ducks. I'm interested that the government says: well, we've gotten rid of this 5 per cent tax, and now we're going to have a 4 per cent levy. Oh, come on. If it walks like a duck and it quacks like a duck, you know what? It's a duck. I appreciate the attempt at levity that's brought forward around calling this a levy rather than a tax, but you know what? It's a duck, and it's a tax. Okay? Thank you for bringing me a bit of amusement while I talk about this, but it's a duck.

The second issue I have is: who controls the dollars? Who will distribute the dollars that are collected? Assuming that they are going to go into a special fund, who is going to designate where they go, and how will this be done? What's the criteria that it's going to be based on? It's all pretty loosey-goosey. Oh, my, we have a f-o-w-l theme happening tonight: ducks, geese. But it is very loosey-goosey. This money is going to get collected. We don't know where it's going to go or how it's going to be held aside, and we're not getting any indication of who's in control here. Where does the buck stop, in other words?

Now, I'm aware that the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, which was an advisory body to the minister, maybe was supposed to distribute it, or maybe it has distributed the first wave of it that's already been happening, but I don't think so. I think Economic Development stepped in and said: we're going to tag where the first amounts of money go. There was an expectation there, certainly on my part, that the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council was going to be designating where these funds go, but first time out we've got Economic Development involved here. So what's happening? Why is that happening?

Now, a third layer of this. One, is the money going into a special fund? Two, who's going to designate it, and what's the criteria for designating and doling out the money on the marketing tourism end? Three, what kind of monitoring audit function is there going to be on this, performance measurements, et cetera, et cetera, the way that we will be able to look at this particular initiative and judge it a year, two years, five years, 10 years down the road and go, "Boy, this was successful," or "No, it wasn't, and we need to fix it a bit?" I'm not seeing anything that is laying out for us how we the Members of the Legislative Assembly, we Albertans, we the public, we the Public Accounts Committee are going to be able to look at this money and say, "Yes, we got value for our dollar there; yes, it was wisely used" and all the other monitoring transparency and accounting functions that go along with that.

Now, a couple of other sort of small, niggly factors that come up. I know that there was a PricewaterhouseCoopers poll that was done around this idea, and there's very strong support for it, which is in large part why, in fact, we are supporting it. But there were some that were less supportive, and it seems to be that sort of 10 per cent level, and that same 10 per cent – and I can't tell you whether it's exactly the same people, but there's more or less a consistent 10 per cent – feels that the increased marketing money won't help. They appear to have given up. It correlates to the rural small-business owners in the hotel industry. See, in response to the question, "Would the government fulfill the promise?" there was still around 10 per cent – it's actually 8 to 15 per cent in that particular one – that weren't exactly believing that the government would fulfill the promise that's being put forward with this bill.

You know, to other questions like, "Do you expect a levy to be beneficial?", a number of people did, a very high percentage there, almost 65 per cent, for a couple of reasons. One, because it showed government commitment to the sector, and they feel very strongly that they haven't had government – well, sorry; I can't speak for them. I would argue that the government has not been supportive of the tourism and marketing sector for many, many years. They are saying, according to this study, that they believe it is showing government commitment to the sector and also that it's a good marketing opportunity.

When I look at that kind of feedback coming from the sector, I go back to my initial questions about: where's the money going, and how's it being kept separate? Is it designated or set aside or kept safe? That is what we really want to know, that it's not just going to be snatched away by some other department. Already, as I pointed out, the very first allocation of the money seems to have already been decided by Economic Development, which wasn't quite what we were expecting there, so there's already a bit of inconsistency in what we're expecting.

I'm also interested in the criteria to allocate the funding. Assuming that it is going to go to tourism and marketing, what criteria is going to be used? Is it going to be on the basis of strengths so that those that are already doing really well get more money, get to be stronger, a sort of Darwinian theory of tourism? You know, if you have a going concern in the Rocky Mountains between Jasper and Banff, you're going to continue to get good money, but if you're somewhere out there in rural central Alberta, you're not? Will the money be allocated on that base, working from a basis of strength so those that are strong get more marketing money, or would it be based on some other kind of strategic plan? You know, is it going to be allocated equally across all of the tourism marketing – oh, they have all those marketing groups across Alberta. Is it going to be divided equally amongst them, or are we going to say that only new ventures or new products are going to get attention? What's the concept behind this?

We're being asked to invest in something, approve of something, and I agree with approving of it, but I'm not getting a lot of details about what's coming after that. It's hard, as always, for me to sort of buy into something that isn't very well articulated. So I'm looking for the sponsor of the bill or the minister to get up and fill in some of those blanks.

I'm wondering if there is any kind of a plan for money to go into the physical development support for marketing or not. I note that with that Strategic Tourism Marketing Council there are a number of vacancies on that council right now. That's supposed to be coming from the sector, from the industry, so I'm wondering why there are vacancies there. If the sector is really involved and really interested, usually people would be lining up to put their name forward to sit on the council. Has it run its time? Is the industry withdrawing from it or hesitating for some reason? That was the advisory council to the minister, so has the minister got the recommendations on his desk and he just hasn't gotten around to giving the rubber stamp to everybody? What's the deal there?

The last thing that I want to talk about is that the minister, when he spoke this afternoon, got me thinking in this direction with his flight of poetic fancy about southern Alberta, which I admit is God's country. It's where my father comes from. It's also prime film land, and we have had a setback in Alberta around our film industry. It's rebuilding. The government listened to sense, listened to the film industry and did start to reinvest in it. We're coming back certainly, but we could come a lot further. For example, right now there's the Jesse James film that is casting about looking for where they're going to film, and it could be in southern Alberta.

Now, could that marketing tourism dollar, some of the criteria, be allocated towards enticing a film like that to come to southern Alberta and shoot their scenes there? Would that be part of the consideration? I think that depends on who's making the decision and who's setting the criteria because I'll bet you some people that are involved in this like Tourism Alberta wouldn't consider that money going to entice a film group to come and shoot in southern Alberta. But maybe they should be considering it, and if somebody else is in control like the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, maybe that is something that could be considered by them.

I'm interested to hear, because we have no criteria, what the expectation is. Where is this money expected to go? Would it be a wide enough mandate? Would the criteria include targeting film development? I mean, we've got a film commissioner that's operating out of Alberta. Can they be given additional resources to sell the province? It sure brings a lot of money in. It brings local money in. We at one point had a lot of trained technical and artistic people to work in the film and television industry.

Now, because we withdrew support for that when Alberta Motion Picture Development Corporation shut down and in that period before the employment credit was put into place, we lost a lot of business. Those technicians packed up their very, very expensive specialty trucks and went off to Saskatchewan, who was offering a lot of incentives, and Manitoba and B.C. So we don't have them living here anymore just down the block, where they can fire up that truck and be on set in a couple of hours. We've got to bring them back from those other provinces, and frankly those other provinces are offering some darn good incentives. So is there a possibility that this fund could be used to augment those incentives or to bring us up to an equal bargaining position with some of the other provinces that we're competing against or competing with locations in the States, for example?

That's really what I'm looking for, Mr. Chairman. I'm looking for answers about: where is the money going to go where it is definitively protected and it can't just disappear into the general revenue fund? Who's making the decisions on how the money would be distributed and some details about that? What's the criteria that's going to be used for the allocation of that money, including, you know, how widely would they consider or what things would they consider as part of that? That's what I'm looking to have nailed down. If I can get somebody opposite to stand up and answer some of these questions, I may well be willing to support this at this point in time and vote it through Committee of the Whole. So I look forward to hearing from the members opposite.

Thank you.

The Chair: Does any other member of the Assembly wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I noticed that there's no one on the government side of the House ready to speak, so I thought I'd take advantage and make a few observations.

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to speak on Bill 21, the hotel room tax – that will be called a tourism levy, I guess, from now on – amendment act, 2005. I was listening to the Minister of Economic Development this afternoon when he spoke to this bill. There was a bit of bragging going on, as I noticed in the minister's comments, that this administration always likes to reduce taxes, and this is just another instance of how it goes about doing it.

Well, I just want to underline that it was this Tory government that brought in this hotel room tax in 1987 at 5 per cent or whatever, and the current government has continued with it until today. It took over from the previous Premier and cabinet in December 1992, and it's taken us 13 years for this new administration, as the Minister of Economic Development referred to the government that he represents, to reduce this tax come the year 2005.

Having said that, I think a reduction in this tax from 5 per cent to 4 per cent is something that will be welcomed by Albertans. Albertans are also among the people who use tourism facilities in this province. This government, as part of its last year's budget, brought in some – we counted I think about 70 different indirect service fees and indirect taxes which weren't there before. So in talking about this government's own record about reducing taxes, I think one needs to be a little more modest if one is on the government side speaking to that issue. That's not always the case. That's not been the case. But in this case a reduction from 5 per cent to 4 per cent I think would be welcomed by Albertans. The question, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre has raised, is: how is this money going to be used? Who is going to receive it? Who is going to account for the way the money is used and given out?

The other question, of course, is also one that needs to be addressed. When some of the funds from this tourism levy, which this tax will be now called, will be used for promotion of tourism, what kind of promotion will take place? On the TV? Certainly, we see other provinces doing intensive advertising through all kinds of media, including TV, to expand tourism, to direct tourists from outside to their provincial jurisdictions. I see from south of the border various states, North Carolina and others, doing that exact same thing. So the question then is: why is it that in this province, where the minister this afternoon was talking about how important tourism is and how he would like to see it expanded, there hasn't been that much of an emphasis on advertising and marketing the tourist attractions? Plenty of it exists in this province, but it certainly needs to be marketed rather aggressively and vigorously in places where we think we can attract tourists.

The last point, Mr. Chairman, that I very quickly want to make at this stage of the debate on this bill is that as we aspire to further increase tourism in this province and hope that tourist facilities will expand as a result – as demand grows, supply will increase – I think we also need, although there's no space on this bill for it. I guess that from the funds that will be generated from the tourism levy, some of them perhaps could be spent also to address the question of the working conditions of lots of people, Albertans, young Albertans mostly, who work to provide hospitality facilities in tourism locations and facilities. So the whole issue of health and safety of workers, most of them if not all of them being Albertans, who work in the tourist industry is an issue that needs to be addressed.

I hope that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's Bill 201 will proceed without too much tampering with it so that at least it does address some of those conditions under which hospitality workers are working or will be working and providing the users of tourist facilities in this province the services that they need.

The government has moved and I hope that it implements this undertaking to increase the minimum wage because many of the people who work in the tourist industry unfortunately also work close to the minimum wage level. So after a long wait of many years the government has finally undertaken to increase that wage to $7. I hope that that will be implemented and brought into force forthwith in order to strengthen the tourism industry, the hospitality industry. The benefits of that expansion should go to tourists, to this government by way of revenues generated through the tourism levy, and also to people who provide those services, most of whom are Albertans and are young Albertans.

That said, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that in general the NDP opposition is supportive of what this bill is proposing to do, but I did want to put on record some of the concerns that we hear from Albertans with respect to the conditions under which they work and what they would like to see done to the tourism sector and the economy in general.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other members wishing to speak on this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just waiting to see if we had other speakers as well. I'll make some concluding remarks if I may. I do want to express my appreciation for the support of those who have spoken both this afternoon and this evening, and I appreciate all of the comments.

To reiterate, this act does include technical improvements, clarifications, administrative issues that needed to be addressed since it was implemented back in 1987. It will benefit administration of the hotel room tax, tourism levy, and bring it into line with other tax programs that we currently administer. Yes, you've heard the projection. It will be an increase in funding by an estimated 75 per cent for tourism and development in Alberta. Yes, there's a change of name from tax to levy, and it is a reduction from 5 to 4 per cent.

It was stated earlier today that the revenue that is generated from this levy will be put into the province's general revenue fund, and the proceeds collected from the levy will be used to determine the funding levels for tourism, marketing, and development. There is no substantial change in the process for operators in the province, and the government has been working for many years with the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association, Travel Alberta, and a number of others in the industry, so there is a lot of agreement there, and that is very affirming.

I know that further travel will be stimulated in the province during this our centennial year. It will lower the cost of accommodations and improve another avenue – and I say another avenue – for improved funding to promote Alberta in the years to come.

With respect to other concerns raised today, it had been suggested that more money should be spent in this regard. It may be argued that there is never enough, but the stakeholders involved have told us that they believe this is a very good start.

There was a question of whether it's four rooms or eight people, and I guess if we base it on double occupancy, four bedrooms times two persons per bedroom is eight people. The very simple answer to that, ladies and gentlemen of the House, is that the line had to be drawn somewhere, and that's a very workable number for that industry.

There was a point made also, Mr. Chairman, that $25 as a claim back for filing indicates that there is a lot of work involved in this. Yes, indeed, there is a certain amount of time and paperwork that is required. I know that the stakeholders involved know that that's just the time and cost involved in running a business.

Finally, a couple of the hon. members have brought up the fact that in the act it does not state directly that the tourism levy will be directed to marketing or whatever the case may be. I will say that the government did look at all the options of how to handle this, and in their wisdom decided to leave it as a tax that flows into general revenue. But I know that you can be assured that the agreement is outlined in a number of documents, and I'll refer specifically to the Strategic Tourism Marketing Plan 2003-2006: Navigating Winds of Change. Based on a lot of research, all the stakeholders involved, it will approach provincial, national, and international audiences. So this is consistent with other government policy, handling it this way, and I know that with the amount of agreement we have with all the stakeholders involved, we're in good hands.

Those are my comments, and I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

[Debate adjourned March 15]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, that's before the House in its second reading. I am pleased to rise and speak to it.

Mr. Speaker, there's no denying the fact that postsecondary education does need some decisive change in direction in this province, and the question is: does this bill signal that direction or not? I say: if at all, only partly. The postsecondary education system in the province is large. There are four universities, 16 or 17 colleges and technical institutes. There are private colleges, for-profit colleges and universities setting up shop and expanding their operations in this provinces. So the system is becoming larger by the year, more diverse, and perhaps expanding in directions which Albertans would consider undesirable if they were consulted and asked for their advice on this.

The bill itself does move toward setting up an endowment fund, Mr. Speaker. Once it's fully financed, it will be $3 billion, and only 4.5 per cent of this amount, a maximum of $135 million, will be available for postsecondary institutions to draw on. Then the drawing rights, if you wish to use that term, or the ability to draw on this will depend on various conditions, including the ability of each institution to match the amount of funding they can withdraw from the endowment fund, and those matching funds will come in most cases, perhaps, from the attempt of these institutions to get private donors, including corporate interests, to donate.

When these private donors, particularly big businesses, corporations do give funds to postsecondary institutions, they have strings attached to them. They have special projects. They want special kinds of developments to take place which may or may not suit the overall plan for operation and expansion and development by the academic communities that each of these institutions represents.

The whole question of the autonomy of institutions, their ability to set their own research and teaching agendas, is put into question by the conditions attached to the manner in which this fund will be accessible to these 20, 21, 22 institutions. I'm assuming here that this fund will be available, Mr. Speaker, only to nonprofit public institutions and that if there are some private institutions that will qualify to access this fund, these will be nonprofit institutions. I would like the minister of postsecondary education to perhaps speak to that issue.

I notice that in section 2 of the bill – I was looking at it – there's a section there on the access to the future fund. The section previous to that is on accessibility and affordability, and every statement does refer to public postsecondary institutions. But when it comes to this section 4(1), which deals with the access to the future fund, the explicit reference to public postsecondary institutions there is missing, and that causes concern for me. I would like the minister responsible to clarify that.

In my meeting with the minister I did ask him these questions, and he was kind enough to invite me to a meeting where he explained what is likely to go into this bill. It did raise the question of whether or not private, for-profit institutions will have access to this fund in any shape and form. He said to wait for the bill to appear. The bill is before us now, and I'm asking some of these questions that need to be asked on the floor of this House with respect to the ability of private, for-profit colleges or technical institutions or universities to access this fund. If that were the case, then I would have to vote against this one and strongly oppose that provision. So there is some, I think, lack of clarity if not equivocation on that point in this bill. I would like the minister to address it, and I hope he will certainly allay my fears with respect to this particular issue.

A couple of other points, Mr. Speaker, that I want to make. The endowment fund, while it's good in itself, is long overdue. It's not good enough. It's not a substitute for enhanced core funding of Alberta's public universities, colleges, and technical institutes. Even when fully funded at $3 million, as I said, the amount is small. It's only 10 per cent, $135 million.

When that amount becomes available – and we don't even know when this endowment fund will reach the $3 billion mark, but even when it does reach that point – the maximum amount that we can draw on would be $135 million, and that will form only about 10 per cent of the overall amount that we spend. Good. Good start, but this money is not available, I think, for meeting the pressing needs of universities and colleges and institutes when it comes to either student services, student tuition fees, and other operating deficits that have resulted because of the chronic underfunding over many years in the past.

As I said, the other pressing needs of postsecondary institutions are being ignored. The need to freeze tuitions beyond the one year announced by the government could have been addressed in this bill, but it's not. I'm disappointed, and students are disappointed. They're expressing concern already. In fact, the government is not even amending the tuition fee policy at all, only giving students a one-year stay of execution, as it were, by paying for tuition increases that would otherwise be charged to students. While the government is providing a one-year stay of execution in terms of tuition increases, nothing is being done to address the problems of skyrocketing student debt.

Bill 1 should have addressed the situation of inadequate living allowances on the student loan system, where they're not keeping up with inflationary increases in rent, food, transportation, and utility costs. There also needs to be a firm legislative commitment to not raising the ceiling above which student loans are remitted.

Another point. An Access to the Future Act that truly met the multifaceted needs of the public postsecondary sector would have dealt with many other pressing priorities. Such an act would have addressed teaching and learning conditions at our postsecondary institutions. Class sizes of many first- and second-year postsecondary courses, for example, are in the hundreds of students. Imagine a young student coming from a high school with an average class size of 30 students going into a first-year university class of 300 or 400 students. The so-called Access to the Future Act does not address this pressing issue and others like it.

Until now provincial funding support has not kept up with the inflation in enrolment growth. For the past 12 years postsecondary institutions have had to cut programs and restrict enrolments to make ends meet. A true Access to the Future Act would establish an equitable formula for core funding to at least match inflation in enrolment growth.

One of the consequences of provincial underfunding is an increase in the amount of deferred maintenance at universities, colleges, and technical institutes, something the Auditor General has repeatedly pointed out in his reports. Buildings on university and college campuses are aging, and we need to make sure that the dollars are there on a consistent basis to do repairs and keep them in good shape. While there have been significant dollars put into the construction of new buildings at public postsecondary campuses, many of these buildings are for research purposes and do not relieve the crowded lecture halls and labs that students are facing.

For all of the above reasons, perhaps the greatest failing of Bill 1 is its failure to establish a postsecondary learning commission to examine the many challenges facing Alberta's postsecondary system as called for by the Learning Commission itself, a recommendation rejected by this government. My hope was that with the change of the minister who now looks after the portfolio for postsecondary education, that decision of the government to reject the recommendation to establish a postsecondary commission would be reversed. Unfortunately, that has not happened.

There are many major issues, Mr. Speaker, that need to be addressed which bear on the future of the postsecondary system in this province, and I'll just list a few. The question of tuition fees, for example, is one. I think it requires public input before the government comes up with its next steps as to how it's going to deal with ever-increasing tuition fee costs for students. But tuition fee costs are only a part of the overall costs of the students. I think such a commission as I'm proposing would be asked to look at the whole question of costs that go into postsecondary education, including the costs that are attributable to tuition fees.

The question of the role of private, for-profit postsecondary institutions in this system is another big issue, and the minister seems not to be concerned about the growing presence of this for-profit sector. Some of the players, at least, who are coming in have questionable past records, Mr. Speaker, including some convictions for breaking the contracts that they had not been able to deliver on and perhaps more serious infractions of law. Given that, I think that it's important that we look at the whole question of whether or not this province's accessibility goals are served and served well by allowing for-profit institutions to come in and set up shop here. That question is not being addressed and will not be addressed.

The question of governance of institutions is another one. The current postsecondary act in the province centralizes the powers in the hands of the minister. The autonomy of the postsecondary system is very important. Particularly university institutions and some very promising colleges I think need to be able to enjoy full academic autonomy. What I see in this bill is an effort, in fact, to further concentrate and centralize those powers into the hands of the minister.

I give an example here, Mr. Speaker. In section 2(1), accessibility and affordability, the act reads that “the Minister, in consultation with public post-secondary institutions, shall identify and establish enrolment targets and minimum entrance requirements.” This is something new. Minimum entrance requirements, I think, are the responsibility of each of the institutions to establish. What the minister now is attempting to do by way of this legislation is bring that power under his own direct control. I don’t think that’s a healthy direction in which to move forward.

Similarly, the minister will be establishing, related to the access fund, a council. All of the members of this council will be appointed by the minister, and the final decisions on how these funds will be distributed will be strictly controlled by and will be in the hands of the minister. Again, I think we need some arm’s-length institutions which make these decisions rather than the minister taking all these powers onto himself. The commission itself, when it is established, if it’s ever established, would have to be an independent commission which holds public hearings and seeks public input and comes forward, then, with the recommendations for the consideration of this government and of this House. That’s unfortunately not the case, so I have very serious concerns about the bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but there is a five-minute period of question and comments available for anyone who wishes to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Were you wishing to rise on that?

Ms Blakeman: No. I’m wishing to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 1, the flagship bill of the government’s agenda for 2005, the Access to the Future Act. Seeing as this is the first bill the government has brought forward, flowing out of, I’m assuming, the election – and certainly I can say that in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre, postsecondary education, tuition, funding of universities and colleges, the debt load carried by students were all very, very hot topics at the doors. People were really committed to this, not just students – and I have a lot of students that live in the riding that attend the University of Alberta, NAIT, Alberta College, Grant MacEwan, NorQuest – but their families as well and in a lot of cases grandparents, in fact, whose grandchildren were students somewhere else. It was a general topic of real interest and concern.

I think the title of this act is a good one: Access to the Future. I think a lot of people view postsecondary education as access to the future. It’s so important to the Alberta Liberals that it was a major part of our platform, and I know that my colleagues have spoken at length about it. It’s very important to me, and I’m a great supporter of our policy that we would recognize that from any future surplus we would set aside 35 per cent to a postsecondary education endowment fund. One of the issues that kept being raised for me is: you need that money to keep going. We didn’t put a cap on it. We didn’t say, as this bill does: $3 billion and that’s good; you can stop there. We felt it was important to continue to endow.

In fact, when we looked for examples across the world, those higher educational institutions that people talk of with awe, you know, the pinnacles, the paragons, have astonishing endowment funds. I mean, Yale and Harvard are up in the billions and billions of dollars of endowment. So we’re looking at pretty small potatoes here. I mean, I’m glad to see that we’re doing it, but we would have a long way to go to set ourselves up in competition with some of those institutions.

Mr. Speaker, that disappointed me a bit because when I did my Speech from the Throne I talked about how Alberta was good, that it was even great in some areas but that it could be extraordinary. We had such an opportunity to just blow people’s minds with how exceptional we could be, how much leadership we could provide. This is one of the areas that I was really hoping we could come out of the gate on and just blow people away. We would be so impressive with it. And that’s not quite happening with this bill. It’s nice, and it’s a good idea, and it’s got some money in it, but it wasn’t quite moving us into the extraordinary place that I felt Alberta could be.

I’m happy to have the government take some of our good Liberal ideas and turn them into this fund. Happy to share that. I think it’s going to move everything forward in the province. I just wish they would have taken a few more things, like not capping it at $3 billion but allowing it to get larger and also actually having some guaranteed money flowing in there. This one is a little loose on whether the money will actually get there depending on what the year is looking like. For Edmonton-Centre this is an important bill, and I’m certainly considering supporting it in second for the principle of the bill because it is important to my riding.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I tabled a letter from a university student that lives in my riding. He was reacting specifically to the Premier’s comments that the $180,000 severance package offered to the previous chief of staff was “not a lot.” I think is the direct quote. And this student was saying that, well, it was an awful lot of money to him. Considering how much of his life he’d invested in going to university and how much in debt he was and how many extra jobs he was working, $180,000 seemed like a lot of money to him. But that’s true for many students not only in my riding but in other places. So they are looking to the government to make access easier, to better fund the infrastructure, and to better fund postsecondary education, including apprenticeship programs. And I think it’s always important to remember that they’re part of the scope that we’re talking about here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had talked about general funding, and I think it’s important to realize here that we’re coming from behind the starting post on this one. Essentially, funding for postsecondary education under this government with this particular Premier – we had cuts there of 21 per cent between 1994 and 1997. So we have had money put into this area since then, but I don’t even know if we’re back to where we were in ’94. So we can’t get too cocky about how great we’re doing here because, as I say, I don’t even know if we’ve caught up to where we were in ’94, and it’s now 2005. So given inflation and value of money and all of that, I suspect that we’re still behind where we needed to be.

One of the other issues that is an ongoing concern for me – and I’m not seeing it specifically addressed in this bill, Mr. Speaker, but I’m wondering if I’m not seeing it happen by stealth. You know, sometimes people talk about by design or by default, and I guess I’m looking for clarification about whether this is design or default. I'm finding that funding for postsecondary education is increasingly targeted. Whether it's going to so-called high-priority programs or certain kinds of research initiatives, they do tend to be streamed into commercial potential. I think this is not the point of higher education, and I think we need to be really careful that we don't have government controlling the activities of postsecondary education institutions. I think we're on the verge of that if we actually haven't started to move down the road.

You know, anybody receiving funding from the government always looks to the government for signals about where it's going and how to please the government to make sure that funding, if it's coming, keeps coming. I think what they're seeing are signals that commercial initiatives get the nod of approval but others not so much.

Postsecondary institutions aren't stupid. They will figure out how they're going to secure more funding or even secure, stable, predictable funding by playing into those expressed or indicated preferences of the government. I see government's control reorienting the activities of what these institutions are doing and tying them to short- and medium-term private sector economic endeavours. I think Bill 1 is continuing this trend, but I would love to be proved wrong on that one, so please prove me wrong.

The second issue I've touched on briefly, and I'm going to expand a bit on that now, is the amount of deferred maintenance that the postsecondary institutions are dealing with. Now, we've often heard members on this side talk about the infrastructure deficit that was created. So, yes, the government paid off the cash debt and deficit that we had, but in doing so, they stole from Peter to pay Paul and created an infrastructure deficit, and some would also argue – and I'm one of them – that there was a human, social deficit that was also created as part of that.

Specific to the infrastructure deficit, the fact sheets that I've looked at indicate that the U of A and the U of C alone, not counting all the rest of the postsecondary education institutions in Alberta, have a deferred maintenance of a billion dollars. Now, I'm just going to refer back here to my earlier comments about capping this fund at $3 billion. That's only going to give us a hundred and thirty five mil to play with extra every year, and we have no idea when we're going to attain that full level of $3 billion. Here we are with a billion dollars today in deferred infrastructure maintenance. So I think that's an issue that we need to be looking at outside and inside of what's being talked about and contemplated in this bill.

Tuition is another area, and I know others have talked about the increase in tuition. Yearly tuition as a percentage of the Alberta student loan program maximum in '92-93 used to be about 20 per cent, and now it's almost 40 per cent. That difference is being made up by the students working part-time and full-time.

I always find it interesting that when we went to university, that was not the norm so much, yet when we all safely have degrees and are well on in our working lives, we're more than happy to turn around and make it much more difficult for the next generation. I argue, in fact, that this government transferred that intergenerational debt in less than a generation because they moved it onto the shoulders of the students in particular. I think that we've now got the numbers to show that, that the students ended up picking up a huge debt load that came to them as a result of choices made by the government.

If we look at, for example, information from ACTISEC, they note that student debt has risen substantially, and university students graduate with an average debt – there are some lower, but there's also some substantially higher – of $21,000. Twenty-one thousand dollars. If you could manage to put a thousand dollars into your loan payment, it would still take you almost two years to pay that off and more if you've got interest payments as part of that. College students with $19,000. I mean, they're not going to be able to pay off a thousand bucks a month. Let's face it; it's much less than that. They're looking at years and years and years of this. Well, we didn't have to do that. How come we're willing to do it to somebody else? It doesn't redress overall the level of tuition that students are paying.

I'm interested very much in what the criteria are that the minister contemplates using as performance measurements to judge the success of this program, and I'd like to see these laid out now. I don't want to see opinion polls used as performance measurements. I want to see what the criteria are now. They should be part of this bill. I mean, if we're to judge this – the Public Accounts Committee, the public at large, the members of the Assembly – we need to know what we're judging against. What's the benchmark? What are the criteria we're supposed to be using to decide whether or not this program is successful? And that stuff needs to come out at the beginning. You can't invent it as you go along, or you're not playing the game fairly. So that is a question that I have of what the criteria and performance measurements would be.

I continue to be concerned by bills I see coming forward from the government which are essentially shell bills. They outline a bunch of stuff with no details in it, and the details are to come later. Well, they come through regulations and orders in council, Mr. Speaker, and that's much more difficult for people to track. I mean, even in this day of electronic scrutiny – e-government, if you will, and that's a good thing – it's very difficult for people to find out things like orders in council and how things got changed.

There's no public discussion around that. It doesn't come back through this Assembly and get debated openly. We don't get to consult with our constituents and bring forward issues they're concerned about. It's just quietly done as a regulation change. An order in council comes out in the Gazette, if you know where that is or how to find it, and that's it, and people don't know what's happened. They don't know how it's changed. It's a bit of a surprise to them. May not even be a press release that they changed something.

So I continue to push the government to lay out their plan and the specifics of it in the legislation and not hide behind this, "We'll do everything behind closed doors later and get back to you." What are they fond of saying? "Stay tuned." Well, that radio station is a bit staticky, Mr. Speaker. It's not giving us very much information.

There are a number of other issues that I would like to bring up around this, but I know my time is running out. I'm glad that I got a chance to raise some of these issues during second reading. I am supportive of the bill overall, but I think it could be better, and I'm always going to be pushing the government to be better. I look forward to continued debate on this and some additional suggestions in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you very much for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, could we have permission for the Assembly to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lonesome soul in the members' gallery. You must be wondering why she's there. Well, definitely not to listen to the debate. One option could be seeking shelter from the snowfall outside, but there's actually a better reason. I would ask to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Nejjolla Korris, who is a proud mother looking down on her son, our page Mr. Taddes Korris, working with us tonight. Would she please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to comment on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, and tell you that in St. Albert there's a lot of interest in this bill. I'd like to also talk about it in terms of my past background as a person that started school late at the university level, when I was 21, and also from the perspective of needing information in offices.

I think it's important that when we talk of a bill, we should look at the students' focus. Therefore, I'd like to just briefly talk about the need for a solid student services outlet in postsecondary institutions because they play, in my mind, three major functions. The student services' role is outreach activities to the community – and I think especially of a number of seniors in St. Albert who take advantage of this service and get updated – and access to programs and services and financial assistance available to students while they're on campus. I think it's also crucial in terms of student services that we look at the whole business of support services. Now, student services, as I understand it to be – and I think, again, it's so important – is what is going on in terms of counselling, guidance, careers, courses, housing, health, outreach, and also key information on scholarships and loans.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there's so much information, and I know that this government spends a lot of time on the whole issue of communication. I think that when we have a bill of this importance and this amount of endeavour, we want to make sure that it's well communicated to the constituents and to the citizens of Alberta as to what is available in the institutions and continuing education and so on. Also, I think it's very important that we have good high school information getting out and to interface with high schools across the province.

I think also, Mr. Speaker, it's important that when we have postsecondary institutions, it is crucial that we keep government departments updated. I'm thinking particularly of social services, workmen's compensation, these kinds of services where we need to work on and improve the interface so that we have people in these services advising people that may go on to postsecondary education. They must be well informed.

Also, in the student services function at a university or college level you'll see that many, many student services are directed to serious problems of students. This is all fine and good, but I think there must be much more evidence of service to careers, career planning, alternate programs available, housing needs, financial, and academic upgrading in terms of what's going on.

The other aspect that I think is important in postsecondary institutions is that we see now many of our larger institutions such as Grant MacEwan, Mount Royal, have been moving away from the kinds of programs they've had and will be moving away from diploma students and into more university-oriented programs. It's very, very important to have a plan when we do this for counselling these students that may be left who have to go into other institutions such as NorQuest, Bow Valley, Portage, and those kinds of institutions across the province.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I think there's a good endeavour through this bill. There are some issues here that I hope are looked at. I hope, and truly mean this, that there is a focus on student services to get the right information out and help students with better decision-making when they move on from high school education.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the University of Calgary located in the heart of my Calgary-Varsity constituency, I have great concerns about the government's abandonment of postsecondary institutions. Whether you refer to external evaluations such as Maclean's magazine or internal student evaluations, satisfaction has declined considerably. Each year the Maclean's survey lists the U of C near the bottom based on a variety of categories. U of C student dissatisfaction rated the university at 47 out of 48, with 1 being a top grade.

Bill 1 does not address a number of issues, the first issue being infrastructure. Bill 1 ignores the decade of disrepair into which the physical structure has fallen. One of the worst buildings, as one might expect, is one of the first built. This is the administration building in which President Dr. Harvey Weingarten's office is located.

On a recent tour of the university I could not help but note the slope of the floor which leaned to the east. What also stood out in a rather ironic fashion were the institutional hospital-green hallways and doors reminiscent of one of B.F. Skinner's rat mazes, which housed a number of behavioural psychology labs. I almost expected to see large rats wearing lab coats scurrying about the decaying dungeon in the building's basement. While this building is one of the extreme examples, other more modern buildings have their facades propped up by external scaffolding to keep them from crumbling on the students trying to enter the building.

In other academic offices buckets have been placed to catch the errant drops from aging plumbing, reminiscent of a Ma & Pa Kettle or Beverly Hillsbillies movie prior to the "up from the ground came a bubbling crude." This analogy was chosen to show how ludicrous it is, given our oil and gas revenues, that students and professors are forced to work under Third World infrastructure conditions. Students have to sit in the aisles or stand in the back of lecture halls, which sport very few left-handed desks, hoping that a fire marshal doesn't show up to shut down the class.

Another key factor of the infrastructure problem is that only a skeletal crew exists to repair whatever problems appear. For example, the number of electricians required to maintain a campus of the size of the U of C is 43. Over the years with cutbacks, its staff alone has been reduced to 8. Other such support staff deficiencies are notable in the number of custodians. Instead of doing the research, meeting with students, marking papers, or planning lectures, professors are emptying their leak-catching buckets or vacuuming their offices. Secretarial staff as well are stretched well past the stress point trying to cover the requirements of several professors within their departments.

Issue number two: campus cannibalizing. In an effort to keep the cuts as far away from the students as possible, all support staff have been cut back. The most dramatic cutback has come in the form of the soon-to-occur layoff of 250 food support worker members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Many of these workers have been employees of the U of C for many years. Over 100 of the part-time workers are students themselves trying to cover their constantly rising tuition with the one notable exception of the proposed fall of 2005 saving of approximately $55 thanks to the one-time magnanimous covering by this year's 5 per cent increase. Thank you, government, for your generosity.

Another form of campus cannibalizing which directly affects the quality of academic instruction and which this bill doesn't address is the growing class sizes. What was once considered acceptable only for first-year introductory classes in large theatres capable of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order?

Mr. Herard: Yes, point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: You know, it's understandable . . .

Ms Blakeman: Citation?

Mr. Herard: Relevance, 23.

I appreciate the fact that the hon. member is here, he's new, but there has to be some relevance to the bill at second reading. We can't just be listening to a speech that has absolutely no relevance with the bill that we're trying to discuss.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to please enforce the relevancy rules.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed. Thank you very much. Well, relevance is always an interesting point to be raised as a point of order because I think you have to listen to everything in context. Seeing as the member is a newly elected member from an area that, in fact, has a university in it, and he's obviously done a great deal of consultation, and he is bringing forward the issues that were raised by the university around funding and future support by the government, I would argue that his comments have been very relevant and key to what is in fact being brought forward by this bill. He has talked about infrastructure, and the bill certainly talks about infrastructure. He's talked about funding. It talks about funding in the bill. He's talked about tuition. It talks about tuition in the bill. He's talked about access. It talks about access in the bill.

So I think, in fact, Mr. Speaker, he has been very relevant.

Mr. Herard: I give up. I give up.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: I would allow the hon. member to continue. I would not rule that there is a point of order.

There have been numerous interruptions from all sides of the House, and I would remind everyone that it is the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity that has the floor. Perhaps if we give him the opportunity to state his case, we would be able to tie all his comments in, and it would sound more relevant.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, if I can just confirm that the clock was stopped and it restarts when the member starts to speak again. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: That's right.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to the hon. government members, while I was a language arts teacher and some of my analogies may seem to be somewhat literary, I have been up to the university a number of times. I have spoken with groups from the students' union. I have spoken with faculty representatives. I have spoken three times with Dr. Harvey Weingarten. I've done the research.

What was once considered acceptable only for first-year introductory classes in large theatres capable of holding up to 600 students has now expanded into second- and third-year classes. There aren't enough grad students to fill in the instructional gaps. Students, therefore, feel abandoned. It is therefore not surprising that Alberta on a per capita basis has the lowest percentage of postsecondary graduates. Contributing, of course, to the lack of graduates is the lack of available seats for those students who have reached the constantly rising grade point entrance requirements.

This past fall over 25 per cent of eligible students who could afford what has become the latest tuition rates were turned away due to lack of space. As is the case with public education, portables and ATCO-style trailers rather than permanent structures have become the norm. The government with their Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, has committed to providing 15,000 new seats within the next two years. Given how long it has taken to build the new children's hospital, which is also located in Calgary-Varsity, this leads me to believe that the U of C will start to look like a carnival or trailer park. Possibly we could convert some of the old school buses into mobile classrooms linked together in trainlike fashion, pulled by retired Fort McMurray gigantic dump trucks.

Bill 1 doesn't address the fact that the U of C has been forced to cut back all their departments by 5 per cent over each of the next four years. While the government has covered the debt of health care regions, it hasn't shown the same generosity or foresight when it comes to covering either school board or postsecondary debt. Possibly it is this government's intention to create virtual university spaces for virtual students with virtual dollars like some kind of Xbox virtual reality game in which once you've passed through the various levels and obstacles, you'll be granted a virtual degree.

When you look, then, at the other future seat increase targets, especially the 60,000 new seats by 2020, which is only 15 years away, you have to wonder when the necessary construction will begin. The promised southeast hospital completion date keeps getting pushed farther and farther back with still no clue as to how or when half of the $500 million will come from. The most recent suggested date is now set back from 2008 to 2010.

The difference between the government plan and the opposition plan is that the government plan is limited to a one-time $3.5 billion infusion whereas the opposition plan, the Alberta legacy fund, carries on annually with a guaranteed 35 per cent funding from each year's surplus. In addition, it offers a guaranteed potential of infrastructure, 25 per cent. Obviously, all of that money wouldn't go into postsecondary students.

I would like now, Mr. Speaker, if possible, to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Clerk of Journals: Government Bills and Orders for Second Reading. Bill 2, Alberta Centennial Medal Act, hon. Mr. Mar.

Mr. Hancock: Might we move to Bill 3 for the moment?

The Deputy Speaker: Is it agreeable to the House that we move to Bill 3? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. Okay.

Bill 3 City of Lloydminster Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to bring into debate the second reading of Bill 3, the City of Lloydminster Act.

The goal of Bill 3 is to update and enhance the legislative framework for the governance of the City of Lloydminster. The City of Lloydminster Act will clarify the process by which both the government of Alberta and the government of Saskatchewan can amend regulations and approve new regulations, including the approval of a new Lloydminster charter. The City of Lloydminster Act will replace and rescind the Lloydminster Municipal Amalgamation Act, which was originally approved in 1930 and is out of date relative to the current requirements for the city of Lloydminster.

The City of Lloydminster Act will contain modernized language, and the act will recognize the current city status of Lloydminster. The City of Lloydminster Act removes the legal requirement in the Lloydminster Municipal Amalgamation Act requiring the establishment of a commission in order to redraft any regulations, including a new Lloydminster charter. As the province of Saskatchewan has already passed its version of the City of Lloydminster Act, approval of the City of Lloydminster Act in Alberta will ensure that the city council and administration are not subject to two separate acts.

Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Alberta Centennial Medal Act

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act.

This legislation will create the Alberta centennial medal. This award will commemorate our province's centennial by honouring some of our most talented and dedicated residents. Just about any Albertan that's made a significant contribution to the province would be considered eligible for this medal. The criteria as outlined in Bill 2 have been kept deliberately broad to allow us to recognize a wide spectrum of achievements. Albertans are contributing to their province in many different ways, but, Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 recognizes exactly that fact.

This bill also recognizes the importance of involving Albertans in honouring one another and in their own communities. The Alberta centennial medal will be awarded to nominees submitted by representatives from provincial organizations and various levels of government. The exact list will be contained in the regulations for the act.

The groups that nominate will be able to also award the medals to recipients that they select, and I anticipate, Mr. Speaker, that we will see some unique award ceremonies taking place in communities across the province throughout the centennial year. The Department of Alberta Community Development will co-ordinate the program to ensure that the same person is not nominated more than once and to see that the nominees in fact meet the program's minimal criteria.

Besides having made a significant contribution to the province, recipients must also be Canadian citizens that reside in or have resided in Alberta and are living at the time of awarding. This medal is for Albertans who are making a difference right now in helping our province start its next century strong. It's important that we pay tribute to these individuals and give their stories a chance to inspire others. The Alberta centennial medal would be a fittingly prestigious award.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, not to confuse this program with the Alberta centennial medallion. The Alberta centennial medallion is a keepsake that will be presented to all Alberta schoolchildren, centenarians, officials, and visiting dignitaries in the year 2005. Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act, will designate the medal as an official honour of the Crown in the right of Alberta. Once the bill is passed, the government of Alberta will pursue national status for this award. A medal with national status is included in Canada's order of precedence.

Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act, creates a recognition program that is inclusive, that involves communities in honouring their own, and pays a fitting tribute to Albertans that have given so much of themselves to others and to their province. It is a meaningful thing to do for our centennial. After all, the province is only as great as its people.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure again to move second reading of Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in the Legislature to speak to Bill 2. I think it's entirely appropriate that this bill, Bill 2, is being introduced today in the Legislature. This bill provides tribute to Albertans who have made significant contributions to make our province a better place to live in, to raise our families in, and to work in. In this our centennial year, honouring current and former Albertans who have made our province so prosperous, so culturally diverse, and so special is a fantastic way to celebrate our 100-year birthday.

Mr. Speaker, Albertan people are known for their spirit, their innovation, and their generosity. In the past 100 years there have been so many special Albertans who have contributed to our society in such a profound way that honouring them with this special award of merit is entirely appropriate in our centennial. The awarding of the Alberta centennial medal will recognize and honour the important role individuals have played in the development of Alberta as the most prosperous province in Canada.

We need to honour these special people in our centennial year. Alberta is full of special individuals who have made contributions that have had a profound impact on the development of our society, from community leaders to volunteers to those who have dedicated themselves to public service and achieved outstanding results. These are the people we are honouring with these medals, and I stand in support of the principle of this bill that guides this bill as well. It is entirely appropriate in our centennial year.

There is one area of this bill, section 4, that needs further clarification. It is the part that speaks to individuals and organizations designated in the regulations who may nominate individuals to be recipients of the centennial medal. I think further clarification is needed as to what criteria will be used in determining who these individuals and organizations will be. How will the government determine who can make nominations? My concern is that certain organizations may be excluded from being able to nominate an individual to be a recipient of this award. So can the hon. minister provide some clarification as to what process will be used to designate individuals or organizations who can nominate recipients? Also, what steps will be taken to ensure that worthy individuals are not excluded from being able to be nominated because the process for nomination was flawed?

My second concern with Bill 2 is clarification of the clause “the Minister shall approve.” Could this allow for political considerations to enter into decisions?

My final concern is surely about revocation, section 6. On what grounds?

Mr. Speaker, other than these concerns about potentially omitting worthy recipients of this medal, I fully support the spirit behind this bill, and I commend the hon. minister for sponsoring it. This prestigious award provides us with the opportunity to celebrate the contributions made to Alberta by exceptional individuals who have played a role in making our province prosperous. The special men, women, and youth who will receive this award will no doubt be worthy of this special tribute. I am pleased to support this bill, sir.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I looked at this bill on the basis of two principles: transparency and responsibility. I believe there should be a panel of distinguished Albertans set up to develop the exact criteria in determining what worthy individuals or organizations may be eligible to receive an Alberta centennial medal, and by doing this, the government will be transparent and responsible and not be accused of playing politics with what I consider a wonderful idea.

To move from the above recommendations places the government in a bit of a pickle if they don't look at my recommendations. Organizations and associations and municipalities across the province will see right through this nominating process. I think it is flawed, and I think it should be changed in light of the panel concept.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone that wishes a question or comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill is a one-time commemorative medal that will recognize and honour the extraordinary accomplishments of nominated Albertans during the province's centennial year. The medal would be awarded to any Canadian citizen who has resided in Alberta and has made a significant contribution to this province. Criteria to be considered in the awarding of this model are a broad range of contributions to the community and to the province through leadership, volunteerism, community involvement, and outstanding personal achievement.

Bill 2 is specifically awarded for exemplary personal contribution by nomination. The Alberta government has announced that plans are under way to have representatives from provincial associations, governments, and other organizations make the nominations with the awarding of the medals to be done at presentations throughout the centennial year. It is expected that 8,000 Alberta men, women, and youth will receive this award during the centennial year. It seeks to award deserving Albertans who have contributed to our province in areas such as community involvement, leadership, volunteerism, and outstanding personal achievements.

I support this bill. I think it's a wonderful opportunity for us to recognize the strength of this province, and that is its people. The only question that I believe should be raised here is surrounding section 4 of the bill. This section states that “individuals and organizations designated in the regulations may nominate individuals to be awarded the Alberta Centennial Medal.” What exactly are the criteria in determining who these individuals and organizations are? Specifically, how will the government determine which associations and other organizations will be designated as having the ability to nominate recipients, and then how will the government determine which individuals can nominate potential recipients, and what is the process for this?

Other than further clarification around those issues, I believe that this is a commendable bill. Albertan people are known for their spirit, their innovation, and their generosity. This medal provides us with an opportunity to celebrate these qualities and the people who exemplify them. I support the Alberta Centennial Medal Act. I believe it is the mark of a civil society to honour its people. In this first year of a new century I see opportunity for this government to emphasize our people and that we are here to serve our citizens. The centennial medal will recognize and acknowledge outstanding achievements of Albertans of all ages because we understand that each individual's achievement and success contributes to the health, wealth, and spirit of this great province.

Regulations for designating individuals and organizations for the purpose of nominations are not specified. It is my hope that regulations will support wide-sweeping consideration across the province, including all ethnic and religious groups. This will be another way of recognizing that our diversity is a strength and our strength is our people.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I rise to speak to Bill 2, the Alberta Centennial Medal Act. I want to thank the minister for his remarks introducing the bill and for clarifying the distinction between the medal and the medallion. I think it's an important distinction to keep in mind.

That said, I am speaking in support of the bill. I think it's a laudable decision on the part of the minister to recognize the individuals who have made significant contributions. It's obviously a very, very broad sort of criterion that the minister suggests here, but I suppose that if some mechanism could be found to make the judgments with respect to the selection of individuals who will be recipients of this award, that will certainly help. Particularly, section 4(2), which says that “the Minister shall approve the individuals nominated under subsection (1) to be awarded the Alberta Centennial Medal.”

nial Medal,” has raised some questions already in the minds of some hon. members who have spoken.

This may not be the time to propose any concrete changes to the act, but if there were some sort of all-party committee that the minister would seek advice from in making his final approvals, I think that would allay some of the concerns that have been expressed around that issue.

The revocation of awards did get my attention. I wonder what conditions, what circumstances would lead the government to revoke the awarding of this medal. If appropriate scrutiny is done to start with, if the minister seeks advice from an all-party committee, as I said, and the organization and individuals who have nominated people for receiving this award have done their work, then it seems to me the revocation section in the bill would seem to be redundant. It's not needed. It really casts some sort of shadow over what's otherwise a very nice and optimistic gesture on the part of the government.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will close my remarks. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else wish to speak on the bill?

Does the hon. Minister of Community Development wish to close?

Mr. Mar: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to do so. I'd like to thank hon. members for the comments that they made this evening.

In answer to a specific question referred to by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona with respect to why there's a revocation provision in the bill, this is a requirement by Rideau Hall in order to allow this medal to be recognized by the Order of Precedence. That's the reason why the revocation provision is contained within here.

With respect to the other concerns raised by many other hon. members, I can assure you that the regulations are being drafted now, and those regulations are being drafted pursuant to section 7 of the act and will include the issues raised by section 4, which a number of you referenced. My undertaking to you is that I will provide transcripts of the Blues or Hansard to the drafters of the regulations so that they might take your comments into consideration while preparing the regulations.

With that, I wish to call the question on Bill 2, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 7

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave tonight to bring forward second reading of Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005.

Bill 7 proposes to make technical amendments to the Public Health Act, the Government Organization Act, and the Health Professions Act. The minor amendments address issues related to health professionals. These issues have been brought forward by the respective professional associations and colleges in Alberta. Currently the Public Health Act provides authority for nurse practitioners to practise. These sections will be repealed by Bill 7 when nurse practitioners become regulated under the registered nurses schedule of the Health Professions Act. This change is targeted to come into effect in the fall of this year.

Bill 7 also proposes amendments to the Health Professions Act. These amendments are required to protect the term “specialist” and limit the use of the term. Colleges would make regulations about how their members can use the specialist designation.

Amendments are also proposed to several schedules in the Health Professions Act. These include revising the names of certain colleges and amending the protected titles for regulated health professionals. For instance, the “College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Province of Alberta” will become the “College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta.” Another example is the title “emergency medical technologist-paramedic (critical care paramedic),” a new protected title which will be added by the amendments. A schedule amendment is also necessary in order to allow the Alberta Podiatry Association to continue as a nonregulated body with the same name once podiatrists become regulated under the Health Professions Act with physicians, surgeons, and osteopaths.

Bill 7 proposes amendment also, Mr. Speaker, to the Government Organization Act. The Government Organization Act restricts certain medical activities to health professionals who are authorized to perform these activities by legislation or by the minister. The proposed amendments are intended to more clearly define certain restricted activities. For example, there is a definition for dispensing a drug which specifically excludes the administration of a drug. However, there is no current definition of administration of a drug.

Proposed amendments to Bill 7 add a definition of administration of a drug and also clarify the definition for “compound” and “dispense.” “Administration of a drug” will mean “the supplying of a dose of a drug to a person for the purpose of immediate ingestion, application, inhalation, insertion, installation or injection.” The definition of compounding clarifies that reconstituting a drug with water does not fall within the definition of compounding, which would make it a restricted activity. The definition of “dispense” will be amended to clarify that when a drug is dispensed, it is provided to a person through a prescription and clearly does not mean to administer the drug. Associated redundancies and wording in the Government Organization Act will also be addressed through Bill 7.

I ask support of the House for the second reading of Bill 7.

Mr. Speaker, I move adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I rise to move Bill 9, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005, for second reading.

A little bit of time has passed, not much but a little, since the Post-secondary Learning Act was passed, and in practice it's been determined that it would be appropriate to make a few small changes for the purposes of clarification and housekeeping and deleting some unnecessary sections. Bill 9 will help to clarify board membership regulations for technical institutes and colleges, correct some things that were unintentionally done when the legislation was drafted which could lead to unintended restrictions.

It also proposes to delete the section of the act that lists not-for-profit institutions eligible for funding from the government since funding for these institutions is provided through a regulation. Now, the purpose of removing them from the act. Basically, there are, I think, four specific not-for-profit institutions listed in the act. There are an additional four not-for-profit institutions which are not listed in the act which have the same criteria and qualifications as those that are listed in the act, and one of the institutions listed in the act has now been merged with a public institution. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, having the specificity in the act listing these institutions is not an appropriate way to go, so we're proposing to delete the section. It's not required. The same matter can be dealt with under the regulations.

Now, I know that we've heard in the House tonight different views about framework legislation and the work being done under regulation, but I would suggest that surely that criticism, if it was ever valid, isn't valid with respect to this point. There needs to be the flexibility to add a not-for-profit postsecondary institution to the list when it's appropriate to do so. So that's the intention there.

Bill 9 also clarifies terminology relating to tuition, as requested by the Auditor General.

There's a housekeeping amendment for sections that relate to student associations. The Campus Alberta Quality Council has assumed, as well, a role of reviewing degree proposals, work that was previously done by the Private Colleges Accreditation Board. Thus the work of the Private Colleges Accreditation Board is now done, and that section can be deleted.

There is a change being made to the section relating to the collection of information. Right now the minister can only access information regarding current students. However, in order to ensure that good policies are being developed for advanced education in Alberta, we need to be able to access information for those who apply but do not enrol in an institution as well as alumni information for various surveys. It's something that we will be obviously consulting and working with the Privacy Commissioner about to make sure that the information collected is used appropriately. Revising the section does allow us to collect information that may include personal information about an identifiable student, applicant, or alumni of a postsecondary institution providing that the information relates directly to and is necessary for the operation of the program or activity.

The minister also needs authority to be able to conduct surveys relating to postsecondary education with applicants and with graduates of institutions to ensure that policy directions are supporting the needs of Albertans. We have consulted with the Alberta privacy branch and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to ensure that the wording provided is appropriate.

Finally, there are some housekeeping changes to ensure consistency in the use of the terms "private college" and "private institution" throughout the act.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the House would see the benefits of these amendments and would approve Bill 9.

With that, I would move that we adjourn Bill 9.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:53 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly a gentleman seated in the members' gallery who has been a friend of mine for many years. He's been a councillor for the MD of Taber for the last 10 years. For seven years he's been on the Alberta board of FCSS, and he's recently been elected as president of the AAMD and C. This man has been a good friend of mine and worked many years in municipal politics with me. I'd like you to please ask Don Johnson to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 16 students from NorQuest College, located in the Edmonton-Glenora constituency. They are in an English as a second language program. Their teacher is Debbie Stephen. Just to give you an idea of their backgrounds, they are from Afghanistan, Iran, China, Taiwan, Rwanda, Palestine, Romania, Turkey, Ukraine, Israel, Russia, and Pakistan. I invite them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the new chief of staff for the NDP opposition, Debbie Clark. Some of you may know Debbie through her work as executive administrator and registrar of the Alberta Assessors' Association. Joining Debbie today are her parents, Mike and Lorette Spilchen, long-time New Democrat supporters and formerly of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, where they owned a business. They now reside in Canora, Saskatchewan. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others at this time? A little later there will be some additional ones.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Our historic vignette of the day, hon. members. On March 16, 1967, the portrait of Roberta Catherine MacAdams Price was presented to the Alberta Legislature to honour her achievements. She was one of the two first women elected to the Alberta Legislative Assembly on June 7, 1917, and she was the first woman to introduce a piece of legislation in what was then known as the British Empire. She was elected as Roberta MacAdams as a nonpartisan MLA to represent the province at large in the 1917 election.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ambulance Services

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect good management from their government, but they are struggling to find it. Not only did this government mismanage the transfer of ambulance services, now they've made a mess of their makeshift $55 million solution. Seventy-seven of 149 Alberta municipalities will be facing a budget shortfall because of the failed ambulance transfer. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is this government going to do to help these 77 municipalities climb out of the financial hole this government's ambulance transfer has dug for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government takes very seriously the role and responsibilities associated with municipalities and see ourselves clearly as partners with municipalities. With respect to the issue of ambulances Municipal Affairs and myself as the minister of that department are working very closely with the minister of health to ensure that issues related to municipalities are dealt with as fairly and equitably as they possibly can be.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, then, to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that ambulance services cost more to deliver in rural areas, why did the government put rural Alberta at a disadvantage by providing assistance on a per capita basis?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we spent a very intense several days examining options, looking at per capita funding, looking at actual costs submitted to regional health authorities from the municipalities, evaluating the way to manage it most effectively. Some of the municipalities, rural and medium- and small-sized municipalities, in fact did not deliver ambulance services. They contracted it from somebody else. To give carte blanche funding without carefully having an opportunity to examine the impacts may have been unfair, but the best way to do it was on a per capita basis and to look at the opportunity this year with the technical committee, to examine each and every case and see whether we could improve upon it for the next year.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. So, then, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that the transfer of ambulance services is such a glaring example of failed restructuring and government inefficiency, what role will this minister's department play in improving the efficiency and structure of ambulance services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the health minister had a very tough decision to make and did a very good job on the decision she did make.

I want to understand from some questions that were asked yesterday. At the time when the ambulance review was done in 2002, total ambulance cost in the province of Alberta was around $115 million. Of that, the municipal portion was roughly $40 million. Forty million from the province, $22 million from patients that took rides in ambulances, and about another $9 million to $10 million that came from the federal government, which was mostly aboriginal. That's the $115 million, and that was the total cost at the time. But remember that $40 million of that was all that municipalities paid. They've never been paid any different for that, and now we're giving them $55 million.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

1:40 Restructuring and Government Efficiency

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to its website the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency is focused on "how government and its reporting entities can better provide services to Albertans." This minister so far has refused to look into the mess surrounding the budget process, refused to look into taxpayer dollars wasted on flights, and now apparently is refusing to look into the transfer of ambulance services. So to that same minister: other than SuperNet what files is his department working on, and what is their cost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want you to know that SuperNet is going to be a huge advantage to Albertans. It is especially going to be an advantage to rural Alberta, and it goes along with the rural initiatives that this government has. At this point in time it's so important to get the SuperNet done that I am focusing most of my energies and time on the SuperNet.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: what was the cost of establishing the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that, I think, is a budget item, but I will say this. I don't know if the members across the floor understand that this ministry wasn't a brand spanking new ministry. It's new in name and it's new in form, but there was some restructuring done before the ministry started. We have a large portion, Alberta Corporate Service Centre, that's in this ministry, that we're working on diligently to find efficiencies in. The corporate chief information officer was also moved over, and that was about 1,350 employees.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why won't the Premier himself take responsibility for government structure and efficiency, cut the taxpayers' losses by transferring SuperNet back to Innovation and Science, and simply eliminate the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency? Why won't he do that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the department of restructuring is moving along very well indeed. I'm pleased with the progress and anxiously await the minister's report. Perhaps he can update us, bring us up to date on what the department is all about.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Resource Centre

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October the Calgary health region contracted with the Health Resource Centre to do hip and knee surgeries. Despite the fact these procedures would cost more than they would in the public system, the Premier called this contracting out "a health care success story." But it's now been revealed that not only do these procedures cost more, but the wait-lists are longer at the Health Resource Centre. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that wait times for hip surgery are longer at the Health Resource Centre than in any other facility in Calgary, does the minister consider this contract a health care success story?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Calgary health region for making every attempt to reduce the length of time people were waiting for surgery. While there are still issues with the wait list, those are issues that the health region is working to address. We haven't done a complete evaluation of the effectiveness of that contract. To be critical of a region who is attempting to move patients forward into the system to get the service they require is really not the way to approach improving the health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: are the wait lists longer at the Health Resource Centre because its private clients like the WCB, who pays a premium, are being served before patients from the public system?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that has always been the case.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: given that procedures that are done at the Health Resource Centre cost more and waiting lists are longer, will the minister do the logical thing and increase capacity in the public system and cancel this private surgical contract?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's jumping to conclusions, and this minister isn't prepared to jump to conclusions. We have to take a look at all of the issues surrounding the health care system. Number one, this is a very good health care system. Number two, the region in Calgary is planning to add beds. The exponential growth in Alberta is probably unprecedented anywhere else in Canada. Number three, the issue of leveraging some of these surgeries in an attempt to reduce waiting lists was something – if the hon. member opposite really had a case, wouldn't we have heard about it when it happened during the election?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, they certainly heard about it from us.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I informed the House that the city of Red Deer is short millions in provincial ambulance funding. Today the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association is saying that the Conservatives' so-called $55 million fix announced last week still leaves Calgary $4.3 million short and Lethbridge $2.7 million short. In fact, more than half of AUMA's member municipalities are facing shortfalls because of Tory ambulance bungling. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why this government has so badly botched the ambulance transfer that municipal taxpayers will end up being saddled with at least $12 million in extra ambulance costs come the 1st of April?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. member, a botch of the ambulance service changeover to make it part of health as opposed to a transportation service, which I don't know if that's what the opposition wants, would have been to go to the $128 million program. Had we proceeded with the program at the costs that had escalated so dramatically, I suspect there would have been yelling and screaming and stamping and fuming and storming on the part of the opposition.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that during the election we brought it to the government's and the public's attention that they were lowballing the ambulance costs, why is the Premier now perplexed that the costs are in fact so high?

Mr. Klein: Perplexed? Because it was to be really quite simple. The original context – and I'm sure the Official Opposition agrees – is that ambulance services are now an integral part of health services, the front line, the first responders, and ambulances for the most part are travelling hospitals. The paramedics and the EMTs are highly trained individuals able to administer certain kinds of medicine and certainly more than primary first aid. So it was decided that ambulance services should be part of the health system as opposed to an array of services offered throughout the province. Some were municipal services, some were in conjunction with fire departments, some were volunteer services, some were private operators, and what we wanted to do was to achieve a co-ordination of services under the regional health authorities. That's all we wanted to do. That was the first step. I don't know where it would have taken us from there. To me, that didn't require a tremendous amount of rocket science.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When will this government admit that its own shoddy research led to the lowballing of ambulance transfer costs, and when can municipalities expect to see a funding plan that doesn't leave their citizens facing property tax increases to pay for the government's mistakes?

Mr. Klein: If that question is to me, Mr. Speaker, we're doing our best to compensate municipalities. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has this file on her table, and I'll ask her to respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, over this next year while we look at the discovery projects, I think more of the information will come to light. We hope to keep progressing. But I think that what we are doing today and a very rational assessment of it will illuminate why many of the earlier reports that were filed with Municipal Affairs from municipalities did not account for all of the costs that were made available to the regional health authorities at the time that the transfer was intended to be complete, and that is part of the crux of the problem. So we will elucidate that over these next few months, and we're working very diligently to get that in place.

1:50

Mr. Speaker, may I remind this Assembly that last year $65 million, $55 million that we gave to municipalities and $10 million that we gave to the discovery projects, was in fact not paid to them, so there is extra compensation for ground ambulance to municipalities this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Definition of Marriage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in June 2003 our Premier spoke out for Albertans, and he said:

The law in Alberta is very clear, notwithstanding how some people might feel about it, it's very clear. It's as clear as crystal. If there is any move to sanctify and legalize same-sex marriages, we will use the notwithstanding clause. Period. End of story.

On March 23, 2005, this government's Marriage Amendment Act will expire. My question is to the Premier. Regardless of what the courts and the federal Parliament are doing, will this government show leadership by re-enacting the Alberta Marriage Amendment Act, renewing the definition of marriage as between a man and a woman and using the notwithstanding clause before it expires?

Mr. Klein: Relative to the hon. member's stand on the traditional definition of marriage, we agree with him entirely.

I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General respond relative to the legalities of this case, but the hon. member knows full well that whether the notwithstanding clause stays or whether it goes, it can't be defended, and that's what I'll have the hon. minister talk to.

I would like to just take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to talk about what we have done. Perhaps I can do that during the second supplementary.

Mr. Hinman: Is this government prepared to clearly state that notwithstanding any federal court or parliamentary decision it will not solemnize any marriage within Alberta other than those which are between one man and one woman?

Mr. Klein: A very interesting question. I agree with the tone and the intent of the hon. member's question, but relative to the legalities I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Premier. Mr. Speaker, last December the Supreme Court ruled in a Marriage Act reference that was brought by the federal government. In essence, that case says this: the federal government, not the provincial government, has the jurisdiction with respect to the definition of marriage. That is why at this point in time the federal government has before its Parliament an act relative to the definition of marriage. It is also very clear that a province cannot use the notwithstanding clause relative to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with respect to matters that are not within its jurisdiction. Therefore, the province does not have the power to use the notwithstanding clause in the Charter relative to the definition of marriage.

Mr. Hinman: Will this government stand up to Ottawa for the traditions and customs of Albertans by just saying no to changes in the definition of marriage, just as Quebec has said no to Ottawa in defence of its traditions and customs?

Mr. Klein: Quebec has said no to Ottawa relative to a number of issues over which it has constitutional authority.

Mr. Speaker, again, we agree with the tone and the intent of the hon. member's questions. Relative to the legalities he's quite clear on the legal matters, and the Attorney General and Justice minister has explained them quite well.

Mr. Speaker, we have continually defended the traditional definition of marriage. We believe that it's deeply rooted in history, culture, and religion. We have continually fought changes to the traditional definition of marriage, now a bill before the House of Commons. I have personally written to every MP – every MP; all 300-and-some-odd MPs – I've written to the Prime Minister asking him to allow a free vote, and I've urged all members of the House of Commons to vote no or to at least amend the legislation to include a notwithstanding clause. We are also encouraging all Alberta people to contact their MPs, and I would encourage this member to talk to the Liberal caucus and have the Liberal caucus talk to the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Métis Hunting Rights

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The spring grizzly bear hunt in Alberta is based on the scientific management of our bear population, and the number of permits issued each year is strictly limited to achieve a sustainable grizzly population. My concern is the effect that the new interim Métis harvesting agreement may have on Alberta's grizzly conservation programs, specifically next month, when the male bears come out of their winter hibernation. So my question is to the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Under the new interim harvesting agreement what restrictions are imposed on the Métis' ability to hunt grizzly bears in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sustainable Resource Development's role in implementing this agreement is again to make sure that the ongoing theme of conservation and monitoring and enforcement, if necessary, prevails. That is something that was discussed with the Métis during the time of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important things to note is that Alberta's careful and cautious approach to the grizzly bear hunt this year already includes a modest aboriginal harvest. Like the aboriginal harvest, SRD will closely monitor any grizzly bear hunt or any grizzly bear hunting that might occur under the Métis agreement, and we will share those results with the public as we always do.

Dr. Morton: To the same minister again: given the absence of any or at least very minimal restrictions on Métis hunting of grizzly, would the minister consider cancelling the spring grizzly hunt for legally registered hunters in order to prevent Métis or anybody else from hunting or killing grizzlies this spring?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, under the federal government's Powley decision, the Supreme Court decision, and with the interim Métis harvesting agreement that's in place, if the hunt were closed to anyone, the Métis would still be permitted to hunt for subsistence reasons. As a result of that and to ensure the conservation measures that we abide by and that were put into the interim agreement, those measures and education, we will continue to work with the Métis associations and under the leadership of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Dr. Morton: Again to the same minister. I don't know how many people hunt grizzly bears for subsistence, but last year there were six grizzly bears killed by licensed hunters in this province. Does the government have a plan to monitor the number of bears killed by unlicensed Métis hunters this spring to ensure that our grizzly population does remain sustainable?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we do want grizzly bear on the land, and definitely the grizzly bear hunt is closely monitored and checked and researched every single solitary year. That's why we do that: to make sure that the bears are kept on the land.

By regulation, the hon. member is wanting to know that every single hunter, including Métis, must register their grizzly bear harvest with our officials. We have these measures in place so that we can keep those conservation concerns that we talked about earlier in check and we can take action on our licensing and our ultimate rollout of a grizzly bear strategy each year. So we do monitor. We do it on our best research available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Access to Information on Enron

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that this Progressive Conservative government and Enron talked and talked and talked often. Enron Canada was a generous financial donor to the Progressive Conservative Party, and even one of their Houston officials was quoted in a government of Alberta news release that was bragging about the power purchase arrangement auction in the year 2000. My first question is to the Premier. Given that over 5,600 pages of records of communication between Enron Canada and Alberta Energy were denied the Official Opposition's access to information request in 2002, will this government now release these documents to the public immediately?

2:00

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the market surveillance administrator has asked the federal Competition Bureau to investigate this matter. I'm sure any files that they require will be turned over to them, and once they make their findings, perhaps – I don't know for sure – those papers will become public. I don't know. Nor do I know the reason – but I'll attempt to find out – why the Liberals were denied access to the files. I can only surmise that they didn't fit within the context of the FOIP rules and guidelines.

Relative to the hon. member's preamble, I'll address that in the second supplementary.

Mr. MacDonald: I'll be pleased to hear it.

To the Premier: given all the damning information the American authorities have uncovered on Enron's activities in Alberta through Project Stanley, why is this government refusing to release these records now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I have no idea, but perhaps what the hon. member is requesting doesn't fit within the guidelines of the FOIP rules and regulations.

Relative to his first preamble, Mr. Speaker, where he alleges that Enron has talked and talked and talked to the government and had these secret, behind-closed-door discussions, I don't recall any discussions whatsoever with Enron. None.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how many of these records relate to Enron's unethical activities and price manipulation at the Power Pool of Alberta? There are 5,600 records. How many of those relate to these activities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if in fact the allegations being made by the hon. member are true, then that information undoubtedly has been obtained by the market surveillance administrator, and he has passed that information on to the federal Competition Bureau in order that they may conduct their investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mountain pine beetle has had a devastating impact on the forest industry in British Columbia, already resulting in the loss of more than $9 billion in forestry revenues and threatening 80 per cent of their pine forests. Recent reports indicate that the number of mountain pine beetles in Alberta has increased this year over last and that the forest pest has been found in areas where it hasn't been found before. Can the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tell us what he's doing about this alarming trend in the increase of mountain pine beetles and their locations in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question because as far as our forestry industry and Sustainable Resource Development are concerned, the greatest threat that we have to our pine forests is the pine beetle that is coming in from British Columbia. That's why we've continued over the past three years – it's a three-year project at this point in time – to look at surveys to see if there's any significant increase. We do know that there are some areas in the province that are starting to experience some pine beetle infestation, but let me be clear: there is no epidemic of mountain pine beetle at this particular point in time.

We do continue to do aerial surveys as well as on the ground surveys. What we do when we find a patch of pine beetle destroying our pine forests is: we go in there, we identify the trees, we take and log the trees, and we burn them to make sure that the pine beetle does not infest other trees. This is a strategy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Can the same minister tell us, in light of the fact that there are more beetles found in more places than ever before, if his department is co-ordinating with British Columbia to help keep beetles out of Alberta and, if so, how?

Mr. Coutts: We have 2 million acres of pine forest in Alberta, and our priority definitely is to work with the British Columbia government to learn from their dire situation over there. We constantly share information. As a matter of fact, I plan on talking to my British Columbia counterpart within the next two days when we're in Cranbrook, British Columbia, at a joint cabinet meeting between Alberta and B.C. We know that these beetles come in, as I said, from B.C., and we're monitoring those areas on a very, very close basis. We will continue to work together with the British Columbia government to eradicate this pesky little beetle.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell us what, if any, role he's taken in consulting and co-ordinating efforts with the forest industry?

Mr. Coutts: The industry is definitely involved because it's their future that's at stake here. As well, we have different government departments and the federal government being involved with this as well. We also involve municipal governments in this because it's part of their communities that are devastated by annual allowable cuts that are affected by pine beetles.

For example, Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation conducts random checks for barked wood coming in from British Columbia at their weigh stations. Community Development doesn't allow B.C. wood to be burned in their parks, and their conservation officers continually check on that. So I'm quite proud of the fact that these and other efforts have earned the Alberta team a Premier's award of excellence in the past year, and we will continue to work on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly the Minister of Advanced Education said: "There's no shortage of place in our advanced education institutions for apprenticeships. The shortage is in placement." Yet the apprenticeship and training board's own figures show that for 2003 of the nearly 40,000 apprentices registered in Alberta, barely half were attending technical training institutions. Can the minister explain why?

Mr. Hancock: Most of those who weren't attending institutions at the time were probably building their workplace hours. Part and parcel of the apprenticeship training program is that you work and you go to school. When you've built up the work hours, you're eligible to go to school. We don't have a compulsory aspect in the program that says that once you've acquired the work hours that are necessary, you have to go to school. That depends on the students determining when they're available to go to school and their employers determining when they can release them to go to school. It's very much a co-operative effort with students, their employers, and the system. I can assure the hon. member that we have contracts with the postsecondary institutions that are in place, the technical institutes, to provide apprenticeship programs for everybody that registers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it is as the minister says, then I wonder if there's any protection for the apprentice if an employer continues to say to the apprentice: "I can't release you to go to school. I can't afford to. I need you here now."

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a very strong apprenticeship system in this province, and we have fieldworkers in the department who work with the employers and the apprentices in order to co-ordinate this. I can assure you that that has not been brought to our attention as a problem in any way, shape, or form.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the government of Alberta pushing to allow temporary foreign workers in to work in the oil sands when we actually trained 1,700 fewer apprentices in 2003 than we did in 1982?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the hon. member is correct in his assertion, the two have no relationship to each other. The reason why we have the opportunity for foreign workers to come into this province is that there is a skill shortage. There are lots of jobs. This province is operating at full steam. Not just in the apprenticeship area but in skills right across the province there is a need for well-qualified people. There is a place for every qualified Albertan, and there's an opportunity for Albertans who want to be qualified, but that's still not going to be enough to fuel the opportunities that are available in this province. So we welcome others to come to this province to help build this province and to create a home here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:10 Health Regulations for Rural Community Halls

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week I met with several rural community associations that due to a boundary adjustment find themselves now in the Calgary health region, and they all expressed the same concerns. The way they're being classified by the health inspectors, also known in rural Alberta as the pie and perogy police, they fear that they're going to have to shut down their community halls. The number of specific concerns raised were far too numerous to mention within the guidelines of a brief preamble, so I'll go directly to my question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are small rural community halls that put on one annual turkey supper or serve annual rodeo lunches classified the same as full-service restaurants by health inspectors?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, for public health reasons, obviously, facilities that serve food are classified under very different categories. The category a facility is placed in depends upon the frequency and the kind of food that's served and whether or not the venue is open to the public. Wherever food is served, public health regulations apply equally regardless of any other factors, including size and frequency of use, and this is to ensure that Albertans can be confident that public health is protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that these functions are little more than a community picnic held indoors, should there not be a separate designation for these small rural community halls?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in light of the hon. member's concern I contacted the Calgary health region today, and the Calgary health region is looking into the matter of how frequently regions and municipalities may feel that there are some impediments to how well they can serve. A number of people have suggested that there are clear guidelines in place. If a region is planning an event, if they're planning some kind of community activity, they can contact the health region, and the health region will come and work with them to ensure that public safety is maintained, that the proper rules and regulations are in place, and they work with the groups to ensure that guidelines are followed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that these complaints were not nearly as prevalent in the health authority that they found themselves in before, is there a standard level of inspection between one health region and another?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in most regional health authorities the level of inspection varies with the amount of confidence the health authority has relative to the type of food and the type of facilities, the frequency, and so on. While I recognize that under the new regional authorities there may be variances, I encourage community groups to work with the health authority, to work with the public health inspector to make sure that there is in fact a safe event possible under the guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Health Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has huffed and puffed for months about the so-called third way in health care, yet he refused to talk about it during the election, and four months after the election he's still refusing to level with Albertans. Meanwhile, the NDP opposition has just finished province-wide public hearings on health care reform, and believe me, grassroots Albertans have lots of ideas on how to fix problems that in many cases were created by this government. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier still refusing to consult with the Marthas and Henrys of this province to get their input on how to strengthen and sustain the public health care system in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that will be done. This is a three-pronged approach to achieving sustainability in health care, which has now reached proportions of – what? – $9.1 billion a year. If the hon. member feels that is acceptable, then he can stand up and tell Albertans that he thinks that that and an 8 per cent increase each and every year is acceptable. I'll let him do that. I'm not about to do that.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is: the first step was actually to put more money into the health care system to eliminate all the deficits of the regional health authorities and to alleviate waiting lists for certain common procedures, primarily bone and joint procedures, some heart procedures, some cancer procedures, and to accommodate some capital.

The second phase of the program is to hold an international symposium to find out what works in other jurisdictions, including socialist republics where there is a mix of public and private.

The third component, of course, is a public consultation with the people of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: why is the Premier and his government huddling with hand-picked international health care experts at an invitation-only symposium in Calgary in May while freezing out severely normal Albertans who have many worthwhile ideas for improving the health system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I understand that 500 severely normal Albertans have been invited. We can't invite the world to this symposium. We're inviting representatives from around the world to share their experiences, from jurisdictions around the globe representing countries that espouse to the free-enterprise system and representing countries that espouse to the system that they espouse to.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: with his so-called third way why is the government ripping off a slogan from the United Kingdom in order to import a health care system from the United States?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, I don't know to what slogan the hon. member alludes, Mr. Speaker. If he's talking about the third way, I didn't know that. I just thought it was a good slogan, and if they're using it in Britain, great. Britain happens to be governed by the Labour Party, which is the equivalent to the NDs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate received a $1.7 million increase in funding overtop of its last year's $2.6 million budget. This expensive office supposedly has the charge of defending Alberta's consumers against price gouging, market manipulation, and price-fixing by utility companies. Unfortunately, it has been silent. To the Minister of Government Services: has the Utilities Consumer Advocate looked into the current case against Enron and its affiliates price gouging in Alberta?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been answered in this House many times, there is an investigation going on by the Competition Bureau of the federal government, and that will get into all of the angles. The Minister of Energy has on many occasions clearly demonstrated what the provincial government's role has been, and certainly the Competition Bureau will be coming out with their report, and we'll have a complete answer when that is done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is it, then, that the Utilities Consumer Advocate's own website posts consumer updates about Enron's activities in Alberta, Project Stanley? Is it just functioning as a propaganda machine when it's not really investigating anything?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen where Enron is on the website at this time. Enron is now not an identity.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is refusing to look into something that affects all taxpayers, which is really his main reason for existence, what's your ministry doing to ensure that the Department of Government Services is investigating the consumer rip-off?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that the utilities advocate has been travelling all of Alberta doing investigations, and to my understanding he's saying that he's posting them on the website.

Thank you.

Mr. Melchin: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is an investigation going on, and I think it's not fair to characterize it that the appropriate authorities aren't doing their work. That's why you do put in bodies like the market surveillance administrator. That's why there is a Competition Bureau. They have been given the jurisdiction, they are taking the authority, and they're doing their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

2:20 Wabamun Provincial Park Closure

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wabamun Lake provincial park is closed now for the remainder of 2005 to upgrade the water and sewer systems. My question is to the Minister of Community Development, responsible for parks. Is it necessary to shut the park down for the entire summer? Could the work not have been done incrementally over the winter and spring or later this winter and fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an enormous amount of work that is being done, and to be clear, some work has been conducted over the winter and the spring. That work, which is now completed, has been the installation of new showers and new washroom facilities. The next step is to install and connect the sewer and waterlines. There is a significant amount of work to do in this, and the reason why the park was closed was for public safety reasons. So the park will be closed and then remain closed for the balance of the year 2005. The total cost of this project is about $1.5 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: knowing how popular this camping and fishing getaway just west of Edmonton is, what are some alternatives for campers this summer?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, only the park itself is closed. People should know that the village of Wabamun and the marina that are there will remain open, so people will still be able to use some of the amenities in the area. I should say also that once these renovations are done, I think people are going to be very, very pleased with the work that's been done.

With respect to other places to go, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other campgrounds within a 100-kilometre radius of this area. Two of them would be Miquelon Lake and the Pembina River provincial parks, and Albertans can visit the department's website to see other park sites and camping venues that may be available to them, perhaps an opportunity to see a part of the province that they wouldn't ordinarily see. That website can be accessed relatively easily, and you can check for campsites both geographically and alphabetically.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there plans to upgrade or develop a more serviced campsite at this park in the near future?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, any further improvements to this park or any others will be considered in the next fiscal year, but again this is a major investment of money into the park at Wabamun Lake. In addition to what I indicated in my previous answer, I have a list of things that are being done. We're refurbishing the water tower, replacing the water main valves, establishing a new potable well, constructing four new septic fields, and relocating the recreational vehicle sewage disposal station. But even if we move forward on other improvements for this park, I don't anticipate it will ever need to be closed again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Game Farming

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning our Member for Calgary-Mountain View along with the Alberta Wilderness Association were calling upon this government to ban game farming in Alberta. This is because of the ongoing threat and contamination of wildlife from chronic wasting disease. My question to the minister of agriculture. For 12 years this Premier has been promising a public inquiry into this industry. When will this happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there has never been a case of CJD that has been linked back to CWD, or chronic wasting disease, and I think that to suggest that there's a health risk when there's no science to support such a suggestion is somewhat irresponsible. It's irresponsible to the industry. It's irresponsible to those producers who have taken the entrepreneurial attitude to get into this business. It's irresponsible to suggest that there's a health risk associated with these producers' animals.

We're currently testing about 10,000 a year, and only three cases of CWD have ever been confirmed, and none of that has ever hit the human food chain or, for that matter, the feed chain. As with BSE, Mr. Speaker, effective surveillance is the key. As with BSE, more science is required, which is why this government has already announced $38 million for a new prion research centre, which will study the folding proteins that cause this disease. I might also add that there is no CWD in our wild herd as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that such a small area on the border is being culled, how will this government prevent cross-migration between Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, the department of agriculture as well as the Department of SRD are monitoring that situation very, very closely. The cull is a preventative measure to ensure that we don't have a spread of disease in our wild or domestic herd. Again, we are testing the wild animals, and chronic wasting disease has not been found in wild deer or elk in Alberta despite testing over 5,400 animals during the last seven hunting seasons.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that this industry cannot survive without government supports, will this government shut down the industry by providing compensation to all the game farmers?

Mr. Horner: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Our intent is to encourage this industry and build this industry. Our intent is to continue to support those producers, which we have done through per head payments – we are still waiting for the federal government to come forward with their portion of that per head payment – which we have done through dollars to market enhancement programs, much the same as we have done with the beef industry.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, this industry has been hit hard by the border closure in the United States as well as some border closures in Korea. Our department as well as the Minister of Economic Development and his department are working to reopen those borders and to reopen those markets. This is a very valued industry in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate. In the interim might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my first school group to visit here since the House has been sitting. I have 28 enthusiastic students here from Taber and their teachers and a few parents. I'd like to introduce to this gallery their teachers, Mr. Pyne and Mrs. Siemens, and their parent drivers are James Heal, Lori Cudrak, Bonnie Elliott, Miss Jordan, and Tony Machacek. I'd ask that they rise and we give them the regular warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Recognitions

The Speaker: We'll start with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer College Kings Volleyball Team

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me stand in the Legislature of Alberta today to recognize the Red Deer College Kings men's volleyball team dynasty.

Mr. Speaker, what do you get when you win 38 straight matches in provincial and national volleyball championships? You get six consecutive national volleyball championships and a claim to a national dynasty.

Thanks to the exceptional direction of head coach Keith Hansen, the College Kings volleyball team has won another national championship. The national tournament was played in Fredericton, New Brunswick, where the College Kings set a national record for the Canadian Colleges Athletic Association men's volleyball with six straight championships, the eighth in 11 years.

Congratulations to all the coaches and players of the Red Deer College Kings and a special congratulation to tournament MVP and the Canadian Colleges Athletic Association player of the year, Joey Martins.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members of the Legislature join me in congratulating the Red Deer College Kings men's volleyball team on their six straight national titles.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Tom Baldwin

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great regret that I rise today to recognize the late Tom Baldwin, the executive director of the Northern Alberta Development Council. Tom suddenly and unexpectedly passed away on Sunday, March 13. He was 48 years old.

Tom was well known throughout the north and respected for working miraculously in his quiet articulate fashion. His knowledge, leadership, and accomplishments can only be marvelled at, and his expertise can only really be appreciated by those who had just a fragment of his understanding.

As a chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council I was fortunate enough to be able to work closely with Tom, and I was always amazed at how hard he worked to improve communities. He was on countless committees and associations and never missed an opportunity to use his great charisma and tireless energy to promote northern Alberta. Tom's commitment to excellence was apparent in all aspects of his life and his work. He will be dearly missed by his family, friends, and colleagues.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2:30

Jared Potts Jennifer Ross

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year the Great Kids awards honour outstanding youth for their contributions to their schools, communities, and families. This past Sunday two of my constituents received the Great Kids award.

The first constituent is Jared Potts, a 14 year old attending Griffiths-Scott school in Millet. Jared is known for kindness and thoughtfulness. Jared's parents passed away when he was young. Despite that, he has shown perseverance and tenacity through his actions in the community. He's recognized for his kindness and bases his success on what he gives to others as opposed to what he receives.

The other recipient is Jennifer Ross. Jennifer is a 17 year old from Camrose. It's been said that Jennifer has displayed some extraordinary feats throughout her life. When Jen was four, she suffered from a virus which severely damaged her liver, which required a liver transplant. From that point on, Jen became a passionate spokesperson for organ donations and served as the Stollery children's hospital child champion in 2003-2004. Jen displays great strength and generosity and will continue to be a leader in the community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Stony Plain Atom Hockey Double-A Team

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an outstanding group of young athletes aged nine to 11 from my constituency of Stony Plain. The Stony Plain atom double-A hockey team participated in the provincial championship tournament in Barrhead over the past weekend. By exhibiting a high level of skill, teamwork, and sportsmanship, this team, coached by Mr. Malcolm Berndt, won the gold medal and are the new provincial champions. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the players, coaches, and manager on this outstanding accomplishment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Lunch Program

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to talk about the Edmonton school lunch program. This program provides a well-balanced lunch to children so that they can concentrate on their schoolwork and not on their hunger. The program, which feeds nearly 2,300 children in 12 participating schools, provides one-third of a child's daily nutritional requirements. Lunches are prepared by the Misericordia and Edmonton General hospitals.

In addition, the Edmonton school lunch program also offers young chefs groups, collective kitchens, snack in the shack, and the nutritional snack program where funding is given to participating schools to provide a mid-morning nutritious snack to 6,300 children in 33 high-needs schools. And the breakfast club: a junior high school provides a healthy breakfast each morning.

Teachers recognize the benefits of the lunch program, indicating that there is a positive influence on student behaviour, attendance, morale, concentration, and learning ability. The Edmonton school lunch program is a cost-efficient investment in our children and our communities. Its continued growth depends upon generous donations from all sectors of the community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Safeway Support for ArtStart Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During February Safeway grocers across Alberta and western Canada kick-started the Show Your Heart campaign, which raises upwards of $15 million a year for local charities. Here in Edmonton-Centre the Oliver Safeway is supporting ArtStart throughout the year of 2005, thereby making an incredible difference in our community. I'm very pleased to acknowledge the remarkable efforts of the Safeway staff and volunteers in Edmonton and across the province. The particular enthusiasm of those Oliver Safeway staff like Adrienne Brown and store manager Dan Kolba and their work for ArtStart should be applauded.

ArtStart, headed by Jacqueline Biollo, is a program that gives inner-city children the opportunity to produce art portfolios, learn a variety of mediums, participate in choir and musical theatre. They're introduced to creative movement through dance and are invited to learn the violin or viola. The value and importance of this program is priceless. On Saturday, February 12, the Oliver Safeway raised $2,000 for its cause. Please join me in congratulating the hard-working volunteers of Oliver Safeway and ArtStart and commending them on their efforts for this wonderful charity.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition from approximately 670 constituents of Whitecourt-St. Anne urging the Legislative Assembly to increase the funding for long-term care facilities so that our seniors can remain in their communities when they no longer can look after themselves.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to table today. The first is a petition with 324 signatures urging the government to "institute a fair and equitable . . . floor price for cattle."

The second is a petition with 648 signatures calling for increased funding for improvements to Highway 63.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bill 11

Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act, 2005, which would ensure a safe, secure water supply for approximately 6,000 Albertans living in the communities of Donalda, Big Valley, Rochon Sands, White Sands, Byemoor, Endiang, Erskine, Nevis, and Red Willow.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 11 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 28

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005.

The bill introduces two new tools for municipal revenue generation. The first is a property tax increment financing tool which will help municipalities address infrastructure and other costs associated with redevelopment in designated areas. The second will provide the authority for municipalities to pass a bylaw to collect a levy from sand and gravel operators to address some of the impacts of the extraction activity.

The bill also clarifies taxation status for certain Crown lease properties to ensure consistent taxation rules and equitable property tax treatment. In particular, this affects certain Crown lease assessments associated with parks and recreation areas.

Finally, the bill will allow for clarification of the administration of the linear assessment process.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of the Northern Lights health region annual report 2003-04, the Alberta Cancer Board annual report 2003-04, and the Alberta Mental Health Board annual report 2003-04.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table with the Assembly the appropriate number of copies of three annual reports. The first is the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission 2003-2004 annual report. The second document is the Charitable Gaming in Alberta review 2003-2004. Finally, pursuant to the Horse Racing Alberta Act I would like to table today the Horse Racing Alberta 2003 annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a document from the Epp family in Red Deer in support of Bill 202, PCAD. This document states that all five members of this family "have suffered unspeakable pain and grief and trauma" as a result of the drug and alcohol addictions of their daughter and sister that began when she was 13 years old, when she was a bright and gifted straight-A student.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. Both of these documents have been uncovered by American authorities, and they're in regard to Enron's activities in Alberta through Project Stanley. The first is a backgrounder that was prepared on behalf of the company after the Competition Bureau had initiated an investigation of certain transactions involving Enron and Powerex during the period from June to October of 1999.

The second tabling is again from Enron's legal advisors to some of their operators in regard to Project Stanley, and they're asking the question: were the Project Stanley tapes destroyed?

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table four documents that were e-mailed to my constituency office today. The first is from Frances Plaunt, the second from Bettie Yanota, the third from E. Seidle, and the fourth from Tom Yanota. They're all expressing concerns about the lack of consultation between the province and their community with regard to the 16th Avenue road expansion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to be tabling the appropriate number of copies of the front and second pages of that website that I referred to in question period. It's utilitiesconsumeradvocate.gov.ab.ca on the index page, and it refers to the consumer advocate's investigation into Project Stanley.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association entitled AUMA Frustrated with Provincial Funding Formula for Ambulance Transitioning. The release details AUMA's frustration with the funding formula proposed by the government after the confusion relative to the transfer of responsibilities for ambulance services.

The second I would like to table is the appropriate number of copies of the Far Side cartoon by Gary Larson entitled The Real Reason Dinosaurs Went Extinct. It shows, of course, dinosaurs smoking. Government members may wish to take note.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General pursuant to the Legal Profession Act: the Alberta Law Foundation 31st annual report, 2004, for the fiscal year ended March 31; the Alberta Law Foundation audited financial statements and other financial information for the year ended March 31, 2004.

head: Statement by the Speaker
Committees of the Whole House

The Speaker: Hon. members, in just a few seconds I'm going to say, "Orders of the Day," and then something really neat is going to happen for the new members. The Clerk will then say, "Committee"; the Speaker will depart. A lot of members ask, "Why is it the Speaker has to leave?" other than the Speaker really likes the fact that he has to leave. So I've done some research just to give you some of these historical vignettes.

In 1641 in Great Britain during a Parliament that was called a Long Parliament, a particular individual was appointed Chairman of Committees so as to get him out of the way so that he might not obstruct the ordinary business of the House by too much speaking. So that was a pretty neat thing. In those days the Speaker was too often the spy of the King, so it was considered that if you wanted to get rid of him at certain times, this could be best done by turning the House into a committee and putting some other member into the chair.

From another book, The House Was My Home:

Then the committee system came into being and work was sent out to committees of Members to be dealt with and reported back. The Members still felt a sense of restriction imposed by the formal rules of procedure in the House until some parliamentary genius suggested that if the Speaker were to leave the Chair and the Mace be removed from the Table the whole House would then become a committee and could proceed under the more informal rules which the Members found so useful in the committees established to act outside the House . . .

[As a matter of fact] committees of the whole House, to consider important subjects such as money bills [in Great Britain], were first recorded in 1607, when it was affirmed for the first time that if Mr Speaker were absent the whole House might be a committee, to consider the details of a Bill.

But at that time the Speaker did not necessarily have to leave the Chamber. That really didn't evolve until about 200 years ago, but it was a great evolution.

So you've now become a little more informed.

In a minute or two you can get up and walk about, and you can visit somebody on the other side of the House, and you can doff jackets and things like that.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. As the Speaker indicated to you, this is an informal session. However, for any member who wishes to speak, you have to be at your own chair to be recognized to speak, but you can move around in the Assembly at this stage.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2005-06
Offices of the Legislative Assembly,
Government, and Lottery Fund

The Deputy Chair: Would anyone like to begin debate on the interim supply? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Only insofar, Mr. Chairman, as to put forward that, as is the normal practice of the House, of course, the estimates which were voted last year, supply which was voted last year through the appropriation bill, cease as of the end of March of this year. So interim supply is necessary in order to allow government to pay its staff and to provide the grants funding that we provide to government-supported organizations such as schools and health authorities and others around the province. It's a normal and routine manner with which to ensure that the life of the province goes on insofar as it's supported by the citizens through their government.

Interim supply that's being requested at this point in time is basically a rough estimate of the first part of the year and in some cases slightly more than that for a department where grant funding is paid out early in the year. Of course, the fullness of the discussion around supply and the fullness of support of supply will come as the budget is tabled and we move into Committee of Supply with respect to the regular estimates.

So I'd encourage the House to support interim supply estimates so that as we get into the fullness of debate at Committee of Supply for each department, as this House well knows we will, the ongoing operations of government through schools, hospitals, the maintenance of roads, and all the other things which are necessary to provide the infrastructure and capital and human support for Albertans continue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and get the opportunity to participate in the discussion, in the debate in regard to interim supply estimates for 2005-2006. Certainly, everyone recognizes that the government has to receive interim funding. We can describe this as normal and routine, but many citizens in this province do not consider this government's spending normal nor routine, and we cannot be cavalier with government spending.

Since I have become a member of this House, government spending on the total budget has increased from roughly $14 billion to $22 billion. As I've said many times before, we still have the same problems in regard to access to health care, closure of public schools, roads, bridges, sewers, the maintenance and the construction of our infrastructure. So we have to be careful whenever we describe things as normal and routine.

Perhaps this interim supply, the amounts to be voted here, Mr. Chairman, would not nearly be so large if this government would plan their annual budget so that the budget would be tabled or presented to the Legislative Assembly before the end of the fiscal year. Now, I don't know if that is too much to ask, but I know that in some fiscal years that has been accomplished. Now, this year, for reasons that are not known to this member, that's not going to happen. Certainly, this is a rough estimate, and when we use the words "rough estimate" to describe a budget process, it makes one want to have a closer look at this list of interim supply estimates. Mr. Chairman, whenever we use rough estimating for budgets, there can be problems.

I don't want to go back to a time in recent history when this Progressive Conservative government used to use special warrants to fund their habits, but that use of special warrants was, in my view, because maybe our estimates were rough. Maybe our budget estimates need to be refined. But we have to be cognizant of the fact and all hon. members of this Assembly recognize that we do only have one taxpayer, and we have to show a great deal of respect and restraint. As this budget process, which the hon. Minister of Advanced Education earlier explained to the House, is going to unfold, and we're going to get to the main estimates of each department eventually, we have to have a look at what we're doing here with interim supply amounts to be voted.

If we look at the schedule, we're looking at support for the Legislative Assembly of $12 million; the office of the Auditor General, 4 and a half million dollars. The Ombudsman is to get $700,000. The Chief Electoral Officer is to get $700,000. Meanwhile, in supplementary estimates we have an amount that was to be voted because of the Senate elections that was greater than what was previously estimated. That Senate election must have been one of those rough estimates that we were talking about earlier. We have $100,000 for the Ethics Commissioner, and we have the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to receive $1.1 million. That would be a total in the LAO budget of a little bit over $19 million.

Now, for the government here it's all neatly listed alphabetically, A through S. The Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development department is to get $10.6 million. Advanced Education is to get two amounts. The first is for expense and equipment/inventory purchases of $255 million and nonbudgetary disbursements of $20 million, so that's a total of $275 million. Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is to receive $160 million. Children's Services is to receive close to $350 million.

Community Development. I'm sure that as time progresses, we're going to see the Community Development budget scrutinized with a great deal of interest by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The hon. member has been in his office, I noticed, poring diligently over not only the previous annual report from that department, Mr. Chairman, but he's gone back four or possibly five fiscal years by now. It'll be interesting to see what is uncovered in that department. But at the moment that department is to receive through interim supply an amount exceeding $100 million.

Economic Development. Now, that's not the department that has the aircraft fleet. No; I'm mistaken. That's Infrastructure. Economic Development uses the airplane on occasion. Economic Development is to get $14 million.

Education, a very important and sometimes unappreciated department, is to receive over $660 million. Energy is to receive in interim supply $59 million. Environment is to receive a little bit over $22 million. I don't know what the total budget will be for the Department of Environment, but I would think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be significant. Executive Council is to receive at this time over $5 million. Finance in two budgetary items is to receive over $31 million.

Gaming is a player, certainly, in interim supply. For expenses there is going to be an amount allocated of $38 million and lottery fund payments of $316 million. I would love an update on just exactly where these lottery fund payments will be going in the first quarter of the fiscal year. That's a lot of money. I'm sure some of it is going to the department of health, some would be going to Children's Services. When and where in those departments would that money be going?

Government Services is to receive over $17 million. Now, Government Services is a very interesting department. Certainly, in question period earlier today there was a discussion about the role of Government Services and the role of the consumer advocate. There was also a discussion in question period today about grizzly bears in hibernation, and there would be those that would say that the consumer advocate is in hibernation, and there are those that would say that they hope the consumer advocate comes out of hibernation. The consumer advocate: I don't know whether it's a shared office. I don't know exactly how this works. Some view this as a conflict. "Some" would include this hon. member. The Government Services assistant deputy minister or deputy minister, I forget which, is one and the same as the consumer advocate. I think that if it's an important job, which some people think it is, there should be a dedicated individual hired to do one job.

Now, I'm certain that the consumer advocate is not going to be paid out of this amount of $17 million because, of course, the budget for the consumer advocate is coming from the ratepayers, from the natural gas customers in this province and the customers of electricity. There is a little bit of a levy, a tax, you name it, on consumers. They're paying for this office, and this is getting to be, as was mentioned in question period, a very expensive office.

Now, Health and Wellness is to receive in the next short period of time over $2 billion. Certainly, we want to ensure that our hospitals and our regional health authorities are receiving adequate funding. At this time perhaps we could get an update from the government members as to exactly how that budget process works. Do the health authorities present their budgets in advance? If so, how far in advance before the provincial budget is set? I think it would be interesting to find out how many of the health authorities are setting their budgets well in advance before the province sets the global budget.

Human Resources and Employment is to receive $136 million, again for expense and equipment/inventory purchases.

Infrastructure and Transportation is to receive – oh, here we go – expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $485 million. I hope that they're not going to buy a new airplane with that, maybe a jet. I hope not. Why not? Because there's no need of any more aircraft.

If I could make a suggestion to the government, perhaps you should reduce the size of that fleet and maybe hire or buy an air ambulance that could take sick Albertans from rural Alberta into Edmonton and Calgary to receive medical treatment in a timely fashion. We could reduce the size of the government fleet and increase the number of air ambulances, maybe a helicopter, perhaps, or maybe a fixed-wing aircraft that would be suitable for that purpose.

Infrastructure and Transportation is receiving a lot of money, and one of the areas I certainly hope that they don't spend any money is on new airplanes. But I certainly hope that they do maintain the ones we've got, for obvious reasons. I wouldn't want any of them to be crashing or have to stay at an airport in another province or another country and have to charter back because that, as we all know, can get really expensive.

Now, Innovation and Science is to receive $35 million. I don't believe the SuperNet is involved with Innovation and Science. That has been moved over to the RAGE department.

International and Intergovernmental Relations is below Innovation and Science, and they are to receive $3 million.

The Justice department is to receive $67 million. Now, the Justice Department is certainly not involved in the construction of the courthouse in Calgary. That would be Infrastructure and Transportation. Justice is most certainly involved in the planning of it, but they're not paying for it. Okay. There are in supplementary estimates amounts for the courthouse in Calgary, but perhaps we'll get to that later on this afternoon. So Justice is going to get $67 million.

Municipal Affairs is to receive $31,600,000.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency is to receive, to my astonishment, $66 million. I think I need glasses. I saw in the quarterly report that was released where the RAGE department had received I believe it was $37 million. In a very short period of time that department has been very efficient at spending tax dollars, and now we see that it is to receive an interim supply amount of over $66 million. What are we going to use that money for? Certainly, in question period this afternoon the only file that seemed to be open on the hon. minister's desk, as I understood it, was the SuperNet. There was no talk of studying any restructuring or government efficiency. It was just, "I'm going to deal with one file," and that was it. So I don't know what all this money would be for, and I would really appreciate an explanation at this time.

After the last election when the government caucus grew, the size of cabinet grew. This is not a government that is concerned about reducing the size of government, as some would be led to believe, because certainly the number of government members increased in 2001 and the size of the cabinet increased dramatically. Well, the government shrank in the election last fall. Even the odd cabinet minister lost their seat, yet we see that, again, the size of government continues to expand, this time not by seven or eight ministries but by one, this RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I think that when taxpayers get a look at this amount, they may be enraged with the RAGE ministry for spending far too much money without any adequate explanation as to why.

Now, Seniors and Community Supports is to receive $347 million. Certainly, there have been some initiatives recently by this government to finally admit that some of the past government policies have reduced significantly the disposable income of many of Alberta's seniors. If a person or a couple has been retired for 10 years, 15 years their disposable income, unfortunately, has not kept up – the cost of utilities, the cost of insurance – and that has really affected a lot of seniors. We want to encourage seniors to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible.

The government has sort of admitted that, yes, they have been maybe a little bit stingy. I think we can afford to give our seniors an adequate disposable income through the Alberta seniors' benefits without breaking this province. When these individuals retired, they didn't know that this government was going to, for instance, proceed with electricity deregulation, and a power bill now is a big expense at the end of the month for many retired seniors. They come into the constituency office, I see them in the coffee shop, and they tell me that, Mr. Chairman. If we can use some of this money to increase the Alberta seniors' benefits, I think it would be wisely spent and would be respectful of the citizens who helped build this province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour to have the opportunity as well to speak to the interim supply estimates. In my mind, we shouldn't even be here having this discussion today. We should be discussing a budget today, not interim supply.

I understand from previous Legislatures that we normally sit starting somewhere around the second week of February. Nobody has yet made clear to any of those of us on this side of the House why we were not here the second week of February. As you know, there are many, many new MLAs in the Legislature this time around. Elected November 22, we were anxious and ready and willing and able to go to work. We've been chomping at the bit literally for months now.

Obviously, one of the first tasks that we look forward to is debating the budget, planning the fiscal priorities for this province for the coming year. Here we are two weeks away from the end of the fiscal year, and we don't even have a preliminary budget in front of us to begin debating.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud indicated that this is a normal process. My point would be, Mr. Chairman, that this does not have to be a normal process, and in fact it's not necessarily a normal process in other jurisdictions. It certainly has become a normal process here in Alberta.

We've got a one-week break coming up at the end of next week. We're going to take a break for spring break, and I understand that many members are looking forward to that, but I question whether or not that's appropriate given the fact that we don't have a budget.

I think we should be here, debating the budget as opposed to going skiing or whatever it is that some of the other members might be planning on doing. I know that I'll be working on budget preparations.

Mr. Chairman, after three and a half weeks of work we're going to take a one-week holiday. Now, I don't know, but in my mind that seems an awful lot like the severance package that Mr. West received for working only six months as the chief of staff and ended up with a huge severance.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. R. Miller: It's very relevant, I'm afraid. Three and a half weeks of work, and here we are getting a one-week holiday. I honestly don't believe we should be taking a break at all.

Now, it's amazing to me, Mr. Chairman, that we're asked to look at interim supply estimates with one or two lines only per department. There's absolutely no information there that tells us what this money might be used for, and in fact as we rise to speak in this debate in committee today, we're left to guess at what the various ministries and their ministers might be wanting the money for. I don't know what you would expect us to tell our constituents when we go back to the constituency on Thursday afternoon or Friday and meet them in the office, and they're going to ask us: "Where is the budget? We're almost at the end of the fiscal year, and we're wondering what the government is going to spend the money on this coming year."

An Hon. Member: They're not going to ask you that question. You're not in government.

Mr. R. Miller: They do ask us because it's their money. You know, the hon. members across the way, Mr. Chairman, perhaps should remember that this is not money that belongs to the government. This is money that belongs to the taxpayer, and I can assure the one hon. member that every single time I meet with a constituent, they express concerns to me about their tax dollars and the way that their tax dollars are being used. So for somebody from across the floor to suggest that it's not my money because I'm in opposition, he's missing the boat entirely. This is money that belongs to every single taxpayer, and they have a right to know how the government plans to use it over the coming fiscal year.

As I say, here we are two weeks away from the end of this year, and they're asking us for 5 billion and some dollars without any more than a single line in terms of telling us what they might be using this for.

Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure that I'm going to do what my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar did and go through line by line, although I might. Certainly, as the Finance critic I wonder about finance in particular, and I see in here – I always find it interesting that I get up to mention finance, and the minister gets up to leave – that there's $32.3 million.

Mr. Dunford: Point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Dunford: You know what? I don't know what the item is, but we're not to comment on people's attendance or nonattendance in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Citation?

Mr. Dunford: You know the answer.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair did not hear those comments, but if they were made, they are not appropriate. As a convention we do not comment on a fellow member's presence or absence in the Assembly. Okay?

Mr. R. Miller: My apologies to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman.

Debate Continued

Mr. R. Miller: As I was saying, $32.3 million estimated for the Finance ministry: a simple two-line explanation. There's nothing to tell us what it's for. Now, I'm wondering, and I had hoped to be able to ask the Finance minister – perhaps I will later – if 1.4 million of those dollars . . .

Mr. Dunford: He just did it again.

Mr. R. Miller: I did not. I said that I may ask the minister. Mr. Chairman, I hope you were listening this time.

Chair's Ruling

Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, please. Please speak through the chair. You have to have some decorum in this Assembly. Although we are at committee stage, I think there has to be decorum. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the floor.

Debate Continued

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure if yourself or anybody else would like to check Hansard, I indicated that I may later ask the minister this question.

I'm hoping that $1.4 million is included in this $32.3 million so that we can explain to Albertans through some sort of an advertising program why they should feel good about being asked to roll over and take their medicine by this government and the auto insurance industry as we continue to pay record high auto insurance premiums and the insurance industry continues to collect record high profits. Last year, as you well know – and it's in the supplementary estimates, which we will be debating later today – this same ministry spent $1.4 million trying to explain to Albertans, with a very slick advertising campaign I might add . . .

Mr. MacDonald: How much did it cost?

Mr. R. Miller: One point four million dollars, Hughie.

. . . to try to convince Albertans that the insurance reforms were a good idea. Maybe it's just me being cynical, but it also happened to be just before a provincial election. So I'm really hoping that there's $1.4 million included in this $32.3 million that might go now towards Albertans to help them feel good about the fact that the insurance industry is making record profits at their expense.

Now, someone will have to explain to me – I've said it several times, and I don't mind saying it again. I am relatively new to this process. I do not understand what nonbudgetary disbursements mean in the Ministry of Finance. I know there's a two-line explanation in the estimates that talks about "non-budgetary disbursements consist of the exchange of cash for another form of asset, or for the reduction of a liability." I note here that out of the $32.3 million about one-third is for nonbudgetary disbursements. I'm sorry. I just don't understand what that means, and I'm hoping that at some point somebody will have the opportunity to explain that to me.

There are a couple of other ministries that I flagged because they create some interest for me. The ministry of health as an example: a little more than $2 billion for expense and equipment and $5.6 million on capital investment. Now, I'm curious. We had some discussion earlier today about the health symposium that's going on in May. Certainly, there was discussion of the fact that this is an invitation-only event, and I believe the Premier said that there were some 500 invited guests, hand-picked by the government. I'd like to know just how much of this money is going to put on that event.

Albertans have expressed an incredible amount of interest in health care and are very, very concerned about whatever the plans might be by this government for the future of health care, whether it be a third way or a second way or no way at all. I'd be very curious to know just how much money that particular event is going to cost. Again, Mr. Chairman, we're not going to find out now until probably sometime in the middle of April, which is shortly before that symposium takes place, how much it's going to cost. I think it's unfair to my constituents and to the rest of Albertans to be left in the dark on that particular expense. They'd like to know what it's costing.

I'm going to echo the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this one, but I had exactly the same thought: Restructuring and Government Efficiency, $66.2 million, and this afternoon the minister stood in the House and told us that the only file that he's concentrating on right now at all is the SuperNet. Given that this is an estimate that's supposed to run only to the beginning of June, $66.2 million seems like an awful lot of money for one file, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar suggested. I'm wondering if we shouldn't perhaps call it the supersize Internet as opposed to the SuperNet because somebody is certainly supersizing the budget there, Mr. Chairman.

There were a couple of others here that certainly caught my eye. Advanced Education, $255 million for expense and equipment/inventory purchases. I have no idea what that might be. Certainly advanced education is a concern. I heard it time and time again at the door. People are very concerned about the future of their children, especially if they have school-age children or children that might be approaching university age, as I do myself, Mr. Chairman.

I have two children that are approaching university age, and certainly postsecondary education is something that I'm very, very concerned about, and many of my constituents are as well. You know, actually, Friday afternoon I have a meeting with a constituent who has a concern about a high school student, a child of theirs, and this is going to most likely be a concern of theirs as well. It's just really, really hard for me to sit down and try to explain to somebody why we're being asked to approve $5 billion, and there's nothing more than a single line to address that.

Now, a couple of other comments. I mentioned earlier that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud talked about this being a normal practice and a usual practice of this Assembly to approve interim estimates, and I couldn't help but notice a report from Canadian Business and Current Affairs, the Canadian Parliamentary Review, that last year in Saskatchewan, which is the lovely province next door to ours, a sister province of ours, in their spring session for the very, very first time in that province's history they approved some interim funding because they had yet to pass the budget. Interestingly enough, in that particular case they actually had a budget before them which they were deliberating. They had the information in front of them but did not have time to pass the budget before the end of the fiscal year, so they had to move to interim funding. But this was the first time in that province's history.

We've talked about the centennial a lot, Mr. Chairman. You will know, as will other members, that Saskatchewan is as old as Alberta. Now, I wish I had had time this afternoon to check and see how many times in Alberta's history we've had interim supplies, but obviously it's certainly more than once. I was able to look back through several of the most recent years, and it seems year after year after year, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud suggested, interim supply is a normal practice for this government. It certainly is not and has not been a normal practice in Saskatchewan, so that would cause me a great deal of concern as well. Now, I would like to submit that maybe Saskatchewan has some practices that this Finance minister and this province should be looking at very carefully.

Well, I'm at about the stage, Mr. Chairman, where I'm going to start doing as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar did and go through line by line. The first thing that appears on here is $12 million for support to the Legislative Assembly. Like most working stiffs in this province I need a paycheque, so I'm not going to question too seriously the $12 million that's being asked for there, because my wife would probably give me a hard time when I came home tonight if I didn't have a paycheque coming.

Office of the Auditor General, $4.5 million. Office of the Ombudsman: it looks like this gentleman is actually quite frugal. It's only $700,000 between now and the 1st of June. Office of the Chief Electoral Officer, $700,000. I'm not sure what they're doing right now over at that office, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps they're still counting ballots or something. I'm really not sure what that might be. Office of the Ethics Commissioner: I'm surprised, quite frankly, that that budget isn't a little bigger than $100,000.

Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner: well, $1.1 million to operate that office for the next two months. I can understand that because it certainly appears that they have a very big job on their plate in terms of FOIP legislation and the work that they do limiting access to information by Albertans, it seems, at every turn. That's been quite evident, most recently especially with attempts to get information on the flight logs with the government aircraft.

Now, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, $10.6 million. I would like to think that some of that money might be contemplated to go towards holding some public hearings on the Métis harvesting rights, although it doesn't appear as if that's the case. I do understand that there is a meeting coming up in Bonnyville soon, and I applaud the minister for holding that meeting. I wish there had been many more across the province. Perhaps, contemplated in this $10.6 million, Mr. Chairman, that's what the minister is planning.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, $160.6 million. It's an awful big number. I'm not sure what's in there. I'm hoping that there may be some BSE relief in there for our farmers. Certainly, the federal government came through this week with some more relief for farmers, and I'm hoping that the Alberta government might do so as well.

Community Development, $90 million between now and the 1st of June. Again, a pretty big number, although I understand that we have some celebrations coming up somewhere around the May long weekend, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps some of that $90 million is earmarked for the royal visit that is contemplated.

Economic Development, $14 million between now and the 1st of June. I'm not sure, again, what that might be for. We had a motion that moved through the House yesterday, through second reading and into committee. I think it passed committee, actually, and is now at third reading. It's the motion on the hotel tax. That money is being raised through the private sector, so I'm not sure what the $14 million might be for there. It would be good to know.

Just going through here. Five point three million dollars for Executive Council. Again, being new to the game, I'm not sure. I expect that means those in the front row across from us, and again it's a pretty big number. Gaming, $316 million for lottery fund payments. I'm not sure what that is for, if that's winnings that are being paid back to people after the money has been collected or what. Again, an awful big number.

Health and Wellness. Well, Mr. Chairman, $2.044 billion for Health and Wellness. I have to be honest with you. I'm a small businessman, and I've told people that when I look at numbers as Finance critic, I often have to add three or four or even five zeros to the numbers that I'm used to dealing with, and $2.044 billion is a very, very big number. It's bigger than anything I've ever dealt with before.

I think it is a recognition by this government of the concerns that the citizens have for health care, but then we heard some very good questions this afternoon on health care and the private delivery of some services. In fact, the minister indicated that she was quite comfortable with farming out surgeries to private companies that charge more to the government than we're able to deliver those same services for through a public system. As much as I'm in favour of giving Albertans the very best health care possible, I'm wondering if that number has to be as big as it is there. Maybe if we were delivering services through the publicly funded system, which many studies have shown to be more efficient, perhaps that number could be a little smaller than it is in this case.

3:30

Infrastructure and Transportation. Well, I have a particular concern with that, Mr. Chairman, because my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford happens to encompass the interchange at 23rd Avenue and Calgary Trail. As you well know, that particular interchange is in the news a lot, especially as it regards the $1 billion that was supposed to flow through to Edmonton in infrastructure payments. Now that $1 billion appears to have morphed into $750 million, and there is some concern that perhaps the construction of that interchange may be delayed as a result of that lesser amount of funding that's coming through to the city of Edmonton.

Innovation and Science: $35.4 million.

Mr. Chairman, I believe my time is up, and I'll be happy to complete running through the book at a later point. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was listening intently to the hon. member's dissertation there, and I wanted to correct him on a couple of things as it related to the agriculture portfolio.

He mentioned that the federal government has come through recently with more aid for our producers, and if that is indeed true, I would love to see the announcement that was made for that because the only announcement that I am aware of that was made was a repeat announcement of the $50 million that the federal government had committed to the beef marketing initiative. The only reason, I would like to point out to the hon. member, they did that was on the heels of our $30 million contribution to that same fund in order to diversify our markets. I would like to point that out to the hon. member because he may be able to help me with lobbying his federal cousins for some additional funding that was promised to us in some way, shape, or form on the other ruminants in our province.

We had a question this afternoon in the House on the other cervid industry in this province. It should be noted that this government has stepped up to the plate and offered a per head payment as well as marketing dollars for the other ruminant industry based on some indications from the federal government that they were going to actually step up to the plate and help that industry out as well. To date – to date – Mr. Chairman, we've not seen any dollars in that respect.

Another item that I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, is the $38 million announcement which we have made to tackle the research component of this crisis that we are involved in, in better understanding BSE. My understanding is that to date the federal government has not come forward with any matching funding in that, and I would love to have them come to the table with us on that one.

In addition, Mr. Chairman – and these are only a few of the things that come to mind as I sit listening in the House – we've already announced $7 million in research and development funding for the SRMs that are going to cause a serious problem for us in the province and are currently an issue. We would appreciate very much if the federal government would see fit to use some of their surplus to help out the producers in this province who are struggling. Quite frankly, Alberta is probably the best place to be in the cattle industry today given the crisis that's going on across the country and the supports that this government has provided to our industry.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the motion to approve the interim supply estimates for 2005-2006. I look at the document before us and am impressed with the numbers, first of all, the overall aggregate numbers just for the government departments. For one-sixth of the year, because these estimates are for two months, the months of April and May, into the next fiscal year, the total amount for 24 government departments that's being asked for approval for here is close to $5.52 billion. Multiply it by six because this is only for two months and if you were to use this as the average bimonthly expenditures, the total budget for these 24 departments would likely come close to $33 billion.

Now, it would seem to me, although I don't have the numbers before me – and that's why it would have been helpful if the Minister of Finance had provided last year's interim supply estimate numbers so that we could have a general idea about the relative increase or decrease of the money being asked for by each of the 24 departments and get some idea about, then, why that is the case. But that information is not there. Notwithstanding, it is the case that this budget if calculated on the basis of the average expenditure of $5.52 billion for every two months will come to about $33 billion or more.

I understand that for last year, the fiscal year that's just ending, 2004-05, the total amount would be close to perhaps $28 billion. So that's a huge increase if I'm correct in that. Then the increase is close to $5 billion or $5.5 billion over the previous year of $28 billion, and that amounts to about a 16 to 18 per cent increase. I'm just making these calculations in my head as I go along. It doesn't seem to make much sense when you have huge increases proposed by way of this interim supply. I'd like to ask the Minister of Finance if she would like to comment on this increase, and maybe she will have some justification for the very, very radically different numbers for this year than last year.

As I said, I can't help but simply make some estimates here. It would have been nice if we had last year's numbers mentioned there as part of the interim supply so that I wouldn't be accused later on of making wild guesses. That's all I'm left to do at this moment.

That is certainly something that's I think a concern since it's a huge amount of money as part of the next year's budget, which is not before us yet and won't be for, perhaps, another three to four weeks. Who knows? Maybe the Minister of Finance will tell us the exact date on which that budget will be coming down so that finally Albertans and we here in this Assembly will have an opportunity to take a close look at next year's budget and the government's plans to spend taxpayers' dollars in different ways.

Regardless of when we get the budget and when we finally have a vote on it so that the government has the legitimate right to then go ahead and start spending that money, close to 5 and a half billion dollars are being asked for our approval right now without any details available to us with respect to how this money is going to be spent as part of the next fiscal year. I don't think that's an appropriate way to seek this Assembly's approval to spend such huge sums of money without accounting in any detail as to where this money is going.

When you look at the different departments, the one that strikes me as the one that deserves, you know, the closest of scrutinies is the new Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Other members have spoken on the supply estimates requested by different departments, so I won't go into details on any of those, but this one is a department that seemed to be from the very, very beginning, from the get-go, terribly redundant.

This government has been busy restructuring this government since 1993, yet come 2005-06 it is asking for $66.2 million just for the first two months of the next fiscal year for this department's expenditures. Multiply that by six and the restructuring ministry, which I said is to me redundant, useless, not needed, will be spending between $375 million and $400 million on something that this government has been busy doing for the last 13 years without the help of such a ministry. It looks like a make-work arrangement, one that will cost Albertans dearly, to the tune of $400 million. It could be that much, although it's difficult to be exact on this.

So I think there's a need for this Legislature and certainly for us to raise questions on this. I'm sure the minister responsible or the Minister of Finance will have some comments to make in response to the questions that are being raised here, some of these by me as I look through the different estimates.

I have questions about the Seniors and Community Supports, which I suppose is responsible now for AISH recipients. I stand to be corrected if that's not the case. In the throne speech the government made some promises with respect to making adjustments to the AISH payments and to restoring seniors' benefits related to dental care and eye care. I'm wondering: if those benefits are the responsibility of the Department of Seniors and Community Supports, then what amount of this $347 million that are being requested for approval for the first two months of the fiscal would go towards increasing the AISH payments and the payments for restoration of seniors' benefits with respect to dental care and eye care?

Similarly, let me take one more case here, Advanced Education. Since the Minister of Advanced Education will be happy to answer some questions on this, let me pose some. There are $20.3 million under the nonbudgetary disbursements being asked for for the first two months of the next fiscal year, fiscal 2005-2006. Pro-rated annually that comes to about $121 million or more under nonbudgetary disbursements. Nonbudgetary disbursements are defined in this document, and the definition is very sparse, I must say: "consist of the exchange of cash for another form of asset" – that's one category – "or for the reduction of a liability."

Now, talking specifically about the interim supply, I wonder:

under these two categories of the nonbudgetary disbursements what's the proportion of the $20.3 million that's going to each? It's these kinds of questions that need to be addressed.

Also to the Minister of Advanced Education, as part of his Bill 1, I have a fear that the bureaucracy will grow in order to implement some of the proposals related to centralization of province-wide admission arrangements and for setting some common standards, the minister calls them, which is part of the language of the bill. What kind of new expenditures are being planned to pay for that necessary bureaucracy that will inevitably be spawning thanks to the proposal that he's making as part of his Bill 1?

So those are some specific questions here related to Advanced Education. I don't think there is room here to ask the minister because the departmental requisition here, this supply request, relates only to April and May while the academic year at the universities and colleges this year will not start until – the classes won't start until September 1. The academic year started, I suppose, on January 1. Are there any hints in this request that some of the money is being now asked for continuing, with the tuition freeze, into the 2005-2006 academic year? If so, it would be nice to know what's roughly the amount that's being requested in order to continue to implement the tuition freeze, or is it not on the table at all?

I think the minister should be contrite on this. Over 80,000 Albertans will be enrolling next year, again, into our postsecondary technical institutes, colleges, and universities, and they're expecting and they're hoping that this government will continue with a tuition freeze, but they want to be assured about this. I would like the minister, perhaps, to give some signals here in response to the monies that he's asking for as part of his department's expenditures, whether that includes that consideration of continuing the freeze for those students.

I'd much rather be asking these questions in relation to the debate on the budget, but the budget has been delayed so far into the future that these questions must be asked even though the budget is not before us. The fact that the budget is not before us is not the fault of the members of the Assembly. It falls squarely on the shoulders of this government, which is finding it very hard this year to come up with a budget, which normally is one of the major tasks of the Assembly before the spring session. We're dealing with tens of billions of dollars of taxpayers' money, and we still don't know when the government plans to spend that money are going to be available to the public and to this Assembly.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would take my seat, and I will give other hon. members the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to get up today and defend the supplementary estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness. At the outset I want to remind the hon. member opposite from Edmonton-Rutherford, who spoke about the expenses, that in the introduction of the bill yesterday, the Minister of Finance clearly illuminated why the interim supply estimates were as high as they were. Although the hon. member opposite made much comment about the $2,044,200,000 for expense and equipment and inventory purchases, by definition this expense includes "salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets and debt servicing costs." In short, Health employs just less than a hundred thousand employees, and for two months this amount helps run the health system, for April and May. So an extraordinary wild cost? No, of course not. It is the responsible governance and payment through the regional health authorities for the salaries of people that serve the patients of this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the supplementary estimates that are being debated, I will comment later, but that I think was a reference point and a suggestion as well that we should be discussing how much would be spent on this year's international symposium. I'd like to remind the hon. member opposite that although it was not a budgeted amount for this year's budget, we are doing our best within the resources available in the administration of the Department of Health and Wellness to provide supports for the symposium, to make sure that we have provided monies for those 500-some-odd people that will attend. They will represent every stakeholder group in the health-related field, from opticians to ophthalmologists, physicians, nurses, licensed practical nurses, regional health authorities. The members of the opposition have been invited to attend as well.

Mr. Chairman, although I'm aware that this attendance might run into conflict with activities in this House, clearly it is being arranged to be primarily convenient for those members of the public, including physicians, who will evaluate the effectiveness of those treatments. So, quite honestly, the best practices that will be displayed have been very carefully selected, and we are managing that symposium as parsimoniously as possible. It will be located in Calgary at the Westin. The costs that I've seen that have been advanced thus far are frugal indeed. I'm not able now to report what the totals will be, but I will report at some time later.

Mr. Chairman, another reference point from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was that the minister, if I refer to the Blues, was quite comfortable with expenditures that were made by a private provider for health care service. Those were not words that I stated. I said that evaluation of that had not come forward.

What I am comfortable about and what I can assure this Assembly my comfort relative to is that 500 people who had pain and suffering, who had endured long waiting lists – we were able to alleviate their discomfort by giving them an opportunity to advance their surgery in a fashion that made sure that they were attended to. From many of those people I have had either verbal comment or comments from people within the city of Calgary who are family members associated with those particular patients who have said that that was the best thing that happened because it gave them an opportunity to go back to work.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think there's more to be said on this interim supply amount to be voted, but this particular reference point is for management of the health care system. At some point later when you want to speak about additional operating and capital funding for the years 2004-05, I will identify how we expended the additional funding of $350 million provided to the health authorities to defer or defray their accumulated deficits and provide additional operating funding to enable them to advance the cause on waiting lists.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise in the Legislature today to speak to interim supply. The focus of interim supply is to make sure the government has operating grants when they have not yet completed the budgeting process. Even when this government has a budget, they end up overspending. How foolish can that be for a government that cannot organize its time? Once again they want us to write a blank cheque without any detail. It tells us that there is progress in place to start planning, and that's what's critical if we are going to be fiscally responsible and fiscally prudent in this province. We have got to signal them so that the proper budget planning can be undertaken so that we can have a reflection of the needs of the agencies that are going to be doing the expenditure planning on our behalf.

Mr. Chairman, last year Dr. Nicol said this.

I guess one of the things that's really difficult as we go about talking with Albertans about interim supply is focusing on the kind of debate around: what expenditures are there? I know that the normal answer to that is: well, wait till the budget.

And it's still the same thing today.

But if we are supposed to work on this judiciously and in the spirit of appropriate government recognition of expenditures, we need to have the detail that's associated with being able to say that these are the types of expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, a little further he said:

The question that comes up in my community most of all, you know, is: what is going to happen to the expenditures for seniors? The seniors lost both their dental and optical benefits . . .

And it's still the same.

. . . or some of them, in recent budgets. Will they be restored through this program?

This is the question.

Is that going to be part of the focus that will be there for seniors?

The focus also that comes up in a number of other discussions would be: will there be dollars in the budget and are they included in this interim supply to initiate and expand the investigation of complaints of all Albertans about abuse of elders? You know, the elder abuse situation is really getting to be critical when we look at it from the point of view of the number of concerns that come to our offices and get raised about: are seniors getting proper care? Are seniors being looked after appropriately in their homes and in care facilities?

These are the questions.

These are the kinds of things that individuals want to know and want answers to.

When we see just major lines with departmental expenditures, we don't know where these are going, so how can we comment on them appropriately when individuals ask us?

If my constituents ask me about this interim supply, I think they will laugh at the government. Here I have the list of interim supply for the fiscal year ending this year, March 31, 2006. It's a huge, huge amount. My friend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar explained all the departments right from the beginning. It's really a huge amount and without any details.

I want to ask the Minister of Community Development, because I'm the critic for Community Development, to see the breakdown of the $90 million which the government mentioned in this supply list, $90 million they are spending on expenses and equipment/inventory purchases, whatever they call it. How much money will be spent on the programs or the services? Is it possible to receive a detailed breakdown of how the money found under each line item is going to be spent?

These are just a few questions I raise, but there are definitely many, many more questions to ask. Maybe I will ask in detail when the question period comes. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

4:00

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, well, well, where to start. I remember one time coming home from a first day at a new job where there was a lot of work ahead, and I said to my wife: I don't know where to start. And she said: Start anywhere. So I shall.

I'll start, Mr. Chairman, with paper. I'll start with the incredible amount of duplicate paper that we get in this job. I'll start with the fact that every morning we start our caucus meeting with Hansard from last night and the Order Paper and the Votes and Proceedings and a full copy of the bills, and then we get it all again later on the same day. Actually, I guess, we get the bills for the first time here in the House, and then we get those again the next day. You know, we must in this Legislature, in this House, be responsible for the clear-cutting of a significant part of the British Columbia forest with all the paper we go through, and I was wondering how to bring this up.

Then, I noticed that with all this paper that we duplicate, all this paper that we produce, for this we get a seven-page document proposing to have us approve the spending of $5.5 billion with no supporting evidence whatsoever. Line items, that's all.

I know I'm starting to go over some of the same areas that some of my colleagues have already touched on here today, but I just don't understand a process that would ask the members of this House to approve an interim budget for a government that has yet to produce a budget for this fiscal year when they've had so much time. There's no justification in here whatsoever, some half-baked explanation of what expense and equipment/inventory purchases are and what nonbudgetary disbursements are and what capital investment is.

Then we get a line like in Advanced Education: $255 million for two months' worth of expense and equipment/inventory purchases and $20,300,000 for nonbudgetary disbursements for two months. I have no idea what those are. I mean, I know this. I know that our universities collectively have about a billion dollar infrastructure deficit, but I have no idea whether any of this money is going to solve that problem.

I know that one of the reasons why our universities and most of our colleges are forecasting running deficits or are having problems meeting their budgets is because they're paying astronomically high utility bills compared to what they used to have to pay. But I don't know whether any of the money in here for Advanced Education is going to help that. I know that the minister has talked about wanting to improve accessibility and wanting to improve affordability and wanting to improve the quality of postsecondary education. I cannot read from this whether any of this goes to support any of that.

Although this adds up to $275 million of, I guess, routine expenses in the Department of Advanced Education for two months' worth of work, multiply that by six, I can see that it does not total up to $3 billion for the postsecondary education endowment fund or a billion dollars for an increase in the Alberta heritage scholarship fund or half a billion dollars for the ingenuity fund. I mean, there has been much talk by this government over the last several weeks about how much they're reinvesting in postsecondary education, but I can't see if any of the reinvestment is in here. In fact, it would seem to suggest that it's not.

The reason why I bring this up, Mr. Chairman, is because when we ask for details, when we press for details, whether it's in question period, whether it's in news conferences outside this House, wherever it is, the answer that comes back from the government benches is: stay tuned; wait for the budget. Well, okay. When are we going to see the budget?

We started this session of the Legislature, depending, I guess, on who's doing the calculating – my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said that the Legislature usually starts to sit the second week of February. My understanding is that it's usually right after the long weekend in February, the Family Day long weekend in February. Whichever it is, they've had at least an extra week if not an extra two weeks before the House went into session this time to do the grunt work on the budget.

Thank goodness we have spring break. Thank goodness we have Easter break. It gives them another week to do the grunt work on the budget so that maybe in my lifetime we'll see the budget. I'm getting tired of waiting. Five billion dollars in here. They're asking us on trust, on faith, on blind faith, to approve their spending of $5.5 billion, which, times six, is $33 billion.

I know that the Minister of Finance scoffed at my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, I believe it was, when he did that math in his head.

Mrs. McClellan: I did not. I never scoffed at him.

Mr. Taylor: I know that the Minister of Finance says that she would never scoff. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor. The chair will be happy to recognize anybody else who wishes to participate in this debate. Please identify yourself to me. I will recognize you at the appropriate time.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hope we can continue a lively and spirited debate about this.

I would love to find out more about what this $5.5 billion is supposed to be spent on over the next two months. On behalf of the 33,000 constituents of Calgary-Currie I don't feel good approving on faith a government document that asks me to commit to spending 5.5 billion tax dollars over a two-month period. Projected across the entire year, that's $33 billion. That's a huge number. Now, maybe it's the right number. I'm not even going to suggest right now that it's out of line, provided the government will furnish for us some fundamental details as to how they intend to spend the money. They're not doing that.

It doesn't matter what department I speak of. I used Advanced Education as an example because I am the critic for that portfolio for the Official Opposition, and I think I'm a little better briefed in the activities of that department and that area, that issue, than I am on the other areas. That's why we have other members who are critics for other areas. But I submit to you that I could have picked any ministry here: RAGE, Sustainable Resource Development, Infrastructure and Transportation.

Infrastructure and Transportation: their budget for two months is well over $600 million, and only a fraction of that is for capital investment. Capital investment is described as "regardless of value: assets such as land; buildings; highways; roads; bridges; transportation and storage facilities; permanent accommodation," et cetera, et cetera, things that the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation ought to be concerned about, roads and schools and hospitals and public works and public buildings. That's one of the definitions of capital investment.

There's so much capital investment lacking in this province. An $8 billion infrastructure deficit, yet they're only putting $116,800,000 towards that in the next two months. You know, maybe that's the right number. Maybe that's a great start on a whole bunch of environmental impact assessments and other engineering studies that will lead us, you know, to a grand and golden future of infrastructure deficit making up. But I can't tell. I don't know. I just don't know.

I don't know if they're going to spend the money on the roads and the schools and the hospitals that this province and cities like Calgary and Edmonton and rural areas so desperately need or what they're going to do. I'd love to know why they spend so much more on expense and equipment/inventory purchases than they do on building roads and schools and hospitals and doing what that department is supposed to do. Again, no information, Mr. Chairman. No details. No explanation.

You know, during the election campaign the voters of Alberta were told in so many words by the Premier that election campaigns are really no place to talk about health care reform. Now my assessment is that with a seven-page document that purports to have us approve 5 and a half billion dollars in spending for two short months, we are being told by this government that the Assembly is no place to go into detail about how our tax dollars are spent.

This was a government, Mr. Chairman, that prided itself, that got elected in the first place, this particular incarnation of the government, on getting us out of debt, eliminating the deficit, balancing the budget, and responsible, frugal spending. Well, that was then; this is now. I would suggest that the next time they say anything about our federal Liberal cousins in Ottawa, they take a good, hard look in the mirror because the members opposite are the ones who like to spend like they do in Ottawa. They may not be tax-and-spend Conservatives, but that's only because they've got oil in the ground to make up for the fact that they don't have to take it out of your pocket in order to waste it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Hinman: I can barely hear you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't sure whether it was me or someone else that had the floor.

I appreciate the opportunity to stand and to participate in I guess it's called a debate on interim funding. The first thing that I'd like to address is the support to the Legislative Assembly. I received a lesson this morning on what they call good politics. I'd prefer to receive lessons on good government though. I have no desire to learn the shenanigans that can go on.

I'd like to see the details, and every member, I'm sure, is going to ask for this. Why do we vote on something that we receive no details on? Are we just fish? Are we just sheep that are supposed to walk over? Or maybe we're down at the buffalo jump, and we're supposed to land and have our heads smashed in. I'm not sure. Because that's what it would take to vote on a paper like this and say: oh yes, I'm in favour of it. I requested $93,000 this morning from Members' Services, and I guess I'd like to see where the $12 million – I was told that we have a very tight budget, and they couldn't afford to allow the Alliance caucus to have $93,000 for research and secretarial services.

I've been told many times by different members across the floor that they have no business being in business. This looks like pretty big business to me: $160 million going to agriculture. There's no question that we've had a major disaster in the province. It's gone on for two years, and we haven't taken a stance yet to realize that value-added is not only necessary if we desire to go on. We need to have our own packing plants.

I'm afraid that if we continue to follow and wait for our neighbours to the south to tell us that we are now okay and that they'll accept our beef – they're in a state of denial there in the south. They've had chronic wasting syndrome in their wildlife and in their game farms, and because they've shot, shoveled, and shut up with their beef, it doesn't mean that they don't have BSE in their cattle. If we wait to be connected to them rather than developing our own markets to raise our standards to the high quality that we have instead of staying at the low quality that goes on in their country, we're going to be devastated again when finally the world wakes up and says, "We know that you have BSE in the U.S.," and once again we're linked to them.

If we were to put just a small percentage of this budget to be loaned out and have a mortgage on that, that Albertans would be able to call back if in fact those facilities were to go under and to resell them – we need the facilities here. They've played a great deal of games with the different ones, and they say: oh, if they have a good business plan, we'll accept it. That's hogwash. The fact is that business plans have gone forward. Because they're different, because they're not in the box, they say they're not credible. I have three that I'd love to sit down with the minister of agriculture and discuss with him, but I haven't had an invitation. If he'd send one, I'd make the time. He's had the time to fly down to my riding and talk there. I'd appreciate being able to speak to him because we have some ideas. There are some very good, innovative ideas that have come forward. There have been packing plants that have brought people from . . .

Mr. Horner: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Standing Order 23(h) and (I), imputing motives to another member. This hon. member has not requested a meeting with this minister. This hon. member has not presented three business plans to me. This hon. member has not requested my itinerary as to where I was going and what I was doing, not that I would give it to him in the first place. I believe he has imputed to me the motive that I am not taking care of the producers in his area, and that is simply not true. I would like him to retract those statements and to apologize.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, do you understand this?

Mr. Hinman: I guess I'll retract. I'm not sure where I breached, but I'll apologize to the hon. member. I've been to his office several times, and I guess I'd need a paper trail. I'm a farmer, rancher, handshake type of guy, and I realize that in this world it's paper trails, and I will abide by that. I apologize for the misunderstanding. May I continue then?

The Deputy Chair: We will recognize that as a retraction and apology. Thank you. You may proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: There are some very innovative ideas. They've brought people and talked to people in the Mideast, Japan, Korea, and Europe and packing plants that have the ability to bring the sales from those other countries, but when they have made application to I believe it's CVAT, they've been turned down. They don't have the innovation to see that this is a new business plan; therefore, they've ruled and said: well, it can't be successful because it's new.

This government has continued to aid the big slaughterhouses and those with connections in order to expand but still keep a monopoly here on the industry in the province. So I would plead on behalf of . . .

Mr. Horner: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is rising again on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is again under Standing Order 23(h) and (I) imputing motives to this government by saying that we are not helping individual entrepreneurs or packing plants and only helping the big business ones.

Mr. Chairman, there have been 29 proposals come to my office that I have personally reviewed. Probably three of them are the three that this hon. member is referring to, although they may not have told him that. I don't know whether he's been that intimate with their plan development.

Secondly, we are indeed helping a number of packing plants that are not owned by multinational corporations. In due course the hon. member will understand what it takes to get a value-added business going in this province, as I do and as many of the entrepreneurs do.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that he should retract that last statement as well.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, before you speak I just want to draw to your attention the standing order under which the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development rose. It states:

23. A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another member.

You may respond to this point of order that is being raised.

Mr. Hinman: First of all, I can't hear the best, and there's been so much chatter going on, I don't know if I heard everything. But I'll apologize, and I'll continue on with a few ideas and some things that some of the constituents have asked me to address concerning this supplemental supply.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River on the point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Point of order, Mr. Chairman, also on 23(h). I apologize for the delay. I had to look up the citation. I'm new.

In his initial retraction the member said that he had been to the minister's office several times, and he said, "I guess I need a paper trail," insinuating that the hon. minister was not telling the truth when he suggested that the member had not asked for an invitation.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Anybody else wishing to participate on the point of order? Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you want to rise on the point of order?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Again, I'm new, and I apologize for requiring explanations, but I interpreted what the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was trying to point out was that he had physically gone to the office of the minister of agriculture, who is an extremely busy man. What he meant, I'm assuming, by the paper trail was that he's used to doing things first-hand – knock on the door, "Is it convenient?" kind of thing – rather than simply writing notes. I think you probably realize now that given this dependency upon paper, that's probably another approach: when at first you don't succeed, try the note. I don't think there's a deliberate attempt here. We're learning, and hopefully that will be accepted.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, you've already spoken. Do you want to add on?

Mr. Horner: I just wanted to make a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman. As many members in this House well know, my door is always open if I'm there. Any MLA that comes to my door is more than welcome without an appointment if I'm there and able to spend the time. In fact, this hon. member has been in my office, and we have had a chat on a couple of occasions, I believe. The offer is always there to all members of this House to come into my office, and if I am there and I have the time to chat for whatever brief moment or issue it is, they're more than welcome to do that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I hope that for the new members this is a learning experience. What we say here has a reaction or there can be a reaction to what we say, and a point of order can be raised if somebody is making allegations against another member. The chair will consider this as a learning experience. I once again caution the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that the choice of words can lead to such points of order and disruption in the debate, so guide yourself accordingly.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that, Mr. Chair, and I make a full retraction. I was not insinuating at any time denial or anything like that, just frustration on the three packing plants that I'm working with that haven't received the answers that they're looking for. We definitely need to open up and have a better line of communication, and that's the avenue that I'm trying to pursue. I appreciate the offer from the hon. minister of agriculture, and we'll try and schedule something together because I do understand and know that it's a huge task and a very busy schedule that he has.

Mr. Hinman: To go on, in agriculture, though, there are many people and ranchers in my area that are still struggling with the CAIS program. They haven't received them yet. Earlier in this House they talked about 70 per cent of 2003 payments being out. I guess, in view of that, those payments haven't all gone out, yet we're willing to spend and look forward to the future. I just want to bring it to attention that if necessary we need to put more facilities and people there so that this can get out quicker because there are a lot of people in dire straits waiting for that money, and a year behind does seem quite a tragedy for those people.

I'd like to discuss a little bit more, also, about education. The shutting down of the rural schools and the rightsizing is a huge concern. It's very difficult for some of the specific schools. For example, I'll use the one in Milk River. It's an old school, but it's still fairly sound. The minister has told them: we won't look at readdressing this because there is less than 80 per cent being used. They don't understand. They'd like to be able to increase their curriculum and offer more things for those students, yet they're told that they're going to have to tear down their gym and tear down the library to bring other things in.

The point that I'm trying to bring up is that it would be very nice to have the priorities and where this money is being spent so we really could have a decent discussion on where we think it should go. But what are we to discuss with just a one-line entry? I mean, if we were to take this to the bank and say that we wanted to borrow money – and that's what we're doing: we're asking taxpayers to collect money so that we can spend this $5 billion but no details. I find that very difficult to address. How are you supposed to proceed and say that I'm representing those people from Cardston-Taber-Warner, yet I'm not privy to know where the $5 billion is going to be spent other than just in lump sums? Of course, this government has done its due diligence.

I mean, I think that maybe just 24 people and we could've saved a lot of money there and let this cabinet minister continue to run the executive of the province and not worry about the rest of us to spend the time to look at these things. We're struggling here on the other side of the House wanting to make Alberta better, wanting to work with them, yet we're given no information. My biggest request at this time would be to please give a detailed breakdown of where this money is wanted and will be spent so that we could look at it and prioritize it to the best advantage to Albertans.

With the huge surplus that we continue to come in with, I also struggle with the fact that why do we not see tax cuts coming in a massive amount when we have an $8 billion surplus? That money should be going back to the Alberta taxpayers who have put that in there. The purpose of government isn't to collect extra taxes so we have a lot and can make all of a sudden these contingency plans. It's to collect the taxes. The municipal level is not allowed to do this. Why are we allowed to do it on the provincial level?

With that, I'll sit down and appreciate being able to address this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier, rising on a point of order or wanting to respond?

Mrs. McClellan: No, no. Just thought I'd wait till three or four had made comments and then offer some clarification.

I think that when this bill was introduced, the explanation was given, perhaps not well enough, and I think it was given today again by our Government House Leader, perhaps again didn't expound long enough or well enough. I certainly appreciate that there are a number of new members in this House that are not entirely familiar at this point with the process that we go through with the budget.

I do want to make it clear that I don't scoff at anybody. Sometimes I like to engage in repartee as much as anyone else. I was a new member in this House 18 years ago, and I appreciated the courtesy and respect that others gave me that had been here longer, and I hope that I accord the same to the new members here as well as the ones that have been here for some time.

I want to just point out again that this is for two months' operation of government. It is to carry us to June 1 of '05. For new members' information in particular, each year when the budget is presented, there is a three-year business plan of government and by department. That three-year plan lays out the expenditures that are anticipated in the current year of budget time frame and the next budget time frame, so the three years. In 2004-05 there was an overall three-year business plan for government and by department. If you wanted to look at that, you would get an indication of what the anticipation was for the second year, which is the year we're in now – I'm trying to be clear, not confusing – which would give you some indication as to what those dollars might have been anticipated for.

However, the more important part that I hear from members is the question on the amounts. I don't think anybody is doubting that it will take that much money to operate the government for the period of time. One of the reasons that you have it larger than you would if you simply multiplied by the remaining months is that, as I think I indicated when I introduced the bill, in many cases grants are given at the beginning of the fiscal year. In some cases payments are made monthly. In some cases payments are made maybe quarterly or in a half year. But in many instances we pay grants to entities on the 1st of the year, so there will be a higher amount paid in the first month that may not carry on throughout.

So I wanted to make sure that members understood that. It was an interesting calculation, hon. member, a bit scary but an interesting calculation that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made in his addition and subtraction, but I hope that knowing that you have grants paid up front at the first of the year, that can be substantial, gives you some comfort level in your multiplication.

So, Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to offer those clarifications. As the practice has been, and for new members, whenever we deal with matters in the House, if there are questions that I don't deal with at the time – we want to allow as much time here for members to raise their questions – I will respond to each individual member in writing. Now, the normal practice in the budget process is that I would respond to those questions before the end of budget. Will I have the opportunity to get written response to you before we deal with this bill? Maybe not, but you will get the response.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With the exception of what adjusters refer to as acts of God, which in this province include floods, blizzards, prairie and lightning-strike forest fires, hail, drought, tornados, pine beetles, and grasshoppers, to name a few, minus of course Moses' amphibious plague, the government should be able to plan an accurate budget projection. This government has had 34 years and counting of budget planning experience, but for the past decade it has alternated between flying by the seat of its pants and flying on autopilot. It appears more and more that this government, while very good at subtracting, as evidenced by ongoing cuts or freezes to health care, public education, social programs, AISH, minimum wage, infrastructure, roads, parks, and protected areas, seems to have trouble adding and balancing budgets or publicly accounting for expenditures within a fixed budgeting process.

I would be interested in hearing from government ministers how they arrived at their budgets for the first quarter and what types of projects they are planning to kick off the centennial year. As a new member myself and for the new members who represent almost a third of this House, this type of overview would provide a form of whirlwind busman's in-service initiation tour. I would like to at this moment thank the Minister of Finance. I do appreciate her explanation, and as a teacher every bit of learning I can receive is appreciated.

I would especially be interested in how the departments for which I share the critic portfolio operate. These departments include Infrastructure and Transportation as well as parks and protected areas. These are two departments that I would not begrudge major budget increases if I could be assured that the money went to targeted areas. For example, I would like to see upgrades begun on highway 2, especially between Carstairs and Crossfield, which seem to have two levels of roads on the south side. It really appears to be a matter of you take the high road, and I'll take the low road, and I'll be in Calgary afore ye. The trouble occurs, however, when you try to change lanes, dropping suddenly off the upper lip into the lower trough.

Another local highway that I would like to see repaired is highway 8, that unfortunately has killed a number of Calgary commuters and injured many more. Other dangerous highways include 43 and 63, which lead to Fort McMurray. Both these highways have become killer strips, which should have been fixed long ago. There is a secondary road problem where rural residents have to do the daily joust with logging trucks and heavy well-servicing equipment. The municipality roads are equally atrocious. Each year radio stations and local papers run contests to name and provide locations of their most infamous pothole. The contests receive hundreds of different entries.

Besides the road problems the biggest deficit Albertans have faced for the past 12 years has been in the area of infrastructure. The Calgary Conservative caucus seems to think that the best way to cut costs is to close schools and hospitals rather than open them. The problem with this short-sighted logic is that premature closing costs more money in the long term for the replacement. While we wait and wait for these replacements to finally occur, such as at the southeast hospital, which has been set back now to 2010, service deteriorates.

When the government formulates or calculates its interim budgets, I would be interested to hear at some point whether the Finance minister could explain to what extent inflation and population growth are taken into account. I would also like to hear from either the minister of learning or perhaps the minister of infrastructure whether the cost of busing thousands of children out of the suburbs of cities like Edmonton and Calgary is actually cheaper than building community schools in their areas.

I also wonder whether the time spent on school buses would not be much better spent at home or at school, for example in libraries either reading for pleasure, doing homework, or working on research projects. As a teacher of 34 years, I realize the need to provide for a variety of activities to keep students actively involved both mentally and physically. Long bus rides rather than short walks or jogs fail to provide this necessary stimulation.

I would also like to ask the ministers of learning and advanced learning whether they consider education to be an investment in the future or a financial liability. Given the resource bounty in this province, which is the envy of all the other provinces and states, I can't help but wonder why a larger portion of our annual GPP isn't allotted to a pursuit of education.

The majority of school boards in this province, which are running provincially-forced deficits, are searching for alternate ways to generate revenue. One of these ways is to actively recruit students from foreign countries, in particular Korea, China, and Japan. However, when these students pay the equivalent of an education head tax for the privilege of studying in Alberta's schools, the reality, due to lack of funding for English as a Second Language, is that they find themselves frequently isolated, immersed in English-speaking classes. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that there is a dropout rate of close to 75 per cent of high school ESL students. Again, I would be very much in favour of addressing this problem either through hiring more ESL teachers to reduce class sizes or extending the number of years for which an ESL student is funded.

Another factor that could decrease the dropout rate would be to exempt students whose language skills aren't sufficiently advanced from being forced to take departmental or provincial exams, which create a great deal of stress for Alberta-born students, never mind immigrant children.

One of the ways the department of learning could have a greater bang for their buck would be to recognize the value of the variety of daily in-class evaluations and school-based testing and put the money spent on creating and marking end-of-the-year, out-the-door, one-shot, nonremedial government exams into curriculum development where it would do some good. Torturing grades 3, 6, 9, and 12 students with these one-shot, one-to-two-hour tests, which especially at the grade 12 level account for half of the student's mark, seems sufficiently unusual and cruel punishment. But like putting salt into a festering wound, the government follows its Fraser Institute advisors' advice and publishes the school results.

How many times will these tests be administered and published before the government realizes that there is a direct relationship between marks and socioeconomic status? If you want to improve grades, address the underlying issues of poverty, health, and housing, rather than beating up kids . . .

Dr. Brown: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill is rising on a point of order. Are you rising on a point of order?

Point of Order
Reading from Documents

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I rise under Standing Order 23(d). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity appears to be reading extensively from a document, contrary to 23(d) and also Beauchesne 473, that members are not to be reading extensively. They can consult extensive notes, but he appears to be reading from a document which is not before the House.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Once the students have navigated their way through the grade 12 process – they've gone through 12 years of crowded classrooms, of underbudgeted programming – they finally arrive at the gates of postsecondary institutions. One that the hon. member is very familiar with as he was formerly involved at the University of Calgary. He and I have had numerous discussions about the importance of postsecondary funding. The problem is that when they arrived at these school doors, 25 per cent of them were turned away this fall because there were no seats available.

The Deputy Chair: Are you speaking on the point of order? I just recognized you if you wanted to respond to it.

Mr. Chase: Oh, sorry. Was I reading from a document? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill caught me. I admit that I had been reading from my personal notes that I had written. Could I have a qualification from a more learned member as to whether I'm allowed to read my notes or not.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill rose on a point of order citing Standing Order 23(d), which says:

A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(d) refers at length to debates of the current session or reads unnecessarily from Hansard or from any other document, but a member may quote relevant passages for the purposes of a complaint about something said or of a reply to an alleged misrepresentation.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was reading from his personal notes, and there is nothing wrong with that. So there is no point of order.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you may proceed.

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you for that clarification.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: I have been an English teacher, and I've written a lot of essays, letters to the editor. That's part of the reason I'm here today. Anyway, I realize that I'm not giving you the full benefit of my rhetoric, so I'll put my notes away.

What I was getting to is that in the postsecondary area, as I pointed out, 25 per cent of students were not admitted into Alberta institutes of postsecondary learning. They had the marks, the marks which have increased tremendously over the years. They met the 80 per cent plus averages. They qualified. Somehow, whether it was their own personal debt or their family's debt, they were able to raise the money for the inflated tuition costs in Alberta. They came up to the university institutions, they applied, and they were turned away.

So Alberta lost twice. They lost because these kids were held back in their academic process. They lost a second time because they had to find other alternates. They had to go outside of the province to get their education. That is very unfortunate in this province. We have the wealth, but how we invest it – and that's what we're talking about today in terms of interim budgets – seems to be questionable.

The other area that the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner – and I keep thinking: boy, what a title having all those three; mine's simple, Calgary-Varsity – mentioned was the need to invest in not only our own marketing, our infrastructure for slaughterhouse capacity, but also I would add to his concerns the need for 100 per cent testing.

If we want to develop new markets to counteract the border closures and our dependency on our American neighbours, we cannot be always at their mercy. What we do by 100 per cent testing is we open up the markets in countries like Japan, who have already instituted 100 per cent testing. We cannot afford the opportunity to miss markets like the growing market in China, which is rapidly outstripping all other economies. The only way we can get into those countries and their economies and derive the benefits is through 100 per cent testing. My understanding is that that testing is available. The best time to test before it hits the food chain is obviously prior to the slaughter. We need to invest money into preventative feeding practices that allow ruminant waste to turn up again in terms of food. We've got to close that door as well.

I do very much appreciate your patience. When I talked about long bus rides, I'm sure you were thinking: I feel I'm on a long bus ride now. With that, I will sit down.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for clarification, and thank you, hon. member for Calgary, for qualifying that creative writing is acceptable, but Hansard dependability isn't. Thanks very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the Assembly. I will speak to the interim supply budget regarding, first, education. At least I've got the minister of postsecondary listening to me, hopefully, for a minute. Anyway, I do appreciate the Deputy Premier spending some time with us to educate us. That was very much appreciated.

I'm not able to tell exactly where the Education budget is going, but I do hope that one of the key items in the interim budget is the matter of diagnostic testing. Again, I would like to address this in terms of the House. I do believe that the whole matter of diagnostic testing at the elementary level, K to 3, is very, very important for helping children adjust to elementary education.

I also hope that there's some vision in the interim supply budget of Education for a look at the whole business of dropouts. I think it's time that we looked at that to see if we can get a handle on the 20 to 30 per cent, if there's some indication or some good information that we can draw on to help make us do some extra work in curriculum development.

I hope that there's some new direction in terms of curriculum development for teachers, where teachers are asked to introduce a new curriculum into the schools of Alberta, that there are some dollars there for teacher in-service. I think it's also a real key, it seems to me, to look at the whole matter of achievement testing – this would be very interesting – and ascertain if it's doing the job.

As an old evaluator of schools throughout Alberta we used to look at the whole instructional process, how instruction was going, and the administrative process and had a fairly good handle on what was taking place in schools. I wonder if achievement testing does that. Sometimes I think the whole business of achievement testing is a bit of a trophy hanger.

New dollars I think should be indicated in the Education budget for gifted children, and I hope that's something that the new minister will look at as well.

I hope there are some new ideas in terms of curriculum development on drug education.

I think there's some need to look at the whole matter of community schools not only in the rural areas of the province and revisit it from an urban sense and broaden out the whole business of adult education and utilizing schools for helping seniors in the evening and that kind of thing.

The whole matter of school fees hopefully will be looked at by the new minister through this interim budget that we're looking at. OPM – operations, plants, and maintenance – is another matter.

These are the items that I hope the Minister of Education will look at in terms of his new budget or in the interim budget that we're looking at.

Mr. Chairman, there's another matter that I would like to speak to today, and that's the matter of health. It's not clear to me in looking at the interim statement if there is some money there for the whole question of crystal meth and what's happening there. Last night at our caucus we met a parent group and an RCMP officer who were telling us the very, very tragic cases that are facing children and adults with drug problems.

There are two or three things that I hope are identified in the health budget. One is the matter of facilities. I'm not talking necessarily here of new facilities. I think there are facilities in the province already up, some of them that I'm aware of that are empty that could be utilized for this. I think it's very important to look at facilities for the treatment of these types of people. Also, the matter of treatment. I think that treatment has to be looked at in terms of introducing the medical people more in the treatment. AADAC, as I understand it – and I stand to be corrected – does not have any services for children under 18 in terms of the crystal meth problem.

The other interesting issue that's very, very important in this whole issue is the matter of co-ordination or interministry co-operation, and we're talking there of the matters of Justice, Children's Services, Solicitor General, those types of things. So I'm hoping that in the health budget there is some money for crystal meth, and I hope that we can do something about it.

One of the other areas that I'd like to comment on for more of a landowner outside the province – and I was very encouraged to hear the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development talking about the pine beetle problem. I'm sorry to say that in British Columbia, where I'm aware of this, I think the government of the day did not do a good job of handling this issue. I'm pleased to hear that the minister is going to take a positive attack and move on this very quickly. It's a very serious problem, and unless it's cut in the bud, I think we could find ourselves with a very serious problem in our forests.

I see the Minister of Gaming is sitting over there wide awake this afternoon listening to me, and I'm so pleased about that. Sir, besides talking about your budget, I would like to ask you if you could help us new people in St. Albert and give us a new handle on your services. My good constituency office manager was told, when we had a group of about 10 citizens that wanted to hear about the gaming matter, that I was making a political matter out of this. You look like a very wise and prudent man. I wonder if you could help us. I'm seeing you there, so I'm making a plea. I'd like to just get information for some people who want to start some things out there in a nonprofit way, and we'd really appreciate it.

Now, I see that the minister of health has come back. I'd just like to make a pitch one more time if I can. [interjections]

Chair's Ruling

Referring to the Absence of Members

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we had this discussion earlier on today, that by convention we do not make reference to a member's presence or absence in the Assembly. So I'd caution you because a number of people were wanting to rise on a point of order on this matter.

Mr. Flaherty: So should I sit down, sir?

The Deputy Chair: No, no, no. All I'm saying is I'm cautioning you. We do not make reference to a member's presence or absence in this Assembly.

Mr. Flaherty: Pardon me, sir. Thank you for that.

Mr. Flaherty: I'd like to just comment on the remark that someone made over here to me as well that bothered me, but I'll just leave that for your good judgment, sir. It did bother me a lot. I'll leave it.

I was just going to suggest my train of thought. Oh, I was going back to the question of treatment and residential care for crystal meth people. In St. Albert we did a survey under a former area manager of mine and we found out that of the 12 agencies present there now, we do not have any agency that does intervention and treatment for crystal meth. I can't say that it's scientifically done, but it did concern me. I did speak to a lady in your constituency last night who spoke very highly of you, and she said that it was something that you would probably be interested in.

So I'll just raise that through you, Mr. Chairman. I do apologize again for making that statement, and I hope that anyone else that wants to see me about some issues will do it face to face.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chair's Ruling

Insulting Language

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Minister of Health and Wellness, I just want to raise a very important point in this Assembly. Each and every member here in this Assembly is an honourable member, and when we make catcalls that are insulting, it is an insult to the entire Assembly.

Now, I as the chair did not hear the catcall that ended up frustrating the hon. Member for St. Albert, but whoever it is, please, we have to be respectful of our colleagues in this Assembly. So whoever it is, I caution you: do not do it again.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Debate Continued

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak just to the last point that the hon. Member for St. Albert addressed, which was the capacity of either AADAC or Alberta Health and Wellness to provide intervention and treatment for persons affected by crystal meth. It is a grave concern. It is one of the reasons why I have been in support of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, who has been campaigning on initiatives to assure Albertans of better treatment and intervention for youth that are so afflicted.

I'm going to take under advisement the concerns that the hon. member has mentioned about his own local community. I know that if there's a perception that there isn't anybody to provide either intervention or treatment, I'm sure we can try to rectify that. I think the one area that the hon. member and I would probably both find a common ground of understanding on is that today in Alberta, other than the AARC facility in Calgary, there are not places to secure treatment for people that ultimately protect the child on a 24-hour basis. For the families who have been facing the attempted suicides, the often very traumatic side effects of the indulgence and addiction to crystal meth, this poses a real problem. What AADAC has been looking at is a program to intervene and treat but not necessarily secure or protect, so we will have a great deal to do before we are fully able to work with the youth the way that we wish.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take the initiative to follow up on what treatments are available in St. Albert so that we can make sure that as much as possible information is provided to the hon. member and, most importantly, that if there is some gap in service there that is provided elsewhere in the region currently, we can try to fulfill that. It's our youth that are imperiled.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been watching the proceedings this afternoon and the points of order and some catcalls, and it reminds me of my first year in the Assembly in '97. I have a great deal of sympathy for new members of the House. There is a sharp learning curve, and we all survive it. We learn. I ask for patience and courtesy on the part of all members of the House towards each other. I was quite shocked to hear an utterance a while ago that was, I guess, directed at one of the new members of this House when he had the floor and was speaking. I am saddened by such actions and this kind of behaviour in the Legislature.

Without naming names and without rising on a point of order, I just want to request and hope that all members in the Assembly will show the courtesy and respect due to all of us. We are here because we have been elected to be here, and our rights and privileges and our dignity must not come under attack from any of us. There's a need for self-discipline here, and I hope that we'll all exercise that.

Having said that, I want to return to the debate on the interim supply estimates for the budget. I heard the minister of health address a question raised by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I think, with respect to this consultation that the Premier and the minister of health are planning to have in early May. The numbers are mentioned here; 500 people will be invited to this assembly. Participants will be picked, of course, by the minister or by the Premier's office or perhaps in consultation with each other. We certainly won't be privy to who gets invited or who doesn't.

I just want to mention that I have attended over the last eight years as a member of the Assembly two forums of this kind. The first one followed public hearings held by an all-party committee on justice, which went around the province and provided a forum for Albertans to come to this committee to speak their mind with respect to the concern that they had. That exercise in public consultation – it was free and open and transparent – which was held by this committee, which every party represented in the House was on, was the prelude to the second-stage consultation. It was held in Calgary, and 400 or 500 people were invited to this forum on justice. So I can see that there was some effort made to get ready for the two-, three-day event in Calgary by an all-party committee of this Legislature going out to Albertans to listen to them, to take them seriously, and then bring in a set of recommendations which we made. That report became in a sense the basis on which the next stage of the consultation was undertaken.

Now, the second forum that I attended had to do with the environment, and again as a critic for environment for the NDP opposition I attended that forum. The flavour was very different. The whole thing seemed to be orchestrated in a way that there was no possibility for people who were attending it to raise questions which didn't fit the format. The format in a sense fettered us in a way that there was really no debate that took place there. There was very sophisticated electronic gadgetry that was used to sort of consult people: press this button if you're for this or for that one. I felt rather manipulated, you know, attending that one.

My fear is that the health forum that is being planned here follows the consultation model of the environmental sort of exercise that was done. It's going to be an expensive one. It's going to be one that I'm afraid is going to be more of an exercise in shaping the outcomes of the forum even before it takes place. It will be based on money. It will be dealing with an issue of such central importance to Albertans, has been over the last eight years since I've been in this Assembly, and to now have the Premier and our Minister of Health and Wellness organize this opportunity to consult Albertans by hand-picking those who can come to this forum I think would be a waste of effort. I'm afraid to say that it sounds more like a cynical exercise in manipulating public opinion than in really engaging people in asking: what exactly is it that you propose needs to be done to fix the system and to prepare it for becoming stronger and more responsive to the needs of the next year and ten years hence?

The budget associated with this exercise. As the minister has said, she doesn't quite have a handle on it yet, but she will bring the information back to us. If the budget for this May exercise is going to come from this department, then I think that the minister at least should have been prepared well enough to tell the House what the budget is for this exercise. Dollars for it will be drawn from the interim supply estimate that the department is presenting here.

Unfortunately, alas, that information is not there. Is it going to be $500 per head, $600, $700? I don't think it should be difficult to at least bring in some sort of estimate as to the costs of that exercise. What is it going to cost the so-called experts that are going to fly in from all over the world, I presume? How many of them are going to be there? We are only two months away from this event, yet the minister doesn't know who's coming, what they're going to be paid for coming, what the costs are going to be.

I don't think it's that. I think it's another indication to me of a government that runs on autopilot. It's a government that likes to run on remote control rather than using the resources that it has in terms of technical resources, professional resources, human skills and abilities that it has in its own civil service to be able to do its homework and come to this Legislature prepared, and say: "Here are the costs. Here is what we are hoping it'll be like. It may be 5 per cent this way or that way, but we're asking you as part of these interim supply estimates to approve this particular budget item or this particular estimate as part of this because it's a special event. We've been working on it for many years. We attach to it a great deal of importance. This is the Premier's pet project, and here are the estimates."

The fact that the government has not done its homework on it, the fact that the Minister of Health and Wellness is unable to give us any estimated dollar figures on it I think speaks volumes of the way this government has been running the affairs of this province.

Another reminder, going back in time. Eight years ago when I first got elected and came to the House, we were dealing with 18 ministries, 18 departments. Looking at the budgets or at the interim supply estimates, the emphasis was on a small government: we can do it with less; 18 ministers are more than enough. Immediately after the 2001 election, that number was increased by six. The size of the cabinet grew by 33 per cent in one fell swoop.

So it's a big government. It's a massively large cabinet, yet its ministers are unable to bring any information before the House that we can at least use to base our determination of whether we're going to vote for it or against it. It's a highly undesirable situation in which the members of the Assembly are put by the failure of the ministers and their departments to give us at least bare minimum information that would be considered necessary in order for us to vote in $5.5 billion over the next two months, come the end of this month. So it's not what we expected.

I have some questions, for example, about the Executive Council; $5.3 million is being asked for that. It would be important for the House to know how much of this money is going to be needed for the operations for the two-month period from the 1st of April to the end of May on the Public Affairs Bureau. Is that bureau being expanded? How much money is needed for the operations of that propaganda machine that's controlled from the Premier's office? No information on it, yet we are asked to vote for $5.3 million just for the Executive Council.

It's not good enough, Mr. Chairman, for the government to come before this House without some information that's necessary for the members of this House to make up their mind whether to vote for the request that's before us in the form of interim supply estimates for 2005-2006.

I could go on, but I will stop here and let some other hon. members take a turn. Thank you.

5:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. [some applause]

Ms Pastoor: Don't be doing that. I haven't read this yet.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Being new and being exposed to what is called interim supply made me have to go back and think about budgeting. My only experience with large budgeting is with the city of Lethbridge. But more importantly, a lot of my budgeting experience is with my own budget. If I was overdrawn $5 billion – however, let's back it up into my reality. If I was overdrawn by $500, at 6 per cent I'm now $530 in the hole, and if I kept going on and on and on like that, I would soon be homeless. So where would I get that money? That's why I envy this government and their ability to have these interim supply estimates. I don't have the ability to go to someone else, but they can go to the taxpayers and bail themselves out. Because I was unable to live within the budget that I had or perhaps properly project my costs, better yet, I would have had special dollars in an envelope labelled "contingencies," and these would be taken from that present year's budget.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the Gaming department. Because these are just one-line items, some of my questions would be: I would like to know if these dollars are being used for the horse-racing track at Balzac. In my mind that track should be able to stand on its own and be a separate project. They should not have to have interim money to carry them over. That is a separate project, and truly they should have been able to project the funding for that project.

For Health and Wellness I'm hoping that these dollars go toward – the definition is "salaries and supplies." I would really like to hope that these were for the extra salaries of extra personal care aides that would be hired in our long-term care facilities. And supplies: one of the words is "consumable inventories" for the Department of Health and Wellness. To me a consumable inventory would be disposable pads that we use on our seniors when they live in nursing homes or long-term care or, in fact, in assisted or designated living situations. I'm not sure – and I don't care how absorbent it is – that one a night is sufficient. So I would love to think that that consumable inventory would be proper numbers of disposables and that this isn't considered part of a bottom line and that this is why they only get one a night.

I'd like to think, too, that some of these wellness dollars would go toward the U of L project. They have a huge wellness centre coming onside, and they're valiantly going ahead with it. It isn't just for Lethbridge; it's for the surrounding area as well, and it's certainly necessary, by the government's own desires, to move more toward prevention than treatment.

The International and Intergovernmental Relations line asks for $3 million. My question would be: what is that $3 million for at this point? I know that we have just opened up a new office in Washington. I also understand that Washington is very expensive, and that we also have the U.S. exchange rate that we have to factor into that. But even considering those, I really believe that $3 million is a pile of a chunk of change for someone that didn't project the project properly.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 16, 2005 8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/03/16

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Before we proceed with the item before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very honoured tonight to introduce a group of 40 people from my community from Our Lady of Perpetual Help church. It is called the Encore group, and June McNamee, who is the social director, brought them here this evening. They've had a tour of the Legislative Assembly. I've explained to them that when we're in committee, it's much less formal, but I'm sure that they're impressed that there are so many members sitting here this evening. I wonder if they could rise, and we'll give them the warm welcome they so richly deserve for coming out.

The Deputy Chair: Just for the information of our visitors up in the gallery, we are currently in the committee stage, which is a little informal compared to how we meet in the Assembly. So if you notice people moving around or taking their jackets off, it's allowed only in this phase of proceedings.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2004-05
General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Deputy Chair: I will now recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Health and Wellness

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Well, it is a pleasure tonight to rise and speak to the 2004-2005 supplementary estimates. Mr. Chairman, the additional funding that is in the budget is for the following: $350 million to support health renewal and $12.4 million for Alberta's share of the public health and immunization trust fund, that was announced by the federal government in March 2004.

In the case of the trust fund, the federal government tabled its 2004 budget on March 23, 2004, and included in the budget was funding to the provinces for a national immunization program and support for provincial public health systems. This announcement came after Alberta's provincial budget was tabled. The share of Alberta's amount in this funding is $40.2 million over three years. The $12.2 million is the first year's share.

A list of the projects and initiatives that are funded are as follows: number one, consumption of vaccines; number two, the RHA vaccine administrative grants for the regional health authorities; the third, chronic disease management pilots for the Institute of Health Economics. The chronic obstructive pulmonary disease initiative has received funding. The Provincial Laboratory of Public Health has received funding. AADAC has received funding for the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder initiative, and prevention of type 2 diabetes and other chronic diseases has received funding. The acquisition of vaccines has also received funding. The total is $12,350,000.

So that is how we have spent the funds that are essentially received by our government and forwarded through as I've just identified. It's really something that is not in any part distributed as funding for the administration of Health and Wellness.

Now, on the subject of health renewal for $350 million. In June 2004 the government announced an investment of $700 million for health renewal. Three hundred and fifty million dollars was provided to the health authorities for, one, eliminating the accumulated deficits, a sum of 92 and a half million dollars; secondly, additional operating costs totalling 87 and a half million dollars; third, increased orthopedic surgeries for $20 million; and, finally, acquisition of equipment totalling $150 million. The remaining $350 million was provided to Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation for health capital projects. On one hand, the $350 million for Infrastructure and Transportation went to health capital projects that were identified in the capital plan. The other dollars offset deficits and provided additional support for surgery equipment and to support operating costs.

Now, the various health authorities in receipt of this money had provided their budgets and were granted the monies in the following amounts. The total additional funding – and I think it's important for the record, Mr. Chairman – was $17.4 million for Chinook; $2.7 million for Palliser; $113.4 million for Calgary; David Thompson, $28.7 million; East Central regional health authority, $17.8 million; $119.8 million for Capital health; Aspen received $6.7 million; Peace Country received $19.4 million; and Northern Lights $3.9 million, for a total of $330,307,000. Over and above this amount, the Alberta Cancer Board received $17.6 million primarily due to the high costs of drugs that are part of the therapies for the cancer treatments, and the Alberta mental health program received $2 million. Then the total of that amount was for the $350 million.

Mr. Chairman, I think that at the time we looked at the dollars that were in-year spending as enabling us to improve access and quality, to look to the future. The minister of the day spoke about the really significant need to reduce waiting lists for joint replacements. Certainly, under the new access standards for cardiac surgery some patients scheduled for coronary artery bypass grafting received because of this grant intensive home care, and there was certainly an importance in helping patients wait at home for their procedures, and freeing up hospital beds for more surgery was also part of it.

Health regions were expected to use part of their additional funding for elective outpatient MRI scans, and then new health promotion projects in different communities were initiated to reduce and manage preventable illnesses such as cancer and heart disease. According to the Canadian Cancer Society, research suggests that up to 1 in 3 cancers can be prevented through diet and exercise. A good part of what was done with pilot projects and the monies that were provided were initiating some of those types of projects.

Finally, one of the most exciting things was that 11 of 26 proposals to form local primary health care initiatives, which is really a most successful team approach maximizing the benefits of staff in health care delivery, were approved to develop business plans. The implementation of those projects, those initiatives, should occur this year. Eleven projects involved 294 physicians who are working together with other health care professionals.

Mr. Chairman, just this evening we met with the Association of Registered Nurses. They truly believe that the third way will be much more successful as we work to collaborate, work to put our teams together in health care delivery, work to fulfill the ambitions of the Health Professions Act, which will get them functioning as a cohesive unit.

In total, the expenditures from the supplementary estimates, I am satisfied, were well spent on behalf of Albertans to improve their health care.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the attendance of the minister of health and her agreeing to get up first and lay out some information for me. I have quite a few questions about what's happening here, but I think that the single largest injection of money goes into this department, if I'm correct, or at least that's the one I was most concerned about.

Now, I think what is most significant to me – and I actually did have a little notepaper here. We started the budget I think on March 24 last year, and in fact the last day of budget debates was May 6. The appropriation bill passed third reading on May 13, and six weeks later we have $362,350,000 plopped into this department. I think to myself: wow, that was a magic six weeks.

So I really have questions to the minister about why within six weeks of passing a budget you add another $362 million into this account. Six weeks this budget was good for. That's a pretty short shelf life before you add in a lot of money. I was listening carefully as the minister ran through where this money went, and I thought: well, if this was part of all of the business plans, then why wasn't it in the budget that was passed six weeks earlier?

Now, some of it is connected to the government's share of the public health and immunization funding coming from the government of Canada, but that is – if the lion's share is the largest share, what animal represents the smallest share? – the mouse's share of what we're talking about out of this $362 million.

I'm really struggling on behalf of Albertans to understand what is going on in the management of this government that their budget is only good for six weeks and then they have this decision. I mean, it was a press release. It's not as though this money sort of filtered out. It was a whole humdinger, you know, with 18-point font title on it. This was a big rollout of money. June 30, 2004: "Health renewal strategy improves access and quality now, looks to the future." And on and on it goes. I'm thinking: why didn't we get this in the budget? This just doesn't make sense to me.

The whole purpose of the budget process is to say: "Okay. Here's our plan. Here are our goals. Here's how we're going to measure it." The departments know how much money they've got at the beginning of the year, and they can work through the rest of the year as appropriate. Then we get this kind of thing happening. So did they know that that money was coming when they started the fiscal year at the beginning of April, or did they find out at the end of June and now they're supposed to deal with the next nine months of the fiscal year?

I'm really concerned about what I see as a skewing of the whole budget process. If I'm going to say, "Why didn't you include this money in the budget planning in the first place?" I guess the other way to say it is, "What were the factors that led the government to delay announcing this increase until six weeks after the budget was passed?" Either it should have been in the budget planning process to begin with, or explain to us why you delayed telling all Alberta why that choice was made. Obviously, a choice happened there and please share it with us.

What I'd like to know is on the disbursement of these monies. How has it been going? Have there been any glitches or problems that have come up with the distribution of this 362 million dollars and change since the 30th of June, and have the funds been appropriately expended? We're now two weeks away from the end of the fiscal year. That money should have been mostly spent. Has it been spent? You should have been forecasting to the end of the year to know whether that indeed happened, and I'd like to know whether it did.

Now, the orthopaedic surgeries, the minister mentioned, were supposed to increase by 1,200 this year. I'd like to know whether that objective was met inside of this year or will be within the next two weeks. How many surgeries were planned to happen before the money was announced, and then how many got added? Was that 1,200 entirely new? Was that being added onto the orthopaedic surgeries that had been planned when the budget was actually brought down? Can you give us a breakdown, please, of where the orthopaedic surgeries have increased? In other words, if you want to go through the regional health authorities or you could provide in writing later as well how much each health authority got or how much in Edmonton, how much in Calgary, and how much in rural.

In the press release there was also a commitment to reduce the wait times for certain heart surgeries from nine weeks to two weeks. I don't have a medical background, so can you explain to me what "certain" means as in certain heart surgeries? What does that mean exactly? You obviously have a designation there in mind. Can you detail what that means? It's an interesting phrase to be using, and that's lifted right out of the press release. How close are we to achieving reducing the wait times for these certain heart surgeries from nine to two weeks? Again, if you don't have that with you, Madam Minister, could you table it, please?

Also according to the press release, the money was supposed to fast-track 600 hospital beds in Calgary and the capital region. So do Edmonton and Calgary as of today or as of two weeks from today, at the end of the fiscal year, have 600 more beds, and how did that break down? We've raised the issue in the past that Edmonton and Calgary have two of the lowest bed-to-population ratios in the country. Can the minister tell us what those ratios are today? What difference does this funding of these extra beds make?

Also according to the press release, the money was supposed to accelerate the planning and design of the south Calgary hospital. So could the minister update us on where we are with the south Calgary hospital? I think there's been at least one spade turning, sod turning, but no hospital. So I'm just wondering if that project is going to be completed on time and if the minister could also let us know whether it's going to be a P3 or not. We've heard that it's a P3, then it's not, and then it is. Perhaps you could share with us what it's going to be. Can the minister also give us some kind of projected new costs for that? Again, I wouldn't normally be going into this at this point, but it is in the press release; that is, around that $362 million that we're looking at in this budget.

Now, this press release from June 30 also noted that there's $50 million toward capital projects for rural Alberta including supportive living options for seniors in rural areas. I'm wondering if any of the $50 million went towards acute care beds in rural areas, particularly targeted toward seniors, and can you give me a more detailed breakdown of where the money went and which specific rural communities benefited?

Now, the vaccines that the minister was talking about. I was writing as fast as I could, but maybe she could just table the list that she was reading from. The $2,896,000 for the purchase of vaccines: now, she'd listed a number of them including, if I heard that right, that diabetes was part of that vaccine list. I'm just wondering if she can share that with us. I didn't know that diabetes needed a vaccine. I think what I heard the minister do is actually account for that money in a couple of different ways, but it is a little confusing because she added up how much each regional health authority got for the total of $350,302,000 but then also, if I'm getting you right, broke it down by the surgeries and capital grants. You seemed to give us the money in a number of different ways, so if you can just clarify that for me, please.

The other thing I'm interested in is exactly how much went to each health authority to eliminate deficits. I'd like to hear from the minister about government policy on eliminating deficits that have either been accumulated or are a one-year debt because it seems to me that we have a real checkerboard or patchwork across the province. Some health authorities don't run deficits, but then those that do get them wiped out for them. So, heck, why should you stick to the rules? You might as well just run up the deficit. I think that that gives different kinds of signals and the wrong message all the way across the board. So, once again, that question is: how much did each health authority get specifically for debt elimination or deficit elimination, and if there's an accumulated deficit, how much is it for each one of those? And a little bit of discussion from the minister about eliminating those deficits because I think it does send a very bad message.

Sorry. Just let me leap backwards here. I'm wondering if any of the vaccine money, the purchase of vaccines, included the avian flu vaccine. I know that there has been an attempt to do some fairly forward-thinking work on that, and that's why I'm wondering if it's including the avian flu vaccine.

Exactly how much went to local primary care? I heard the minister talk about it. I don't know that I heard an amount of money that went for it.

Now, the $9.4 million "for various public health initiatives." I haven't had a chance to read the Blues. If the minister has already detailed that, don't do it again. I'll get it from Hansard. But if you didn't give us the breakdown of the $9.4 million for various public health initiatives, could you give us the breakdown for that, please?

You did talk about the coronary artery bypass grafting and the intensive home care there and the expected reduction in wait times. Could you clarify whether that expected reduction in fact happened? There was an expectation that it would reduce the wait time to 14 days. Can you tell us if that in fact happened? All right. There are the funding allocations that went with the press release and the breakdowns in that funding. Okay.

Out of the equipment cost, the "capital grants for asset acquisitions, such as diagnostic and medical equipment," again, what's the breakdown for each regional health authority, and what exactly did they get? You know, how many heart-lung machines or MRIs are there out there? What exactly did we get with that asset acquisition? It's a lot of money, $150 million, so what exactly did we get for it? Again, if the minister is not standing there with a list she wants to rattle off, I'm happy to have her table it or send it over.

One other question that I had. On page 60 under Health Services there's a Credit or Recovery column, and it's listing $938,621,000. Can you tell me what that is, that credit or recovery? I'm sure that there's something incredibly logical, but I'm just wondering what it is because it's almost a billion dollars, I think. So what is it exactly?

I will take my seat and see if the minister is able to give me any kind of feedback on the questions that I've asked. I appreciate her willingness to do a back-and-forth on this one.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, and thank you very much for the hon. member's interest and excellent questions. In the first instance,

I'm having the page print for all members of the House the list of how the vaccine dollars were distributed. Although I had read them out, I realize I didn't relate each particular one, for example, with the amount, so this would perhaps make it easier to look at.

Also, I have asked for copies of the distribution of dollars to every single health authority. You can see that some, for example Palliser, did not have dollars to offset deficits because, in fact, Palliser had not incurred deficits. Although the formula for distribution of dollars is, I think, somewhat complicated – and it's understandable – it's also one that there's always significant discussion about. When I talked to the chairs of all of the health authorities within the first week of assuming this particular portfolio, I discovered that, for the most part, the dollars are working well. However, where Palliser did not incur any deficit in terms of the management of the health services within their authority, they were very clear that they felt that it would have been appropriate for us to have considered their good behaviour in not incurring any deficit and giving them some acknowledgement because the other health authorities that had incurred deficits appeared to have benefited from behaviour, in terms of managing their health care costs, that would have been assumed to be in contradiction to best budgeting practices.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot adequately judge whether or not the disbursement of funds and giving Palliser fewer dollars than the others that received them who had incurred deficits – I cannot make a judgment that that was either right or wrong without looking at the program delivery with every one of those authorities. Clearly, the government, in determining that we should not have deficits in place and that the deficits, in effect, were a compromise to the continuation of properly delivering health care in the most cost-effective way possible, I think was responsible to provide those dollars. But I certainly have an empathy for the board of Palliser, that made it abundantly clear that their fiscal policies, their financial management, their accumulation of dollars in a surplus account were, I think, in their view responsibly used and that by abiding by the rules, they were concerned that they had missed out.

So let me address the first point that had been raised by the hon. member, and that is why we would so quickly after a budget had been introduced and passed consider providing additional dollars. I think that in order to be fair, I should provide an iteration of the calendar of events. A good part of it dealt with negotiations with our federal government between the ministers of health, talking about the dollars, for example, for diagnostic and medical equipment. Those dollars, which became part of the health transfer to the various provinces, have been dollars that were looked forward to by various health authorities throughout the province. I know quite clearly that in Capital health they were waiting for dollars, and we are still waiting for dollars that have been due as a transfer this year. To the best of my understanding, although it's supposed to arrive by the end of March, I'm not convinced that it will.

But in the negotiations of health care supports from the federal government I believe that at the point that the decision was made to add dollars to health care to take advantage of an opportunity to offset the deficits as well as pass through the dollars for diagnostic equipment, it was perceived that this would be a responsible way to expend money and extend supports for the health authorities. So if I may wrap up on that, to the hon. member opposite, I would be very pleased to illuminate this further for you by identifying exactly why the amounts came later or why that particular sum in total was being added at that time and why the diagnostic equipment account at $150 million was separately extended from the original health budget. I'm almost a hundred per cent sure, Mr. Chair, that that related to the federal dollar transfers, but let me get that really quite definitively.

The wait times on heart surgeries and the question about certain heart surgeries. I don't want to be guilty of not giving the accurate medical definition, but the wait times, in fact, were reduced by the fall from nine to two weeks, so for some particular heart surgeries the access standards were considerably improved.

For each and every area where access standards were identified in the initial release, dated June 30, 2004, for each of those particular procedures I will, in fact, provide the hon. member regional health authority information about the success or the capacity to complete those particular procedures in that hoped-for or anticipated period of time and will also identify how the fast-tracking of beds, for example in Calgary, or other capital expenditures were achieved, if at all, and I suspect that not all of them have been achieved.

As you know, the south Calgary hospital was announced. Planning dollars are in place. I believe the planning dollars that were levered out at the outset were several million dollars, but as yet there are still discussions about whether or not the Cancer Board would locate a facility in conjunction with the south Calgary hospital or whether, in fact, the university site at the University of Calgary might become a possibility. Discussions are currently under way between the Calgary regional health authority and the Alberta Cancer Board on the placement of that. So I can provide and I'm very willing to table more about the scope of the planning on the south Calgary hospital, but when we get into this year's budget, when that budget is tabled, I think some of the other questions may be addressed.

In terms of the vaccine that's identified, the avian vaccine, I can't answer that. I don't know. The list that I have doesn't specifically address whether or not the avian vaccine is one of those properties that were purchased in the 12 some odd million dollars. Once again, I will provide you with that information.

Overall, the advancement of many of the care initiatives – when I met with regional health authorities, they were satisfied that the dollars were put to good use. The hon. member makes a good point in asking about the accomplishment of some of these targets. Mr. Chairman, those targets, their completions have not been available to me although we have talked about that. Many of the advancements on access are evident, but to be quite precise, I would rather table those as soon as it's reasonably possible to do so, and I will commit to doing that. Even if it comes in bits and pieces, I'll make sure that you get that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Just one final question, then, that I'm still trying to nail down. The minister seemed to be saying that the reason that this came so late was that it was money from the federal government or as a result of that. So can I just get the minister to nail down exactly how much of this $362,350,000 came from the federal government? How much of it?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: The federal government did come through with the $12.4 million; that's when you were looking at the $62 million. On the $350 million I believe $150 million was part of the agreement on diagnostic equipment, but I will get very precisely why those dollars came, how they came, and how they were advanced. I'll table that information directed to the hon. member opposite and, further, so that the balance of the House can have it.

Mr. Chair, the copies of the total iteration on vaccines and health authorities should be distributed here momentarily. I've given them, as I say, to the page.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to ask the minister questions in respect to any items in this budget that may relate to recent changes to physiotherapy.

Ms Evans: I believe the hon. member was questioning whether or not the dollars for physiotherapy or the changes on physiotherapy in any way related to the dollars that were a part of this budget. No. Those policy changes were made within the scope and are within the scope of the health authority. Initially, the Calgary regional health authority made a change determining that they would focus the dollars that were expended on low-income or higher risk patients, ones with more acuity of care, requiring more therapies and assuring that they were there. Most recently, Edmonton announced that as of April 1 it would follow suit with that. So if you are, for example, a senior who fit in the low-income bracket, then, obviously, you will not have to pay for your treatments. However, if you have a greater income, if you are not deemed to be acutely in need of the physiotherapy, then you would be required to pay.

Mr. Chairman, in defence of the regional health authorities' move in this direction, I recognize the significant importance of physiotherapy; however, I also recognize that in those areas where we have been providing services, we are almost in all categories more generous in our service delivery than other provinces with the amount of dollars we do have. But, again, if the hon. member wishes, I will provide very accurate briefing notes for him about the specifics of that because there are a few things with the schedule that might be useful.

Mr. Mason: On that, in recent hearings that the New Democrat opposition held on the future of health care, physiotherapy was one theme that came up again and again. We heard from physiotherapists as well as families of people and patients of physiotherapy. I wonder if the minister would just comment on one brief argument that was put to us several times and that is: well, Alberta may spend more on physiotherapy than some other provinces; it is, in fact, a very wise investment because by the provision of physiotherapy services you prevent people from having to reaccess the primary health care system in many cases. You actually help people recover and be well again. I just wonder if the minister agrees with that point of view and whether or not she believes that, perhaps, if we treat physiotherapy as an investment and spend more money on it, we might actually reduce overall health care costs in the long run.

Ms Evans: Well, you know, it's as if the hon. member opposite reads my mind because, quite frankly, I do support the premise that physiotherapy can reduce health care costs. However, I have also recognized that what we have done with the authorities delegated to regional health authorities is provided them the latitude to make decisions in certain areas. As it was in my previous portfolio, sometimes one wonders, then, about the equitableness of service delivery across the province. On one hand, I can accept that not everybody is going to be able to do heart/lung transplants, but on the other hand, with issues such as the delivery of physiotherapy services and other things that can mitigate against long-term hospitalization or at least enhance the capacity of the patient to get back to work, I think that there's a practicality to that that makes it eminently sensible.

This policy, no doubt, as we review the third way, will be one of the ways we review it because, quite honestly, my own view is that if we make quality care delivered as quickly as possible available to Albertans, that will be one of the very best ways of improving and transforming the system so that we skate to where the puck is going and get ourselves to the future in a way that is going to make sure that Albertans get the health care delivery they need. I also have a great deal of empathy for that.

I feel some constraint by the policy of delegation to authorities, but through this next year as I become increasingly familiar with those kinds of issues, especially as it relates to delisted service elements, I hope that my discussions with the health authorities will help us understand and mutually reconcile where we spend the dollars. I mean, at the end of the day they're going to tell me: "Well, of course we could pay more. But where are the dollars coming from?" So they are making choices, and that has been their prerogative to do so. Physiotherapy is one that I have a very strong predisposition towards, and I will be looking at that.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else? Are you ready for a vote on this estimate?

An Hon. Member: Were we going to vote them all at the end of the night?

The Deputy Chair: Do you want to vote at the end of the evening? If there's an understanding to vote at the end of 10 o'clock, we'll do it at that stage.

The next minister we'll go to is the Minister of Justice.

Justice

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the supplementary estimates for Alberta Justice for the 2004-2005 fiscal year. I'd ask that you refer to the section beginning on page 73 of the estimates.

The estimates for Alberta Justice total approximately $9 million, and our request is to provide funding for four areas. First, there's $6.9 million required to pay Provincial Court judges in accordance with the recommendations of the 2003 Judicial Compensation Commission. Second, there is $1.5 million needed to cover costs related to the implementation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Another $331,000 is required for the cost of opening two additional courtrooms in Calgary Provincial Court, criminal division, and $190,000 is required for the office of the Public Trustee to initiate the replacement of the office's information technology systems.

The bulk of the supplemental funding requested for the Justice ministry is to accommodate the increased compensation for Provincial Court judges as recommended by the Judicial Compensation Commission. The provincial judges and masters were paid retroactively to November 30, 2004, and then at the new rate to December 21, 2004. Those payments together with payment to March 31, 2005, again at the new rate, will cost approximately $6.9 million. This is a decision that is out of our hands, and we are obligated to pay the new compensation rate to judges and masters.

The second largest portion of the funding is $1.5 million to implement the Alberta Justice portion of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. This act is under the jurisdiction of Children's Services and came into force November 1, 2004. It requires the justice system to significantly shorten trial preparation, dispute resolution, and lead times and increase mediation and dispute resolution services. This act is certainly good news for Albertans in that wait times will ultimately be reduced from the current average of 22 weeks to 10 weeks. When fully implemented, a total of 30 new staff members will be added in court services and legal services. Albertans accessing the courts will notice a big change for the better, but it does cost something to implement these changes. The $1.5 million I'm requesting is start-up funding to begin to implement these changes during the 2004-2005 fiscal year.

In August 2004 a minister's report identified a significant increase in trial lead times in Calgary. In fact, the trial lead times were well above the provincial average and almost double the target lead time of 16 weeks. Obviously something had to be done, and it was. We moved to open courtrooms 105 and 106 in Calgary. Two new judges were appointed; four additional court clerks, two Crown counsel, and support staff for a justice were all hired. The total cost of that was $331,000. This, once again, is money extremely well spent and is already making a difference to make courts more responsive to Albertans' needs.

The last of the supplemental estimates is a self-funded item. It will have no impact on government of Alberta surplus. I'm requesting $190,000 as an incremental increase to the Public Trustee's office. This increase will be fully funded by a small increase in the management fee the Public Trustee can charge against the common fund administered for their fines. Over a period of several years the increase will allow the Public Trustee to replace the existing computer system, increase efficiency, and address ongoing staffing requirements. This, as I said at the outset, will be neutral to the government.

I would ask members to approve these expenditures as part of the Alberta Justice supplementary estimates. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to respond to this supplementary estimate for the Department of Justice. I thank the hon. minister for his explanations. It helps to clarify some of the points because there's not much in this book to indicate any explanation. I was thinking that maybe the additional courtroom expense in Calgary had something to do with the building of a new courthouse there, but it doesn't have anything to do with that at all. Thank you for your explanation.

I just want to focus on the first point, the biggest amount of money, which is the $6,949,000 to pay Provincial Court judges in accordance with the 2003 Alberta Judicial Compensation Commission. The recommendations were effective for a period April 2003 to March 31, 2006. That means that you had to give them retroactive back pay to April 2003, so that would account for some of that money.

It's very interesting that the commission had to consider many new circumstances, I think. I think they did good work. They expanded the scope of the work of provincial judges in recent years, the increasing responsibility attached to the office of a judge, and the relationship of Provincial Court judges to the judges of Queen's Bench. I take it that the commission was trying to bring up the Provincial Court judges to the same kind of level given the fact that, virtually, they do the same kind of work. In fact, that's what the Provincial Judges' Association concluded, that Provincial Court judges and Queen's Bench judges are both trial judges and generally perform equivalent functions.

But it's noteworthy that the commission's final recommendations are much higher in respect to the salary levels than the government of Alberta recommended. The commission saw fit not to agree with the ministry's submission, asserting its own independence and attempting to depoliticize the process. Now, I wonder if the minister could tell me how much was spent on the court challenge, on the challenge to the commission by the government. Does that money appear anywhere here? Also, the budget schedule, I'm not sure about the timing here. When this report got into the ministry's hands, did it come in time to get into the 2004 budget as the commission is the 2003 commission?

The commission made its recommendations taking into consideration many important points: the constitutional law of Canada; the need to maintain the independence of the court and the judges; the unique nature of the judge's role; the need to maintain a strong court by attracting highly qualified applicants to the Provincial Court; the compensation of other judges in Canada, that we want Alberta judges to get the same kind of pay as judges in other provinces; the need to provide fair and reasonable compensation for judges in light of prevailing economic conditions in Alberta and so on; the cost of living index; the nature of the jurisdiction of the court.

I learned so much in reading their report. All criminal prosecutions begin in Provincial Court – that's interesting – and 97 per cent conclude in Provincial Court. I'm on the way to supporting this additional money, so hear me out. So that means that what Provincial Court is doing is on a par with Queen's Bench. Queen's Bench handles murders and some very, very select other kinds of matters, but most matters are handled by Provincial Court. And then there are things that have to be considered like the new Youth Justice Act, which adds a lot to the workload of judges, and, of course, the whole area of domestic violence.

In conclusion, I'm not questioning the additional money although I'd like to know how much money was spent on challenging the commission and why this couldn't have come into the 2004 budget since the commission report was a 2003 commission. But I respect the commission's conclusions. I respect the independence of the Judicial Compensation Commission and the requirement of the government of Alberta to follow its recommendations, which are binding. The commission's role is to weigh the evidence and the submissions and to recommend the proper compensation and benefits for Provincial Court judges. Hopefully, in the years to come this kind of thing will be a part of the budget.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: Briefly, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. member for his comments. My experience is that often there is a price to pay for support. I am quite prepared to listen to the hon. member in order to gain his support with respect to these estimates, and I do appreciate that.

I can tell you that there is no amount relative to the legal dispute relative to compensation built into this particular estimate. It is solely for the purpose of paying an amount that effectively was directed by the court while the issue is ongoing. So this is exclusively for compensation for the judges and for nothing else.

I believe that that's the only comment I have with respect to this matter. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will have fun with your estimates, then, hon. minister.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General if within the supplementary estimates are contained any expenditures for external legal counsel and if so, where are they, how much, and what for?

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Certainly not to my knowledge. As I indicated in my opening remarks, we have judges' pay; we have start-up costs with respect to the implementation of justice matters regarding the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act; we have money that is associated with a new computer system regarding the Public Trustee's office that is very much required. Then there was the cost associated with opening two courtrooms in Calgary and the associated judge, Crown prosecutor, and support staff within the court itself. There are no dollars associated with this for external counsel.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

I will recognize the Minister of Advanced Education now.

Advanced Education

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Supplementary estimates for Advanced Education are found on page 13 of the material which was circulated, with the explanations shown on 13, 14, 15, and 16. I'd be more than happy to respond in more detail to any questions that might be raised.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I note that this ministry's supplementary estimates indicate that they only went 1.4 per cent over budget. Looking at some of the other departments' supplementary estimates, that's rather good, so congratulations.

I do have a couple of questions for the minister, not a whole bunch, I don't think. I'm curious about the $1.3 million in grants to postsecondary institutions to support curriculum development and recruitment activities for the new Alberta school of veterinary medicine at the University of Calgary. I'm wondering if the minister can tell the House why that is not being approved through the normal budget process. Same question, essentially, for the $2.8 million for the access fund: why is it not being approved through the normal budget process?

The $11,674,000 for the performance envelope to reward institutions for the achievement of performance goals. The amount, as I understand it, that institutions can earn through achieving performance targets is limited, has maximums, and thus should be almost entirely predictable. So I'm wondering why this $11.674 million is being approved for performance funding at the end of the fiscal year. The $5.4 million for assistance for learners I would think should be similarly predictable, particularly the $4.1 million requested there for student loan relief benefit payments.

In terms of equipment/inventory purchases we have a budget line item of $162,000 for continued development of the apprenticeship, trades, and occupations management system. If that's part of the continuing development process, again, why is that not being approved through the regular budget?

I'm curious as to what specific enhancements to the student financial assistance system are being funded with the additional $500,000. Why was this enhancement not envisioned and budgeted for in the '03-04 budget?

I think that's the extent of my questions at this time, Mr. Chairman, unless the minister says something that really perks my ears up.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A real challenge there to provide full and complete answers without perking the hon. member's interest. How to do it.

With respect to the $1.3 million dollars for curriculum development for the veterinary program at the University of Calgary, apparently that program was approved. I believe the timing of the approval of that was in September, and then there was a decision taken that we ought to try and have that moved ahead more quickly. So the minister of the day gave the University of Calgary approval to move ahead with a $1.3 million allotment in this fiscal year in order to allow them to move ahead with curriculum development and get-ready money, if you will. Rather than waiting for the budget process in a new fiscal year and saying, "Wait, and don't do anything until we get there," that funding money was approved to get started. So that's why the $1.3 million is in the supplementary estimates rather than in the original budget forecast.

I should say at the outset that virtually none of this money that we're talking about voting in the supplementary estimates for Advanced Education is new money. It's just money that's being reprofiled, and because it was voted in other statutory categories, we need to seek the approval of the Legislature to move it from where it had been voted to where we want to spend it. So the questions that are raised are really questions surrounding what I would call matters of opportunity.

In other words, because we were able to reprofile the $15 million from student loan funds because of some changes that had been made in there which resulted in the money being budgeted in that area and not being utilized and we were able to predict that early enough on in the process, we were able to take those funds and reallocate them to the access fund and the performance envelope where we wouldn't have been able to provide those additional funds, which I'm sure the hon. member and others of his colleagues will agree were very much needed in the system, and we didn't have them in the budget to provide them to the system. Because we were able to free up those resources from other parts of the budget, we were able to provide them to the system, and the best way of doing that was through the access fund and through the performance envelope.

In the same way, some of those funds could be channelled to much-needed projects; for example, the enhancement of the student finance system redevelopment. There's been an ongoing redevelopment of the student finance data system, the computerized system which handles the whole student finance process. That's been ongoing, and changes in the student finance program resulted in the need for some changes in redeveloping the existing legacy system. The $500,000 made that possible, to move that project ahead.

In the same way, what we call the ATOMS project in apprenticeship and industry training, where we're moving to an automated system so that apprentices and employers can register online 24/7, basically automate a system which should have been automated, perhaps, many years ago, but now with the resources available we can move it into that project and move that project ahead so that we can have a much more effective and efficient system so that people can get the information they need 24/7, can register for a program, register for courses, can get the information about what their standing is. All that sort of information will be available through the electronic data system, and $2.9 million of that redeployed money will be able to move that project ahead and make that much more effective.

Essentially, with all of the items under our supplementary estimates we're not talking about new money. We're talking about some changes that were made which resulted in some savings on one side of the agenda, and we are asking for permission to use those monies to do more effective and more efficient work on the other side of the agenda. The three big areas that have been addressed: one is doing the curriculum development for the veterinary school; the second, improving our technologies so that people can have faster access to registration information; and three, providing additional resources to postsecondary institutions that have gone above and beyond in providing access to students.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for those answers. I guess really the only additional piece of information I'd be looking for, then, since we're talking about this not being new money but old money, reallocated money – and this may just be a dumb rookie question; I don't know. Can the minister show me or demonstrate for me where the money came out of the budget in order to move into his estimates?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. member, the $15 million came from student loans. We incur and cover the costs associated with the remission of student loans. We provide student loan relief to students. Even though these show up in future years, we provide for losses in the current year. The amount for that provision is set each year, but it's adjusted during the course of the year depending on the remission rates and the level of loan relief benefits. There's been a decrease in the remission rates and a lower than anticipated request for student loans, which resulted in an excess of $15 million in this fiscal year for that particular budget item. So $15 million of the $19 million comes from that pot.

Four million dollars comes from the Alberta centennial education savings plan budget. There will be $20 million budgeted in a normal year. There was an amount budgeted for the balance of this year, from January 1 to March 31. The reality is that very few of those children will be registered prior to the end of this year. So this is not really new money; it's basically moving forward. It's freed up the $4 million this year. We anticipate that to be a three-month adjustment every year.

So we don't need the $4 million in these three months. Those children will be registered in April, May, June, and the children at the end of the year will be registered the following fiscal year. So it's just a $4 million shift forward, but it frees up $4 million now that was budgeted and not needed for that particular program. But because that's a statutory vote, I can't spend that money without coming back to the Legislature and asking for permission to reprofile it into the program spending. That's what we're asking for.

Basically that's the money. It's $15 million on overprediction of the remissions on student loans and the amounts available in the issuance of student loans and $4 million that we budgeted, perhaps overzealously, for the start-up of the centennial education savings plan, which won't be actually needed just yet, so we can utilize that money for current urgent priorities.

Mr. Taylor: So if I understand the minister correctly, Mr. Chairman, the minister is borrowing, essentially, $19 million from next year's budget to add to this year's budget. Is that correct?

Mr. Hancock: No, not at all, Mr. Chairman. In the first instance, that was an overprediction of need. We anticipated a higher demand for student loans and a higher rate of remission than actually is going to come true, and because we now know what is going to come true, that frees up the money. So we'll be predicting in next year's budget what next year's use will be, but that's not connected to this year. This is money that was budgeted for but is not being utilized, so we'd like to get it out to the institutions so that they can fund the access to the students that the universities and colleges have provided. So that's not borrowing from next year at all.

On the educational savings plan again one could say borrowing from next year, but that's not really a reality. We will budget the full amount for next year. It's just that although the program had started on January 1, the expenses aren't, it appears, going to start really until April 1. There will be some money needed in there, but there's not a lot of money needed. So it's really that we anticipated spending some money too early and we're not going to need to spend it in that time frame. So because that money is in the budget and because there is a need, we'd like to reallocate it and get it out to the postsecondaries, who need it for the things that they're doing.

I should mention that there's another $5.8 million that we are reprofiling as well, but that money can be reprofiled within the budget, so that doesn't form part of the supplementary estimates. So we're actually taking about $23 million which can be freed up from other things to get it into the areas where we really need it to maximize the opportunities, most of that going through the performance envelopes and the access funds to get it out into the hands of the postsecondary institutions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. Minister of Advanced Education: I wonder if he could elaborate, but not too much, about the $11,600,000 "for the Performance Envelope to reward institutions for the achievement of performance goals." I'd like to know a little bit more about how that actually works.

I also have a question with respect to the $15 million in overallocation for student loans and why the minister feels that that has occurred, why less people are applying for remission. Does it have any relationship to enrolment in our postsecondary institutions? Is there any indication that it may just indicate a problem with debt load of students, leading to their choosing to not access the student loan program?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the second one, that would be pure speculation as to why. I don't think that there's been any change – and I can check that, and I will and get back to the member on it – in take-up rates or that sort of thing. It's difficult to predict what the total remissions will be in any given year. It's difficult to predict what the take-up of loans will be.

There are a number of factors which go into the budget. One is how much we're putting out in terms of loans. We budget every year for a cost factor related to both the failure to repay as well as the remissions, so there are a number of factors that go into that. I can get some more detail if the hon. member would like.

With respect to the performance envelope of $11.6 million, that goes to postsecondary institutions through performance envelope awards, which is one of the recommendations that was made by the MLA Post-secondary Funding Review Committee back in the fall of 2000. The one-time performance funding envelope is available to recognize achievement of excellence and improvements in performance. They're awarded based on key performance indicators, which they apply through, those being responsiveness, accessibility, and affordability. So there are a number of factors that institutions put into the mix to apply for performance funding, and we were able to add approximately $12 million to that performance funding envelope.

Human Resources and Employment

Mr. Cardinal: I'm pleased to be here, of course, to request supplementary estimates of $34,925,000 for the 2004-2005 fiscal year. The department requires a net increase of $14.9 million. The reason for that is, of course, our caseload. Costs per case were higher than we had budgeted for in the income support program or that portion of the program. Although we have been successful in moving more people off the income supports to employment and training opportunities, these decreases have been more than offset by caseload increases and the not-expected-to-work category, which is about 11,000 cases these days.

In addition, we have experienced some unanticipated cost pressures related to increased medical costs, primarily the escalating cost of drugs, and covering the cost of utility arrears and reconnection fees. This demonstrates that this government is committed to stepping up and providing more dollars for the needy that are still out there in Alberta.

You will also note that $3 million is required in addition to the funding. It's required for the Alberta adult health care benefit program. This is, of course, a positive development that means that more people who were receiving assistance are now employed and are eligible to access the medical benefits available under this particular program. Again, another department program in place to help Albertans help themselves.

Due to the lower than anticipated enrolment in training programs funded by the department, some dollars were available to partially offset the income support pressures, actually about $12 million. However, my department remains committed to funding opportunities for low-income Albertans to access the training they need to help them get jobs.

In addition, $20 million is requested for the salary contingency fund, which will be allocated to departments on an as-needed basis. It's prudent planning to ensure that departments have sufficient funds available to them for fiscal obligations, in other words settlements. Without contingency the departments may have been required to fund these costs out of their next year's budget.

Support for the supplemental estimates for Human Resources is recommended and would be appreciated if you'd give it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the minister for his report. There are a number of I think interesting areas in the supplementary estimates that I'd like to have some questions asked on.

You know, skills investment seems to be something that is a very topical and important area right now and something that we seem to have a lot of attention focused on because of the needs and our economy. The ability to bring all Albertans forward as productive members of our economy I think is crucial in this area, but we've had $14,925,000 – and the minister had mentioned that – for extra income supports and health benefits and for an extra high caseload for people not expected to work. Basically, there are more people on welfare. I just have to ask that question. At the same time, we've had monies transferred from skills investment to the tune of $12,943,000 that is not being used in the skills investment area to deal with that.

Obviously, the $20 million for salary contingencies is something that may be necessary. You know, I've seen also some of the operations in some of the line departments, some of the line operations, and either they're doing a very good job of selling me on what they're doing – but I think many have been improving their things, and I could commend the department for some of their work in this area.

The skills investment area – that's career information, obviously, and some of the other areas, some of the basic skills and academic upgrading. I've heard the criticism from some of these people in these centres that, basically, sometimes they're transferring into these upgrading programs instead of actually being on welfare, and then as soon as they're off the supports for these programs, they then become a statistic on welfare again rather than in this so-called upgrading or skills investment area.

Crucially, I think in the skills investment we have to understand the need in this area for actually using that funding for providing those skills. I mean, more people on welfare, less money being spent on skills, money being transferred from skills investment to welfare: somehow that equation doesn't work for me in the Alberta where we need so many new people. There are people in many groups and areas that I've talked to that want to get into our economy and be a part of it.

Some areas, I don't think, have at all been adequately addressed, Mr. Minister. It surprises me, these areas such as the labour market partnerships, which are designed to identify, develop, and implement projects with organizations, industry sectors, and communities with common labour market needs. I see that the ministry has worked in certain areas like the hospitality industry to try and develop certain areas of expertise and develop personnel in that area, and I think they should be commended for that, but in reality some of our great demands are getting people to Fort McMurray, developing our aboriginal workforce.

I've heard great criticism that the aboriginal skills development outlined here has really just been a lot of paper and committee work. We haven't seen, really, any real action done other than that on the part of the government, and the results do show. I mean, again, monies transferred out of skills investment and away from developing our workforce while at the same time the department gets into the temporary foreign worker program, which seems to be a total cop-out in terms of, you know, developing our workforce. I think that's kind of a key area to look at.

The desired results in the 2003-2004 report state that "Alberta employers [should] have the skilled workforce they need." That's an objective of the department: to "identify, and advise stakeholders of significant labour market trends and issues." Again, there's a significant problem here in some of the labour market information that I've seen. It's very incomplete and very global, and some of the areas that we see do not really speak to the exact availabilities in certain areas. Indeed, we have certain areas targeted sometimes even though the government in its annual report said that in some certain key performance measures the "number of occupations that are in a skill shortage situation as defined by an unemployment rate below 3%" has actually dropped. That's on page 76 of the annual report.

It's interesting to look at these things, you know, when we see all the hype about a shortage in certain areas when I'm being told by many stakeholders that, in fact, there is not the shortage, and they have an availability, and they can provide this. In fact, the problem is getting people to work in the oil sands area because of other problems.

The implementation of the strategy on Prepared for Growth: Building Alberta's Labour Supply I think has got to come into some sort of real work in terms of how we actually strategize the key areas, how we cut off the peaks and fill the valleys in terms of the needs for apprentices in many of the key skills areas, how we look at the demographic trends that will develop in five to seven years to begin to create some true pressures on our labour supply as people retire in the beginning phases of the baby boom retirement. Workplace effectiveness is actually one of the key areas that's looked at as a strategy here as well, and I really see very little, again, understanding that there's been money transferred out of skills investments even though there's a strategy from the department.

The "work-life balance, lifelong learning, workplace values": some of these things would look to having, you know, a working life that balances family life, family pressures, some of the cultural sort of values, multicultural values that some of us hold dear in this society, some of the traditional beliefs and ways of living that many groups in our society hold dear. There again, skills investments is going to just basically income supports and being transferred out of the things that could be doing something very positive for the economy of Alberta.

"Develop alliances at the local, provincial, national and international level that will contribute to human resource development." I think there are some areas of real alliances at the local level, you know, dealing with the colleges but also dealing with the various traditional groups like the trades, the aboriginal groups, and looking clearly at our deficit in youth unemployment, one of the highest rates in the land. Obviously, in the report there's the short-term training that was provided for farmers affected by BSE. That's a good short-term thing, but the best thing is long-term employment. A job is a very fulfilling thing for many people in our economy.

The interprovincial mobility initiatives that have been brought forward I think have been very effective. Some of these have been ongoing for the last decade: the red seal program, of course, and some of the other areas about bringing people from other parts of Canada. Actually, I think there's some opportunity to do so with parts of the United States. I've spoken with some of these areas where there are skills shortages. People could have access to labour pools in the United States, and they might be a quicker, easier mix for us than actually trying to retrain new people from a lot of other areas.

Immigration is important. It's absolutely a part of our history, our ability to develop our economy. But we have to be careful that we do not flood certain occupations. We have to develop certain occupations so that there are people here afterwards. To bring in some people from outside can bring about great difficulty and create holes or gaps in certain trades and occupations that we will see five and 10 years down the road or longer. You know, we've seen that happen in a period in the 1980s, when there was actually a construction depression in Alberta.

Some of the areas that I'd like to understand. There's been transfers in from skills development and some of the areas in safety such as the partners in health and safety program. It's had some successes. I've talked to a number of employers across the province, and you know they have done some great things in bringing down some of the safety figures.

Another area, actually, is the children and youth initiative and how well that is happening for people that are on income supports or not going back to work: the crucial area of providing recreation to children and getting kids off of, you know, the ongoing generational sort of cycle of being in a kind of welfare or support situation and also decreasing gang violence by keeping these kids active.

Those are my general questions, Mr. Minister, and I thank you for your time. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. Those are, of course, very good comments and very good questions and very good recommendations also. This is a very sensitive area, and it needs more careful attention.

I know that as we move forward, this year we may be moving some dollars from the skills development area. You can be assured that this fiscal year you won't see that happen, because right now, the way it looks with the spaces that may be coming open for training and various training opportunities for individuals out there, we'll be lucky if we can find enough dollars to fulfill what is required. So definitely we will be expanding the number of seats that are offered for training to ensure that whatever is allocated for skills investment, that money is fully utilized. In fact, we'll be lucky if we have enough to do the job that's required to be done.

As you're aware, the welfare caseload in Alberta is very low. At one time, going back to '92-93, it was about 97,000 cases, or 180,000 individuals, and 80 per cent of those on that system at that time were single people or couples without children. The move government made at the time was to make sure those people that were able to work and able to train were off the system and into the workforce, either through training or direct placement. That's been very successful because our caseload today is under 28,000, and about 11,000 of those 28,000 are people not expected to work for various reasons: larger families at home or lower education levels or situated in a geographic area where there are no job opportunities or a lot of underemployment and unemployment. That will no doubt continue, but I think we can still reduce that to a lower level yet.

The other competition we have, of course, when it comes to skills development and skills training and the reason why we would have some surplus to transfer this year is that we are having some stiff competition from the jobs that are available out there. Rather than people going into training programs to do academic upgrading and technical trades and even university, people are taking jobs out there and going into the workforce. That is also some competition, some challenge that we're faced with. I don't know if it's negative or positive. I guess in the long term it's probably positive, but in the short term it's probably negative.

So when you look at our offices in Alberta, we do not have a welfare office. I think it's the only jurisdiction, probably, in North America that does not have a welfare office. The reason for that is that no one out there wants to be on welfare. We know that. You people know that. We've put in a process here in this province that has looked after that generally. Very few people are on assistance that are employable and trainable, and that's not easy to arrive at.

We have about 26 offices, service centres we call them, which are in some cases co-located with the federal government and in some cases not. But what we provide in those offices is that basically you walk in, and the first thing you'll get is probably an application to get a job or a process for further education, further career counselling, or direct placement in a job opportunity, either in that community or in other communities. Actually, about 80 per cent of people that walk into our offices never end up with a file. I think that's a good move because I think that's what Albertans want, that's what taxpayers want: to ensure that wherever we can we move people back into training, into the workforce, and to of course become self-sufficient and independent.

I know that in aboriginal communities – you mentioned that, and that's a good point; I commend you for that – we do have challenges in that particular area. The aboriginal communities we look after are people off the reserve, along with other Albertans, to provide the services that are required.

On the reserves we have absolutely no jurisdiction, and the present socioeconomic policies that are in place for the First Nations on-reserve programs do not really encourage people to get back into the workforce. It's a real challenge because that's not what the people want. That's not what the First Nations chiefs want. They'd like to see their people go back into the workforce. Until the federal socioeconomic policies change for on-reserve programs – and we can keep working with them to try to achieve that because it would be best for everybody – we will continue to have those challenges that employers have. They'd like to hire First Nations. When there's stiff competition from social support programs, then it's really, really tough for industries to hire First Nations people.

In relation to foreign workers, of course, that continues to be a real challenge for everybody. The first priority for Alberta, our government, and no doubt your support is to hire Albertans first wherever possible, Canadians second, and that includes aboriginal people; it includes persons with developmental disabilities, first opportunity. When an employer has exhausted that, then they have an opportunity to apply through the federal government to bring in foreign workers, and that's a complicated and a costly process. It's definitely not a top priority for industries, definitely not a top priority for our government, and no doubt not a top priority for you people, who like to see our own local people working first.

In some instances, of course, when you look at northern Alberta, some of the challenges that we have is a road network that's in there, for an example. We have a community north of Athabasca which used to be in my riding. The community of Wabasca has about 5,000 in population. There's about 80 per cent unemployment and underemployment in that community. The reason for that is there are jobs around, but they're not within commuting distance on the roads. We need a road developed between Wabasca and Fort McMurray, and if we did that, at least 2,000 or 3,000 people would get to work almost immediately either through training or direct placement on the job. So we need to improve the road network in northern Alberta also to accommodate the First Nations people that are out there. Industry would like to hire them, but the access is not there.

So with a few policy changes, a few changes in the infrastructure to provide access roads and proper services to support people to get back into the workforce, we'd have a lot more people working in the workforce. We do have a lot of work, and as an opposition we need your support to achieve that. I know that together in the next number of years we can achieve some of those goals we have.

In relation to the apprenticeship program, of course, we need to continue improving that although, from what I understand, Alberta presently trains close to 20 per cent of all the apprentices trained in Canada. On the other hand, the average age of a journeyman in Canada is about 51 years old. The average age of a person completing the four-year program in Alberta is about 26 years old. When you go back to the schools, say, in the north half of the province, 65 per cent of the students want to take technical trades, and they know that by the time they hit grade 10. Why is it taking from grade 10 until you're 26 years old to complete your four-year program? So we need to make some changes to improve that and have more people join the apprenticeship program and end up with a journeyman certificate. Again, we'll need your help in ensuring that those changes take place.

The welfare cycle. Again, I stress that on the reserves we have reformed the welfare system. Off the reserve it has worked well. We need to encourage the federal government to make some of the policy changes that will ensure that the First Nations people on reserves move off the reserves and into the workforce and once again become independent and self-sufficient.

When you look at northern Alberta, before 1950 there was no welfare system. People lived off the land the traditional way, completely, 100 per cent self-sufficient. We didn't have health care problems. We didn't have the social problems, the cultural breakdown, didn't have alcoholism. In fact, in my community I remember days when I don't think one person even smoked in that community. That's how we lived before 1950. Industrial development came, and we didn't provide the necessary transitional supports to move people through the process to the industrial type of lifestyle. It's the same, you know. You live off the land the traditional way. It's no different today. We do live off the land, but we do it by harvesting the resources that are out there in the industrial setting. We didn't provide that link. We tried to provide it by providing welfare.

So you're exactly right: we need to break that welfare cycle because it is a disaster. With your help and the support of our government no doubt we can achieve that. I am sure that we have thousands of First Nations people that can get in the workforce if we work together with industry before we start talking about bringing foreign people in. That should be our top priority.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Minister, for some very wise words. I have been up to many of those areas a number of times and lived in the area, actually, for a number of years. The need for some of the infrastructure actually is a real part of all of this. It is crucial to the development of our oil sands and of our greatest resource, which is our people.

Some of the problems with this infrastructure really have to be linked. You know, many of these things are interdepartmental in the way they do work, such as the need for a road. There are sometimes a number of winter roads from Wabasca through, you know, Pelican Lake and up through Fort McMurray, and some of those go up to Chip and some of those places and off to some of the areas in Saskatchewan as well which could use some great development. But I'm kind of diverging here, I guess.

I'll just say that some of the needs that you mention there are huge in developing skills and that if some of these skills investment monies can be programmed into some of the successful, actually, industry examples that we've had – for example, Neegan Development has had some successes. Some of the other aboriginal companies where there have been informal relationships between labour providers like building trade unions, Syncrude, some of the other people to try and ensure that there is in fact labour supply can be very successful. I'll just end with that comment, Mr. Minister.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

Okay. We'll move on to the Minister of Economic Development.

Economic Development

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Chairman, as you know, there are times when I can be mischievous and playful and other times when I can just be relatively simple and direct, and that'll be one of these times.

The $506,000 that we are seeking is based on two areas. The first area: the federal government and the provincial government agreed with the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce to get involved in a World Trade Centre. The federal government put in their money, $3 million were put in by Gaming from Alberta, and Economic Development was responsible for $500,000, so that is our ask tonight, and $6,000 just for new computer hardware for Travel Alberta.

9:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Just a few questions for the minister. Thank you for clarifying that the $500,000 is Alberta's pony up to what the feds were putting in. I'm wondering just about timing here. Since we're so close to the next budget, why didn't the money just come out of the next budget year? Is it because you had enough surplus you could put it in and do your matching now? Or was there a requirement, some kind of guillotine timeline with the feds, that if you don't put it in by the end of March, you've lost it? The minister is nodding at me, so I'm taking it that the feds had set the timelines on this and we had to match it.

Can you give me any kind of a breakdown on how the money is spent? Or do we just hand the money over to Economic Development Edmonton, I think it is, and let them spend it? Or is there some definitive allocation or breakdown on what it's supposed to be spent on? Did we get any kind of indication from the World Trade Centre of what their goals or objectives were in the expenditure of this money? Is there any kind of performance measurement that we can put against it, where we can say: "Well, out of that $500,000 of Alberta taxpayer money we expected to get the following six things, and looking back, we got them"? You know, what's the measurement that we can use for accountability of money spent there?

The computer hardware for the Travel Alberta Secretariat – oh, things are running together in my mind; when was I talking about this recently? Again, what's the timing issue here? Why wasn't this appearing in the budget that was voted on on the 13th of May 2004? Did the Travel Alberta Secretariat not know it was going to need computer hardware at that time? Or did their computers crash or fall out of a window that they had to come to you now and have this money allocated backwards? Or did they just overspend and come and ask for the money to make sure that they didn't go over budget?

So just a few quick questions on that, and thanks for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you. We'll check the Hansard tomorrow and just make sure that I'm providing the proper information, but my understanding is that both the federal government and the Alberta government had agreed to provide the funding before March 31, 2005. It was a capital project rather than operating costs, so there was a proposal made in terms of how the capital would be used. Of course, the normal auditing procedures will be in place.

On the computer hardware, I believe the reason for that was the events that took place after the vote on the budget, and that was the movement, then, in anticipation of the legislation to go to a tourism levy from the old pillow tax.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

We move to the next portfolio. The next one is Environment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Environment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour and pleasure to respond to the supplementary estimates for this year. Let me say that it appears a modest supplement, with about 6 per cent of the average budget for this department of about $122 million. How to assess whether it's appropriate, whether it's too much, too little? They've requested $2 million in upgrades for information technology, 4 and a half million for Alberta waste management assistance, and 1 and a half million for water management and erosion control. I guess around those areas individually there isn't enough detail for me to say what it was about these areas – that is, information technology, waste management, and water management – that wasn't budgetable.

Having recognized that there is such a common need for supplementary estimates, I guess my question as a newcomer is: is there a problem with the budgeting process, and is there some way that we could reduce the amount of supplementary estimates over time? I don't know the answer, and I welcome feedback on that.

In relation to the details of those, I would anticipate further explanation about the allocations in each of those and how it was that these were required. Some explanation, in other words, around each of them would be appreciated.

In summary, then, with the lateness of the hour, who overspent, and why? If the budget is inadequate for this department – and I would argue that for most Albertans the idea of only 5 per cent of the budget of the government of Alberta going to protection of the environment may represent an inadequate support for a very vital department – if that's the case, then I would welcome this department putting forward a stronger case for increasing their budget annually. I would certainly support that, given the appropriate documentation. When will this department receive the appropriate amount, and when will the department apply for that appropriate budget?

Thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

We'll move on to the department and minister for seniors.

Seniors and Community Supports

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the supplementary estimates tonight as well for Alberta Seniors and Community Supports and for the 2004-05 fiscal year. These estimates total 34 and a half million dollars. That includes $30 million for the Alberta seniors' benefit program and 4 and a half million dollars toward support of housing initiatives.

In August 2004 we announced changes to the Alberta seniors' benefit, which is a program that provides lower income seniors with a monthly cash benefit, and $30 million in funding for the Alberta seniors' benefit also allowed an increase in the eligibility thresholds. We added 17,000 more seniors to the program, and in addition seniors who are already receiving the monthly benefit saw annual increases of up to $275 per year. Approximately 142,000 seniors, which is 42 per cent of Alberta seniors, receive a monthly cash benefit under the Alberta seniors' benefit, and the Alberta seniors' benefit now offers the highest monthly payment and the highest income threshold in the country. Mr. Chairman, we are committed to ensuring that the Alberta seniors' benefit continues to focus on lower income seniors who need our help the most.

In addition to this funding for the Alberta seniors' benefit, an additional 4 and a half million dollars was made available for affordable community supportive living, and this funding was transferred from Alberta Infrastructure to Alberta Seniors and Community Supports, with the responsibility for supportive living, to fund the development of new supportive living spaces in the East Central health region. This breaks down to $2.4 million allocated to a new 40-unit seniors' supportive housing project in Vegreville, and $2.1 million was allocated to a new 40-unit seniors' supportive housing project in Wainwright. The funding provides 50 per cent of total project cost and significantly reduces the amount that the management body has to borrow in order to build the project.

These projects help respond to the need for additional affordable supportive living, and they are currently in the design phases, Mr. Chairman. Supportive housing, as we know, is less expensive to build and operate than long-term care. It's estimated that 40 to 50 per cent of people in long-term care could have their needs met through supportive housing. Building affordable supportive housing in rural Alberta helps seniors with high health and personal care needs to remain in their community.

I'd ask that members approve these expenditures, and I have tried to be very quick so that we may have some questions in case there are any questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This afternoon I queried the process of the interim supply, how I thought it appeared to me that budgeting and the dollar projections were lacking in, perhaps, proper planning, and the lack of dollars earmarked for contingencies so that there really shouldn't have been the need for the interim financing. But now, this evening, upon some further study of the supplemental estimates, I feel that my remarks bear some repeating. How on earth would a department be so far off in their budget that they would need $30 million to find enhancements four months after the budget was passed? I'm hoping that it was just a coincidence that the election was just six weeks later.

Although the line items give some description – and I certainly thank the minister for the descriptions that she has given so far – I would ask that she could perhaps elaborate a little bit more, and I ask for some clarification on some further breakdown on how the dollars were spent. I actually had some specific questions regarding the definitions.

The dental and optical coverage that is going to take effect in April of 2005. I do know that the minister and I have actually consulted with the same people that we've spoken with, and I'm sure that this minister is aware of this, as I am, but I'm not sure that everyone else is aware of this: people who do not have proper dentures or their own teeth actually live 10 years shorter, and that's due to the lack of proper nutrition. I'm not sure that you're ready for this at this time of the night, but however. The chewing process that goes on actually doesn't break down the food properly. Then it hits the stomach, and the stomach has to work harder, which is all part of the process of why your lifespan is shorter.

So the dental part of this, I think, is exceedingly important. Just from my own personal experience, sometimes seniors will have small chips on their dentures, and they end up with huge cankers in their mouths that can't be cured, and it's because they haven't had the opportunity to go and have them fixed.

The other thing I wanted to discuss was actually supportive. I'd like a definition on that. You said that, in fact, it is better than long-term care, and I agree to a certain degree. I'm wondering how this has been broken down. Is it assisted living or designated living? With those two designations, do these people pay extra over and above the very minimal amount of home care that they are allowed? Also, was this a P3 project to build these three institutions? Is it a private provider that is actually directing the management? If it was a private developer and it was a P3 sort of set-up, I'm wondering how long the building has been leased for and who would own it at the end of its natural lifespan.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I just need to seek direction. We are about six minutes away to 10 o'clock, and the committee has to at that stage rise and report. Do you want me to proceed with the votes on individual items for the 12 portfolios that we have before us?

An Hon. Member: The vote call is tomorrow.

The Deputy Chair: Tomorrow? Okay.

Hon. Minister for Seniors and Community Service, did you want to respond?

Mrs. Fritz: If it may be helpful to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I can take your questions under advisement. I can respond back to you directly, and then that may assist with moving the vote forward because we should, as you said, Mr. Chairman, vote here by 10 o'clock.

Ms Pastoor: In light of our time constraint I certainly would appreciate that. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Next we have on my list the Executive Council. It's my understanding that there are no questions for the Executive Council.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will move to the next item, which is Finance.

Finance

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, the $1.4 million request from Finance was to deal with reforms in the insurance area. Automobile insurance in Alberta is mandatory. I don't have to remind anyone about that. It's against the law for any driver to get behind a wheel without having insurance for PL and PD on that vehicle.

The changes were made to those laws. It was our responsibility to inform Alberta drivers and other stakeholders, including the industry and medical professionals, about the new system, and that is primarily what that was for. Part of the money was used to develop products designed to educate Albertans and stakeholders. This involved a comprehensive brochure, it involved radio and newspaper advertising. That is really what the $1.4 million was for.

I should just note that reform saved Alberta drivers about $200 million at that point.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My opening comments would be to congratulate this minister and her ministry for being one of the more prudent ministries in terms of their spending and only the one item in particular that is overbudget, which I'm pleased to see.

I do, however – and I recognize that I only have a minute or two – have a couple of questions. My first would be: I'm curious; she did not really explain why this money was not allocated in the 2004 budget, so I would like to know why that expenditure wasn't identified back in May of last year.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I'm wondering if there have been any steps taken to ensure that it won't happen again. I alluded earlier this afternoon to the fact that we're anxiously awaiting a report from the automobile insurance review board that the minister has requested, and I'm wondering if there may be some thought to doing another advertising campaign such as that one.

Lastly, I guess, I was just wondering if there's any performance measure to identify how effective that particular advertising campaign was in terms of informing Albertans of the new legislation.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, in the interest of being able to move on to another department, I will give you a complete answer in writing. However, I would just say that the reforms started in October of 2004. It was very difficult, if not impossible, to predict what the final reforms were going to be and to plan what type of information you might be required to present to Albertans. Finance simply just did not have that number of resources planned for that.

But I will give you more information on the performance, how we base it. Part of it is the savings.

But it would be nice if we could get one more department before you tonight.

Mr. Mason: Hon. minister, if I may, $1,400,000 for advertising of a very controversial reform, and I use the term "reform" advisedly. Could you please provide us with, you know, what that was actually spent on and what the key messages were? How much went into advertising on television and so on? All of the components of that.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: I will, but as I just explained, there was a brochure that was developed that went to households. Insurance is a very complex business, and the insurance reform was a very lengthy discussion with consumers and with the industry.

I would say to date we've had considerable success in our province. I gauge that by the number of people I hear from that are pleased, those that seem to have a problem that we are able to straighten out for them very quickly, and the fact that we have 72 companies in this province that are offering mandatory insurance that Alberta drivers must carry. Alberta drivers have saved about $200 million, in our latest estimation, because of those reforms. That's not a bad benchmark.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration of estimates, I would invite the Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2004-2005 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 17, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/03/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, our historic comment of the day. On March 17, 1937, the Hon. Philip C.H. Primrose died in Edmonton, having served as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor for six months. The Hon. Colonel Primrose was known for his long and distinguished career with the North West Mounted Police, now known as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He was the first Lieutenant Governor of Alberta to die in office, and his was the first state funeral in the history of the province of Alberta.

As I sit, may I wish all the best to all those of Irish descent.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 83 grade 6 students who are accompanied by their teachers and parent helpers. They are from the Gibbons school in my constituency. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students and their chaperones sitting in the members' gallery who are from the Canadian University College, which is an independent school of advanced education in Lacombe. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the hard-working members of the Northern Alberta Development Council, who are meeting in Edmonton today. Joining us are Carmen Ewing from Girouxville, Helen Henderson from High Prairie, Gary Pollock from Swan Hills, Maurice Rivard from Bonnyville, Harvey Yoder from Lac La Biche, and Michael Ouellette from Grande Prairie. They're also accompanied by three staff members from Peace River: Allen Geary, Audrey DeWit, and Jennifer Bisley.

Mr. Speaker, these individuals are to be commended for their dedication and advancement of northern Alberta development through regional initiatives in partnership with the private sector and community-based organizations. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise, if they would, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of individuals in the public gallery that I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. I'd ask them to please rise as I call their names. Ed Koning is a Fabry patient and chair of the Fabry Society of Canada. Frank Koning is the father of two Fabry patients and the grandfather of one Fabry patient. Audrey Koning is a Fabry patient and the mother of two Fabry patients and the grandmother of one Fabry patient. Ross Perri is also a Fabry patient, and Helen Tsenekos is president of the Canadian Organization for Rare Disorders, a national group encouraging the development of an orphan drug policy in Canada. I ask all members to join me in welcoming these individuals to our Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the most important services my constituency office provides is to assist constituents in gaining access to important government services. I'm truly fortunate to have Wes Carter, a social work student and a part-time employee in my office, to help with this work. I would like to introduce him to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. I would ask Mr. Carter to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a member of my constituency. Joni Wilde, a teacher from the Magrath high school and the special needs co-ordinator, is here in Edmonton attending the Asperger's and autism conference at the U of A. I would like her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm most pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 34 students from the La Crete public school accompanied by Mr. Morgan Coates, Mr. Richard Coburn, Mr. Steve Cole, Mrs. Mary Driedger, Mrs. Mary Wiebe, Mrs. Agnes Wiebe, Mr. Peter Neufeld, and Mr. Henry Harder as adult chaperones. They've travelled nearly a thousand kilometres to be with us today, and they're so in tune with the political process that they included on my notes that they want highway 88 paved. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect nothing less than the truth from their government. Yesterday in response to a question on government meetings with the disgraced Enron corporation the Premier stated: "I don't recall any discussions whatsoever with Enron. None." And he even went "none" – like that – for emphasis. However, an e-mail between senior Enron officials dated September 2000 has as its subject heading "Project Stanley - Recent Meetings with Alberta Government and TransAlta." Project Stanley was the code name Enron used for its market manipulation scheme in Alberta. To the Premier: is he now prepared to admit that Enron officials did in fact meet with officials from his government while Enron was ripping off Alberta consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea if Enron officials met with officials. I don't recall – and that is the truth – personally meeting with any officials from Enron. If Enron officials had meetings with our officials, I know nothing of that, but I will have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the specifics as to any meetings with officials. I can say this: Enron clearly was here as a participant in the marketplace. In fact, the investigation and the incidents with allegations to Enron go back to 1999, predating even that question. Investigations were and did occur. There wasn't sufficient evidence at that stage to proceed further. New information has come to light. The MSA continues to act on behalf of protecting Albertans by investigating this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: then since the Premier doesn't know now who met, will he investigate who in his government did meet with the Enron officials and what they discussed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister has heard the request, and I will assume that he will take appropriate measures.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that at least 5,600 pages of records of communications between this government and Enron are known to exist, will this government turn those records over to the Competition Bureau for investigation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the market surveillance administrator will do whatever he deems appropriate in terms of turning documents over to the federal Competition Bureau, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it is the market surveillance administrator that initiated the investigation in the first place. It is they that worked in conjunction with the federal Competition Bureau. At any time when new information comes forward, you want to assess and get to whether it's valid or not. At this stage it still is just information. There's been no evidence to substantiate it, but they take it very seriously. They are examining all the documents they specifically requested. They've taken the proactive question, and they are working to protect Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Enron was not the only company profiting because of this Progressive Conservative government's weak and indifferent attitude. This government allowed TransAlta and Powerex to set electricity prices at the Power Pool of Alberta in the spring and summer of 2000, causing consumers' power bills to skyrocket. The megabucks for megawatts scandal grows. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that during April of the year 2000 76 per cent of the time that electricity prices were more than $498 per megawatt – Powerex was the reason – why did this Progressive Conservative government sit idly by while Alberta's electricity market was being dominated by Powerex and prices were skyrocketing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's put some things into perspective. Powerex would only be through a tie-line to B.C. It's a very minor part of the power. It would only be a maximum of 600 megawatts. You still had at that stage about 7,000 to 8,000 megawatts of power that were available to consumers in Alberta. The market surveillance administrator has been a watchdog. They continue to watch prices as they happen throughout the days. If there are any abnormalities, they do investigate and they do follow through on these things.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that this Progressive Conservative government gave the hydro power purchase arrangements to TransAlta for next to nothing, hydro being the cheapest source of electricity in Alberta, how could this government allow TransAlta to set the power prices for so long and for so high without any investigation?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, one of the great accomplishments of having a market prevail is that those that trade are allowed to trade their goods and services in a marketplace. It's not a matter of setting prices. Any time you trade a commodity, you bid. There's an ask and a bid price, and you trade the commodity. It's no different on the stock markets. It's no different in the electricity market. Those things are very regular and anticipated by the marketplace.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if this Progressive Conservative government is too weak and too indifferent to investigate the Enron scandal in Alberta, how will it now not investigate the price-setting strategies of both Powerex and TransAlta? Do the right thing: protect consumers.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we've answered these questions numerous times. The intent is to just try to slander. We still are looking for evidence. We'd invite any evidence. We always ask for the evidence so that we can make the appropriate judicial issues in this. The market surveillance administrator is and does act to protect Albertans every day.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Software Licences for Schools

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Late last year in a deal described as unprecedented, the ministry of learning cut a cheque to Microsoft for $6.3 million for software licences for Alberta's educational institutions, yet just months earlier Ontario signed a remarkably similar deal with Sun Microsystems for little more than shipping costs. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Why was this government so eager to write Bill Gates a big fat cheque when Ontario scarcely had to write one at all?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a question with specifics relative to two sets of contracts which he has neither had the courtesy nor the foresight to provide any information about ahead of time so that he could get an answer to the question. So the public watching and the members of the Legislature hearing that question are supposed to take at face value his assumption that the two contracts are similar in any way, shape, or form, that they deal with the same types of items, that they have any relevance to each other. I'm not prepared to do that, and I don't think anybody else should be.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can the minister advise this Assembly and all Alberta taxpayers as to whether this contract was appropriately tendered, allowing all interested companies to compete fairly?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd be more than happy to get the details with respect to the contract and provide the hon. member details as are appropriate.

Mr. Taylor: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Given these misspent millions, what is the minister's department doing and going to tell communities such as Bruderheim and Strathearn whose schools are threatened with closure in the name of system efficiency?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm under the understanding that Bruderheim is staying open. Our department is looking at all the contracts right now to make sure that we are adhering to all of our government policy and rules.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Southeast Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On January 25 the Conservative government left the public and the news media with the distinct impression that there would be a small $4 million savings if the southeast Edmonton ring road was built as a P3. However, this is contradicted by an internal document provided exclusively to government MLAs which said that it could cost up to $41 million more to build the ring road as a P3. I will table this document at an appropriate time. My question is to the Premier. How does the Premier explain the discrepancy between the facts given to government MLAs and the spin given to the rest of us about the comparative costs of building the ring road as a P3 or building it conventionally?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this question was asked of me by the media, fed obviously by the ND opposition. My answer to the media was that we're seeking as many innovative ways of up fronting the costs of infrastructure projects as we possibly can. I also indicated to the media that this is a 30-year project, and outside of one of the ND opposition none of us will really live long enough to see the completion of the project.

Mr. Mason: Well, that's reassuring, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the Premier: why did the government leave the false impression with the news media and the public that there would be a $4 million savings by building the ring road as a P3 when the government knew that it could just as easily have cost $41 million more to do it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to set the record straight, this hon. member would have us take $43 million out of the bank. As I said to the media: $43 million for the Anthony Henday, $43 million for something else, $43 million for something else, $43 million for something else. Pretty soon you're up to $430 million, and then double that and you're close to a billion dollars. You know, they talk about $43 million as if it's peanuts.

Relative to the actual costs of the project, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: Well, I think we'll get back to the next one, perhaps. The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why does the government keep pretending to be transparent about P3s when they fail to disclose information relative to the actual costs if the government had built it through conventional means? Will he table the documents?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The number that the hon. leader of the third party is referring to is $451 million, which was a public-sector comparator, which was a public-sector estimate on that particular project. On any public-sector comparator there is a 10 per cent on either side, which brought it up to $497 million. The actual amount came up to $493 million. [interjections] The Auditor General has been involved in every step of the process. If they want to laugh, laugh at the Auditor General.

Senate Reform

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, a majority of Canadians in every province support reform of the federal Senate to make it an effective and elected body. A triple-E Senate has been the priority of Alberta governments for the past 25 years. Thanks to our Premier, Albertans were given the opportunity to elect four new Senators-elect last November. Unfortunately, the Liberal Prime Minister of Canada has now indicated that he will not appoint the four Alberta Senators-in-waiting as part of his new round of Senatorial appointments. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is the Alberta government doing to push ahead the issue of Senate reform and get our elected Senators appointed?

The Speaker: The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Alberta has taken the most significant step compared to any jurisdiction in Canada, and that is to offer Albertans a choice of electing a list of Senators to be appointed by the Prime Minister. What has happened is that even though the Prime Minister talked about some democratic reforms, he stepped away from taking, I think, a leadership role and appointing at least one of the four to the three vacant positions we have currently in Alberta. Since the election, the Premier and I have written to our counterparts. The Premier wrote to the Prime Minister asking him to select from the list. I have met with our counterpart in Quebec, our counterpart in Ottawa. We have met with all of the Senators-elect to talk about the next steps, and we are proceeding quite vigorously with other jurisdictions on this particular file.

Dr. Morton: To the same minister: do you have other plans to push the appointment of Senators to the second Chamber? Going forward from now, please.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to Senate reform. This year our Premier will be chairing the Council of the Federation. The Council of the Federation, to Albertans, is the meeting of all of the Premiers and territorial leaders, and that will be held in Alberta this year with our Premier chairing. At this time we're working with the four Senate nominees to see how we can move this onto the agenda. One of them, of course, is to work with department officials in setting up a schedule for the four nominees to talk to other provincial counterparts and also to the federal government in promoting Senate reform in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: No further questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Game Farming

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of agriculture yesterday clearly demonstrated his lack of understanding of the science of chronic wasting disease and other TSEs and the threat they pose. To the Premier: does the Premier recognize the danger of chronic wasting disease, and will he ensure that we eliminate the possibility of risk materials entering both the human food chain and the animal food chain?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development respond. But in answer to the preamble, certainly I'm aware and concerned about the risks relative to CWD and BSE or any other disease that affects animals that might have an impact on the public as well.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have a fairly good knowledge of the risks associated with CWD, BSE, and CJD, or Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, that's associated with BSE. As I said yesterday, there has never been a case of CJD that's been linked back to chronic wasting disease, and to suggest that there's a health risk in Canada when there is no science to support that association is irresponsible to the industry in this province. I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member doesn't understand the industry as well as the science.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: if the science does indicate a human health risk, will he commit to a ban on all game farming activities, including the movement of animals and their products?

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, that's speculation.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier finally fulfill his written commitment of December 1992? And I quote: I am fully committed to putting the privatization/commercialization of wildlife issue through a thorough and public assessment.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's a legitimate question. That has indeed been done. As a matter of fact, there was a great debate in caucus – I don't know if it took place in the Legislature – relative to not game farming so much as game shooting of wildlife that is domesticated on game farms. That was rejected quite soundly. But we are diligent in making sure that any material that poses a risk to animals or humans is kept out of the animal food chain and, more importantly, the human food chain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

North American Trade

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. There's no doubt that Alberta's trading relationship with the U.S. is a vital part of our economy. In 2003 U.S. imports made up almost 90 per cent of Alberta's exports, by far our most important export market. Albertans are concerned about the ongoing trade irritants such as softwood lumber and BSE. U.S. trade laws are extremely complex, therefore making it difficult to resolve trade issues that affect Alberta's industry. Can the minister tell the House what Alberta is doing to push for freer open trade?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. There are a number of very serious trade issues, most importantly BSE and, of course, softwood lumber. The department has been working very closely with our federal counterparts in trying to find some solutions to these outstanding issues. Clearly, Alberta has pushed forward some new ideas with respect to North American trade. For example, we're looking at a customs union, a NAFTA-plus solution to deal with these very complex trade issues, that are costing our economy virtually billions of dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a follow-up question to the same minister. A tri-national report on March 14 calls for harmonized trade tariffs for nations outside North America as well as a North American energy strategy. Has the government of Alberta been consulted, and will the government of Alberta be a full partner in the development of Canada's position?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the study in question is an important step in the direction of dealing with some of these trade issues. Really, among the proposals is one of common low tariffs, and another one is looking at the whole regulatory regime, not only Canada/U.S. but Canada, U.S., and Mexico. We will be working very closely with the federal government, of course, because they'll be at the table dealing with these issues, to see how we can best position Alberta's interests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplement is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What effect will the Canadian Cattlemen for Fair Trade's NAFTA challenge have on the USDA's next actions in overturning the Montana judge's decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe that it's in the best interests of the USDA and the government of the United States to appeal the decision as soon as possible, and we wait moment by moment for that decision to happen. In order for the appeal to be successful, we believe that the USDA should be concentrating as many resources as they possibly can towards that effort.

It's important to remember that under chapter 11 the challenges are about financial damages, so even if the border were to open – and we hope it opens very, very soon – the Canadian Cattlemen for Fair Trade would still be available to go forward with their challenge for damages, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Rural Development Strategies

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has entered into another rural development strategic plan. These plans seem high on ideals but small on delivery, for example the transfer of ambulances, leaving rural municipalities underfunded. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what other areas are being ignored, such as attracting doctors to rural communities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have been meeting with the family physicians and the rural physicians on this very subject. I think we're well planned, and there's a good strategy that helps not only the rural doctors but their families accommodate to life in rural Alberta. There's extensive work going on with the communities, with the health authorities to make sure that there's work done to network and make rural physicians feel comfortable in communities. With our ARP, our alternative compensations for doctors involved in academic institutions – it gives them an opportunity to earn money as sessional lecturers – we are doing a lot to both place those physicians in rural communities and to network them with local academic institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the minister of infrastructure: when will this ministry implement the recommendation of the rural development strategy to keep rural schools open?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely great to be able to talk on that question. Rural Alberta has some very interesting demographics these days. One of the things that is occurring is that the number of students in rural Alberta actually seems to be decreasing. One of the challenges that we have is keeping the rural schools open so that those kids that are in rural Alberta will have exactly the same learning opportunities that the kids do in urban Alberta. One of the ways – and we could go on and on with all the ministries here, such as the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency to deal with the SuperNet. Mr. Speaker, quite simply, we are very much in favour of keeping rural schools open and keeping good education for the rural students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: what help other than building the twice-delayed SuperNet can this ministry offer the other ministries to properly implement the rural development strategy?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was one of the authors of the rural development initiative, and I'm going to grow my rubber arm here and pat myself on the back because I thought it was a very good strategy.

SuperNet was a part of that strategy, and it will help with schools that are going down in population a little bit. In fact, in the last two weeks we've just lit up 26 more communities, I think I have here. We've opened up Acme, Barnwell, Bearspaw, Beiseker, Bezanson, Bow Island, Burdett, Caroline, Coaldale, Cremona, Crooked Creek, Falun.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Office in Washington

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Premier will be travelling to Washington, D.C., next week to officially open the Alberta office in Washington. My questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is the role of the Alberta office in Washington, D.C.?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since 90 per cent of Alberta's exports go to the United States of America, it makes very good sense to have a full-time presence in Washington. We found out very clearly during the BSE announcement in 2003 that we didn't have a go-to person. Essentially, the role of the office there is to build relationships with our American counterparts. You know, it's a full body contact sport. You have to see the people across the table, meet them on a regular basis, and get Alberta's point of view across to every decision-maker in Washington.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplemental question is also to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What has the Alberta office done so far to get the attention of decision-makers in Washington, D.C.?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, clearly, since the office has been fully staffed, our envoy there has had two very important articles in the New York Times, explaining Alberta's position on energy. It has also set up many meetings with state representatives, met with many of the policy decision-makers. I might add that when we talk about body contact sport, we've got a person that's a good weight to carry on the duty for us in Washington.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Fabry Disease

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fabry disease is a rare, life-threatening genetic disorder that causes patients to suffer excruciating pain and often leads to kidney and heart failure as well as strokes and premature death. A treatment is available for Fabry patients, but because of the high cost for that treatment, Fabry sufferers cannot afford it on their own. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When will the government give Albertans suffering from Fabry disease assurance of the ongoing access to enzyme replacement therapy they so desperately need?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to say two things. First of all, I want to thank the hon. member opposite for alerting our office to the fact that this disease was going to be mentioned in the House today because it's clearly very important for those that are enduring pain and suffering, usually in the fifth decade of their life, to know what is happening with this.

Because of a concern because both Fabryzyme and Replagal were not going to be available, according to the information we had from the drug providers, I raised with the federal government the question about this type of therapy being provided for patients in Alberta or across Canada, where we have some, I believe, 250 people suffering, about 15 in Alberta. What has been initiated is a review at the national level of how we can conduct clinical trials of this type of therapy when, in actual fact, there are only about 3,000 people worldwide with this disease, and the normal number of people to have such therapeutic assessment is much higher. What the national government has initiated in co-operation with British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, and Nova Scotia is a review of whether or not we can place a different trial methodology in place to make sure that we can more fast-track these kinds of approvals for patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. What we need to know is if the minister is going to help these people. Will you provide bridge or interim funding for the enzyme replacement therapy today until an orphan drug policy or the results of your review come into effect in Canada? How do they get from today to then?

Ms Evans: In fact, a bridging program will be in place, and next week our officials will be talking again federally about a national program that can assist with this. I believe it's fair to say that the federal minister is also engaged. This is a national regulatory problem as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Finally, will the minister be willing to meet with Fabry sufferers before the end of the month to explain this to them personally?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I cannot promise or commit to meet with Fabry sufferers individually or collectively before the end of the month; I am rather cramped for time. But I can assure Fabry sufferers and will do so, both with this type of communication and others, that we are working to do our due diligence so that the most important thing that can happen will be some support for Fabry sufferers with this very costly therapy, which runs at about $300,000 per patient per year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Border Closure to Canadian Cattle

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government strategy for opening the U.S. border to Canadian cattle is twofold: one is hope and pray, and the real trump card is to cozy up to George Bush. Now, no wonder the government is failing to support grassroots Alberta cattle producers, who are launching a legal challenge under NAFTA on their own time and at their own expense. My question is, of course, to the hon. Premier. How can the government justify turning its back on grassroots Alberta producers, who unlike this government understand that you sometimes have to play hardball with Americans to get their attention?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the whole issue of retaliatory action has been discussed, and we decided not to do it because we do value our relationship with the USDA and the United States administration. I value, personally, my relationship with Vice-President Dick Cheney. I value my relationship and the government's relationship with President Bush. We value our relationship with the Secretary of Agriculture in the U.S. administration. That is the administration of the U.S.

There's a different tone, of course, within the political arm, particularly the Senate, and there's a different tone within the judiciary. The group of cattle people the hon. member alludes to are seeking redress on the judicial side, but we will seek to maintain a very strong and meaningful relationship with the administration.

Mr. Martin: It's nice that you're a buddy with Dick and George, but I guess the question that Alberta producers want to know is: how's it working for you so far in getting the Alberta border opened?

Mr. Klein: I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, it's better to be buddies with those people than some of the ND leaders who have come across unsuccessfully in this country from time to time. I'll tell you that for sure. But I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take a little bit of offence to the comments that we are leaving our producers high and dry on this issue. We are not. In fact, if the hon. member would care to contact the industry and ask them what their opinion is, he would find that we are working hand in hand with their strategies, including the Alberta Beef Producers, including the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, including the American Meat Institute, including the National Cattlemen's Beef Association in the United States, including the National Meat Association in the United States, including the USDA.

It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that R-CALF, being the left-leaning protectionist group that they are, is closer to the hon. member's thinking than ours is, and it's probably unfortunate that he's not getting that.

Mr. Martin: Well, there's a third strategy, Mr. Speaker: meetings.

I guess my question, then, is to either the Premier or the minister of agriculture. What exactly is the downside in supporting grassroots Alberta cattle producers on their challenge? What is the downside to this?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister supplement, but I can tell you that the six-point program that has been put in place by this department of agriculture, the Alberta department of agriculture, has gone a long way to sustain the beef industry in this province. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate the hon. member hasn't talked to some of his NDP colleagues across Canada as well because I can tell you that the federal/provincial ministers are working hand in hand in this on a team. They agree with the approach that we've taken. The Alberta beef industry agrees with our approach, and those are the grassroots people who are involved in this industry.

We are also taking initiative through our Washington office and legal counsel and legal advice there as well as working, as I said, hand in hand with the legal counsel of the Alberta Beef Producers, with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, and with the other farm organizations that are most definitely affected by this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, a study on electricity prices by the internationally recognized London Economics group referenced this week at a conference in Banff has concluded that, in fact, purported lower rates in Ontario and Manitoba aren't such a bargain after all with hidden costs such as taxpayer-funded development of power plants, therefore making Alberta's rates very competitive. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Has he seen the report, and if so, is he prepared to table it in this Assembly so all members, including the opposition, have all the facts when it comes to questions on electricity rates in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of the report. I have not yet seen the report. It's being finalized later this week. We're hoping it will be available next week. When it is available, I'll be more than happy to table that report so all members of this Assembly can see that Albertans truly are getting good value for their electricity and that there is an Alberta electricity advantage.

The one thing I would like to say is that there are two key factors that came out of that report. One, it does talk about how electricity is generated being a very key part of cost of electricity. Those that have substantial amounts of hydroelectricity have the cheapest power. One of the topography issues of Alberta is that we don't have a lot of hydroelectricity.

Secondly and probably more important to see is that in most of the other jurisdictions the provinces accumulated debt, be it through Crown corporations or directly onto their own provincial books, to build and/or pay for this. If you just took Ontario as an example, if the debt that they've accumulated was added to the bill of every Ontario resident, it would add $100 per month for five years to pay for the debt that they've not put through the electricity bill.

Mr. Liepert: Again to the same minister: is he aware of any similar studies being undertaken which show the true cost of power generation to the taxpayer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of studies to date looking at and comparing electricity costs across this country and in North America. Not many of them, if any, have really gone into the true costs of electricity, as the hon. member had suggested. But we do know that if the provinces had shown the true costs, if they had allocated all the costs to the electricity bill, their bills would likely have been in the range of 25 to 30 per cent higher. Those are being added through the taxpayer rates. Those costs, at least in Alberta, are clear, are transparent, and are known.

I could cite that even without that, by comparing some bills across the country – Quebec Hydro, for example, did a survey. They said that Edmonton had the cheapest power rates out of 21 jurisdictions in North America. The only four that beat Edmonton's rate happened to have been hydrogenerated areas and none of them with the substantial growth that Alberta has had.

Mr. Liepert: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As a result of studies and facts and data, what benefits do Albertans receive because we have a competitive marketplace in power versus Crown-owned utilities?

The Speaker: Well, hon. minister, we're getting into a lot of opinions here with respect to government policy, so I think we're just going to move on.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You have an answer that's brief?

Mr. Melchin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important. Given all the talk that goes out trying to put innuendos that electricity deregulation hasn't worked, it's important that we also talk about the many successes that have been accomplished. Over 3,300 megawatts of power . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I could not agree with you more. This is not a debate. I ask you and the hon. member to read Beauchesne 407, 408, 409, 410, and a whole bunch of others.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Public Service Pension Appeals

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every day I'm hearing concerns from retired public-sector employees from all across this province regarding the serious concerns that they have with the funding of their pensions and expressing concerns with the inadequate appeals process. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why does this minister allow a pension appeal process that leaves thousands of Albertans feeling frustrated?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not been made aware by any of the groups in the pension plans that they are dissatisfied with the appeal process. I'd be more than happy to receive that information from the hon. member with some documentation.

We take the management of pensions very seriously, and the pension board takes the management of pensions very seriously. Certainly, if the hon. member has some information that he would like to share with me on the appeal process, I'd be very pleased to sit down and talk with him about it and look at it.

Mr. R. Miller: It's on its way.

To the same minister, then. Why doesn't this government follow the example of British Columbia and publish very clear guidelines for pension appeals on the government's websites just like B.C. does?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again a very good suggestion. I'll take that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the same minister: can the minister explain to average Albertans why Steve West gets $180,000 severance for eight months' work, while Martha and Henry can't get any satisfaction on their pension appeals?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's a bit of a stretch tying those two issues together. One is strictly a contractual arrangement. Pensions, of course, are a contractual arrangement also but of a very, very different kind because you're looking at retirement dollars in those cases.

As I indicated in my first answer, if indeed thousands of Albertans are concerned because they haven't an appeal process that's satisfactory to them, if thousands of Albertans are concerned that they're not getting the information they require, if you would share that information with me. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not getting, indeed, even tens of letters on the issue, let alone thousands. But I take the hon. member at his word. If he's getting that kind of information, share it. We'll discuss it, and we'll look at ways that we can rectify it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Energy Innovation Network

Mr. Knight: On Wednesday, March 16, a simultaneous launch of the Energy Innovation Network took place in Calgary and Ottawa. The announcement indicated that Alberta in association with other provincial jurisdictions and the federal government will partner with industry and postsecondary institutions to explore innovation programs to enhance Canada's energy future. To the Minister of Innovation and Science: what assurances can the minister give Albertans that public money supporting this initiative will be productive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Energy Innovation Network, otherwise known as EnergyINet, has been work that's been under way for a couple of years, initiated by the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which really looks to solve and address two long-term problems, and that is having a secure long-term energy supply for all Canadians as well as making it environmentally responsible. So innovation is at the convergence of energy and the environment, and I'm convinced that this is going to be successful because we do have the support of a number of different provinces, the industry, and the federal government. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that affects all Canadians, and we have to address this on a long-term, strategic, priority basis.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: to what extent has the energy industry in Canada come on board to support this initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Industry is a major significant partner of this initiative. They see it to their benefit that we continue to view and pursue technologies to improve our extractions and integration of extraction of the hydrocarbon resources that are here. Just as an example, we leave about 40 per cent of the gas and 72 per cent of the oil in the ground in the conventional oils. Just a minor improvement in technology, and we'll find a whole new Alberta underground.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: what does this initiative do to ensure environmentally responsible development of energy projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the pieces of this puzzle are: on one point we have environmental principles; on the other side we have economic principles. How we link these two principles together is through what I refer to as the technology that the ministers have talked about, and that technology is the link in terms of how we act responsibly to demonstrate to future generations that we are and continue to be good stewards of our environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Physiotherapy Services

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Strains and sprains are among the most common workplace injuries. Lost time and productivity from these injuries are a huge cost to employers, workers, and the WCB system. With public treatment like physiotherapy scarce because of health region restriction and delisting because these regions aren't funded properly, Albertans now look to workplace health plans and the WCB for relief. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is this government shifting the cost in provision of these health services to private health plans and the WCB?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. To start with, it is an issue that's been around a long time, but as you're aware, the WCB is an independent operation funded fully – funded fully – by the private industry, and it's managed by the private industry. We have as a government, of course, legislation to ensure that proper coverage is provided to employees and employers out there.

In relation to selecting the processes they use in order to look after the medical issues they may run into, it is a decision that they make that we're not involved in.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Is the emphasis on government restructuring dedicated to cutting services and creating additional and expensive payroll costs for Albertans and Alberta employers?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that's a great question because the answer is: absolutely not.

Mr. Backs: Another question to the same minister: is the restriction on physiotherapy services an attempt to create lower wage, private, profit centres for friends of this government?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Pork Exports

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Happy St. Patrick's Day to you as well. As I was eating my bacon and eggs this morning, I was thinking about some of my constituents who are hog producers. They're concerned by a recent U.S. government decision on pork tariffs. Although they were pleased at the ruling that they are not receiving unfair government subsidies, the antidumping duty was upheld. My questions are all for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the government doing to ensure fair trading relations with the U.S.?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a topic that's been covered quite substantially in the House today in question period, but I can agree with the hon. member that we're quite concerned about groups in the United States that resort to trade actions rather than sitting down and negotiating good trade agreements. The protectionist trade actions impose wide-ranging costs on all of our industry, Mr. Speaker.

As the hon. member mentioned, we were pleased the U.S. government dismissed the claim that Canadian hog producers are unfairly subsidized, but on the other side of the coin, we were clearly disappointed with the antidumping ruling. It is an investigation that is ongoing right now and will continue. The antidumping investigation is not finished. The U.S. International Trade Commission has to make its final injury determination. Right now the U.S. is experiencing record pork exports and a period of strong prices, which we believe will make it difficult to argue that the U.S. producers are being harmed by any imports from Canada, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. What does this ruling really mean for Alberta's pork producers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a little clarity is probably required. At this stage, no antidumping duties will be imposed on swine exports. However, the U.S. will require bonds or cash deposits on swine imports to be posted by the importers of record. The U.S. investigation into the matter is not over, as I said, but we do expect a final determination to be made on April 18. We remain confident, as I said, that the investigation will show that this is not harming American producers.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the first of four to participate today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly eight students from the Rosedale Christian school in my riding accompanied by Miss Diane Klassen, Mrs. Janet Wohlgemuth, Mr. Lee Wohlgemuth, Mrs. Brenda Schartner, and Mr. Delmar

Schartner. They're visiting today and having a tour of the Legislature and have an opportunity here to see question period in action. I would ask them to rise, please, and to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Peace River, you introduced your charges a little earlier, but they weren't here. Do you want to say something again?

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The guests that I introduced to the record moments ago have now arrived in the gallery, and I would like to take this opportunity to formally introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a group of 34 students from the La Crete public school accompanied by eight adults. They've travelled about as far as you can travel in Alberta to visit our capital, and I ask these great champions of highway 88 to please stand and accept the welcome of this House.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mountain of Heroes Foundation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share an Albertan good-news story. The Calgary-based Mountain of Heroes Foundation recently held their inaugural awards gala dinner. Five local citizens were honoured.

Christianna Wood-Roddick, who initiated "Christianna's cause" at the tender age of 10. After the tragic death of her mother a year ago Christianna has raised $35,000 for the Aventa program, which her mother founded. Aventa is an AADAC funded group that attends to the addiction treatment of women.

Eva Davis, a concentration camps survivor, has raised two successful sons, run a small business, and taught tolerance to a whole new generation, partially through the gift of song.

Kevin Mark was on his way to the NHL in 1982 before he was paralyzed from the neck down during a hockey game. He's now an accomplished engineer and a distinguished speaker who has personally raised over $300,000 for the Calgary Handi-Bus Association.

As a youth Pat Nixon was aimless and living on the street. He's gone on to become the executive director for the Mustard Seed Street Ministry, which not only provides food and lodging for the homeless but also supplies employment training to get its clients off the street.

Finally, Dr. Harvey Rabin founded the southern cystic fibrosis adult clinic at the Foothills Hospital in 1979, and he continues to run it today although he is not paid for his time spent as clinic director.

Mr. Speaker, my wife, Jennifer, and I founded the foundation a few years ago, and we thank our board members: Nicki Perkins, a CF survivor who chaired the awards event; her husband, Dean Perkins; Colleen and Dave Zeller; and Wayne Logan.

We shared a wonderful evening with our heroes, our sponsors, the public, and the media. Proceeds from the event were dedicated to fund the research of Dr. Mody, a Calgary scientist who is doing world-class work on cystic fibrosis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to share this good news story.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

2:30 Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to the Canadian Agricultural Safety Week campaign, which ran March 9 through to the 16. This year's theme was Safety is in the Details, with a focus on seniors on the farm. Farmers over the age of 60 represent only 13 per cent of the farming population, but they accounted for almost 40 per cent of the total farm-related deaths in the past five years. One death is too many. This number is unacceptable. We must do better. In 2004 there were more than 1,500 farm-related injuries and 15 farm-related fatalities in Alberta. Sadly, five were children.

Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development plays an active role in providing farmers with information that promotes farm safety year-round. This year Alberta Agriculture is involved with a number of contests to increase farm safety awareness among people of all ages. The highlight of this year's safety week was Farm Safety Idol, which encouraged people to nominate someone they believe is a role model for farm safety. A farm safety newsletter and a kids' club were also launched.

With more than 50,000 farms in Alberta many Albertans are already aware of the importance of safe farming practices. Canadian Agricultural Safety Week aims to increase awareness for people working at and visiting farm operations because we want Alberta farms to continue to be a safe place to grow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Aboriginal Workforce Participation Initiative

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 3 the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development signed an historic agreement, the aboriginal workforce participation initiative, in the city of Grande Prairie. I say historic because this partnership is the first such agreement between Canada, a province, and a municipality.

Mr. Speaker, we are becoming increasingly aware of the skill shortages faced by employers across Canada, especially in the resource-rich areas of our province. We know, too, that aboriginal people, the fastest growing segment of the Canadian population, constitute an increasingly educated, readily available local workforce eager to take their place in our economy.

Therefore, aboriginal workforce participation initiative agreements like the one signed in Grande Prairie represent a win-win solution for all of us. This partnership brings together provincial ministries including Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and Alberta Human Resources and Employment, the federal government, forward-thinking municipalities such as Grande Prairie, and our world-class education system. Most importantly, the AWPI bridges relations between employers and Alberta's First Nations and Métis people.

Under the aboriginal workforce participation initiative employers undertake to identify both systemic and attitudinal barriers within their workplaces and to work with aboriginal people to reduce or eliminate those barriers. This is another milestone on the road to successful employment strategies for Grande Prairie and region and the full participation of local aboriginal people in Alberta's economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Ethical Investments

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in this Assembly I asked some serious questions of the Minister of Finance regarding ethical investing or lack thereof of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Albertans are particularly concerned about the investment of $10 million in various tobacco companies, but I expanded the questioning to include companies that have questionable human rights records. They might be involved in child labour or even perhaps the manufacturing of weapons of mass destruction. The Minister of Finance clearly stated that the overriding consideration of the Investment Operations Committee was the return on investment or, in other words, how much money we can make regardless of morals or ethics.

She went on to correctly point out that the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund is an all-party committee. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this committee did meet this past Monday, and I'm very pleased to inform the Assembly that the two opposition members who sit on the committee did raise the issue of ethical investing. It was at that time reinforced by government members on the committee that return on investment is the primary factor in deciding whether or not to make an investment in any given company.

This raises serious questions, again, as to where we would draw the line. There are now several pornography websites which are publicly traded, and they return a very handsome profit to their shareholders. The same is true of a number of offshore brotels, again known to be quite a profitable industry in jurisdictions where prostitution is legalized. What if marijuana were ever to be legalized? Are we going to be the proud shareholders in legalized grow ops just because we can make a quick buck?

Mr. Speaker, Talisman Energy is an example of a company which recognized and responded to legitimate public concerns. It is our sincere hope that the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee will listen to the advice of our members and do the same.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition with 310 signatures on it. The petition urges the government to institute a fair and equitable floor price for cattle.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present the first 102 petitioners on a petition asking the government to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines." Many of them, I just note, are from the fine Alberta communities of Mirror, Vermilion, Sexsmith, Coleman, Bashaw, Pincher Creek, Leduc . . .

The Speaker: It's not really required, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on that Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Bill 30
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I would like to table the following documents: the report of the Auditor General on the Alberta government's BSE-related assistance programs, dated July 27, 2004, and distributed to hon. members on August 3, 2004, and the 2003-2004 annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, distributed on October 4, 2004.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to table an information kit describing the Energy Innovation Network, known as EnergyINet, which was launched yesterday in Ottawa and Calgary. Through this unique collaboration of industry organizations, federal and provincial governments, and the research community, EnergyINet will initiate and support the development and application of new technologies to ensure a long-term supply of environmentally responsible energy for generations to come. I will ensure that each member of the Legislature also gets a copy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I'm pleased to table the 2004 annual report.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I would table five copies of a petition presented to me requesting "government funding to establish the building of a long term care facility in the Village of Onoway."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a document entitled Life and Death Sentence of The Addicted Child, written by Maralyn Benay. The document reviews the life-and-death sentence of addicted youth and strongly supports Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, or PCAD.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon, a follow-up from today's question period. This first is an e-mail from employees of Enron, and it is dated September 2000. It's in regard to Project Stanley and recent meetings with the Alberta government and TransAlta.

The second tabling is also in regard to question period, in regard to the prices set by Powerex and TransAlta, and this is the Market Surveillance Administrator Report on Power Pool of Alberta Prices, Summer 2000.

The third is a memorandum between legal advisers for Enron, in regard to the report that I just tabled. This is dated November 3, 2000, and regards Project Stanley.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a comment made by the Finance minister this afternoon and in an effort to aid the process, I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies from the British Columbia public service pension plan website outlining in very plain English the appeals process and how it can be accessed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a few tablings here, and one is from the president of Humpty's Restaurants International Inc. It's to the Premier regarding a province-wide smoking ban, and it calls on the Premier to be a true leader and to let his caucus vote freely with their own hearts and minds on that particular issue.

I also have five copies each of five individual handwritten letters all from government members' ridings regarding requests to deal with the foreign worker issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table two documents today on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition. The first is a background document issued by the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation on January 25 of this year.

The second document, which the leader of the NDP opposition referred to during question period today, is titled MLA Questions and Answers, Anthony Henday Drive South East – Public-Private Partnership.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the committee to order. We'd remind all hon. members that although this is the more informal part of the session and you can leave your seats, to be recognized by the chair, you must occupy your space. Of course, the rules of decorum are the same as in the normal session.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2004-05
General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Chair: I would now recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps before I begin, if I may, I would like to recognize a couple of individuals in the gallery who are with the department. One is the deputy minister, Mr. Barry Mehr, and the other is the chief bean counter for us at agriculture, Miss Faye Rault. They're up in the gallery to throw things at me if I do something wrong.

Mr. Chairman, the majority of the dollars in the supplementary estimates that we're requesting are to handle the ongoing impacts of BSE on our industry. As well, what's extremely important to point out is that the disaster assistance is offset by increases in federal transfers relating to these programs. Approximately half of the assistance, $317.7 million, is allocated to support producers in setting aside calves and market-ready cattle in order to manage the oversupply resulting from border closure.

The remainder of the request is allocated primarily to support the development of new markets and products that will help the industry deal with transitioning into new market realities. More specifically, Mr. Chairman, $30 million is allocated to support the establishment of a market retention and development fund that, as you are aware, is also now being supported by $50 million worth of federal dollars in contributions. So I'd say that that was leveraged quite well. Also, $7.1 million is allocated to support projects that are developing both beef products and markets; $35 million is allocated to support ongoing research into the development, production, and marketing of value-added food products.

We have also enhanced our surveillance capabilities, Mr. Chairman. Twelve million dollars is allocated to help us ensure that we continue to meet our international testing targets. This is critical to maintaining our stature and branding around the world as a producer of a safe, high-quality beef.

Other ruminants have been impacted by BSE as well. Therefore, $1 million is allocated to focus on market and product development in this area. As you are aware, the impacts of BSE have spread beyond the beef sector and have impacted the whole farm and farm results. Consequently, the costs of the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, or CAIS as we call it, are higher than anticipated, so an additional $86 million is allocated to cover the increased costs of this program, also resulting from the impacts of BSE.

As you are aware, our industry is also recovering from the most severe droughts experienced in over 130 years. As a result, the farm income disaster program costs were higher than was anticipated, and final payouts in 2004-05 were $11.2 million higher than what had been accrued and projected.

Similarly, our wildlife damage and compensation programs were also higher due to that drought, $7.9 million higher than anticipated.

Last, Mr. Chairman, but certainly not least is an additional $10 million to provide support to ongoing operations for value-added initiatives. These initiatives cover all areas of the industry and are seeing positive results with repayments starting to flow from some of the key initiatives that they are involved in.

Mr. Chairman, that does conclude my explanation of our requests. It's very brief because there are only a few items there. I would prefer to take some questions rather than take up the time of our discussion. If I am unable to give anyone in the House an answer this afternoon, I will certainly seek the assistance of my very capable staff and respond in writing before the end of this session.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in the discussion on the supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund this afternoon. Certainly, in the last fiscal year there was significant money spent by the government in the BSE recovery program, close to $500 million. That's the province's share. Unfortunately, this is a crisis that doesn't appear to be going away any time soon.

We can point as many fingers in different directions as we would like, but the reality is that many of our small producers of beef and beef products in this province are facing significant economic difficulties. There is no one, regardless of whether they reside in urban or rural neighbourhoods, that does not recognize that this is an extraordinary, unfortunate event, and the farmers and the farming community certainly need our support. The only question would be, certainly, how we provide this support.

Small producers seem to be the ones that are phoning our constituency office, and they are expressing a great deal of frustration. There are claims that the money, some of the BSE assistance programs, are just simply not getting down to them fast enough. We are looking at our supplementary estimates here. It was only three years ago that a former minister of agriculture closed some of the rural ag offices, and I'm wondering if at any time the department has considered reopening some of those.

Certainly from what I'm hearing, there are significant delays in the processing of some of the assistance packages. Farmers, producers themselves are telling me this. Now, with the central office, I guess we could say, in central Alberta perhaps it's time to reconsider reopening some of these offices that we closed. Would it help? I don't know. How much would it cost? I don't know. Perhaps the minister can clarify that not only for this member but for the entire House.

Now, when we're looking at the BSE recovery program, we see that there's $320 million to be spent. There was a great deal of anxiety expressed last year over the $400 million that was spent — where did it go? — and the fact that 10 per cent of it went to the largest packers. How are we to ensure that how this $320 million is going to be disbursed is going to be different?

Certainly, with the margins on cattle — and the hon. minister knows full well the different margins for the American-owned packers in this country and south of the border. They have bigger margins in Canada, particularly in Alberta, and I don't think we need to be providing them with any BSE money. I think we have to ensure that we look after the small producers, the cow-calf operators, through this crisis. I would be grateful and interested to hear the hon. minister's comments on this.

Ag food investment processing. We're indicating here that we're going to spend $17 million. How much of that money will go to some of the smaller initiatives? I've heard the amount. There has been an increase in processing capacity in this country by 20 per cent in the last two years. Because it would make a big difference to a lot of smaller operators that are banding together and contemplating building their own processing plants, how much, if any, of that $17 million is going to enterprises such as the one I just mentioned, Mr. Chairman?

Further down we're looking at agriculture insurance and lending assistance. The CAIS program is going to get an additional $86 million. Certainly, as I said earlier, I would like an update on how long the applications are taking before they're processed and cheques are sent out for CAIS. What are the administrative costs of the CAIS program? For instance, to the hon. minister, if we're going to spend $86 million here in Canadian agricultural income stabilization, how much of that is going to be used in the administration of the program?

Certainly, I would encourage the minister to pursue scientific investigation, whether it's on a partnership basis with private industry or whether it's a stand-alone project over at the University of Alberta. And I want to see this at the University of Alberta, not at the University of Calgary, at the vet school down there. I still don't understand how that vet school wound up in Calgary, but it did. How much of this money, if any, if going to be used on research into live blood tests to identify a BSE-infected animal? We discussed this earlier in the Assembly in this session, and I would like that clarified at this time. That would be a big step if we could have an affordable live test for BSE.

Meanwhile, now that R-CALF has been successful in their campaign, their lobbying efforts to keep the American border closed to live cattle under 30 months, what consideration is this government taking now to allow, particularly for our export markets to Asia, the demand that some of the Asian markets have that all beef products from all carcasses be tested for BSE? If the American border is not going to open, then we have to look at other markets. We have to give the consumers what they want, and if the consumers want full testing, then I think it is time that we reconsider and provide that.

Particularly, there were two, that I'm aware of, enterprises in the Peace district, one of which unfortunately moved to the B.C. side of the fine Peace Country, but there was interest expressed in having 100 per cent testing. If the Americans are going to deny us access to their markets, then we're going to have to look after ourselves and our producers. Has the hon. minister reconsidered previous government policy in light of the fact that on March 7 our border had not opened?

3:00

At this time I believe I will cede the floor to anyone else, or perhaps the hon. minister has some answers for some of my questions at the moment. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we have to be very prudent about how we spend this money. One only has to look at the Auditor General's report from 2003-04. Certainly, it is interesting reading for all members of this Assembly, and there are some very good suggestions here as to how we can administer our BSE assistance packages better.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make a few comments with regard to the questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. First of all, I would like to thank him for his support in the endeavours that we've had with the producers and the ongoing crisis that we have. I know he understands that it does affect every point and part of agriculture in Alberta, so I appreciate that. His comments with regard to urban and rural Alberta are taken very much to heart. All Albertans have been involved in this issue for far too long.

In terms of the dollars not getting down fast enough to the producers, I'm going to take a stab in the dark here and assume that that's probably a question with regard to our CAIS payments and how fast they're getting out. Mr. Chairman, as you're aware, 2003 was the first year for the CAIS program, and introducing a program like this during the middle of a crisis like BSE was trial by fire in its best form. The government didn't anticipate the kind of response or the kind of complexity that was going to be required, so putting the new program through its paces during one of the most devastating events to hit Canada's ag industry certainly provided an opportunity to evaluate its overall effectiveness.

As well, as with all new programs we started the CAIS program design process knowing that the specific need we were trying to address was to stabilize producers' income during difficult times. Then we designed that program that we felt would meet that need. Trying to assess producer interest in a program that is not up and running is kind of like the movie Field of Dreams. If you build it, they will come, you're hoping. Going into the first year of the program, we made our very best estimate of producer participation and expected payment levels based on our experience with the FIDP program, or the farm income disaster program, and the NISA accounts, or the net income stabilization accounts.

But then, of course, BSE hit and the commodity prices hit, and the magnitude of the BSE crisis and resulting income shortfalls really made it necessary for the governments to go back and amend the CAIS program. It did increase the program expenditures. We've now introduced coverage for up to 60 per cent negative margins by claim year.

So all of those changes, then, had a kind of a ripple effect. In order to give producers more time to consider the CAIS program, especially those producers whose eligibility for the CAIS program had changed as a result of the amendments, we had to then extend that deadline. The end result was that for the 2003 program year we had over 32,000 Alberta farmers elect to participate in the CAIS program, and of those more than 24,000 submitted claim applications. But, more importantly, Mr. Chairman, almost half of those claim applications were received in the two-month period after the original deadline was extended, so we had this massive rush of claims at the very end of the program deadline.

I can tell the hon. member that we've had an update very, very recently: 87 per cent of those claims are processed, resulting in $176 million that has been paid to producers. I think the hon. member and all members will be glad to hear this. We are on track to have all the 2003 claims processed by March 31 of this year. That is with the exception of those that are missing information. One of the things that I can't stress enough is that when – and this is true of any financial program – you're asked for information, if there's any holding back of the information, if there are any errors in the information, if there are certain parts of it that aren't filled out, it's naturally going to delay the process and the program, and that's been a cause of concern.

It is based on income tax information, so there can be up to a one-year lag between when the disaster strikes and when the producer actually receives a payment under the CAIS program. We recognized that very early on, so to address the more immediate cash-flow difficulties, Alberta introduced the equity loss advances to get money into producers' hands more quickly. We were the only province at that point to do that, and we are now one of few provinces to do that. Ontario doesn't do that. Mr. Chairman, the hon. members will be interested to note this: that alone paid $250 million into producers' hands. Again, this was kind of an unanticipated side effect of the BSE crisis and low commodity prices.

Going forward, the proposed changes to the CAIS deposit requirement are not expected to have a major impact on our budget expenditures. It'll have a direct consequence if the changes would be to increase participation levels, and our budget already reflects the cost associated with close to 100 per cent participation level. Of course, should farm incomes in the future be low relative to historical incomes, we would see an increase in producer payments and an overall increase in CAIS program expenditures.

Nonetheless, the CAIS program has been presented to producers as providing a permanent income stabilization and disaster program that they can rely on instead of ad hoc payments. It's important that we follow through on this promise and continue to support our ag industry in these challenging times. I can add, Mr. Chairman, that the federal minister and all of the provincial ministers, regardless of political stripe, I believe, feel very strongly the CAIS program is the program of the future for our producers. We do need to make some adjustments to it to make it more responsive, but we are working very, very hard to make sure that we get these applications out.

I can also say with regard to the 2004 payments, because that's another area of concern that we're hearing as well, that over 9,300 applications for the 2004 interim advance have been received and processed for a value of $254 million. The Agriculture Financial Services Corporation has now received 1,280 final claims for the 2004 claim year and have paid out a value of close to $5.6 million on that.

The hon. member also raised the issue of rural offices and thought that perhaps that might be a way to speed this process along. I agree that Agriculture needs to be in rural Alberta, and I agree that our offices need to have a better integration to the rural community. I'm not sure that reopening the offices is the way to go. I'm sure it would not have helped in the CAIS issue, as the member pointed out. But we are definitely reviewing how we get our message out and how we get information in, and we'll be coming forward with some things in the future on that.

CAIS. The program is operated under the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, the same group that does crop insurance and as well is involved in some of the slaughterhouse lending that they are currently involved in.

The member also mentioned that he was curious about the $17 million with regard to new product initiatives and the SRM initiatives, I believe. Those programs are going to be worked with the scientific community, all of it, not just the U of A or the U of C. I noted his concern about the U of A getting it over the U of C. I view Alberta as Campus Alberta and would hope that we would be able to do this as a team approach across the province, utilizing not only the U of A but perhaps the U of L, perhaps Olds College, perhaps a number of the other fine institutions in agriculture in this province that are involved in it.

So we'll be looking at any good initiatives that come forward that will help us deal with the SRM removal as well as deal with new product commercialization and research into new ways of doing business. That's part and parcel of what we're trying to accomplish with our slaughter capacity.

He also asked a question about the dollars of administration on each claim. I don't in front of me, Mr. Chairman, have the exact number, although I know from memory, and if memory serves correctly, there are only three provinces in the country that actually administer the CAIS program on their own. The rest of the provinces are all managed by the federal government. My information is that our management or our processing costs are considerably less than what the processing costs are for the federal government, but that may be hard to figure out because we'd have to ask them to find that out. We will certainly see what kinds of numbers we can arrive at and bring forward a written response on that.

The member also talked about the importance of other marketplaces, and he may not have been aware that we have already committed $30 million to the beef industry market fund or the Canada Beef Export Federation legacy project. It's a 10-year program, Mr. Chairman, that will indeed do much of what the hon. member was concerned about, about reducing our dependency on the U.S. marketplace.

In addition, he was talking about maybe there are some other things that we can do to help enter those other markets and mentioned the hundred per cent testing. It has yet to be proven to me, and certainly in the world theatre no one is telling me that testing an animal under 24 months makes any hoot of a difference as to whether or not they're going to get into the marketplace. In fact, what a number of these other markets are doing is saying: "You know what? It doesn't make sense to test that young because you're not going to find anything. So why would you have a hundred per cent testing?"

I think that what is of more importance and something that we're looking very seriously at, Mr. Chairman, is the traceability. Traceability of the animal and verification of the age of that animal is probably more important to this industry and to the world markets than hundred per cent testing, and we're going to work in cooperation with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Alberta Beef Producers on strategies that may do just that.

He mentioned a couple of other things with regard to some plants that may have moved to other provinces because we did not do one or another thing. I would encourage him to find out what the status of those projects in other provinces is just to be sure that he has all the information that he needs to make a valid case for hundred per cent testing.

I think I've covered most of his comments, Mr. Chairman. The only other comment I would cover is with regard to the Auditor General. We take the role of audit very, very seriously and certainly the role of audit with the programs that we're putting out with taxpayer dollars. As I understand it, we accepted all of the Auditor General's recommendations that were put forward and are working to fulfill those recommendations.

In fact, on the BSE program audit process field audits are an ongoing process for our BSE programs. To date 58 per cent of the BSE program dollars have been audited through the field audit process, and from an auditing perspective, from going back to my old audit days and my old banking days and business days, that's a pretty high percentage, and it gives you a pretty good comfort level as to where things are going.

Where instances of noncompliance are noted, producers are required to return payments either directly or through clawbacks through the programs that we have out there. So we have a pretty good methodology of bringing those dollars back, and I'm very, very happy to tell the House, Mr. Chairman, that very, very few concerns have been identified. Less than 1 per cent of audited payments have required any follow-up action. That's a very good track record, one that my department should be very, very proud of.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to participate in the debate on 2004-2005 supplementary estimates and specifically to make a few comments and ask some questions with respect to the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I want to start by congratulating the minister for his appointment to the cabinet. This is the first occasion when from the floor of this House I have this opportunity. So congratulations, Minister. I also want to observe, Mr. Chairman, that the minister seems, certainly, to pay attention to detail and takes his work seriously, has lots to say in response to questions and explanations that are requested, and I'm pleased to notice that.

Mr. Chairman, the department, of course, deals with agriculture and then food – I think food industry value-adding is an important part of that responsibility of the department – and then rural development. I notice that in the supplementary estimates, at least, there is no supplementary request being made for rural development. I just want to ask the minister. Perhaps he would like to comment on the kind of programs and policies that are specific to rural development and what part of the budget of the department in general goes toward providing services related directly to rural development as distinct from either food or agriculture. I'm curious about this, and I think perhaps some other members of the House will also benefit from the information that I'm seeking on this point.

Mr. Chairman, the minister is asking for $528,267,000 extra, and the explanation is provided on page 18. I notice that most of this money, close to $500 million of it, $499,082,000, was specifically used for the assistance related to the BSE crisis in the province.

Under that expenditure category there are several areas in which this BSE-related assistance has gone, including $100,000 for the stranded beef export container initiative. I just am wondering exactly what that was or is.

Then $30 million to support the establishment of a market retention and development fund. Since these terms are fairly general, from my reading of them, I wonder if this amount includes the $37 million recently announced in the form of BSE assistance. I think it was announced on March 7. Does the $37 million announced on March 7 form part of the total amount, the $499 million something?

Another question that I have here is the unfortunate fact that the BSE crisis is prolonged now given the court decision across the border, and cow-calf producers are going to be coming under enhanced and new, unexpected financial pressures. That's one side of the story. On the other side we know that certainly the packers have been enjoying huge profits while this crisis has been around. The question has been asked, I guess, before in this House. I'm going to ask the minister perhaps to comment on it again. What problem does he and the government have with introducing a minimum floor price while this crisis prolongs and continues to afflict the producers in the industry and inflicts huge damage and anxiety and concern and stress on farm families engaged in the production of calves and cows?

Watching on the news, you know, when people are interviewed, they express extreme anxiety about their own future and how what has taken perhaps a generation to build is likely to be lost now that this crisis is going on and on and on without any clear sign that it's going to end soon. In that context what serious reservations and objections do the minister and this government have in seriously considering setting a minimum floor price to ensure that cattle that do go to the packers end up guaranteeing some minimum price to the farming families and ranching families in this province? I'm asking this question here because it's a lot easier here to dispassionately deal with this issue rather than in question period, where time is short and usually time is spent on avoiding answering questions rather than engaging each other in debate.

The next question. In light of the Montana court decision and the resulting continuing closure of the border for Alberta cow-calf producers, what is the government anticipating in terms of additional assistance required in the next year? We are less than two weeks away from the next fiscal year, and while all of us would hope, we know that the aid crisis is not going to come to an end all of a sudden, you know, by the end of this fiscal year. What plans are in place that anticipate expenditures in the form of ongoing assistance in this respect? What kind of allowances are being made in the budget so that the minister won't have to come back for another supplementary request sometime next year?

Some other questions. I notice that the wildlife damage and compensation budget has quadrupled in the supplementary estimates here. Initially it was $1.94 million, less than $2 million, and now it has jumped to close to $8 million. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would explain the reasons for this quadrupling, fourfold increase. Is the damage and compensation related to wildlife limited to damage caused to farm crops or fences or what? Does the compensation go either exclusively or primarily simply to farm families, or are there some other recipients of this compensation? This category needs to be unpacked for my benefit if not for anyone else, so I hope that the minister will explain that.

My last question, I guess, at the moment has to do with – two questions, actually – the NAFTA-related challenge that some Canadian producers are going to take. I think the minister was asked this question earlier, perhaps in the question period as well. You know, the court challenge that . . .

An Hon. Member: Canadian Cattlemen for Fair Trade.

Dr. Pannu: Right. Yeah.

Now, the minister during question period said that we don't like to take the road of confrontation and want to negotiate given that we have good relations with the current administration. You know, NAFTA is a treaty, and it is presumably about fair trade and free trade. I wonder why the minister thinks that providing assistance to these groups that intend to challenge under NAFTA the border closure for calves and cows will particularly be seen as an offensive and provocative act by the American administration? After all, this is a treaty, and as a treaty it's available to us to seek redress to the problems that we might see, and there's no greater issue on which we are seeking redress than the situation in which our cow-calf producers find themselves in this province.

Why is the minister, in fact, not enthusiastic about providing help to this group, which is using a legitimate tool to seek redress to a very serious problem? We all call it a crisis. It has cost taxpayers, you know, more than half a billion dollars already and may cost more. So why on earth are we reluctant to provide support for this group, which is using an instrument which is legal, which is jointly negotiated between us and them on the other side? Why not?

A couple of other questions here quickly, Mr. Chairman, with your permission. As part of this supplementary request are there any monies being asked for here for providing financial assistance to beef co-ops, you know, slaughterhouses, their proposals? There's one, I think the Tender Beef Co-op, in the Peace River area. Is there any money available in this supplementary request for such initiatives? I think that these initiatives are important. They will reduce our dependence on the two monopoly slaughterhouse operations in the province controlled by two massively powerful multinationals. Is there any money there, and if not, why not?

Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for this opportunity. I'll sit down and listen with attention to what the minister has to say to my questions.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. member as well for the kind words of congratulations when he started. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Chairman, I'll try to be brief. I know we have a lot of other supplementary estimates to go through. It's tough to be brief when you talk about this department because we have such a wide diversity of things going on in it. We are kind of centred on the BSE issue in supplementary estimates, so I'm probably not going to give you a real good answer on rural development strategy because that will be coming forward in our upcoming budget.

You know, of course, that we just announced the task force in early February and have that essentially up and running right now, and I'm very, very excited, hon. member, about where we're headed with that. I think there are a lot of very good initiatives in there. It won't just come from our budget, from agriculture's budget. It's going to come from all of the other budgets because it's a cross-ministry initiative in a lot of cases when you start talking about rural schools, rural economic development, rural health care, the ability of youth to have something to go to in rural Alberta. There are a lot of different things involved in there. So rather than get into that in the supplementary estimates, I'm going to go to some of your questions, if that's all right, and we'll talk a little bit about that.

The $37 million is included in this supplementary estimate. One of the issues that we have coming before us is the specified risk materials: what do we do with them? In my mind, how are we going to take those SRMs, as we call them, and turn them into something that has value again? Previously they had some value; now they have no value. What we want to do is do the research, do the precommercialization work. I know that the hon. member understands this type of a process. We want to do that work, so we've put these dollars out there with our academia and the research network that's out there in agriculture to try to find ways to turn what is now essentially a disposable cost centre into value. So the $37 million is in there.

The $30 million is to support the establishment of the market retention and the development. That's to turn our dependency away from the United States marketplace. Currently we are dependent on the United States marketplace for about 76 per cent of our export business. We would like – and I think it's a target of the industry; this is all coming from the industry – to reduce that dependency to about 50 per cent. That means that we have to find markets for 26 per cent of what we used to do.

That's a fairly daunting challenge. That's why they've come forward with a 10-year plan to do just that. Having been in the international sales business, I know – and I know that you have travelled too, hon. member – it's difficult to enter new marketplaces; it's difficult to displace current suppliers in those marketplaces. So those dollars are there, and they have been leveraged with federal dollars now as well as industry dollars. In fact, the industry will be putting up the lion's share of those dollars.

I had a note here: BSE testing. I'm not exactly sure why I had that note down. I think you had a question on the live testing. Yes. It's not in this supplementary estimate, but one of the things that we've done is through co-operation and collaboration with the Ministry of Innovation and Science we've created the $38 million BSE or prion research centre. Of course, BSE and the folding proteins and the science of all of that is something that we need to understand better so that we can better deal with the products and the by-products that we have.

It's also something that we need to do in the study of zoonosis, diseases from animals to humans. Coupled with that, there are a couple of proposals that I have seen that have come forward that believe that they have that Holy Grail of a live test, or what I call the live test. We are following up on them because that would be something the world is looking for. But we also have to understand that it's a little bit like the cure for the common cold: everybody thinks they've got it, and everybody in the world is looking for it. So we have to be careful about where we put those resources.

In terms of a floor price – and I know that this has been a question that has been on the minds of the NDP and some producers in the province. I can tell the hon. member that the industry, the Alberta Beef Producers, the cattle ranchers, the Feeder Associations, all of those groups that are part of that network – there are people out there who think that a floor price might be the right way to go, but the vast majority of the industry says: no, don't go there.

It'll be a higher cost for packers, that's true. So what will happen? They may buy their cattle out of Saskatchewan or British Columbia as opposed to buying them in Alberta. They may close down the number of days that they slaughter. I can tell the hon. member that if we get less numbers of days of slaughter, that will only compound our problems here. We need to make sure that we have as many days of slaughter going through these packing houses as possible.

The other problem with even a temporary floor price is that it won't work. It's still going to cause a lot of major hardship, it wouldn't be easy to put in place, and if we just had it in Alberta, that would cause us the difficulties of: what do you do with the cattle that may be crossing back and forth?

It's also the wrong message to send to those entrepreneurs who are in the co-operatives trying to get into a packing house or those investors that are looking at building that slaughter capacity and that value-added. It's the wrong message to send them, that we're going to regulate what their cost is going to be and we're going to regulate what their margin is going to be. A lot of these business plans that are coming forward are predicated on the market price. You would have a massive number of meetings going on with their bankers and the institutions that they're trying to get their financing from and their shareholders, many of whom are producers, trying to figure out: can we make this work based on a floor price, and where is the government going to go with the floor price? It causes a lot of grief.

I would suggest to you and submit to you that the set-aside program that we have in place right now is a much better market-responsive type of a price system. It works much better than a floor price because you still have the market forces involved. It did take a little bit of a hit after this announcement prior to March 7 when the R-CALF injunction went into play, but the interesting thing is that it did not drop anywhere close to what the prices had dropped to with the announcement of the other positive tests. That tells me that it's working, and nationally it's starting to work.

So I think what we have today, hon. member, is a program that is endorsed nationally by the producers and the members of the industry. It's also one where, yes, we have some control in regard to the basis levels and some of those other things and the weights of the animals, which allows us some movement in the marketplace, but it isn't a set control. It's a much more responsive and much more well-received program than a floor price.

Plans in place and ongoing assistance: what allowances in the budget to come up? That almost sounds like: what have you got in your budget coming forward? Can't tell you, so I won't.

Wildlife damage and compensation. You noted that the $7.9 million is much higher than the previous year. It is much higher due to the drought conditions that we had and a lot of the damage to fences. It's an all-encompassing type fund for damage from that wildlife, but I will get more explanation for you on that one, maybe a little more detail on paper on that one.

The other question you had was with regard to the Canadian Cattlemen for Fair Trade and their NAFTA challenge. Our fight is not with the American government. The American government has put forward a proposal to allow trade in our beef through the USDA and to have the border open. On March 7 had that happened, we would be in a much better position. Having said that, our fight is with a court and a protectionist group in the United States. That's where our fight is. What we need to do is prove to that court that their government is right. So our suing their own government only adds to the R-CALF argument. I'm not in a position at this point in time to recommend to any of our colleagues in the Legislature that we should be doing something against the U.S. government, who at this point in time is one of our biggest allies in getting the border open.

So I think that's an important differential because what the Canadian Cattlemen for Fair Trade are doing – and they have every right to do this, and I do not want to hinder their approach. They have a right under NAFTA and under chapter 11 to go for redress on damages caused, and even if the border were to open, hon. member, within 60 days, they can continue on with that challenge. Perhaps at some point in the future – and we've all seen these NAFTA things drag out for a long, long time – they may actually see some benefit out of that. You know, I hope they do. It's something that they probably have a good argument on.
