

Province of Alberta

The 26th Legislature
Second Session

Alberta Hansard

February 22, 2006 to August 31, 2006
and Index

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 22, 2006 3:00 p.m.

Date: 06/02/22

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated January 17, 2006, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, Mr. Lorieau. I think Team Canada could have used you in Italy today.

Please be seated.

head: Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, while it is not my usual custom to make mention of persons in the galleries, on this day I'm going to make an exception. Seated in the Speaker's gallery is Captain Manuel Panchana of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. If you would rise, sir. On the 15th day of December of 2005 Captain Panchana was leading his platoon on operations near Kandahar in Afghanistan when insurgents detonated an explosive device. He and two of his soldiers were seriously wounded. On the 15th day of January 2006 another incident near Kandahar claimed the life of a Canadian diplomat and seriously wounded three Canadian soldiers. Like Captain Panchana, all five of the wounded soldiers in these two incidents call this province of Alberta their home.

The challenges that they face in their recoveries are deserving of our heartfelt support and encouragement. We are ever mindful that the peace and freedoms we enjoy are borne by the sacrifices and risks made and taken by our men and women in uniform. For those in our Canadian Forces who have recently embarked to Afghanistan for challenging duty in the service of their sovereign and country and for their families we pray for a successful tour and for their safe return. [standing ovation]

Thank you, all. I'm sure that that message will be heard as far away as Kandahar.

The Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude, the details of which are in your program. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was founded in Quebec City in 1879, and it was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band is today under the direction of Captain Brian Greenwood, who will direct from the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and Mrs. Kwong, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

head: Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Pray be seated.

Fellow Albertans, welcome to the Second Session of the 26th Alberta Legislature.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature and 100 years of democracy in Alberta. As we celebrate this great occasion, may we all take a moment to reflect on the tremendous contributions of those who came before us and the great privilege we have been given as servants of this wonderful province and its people. It is therefore an honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne, as it is an honour to serve as this province's Lieutenant Governor.

During the past year I had the opportunity to travel throughout this wonderful province and meet thousands of warm, caring, hard-working people. I joined Albertans in welcoming Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh on a royal visit, and I attended countless events where communities were celebrated and great Albertans were honoured.

It was truly a special year for me and for all Albertans as we celebrated the province's centennial. The year was filled with special events large and small, legacies created in nearly every community, and birthday celebrations that spread across the entire province. These reflected the tremendous pride Albertans have in this province and their optimism for its future.

That optimism is well placed. Alberta is beginning its second century from an enviable position. By nearly every economic measure Alberta leads the country. Last year Alberta's economy grew the fastest of all Canadian provinces. Alberta had the highest population growth, the lowest unemployment rate, the highest average incomes, and the lowest overall taxes in the country.

The year 2005 also marked a very significant milestone for Albertans. It was the first time in decades that Alberta rang in a debt-free new year. This milestone coincided with the arrival of record-high energy revenues for Alberta. While these create opportunities for our province, Albertans know we can't count on them lasting forever. That's why the government will use this opportunity wisely by setting priorities, creating long-term benefits for Albertans, and keeping an eye firmly on the future.

A Learning Society

Albertans know that building and educating tomorrow's workforce is one of the wisest investments we can make. The creation of a learning society begins with the youngest members of our province. Alberta already has an education system that is respected nationally and internationally with a strong curriculum, excellent teachers, and committed parents and students. This year government will work to further strengthen our education system and ensure that all of our students can take full advantage of the world-class education opportunities available to them.

A series of round-tables with youth from across the province will be held to help us better understand why students leave school early. A high school completion symposium, which will include teens, parents, business leaders, and educators, will help us develop a provincial strategy to increase high school completion rates.

The government took many steps to strengthen the postsecondary system during the province's centennial year. Over 7,000 new learning opportunities, including apprenticeships, have been created, a new endowment fund and new scholarship programs were established, and several capital projects were begun. This year the government will again cover the cost of tuition increases at public postsecondary institutions and will develop a new tuition policy.

We will also introduce measures that reflect all the expenses students face, including accommodation, textbooks, fees, and tuition, to ensure that cost isn't a barrier to students getting an education.

Alberta will take immediate steps to address labour shortages that threaten economic growth. It will increase education in areas of skill shortages by increasing grant support for specific programs. This includes partnering with aboriginal groups and industry on new training projects for aboriginal people. The government will develop a new strategy to increase awareness of Alberta as a destination of choice for skilled immigrants, and it will expand immigrant settlement services and language training and make it easier for foreign-trained professionals to work in Alberta.

Alberta will also plan for the future by developing a strategy to address skills shortages and enhance education levels in Alberta. People with advanced skills, creativity, and education will keep Alberta's economy strong.

A Prosperous Society

A strong economy sustains a high quality of life both now and for the future. The government will work to build a prosperous society by staying true to the fiscal principles that have served this province so well: balanced budgets, no debt, and low taxes. It will remain a leader in Canada for government accountability and transparency, with regular communication with and reporting to Albertans. This year the government will review its fiscal framework to ensure that it positions Alberta well for the future.

The government recognizes that the prosperity that comes from high resource revenues belongs to all Albertans, including future Albertans. That's why Alberta's plan for using budget surpluses includes increasing our savings. Later this month the government will make a substantial $1 billion investment in the heritage fund. Further investment in the heritage fund will be announced in Budget 2006. These investments will ensure that some of today's prosperity is saved for future generations.

A portion of the surplus will also be dedicated to addressing our infrastructure needs. This is an area where government has demonstrated a strong commitment. In recent years Alberta has dedicated billions of dollars to meet the infrastructure needs of the growing economy, a level of support unmatched anywhere else in the country.

In 2006 construction in the province will go on at the fastest rate ever in Alberta's history. Work will begin or continue on about 60 new schools or major school modernizations, 47 major postsecondary capital projects, and 21 major health capital projects. The government will also invest in improving highways throughout the province. Major sections of the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads will open in the next two years, and twinning will begin this year on highway 63 south from Fort McMurray. Altogether we expect to pave 1,000 kilometres of provincial highways in 2006.

The government will create a northern development strategy in which northerners map out their own future. This will ensure that sustainable economic development in this region is supported with infrastructure and human services.

In addition to improving the province's infrastructure, Alberta will work to improve the regulatory environment. This year the government will embark on a comprehensive regulatory review to identify and remove unneeded red tape between Albertans and their government. This will help maintain a competitive edge for business and improve access to services for Albertans.

This year the government will take steps to ensure that forestry, agriculture, and energy, three pillars of the province's economy, are strong and sustainable into the future.

This government understands the challenges facing the forest industry. This is the province's third-largest sector, worth nearly $13 billion to Alberta's economy. On January 1 government updated the province's stumpage system to make it more competitive. We continue to work with industry partners to build a common understanding of their cost and competitiveness issues and to resolve the softwood lumber trade dispute. The government is also working to add value to this renewable resource sector through its continuing $1.8 million commitment to harness innovation as well as ongoing support to the Alberta Forestry Research Institute.

In the agriculture sector, after several difficult years, Alberta's farmers and ranchers are beginning to see new opportunities and revitalization. However, challenges still remain in parts of the agriculture industry, including the grains sector, which faces skyrocketing input costs and low market prices. Alberta will stand alongside its agricultural producers, who face the future with the competitive spirit that built this industry and this province. It will continue to support producers by providing responsive, timely, and straightforward tools to manage risk and add value to all agricultural commodities.

One area of particular promise is the biofuels industry, which offers the potential of sustainable growth and a new market for a primary commodity. At the same time, we will work toward helping the agrifood industry by continuing to press for a substantial agreement in the World Trade Organization that will reduce trade-distorting domestic subsidies and increase access to foreign markets.

This government has and will continue to focus its efforts on rural development to help rural communities become more prosperous and vibrant. Government has already taken many steps to support the rural development strategy, including increasing municipal policing grants, creating the rural affordable housing program, improving rural health facilities, and increasing support to agriculture service boards.

Budget 2006 will allocate new funding to provide stable, long-term support to local rural development projects. This will promote economic development, improve access to health care and learning, enhance environmental protection, and create more opportunities for youth in rural areas.

Alberta will also work with the energy industry to map a new frontier for the resource sector. Conventional crude oil and natural gas are still important to Alberta's economy, but the future belongs to nonconventional energy sources such as the oil sands and natural gas in coal and to value-added products created by refining, processing, and upgrading.

One resource whose enormous potential must be better utilized in Alberta is coal. We wouldn't conceive of burning a barrel of crude oil for heat, not when we know it can be upgraded to make fuels, plastics, and a range of other consumer products, yet that is what is being done today with Alberta's coal, a fuel more abundant than all the province's other hydrocarbons put together. Alberta has coal reserves to last upwards of 1,000 years, and they contain some of the cleanest burning coal in the world. We now know that we can produce from coal many of the things we produce from natural gas and oil.

Coal has the potential to provide plentiful, affordable electricity without the harmful emissions that were once associated with older coal combustion technologies. Coal can help meet long-term demand for feedstock for value-added energy products. The natural gas found within Alberta's coal seams also holds great promise to meet growing demand for natural gas.

The Alberta Energy Research Institute is the lead agency in developing an energy innovation strategy and has identified clean coal as a high priority. This year the government will work with the institute and other partners to explore ways to demonstrate the use of Alberta's coal in creating a number of value-added products, including petrochemical feedstocks. This will expand Alberta's already considerable energy advantage and make Alberta a clean energy leader in the world.

Managing natural resources wisely, including minimizing the environmental impacts of resource development, is a job this government takes seriously.

A Clean Environment

Albertans are blessed with beautiful landscapes that change from prairies to foothills to mountains and from rivers to forests to rangeland. The land, which has given Albertans all that they have, must continue to be the source of life and prosperity for future generations. This principle is at the heart of the land-use framework government is developing. It recognizes that the land supports many uses: resource development, recreation and tourism, agriculture and forestry, and residential. The framework is a multidisciplinary, multistakeholder effort to create a single mechanism for coordinated planning and decision-making.

This year Albertans will be consulted on their values and goals for the land through a series of workshops across the province and a provincial forum.

Another key focus of government in this area is the continuing implementation of the Water for Life strategy. In 2006 the government will develop an inventory of groundwater in the province, and it will make a significant investment in regional drinking water and waste-water systems to ensure safe, sustainable, quality water supplies for all rural communities.

To address broader, long-term environmental issues, the government will hold an environmental youth summit. The summit will bring Alberta youth together to share concerns and ideas to enhance environmental protection in the province.

A Healthy Society

A clean environment is vital to a healthy society. So, too, is improving our health system, one of the government's top priorities this session. This session government will take steps to improve access, sustainability, choice, innovation, and efficiency in Alberta's health care system.

Government will work in collaboration with regional health authorities and stakeholders to improve wait times for medical services. Health care providers and administrators have demonstrated that they can come together to deliver innovative solutions that improve access to services. The Alberta hip and knee replacement project is one such example. It decreased wait times for first orthopaedic consultations from 35 weeks to six weeks and wait times between consultation and surgery from 47 weeks to less than five weeks. In 2006 this approach will be extended to other health areas such as breast cancer care, coronary artery bypass surgery, MRIs and CT scans, and prostate cancer care.

Government will continue to improve the quality of services Albertans receive by expanding the primary care network. In this model, a team of health professionals provides patient-centred support, advice, and care. This year 17 to 19 new primary care networks will begin operation.

This session we will set out clear principles to guide the health system, principles that reflect Albertans' values. They will provide a framework for a comprehensive public health system that fulfills government's commitment to provide high-quality health services to all Albertans and creates greater flexibility and choice. Albertans can be assured that a person's access to needed health care services will never be determined by their ability to pay.

Another key element of the government's health agenda this year is a major offensive in the fight against cancer. Alberta will become a leading centre for cancer expertise in North America. Cancer is a leading cause of death in Alberta. It will strike almost half of all Alberta men and two in five Alberta women during their lifetimes. Over 81,000 Albertans are living with cancer today. By 2025 that number will increase to over 200,000 if we do not take action now.

Research indicates that half of all cancers are preventable. Alberta's goals are to reduce the incidence of cancer by 35 per cent by 2025, reduce the mortality from cancer by 50 per cent by 2025, and ensure that Albertans diagnosed with cancer do not suffer. This will be achieved by making a significant, long-term, strategic investment in prevention, early screening, and research to make Alberta a leader in the fight against cancer and set the stage for a cancer-free future.

Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, will establish funding that the Alberta Cancer Board will use to move forward aggressively on cancer prevention, screening, and research initiatives.

A Safe and Caring Society

Albertans want to feel safe and cared for in their communities. This government will take action to ensure that Alberta's communities are strengthened. The government will establish a world-class system for managing risks and responding to emergencies, including environmental disasters, to ensure that Albertans are protected. We will work with municipal partners to support municipal sustainability.

Last year saw the largest single-year increase in rural and organized crime policing in Alberta in 20 years. This year government will hire more Crown prosecutors and courtroom staff and appoint more judges to ensure that those who are charged with crimes are tried promptly.

The newly established Crystal Meth Task Force will build on the work of law enforcement officials and organizations such as AADAC to help reduce the supply and lessen demand for this dangerous drug.

We will improve our practices to ensure the privacy and security of all personal information held by government.

This government will take steps to ensure that Alberta's most vulnerable citizens are respected and cared for with dignity.

New legislation will be introduced to help protect children who are exposed to the harmful effects of drug manufacturing and trafficking in their homes. It will be the first legislation in Canada to specifically define a drug-endangered child and make it clear that such a child is the victim of abuse.

The government of Alberta remains committed to curbing family violence. We will strengthen legislation to protect people from family violence by broadening the definition of family violence to include stalking, widening the scope of who is protected under the act, and clarifying the conditions for granting emergency protection orders. We will also launch a multidisciplinary team of police officers, legal advisers, and other experts who will respond quickly and effectively to high-risk family violence and stalking cases. The team will assess threats and reduce risks with the goal of preventing serious injury and death.

We will increase financial assistance through Alberta Works to people who cannot work either due to multiple barriers or medical conditions that keep them from being able to find or keep employment.

New standards will be implemented to promote excellence and restore the confidence of seniors and their families in the province's lodges, supportive living and long-term care facilities.

Alberta remains committed to providing a superior quality of life that is inclusive, active, and culturally vibrant. This year detailed planning will begin on the renewed Royal Alberta Museum that will truly capture the Alberta story. The Alberta story will also be told abroad as Alberta becomes the first part of Canada to ever be featured in the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Festival in Washington, DC.

The Alberta story, more than a hundred years in the making, is still unfolding. It's the story of how hard work, faith, and determination built a province. It's the story of the aboriginal people who first knew this land, the pioneers who took a gamble on a long shot on the western prairie, and the modern-day explorers who continue to break new ground in so many fields. It's the story of how caring people, committed volunteers, and community leaders created a place that is truly the best place in the world to live, work, and raise a family.

A new chapter of the Alberta story is beginning with the start of the province's second century. No doubt it will bring its share of struggles and challenges, and Albertans will meet them as they have always done, with courage and creativity. Together we will build a future that fulfills all the promise of Alberta's first 100 years.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us:
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, thank you so very, very much. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has just described the government's goal for Alberta to become a leading centre for cancer expertise in North America and to use that expertise so that Albertans can have a cancer-free future. It's most fitting that the signature bill of this session be legislation designed to achieve that goal, to create a cancer prevention legacy in this province. It will be a legacy like none other. It will be a legacy that will have a direct impact on the lives of our children, our grandchildren, and our great-grandchildren. It will mean lives saved and pain spared for thousands of people both here in Alberta and beyond.

With that goal in mind I am privileged to stand and request leave to introduce Bill 1, which is the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. Mr. Speaker, this being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will help Alberta attack cancer aggressively at every level, from prevention to potential cures. The bill confirms Alberta's commitment to address the growing demand for cancer services both now and into the future. It supports a strategic investment in the collaborative work of cancer prevention, screening, and research. Cancer will be prevented because of expanded and new cancer screening programs to detect signs of cancer at an early stage. A virtual research institute will be created to co-ordinate all cancer research in Alberta. Alberta's reputation as a world leader in cancer research, prevention, and screening will grow because of the opportunities presented through this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I needn't tell you that cancer is a terrible illness that is a leading cause of death in Alberta and, indeed, in Canada and around the world. We must take action now to stop its growth.

It's my honour today, Mr. Speaker, to introduce Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

head: Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

head: Motions

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I move that the speech of His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration on Thursday, February 23, 2006.

Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is a very great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a lady that is sitting in your gallery. Dianne Johnson is the wife of our esteemed colleague Mr. LeRoy Johnson, and she is seated, as I say, in your gallery. I'd ask her to rise and receive the very, very warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you a number of special student visitors from W.P. Wagner who are here or will be here very shortly. In any case, I'd like to introduce them and thank them for coming, along with their group leaders Stan Bissell and Stacey Mabey. Please give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 49 guests from Rivière Qui Barre, the Camilla school. They are a great group of students who are energetic and eager to learn. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Mike Paustian and Ms Amanda Langford, teacher aides Mrs. Arlene Whitson and Mrs. Carol Brailey, and parent helpers Ms Anita Lischewski and Ms Brenda Hansen. I believe they are in our gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two groups of students today from the Duffield school who are seated in both the members' and the public galleries. The first group is a group of grade 9 students, 16 of them in total, accompanied by Sharon Smith and Marilee Godfrey.

The second group is 31 grade 6 students who are attending the School at the Legislature this week; their teacher, Mrs. Barb Daum; their assistant, Mrs. Charlotte Curtis; and their parent helper, Mrs. Shelley Charlet. These students will play a significant role in the future of our province, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House my nephew, John Brown. He's seated in the public gallery. John is 13 years old. He's currently enrolled in grade 8 at Millarville community school. He's an excellent student, and he's involved in school sports. He's currently a member of the school's basketball team. I would ask John to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Pat Spady and Sylvia Krogh. Pat and Sylvia are both part of the keep medicare public vigil committee. This committee, organized by concerned citizens of all political stripes, will be holding vigils on the steps of the Legislature throughout the session. Pat is accompanied by her grandson Sam, and they are seated in the public gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly four guests seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that they rise as I call out their names: Allan Dane, Jean McBean, Sylvia Galbraith, and Audrey Brooks. These four individuals are community activists and are concerned with the government's privatization plans for health care. They all attended the vigil held on the steps of the Legislature today, and I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policy Reforms

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a delight to rise in this new sitting and engage in another round of questions. A strong and informed leader is absolutely necessary to a well-functioning government. [some applause]

The Speaker: Hon. leader, sometimes it's difficult for the chair to determine who the applause is for.

Dr. Taft: I agree. I wasn't sure myself, Mr. Speaker.

Long-term policies must be set and implemented by a Premier who is fully accountable for his actions and decisions. Right now this does not exist with this government. [interjections] I can see this is going to be a fun spring.

My questions are to the Premier. Given that this government has made numerous threats to further privatize our province's health care system under a Premier who has admitted that he won't be running in the next election, will this government hold off on any policy reforms until they have a leader in place who will be accountable to the voters for the policies he sets?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm so happy the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the question. Here's the problem. I'm going to articulate the problem, and I hope everyone is listening. We have requests from regional health authorities ranging from 9 to 20 per cent. Even at the minimum, that is about three times the rate of inflation. That is the problem: 9 to 20 per cent. To put it into perspective, that's $900 million if it's 9 per cent; that's $2 billion if it's 20 per cent. That's putting it into perspective. That is the problem.

Now, we have come up with some ideas that will resolve some of the problem – some of the problem – we think. If the opposition parties – and I will challenge the media to ask them this question – or the Friends of Medicare or the Raging Grannies or any other group have solutions to bring costs back in line with the rate of inflation and to increase access, please send them forward. They have offered no solutions whatsoever.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question was actually about accountability.

Again to the Premier: will the Premier once and for all inform this House when he will be retiring so that we know when to expect meaningful long-term policy decisions?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't give you the exact date, but it will be sometime in the late fall of 2007 or perhaps the early winter of 2008. But relative to the exact date I haven't figured that out yet.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the unofficial race to become the next Premier is leading to policy gridlock in this government, what is this Premier doing to get this tired old government making decisions again?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, nothing has resulted in gridlock. As a matter of fact, we are proceeding and proceeding quite well as a government relative to policy decisions. There are all the ministers relative to the front bench – I've talked with most of them, not all of them – and the policy development taking place in their departments is absolutely outstanding. I wish the opposition would take some time – well, no, that would require too much work – to find out what is happening relative to policy development in each and every department. It's absolutely outstanding.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Registry System Security

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The shocking revelations uncovered today about the lack of action taken by this government in response to years of documented abuse of our registry system have an impact not only in Alberta but around the world. The threat of increased international terrorism has countries around the world tightening up security regulations from passports to drivers' licences to birth certificates. Unfortunately for Albertans, Alberta's private registry and the Ministry of Government Services have failed to follow suit. To the Minister of Government Services: following the events of September 11, 2001, can the minister explain to the House what increased security measures were imposed on Alberta's privately owned registries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good that the hon. member would ask that question because it does give me an opportunity to outline a whole number of issues that we have taken over the last couple or three years. It's interesting to see that they haven't changed their tactics. They're still using the Edmonton Journal as their chief source of research. I have read the articles that are printed in there, and quite frankly this stuff that's printed in there is basically all two and three years old.

Since a number of issues have arisen, we've put in a number of things. Currently drivers' licences are not printed at the registry. That's what used to happen. We used to have break-ins; we had material go missing. So we've plugged that hole. We're the first province in Canada to come out with the facial recognition licence. That's not done in every other province, but we do it in Alberta. We have also stepped up all of our security within the registries themselves. For example, the people that have access to the private information all have a code number, and they have to abide by the codes.

We'll continue this later.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how much of that missing material, including blank licences, has actually been accounted for, the material that he indicated was stolen?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, these were break-ins that occurred back in 2003 and 2002. Some of that material, of course, was not recovered. However, it doesn't have any value currently. It has no value currently. The new drivers' licences have got identity things on them that we're not prepared to discuss in public because, of course, if we reveal what exactly is on there that's secure, then people trying to mimic them would have that information, so we're not doing that. They're encased in a certain material, and that's not just normal plastic. I can tell you that. So there's that issue, and of course they're produced by the Canadian Bank Note. Like I mentioned earlier, the facial recognition.

As far as the registries are concerned, we currently have on staff 15 inspectors. If we ever get a tip that there might be something going on in a registry, we can follow it. On top of that, we do very detailed, unannounced audits on at least 80 registries every year.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the number of falsely obtained drivers' licences remains so high and the credibility of Alberta's licences is so low that the province of B.C. has threatened to end an agreement under which Alberta's drivers' licences can be exchanged for one from B.C., what has the minister done to eliminate falsely obtained or fake licences from the streets of Alberta from circulating?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there should be some kind of rule against making those kinds of statements in this House because people should be honest when they come in here. The fact is that we work closely with the registries in B.C. and the B.C. government, and they have never indicated that there's any problem with our licences. None. There's a reciprocal agreement in place. There's never been any indication that any other province has a problem with our licence.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October 1993 the then Minister of Municipal Affairs stated that it was ludicrous to suggest that privatizing Alberta's registries could lead to potential security breaches. In September '02 Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta noted that some of the private registry offices in this province "continue to be compromised by individuals operating on behalf of different groups." In February '06 it's reported that members of organized crime have infiltrated this province's registries, potentially gaining unfettered access to personal information on Albertans. The question to the Minister of Government Services: given that your government was warned about these security breaches more than three years ago, why has this government ignored this alarming problem?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just went through a whole number of things that we've implemented. There's even more that we've done, and I'll indicate another one. We require that every person that has access to personal information has to go through a security check. They have to then get a password number that they can use to gain access. What that does for us is it allows us to watch who's accessing from the registry. We've got two ways. We can tell which registry is accessing, but then we can tell which individual is accessing. If we ever suspect that there is something going on, we immediately have one of our investigators go in and make sure that the access that they're gaining is for the purpose for which they had their licence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since this government surrendered its responsibility to the private sector, is it now helpless in its ability to punish or revoke the licences of registry owners with a history of security infractions? What can we do to them?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have forced the sale of registries. That has happened. We have cancelled the ability of individuals to have access to the registries. We take it extremely seriously any time that anyone breaches the security code. They all must have signed before they have that access. So if hon. members have any indication of any registry or any individual in a registry giving out information that they shouldn't have, please send it over because we really find this a very serious situation if somebody is breaching that contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. This one is to the Solicitor General. Given that the RCMP has stated that they're willing to launch an investigation if properly funded, will you commit today to providing the funds necessary to conduct such a thorough investigation?

Mr. Cernaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the RCMP are properly funded, and if there's an allegation of criminal misconduct or a criminal offence within one of the registry offices, they would be called in to do an investigation.

The hon. Minister of Government Services explained all of the things that have been done over the last three years, if not over the last 10 years, regarding improving the system, ensuring that the system is safe, ensuring that the system is secure. If there are individuals that are found to have committed a criminal offence or released private information illegally, obviously they'll be dealt with according to the law.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans who are puzzled by the strange omission of the so-called third way in health care from both Tuesday's taxpayer-funded PC infomercial and yesterday's throne speech should mark March 31 on their calendars. That's the day the Tory Party faithful vote on the Premier's leadership. In other words, Albertans are being kept in the dark about the government's secret plan to privatize health care because the Premier is worried about his leadership. My question is to the Premier. Why is this Premier keeping the government's plans for private, two-tier health care secret until after the upcoming vote on his leadership?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the details will come when the legislation is introduced. At that time, the hon. leader of the third party will have ample time to debate the legislative changes unless, of course, he can come up with a better solution.

Now, I'm open to ideas, but I'll tell you what the problem is. Here's the original ask: Chinook health region, 19.8 per cent, that's $1.9 billion; Palliser, 18.6 per cent, that's $1.8 billion; Calgary, 17.3, that's $1.7 billion; East Central, 28.7, that's $2.8 billion. Without going through the whole list, the total is $100.6 billion – $100.6 billion this year alone – and they have no solutions other than to spend, spend, and spend more.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, they vote down our ideas which would save money.

Now, if the third way is so controversial that you can't even share it with the Tory delegates to your leadership review, Mr. Premier, what do you think normal Albertans are going to think about it?

Mr. Klein: I'll tell you what normal Albertans will think about it. Normal Albertans will think that $100.6 billion is . . . [interjections] Well, they don't think it's much; $100.6 billion – $100.6 billion – and the NDs don't think it's much. Well, their sense of money is a lot different than mine, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier is so desperate to hang on to power for a couple more years, why doesn't he do the right thing and back away from his plans for private, two-tier medicine in this province until he gets a mandate from the people?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would challenge the media to ask the Official Opposition if they have any solutions or if the opposition thinks that $100.6 billion is acceptable annually. If the answer is that, yes, they feel it's acceptable, then their assessment of the value of money, as I said before, is a lot different than mine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing from some of my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne that the persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD, program is facing a funding crisis. This has caused some significant concerns amongst individuals with these disabilities and their families. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Is the government planning to reduce needed funding to persons with developmental disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be absolutely clear. There has not been and there will not be a reduction in funding for the persons with developmental disabilities program at all. In fact, over the past five years the funding for this important program has increased 70 per cent while the client base has increased 20 per cent. That means that this past year the budget has been nearly half a billion dollars, which is significant for 9,200 persons. I have to tell you this as well. The reason we're so committed to the program is that it's important that persons with developmental disabilities are able to participate effectively in our communities on an everyday basis. So it's significant funding, and it will not be reduced.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister, and this will be the first question when I go home this weekend: how can the minister ensure that these people with disabilities are taken care of and get the support that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. I know that a number of MLAs like this hon. member have received letters in this regard. It's important that you realize that we're not talking about funding just for one program and for those supports. What we are talking about is a range of supports for persons with developmental disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, you'll recall that we had in place this year a review for the AISH program. That program provides a range of supports, as well, for 90 per cent of our clients that receive funding through our persons with developmental disabilities program. So that's in addition to the nearly half a billion dollars, as I explained earlier, for the 9,200 clients. That means that we have the living allowance, which is increasing here in April to a thousand dollars per month for 90 per cent of our persons with development disabilities. We also have a comprehensive health benefits program. We have a brand new personal income support program that we've legislated. That's approximately $360 per month.

This range of supports is because we are, as I said earlier, really committed to ensuring that persons with developmental disabilities can live and participate in our communities on an everyday basis.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: how will the minister and her department ensure that this funding is actually meeting the needs of the people it's intended for and actually getting to those people directly?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we all agree that it's important to ensure that this range of supports through these programs is available for persons with developmental disabilities. I can tell you, hon. member, that I as the minister responsible for this program will ensure that it's effective, that it's efficient, and that it's in place for persons with developmental disabilities on into the future. It is a significant amount of funding, but more importantly we have clients with great needs that need the budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has been promising details about health reforms for years but gave no details in Tuesday's infomercial or in the throne speech. The Premier's way of health care seems to have been halted or perhaps just delayed. My questions are to the Premier. Was it the health minister's meeting with your federal cousins that halted the Premier's reforms?

Mr. Klein: Well, thank God we have some federal cousins that are at least honest. Remember Adscam. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that if I was part of a Liberal government and was involved in a scandal like Adscam, like the Liberals were, I would have to find a place far enough away in the world to hide, and if they found me, they would lynch me for sure. These people got away with it. Well, they really didn't get away with it. They were unelected, thank God.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize: the figure is only $10 billion, not a hundred billion. Only $10 billion. But they still don't have any solutions.

Relative to the question I'll have the hon. minister reply.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there was an opportunity to meet with the federal Minister of Health and to give a high-level overview of some of the plans in Alberta. It has not delayed anything or accelerated anything, merely given us an opportunity to have that exchange.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: is the delay because the Premier is being pressured by rural government members with concerns that these reforms will pull doctors away from their communities? Is that the delay?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no delay. This takes time. We want to make sure that it's right. I'll be discussing later this afternoon with the minister a public consultation process. That has yet to take place, and we want to make sure that it is right. Once again I would ask – and I would ask sincerely – that if the Liberals or the NDs have any solutions to bring these costs under control, please send them over. The hon. leader chirps and chips, but he doesn't have any solutions. I have yet to see anything on paper. Yes, he's good to stand on the steps of the Legislature and lead the Raging Grannies and the Friends of Medicare and all the other supporters in chants and so on, but he has no solutions. He is mindless.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The Premier already has the Liberal document called Toward a Healthy Future, so he can look in there for suggestions.

My final question to the Premier: is the government delaying implementation of the Premier's way or just delaying the announcement until after March 31?

Mr. Klein: Neither, Mr. Speaker. And "the way": I'd like to see that. I don't recall ever receiving a copy. Maybe I have a copy. I want to see some specific solutions that are going to achieve two things: one, increase access, and number two, bring costs in line with the rate of inflation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. The summer temporary employment program has been implemented for over 30 years and has provided Alberta's youth valuable hands-on experience and opportunities that can be directly applied to their future education and training. I would like to know if the program is still in place and if Albertans are benefiting from it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Of course, the summer temporary employment program, or the STEP program, is a very important program that helps workers and employers. This year more than 3,000 students and individual youth will be able to participate in the program, and they will learn skills from the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister. As part of the STEP program the government offsets some of the costs associated with the workers' wages. Last year Alberta's minimum wage increased. Was this increase taken into account in this year's STEP program?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker, definitely. What we pay under STEP is $6.05 an hour, but we expect the employers, of course, to pay the minimum wage. In most cases you will find that they top up the wages considerably higher.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is also for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. I know that there will be businesses and community and nonprofit organizations like historical sites in my constituency that will be interested in taking part in the program. How do they apply, and what is the deadline for the STEP applications?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, any organization, including historical organizations, interested in STEP funding may apply. The deadline is February 28, and the phone number is 780-422-5082. The STEP program runs from April 24 to September 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Adoption Quotas

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January of this year it was reported that an internal government report produced by Children's Services detailed some very disturbing policies regarding financial penalties and adoption quotas. In a February 7, 2006, letter the hon. Minister of Children's Services states that she does not condone the use of a quota system; however, her department does set performance measures to achieve its business goals including increasing the number of adoptions in the province. My questions are for the Minister of Children's Services. Does your ministry now or has it in the past financially rewarded or penalized child welfare workers for either meeting or falling short of their performance measures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first say that we're deeply committed in this government to finding permanent homes for children that are in our care. I don't believe for a minute that having adoption quotas in our business plan is out of line. We want all our workers in the field to understand the importance that we put on adoptions in this province. We want to make sure that our children are taken care of and that they find a good, stable home.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: what steps has the minister taken in investigating the use of financial penalties for child welfare workers who do not meet a specific quota?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to put this in perspective. First of all, what the hon. member is talking about is a bonus system that is given to the CEOs within the region. That's to make sure that they match the goals that we set out for them. At no time under my ministry has anyone ever been penalized.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: will the minister reassure child welfare workers today that they will not face repercussions for speaking out publicly and reporting financial penalties imposed by Children's Services?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear here. First of all, no child care worker in this province is penalized for not meeting their quotas. What I will say is that the caseworkers in this province do a wonderful job. We appreciate everything that they do. I'm committed as the minister to continue to dialogue with them. Last summer I spent the entire summer travelling this province talking individually to child care workers. I met with them, listened to some of their concerns. They're committed to adoptions. They're committed to our aboriginal children in this province, to make sure that they find homes for these people. They do a wonderful job, and at no time are they ever penalized.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Edmonton Catholic School Board Deficit

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently it was discovered through an external audit that the Edmonton Catholic school board had accumulated a nearly $10 million deficit and, to make matters worse, was not precisely aware how this deficit was generated. Subsequently the board voted against an independent forensic audit, leaving many questions unanswered. To the Minister of Education: how is it possible that a school board can generate a nearly $10 million deficit without the trustees being aware of it?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, this is a very unfortunate circumstance. Obviously, $10 million is a very large amount of money for any school board to try and handle. The issue, I think, is that the School Act requires an external auditor to be appointed to every school jurisdiction, and that particular auditor's responsibilities would include management letters at the end of an audit term. As soon as those deficiencies were spotted, I'm assuming that they were brought forward to the trustees, specifically to the board chair, who in turn called me about it as soon as she knew about it. We sat down, and we had a meeting about it. They've now sent me a letter outlining what they're going to do about it, and we'll take it from there. The fact is, though, that I remain concerned that we don't have any impact on the classroom. We're just reviewing those numbers and statistics right now. In terms of the exact process of how they landed there, that will be I'm sure explained further as the days and months roll along.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My further supplemental to the same minister: how is it possible that the finance director was only reprimanded for this colossal loss and still remains in charge of the Edmonton Catholic school board's books?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obviously staffing decisions are at the discretion of the local school board. We don't hire staff for these school jurisdictions. They do that themselves. I think they do it to the best of their abilities. In this particular case obviously there were some cost overruns. They have already indicated publicly and to me privately that there will be some reprimands. Perhaps they've already instituted some of those reprimands. In the end the situation needs to be corrected and it also needs to not repeat itself. I'm satisfied so far that they've taken some steps in that direction, and they will perhaps be taking even more stringent steps in the very near future.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Lastly, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how is it possible that the school board will recover $10 million without really negatively affecting the students' learning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: That, indeed, is the central concern, I think, for the parents, obviously for the students, for the teachers, for the trustees, and for the administrators alike. The fact is that some cost overruns unfortunately occurred on the capital infrastructure side. Alberta Education is expected to inherit that aspect of the portfolio soon, and we'll be looking at tightening up some of the controls where possible. I think there were other cost overruns with respect to not having in place a proper project-based accounting system, and that, too, is being rectified. In fact, I understand that they have engaged or will soon be engaging a supplementary auditor to help to correct the difficulties they have and to ensure that others don't occur.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Learning Commission Recommendations

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Learning Commission was a major public review of the Alberta education system. It wrapped up in 2003, but Alberta's children are still waiting while this government and minister continue to consult and study the issues to death. Twenty-one accepted recommendations have involved nothing more than studying, and yesterday: more studies and more consultations. My question to the Minister of Education: how long will Albertans wait for action on key promises like fundraising, school fees, and access to diagnostic learning services for children?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm so grateful to have this question because the Alberta Commission on Learning actually put out 95 recommendations, a huge number of recommendations that covered tip to stern, so to speak, of the education system in this province. We have the best education system anywhere in Canada. Our goal is to make it one of the best in the entire world, and we're getting there very, very quickly.

I should just point out, Mr. Speaker, that yes, there are a few recommendations in the Learning Commission that still require some additional discussion and study. We have had a lot. It's been very open and public and transparent and all of that. In the interim let's not forget that we have added 551 million – half a billion – brand new dollars in support of the Learning Commission recommendations that were accepted. With your permission I'd like to read all 42 pages if I could. Maybe I could seek unanimous consent of the House to read all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as collective agreements expire this year, how long will the ATA and the school boards wait before knowing how to start negotiating their collective agreements?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is referring to recommendation 81 (a) and (c), wherein it was recommended that the School Boards Association have in place a bargaining model, a province-wide bargaining model akin to what we see with the Alberta Teachers' Association. Now, that is one of the most contentious issues that we have on the plate before us. As the hon. member would know, we allowed for the fullest amount of presentation possible, and the last group just came in in the middle of December. We've got their information now, and it's been rolled into the mix. We're studying that stuff as well. This is one where the school boards have voted 59 per cent in favour of a particular model. Quite clearly, 41 per cent were not in favour. It takes a little bit of fine figure skating to get through some of these issues, and this is one of them.

Mr. Flaherty: Don't trip.

Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when will this government stop driving school boards into millions of dollars' difficulty and fund all-day kindergarten? Immediately, please?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, junior kindergarten or the possibility of it and the possibility of having full-day, mandatory kindergarten are two additional recommendations of the Learning Commission. I think what I'd like to do to answer the hon. member's question is simply say this: 95 per cent of young Albertans who are five years of age and therefore eligible for kindergarten enrolment are already enrolled in a kindergarten program.

We spend about $100 million or $110 million per year helping school boards provide those important programs, and you know what, Mr. Speaker? They're working, and they're so largely subscribed to because there is flexibility for the local school board to provide it in a manner at a time and a location that suits the local area. Quite frankly, many school boards like that. However, this issue, too, I'll be addressing further this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For all this government knows, Tony Soprano, John Gotti, and Al Capone may be driving around North America with fake Alberta drivers' licences from privatized registries. Unnamed government and law enforcement officials are beyond frustrated and are beginning to make public information about bribery, forgery, and gangland connections. It's a damning indictment of the government's privatization policy. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Given that there is evidence of security breaches and widespread fraud and abuse of Alberta drivers' licences by criminal gangs, why won't the minister admit that registries' privatization has been an abysmal failure?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member to read Hansard, but as far as the people that he indicated that were using false drivers' licences, I hope they're not because I thought there were some of those folks that were looking at the grass from the wrong side now. But I imagine that our drivers' licences would be accepted in heaven. They are very superior.

Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member doesn't check a little more closely about what was printed because, in fact, what was printed was incidents that happened some time back, and as I outlined to the Liberal opposition, we have done many things to make sure that they are secure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the reports of security breaches are linked to organized crime, will the minister share with this House what he knows about gang involvement in compromising Albertans' private information held and collected by private registries?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, whenever we have any report or any reason to suspect that there may be information being let out or people seeking this information that is being given into hands that it shouldn't be, we do send in inspectors, and we're very, very careful to make sure that private information is not getting into the wrong hands. We take this very, very seriously, and that's why we have set up so many inspectors, eight of them in Calgary, seven of them in Edmonton, investigators that can go quickly, unannounced to these facilities. We have the mechanism now in place so that we can check who it is that's asking for that information and then be able to follow up to make sure that that information is used only for the purposes for which it was granted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the minister: given that Albertans have every right to know how and to what extent organized crime has infiltrated privatized registries, why hasn't the minister turned the whole sorry mess over to the RCMP for a proper criminal investigation?

2:20

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is – and the Solicitor General clearly commented in his answer – that any time we suspect, even just suspect, that there is organized crime involvement, we turn it over to the police authorities. That's one of the things we do right away. Our investigators will have a primary look at it, and then if there's any thought that it might be connected with a gang, it's turned over to the local police authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of West Yellowhead along with other Albertans continue to look forward to a resolution of the long-standing Canada/U.S. softwood lumber dispute. Recently some U.S. Senators have called for negotiations to resume between the United States and Canada to reach a settlement. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Are there any talks planned to resolve the softwood lumber dispute?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are meeting with federal counterparts, various ministers, and potentially structuring meetings with the Americans on the lumber dispute. We're just taking some time for the federal government to put people in place that will not only do the negotiating, but there's now, of course, a change in ambassadorship, so those things are going to take a few more weeks.

I'd just like to inform the House about two things. One is that Alberta will not favour any sort of a settlement at any cost, and secondly, we will have a thorough consultation with all industry before we sign any agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is also to the same minister. Is there any reason for hope on this issue, especially with the new federal government and the new Canadian ambassador to the United States in place now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is. Although the previous ambassador, Ambassador McKenna, moved the file considerably – he was a great supporter of finding a quick resolution to this 20-year issue that's been lingering – we now have a new ambassador, Ambassador Wilson, who was part of the negotiating team on the original free trade agreement. That will bring hope to finding a resolution. Also, the Americans, of course, are moving legislation on the Byrd amendment. So things are lining up positively, and we do have great hope that this will finally resolve the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Is trade retaliation against the United States the answer to solving this ongoing dispute?

Mr. Stelmach: Our position is that we don't support any trade retaliation. If we ever use energy, for instance, that'll be tremendously harmful to our economy, and as the Premier has said many times, 99 per cent of our trade occurs very quietly day in and day out without any problems. This is one issue that, if we start the trade war, potentially will hurt Alberta's interests in the long run. So, no, we don't support any trade retaliation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Education Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the fact that Calgary and its surrounding districts are responsible for educating almost a third of Alberta students, we continue to be abandoned by this government. The combined school infrastructure debt of Calgary public and separate has grown to a half billion dollars with no concrete relief in sight for Calgary as of yesterday's throne speech. My questions are all to the Minister of Education, who last year was granted greater control of the school infrastructure budget. Given that your government accepted the reduced class size recommendations of the Learning Commission, why are Varsity Acres' kindergarten children being educated in a windowless copy room while the staff room was converted into another makeshift classroom?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that particular circumstance, but if the member wishes to send me over some details, I wouldn't mind having a look at it. I'm assuming that he's already brought the case to the attention of the school board responsible.

I should just add this, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of very positive and good-news stories coming into and out of Calgary. For example, we know that Centennial high school in Calgary, that was recently opened, was one of seven – one of seven – new Calgary schools scheduled for '04-05, and another four are open or are scheduled to be opened in the current school year. These 11 new projects will provide enough space to accommodate 5,275 new students for the Calgary public board and 2,000 additional student spaces for the Calgary Catholic district. So as monies come available, we are addressing these circumstances.

Secondly, we're also providing where we can and on the basis of health and safety concerns additional brand new, state-of-the-art, steel-framed modulars to help accommodate those populations that are fluctuating in terms of students. So there's quite a bit of good news happening.

I'd like to comment on the $207 million that I announced last September. I'd like to read that entire list at some point into Hansard, Mr. Speaker, so the people in Alberta know how much we are investing as monies come available for new school infrastructure projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, of course, to the Minister of Education: if your government is not willing to repair older schools and build enough new ones to meet Calgary and district's growing population, why won't you at least provide suitable portable relief? The ones that you are personally sending now to the Calgary district don't fit.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're providing about $4.7 billion this year alone through the Department of Education, and some of that, obviously, is also with Infrastructure. Now, once the infrastructure portfolio, all three parts, comes over into Education's domain, I will be able to respond in even greater detail.

However, let me just say, Mr. Speaker, that we spend hundreds of millions of dollars every year on one form of infrastructure or another to help improve our schools to make sure that they are safe, to make sure that they are affordable and accessible and that our students are being provided with the best educational opportunities possible. We do that consistently right throughout the province, including the wonderful city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why does this government continue to undermine public education by subsidizing private schools to the tune of 60 per cent of their public counterparts' per pupil grants? Is this your third way for education?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the incredible success stories in Alberta is the fact that we allow choice. We allow and we encourage the most choice in kindergarten to grade 12 programming in the country. We have public schools, we have public Catholic schools, we have francophone schools, we have charter schools, we have virtual schools, and we even have private schools. They're all part of the mix that makes this the great province that it is, and the parents appreciate having that choice. The fact that we're able to provide only 60 per cent of the instructional component, none out of the infrastructure capital side, for helping out our private schools is yet another one of our major accolades, and the students in those schools are doing extremely well.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you're aware, in 2006 we will be celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. For the duration of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature at this point in the agenda I will be providing you on a daily basis a historical vignette in commemoration of this anniversary. These vignettes may provide historical data, quotations, or remarks made by a variety of members and brief descriptions about them.

Alberta's first election was held on November 9, 1905, and our 26th election was held on November 22, 2004. Throughout our 100-year history in our democracy in Alberta a total of only 769 different members have been elected in the 26 elections. In terms of service 286 members served one term, 187 members served two terms, 140 members served three terms, 78 members served four terms, 40 members served five terms, 19 members served six terms, eight members served seven terms, six members served eight terms, four members served nine terms, and one member served 10 terms. The average length of service in this Assembly has been 2.4 terms.

In terms of the longest serving MLAs in the history of the province of Alberta the longest serving member was Gordon E. Taylor, who served the 9th to the 18th Legislatures. He was elected for the first time in 1940 for the original constituency of Drumheller and served for 38 years and 10 months.

The second longest serving member was elected in the 1935 provincial election. Alfred J. Hooke, representing the constituency of Red Deer, served from the Eighth to the 16th Legislatures and served for 35 years and one month.

Ernest C. Manning was the third longest serving member. Elected in the 1935 election out of the city of Calgary, he served from the Eighth to the 16th Legislatures and served for 33 years and three months.

Floyd M. Baker, elected in 1935, representing the constituency of Clover Bar, served from the Eighth to the 15th Legislatures for a total of 31 years and seven months.

In 1971 Peter Trynchy was elected in the constituency of Whitecourt, served from the 17th to the 24th Legislatures. He served for 29 years and five months.

Those are the five longest serving members in the history of the province of Alberta.

The sixth longest serving member was William Tomy. Elected in 1935 in the constituency of Whitford, he served from the Eighth to the 11th Legislatures and then from the 14th to the 16th, for 28 years and 11 months.

The next longest serving member, elected in 1963, was Ray Speaker, who served from the 15th to the 22nd Legislatures for the constituency of Little Bow for 28 years and six months.

R.E. Ainsley was elected in 1935, served from the Eighth to the 14th Legislatures for the constituency of Leduc for 27 years and eight months.

In 1935 Peter Dawson was elected in the constituency of Little Bow, served from the Eighth to the 14th Legislatures, for 27 years and seven months. He served for 26 years as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta.

Still in the race but moving fast is the current MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, who was elected in 1979, from the 19th Legislature to the present, has now served 26 years and four months for the constituencies of Barrhead and others but at the conclusion of this term will just – whoa – go all the way up.

Thank you.

An Hon. Member: It'll be another 10 years before they paint your portrait.

The Speaker: Well, that's true.

Alberta Winter Games

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I stand before you this afternoon, Alberta's best young athletes are gathering in the communities of West Yellowhead for the 2006 Winter Games. Tonight our Premier will open the games at the Gordon Moore park in Hinton. Tomorrow the athletes take centre stage as the competition begins. Twenty-five hundred athletes and officials will take part, representing eight zones with pride and enthusiasm.

The Alberta Games are the essence of sports in our province. They bring together the passion of youth, the power of volunteerism, and the pride of the community for a special day every two years.

For some athletes the Alberta Games may be the starting point for their successful career in sport. For many others it will give them the skills and the experience that will help them throughout their lives.

Hosting the games speaks to the spirit and the pride of Alberta communities. This year it's the people of Edson, Hinton, Jasper, and Yellowhead county who are putting on the show. It takes almost as many volunteers as athletes to make this event successful. From the games' board of directors, committees, and office staff through to the volunteers driving the buses, preparing the special meals, and cleaning the venues – these are the people who deserve our thanks for their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the members of the House to join me in wishing everyone involved in the 2006 Winter Games all the best for a successful event.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Supreme Court Nomination Process

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the new Prime Minister of Canada, the Rt. Hon. Stephen Harper, on his historic victory in the January 23 federal election. For only the third time in the history of Canada we have a Prime Minister from Alberta, something that, I am sure, pleases everybody in this Chamber. Almost everybody.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to see that Prime Minister Harper is already fulfilling his campaign promises to bring much-needed democratic reform and accountability to Ottawa. Today the Prime Minister announced his nomination of Justice Marshall Rothstein from Manitoba to fill the current vacancy on the Supreme Court of Canada. On Monday, for the first time in the history of our country, a nominee for the Supreme Court will appear before a public confirmation hearing and answer questions posed by an all-party committee of parliamentarians. This is a most welcome constitutional reform. It will bring more openness, more transparency, and more accountability to the process of government.

Mr. Speaker, since the adoption of the Charter of Rights in 1982 the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada have become some of the most politically influential decision-makers in our country. The people of Canada have a right to know something about these judges before they are appointed because once they are appointed, they wield this power until the age of 75 and mandatory retirement.

Monday's public confirmation hearings will create a historic precedent for democratic reform and strengthen our system of checks and balances. So I say congratulations, Prime Minister Harper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Universal Health Care

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, although Premier Tommy Douglas of Saskatchewan is called the father of medicare, the true roots of medicare were planted and nurtured in the province of Alberta. It was the government of Alberta that designed the first health care plan in Canada to cover all citizens, and the government protected this plan in the 1935 and 1942 Alberta state health insurance acts.

The federal government proposals that started all of Canada on the road to universal health care in 1945 were the same proposals from the Alberta Hoadley commission of 1932-33 that had already been adopted by Alberta. Due to the absence of comprehensive, researched history of medicine in Alberta before 1947, credit for being the first to establish universal health care was not documented until just recently by Dr. Robert Lampard. An excerpt from his book Profiles and Perspectives from Alberta's Medical History, which documents the roots of medicare in Alberta, is published in the February 2006 volume of The Alberta Doctors' Digest.

Not only was the government of Alberta the first to establish medicare in Canada; it's also recognized in this history book as the greatest defender of medicare. Premier Manning helped save medicare when he led an appeal to reduce the costs of the 1967 Pearson plan by reducing its contemplated coverage. Alberta's present Premier helped save medicare by finding a way to stretch medicare dollars in 1993.

With health care costs rapidly escalating throughout the world, it is critically important that we find a way to save many of the health care benefits that we enjoy. It would be weak and foolish to pretend that we can save health care without making changes. It is prudent to prevent a collapse of a system by restructuring it. There needs to be a new way to ensure universal health care.

Alberta designed the first health care plan to cover all citizens. Alberta will design a plan that will protect our health care system and make it stronger for future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Support for Olympic Athletes

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As the Olympic Games in Turin, Italy, continue, we as Canadians, more importantly Albertans, have much to be proud of. These men and women have put their lives and careers on hold in the pursuit of excellence in the form of bronze, silver, and gold.

Rural areas such as Vermilion, Spruce Grove, Canmore, and Eckville and the cities of Edmonton and Calgary have new heroes. There have been a total of 19 medals to date, and a great number of these belong to Albertans. This speaks volumes to the quality of the people this province has within its boundaries. This speaks to the determination that lies deep within each athlete.

As a province we should be supporting these athletes through funding. This government has growing surpluses larger than before. Alberta once had a system that produced many great athletes and many great Canadians. It's time that we became that province once again. We have an opportunity before us in the 2008 Summer Games and the 2010 Winter Olympics in Canada to allow Alberta to really stand out, not for oil and gas revenues but for its people, the true Alberta wealth.

Currently athletes receive funding from the corporate community, the federal government, and nongovernment agencies and families. Now is the time for leadership from this government to support our athletes and show that Alberta remains committed to providing superior quality of life that is inclusive and active, further supporting a healthy Alberta leading by example.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care Services

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to speak about our province's most valuable resource: our children. As we are all aware, the changing of the federal government has created a widespread sense of uncertainty within the child care sector not only in Alberta but across Canada.

Federal MP Olivia Chow has announced that she plans on bringing forward a bill that would reaffirm the national child care agreement enacted by the former federal government. The implications of cancelling this agreement are still uncertain in Alberta, leaving families and child care workers alike in a state of uncertainty. Alberta relied in large part upon the funding provided by the previous federal government to enact its five-point plan, a positive step in ensuring that our children receive quality care and that child care workers receive sufficient supports and respect.

I urge the members of this Assembly to join in recognition of the importance of maintaining and building upon a provincial child care program that is healthy, fully supported, and respected. Alberta families need to know that regardless of who is in Ottawa, their children will have access to quality care. Child care workers need to know that their work is highly valued and that the recent commitments of this provincial government will not be withdrawn or reduced in light of the federal election results.

I'm expressing my support for families in the child care sector in Alberta by asking this provincial government to immediately commit to following through on its responsibilities to the child care sector through whatever means necessary. In the wealthiest province in Canada we can all agree that our most valuable resource is our children. We cannot allow changes in Ottawa to undermine our commitments to provide respectable, quality care for the next generation of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Public Health Care

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The results of the federal election have shown that Albertans will not tolerate dishonesty in government. This is bad news for the Premier. During the election the Premier refused to speak honestly to Albertans about health care. He openly declared that he had no plan for private health care, and he claimed that he was going to consult with Albertans prior to moving towards two-tier health care. Both claims have proven false. The result is that this government has no mandate for its plan for private, two-tier health care.

The deception continues, Mr. Speaker. Albertans won't know the details of the health privatization plan until after two important events: the PC Party leadership review on March 31 and a taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign to sell private health care to Albertans. If health care privatization is making Tory delegates so nervous and the government backbenchers so skittish, one can only imagine the reaction of normal Albertans once they finally see the plan. That's why the Premier is waiting for a taxpayer-funded, multimillion-dollar propaganda campaign to sell Albertans on the virtues of waiting longer, paying more, and padding profits for health care corporations.

The Premier is hiding his health privatization plans from Albertans because of his own personal, political interests. When politicians refuse to be honest, it's the people who lose. While the Premier clings to power and the government panders to the private health care lobby, Albertans are demanding that the government improve the public health care system, control costs by getting a handle on drug costs, and invest in prevention and promotion.

Real solutions for improving public health care, solutions championed by the NDP opposition, are being ignored in favour of deception and self-interest calculations. Mr. Speaker, Albertans will not stand for it.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party on a petition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the first of what I know will be many petitions in support of health care during this session. This one urges the government of Alberta to "eliminate private clinics and private delivery in the health care system, and develop a comprehensive plan to strengthen and extend Medicare." It contains 238 signatures.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on a Standing Order 30 notification.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance: namely, the ongoing reduction in funding and supports provided to individuals and families through the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party on a Standing Order 15 submission.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'd propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Assembly consider the Premier's release of the 2006 Speech from the Throne to members of the media and the Leader of the Official Opposition prior to Members of the Legislative Assembly a contempt of the Assembly and a breach of the Assembly's privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the conclusion the chair will deal with the privilege statement first, before we proceed to the Standing Order 30 application.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Drug-endangered Children Act

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Drug-endangered Children Act.

This bill will make it clear that children exposed to serious drug activities such as manufacturing and trafficking are victims of abuse and need protection. Protecting children is becoming increasingly complex, and we need this legislation to help us keep ahead of this emerging social issue.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Protection Against Family Violence
Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to thank the hon. Minister of Children's Services for asking me to lead this bill through the Legislature.

It's my pleasure to introduce and move first reading of the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act.

The proposed amendments to this important legislation will further protect victims of family violence by addressing abusive and threatening behaviours such as stalking. It will also offer protection to more family members to ensure that vulnerable people like seniors or those with disabilities don't fall prey to family violence.

Thank you.

The Speaker: For the record that is Bill 3, and added to the conclusion of the name of the bill was 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006.

In August 2005 the government of the United States passed a law extending daylight saving time by four weeks. Following that decision the Alberta government looked into the pros and cons of changing daylight saving time in our own province. The decision to introduce this legislation came after consultation with all of the ministries and the relevant stakeholders. The decision among the majority of stakeholders was to synchronize with our trading partners. This bill proposes to extend daylight saving time in Alberta, beginning with the second Sunday in March and ending the first Sunday in November, commencing in 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill deals with minor amendments in three pieces of justice legislation: the Civil Enforcement Act, the judicature amendment act, and the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act.

Amendments to the Civil Enforcement Act will further refine and clarify the process for seizing property that is already under seizure so that all types of creditors can use the same process under that act.

Amendments to the judicature amendment act, originally introduced in 2004, will refine and clarify original amendments that allow structured settlements in injury and death cases so that payments can be made in instalments rather than in a lump sum.

Amendments to the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act reflect developments resulting from the introduction of digital recording in courtrooms in the year 2000. The changes will update the definition of court reporter, allow more flexibility in how records of court proceedings are certified, and clarify how records of court proceedings are stored and maintained.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 6, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 7Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006.

I'll have more to say on this later.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 8Trustee Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006.

In 2001 we amended the Trustee Act to introduce the prudent investor rule, allowing trustees to diversify investments to control risk and improve financial returns. At that time, the old rules governing trustee investments, referred to as the legal list, were retained for transitional purposes in a schedule to the Trustee Act. The bill eliminates the legal list from the Trustee Act altogether.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Bill 9Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, the carrier of Bill 9, I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Bill 10Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to request leave to introduce Bill 10, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, this act will help clarify and strengthen the engineering profession by allowing registered professional technologists to sit on the council of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, APEGGA, and vote on new amendments, regulations, and bylaws.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 10, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill 11Architects Amendment Act, 2006

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, this act will help to clarify and strengthen the architect profession by allowing the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for compulsory continuing competence in their profession.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006, as introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Bill 12Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being Bill 12, Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will implement many of the recommendations of the mortgage fraud committee and, hopefully, make it much more difficult for people who register titles under a mortgage fraud.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bill 13Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 13, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill will give tools to the Real Estate Association to help combat mortgage fraud.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 13, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006, as presented by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Bill 14Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat I request leave to introduce Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, these minor amendments will strengthen the act and respond to issues raised by individual callers and by the federation of regulated health professions.

I move first reading of Bill 14. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Bill 15International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act.

This act would implement provisions of agreements signed by Canada that create an international registry for aircraft engines and airframes. Because registry information is a provincial responsibility, provincial implementing legislation is needed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Bill 16Peace Officer Act

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act.

This bill will ensure better communication, co-operation, and collaboration between employers of peace officers and police services across the province, which will result in a higher level of law enforcement services in Alberta. It will also clarify the role, responsibility, and accountability of peace officers and strengthen provincial standards such as training, use of force, and qualifications.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Bill 17Libraries Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I beg leave to introduce Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006.

This act will provide library boards and municipalities greater flexibility to ensure that Albertans receive efficient and consistent library service. The amendments also clarify financial reporting requirements and provide for a mechanism when a municipality dissolves or amalgamates.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding Bill 201, which comes up next, and following discussions that I understand took place amongst members of all sides of the House, I would seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive the ordinary requirements of notice, that being pursuant to Standing Order 38(1)(d), which would allow for first reading of the human tissue gift act.

Bill 201Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill is designed to increase the number of Albertans who consent to tissue and organ donation to help save or improve the lives of those requiring transplants.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Similarly, with respect to upcoming Bill 202 and following discussions that I believe did take place amongst all sides of the House, I would seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive the ordinary requirements of notice as required otherwise under Standing Order 38(1)(d) to allow for first reading of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006.

The Speaker: That being the case, I'll call on the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bill 202Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 202, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006.

Basically what this act is to do is to give some more tools in the tool case for the hon. Minister of Environment to make sure that when crystal meth is made, the disposal of this is done in a proper way or that the persons that are doing this are paying penalties to clean up our environment so that we have the best environment in Canada.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Hi, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a package of documents prepared by the Friends of Medicare as part of their keep medicare public campaign. The documents were released in recent weeks and are a clear signal that Albertans are ready and willing to fight for their cherished public health care system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a paper written by Herb Emery and Kevin Gerrits entitled The Demand for Private Health Care Insurance in Alberta. Herb Emery is a senior fellow at the Fraser Institute, and the paper argues that for private insurance to be profitable, there must be a superior private system and an inferior public one.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of an urgent call for action put out by the Alberta Association for Community Living. The call for action warns of cuts to funding and services for individuals and families served by the PDD Board.

I also have letters from Lorraine Bens, Kathleen Chalmers, Mary Markowski, and Vahini Govender, who are just a few of the many people who have written to express their serious concerns about these possible cuts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the executive summary and key recommendations of the 1998 report of the Auditor General on Alberta registries made to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. This report identifies serious privacy and security concerns which clearly have not yet been addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to table five copies of the Liberal opposition paper Our Plan for Public Health Care: Creating a Healthy Future, Bold Innovation, Strong, Steady Management. This is in response to the Premier's request for information and suggestions on public health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and table the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford by the name of Shannon Critchley. She also includes a letter that she wrote to the Prime Minister. In both of these letters she expresses her grave concerns that the comments by Mr. Klein indicate that he may in fact be contemplating contravening the Canada Health Act, and she has very serious concerns about that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I will table with the Assembly today the appropriate copies of the following Members' Services orders. First of all, Members' Services Committee Order 10/05, which came into force on August 31, 2005; Members' Services Committee Order 11/05, which will come into force on April 1, 2006; Members' Services Committee Order 12/05, which will come into force on April 1, 2006; and Members' Services Committee Order 13/05, which will come into force on April 1, 2006.

In addition, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 18th annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office for the calendar year ended December 31, 2004. This report represents the audited financial statements for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2004, and the eighth annual report of the Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Coutts, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, responses to Written Question 34 and Written Question 37, asked by Mr. Bonko on November 21, 2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Municipal Affairs, response to Written Question 38 and return to order of the Assembly 44, both asked for by Mr. Taylor on behalf of Dr. Taft on November 21, 2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Fritz, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, return to order of the Assembly 46, asked for by Ms Pastoor on November 21, 2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Community Development, return to order of the Assembly MR 36, asked for by Mr. Martin on behalf of Dr. Pannu on May 2, 2005.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(5) I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to share with us the projected government business for the week of February 27 to March 2.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, and thank you to the hon. Opposition House Leader for the question. I'm happy to indicate that starting on Monday, February 27, in the afternoon we will deal with private members' business, written questions and motions for returns will be addressed, and under Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders we hope to address bills 201 and 202. Monday evening we should be able to address Motion 501, and then at 9 p.m. we will continue on with throne speech replies.

On Tuesday we hope to hear a message concerning a supplementary supply, following that, additional considerations for throne speech replies. Tuesday evening we anticipate that throne speech replies will continue.

On Wednesday we should be able to address Committee of Supply, supplementary supply, day 1 of 2, in fact. Wednesday evening we should be able to deal with day 2 of 2 for supplementary supply and, as time permits, consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech in the form of replies to the Speech from the Throne.

On Thursday we should see an introduction of a bill, the supplementary supply appropriation bill, from the previous two days of debate, followed by additional considerations of the throne speech, responses to it quite specifically, and wrapping up with second readings as per the Order Paper and following additional consultation with members opposite.

The Speaker: We will now proceed to the notification with respect to the breach of privilege or contempt of the Legislative Assembly. The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having a chance to review the notes for this, I am not entirely satisfied with the question of privilege, and I would ask your leave and leave of the Assembly to withdraw the motion.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Board

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will proceed. It has to do with the motion announced previously.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing reduction in funding and supports provided to individuals and families through the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Board.

Mr. Speaker, there were questions raised in the Legislature about this from one of the hon. members opposite, but I think that all of us as MLAs certainly have been flooded with calls and letters about this issue. Leading into the Assembly, it's certainly the most amount of mail that I've got as the MLA for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. It's a very organized group that feels that there is going to be a serious impact on some of the most vulnerable people in our society: those with developmental disabilities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the urgency of this, there seems to be a debate about what is a cut and what is not. The Alberta Association for Community Living believes, in talking to the members in their groups, that there is going to be a severe cut. I know the minister says that it's not a cut because there is a 2 per cent increase in the PDD budget, but I think the point that they make – and it should be clear – is that inflation has been running much higher than that, and institutional inflation usually runs higher than personal inflation. So they believe that this is a serious matter, and the reason they're raising it now is because they know that the budget is coming up probably in the middle of March.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister, I believe, said in question period and in my conversations with her that there have been increases in the past. I don't doubt that there have been monies put in in the past, but that does not help them this year. The point that they're making is that in the services that they're providing, there will be cuts. The urgency, again, is that I am told that the northwest and south regions have already begun to implement such reductions. They're already cutting back in those particular regions, and I'm told that most regions will begin to hold or will shortly be holding meetings with families, individuals, and service providers to discuss how to manage the required reduction in funding if additional funding is not coming.

Now, again, Mr. Speaker, I stress that this is a serious matter. These people are the most vulnerable people in society. They've got families that are under stress. Whether they've had increases in the last two or three years, that's great, but the point is that all they want is to maintain what they've had in the past. They're saying very clearly that they can't do this. Now, we can argue about figures here one way or the other, but the Alberta Association for Community Living and the people they serve are honourable people. They would not be saying this if there weren't cutbacks occurring.

The urgency again I stress, Mr. Speaker, because they know that the budget is coming down, we're told, in the middle of March at the earliest and perhaps the third week in March. If they don't do something about it now, these cuts will in fact occur, and it will have a very detrimental, serious effect on the most vulnerable people in society plus their families. So that's why this is the first chance that we've had to recognize this, hoping that there's still time in the budget to at least – it wouldn't be a lot of money – just bring things up to the inflation level. That's my understanding. That's all they're asking. They're not asking for big increases but just to be able to maintain the services that they've had in the past.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On this motion, the hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to respond to the motion pursuant to Standing Order 30 that's been raised.

The Speaker: We're dealing with urgency here now, everyone, okay?

Mrs. Fritz: I'll begin by saying that the premise, Mr. Speaker, of this member's motion is factually incorrect. Although it is an important issue, it's not a matter of urgent public importance that requires the adjournment of our ordinary Assembly business.

I appreciate the opportunity to provide the facts on this matter. As the member mentioned, yesterday I did meet with him to explain the funding for this important program, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought that the member would have taken that to the community and responded to the information that you had shared with me that you're receiving through letters, because you do know the facts from yesterday. We talked. We drew a diagram about that. We went through the budgets for the years, the numbers of people.

I've explained it today in the Assembly once again, as the member indicated to you, Mr. Speaker. Just to reconfirm that to you as well, there is not going to be a reduction. There has not been, and there won't be. There isn't a future reduction coming regarding this budget for persons with developmental disabilities.

In fact, when I spoke about the funding earlier, Mr. Speaker, PDD funding was $287 million in 1999. It's now reached nearly a half a billion dollars each year. It services 9,200 people, and they receive supports from the program. Those supports or the services are not being cut in any way. As I said earlier, that's a 70 per cent increase. During that same time, caseloads have grown approximately 20 per cent. It is a significant amount of funding. It averages about $55,000 per individual so that people can actively participate in their communities.

It's also important to note that nearly all of the people receiving supports in the PDD program, as I mentioned earlier as well, receive assistance from the AISH program. During the past year we increased that living allowance, Mr. Speaker. I explained it to you during question period. It's an issue that is very clearly related to the supports that we do provide.

We did have the building bridges report. We implemented all of those recommendations. I am committing to reviewing this program once again, Mr. Speaker, because that was six years ago for that report. Also, by relooking at it, we can ensure that PDD is meeting the needs identified by families in the disability community, that it's being administered in an effective and efficient way, that it can continue providing supports to Albertans in the years to come.

Also, based on the significant and ongoing funding that's provided to this program and because there are no plans to reduce the provincial support to PDD, I'm looking forward to your ruling on this matter because I don't believe it's an urgent matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to participate in the debate surrounding this Standing Order 30 motion. If I consult Beauchesne's 387 to 398 regarding emergency debates, there are a number of tests that are set out there. When I look at this issue, which I believe is urgent – and I urge the Speaker to support the motion – I note that a number of tests have been met. This issue is not currently before the courts. It was not mentioned specifically in the throne speech. There is no bill on the Order Paper which is dealing with this issue, nor was any bill outlined in the government press release of February 15 in which their entire spring session agenda was outlined.

The resolution of funding might be met if we knew when the date of the '06-07 budget was going to be, but at this point we have no indication from the government when that would be, so there's nothing before us that would lead us to believe that we could get a resolution to this fairly quickly. There's no notice on the Order Paper for any supplementary supply budget, which might offer some relief to this situation. No bill on the Order Paper, nothing on the legislative agenda from the government, budget is unknown, no supplementary supply indicators that might tell us when this could be relieved. So I believe that there are a number of tests that have been met here regarding urgency, Mr. Speaker.

I also note that Beauchesne 389 talks about an issue that is “so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention” and 390 that “the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.” I think what's of the public interest here and the public concern is that the PDD community boards are currently planning reductions in supports and services because the funding projections in the provincial government, or the information they've been given thus far by the minister, is indicating to them that the budget will not be adequate to meet current and upcoming needs, so they can't even stay at the same place. That's why they're talking about cuts. They believe they will have to implement cuts in certain programs in order to deal with the amount of money that's being given to them.

I think that the government action has the following implications for families. This is what captures that public interest and public concern that's noted in Beauchesne 389 and 390. There are long waiting lists for the services and support. This places families at risk of receiving less-than-adequate care, and I'll hasten to say that that's not because any caregiver wouldn't want to give it but that often there's just not enough funding to pay for enough hours, for example. We end up with increased segregation of individuals, placing those individuals in a situation of potential harm or, even worse, of abuse.

The Alberta Association of Community Living, who care for people in their own homes, has only received a 4 per cent raise in the last 16 years, Mr. Speaker, and they note that the wages for their care workers who take people into their homes to look after them are so low that they can't even organize respite care. I think this is part of the urgency debate, and given the leniency you showed others, I appreciate you directing the same towards me.

The Speaker: It has been provided.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

So in meeting that test that's set out in 389 and 390, I believe these arguments are part of it. It is not in the public interest, and I would argue that it's very much top of mind and of public concern that we do not leave vulnerable members of our society – and specifically I'm talking here about people receiving funding through PDD – in a position where they could be facing harm, facing abuse, or, more to the point in this one, having fewer services available and lowering their quality of life or the dignity that they have in living their lives. I think that's where it's important.

Another example is that the government has clawed back supports for two individuals living under the same care roof, rationalizing that the caregiver should be able to realize efficiencies. Well, that's giving two people in need of care under the same roof even less money to deal with, and that is causing very real stories of harm. I'm not going to go into those individual stories of harm, Mr. Speaker, because I'm cognizant of your concerns about urgency, but I think the larger point here is: how much longer is the government going to ignore problems which grow more critical with each passing and unresolved day?

We see no resolution for this in sight. There's no bill. There's no budget. There's no supplementary budget. There's nothing on the government agenda that indicated that this would be addressed. That's why I believe that there is urgency, and I'm asking the Speaker to recognize both the urgency of the PDD recipients and their situations and the need for an urgent debate to address that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's no coffee in the House or anything else until I declare Orders of the Day, so that is out, please.

On this point of urgency I call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner first.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just be brief. Two of the problems and why they cause urgency have been pointed out quite well. In the south region I've seen letterhead that has gone out to the various people that provide this service stating that there's a deficit of $1 million, $3 million, and $5 million in the area and that therefore there isn't the funding to follow through with the programs. So they're implementing and having to look at shutting the program down in different areas. They're even having the problem where those that are leaving from child services and going into PDD are running a deficit. The funding isn't there, and there's nothing coming from the ministry to indicate to them that they can accept these new people. So I, too, would like to add my concern from the south region that it is an urgent issue and that there is nothing coming forward from the government that the people in the south are aware of, and they are wondering how to deal with the shortage in the budget and the money that's being provided for them.

The Speaker: I'd just like to remind all hon. members that urgency doesn't mean that it's important in the sense – urgency refers to the fact that there's no other opportunity to deal with it.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is, in fact, exactly what I wanted to address. I think that, just by way of reminder, all members would know that Standing Order 30 and specifically (2) states that “the member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate,” which you've been kind enough to flag on various occasions for our attention.

In fact, it's urgency that we should be talking about. In just looking in the dictionary here quickly, urgent is defined as “requiring immediate action or attention,” something that is earnest and/or insistent. I don't think the speakers from the opposite side have proven that case of urgency. Urgent to most of us would likely mean a sudden or a very sharp loss of some kind of a special service, for example, or perhaps something of a detrimental nature by way of a displacement or a dislodging or something along that line or another occurrence wherein somebody might be deprived of a life and death service or something that is critically important.

As we know, PDD is extremely important. This is an area, Mr. Speaker, you'll recall, that I spent six years as minister looking after, and I'm delighted that the new minister responsible has taken up the torch and is moving the ball along in a very positive way, as she indicated in her comments. If PDD recipients were being put unnecessarily at risk or were being put directly in harm's way and there was proof of that or if there were very serious health or safety concerns or other things of that nature, you could in fact perhaps argue a case of urgency. But none of those kinds of examples were forthcoming, and there's no evidence of that whatsoever. In fact, quite to the contrary, I think you would find that our PDD program in terms of budget alone has grown from about $283 million in 1998-99 up to about $490 million or $480 million or somewhere in there, and that would show you how seriously we as a government are looking after PDD recipients, their families, and the important programs.

So it's not in a manner of crisis. [interjections] You know, I offered you the courtesy, hon. yapping members from the ND. I'm just asking that you would shut up for a little while and allow us to make the case too. Okay? This is a very, very serious topic, and you ought not to take it so flippantly as you are right now.

We're not leaving persons without services, so there is no urgency here, Mr. Speaker, and that's the only point that I wanted to make.

The Speaker: Anybody else want to get involved? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on the urgency.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I want to speak to the urgency too. Every day, Mr. Speaker, in this Assembly we have the opportunity to question the government on matters of urgent importance or policy. Today not one member of the opposition took the opportunity to question the minister. Our member did. The opposition took the time in question period to talk about three- or four-year-old driver's licence fraud, to question the leadership of the longest serving Premier in Canada. They talked about hypothetical health care gloom and doom, and none of them had the urgency to stand up and question the hon. minister about it. If it was urgent, that's when they could have addressed it.

The Speaker: Anyone else?

Hon. members, the chair continues to be bemused by what goes on in here some days. Normally on the first day after the Speech from the Throne there's a moving of the Speech from the Throne, and it's also customary to allow the Leader of the Official Opposition the maximum amount of time to speak to the Speech from the Throne. Whether or not that will happen today, I guess, will depend on how we deal with this particular matter.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30(2) and the rules the member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

That's basically what it is. The chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30(2) but first of all, I guess, will review some of the arguments.

First of all, the chair confirms that the ND opposition House leader has given proper notice of his intention to bring a motion under Standing Order 30. Notice of this application and the subject matter was received by the Speaker's office yesterday at 2 p.m. Therefore, the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met. There is a slight difference between the wording of the February 22 memo from the ND House leader to the chair and what is found in the proposed motion, but in the chair's view this does not invalidate the application. The chair also notes that the member was good enough to copy the Opposition House Leader, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, and a staff member from the Government House Leader's office, which is not necessary but is in the best traditions of the House.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether or not the motion fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relates to “a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.” The member's proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on – and I underline – “the ongoing reduction in funding and supports provided to individuals and families through the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Board.”

The relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debate are Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 398, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589. The chair has reviewed these references closely in considering this request for leave. I must emphasize to all members that to meet the requirements of urgency, there must not be – underline “not” – another opportunity for the members of this Assembly to discuss the matter. Members might want to reference Beauchesne's paragraph 390 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 589.

The chair has listened attentively to the submissions from several members in the House, and although the chair does not want to detract from the importance of this issue, he simply cannot find that this matter constitutes a genuine emergency within the meaning of Standing Order 30. Furthermore, it would seem premature for the chair to find on the first regular sitting day of the spring sitting that there would be no other opportunity to debate this matter. For instance, there will likely be supplementary estimates. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was of the contention that there was no indication of supplementary supply. Well, it was indicated by the Deputy Government House Leader in Projected Government Business, which is a part of the Routine – one member asks the question; the other member gives the response – for Tuesday that there may be messages coming for supplementary supply. That will be before the House in the near future.

As well, there is the Speech from the Throne, the throne speech, where all hon. members can wax eloquent on any conceivable subject they want to, and that begins, conceivably, today.

To conclude, although this is a serious matter of concern and consideration for some, this chair, who also is a Member of this Legislative Assembly, has been contacted by some of the people referenced today and been told that there is no problem with funding. The chair cannot participate in the debate, but the chair should report factual information.

So the chair does not consider it of such urgency to warrant postponing the business of the Assembly this afternoon. Therefore, the request for leave is not in order, and the chair will not put the question.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not only a pleasure but also a great honour to rise and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

In his remarks the Lieutenant Governor mentioned the opportunities he had to meet people during our centennial year. The Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency was pleased to welcome His Honour when he visited to participate in the presentation of centennial awards to outstanding Albertans of my constituency. I would like to thank His Honour for visiting so many of our communities to bring a spirit of celebration to all Albertans. The year 2005 was a very special year, and all members of this Assembly considered it a special honour to be serving the people of Alberta during our centennial.

For this legislative session we continue in the same spirit as we celebrate the 100th year of the opening of the first legislative session of our province. For over a century the governance of our province has been stable, effective, and all Albertans have been served very well. This is a special place for legislators to be, and I hope that we continue to govern with as much vision as did our predecessors in this Chamber.

In this special year I especially want to recognize the Premiers of this province: Haultain, Rutherford, Sifton, Stewart, Greenfield, Brownlee, Reid, Aberhart, Manning, Strom, Lougheed, Getty, and our current Premier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. The leadership and accomplishments of these individuals and all elected members have brought us through the last century to where we are today, with a bright future for the century to come. Alberta today is strong, and the people are optimistic when realizing the potential of tomorrow. Our government has built a great foundation with a world-class education system, an innovative and responsive health care system, state-of-the-art infrastructure, and a quality of life second to none. This foundation allows Alberta to grow and become stronger.

To continue to be successful, our government will continue to work in answering the needs of Albertans. Over the long term our government will address Albertans' needs through our 20-year plan. This plan outlines the importance of learning, innovation, high quality of life, and economic prosperity as the pillars of a strong Alberta. Yesterday's Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour, lays out the steps, guided by the vision contained in this 20-year plan, that will build upon a strong foundation so that Albertans can have an even more prosperous tomorrow.

A principal aspect of our prosperity is education. By emphasizing knowledge and an educated population, Alberta will remain a leader as we move into our second century. We have a great education system both at the K to 12 and postsecondary levels, but there are challenges. Among the challenges are high school completion rates. Yesterday the hon. Lieutenant Governor noted that the government will be addressing the issue of high school completion rates in the coming months, and this is an action which I as an educator of many years applaud. The high school completion symposium not only brings focus to the problem but should provide constructive solutions to improve high school completion rates. Educating our youth provides benefits for our entire province by preparing young Albertans to succeed in life.

However, our goals in education must go far beyond increasing high school completion rates. I am pleased that we have made great progress this past year in improving access to our many great institutions of higher learning through investments in the access to the future fund and the creation of new scholarship programs. This is a good start, and throughout this year our government will strive to make the postsecondary system more affordable and accessible to allow Albertans of all ages to advance their education.

Already new approaches are increasing access to higher education. Thanks to pilot projects such as the on-site apprenticeship training program at Fort McMurray, which brings the instructors to the apprentices rather than the other way around, and video conferencing via Supernet, which allows students to attend classes in their own communities, new educational opportunities have been created without having to wait for the construction of postsecondary facilities. Creative measures such as these will prove especially beneficial for Albertans who live a great distance away from postsecondary learning centres.

Additionally, the Speech from the Throne outlines government plans to partner with aboriginal groups and industry on new training projects for aboriginal people. Having the opportunity to serve on the aboriginal education subcommittee, I'm aware of the challenges of aboriginal education, and I commend the government on new initiatives to partner with aboriginal groups and industry on new training prospects for our First Nations peoples.

A final point on education which I would like to raise deals with the shortage of skilled labour in this province. With the emphasis that the Speech from the Throne places on advanced education for Albertans as well as increasing opportunities for new Albertans to enter the workforce, our current skills shortage is on its way to being alleviated.

Our future prosperity is also found in a strong economy. Alberta's economy is largely based on the development of natural resources. The strength of resource development is very important in ensuring a strong rural Alberta and a strong agricultural sector. Representing a riding with both rural and urban components, I am very aware of the challenges facing rural Alberta and agricultural producers today. I am pleased to see the measures suggested by His Honour yesterday with respect to helping rural Albertans and the agricultural industry.

Alberta's agricultural industry is largely dependent upon exports. It is a good initiative to work with the federal government in securing better markets for our producers and breaking down barriers to trade. Helping our agricultural producers remain competitive will be a great help to keeping Alberta rural communities strong and vibrant, as will the priorities of the rural development strategy. A key objective of the Alberta rural development strategy is to create the conditions whereby more people are enabled to live in rural centres. The emphasis on creating more opportunities for youth to stay in rural Alberta and to move to rural Alberta is indeed visionary.

My constituency is home to a prime example of how a rural development strategy can materialize. Recently Augustana University College and the University of Alberta merged to form the University of Alberta Augustana campus in Camrose. By offering the world-class programs of the University of Alberta in a rural setting, young Albertans have the opportunity to complete their postsecondary education in a more familiar environment where they will be equipped with the skills to establish careers and families in rural communities.

Madam Speaker, we all know very well the importance of resource development to the Alberta way of life. To ensure that the resource industries, whether it be agriculture, forestry, or energy, can succeed over time, our government is committed to supporting research and development. Research is critical to unleashing the innovation in resource industries to ensure continued economic growth. These innovations are taking place in research institutions such as the Alberta Research Council, an organization I am proud to chair. The Alberta Research Council is a key organization in helping the government of Alberta achieve its strategic innovation agenda. By delivering innovative science and technology solutions, ARC meets the priorities of industry and government in Alberta and beyond.

One example of ARC's work in finding solutions is found on a feedlot not far from Vegreville. This Alberta company is testing a revolutionary new system that takes feedlot manure and converts it into usable energy sources. The integrated manure utilization system, also known as IMUS, uses anaerobic digestion to produce biogas, mainly methane, to generate electricity. Recovered nutrients are used as fertilizer. This type of ingenuity has taken what is commonly thought of as a problem and created profitable solutions for agricultural producers.

In taking a look at the broader picture, energy is a key economic thrust for Alberta. The Alberta Energy Research Institute and the Alberta Research Council are at the forefront of developments to ensure that Albertans have access to secure energy sources while balancing economic prosperity and environmental needs. This represents a new frontier for the energy industry. This industry has demonstrated time and again that it has the will and tenacity to find new energy sources and see to their efficient and beneficial development. Challenges will include securing new supplies and better methods to obtain existing supplies of our conventional oil and gas, best methods to obtain energy from our oil sands, and a new look at the coal industry and new ways of obtaining biofuels.

Thinking of our vision today, I am reminded of Dr. Karl Clark, the so-called father of the oil sands. Dr. Clark while at the ARC and with the University of Alberta in the 1920s studied Alberta's tar sands as a road-paving material before focusing on developing the hot water extraction process that energy giants like Syncrude and Suncor still use today. His work has allowed the development of an oil sands industry that is outputting close to 1 million barrels a day and is a rapidly growing energy source. Dr. Clark is a role model to the scientists and researchers of today as they unleash the potential of new energy sources and will undoubtedly continue our prosperity.

I have strongly emphasized the potential of research as it relates to energy, but more work continues through the Alberta Science and Research Authority and the other research institutes – the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, the Alberta life sciences institute – along with the Alberta Research Council and other universities and colleges to bring innovative ideas to maturity. These institutions house some of the best and brightest minds from Alberta and around the world. This is why it is so important to move forward in our postsecondary educational institutions to ensure that Alberta researchers will remain in the vanguard when it comes to developing new technology.

It is important to emphasize that investments in research have some very practical benefits to Albertans. An important component in moving the Water for Life strategy forward is using research to secure and manage clean water sources for the future. Research will also guide the development of the land-use framework mentioned by His Honour. Research will ensure that future land uses can balance personal and economic needs with the protection and security of our natural landscapes.

The hon. Lieutenant Governor's remarks yesterday also outlined the government's commitment to the health of Albertans. Everyone in this Assembly wants the best health care system possible for Albertans. We need not all agree on what form that should be, but we all want the best care for our loved ones and for all Albertans when they need care. I'm pleased that quality health care is a top priority for the government and that the objective is to increase access and reduce wait times, especially in areas of breast cancer care, coronary bypass, MRIs, CT scans, and prostate cancer.

In particular, I want to thank the government for bringing forward Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. We have all been affected by this dreaded disease, whether it is a loved one, family members, friends or neighbours or even personally, and I commend the hon. Premier for committing our government to the big-picture goal of setting the stage for a cancer-free future. The $500 million outlined in Bill 1 will allow for continued advancements in cancer research, which will develop new treatments and better methods for dealing with this dreaded disease.

Recently I had the opportunity to tour the Cross Cancer Institute and observe their research programs. The Cross is a research hospital that very effectively integrates research and clinical activity. It provides care and research, which means that there is a much faster translation of research outcome to patient care. Beyond the labs and screening devices there is an excitement amongst the people at work there in the hope that someday – someday – we will be free of cancer. It was impressive to sense the teamwork toward the ultimate goal, and I admire their dedication. The Cross is one example of the innovation and forward thinking in our health care system, and I support our government's desire to develop a framework to permit continued innovation in other areas to allow Albertans to have better access and care within the health system.

Much of my speech today addresses the issue of using strengths to ensure continued prosperity. Another link to securing future prosperity in the province is the government's commitment to sound fiscal management by saving – saving – some of today's windfall revenues to protect against future shortfalls.

During the economic prosperity of the late '70s and early '80s the government of the day under Premier Lougheed with great vision established the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. It was to address the basic principle that Alberta's resources belong to the people, including the children of today and the generations to come. Recognizing similar prosperity of current times, I congratulate and support the savings initiatives contained in the throne speech for further investing in the heritage savings trust fund and other visionary endowments such as the access to the future fund, the ingenuity fund, and the Alberta heritage fund for medical research.

Government endowments along with investments and infrastructure projects are a means of translating today's resource revenues into a lasting means of supporting the well-being of Albertans. We can do nothing less for ourselves and the future generations than to invest in the heritage fund and our own endowments to permanently support the building of a strong and resilient Alberta.

Madam Speaker, Alberta has come a long way in its first century. Our story is one of hard work and perseverance, a can-do attitude coupled with a willingness to help out those who need it. Our history tells us as much about our present as our future because as someone once said: it's hard to know where you are going unless you know where you have been.

I applaud the government for the Royal Alberta Museum initiative and encouraging that our story will be told and retold through our museums, including the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in my constituency. Our museums, big and small, throughout Alberta will transfer the wealth of knowledge to upcoming generations.

The Speech from the Throne is about building a new and better Alberta, rising on a foundation well established in the hard work of the past and based on the objectives of our government's 20-year plan. We have the privilege of living in a province of almost unlimited potential, and I look forward to working with all my colleagues in representing the best interests of Albertans in this Chamber.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour for me to have the opportunity to second the Speech from the Throne. I would like to thank our hon. Lieutenant Governor for delivering the speech yesterday and for setting an ambitious and exciting tone for this legislative session.

The government's upcoming plan contains many vital pieces that will affect the lives of Albertans in all parts of the province. Importantly, much of the government's agenda includes talking to Albertans to ensure that their needs and desires are known. Working together we will achieve what we desire.

I recently celebrated my first year as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, and my experience has shown me just how much people contribute to make this great province better. Not only my colleagues here in the Assembly – and perhaps I'm biased – but it seems like so many of these thoughtful and helpful people live in my constituency of Calgary-Foothills. There have been so many times in the past when I've been inspired and motivated by the passion of my constituents. I am confident that we will find further success as we move forward in this exciting time in our province's history.

As the hon. Lieutenant Governor stated yesterday, this year we are celebrating 100 years of democracy in Alberta. A short century ago at McKay Avenue school the First Legislature assembled and began mapping the journey towards an exciting future. It was a time of incredible growth that stretched the boundaries of a new province's resources and experience, but the people met the challenge head-on and laid the foundation for a prosperous Alberta.

This year, the first year of our second century, we must once again face the perils of growth, but this time we will be tackling this problem as the economic powerhouse of Canada. Like they did a century ago, we will prevail. The government of Alberta's objective is very straightforward: to make Alberta the best place in the world to live, work, raise a family, and grow old. Achieving that goal requires carefully setting priorities, which were outlined by the Lieutenant Governor yesterday. These priorities are: creating a learning society, staying true to our fiscal principles to ensure a prosperous society, taking appropriate steps to have a clean environment, a healthy society, and finally a safe and caring population. These are the priorities that will define Alberta in its second century.

Madam Speaker, a safe and caring society is one where people have respect for one another. Our aboriginal population is one of the most important assets we have. We need to include and support them, and we need them to provide input into our future. Our children, which are the future, need to be protected from the negative effects of family violence as well as from the devastation of crystal meth and other drugs. I'm optimistic about our government's commitment and approach toward these problems.

Our seniors, who built this province, persons with disabilities, and adults who receive continuing care need to know that they will be cared for with the highest level of dignity and respect. Last year I had the opportunity to co-chair the MLA Task Force on Continuing Care Health Service and Accommodation Standards. During our consultations with Albertans I heard many stories which had a great personal effect on me. I'm certain that as we implement new standards for the province's lodges and supportive living and long-term care facilities, Albertans will once again feel confident that they will receive the level of care they expect and deserve.

I'm convinced that Albertans will receive the best quality health care possible. The current health care system is not sustainable, and it is not working as well as it can be. Madam Speaker, we have a population that is growing very fast. We also have a population that is aging. The health care system must evolve to meet these growing needs. Thankfully, this is the government's top priority this session. Wait times were reduced with the Alberta hip and knee replacement project and will now be reduced in the areas of breast cancer care, coronary bypass surgery, MRIs, CT scans, and prostate cancer care.

Albertans will also benefit from new primary care networks that will begin operating this year. The government is setting up to become a world leader in cancer research, screening, and prevention. We have the resources and the opportunity to make great gains in the fight against this disease. The Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act will help us make these gains. Being a leader in the fight against cancer is a vision that I proudly support.

The throne speech outlined our government's focus on a clean environment. The Water for Life strategy, the land-use framework, and the environmental youth summit are all vital components of an overall strategy that will ensure the sustainability of our resources and the beauty of our land. But when we look for ways to preserve and improve our environment, we must remember and understand our role as a global energy producer. As the Lieutenant Governor stated in his speech, Alberta enjoys a considerable energy advantage in the world. We have advanced our technology in the extraction of resources considerably but must continue to find better and more efficient methods.

We also need to invest our earnings into the development of cleaner sources of energy. I must admit that I'm excited about the potential of clean-burning coal. We have a unique opportunity to develop and utilize this resource and to establish it as an important energy resource of the future. The government of Alberta has embraced this opportunity, and in doing so, we will certainly create a legacy for future generations.

Alberta's legacy has already begun. The world's attention is focusing on our province. It is with great pride that Alberta will be featured in the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Festival in Washington, DC. There's so much that Albertans want to share with the rest of the world. I think I speak for most Albertans when I express how thankful we are for this opportunity to be displayed at the Smithsonian.

One thing that Albertans would like to show the world is our ability to survive through difficult situations as well as our ability to evolve. Alberta's agricultural sector has had a difficult time in the past few years. Yesterday the government pledged to stand by our agricultural producers, and we have also worked with producers to develop new markets. Already many producers have found new agricultural opportunities. Madam Speaker, I applaud their innovation.

Our forestry producers have also faced adversity. This industry is extremely important to our economy and our future. The government's commitment to the Alberta Forestry Research Institute will go a long way to guarantee the sustainability and competitiveness of this renewable industry.

With respect to ensuring a viable economy, I am most optimistic with this government's commitment to rural development. Although I represent the good urban people of Calgary-Foothills, I'm a strong believer that for Alberta to reach its full potential, we must ensure that citizens in every part of the province have the ability to contribute. I am confident of the comprehensiveness of the rural development strategy and the government's strong commitment to this cause. Rural Albertans need improved access to health care and learning as well as enhanced opportunities for youth. This is where the government will focus its efforts. I look forward to the day when no matter where in the province one lives, one can expect outstanding services and an abundance of economic opportunity.

I believe that creating the conditions for a strong and diverse economy is the most important responsibility of any government. Citizens need to contribute, and they need the opportunity to achieve what their hearts and minds desire. Creating such conditions has traditionally been this government's strength. We will never be satisfied with the status quo, and we will always work to make the economic situation better. This is why the government will work to remove red tape as part of the comprehensive regulatory review. Albertans have proven themselves as hard-working entrepreneurs, as innovators, and as achievers. The government cannot stand in the way of their progress. Our responsibility is to encourage growth, not stifle it.

Like the elimination of red tape for business, the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads are a great example of what government should be doing to assist people in their economic endeavours. The paving of 1,000 kilometres of highway is another. The government's funding to meet the infrastructure needs of our growing economy is impressive. It is no secret that we need people to move to Alberta, but they will only stay if we have enough hospital beds and school spaces for them and their families. Our investment in infrastructure this year is an investment in the viability of our future.

Yesterday the Lieutenant Governor told Albertans that the government will make a $1 billion investment in the heritage savings trust fund. Albertans can rest assured that some of today's prosperity will be saved for the benefit of future generations.

Last year the Alberta government focused on education. This year we will continue this focus because Albertans know that building and educating tomorrow's workforce is one of the wisest investments we can make. I am very glad that Alberta's students will once again get relief from the rising cost of tuition. More importantly, however, they will benefit from the new tuition policy that will be put forth by the government this year. The ability to pay simply cannot stand in the way of a postsecondary education.

In a high school completion symposium the government will ask our youth why high school completion rates are low. I am certain that our youths' input into the problem of low high school completion will give us many of the answers we need to improve these rates.

Finally, a new focus will be put on addressing Alberta's labour shortages. Like I said earlier, our aboriginal population is one of the most important assets. Aboriginals are younger and growing faster than any other segment of the population. Knowing this, the government will continue partnering with aboriginal groups and industry on new training projects for aboriginal people.

We have to do everything we can to make Alberta the destination of choice for skilled immigrants, but when they get here, we also have to make their transition into our economy as easy as possible. This will improve with the government's expansion of immigrant settlement services and language training.

Madam Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne highlighted the Alberta government's vision for this province, this comprehensive and ambitious vision of a learning society that is prosperous, with a clean environment and a healthy, safe, and caring population. I can't tell you how proud it makes me to know that I, along with my fellow Albertans, will be a part of this vision. It truly does sound like the best place in the world to live, to work, to raise a family, and to grow old.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of all Albertans and as Leader of the Official Opposition it's my duty and my privilege to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered in this Assembly yesterday. Just a few days ago I was asked to compose a letter for inclusion in Alberta's time capsule, which was sealed up on Family Day at the Royal Alberta Museum. I was only too happy to write the letter. I considered it an honour to offer my thoughts to the Albertans of tomorrow, just as I consider it an honour to address Albertans today.

In a democracy communication is vital, even communication that has to bridge the span of many, many years. Just as I left a note for the Albertans of the year 2105, Albertans of our past have left a lesson for us. But given their tendency to offer outdated solutions to new challenges, given the lack of substance or imagination in the throne speech or the Premier's television address, except perhaps the very imaginative statement that Alberta currently uses clean coal for half of our electricity needs, which is, of course, completely untrue, I have to wonder if the Conservative government has ever paid attention to the lessons of history or if they've ever really given thought to the message they're sending to tomorrow's Albertans.

The idea behind the time capsule is to give our descendants a glimpse of what life was like in early 21st century Alberta. It's a gesture of goodwill from one era to another, a sign that we care about what happens in the future. When you put something into a time capsule, you're preserving a bit of the past, even if it's just a few ideas or mementos, for the benefit, if only educational, of future Albertans. In other words, you're trying to leave some kind of legacy to the people who will follow in your footsteps. After listening to the government's throne speech, I have to ask: aside from a few token projects, where is Alberta's legacy?

In my letter to the Albertans of the future I wrote down a few of my hopes for them: that democracy in Alberta had been reformed to better reflect the wishes of the electorate, that the arts in Alberta were flourishing, that government was responsive and accountable, that the environment was pristine and pure, that Alberta had the best public school system in the world, that health care was publicly funded, world-class, and accessible to all. I also wrote that I felt a responsibility to help create the conditions that would make a better tomorrow possible, that we, the Albertans of today, would show the imagination and responsibility to invest Alberta's incredible wealth so that Alberta could at last escape the cycle of boom and bust and build a permanently sustainable economy.

I believe that Albertans have a responsibility to work towards the fulfillment of these goals, but I see little evidence in the throne speech that the current government has sufficient imagination and will to build a better future for our province, and that is a tragedy because right now Alberta stands on the threshold of true greatness.

We have all the elements in place to create sustainable prosperity for many decades to come. Our growing educated population and our immense resource wealth have given us a chance to invest in our future, to create a permanent prosperity, to fund world-class public health care and public schools in perpetuity, to build an artistic and cultural legacy that will stand the test of time.

A hundred years will pass before Albertans read the letters sealed in that time capsule, and I can't help but wonder if they'll look back on the century we have yet to build with gratitude or with disappointment. We have a duty to ourselves and to our children to make the most of the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity of our current circumstances. The Conservatives have had 35 years to get health care right, to get long-term care for seniors right, to get balancing a budget right. Our economy is booming like never before, and even that isn't helping this government get things right. For every surplus they seem to discover brand new ways to spend the money now instead of investing in the future.

After 35 years their creative well has run dry. Their most visionary idea is to reform the health system, but the reforms merely lay the groundwork for dismantling public health care piece by piece. Instead of truly reforming the health care system to help it meet the needs of the 21st century, they'd rather go back to the good old days, when families often had to sell their homes to pay for life-saving medical treatment. If those families were here in this Chamber now, they'd tell us: "We've been there. We've tried that. It doesn't work. Why? Why are you turning the clock back?" Conservatives are trying to turn back the clock because they don't have the imagination or the desire to search for better solutions. Yes, the public health care system needs help. Yes, it needs to be improved, but it doesn't need to be dismantled.

This government's time has come and gone. It simply doesn't have the energy and desire that are needed to take advantage of the incredible opportunities before us. By the Premier's own admission this government is running on autopilot, spending unearned surpluses like there is no tomorrow. The only problem is that there is a tomorrow, and we have to start building it now.

There are those who believe that Albertans have little to complain about given the strength of our economy and our high standard of living. I don't deny that times are pretty good for many but far from all Albertans. I think we have to look at our overall situation more closely and examine the many challenges and contradictions of life in Alberta today.

Take, for example, our democratic deficit. Alberta is one of the wealthiest jurisdictions in the world, but prosperity without transparent, accountable, truly democratic government isn't really prosperity at all. When democracy is weak and secretive, when the primary purpose of government is merely to be re-elected, the province's wealth is far more likely to serve the ends of industry and government than of the public. If our prosperity is to serve the citizens, then we the citizens must take charge. Unfortunately, this government has no interest in doing anything to renew our democracy. It has shown little interest in electoral reform, for example, and such reform is absolutely necessary if we want a democracy that accurately reflects the desires of the electorate.

Just as importantly, Alberta desperately needs a government that is willing to embrace accountability and transparency. Alberta has no lobbyist registry, no fixed election dates, no all-party policy committees, almost no meaningful legislative review of public spending. We need the courage to give our Public Accounts Committee some teeth so that MLAs can do a more effective job of keeping track of government spending. We need to protect the public interest by creating a lobbyist registry, stronger conflict of interest rules, and legislation to protect whistle-blowers.

In order to meet the challenges of our booming economy, our swelling population, and our changing role in Confederation, we need a robust, full-blooded, vigorous democracy, one that can adapt to the rapidly changing needs of its citizens. More importantly, democratic renewal is worth pursuing for its own sake. Albertans value freedom, fairness, trust, honesty, and accountability, virtues that need to be in generous supply in a 21st century government but that are sorely lacking in the government we are under now.

Consider the strains our booming economy is putting on our environment. Albertans have always treasured this province's land, water, and wildlife, and they've always known that our future prosperity lies in the careful stewardship of natural resources. For the last century or so the demands of our modern economy have put an incredible strain on the environment. We need to rediscover the balance between protecting our environment and ensuring that Alberta's economy remains healthy. We need smart, sustainable, responsible economic growth, growth that preserves what some economists are calling our natural capital, while maintaining the high standard of living we all enjoy.

Instead, what do we get? We have policies such as this government's minable oil sands strategy, which claims to protect the environment but instead writes off vast parcels of Alberta's north as an industrial zone that threatens to become a wasteland. Similarly, when it comes to managing Alberta's watersheds, currently the only solution to addressing water shortages is to enable bulk water transfers from one basin to another. It's a band-aid solution that doesn't address the very real and pressing issue of wise water management.

As stewards of the land we have a responsibility to remember that our environment is the foundation of our prosperity and that it deserves respect for its own sake as well as its ability to fulfill human needs. If we take care of nature, nature will continue to take care of us. Alberta is one of the most bountiful pieces of real estate on the Earth, but our use of this land is haphazard at best. Prime agricultural land is being eaten up by suburban sprawl while golf courses, housing, and oil wells are being built within eyesight of one another. Our cities are growing without a plan, and our industries have to struggle to discover where they can and cannot build.

Coal-bed methane has turned out to be one of Alberta's most promising new resources, but we're extracting it without a plan and without sufficient regard for the environmental consequences.

Alberta's governments have promoted our diverse wildlife as a tourist attraction, but our expanding cities and towns are putting more and more pressure on wildlife habitats, including those of such tourist-attracting creatures as caribou and grizzly bear. Disregard for the natural world has caused other problems, from BSE threatening our cattle industry to chronic wasting disease affecting both wild and harvested deer.

Our saving grace is this: every challenge our environment faces is also an incredible opportunity for economic growth, for scientific discovery, and for improvements in our quality of life. If we can finally recognize that the environment is the source of all our wealth and, in fact, of life itself, we can redefine our role in nature. We can find a way to enjoy Alberta's bounty without destroying it and to share the most beautiful place on Earth with all the other life that has come and has as much right as we do to live here. That is the reason our caucus recently released a paper on land-use strategy for Alberta.

Here's another challenge, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's vast natural resources have brought immense wealth to our province, but 91 per cent of energy revenues in the last 25 years have been spent, meaning that less than 9 per cent have been saved.

Alberta's heritage fund, which was intended as Alberta's savings account for petroleum revenues, has lost nearly half of its value when adjusted for inflation. It's fine, it's great that the Conservative government has recently pledged to add a billion dollars to the heritage fund, thanks I think to pressure from the public, from the opposition, and even from former Premier Peter Lougheed, but we need a long-term plan for savings, not just a deposit every now and then.

Petroleum revenues are nonrenewable. We must use them to build truly lasting prosperity, not merely for paying today's bills. Our province's wealth should be used to address our very real and pressing social needs, to rebuild and repair our infrastructure, and most importantly, to ensure that our prosperity lasts and won't fade away when the last drop of petroleum is squeezed from the earth.

Alberta has one of the strongest economies in Canada, and people living in the Edmonton-Calgary corridor enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world. Yet, Mr. Speaker, children are going to school hungry in Alberta; use of food banks continues to rise; the gap between rich and poor keeps growing. According to the TD Bank – get this, all of you MLAs from Calgary – 42 per cent of Calgary residents are living on less than $20,000 a year. The rising costs of housing have kept many Albertans from pursuing the dream of owning their own home. Government spending has been rising rapidly, but our social programs are failing to meet the needs of Albertans.

Agriculture has been the backbone of Alberta's economy from the beginning, but today's farmers are more vulnerable than ever to fluctuations in world markets, legislation by other governments, and Alberta's unpredictable weather. If we really care about our farmers, we need to develop systems that will help them manage these problems.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the economic challenges we need to face, and we can face them best by investing in ourselves as Albertans. Alberta citizens, the individual men and women who define our province, are the true source of our wealth. Fostering an atmosphere friendly to businesses, particularly small business and family business, is just as vital as investing in the health, education, and social welfare of Albertans, the very same Albertans who provide labour for private industry and who purchase its goods and services.

Perhaps the greatest challenge but the one with the greatest potential rewards is to build the world's first truly sustainable modern economy, the basis of something we must eventually achieve on this planet: a zero-waste society. If we can make today's industry sustainable while at the same time developing the new sustainable industries of the future, Albertans have a very real chance of guaranteeing our prosperity for decades to come while at the same time preserving and protecting our environment. That, Mr. Speaker, is a dream worth fighting for.

Finally, consider the social challenges we still face. Too many Albertans face insurmountable barriers in their struggle to share in the prosperity that should be available to all Albertans. Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, despite or even because of the challenges they face, have made important contributions to our culture and economy. Let me ask, Mr. Speaker: shouldn't our guiding principles involve care and compassion for vulnerable persons? I'm glad to see that after years of Liberal urging the government is planning to look at fixing long-term care for Alberta's seniors. I hope they follow through because our seniors have suffered long enough. Nearly every Albertan knows someone who could benefit from a more compassionate, more ethical, more logical approach to the problems of homelessness, human rights, senior care, education, and accessibility. Isn't it time to reach out to our neighbours to help them enjoy the full range of opportunities our province offers?

Our education system alone is facing a wide range of challenges. Right now only about 69 per cent of Alberta's students graduate from high school within the normal three-year span, and only 75 per cent graduate within five years. Considering the demands and the opportunities of Alberta's growing economy, considering that within a decade Alberta could face a labour shortage of a hundred thousand people, it's incredible that we're wasting the talents of so many young people. We need students to stay in school, and we must provide the support they need to complete their education. For years our education system has had to struggle with rising demands and shrinking resources. Growing numbers of children with special needs aren't getting the attention and help they need because our schools don't have enough teachers or counsellors or specialized staff. Teachers are forced to teach to standardized tests despite their individual understanding of specific student needs.

What about our cities, Mr. Speaker? Our cities are growing faster than ever, but many new communities still have gaping holes in the landscape where new schools should be. Families in new suburbs are busing their children to older, established schools, but many of those schools are being closed down, and student populations in already crowded surviving schools continue to rise.

Alberta's modern, high-tech economy demands an educated workforce, a workforce with diverse education, including the fine arts, engineering, the sciences, and more, yet Alberta's tuition fees are rising faster than those in any other province, putting higher education out of reach for an alarming number of Albertans. The government's promise to cover this year's tuition increase is a good step, but what Alberta students really need is something more than just makeshift. What they really need is a policy to keep our colleges and universities accessible to any one who has the desire and drive to continue their education.

There's lots of rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, from this government about the value of the family, yet often both parents are working with no guarantees that daycare is available, safe, and a good environment for their kids.

Though not a crisis, Alberta's crime rate is cause for concern. Gang-related crime in our cities is putting a huge burden on police, and it's making our neighbourhoods unsafe. We need new strategies that will not merely punish criminals but eradicate the root causes of their behaviour. Though Alberta is seen as a land of plenty by many Canadians, Albertans are turning to drugs and alcohol and gambling in troubling numbers, and drug addiction is a growing problem, particularly in rural communities.

We can meet these challenges. We can resolve these contradictions if we take a good hard look at our society and start investing in Alberta's greatest resource, its people. To overcome these challenges Alberta needs leadership that's not afraid to shake things up a little. Alberta needs a government with the imagination, the vision, and, yes, the intelligence to make the choices that will address the challenges we currently face while ensuring that future Albertans will benefit from those choices.

Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday night the Premier urged us to imagine Alberta. Ironically, his slickly produced vignette showed that more imagination was put into the spin than the substance, but I'll take the Premier at his word and imagine what Alberta could become if we have the courage and wisdom to invest in our future.

Imagine waking up on the morning after election day five or six years from now. You look up the election results on the Internet, and you discover that the number of seats received by each party accurately reflects their share of the popular vote. Imagine never having to vote strategically again because you head into the polling station with the ability to rank the candidates in order of preference. Imagine that voter participation in this province climbed from 45 per cent to 85 per cent because citizens felt committed to the political process, because they finally have the voice in the government they'd always hoped for, because government was truly representative.

But don't stop there. What if with just a few clicks of a mouse you could look up Alberta's new lobbyist registry, a website that keeps track of which special-interest groups are currently lobbying the government for action? What if you felt like you could trust your elected representatives to work for the greater good because there were systems in place to make sure government had to remain open and accountable to the electorate? What if we could rebuild the sense among elected officials that they serve the public, not the other way around? What if instead of smothering dissent, our democracy encouraged and embraced it? What if the government involved opposition parties in the decision-making process instead of shutting them out, effectively silencing the voices of hundreds of thousands of Albertans? What if Albertans could be excited about politics again instead of cynical? What if we could restore our faith in the democratic process? Imagine, Mr. Speaker, truly accountable government. Imagine a government that listens and responds to the voices of Albertans with honesty and sincerity. Imagine democracy with room for everyone.

What if 50 years from now you could once again drink straight from Alberta's lakes and rivers knowing that they were as pristine and pure as they were before Alberta was born, or if you could watch free-roaming herds of buffalo roaring across the prairies as they used to, protected in vast wildlife parks rivalling the Serengeti? What if Alberta created the most energy efficient economy in the world and eventually a zero-waste economy, one without emissions, one without landfills? What if 10 or 20 per cent of Albertans lived off the grid in homes that generated their own heat and power? What if office towers in Alberta were designed to put power back into our energy grid instead of draining it? Imagine if most Albertans drove only for occasional trips because smart urban planning and convenient, inexpensive public transit have made cars mostly unnecessary. Imagine if pollution were a thing of the past and that the clean air and water helped cut asthma and cancer rates in half.

We could transform. We could transform Alberta into a world-renowned, environmental paradise, a place where prosperity doesn't come at the expense of but, rather, because of a societal commitment to environmental stewardship. Alberta could become the world's number one destination for ecotourism and the world leader in renewable energy technology.

Technology already exists that collects greenhouse gases and pipes them into depleted oil wells extracting the last of the oil, thus sequestering the gases safely within the earth. We can build on this technology to turn other pollutants into similarly valuable tools. We can protect Alberta's natural heritage as one of the most beautiful places on earth without sacrificing our prosperity. In fact, a whole new environmental protection industry could become an important – who knows, perhaps the most important – sector of Alberta's economy. Albertans could be the first people in history to finally strike a balance between high quality of life and responsible stewardship of the environment. We – we – could be the society that leads the way to a cleaner, greener, sustainable world.

Imagine your morning commute some years from now. Maybe you're enjoying the convenience of a well-designed, reasonably priced transit system. As you travel you see, amazingly, that the streets are in good repair, that the sky is free of smog, that the traffic is flowing smoothly. On the radio an announcer reports that Alberta's accumulated savings continue to grow and that the endowments for Alberta's schools, hospitals, and infrastructure have finally grown large enough to protect Albertans from any economic slowdowns.

At long last Alberta's economy has reached its full potential, and its wealth is being put to the best possible use for the benefit of all citizens. Good jobs are plentiful, and educational opportunities are varied and uniformly excellent whether you're seeking a degree, diploma, or technical training. In fact, Alberta has the best educated workforce in the world, and that has led to a vibrant arts scene, more efficient and innovative businesses, more effective government, and cutting-edge work in the sciences. Health care is not only fully publicly funded, but it's the best in the world, which it once was in Alberta.

Taxes are competitive, covering the province's needs without burdening families or businesses.

Homelessness: how do we accept homelessness in Alberta? Homelessness is virtually nonexistent as are food banks, which were unknown two decades ago, because Alberta's prosperity has finally reached out to touch everyone in Alberta.

The environment is recovering and even blossoming because Alberta's experience in cutting-edge research has created the world's first truly sustainable modern economy, an economy no longer vulnerable to the unpredictable highs and lows of resource revenues nor dependent on those nonrenewable resources.

Thanks to extensive investment in research and development Alberta has become a world leader in several economic sectors, including renewable energy, medicine, computer software, and nanotechnology.

Alberta's wise investments and dynamic economy have made it one of the world's leading lights, a source of inspiration for other jurisdictions, and a destination of choice for tourism, investment, and immigration. Alberta's burgeoning cities are centres of industry, commerce, and the arts, drawing the best and brightest talent from around the world. Creativity, education, and diversity are highly valued as engines of economic sustainability and social cohesion.

Imagine having the peace of mind that comes from knowing that not only is your own future secure, but so is that of your children and grandchildren. Imagine Alberta as a place of perpetual prosperity. Imagine if our seniors lived free from fear, if minorities were not merely tolerated but embraced, if no one went hungry or without a decent place to live. Imagine the best health care system in the world, a universal system widely recognized as our best economic and social asset. Imagine if an end to poverty were finally in sight.

What if 100 per cent of Alberta students completed grade 9, and what if 95 per cent completed high school? What if 85 per cent went on to earn a degree, a diploma, a trade certificate and accomplished it without incurring years worth of crippling student debt? What if Alberta's arts scene grew both in economic impact and artistic reputation to rival those in Toronto or Montreal, in San Francisco and Edinburgh?

Imagine closing the doors on the last food bank in Alberta because its usefulness had finally come to an end. Imagine full employment for all Albertans with disabilities. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker. Imagine if Alberta's rate of mental illness dropped from the highest in the nation to the lowest. Imagine an end to gang violence in Alberta and the lowest crime rates in the country. Imagine if every single member of Alberta's First Nations finally had the means, the respect, and the support to find meaningful work, to live without thought of racism. Imagine if racism and sexism were no longer issues in Alberta because we finally learned to look beyond our differences and work together to build stronger, safer, happier communities. Imagine a society that values creativity just as highly as productivity, compassion just as much as competitiveness. Imagine if we fostered an attitude of dignity and respect towards people making use of social programs. Imagine a community spirit of shared responsibility. That's what our caucus imagines for this province. That is our dream for a better Alberta.

This government's dream by comparison is simply too small. This is not a time to be conservative, if you'll forgive the pun, about Alberta's future; this is a time to be bold, to be visionary, to be creative. The Conservatives don't have the vitality to imagine a grander future for Alberta. You know, Mr. Speaker, it's not even their fault. After 35 years of massive majorities any party would have grown as complacent, as tired, as bereft of new ideas as the Conservatives.

The Alberta Liberal opposition, on the other hand, looks ahead to an amazing future for Alberta, one with unparalleled opportunity and enduring prosperity, fairness, humanity, and generosity, citizens flourishing in a healthy environment, and, for the first time in far too many years, open, accountable government.

I hope that all MLAs will pay attention to this: in the last election more than half of Albertans rejected the Conservative vision, or should I say lack of vision, for this province. Those of us sitting in opposition represent the votes of more Albertans than those MLAs sitting on the government side. To me, Mr. Speaker, that says that Albertans are ready to move forward, to leave behind an old, tired Conservative government and move on to bigger and better things. They're ready for change. They're ready for innovation. They're ready for a new, young, energetic government that isn't afraid of dissent, that isn't bound by ideology, that is ready to be open, accountable, and responsive to the electorate. The Alberta Liberals are ready to bring the dreams of Albertans to life. We're ready to lead. We're ready to serve. We're ready to start building tomorrow's Alberta.

When Albertans celebrate the province's bicentennial in the year 2105, I think we want them to look back on the last 100 years, the future that we have the responsibility to build, with pride, not regret, and with appreciation for our wisdom, not disappointment at our lack of vision. If there is a time to dream, it is now. If there is a place to dream, it is Alberta. Let the Albertans of the future remember us as fondly as we remember Alberta's founding people, the men and women who made our prosperity and freedom possible.

Mr. Speaker, that is our response to the throne speech and our vision for the opportunities ahead. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to present the response of the NDP opposition to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. I would like to begin by commending the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for his excellent work on behalf of all Albertans. He has very large gardening boots to fill, and I think he's doing a very good job.

I would also like to begin by thanking the citizens of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who have shown their confidence in me once again. I will continue to do my very best to represent the interests of the hard-working people of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Speaker, if the government's televised address by the Premier could have been likened to a very good beer commercial, that has excellent visuals and about as much content as a beer commercial, then I think the Speech from the Throne could be likened to a testimonial for very, very flat beer indeed. The speech lacks sparkle. It lacks life. It lacks anything of interest. I think it would be better poured down the drain of history.

I want to begin by suggesting that the government's cancer initiative is a very good idea. I believe that with an aging population and with an excellent cancer infrastructure already in place in this province, it is a good place to build. I will give the government credit for that. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the government can take steps and should have taken steps to reduce the incidence of cancer through prevention, and they have not done so. In particular, the government has failed to implement a comprehensive workplace ban on smoking, something that would not cost the taxpayers of this province any significant money and would have a great effect, in my view, on reducing the incidence of cancer. That's something that they could have done. It's fine to spend a great deal of public money on fighting cancer – and I think that needs to be done – but the government is talking out of both sides of its mouth on this issue and in not taking simple, logical steps in the area of prevention has stood up for the tobacco industry instead of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about the third way, which is sort of a now you see it, now you don't kind of initiative on the part of the government. The government has been making various proposals for the privatization of health care for a number of years now. First of all, there was the Mazankowski report. Then there was the so-called Graydon report. The government has recently introduced a number of proposals, including looking at private insurance through a contract let to Aon insurance, one of the biggest insurers in North America. They don't see the conflict inherent in that. The government has also talked about allowing doctors to operate in both the public system and the private system. The government has also talked about particular types of procedures that one would have to pay for separately. Yet, it has disappeared. It is completely off the radar screen. It is now just completely invisible. The question is: why is that?

Just a few months ago the government was talking about the third way. Now it is not present in the Premier's televised address. It is not present in the throne speech. It apparently will represent a very significant part of the government's legislative agenda for this session once the budget has been passed, yet Albertans don't know what's there. There can't be a public debate over the government's proposals because the public is unaware of what the government's proposals specifically are. I think that that, Mr. Speaker, is deliberate.

The government would like us to believe that they have withdrawn or are not sure or haven't worked out the details. I think otherwise, Mr. Speaker. I think that the government is deliberately withholding the third way proposal from the public so that it can't be debated in public, there's not enough time to organize against it, and it cannot be used to challenge the Premier in the leadership review that he faces in about a month's time in Calgary. I think that once the Premier's leadership issue is dealt with, we may well see it again. In fact, I predict that we will.

The Premier today challenged the opposition parties to put forward ideas for improving our health care system that would save money or improve service. That was his response when he was challenged about why the government is keeping their plans secret from the public. What the Premier neglected to tell people, in fact, is that in this very House during the fall session I introduced a private member's bill, the pharmaceutical savings act, which would have seen the government follow the lead of New Zealand and bulk purchase pharmaceuticals at lower rates in order to pass those savings on to Albertans and to the health care system generally. That has the potential to save millions of dollars from the health care budget. Of course, even the government will admit that drug costs are one of the leading causes of increases in the health care system. So there are concrete and practical proposals, but once again the government, rather than taking a good, practical, tried-and-true suggestion, would rather protect the pharmaceutical corporations and the high prices that Albertans have to pay. The government is on the side of big pharma and not on the side of the sick in this province.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that since the last election it's been the NDP opposition that has led the fight on health care and led the fight against the government's third way. We have had public hearings and public meetings throughout the province. We've put out materials. We've had news conferences. We have done the heavy lifting on the fight against the government's third way.

I want to give a message to the government. It doesn't matter when they introduce their proposals for the third way. If those proposals include two-tier private health care, this party and a majority of Albertans will oppose them and will fight tooth and nail to prevent the government from bringing in two-tier private health care. The people of Alberta do not want this. If they did, the government would be of course proclaiming its plans from every rooftop in the province. They're not doing that, and the reason is: they know that Albertans do not want two-tier private health care.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about long-term care because that's another area where the NDP opposition has led the fight and was able to get the Auditor General to look at the issue. By working with members of the public who were concerned about this, we've been able to bring forward the issue. The Premier stood in this House and promised to implement every single recommendation of the Auditor General, but what's been happening – what's really been happening – is that the government has been allowing operators to convert long-term care beds to assisted living beds, where there is no regulation whatsoever. So while they're promising to enforce tougher regulations in nursing homes and other long-term care centres, what they've really been doing is allowing the operators to escape any regulation whatsoever through the back door.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it's been the NDP opposition that's led the fight on this issue and has done the heavy lifting to make this an issue and to force the government to promise. We will make sure that the government is held accountable and that it keeps its promises because there have been a disturbing number of broken promises by this government in just the past few years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about the environment. I have to say that the throne speech is very strong on the environment because most of the promises are recycled, and many of those have to do with the environment.

The NDP opposition proposes the establishment of a green fund. We believe that the wealth which is produced in this province through the oil and gas revenues belongs not just to this generation of Albertans but belongs to all Albertans, and that's something that the government doesn't seem to get. We believe that a good portion of that revenue needs to be put into a green fund to invest in energy alternatives. We believe that this province should remain the energy leader into the future but that that future does not necessarily mean that we will be leading in petrochemicals. We have the opportunity, if we want to take it, to establish Alberta as the green energy leader in the future. There are many investments that can be made. We can work with other provinces and with the federal government and even with the private sector in order to make sure that Alberta remains the energy leader.

I want to say as well, Mr. Speaker, that the government proclaims that education is a high priority, but it's interesting that the throne speech has very few actual references to educational policy. There are really no answers for postsecondary education. The tuition freeze sounds good, but again the government is simply saying that this increase in tuition is being held in abeyance instead of putting in place a long-term plan for tuition in this province. We've called for a learning commission for postsecondary education, and we believe that all of the stakeholders, including students and potential students, need to be involved in setting the goals for postsecondary education in this province.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no urban agenda present in this speech. There is not a strong commitment to community policing. There's not a strong commitment to public transit. There's not a strong commitment to housing. Those are all priorities for Alberta's large cities, and it's almost like they've been forgotten.

If cities have been forgotten, then certainly low-income people in this province have been left completely out in the cold. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has said, we've been besieged by phone calls and letters from people who are concerned about the situation facing people with developmental disabilities. The government has once again failed to keep its promises to those people.

Mr. Speaker, as well, the government has forgotten about labour. Labour used to be considered one of the partners in building this province, and it has been many years since this government recognized the role of working people in building this province. During the strike down in Brooks the minister talked about the possibility of first-contract arbitration, but he set it for two years ahead. Clearly, that's not a sincere promise. That's just an attempt to deflect a lot of concern that had developed right across the province about how those workers were treated and their lack of ability to get a first contract. This has been a problem again and again. The government has set in place some of the worst labour legislation in the entire continent, and working people are falling behind as a result. The income gap in this province is widening notwithstanding the prosperity that generally prevails.

Farmers also receive nothing but recycled promises in this throne speech, the same old stuff almost verbatim from the speech before. The government is not dealing with the income gap for farmers, the gap between what they have to pay for their input costs and what they receive for their goods. Instead, they spend their time attacking the Wheat Board and other means by which farmers can receive a better share of the value which they create.

Mr. Speaker, just in conclusion, I want to say that this document is remarkable for its lack of vision and its lack of answers for the people who produce the wealth in this province. Whether they work on the farm or in the factory or in the commercial sector, there is nothing here for those people. It's ironic that we have been asked to imagine a future by a Premier who leads perhaps the least imaginative government in this province's history. Albertans are known for their initiative and independence, and they deserve a government that gives the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Honourable members, I did not invoke Standing Order 29(2)(a) for the Leader of the Official Opposition, so I will not invoke it for the leader of the third party but will with the next successive number of speakers.

I will now call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to rise and to address the Legislature today, and I'm grateful for the time that I've been allotted to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I would also like to take this time to address the Legislature on what I have heard and learned from the people of Alberta this last year. They say that if you want to know, go, and if you don't, then send somebody. Indeed, great rulers and leaders are in touch with their people. However, their success brings a problem of silencing new ideas or progression and supports the status quo.

I sympathize with our Premier and cabinet. I know people who want to be counted as loyal and supportive and, therefore, often restrain themselves from telling it like it is. Because of this they often fail to bring forward good and innovative ideas. In this situation a leader needs to go to the people in disguise in order to hear and see what the people really are saying. We've heard of many stories in the past where a leader has disguised himself as a peasant and gone out to the people and was surprised at what he really heard when he was back amongst the people. We have listened to the rhetoric that only bigger governments care for and protect the vulnerable. We know that this is a fallacy. It means nothing; they are empty words.

I am surprised that there was no mention of tax relief in this speech. We must reduce taxes and our dependence on universal programs. We have listened for decades about a federal government that is going to eliminate poverty when, in fact, all they have done is make the poor more dependent than ever on them. We need to reduce the size of government, red tape, or the paper shuffling, and reduce our taxes. To simply eliminate the health care premiums would do all three.

We need to raise our basic tax exemption to $20,000, closer to the low-income cut-off level. We need to urge the federal government to follow suit. It is sad and shameful to me and to many people that I have spoken with that they do not encourage or allow those who are the poorest among us to enjoy the fruits of their labour.

We have a major shortage of workers in the service sector of our economy. Why would we not allow a person on AISH, PDD, CPP, or Canada disability pension to go out, if they're able, and earn another thousand dollars a month without being punished with clawbacks or taxes? It is also very regressive for those people that are trying to pass on a small business or family farm that the government seems to be the biggest partner at this time and destroys the economy and those small businesses.

A strong and prosperous society is built from strong, debt-free families and small businesses. We should urge the federal government to reduce or remove capital gains and allow tax deductions, say 15 per cent, off people's income to go towards home ownership purchases, as we do with RRSPs. Our relationship with our new government in Ottawa should be one which is constructive, not destructive. For the first time in a very long time we have an opportunity to work with the federal government. It is incumbent upon our government to set the example and not be the distraction.

We have a great opportunity to work with a federal government who is interested in property rights. They seem very interested in letting the province come up with provincial programs that will work for our province. We do not need nor do we want the federal government telling us how to care for our citizens with federal programs, universal programs from cradle to grave, from daycare programs to senior citizens.

Universal programs are a bottomless pit. They're a socialist ploy to break down society and to make people dependent on a government. Once people are dependent on a government, they continue voting for that government. They use jealousy, greed, and envy to excite the people to vote and take away the wealth from those that are motivated, dedicated, and innovative workers and give it to those who are not.

As a member of the opposition I have also heard that people want us to work together. We should work with this PC government, who did not receive the majority of votes, though they did receive the majority of seats.

We want to keep on track. We need to change our attitudes, and we need to recruit our superstars in academics and health care providers. We have lost a great deal of Canada's best, that have left to go to other places in the world because of our high taxes and social programs that are here. We need to encourage them to come back from the United States and Switzerland and other places where they have gone and enjoy this great country of ours.

It's imperative that we take a world view on what we are trying to do here. It's not good enough to say that we're the best in Canada or North America, that we have the lowest taxes because we're not just worrying about North America. We're dealing with the world. We have booming economies in Third World countries where we're going and taking out their best, trying to lure them here, to Canada, for a better life and a better living for them and their families. But we could be looking for those that have left to go to the States and other countries to come back by competing with those tax breaks.

We would never consider shortening the time of our star players on the ice or in other areas. We would never think of covering one eye of one of our best golfers and telling them to go out and compete in the world with only one eye. We would never consider putting weights on the ankles or on the wrists of our women's hockey team, saying that they're too good and they're destroying the competition in the rest of the world. We want to be and can be the very best in the world, and that should always be our goal.

By recognizing, praising, and rewarding excellence, we build a road to success that inspires others to put in the hard work and dedication to reach the top. Just as Sir Edmund Hillary, I'm sure, has inspired a member of this House to reach the highest point on Earth, we can do that in other aspects as well.

Our facilities in Canmore and the Olympic Park have paid off great dividends. We can and do compete with the rest of the world. It is time that we take off the economic shackles here in Alberta and in Canada as a whole and let the best rise to the top.

The government must reduce its social programs and economic engineering to allow taxpayers to direct a percentage of their taxes to a charitable or nonprofit organization of their choice, whether it's a women's shelter, a health region, food banks, or such organizations as the Salvation Army or the Mustard Seed.

We could further enhance our communities by implementing a more equitable formula and return to communities a percentage of revenue generated from those communities through taxation, everything from fuel taxes to business to income taxes.

I have great faith in Albertans and Canadians giving of their time, talent, and money to build their communities, whether it's through their church organizations, their service clubs like the Rotarians, Lions, and Kinsmen amongst others. I have great faith in them, more faith than I do in the government, who claims to care but does not solve the problems at our community level.

We do not need nor can we offer bigger government, higher taxes, and more universal programs to build our future. Rural Alberta is becoming anemic from taxation. Indeed, municipal governments are suffering and are forced to cannibalize their local economies through ever-increasing property taxes, while the federal government and provincial governments get fat from income taxes, business taxes, user fees, GST, employment insurance fees, along with so many others, not to mention the pimping and proliferation of the vices of gambling, liquor, and pornography, just to name a few, and grabbing the accumulation of wealth, which they put into their fat accounts along with all the resource revenues, and then reducing the people as well as municipal governments to come begging on their knees for grants to sustain their communities.

I am very optimistic about what we have ahead of us. At this time we are going to go for another Olympic gold and be the best in the world. Are we happy to be the big fish in a very small bowl? We need to go out onto the world stage and do as we want to do with cancer research and be the best. The world is shrinking at a very fast pace. It is time for us to match it by growing to meet the challenge. There have been ideas already presented such as ethanol development and clean-coal technology. Much like our current potential we do not understand it or realize it, and we're not capitalizing on it properly.

There is nothing wrong with competition, especially when it is with those providing health services. We should not be dictating; we should be facilitating competition to help get greater health in our communities. There are different health regions that want to provide services, but they are being told that, no, they cannot. We're concerned about the safety or the dollar spent. We are suffering in the current health situation because of the monopolies that are produced and continue to be sustained through our health regions. We need to allow those health regions and their experts to decide how they can best serve the people in their community.

I'd also like to comment a little bit on our current democratic deficit. Right now perhaps one of the biggest and most problematic things that we're facing is openness and accountability. I feel that that could be dramatically changed if Alberta were to take the lead and be bold and bring forward legislation that would allow recall to the people. When the people have no force, they give up. They become apathetic. We have an opportunity to bring in recall. With recall people would be accountable. All people who are elected would be accountable to those who elected them. They could not be blue one day and red the next day without the people having the power to recall them.

It wouldn't have to be complicated. If one were to put a simple formula in place, whether it's 25 per cent or 35 per cent, for those eligible electors to bring forward a petition and to give it a certain amount of time, perhaps 90 days, and to notify the elected individual that this is going on, people would and could be accountable to those that have elected them. It's important that as elected people we are accountable to those that elect us and that we don't turn a blind eye and say: well, you can debate that four years from now, and we'll see what you think of it then. It's easy to postpone, and therefore things are forgotten too easily.

We have such an opportunity here as we go forward into the future. I'd like to address a little bit the agricultural problems. In the throne speech we talked about a prosperous society. We talked about low taxes, but nothing again, as I said, about reducing taxes.

One of the other things that people have brought up and that has amazed me is the fact that we are competing with some major economies elsewhere in the world. Those economies do not have the social benefits that we do, and they don't have the tax structure that we do. For us to think that it's only the United States that we're busy competing with, we're going to run into a brick wall. We have other economies that are going to scoop business and work from our country and take it elsewhere. We need to reduce taxes. We need to reduce red tape. We need to look and carefully scrutinize the regulations that we have in place.

It doesn't do us any good to say that we're not going to burn coal here when China has online 500 coal-generating plants to be built. We could and should lead that coal research and have clean coal because other places in the world are going to have to use that coal and will. Like with the Candu reactor we also could implement and share that technology that has been developed here in Alberta around the world, which truly would make for a better world to live in.

There are so many areas that we need to address. We need to be the ones that are forward-thinking. We need to be the ones that are thinking of the world and the global economy. We cannot turn a blind eye. We have a superheated economy here in the province. Now is not the time to pour more money and try and have an auction sale with only one tractor to purchase or one earthmover. We need to have the wisdom to realize the importance of putting away money and using it at the best time possible.

We're putting undue problems on local and municipal governments, telling them how and where and when they must spend the money and with too many conditions. We need to take a step back and remember that if we have the money in the bank, we can always spend it next year or the year after that. We have gone through a decade of saying that we don't have a deficit when, in fact, we've had a major infrastructure deficit. We can't cure it all in one year. I would urge the government to continue to relax the conditions which they are giving to those municipal governments to spend that money. It would be a great benefit to them.

We read in the throne speech that the province has updated the stumpage. One has to ask: what do they mean when they've done that? From the research that I've been given, they've reduced the stumpage fee and lowered the cost, therefore allowing the industry to compete better, but then it seems like that our U.S. counterparts put on countervailing duties that continue to destroy the economy. We need to back up. We need to remember what we did in the '80s when the boom was over and we couldn't balance the books. In order to get the economy going again in the oil and gas business, the government dropped the input costs and the tariffs and other things in order to allow that business to go forward.

We've done nothing but say that we're going to stand by the people in agriculture. I would urge this government . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired.]

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available if anybody wishes to participate. The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the question-and-answer portion.

Mr. Stelmach: Oh. No.

The Speaker: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

An Hon. Member: No. He's the next speaker.

The Speaker: There is no next one that I have. If the hon. minister wishes to proceed, that's fine.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege for me to respond to the Speech from the Throne during this the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature. My grandparents came to this country from an autocratic empire in 1898 and along with so many other pioneers laid a foundation for 100 years of democracy in this province.

I, too, want to recognize the pride that Albertans have in their province. I witnessed their love of Alberta in hundreds of different ways across the province and, in particular, in my own constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and I agree with His Honour that Albertans' optimism is well placed. Alberta is beginning its second century from a very enviable position. Today Albertans are the pioneers of Alberta's second magnificent century.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch on only a few themes in the throne speech that are of particular interest to me as Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. As Albertans we have so much to be thankful for. We are debt and deficit free, have the best health care system in Canada, the best infrastructure in Canada, and really the best education system in Canada. Canadians by the thousands are awakening to the appeal of Alberta's quality of life and opportunity. This discovery is reflected in our high population growth, low unemployment rate, the highest average income, and the lowest overall taxes in the country.

We have so much to be thankful for due to the leadership of our Premier. He has led this province from red ink and pessimism to boundless opportunity and hope, hope for a prosperous future. On behalf of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Premier for all he has done in setting new sights to challenge Albertans' innovative skills and entrepreneurial nature.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians have recently democratically opted to change the federal government, and we welcome this change. Albertans need not mistrust Ottawa or guard against the pillage of our constitutional rights to manage our natural resources. Albertans can feel unshackled from the nagging angst and mistrust over what Ottawa will do to us. We can use this opportunity to focus on a new positive relationship with the federal government. Alberta will work to build a relationship based on mutual respect for the Constitution, a clear understanding that governments are responsible for providing the most efficient public services possible.

Mr. Speaker, by focusing on Alberta's place in the world, we will influence the national agenda in a very positive way. We will continue to lead in environmental policy, with practical and measurable results. We will lead in sustainable economic growth and environmental stewardship. We will lead in all the quality-of-life indicators that make Alberta a magnet for entrepreneurial initiative in both the public and private sectors. I believe the new federal government will give credit where credit is due in terms of emission reductions and technological advancements and achievements proven out by Alberta companies.

In this century Albertans will witness several dramatic changes. Change is inevitable, and it's natural. Just think of the massive changes in society that Albertans born in 1905 were witness to: the remarkable growth of our cities, mechanized agriculture, two world wars, a devastating economic depression, the rise of the automobile, the landing of man on the moon, the rise and thankfully the fall of communism, and the biotech and digital information revolution. In this century we will see the rise of China as the world's largest economy, with India and Brazil rivalling for the number 2 spot.

Future Albertans like my proposed grandchildren will have to contend with the transformation of hydrocarbon energy as the primary source of fuels for transportation and electricity to other less-emitting energy fuel sources. In fact, Pat Daniel, the CEO of Enbridge, has called petroleum and natural gas transitional fuels and is already planning for ways to become a leader in alternative energy. Clean coal will be a part of the answer and will keep Alberta in the energy-production game. So will the renewable fuel resources from bioproduction and other new technologies.

Mr. Speaker, it is the government's duty to prepare the next generation with the best tools to find their own way in their own time, and during this century Alberta's economy will need to change from one that derives most of our wealth from resources deep underground to one that relies on the ideas and entrepreneurial skills of Albertans. We can lay the groundwork for this new economy today by providing opportunities for the commercialization of new technologies right here, in Alberta, by making the investment in our physical infrastructure that makes Alberta the best place in North America to live and raise a family.

This is why I believe that the government's vision for a society that places a high emphasis on education and training is the responsible course to take. Albertans know that building and educating tomorrow's workforce is one of the wisest investments we can make, and I applaud my colleague of Advanced Education for his initiative to develop a new tuition policy for postsecondary education in Alberta. Tuition needs to be an affordable investment for all those who want to pursue their personal goals for education. Tuition needs to be affordable, but remember that what we get we pay for in life. We need to find a balance between affordability of tuition and quality of education. Quality instructors and institutions do not come cheap. I believe that Albertans understand that we will do better by focusing on the highest quality of education and training possible to position Alberta for success in a rapidly changing world marketplace.

The only barrier to our success over the next few years, Mr. Speaker, is the shortage of labour. Alberta's labour shortage will become more acute in the next number of years unless we take more steps to increase the employment rates for our aboriginal population and attract and retain more Canadians from other provinces and immigrants from other countries. Once again the government is taking the right steps to address labour shortages that threaten economic growth. This includes partnering with aboriginal groups and industry on new training projects for aboriginal people.

I am particularly pleased that my colleagues and I will get a chance to develop a new strategy to increase awareness of Alberta as a destination of choice for skilled immigrants. I look forward to working with the federal government on the immigration file and will seek their support to expand immigrant settlement services, language training, and make it easier for foreign-trained professionals to work in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I apologize for interrupting, but the chair will invite the hon. minister to continue to debate as this item goes back on the agenda.

Hon. members, the House now stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. Have a great weekend.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Title: Monday, February 27, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/02/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I'm now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to be able to stand and introduce to you and to members of this Assembly 23 employees of Alberta Energy that are here touring through the public service orientation tour. I am delighted that they could be able to join us and see how we are preserving democracy and are hard at work here in the Legislature. They're in the members' gallery. If they'd stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two exceptional staff members from Solicitor General and Public Security. Laurie Hryciuk and Sue McCoy work in the human resources division of the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security and have been a tremendous asset to our department. They are here today to tour the Legislative Building and the ministerial office. I invite both Laurie and Sue to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of my constituents: first of all, the Rimbey elementary school grade 6 class. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Jim Moore, and parent helpers Jody Woodliffe, Rodney Clark, Margaret Tanasiuk, Kathy Davies, Rick Pankiw, Emily Breton, and Grace Allemand.

They are seated in the public gallery. I will ask them to rise in a minute.

In addition, I have my constituency assistant, Mrs. Cheryl Christie, and her two daughters, Lorena and Kathy. Cheryl worked for many years for Judy Gordon prior to working for me. She's a very valued person to our constituency in this province. They're also seated in the public gallery.

In addition to that, I would like to introduce Mr. Klaas Klooster. Mr. Klooster is a former constituent and is executive director of the Champion's Centre, an Alberta housing project for mentally ill, marginalized, homeless, or at-risk men and women in Alberta. The Champion's Centre operates in Ponoka and is currently expanding to Medicine Hat. They also are looking to expand to the Edmonton area. With Mr. Klooster is Dr. Austin Mardon, a noted Albertan working with people with schizophrenia. They are seated in the members' gallery.

I'd like to ask all these people to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a group that is visiting the Legislative Assembly today from the Native Counselling Services of Alberta. This group is led by an elder from the Cree-Sioux. Her name is Taz Johnson-McGillis, and she is accompanied today by Sheena McCart, Kevin Chille, Irleen Omeasoo, Wesley Haineault, and Carlene Weber. The Native Counselling Services of Alberta provides personal development skills to many people across the province. Their good work does not go unnoticed nor unappreciated. This delegation is in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you my guest, Mr. Rob Warden, sitting in the public gallery. Mr. Warden's mother, Jean, died in unfortunate circumstances while in continuing care, and he is championing all of those that remain in continuing care. I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Lynda and Ron Jonson. Lynda and Ron are tireless advocates for seniors' issues and improving conditions in Alberta's long-term care facilities. Lynda is a former registered nurse and Ron a former engineer living in Hinton. I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Winter Olympics

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every four years all Canadians get to feel part of a bigger team when we come together as a nation to stand behind our Olympic athletes. At this year's Olympic Winter Games in Torino, Italy, the 196 members of Team Canada made all Canadians stand up and cheer. Our athletes competed with pride, talent, and guts, bringing home a record 24 medals. Many others achieved personal bests, and every effort was worthy of recognition.

The theme for the Olympics in Torino was Passion Lives Here. Well, Mr. Speaker, passion also lives here in Alberta because many of Team Canada's medalists are Alberta athletes, and I would like to recognize them today by name. The list of Alberta's medalists is long, and I ask for everyone's patience.

We start with, of course, Spruce Grove's Jennifer Heil. She started Team Canada off on the right foot on day one, winning gold in moguls.

Canmore's Chandra Crawford powered her way to an unexpected gold in cross-country skiing sprints.

Calgary firefighter Duff Gibson took home the gold in skeleton. He shared the podium with silver medalist and fellow Calgarian Jeff Pain. The pride and joy of Eckville, Mellisa Hollingsworth-Richards, cemented Canada's strength in skeleton by winning a bronze.

Can any victory be more dominating than what we saw in women's hockey? Calgary residents Carla MacLeod and Hayley Wickenheiser were big parts of the gold medal team.

Vermilion's Beckie Scott. Well, she shared a silver medal with Canmore teammate Sara Renner in the cross-country team sprint. Beckie was also voted by her peers around the world to represent athletes on the International Olympic Committee. She is the third Canadian ever to have this opportunity.

Arne Dankers of Calgary and Steven Elm of Red Deer collected silver in the speed skating pursuit event.

Now, Edmonton and Calgary came together for silver in the two-man bobsleigh thanks to Olympic veteran Pierre Lueders and our new Canadian, Lascelles Brown.

What would Olympics be without curling success? Okotoks' Shannon Kleibrink skipped her Calgary teammates Amy Nixon, Glenys Bakker, and Christine Keshen to bronze. Of course, Newfoundland won the men's curling.

I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that many Canadian athletes train out of Alberta at our world-class facilities at Canada Olympic Park, the Olympic Oval, and the Canmore Nordic Centre. These are all legacies of the 1988 Olympic Winter Games in Calgary, and they continue to inspire the next generation and had much to do with our athletes' success in 2006.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all members of this House to join me in congratulating all of Team Canada for their tremendous efforts at the 2006 Olympic Winter Games in Torino, Italy. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to respond to the Premier's sentiments on the recent Olympic Games in Turin, Italy. These games were a great success for Canadian as well as Alberta athletes. I was especially pleased to see so many Canadian women athletes standing on the podiums. Each of these athletes just mentioned by the Premier deserves our thanks and our respect for their hard work and sacrifice, their commitment, their sense of fair play and service. Please give them a big round of applause. [applause]

We should also pause to thank the families, friends, coaches, and trainers of those athletes for their sacrifice and dedication. It was especially inspiring to see that so many family members made the trip to cheer on their loved ones. These values – hard work, sacrifice, commitment, fair play, and service – are also the values that so many Albertans share. They are the values that we see every day in our teachers, in our doctors, nurses, our health care workers, in social workers, in religious and other community leaders, in businesspeople, coaches, parents, and so many others. It is so often these individuals that help pass these values on to the next generation. With their help I expect that Canadian and Alberta athletes may win even more medals at the Vancouver games in the year 2010.

However, 24 medals don't tell us the whole story. The Olympic Games, while celebrating the victors, also celebrate the human spirit and the human family. The Olympics provide us with an opportunity to celebrate diversity amidst our common humanity, to highlight their play. There's no better example of this than a coach from an opposing team providing a pole to a Canadian skier whose pole had broken during the race.

I sincerely hope that the performances by all of Canada's athletes at these games will inspire the next generation to participate more actively in sporting activities. This is an area where our province could play an even greater leadership role. There are wonderful opportunities to help families, especially needy families, with the resources required to enrol their children in sporting activities, to invest in the facilities needed, from rural ice rinks to world-class training centres, and to implement and fund a world-class Alberta sports plan. With this kind of commitment, sir, Albertans and Canadians will continue to excel.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I suspect that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is rising to seek unanimous consent so that his leader might be able to participate, so why don't I just ask the question.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. I would like to thank the House for this opportunity to add my congratulations to the Canadian team at this year's Olympic Winter Games in Torino, Italy. Our Canadian athletes competed with grit and determination and as a result came home with a record 24 medals, seven of them gold. Nowhere was the grit more evident than in Clara Hughes' final three laps in the gruelling 5,000 metre long-track speed skating race. Clara had literally nothing left in the tank at the end of the race, collapsing to the ice in pure joy and sheer exhaustion.

I wish to add the NDP opposition's congratulations to each and every one of these outstanding athletes. Whether it was the pure joy of Chandra Crawford's unexpected win in the 1.1 kilometre cross-country pursuit or Pierre Lueders' and Lascelles Brown's sheer determination in winning the silver in the two-person bobsleigh, our Alberta athletes did us all proud.

On Friday the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and I attended the northeast Rotary club lunch, and we sat with Jennifer Heil's extremely proud grandpa. It was really a nice opportunity to talk to him. He was on cloud nine, and I don't think he's come down yet.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, even greater success will be achieved at the Vancouver/Whistler Olympics in 2010.

In closing, I want to once again on behalf of all Alberta New Democrats thank the athletes, coaches, families, and all of those on the Canadian team that did us so proud in Torino over the last 16 days.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

1:50

Long-term Care

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to fail the people in our province's long-term care system. Another tragic death of a senior at an Edmonton continuing care facility over the weekend is proof that the system is facing a crisis. Last week's announcement for seniors failed to address a range of problems, including the need for legislated standards of care. My questions are to the Premier. When will this government develop a solid plan that will ensure that all Albertans in continuing care can expect to live under province-wide standards?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we've put I think about $36 million – is that correct? – into operations for long-term care. That's over and above the $140 million we have committed for capital. We feel that we are tackling the most urgent recommendations right now. I can tell you that long-term standards are being developed and will be implemented this year. I'll have the hon. minister elaborate further.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier has mentioned, we did dedicate $150 million through to the continuing care system over the past year. Actually, it's over the past 12 weeks. That's $100 million for new spaces in the system, over 4,000 spaces that will be either built or enhanced in the rural areas, and also it's $15 million to enhance lodges. The $36 million are being used, as the Premier mentioned, to implement urgent needs immediately.

I'd be pleased to comment on the standards that the member had mentioned in the next question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-six million dollars aren't even what this government gives to the racehorses.

Again to the Premier. The money described in the announcement is less than half of what this government itself admitted is needed for seniors. When are you going to come through with province-wide standards and sufficient funding to meet the needs of people in long-term care facilities?

Mr. Klein: Just as a matter of clarification, we give absolutely nothing to horse racing. We give nothing to horse racing. This person is telling a big fib. He's not a liar, Mr. Speaker, but he's fibbing. That money is generated through slot machines at race-tracks, and it has nothing to do with the government or government funding or taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the government has accepted the MLA task force's final report. We are committed to ensuring the safety and well-being of Albertans in continuing care. As I pointed out, we have given $140 million plus $36 million in operating over the past three months. That's just to cover the last three months and to look after emergency situations. I believe, notwithstanding what the opposition says, that this is a significant step forward on behalf of seniors in continuing care. There's more to be done and more will be done, as the hon. minister elaborated.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the government listen to calls from stakeholders across the province and institute an independent continuing care commissioner to monitor and enforce standards?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we had a complete study by MLAs, including one from the opposition, and they came up with recommendations. The opposition does a credible job of monitoring the situation. I will give them credit. If we had a commissioner, then they would have even less reason for justifying their existence.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Surplus

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By failing to properly plan for long-term care, this government is failing Alberta's seniors. By failing to plan for Alberta's future, this government is failing Alberta's children. If history has taught us anything, we need to put money aside in times of boom to prepare for the inevitable decline of nonrenewable resource revenues. Again to the Premier: will this government table legislation immediately that will bring an end to nonemergency, unbudgeted spending?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance and Provincial Treasurer respond in detail. But there are problems. You know, the opposition leader can talk about all the things that he wants to talk about, but he isn't accountable, thank God. For every good idea or what is perceived to be a good idea, there is a downside. For every action there is an equal and opposite and often negative reaction.

Now, as we generate huge surplus dollars, an emergency might occur outside of a natural disaster which can be accounted for in the sustainability fund. An emergency might occur, and all of a sudden people are saying to this Liberal opposition: "Well, my God, you proposed this. You're sitting on these billions of dollars, and you can't spend any to alleviate this emergency."

Mr. Taylor: Are you just making this up?

Mr. Klein: No, I'm not making it up. You know, yip, yip, yip. Why don't you stick to radio? Lips don't sweat.

Mr. Speaker, you know, an emergency can evolve or develop, and the Liberals would be left there hanging out if they ever, God forbid, became the government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. A math question: when this government puts a billion dollars into the heritage fund and then subtracts a billion dollars from the fund for spending, how much is this government investing in the heritage fund?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I've heard repeatedly from the opposition that we should be putting money away and saving it. Today it seems to be an issue. The fact is that we are saving and we are investing, and the heritage fund is one way. Yes, while we draw the investment income from the heritage savings trust fund, we have not increased until this budget year the actual amount in the fund. We inflation-proofed it this year. We'll be debating a billion dollars for the base of the fund, to grow the real value of that fund. Therefore, the investment income that is available for programs that are important to Albertans will grow. I think the opposition understands that. It's very difficult to make bad news out of a good-news story, and this is an attempt.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Premier: why doesn't this government adopt our surplus policy that would put 35 per cent of surpluses into the heritage fund?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the policy that we have adopted is a good policy. We had this discussion today about, well, 30 per cent, not 35 per cent. It grows and grows. You know, I can recall that back in the early '80s this province was in a depression, and 35 per cent of nothing is nothing. We weren't able to grow the heritage savings trust fund for years and years. When you commit 35 per cent, you commit it when you have surpluses. I would rather stick with the $1 billion. At least it's growing.

As I said, for every upside there's a downside. You know, there are many, many people out there – and the Liberals hear from some of them; certainly the NDs do – who say: "Why are you sitting on this rainy day fund? Why not dissolve it? Why not spend it? You're sitting on something like $14 billion. Why not do something with it?" So for every upside there's a downside. A billion dollars seems to be reasonable.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, this government's hired hand from California on electricity matters, issued a policy paper proposing more refinements to electricity deregulation. This document is a clear indication of the failure of electricity deregulation after 10 years of trying to make it work to the benefit of the consumers. In fact, consumers have always been ignored in any consultations regarding electricity deregulation. Now we find out that the EUB has been cut out of the loop as well. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why was the EUB not given an opportunity to provide input to the Department of Energy on the matters dealt with in this very paper before it was circulated to stakeholders across Alberta?

2:00

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the document put out by the Department of Energy in December on roles and responsibilities, looking at the work of the various boards, the Energy and Utilities Board being one of those boards, was put out for consultation so that they could have it so that they could provide feedback. It was literally in that context that we've acted. We've provided no recommendations yet on it. It's been in discussion among all the boards, including the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this discussion paper that has been responded to by the EUB expresses their deep disappointment that they have not been consulted, has the minister on behalf of the government instructed Mr. Fluckiger not to consult with the EUB in regard to these further deregulation refinements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The whole process has been about consultation. It has been about: how do we actively engage people about improving what is already a very good system? We want to make sure that among the various boards they've have the opportunity to reflect upon their roles and if there are ways that we can improve it to avoid overlap, duplication, those kinds of things. So it has been very strong and open, and it has engaged some very good public comment back, so I compliment our department very much on being quite open on that consultation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: this government is not open. Now, will the Alberta government fire Mr. Fluckiger for failing to consult with the EUB and other stakeholders in Alberta in this latest attempt to try to convince Albertans that electricity deregulation will and can work?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I will absolutely compliment and encourage our department and certainly the individuals that he has mentioned to continue the work that they've been doing in a very open, very transparent – that document has been circulated to all of the parties involved, and we've had quite a bit of comment from all of those parties, a good discussion ongoing. So it has been very much an open dialogue. We will continue to ensure that we have the best system for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Health Care Privatization

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier continues to hide his plans for private, two-tier health care from the Alberta people. Yesterday he falsely claimed that the NDP had not contributed any ideas to improve health care or control costs. This is all the more outrageous given that just last fall the Tory caucus voted down an NDP bill that would have cut drug costs by a minimum of $75 million a year. My question is to the Premier. Why did the Premier tell the House that he was open to innovative ideas to save money in the public system when his government has already rejected a proposal based on a proven New Zealand plan that has dramatically cut the growth in prescription drug expenditures in their health system?

Mr. Klein: I'm going to give the hon. member a lesson in, well, geography and political jurisdiction.

Mr. Mason: We're all ears.

Mr. Klein: Right. He's all ears.

First of all, New Zealand is a country. It's a country, not a province. It's a country. Now, the national government in New Zealand can do things. Here we have to seek the consensus of all the Premiers and the territorial leaders, and we're trying to do that. It's not to say that the NDs' idea is a bad idea. As a matter of fact, we will pursue if we can do it provincially. But in order to do it nationally, you have to get the ND Premiers from Saskatchewan and Winnipeg onside. Or Manitoba.

Mr. Mason: Winnipeg is a city.

Mr. Klein: I stand corrected. Although Winnipeg represents the largest part of Manitoba, it is a city.

Mr. Speaker, if we could get all of the Premiers onside, including the ND Premiers, I would like to do that not only as it affects pharmaceuticals but as it affects uniforms. We've done a protocol on if there is something that Alberta is doing well in the hospitals, then rather than building another centre of excellence in, say, Winnipeg or Toronto, all the patients would come here.

So we are trying to come to grips with these kinds of things, and I would ask the hon. member to put pressure on his ND cousins in Manitoba and Saskatchewan to move on this particular issue.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the Premier just admit that he's not so interested in controlling costs as he is in finding an excuse to privatize our public health care system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm going to make it clear what the proposed legislation accommodates, and it's only one part. The hon. leader of the third party brought up another part; that is, a national consensus that we should have common purchasing. That is one way to achieve savings. Another way is to look at all the administrative costs connected with health authorities. That is another way. The high cost of drugs generally, an aging population: all of these things are problems and need to be addressed.

We're looking at one solution to one component of the problem, and that component is: first of all, no one, absolutely no one, not even this individual will have to suffer. If he is sick or if he is in a car accident, he will be treated. He will be treated under the publicly funded system. Now, if he has a hernia, like Jack Layton had, then he might have the opportunity to move out of the line and pay for it like he would at the Shouldice clinic. But if the doctor says, "Lookit, it might be causing you some discomfort and pain, but I can't do anything for another year," if he wants to wait, he will get treated. So he will get treated under any circumstance.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I do have a pain, but it's sitting over there.

Why doesn't the Premier admit that any solution that improves the public health care system is of no interest to him because he's looking for excuses to privatize, privatize, privatize?

The Speaker: I'm not so sure that that's a question.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what I'm trying to do: bring costs down in line with the rate of inflation – that's one thing that I would seek the hon. leader of the third party's co-operation on – and improve access. Now, that is one component of the whole situation relative to bringing those costs in line, one component. Yes, it involves perhaps using the private system to move out of the line, but I repeat: anyone who needs treatment will get that treatment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Assistance for the Grains and Oilseeds Sector

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in this Assembly would agree that our grains and oilseed producers have become among the best and most efficient in the world, yet they face a very, very bleak future. Whether it is the trade distorting subsidies, whether it's high input costs or low commodity prices, whether it's the weather or a combination of everything, their industry is on the verge of collapse. Many producers feel that the CAIS program in its current form doesn't address their particular circumstance. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given these circumstances, what is the government doing to assist our grains and oilseeds producers for the 2006 crop year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question because this is an area that is of grave concern. Our Premier and our caucus are all very aware of the crisis that we see in the grains and oilseeds sector today: the high input costs, the low commodity prices.

What we've done is moved fairly quickly on production insurance changes that will help producers with their 2006 growing season. We reduced the cost of the premium on the spring price endorsement from 50 per cent to 30 per cent. We announced that just recently. As well, we moved early on the commodity price front too by boosting the floor price under the revenue insurance coverages, effectively setting a floor price for many of these cereals. When you add up all of the programs – and it's a package of programs that's available to all of our producers today – there's over half a billion dollars available to producers this spring between the federal government's programs and our programs. We encourage the producers to visit one of the 52 AFSC offices around the province so that they can get the information they need.

Can we do more, Mr. Speaker? Yes, I believe we can do more, but this is a Canadian problem, and all of the provinces are talking to our new federal minister. We hope to get some more information out to producers very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: while every little bit helps, in the short term that addresses some of the problems. Can our grains and oilseed producers expect a future without the subsidies? What is our industry looking at in the future?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. Really, what we're talking about is: is the grains and oilseed sector viable long term? Is it sustainable without government support? My answer to that is: yes, it is. But we need to deal with the WTO. We need to deal with new markets and new products for those cereals, which we are working on in co-operation with not only the other provinces but with our federal minister. We're talking to the industry. We just announced a three-point plan.

You know, when BSE hit this province, we came up with a BSE recovery strategy. We are working on a grains and oilseeds recovery strategy, and we'll be moving with that fairly quickly in March, Mr. Speaker, and hope to map out that future for the grains and oilseeds sector.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the minister know when the Alberta producers can expect payments from the federal government from the $755 million program announced last year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that some of those payments are coming out right away. The federal government has tied these payments of the $755 million, actually, to the CAIS program, and for those producers who have submitted their 2004 CAIS claim, those cheques are moving fairly quickly. They're based on 7 and a half per cent of a five-year average of net sales of eligible grains with the possibility of a top-up later this year although the federal minister assures me that the majority of funds are going to come out fairly quickly. If the producers have not filed their '04, I again encourage them to get to one of those 52 AFSC offices or get those applications in because it also enables them to apply for the 50 per cent advance on their '05 year, which again will put dollars into producers' hands this spring. Roughly $200 million out of that $750 million we believe will land in Alberta.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, last year this spring this government continued to deny that chronic wasting disease posed a threat to human health or wild deer populations. While this government is in denial, the problem is spreading. Fish and wildlife have no answers, yet the minister of agriculture has accused us of fearmongering, and this is the second cull in two years. To the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: is the government continuing to take the same stance as last year, that chronic wasting disease is not a problem?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I never said that chronic wasting disease was not a problem. What I said was that we have a surveillance system that works very well. What I said was that we support our elk industry and our deer industry because they, too, have a future. We've never said that CWD wasn't a problem.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: is this minister willing to give guarantees that chronic wasting disease will not enter the human food chain? It's a simple question: yes or no?

The Speaker: Nobody can give guarantees, hon. member. The next question.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you. Is the minister willing to apologize to Albertans for waiting so long to act on the threat of chronic wasting disease?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that's a ridiculous question. Really, the hon. member needs to do a little more research. This industry has been around for quite some time. The CWD surveillance has been around for quite some time and, in fact, is viewed around the world as a model which some other jurisdictions should be following. To follow his logic, when we were hit with BSE in the beef industry, we should have shut it down. We didn't do that. We're supporting our producers. We're doing what's right based on science, and we're doing what's right for our consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Environmental Initiatives

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has long placed a priority on finding sustainable ways to develop its natural resources to benefit all Albertans. One of these resources is coal, and the province's reserves are estimated to be twice the energy of Alberta's oil sands resources. In the Premier's address on Tuesday night he emphasized this government's continued commitment to clean-coal research. He referred to the ingenuity it took to make oil sands resources a long-term prosperity and that Alberta's best minds and industry leaders have the knowledge and innovation needed to unlock coal's massive potential. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can the minister tell the House about the research taking place to develop clean-coal technology?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the tremendous fiscal success that we are having in this province from energy resources, it is now time to continue to focus on the long-term problems that we have, and clean-coal technology is one of those opportunities. The goal, quite simply, of our clean-coal research is to find technologies that use our coal – and I'll call it Alberta coal – more efficiently, with a minimal impact on our environment. I say Alberta coal because Alberta coal is primarily subbituminous, which means it has a lower sulphur content and a lower mercury content, which has characteristics that have to be used in a different variety than other coal sources. Not only electricity generation but the importance of this research into other areas that can offset the use of natural gas are important.

Specifically to the member's question, together with industry the Alberta Energy Research Institute is currently working on 10 projects that are assessing clean-coal technologies for Alberta's needs. These include coal gasification with reduced emissions and the capture, storage, and usage of carbon dioxide.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to encourage development of renewable energy resources?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the importance of clean-coal technologies, we also recognize that there has to be a mix of energy technologies. The Alberta Energy Research Institute is really focused on six priority areas that we're working on: one of those I've talked about, of course, with clean coal, clean carbon; a second area is CO₂ management; bitumen upgrading; improved recovery of oil and gas; alternative and renewable energy; and water management.

Just one example that I will give to the members would be a project that we have on biomass through the Alberta Research Council at a feedlot in Vegreville. This project generates about 1 megawatt of power from agricultural waste. That's enough electricity to power their complete operation or a 2,000-person village.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize that a mix is important and are working on a number of different fronts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister explain what actions are being taken to make sure Alberta continues to have clean air to breathe, free of emissions such as mercury and sulphur dioxide?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, if you can imagine this province as being the leader of environmental initiatives across North America, imagine this: this province sharing our technology with the rest of the world. Albertans can do it because we're investing in technology such as clean-burning coal.

What have we done in the last week, you ask? Well, let me tell you what we've done. Our standing policy committee, our cabinet, our caucus all supported new regulations that, in fact, are reducing mercury by 2010 by 50 per cent. How much did you say? Fifty per cent. That's 1,200 kilograms to 600 kilograms. That's just the beginning of more to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

2:20 Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has actively encouraged coal-bed methane drilling, assuring Albertans that it's safe. Thousands of coal-bed methane wells have been drilled in the past few years. The farmers and municipalities in proximity to these wells are experiencing dramatic change in their drinking water. High levels of methane, caustic skin burns, loss of safe drinking water have been reported, and they're serious health and safety issues with no consistent process for investigation and management. To the Minister of Energy: how is it that CBM drilling is full speed ahead when we're still awaiting recommendations from the advisory committee and protective legislation is not in place?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, last fall there was a draft report, as you may be aware, from the Multi-stakeholder Advisory Committee on coal-bed methane, and that went through public feedback at that stage. That final report has now been prepared. We have just been in receipt of it. We are hopeful to have that report out in the not-too-distant future.

That said, I must re-emphasize, though, that the Energy and Utilities Board does still act on all of those issues that you've raised, very fact-, science-based information, to ensure that our water is protected. One of the recommendations coming out will be to ensure that we continue to gather and have the research on the protection of those aquifers so that we can continue to let all Albertans be reassured that their water will be protected as the coal-bed methane drilling continues.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is precisely the question. You're continuing drilling before the regulations are in place. Why has there, for example, not been a regulation that all water in an area should be tested before the drilling?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there are regulations in place. This is another report, the Multi-stakeholder Advisory Committee, to help improve the regulatory framework that we have, a very good and one of the best, reputable standards throughout the world. The Energy and Utilities Board does act upon ensuring that when these issues come forward in any application, those things such as that water quality are preserved on every application, not just those going forward but those that have happened in the past.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: do you support coal-bed methane development without adequate legislative protection of groundwater?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, unequivocally I do not. In fact, as I was just sharing with the Minister of Energy, some industries have come forward, looking under the Water Act, legislation that was passed in this Assembly. The answer to them at this point, until the report is complete, has been n-o. That's two letters. No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Aboriginal Training and Employment

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're hearing more and more about the growing need for skilled labour in Alberta, and we know that aboriginal Albertans aren't nearly as represented in the labour force as other Albertans. Clearly, we need to provide more opportunities to aboriginal people so they can develop the skills they need for a career in the trades. This morning the Minister of Advanced Education announced that the province has now over 1,100 aboriginal apprentices, compared to just 238 in 2002. My first question to that minister: can he give us a reason for this increase?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government has made it a priority to increase the number of aboriginal people in the workforce and the number of aboriginal people who have access to postsecondary educational opportunities. To achieve that goal, in the last few years there have been a number of initiatives that have been launched to encourage young aboriginal people to consider a career in the trades. We've introduced promotional materials in all schools encouraging young aboriginal people to consider a career in the trades, we've sent youth ambassadors to speak to young aboriginal people around the province about career planning, we've worked to connect aboriginal apprentices with employers, and we've provided scholarships for aboriginal apprentices.

Reaching the 1,100 number, which is what we have now registered, is a significant milestone that all members of this Assembly and all Albertans should be pleased about. As a province we need to ensure that all Albertans, including those of aboriginal descent, have the learning opportunities available to them so that they can be part of Alberta's future.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: has the minister set a target for further increasing the number of aboriginal apprentices and a method to achieve it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we'd like to achieve 1,500 aboriginal apprentices by 2008-2009. I think that's very achievable. In fact, it's probably a low target. My hope is that we'll surpass it quickly and achieve even higher numbers of aboriginal apprentices than that. We plan to continue the efforts under way to facilitate aboriginal people becoming involved as apprentices. We want to expand efforts to promote the trades as a good career choice not just to aboriginal people but to all Albertans.

We're working closely with the postsecondary institutions to strengthen the programs and services to ensure that aboriginal people, particularly, can be successful in preapprenticeship programs and can have that type of success. We're planning to do more to link industry with aboriginal organizations and First Nation groups to discuss training and employment opportunities not just in urban institutions, Mr. Speaker, but distributed learning opportunities in the community across the province. It's very exciting that NAIT had their first graduating class of their mobile classroom in Conklin in September of last year. Programs like that are very important to provide access.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final supplemental to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: I'm wondering if the minister can inform us what her department is doing to increase the number of aboriginal Albertans participating in other sectors of the job market beyond trades.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, because my department is not a service provider, we actually rely upon partnerships, and those partnerships are indicative of what happened this morning with Advanced Education. That's just one example.

Within the various departments that we do have, we encourage them to ensure that there are training components and some employment opportunities as well as economic opportunities. As an example, under Human Resources and Employment we have the aboriginal labour strategy that's going on. Mr. Speaker, in the health area we have bursaries that will help ensure that careers do occur for aboriginal people in the health sector. With the federal government we have what we call the aboriginal workforce participation initiative, and that initiative is an agreement between us to be able to see how we can improve the employment opportunities for the First Nations and Métis people of this province.

We've done some really good things with the municipalities. As an example, the city of Grande Prairie signed an agreement with us under the AWPI to ensure that their departments within the city work with the city's industry to see what opportunities will be available beyond the trades. So, Mr. Speaker, partnerships are what we live on, and industry is certainly part of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Postsecondary Education Policy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the Minister of Advanced Education and I both attended Public Interest Alberta's At the Crossroads summit on postsecondary education, and I want to commend the minister for not only being there but rolling up his sleeves and getting involved. Nevertheless, it seems that advanced education has gone from the penthouse to the doghouse on this government's priority list in the past year. Not one piece of legislation is scheduled from Advanced Education yet this session. To the minister: does this mean that the starvation diet is over and that there's money enough and space enough and professors enough and a fair tuition policy for all postsecondary students in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, legislation is not the only way to create a priority. In fact, if you don't need more laws, you ought not to make more laws.

Our Premier, in sponsoring Bill 1 last year, the Access to the Future Act, brought into this House, and this House passed, legislation which is very broad in scope which allows us and compels us to make postsecondary education a priority in this province. It sets out the access to the future fund, a $3 billion fund which encourages investment not only from the government but from the community, from individuals, from good corporate citizens to make postsecondary learning a priority. It committed to putting a billion dollars into the heritage scholarship fund to make sure that finances are available for students to get an education.

It highlighted some areas like a common application process so that students can have access to all the public postsecondary institutions, easy access through one-stop shopping, so to speak. I can report to the House that there's a committee consisting of the colleges and universities in the province, which are actively engaged in designing that system as we speak.

It set out the procedure for a searchable inventory for scholarships and bursaries, and that process is well under way. No more legislation is needed for that. It talked about plans to increase participation in the advanced education of individuals who are disadvantaged due to socioeconomic, geographic, or cultural barriers. This morning we announced that there are now 1,100 aboriginal apprentices in the province. We're being very successful on that. So it's not a matter of more legislation, Mr. Speaker; it's a matter of keeping doing the very successful things we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that tuition fees are governed by the Post-secondary Learning Act, section 61, does the absence of an amending bill in this session of the Legislature mean that students and their institutions will have to wait for a tuition policy until this time next year or beyond?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's been clear since the beginning of February of 2005 that we were going to bring in a new tuition policy. In fact, I've been calling it a new affordability policy because it's more than just tuition. It's not just the cost of paying tuition, but it's also the cost for rural Albertans of getting to school and the cost of living when they get to school or for urban Albertans who have to move to another place to go to school, so tuition and affordability.

The Premier indicated last February in his speech to the province that we would have that policy in place by the fall of 2006. We've reiterated that. We indicated this fall during the learning forum that we had that we would be bringing out a policy this spring so that people would be able to see it and that policy would be in place by the fall of 2006 so that students and institutions could plan on it.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister assure us that there will be the appropriate legislation that enables that new tuition policy in place in time for a new tuition policy to be in place for next fall so that students don't have to wait yet another year and we don't need another year of rebates? The Learning Alberta review seems to be dealing with just about every issue but tuition policy.

Mr. Hancock: Well, given that the hon. member and I both sat in the same session at the forum yesterday in talking about tuition policy and he heard some of the things that we were talking about, he knows that there's an incredible interest in how tuition policy and affordability is crafted and that there are many options available. It's prudent – and I'm sure he would agree that it's prudent – to explore those opportunities and come to a consensus of the best way forward for Alberta students.

We've promised that that policy will be in place. It will come out this spring. It'll be available for discussion. It'll be in place in the fall, and if there's need for legislation, we'll be bringing forward the legislation, and I'm sure the hon. member will help us expedite any legislation that's necessary to put that policy in place for students when they've had a thorough and complete opportunity.

This is not a short-term fix, Mr. Speaker. This is a long-term issue. Advancing education is important for all Albertans, and it's important for the future of Albertans in a knowledge economy.

Tuition is one element that's extremely important, and it's important that we do it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Coal-fired Power Production

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Old King Cole was a merry old soul, and when he called for his fiddlers three here in Alberta, I'm sure he was surprised to see the Premier, the Environment minister, and the Energy minister tripping over themselves to sing his praises. Expanding coal plants in Alberta is a huge step backwards. It's more about burning coal here in Alberta to sell electricity to the United States than it is to benefit Alberta consumers. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given the huge untapped potential of cogeneration and renewables, why won't the minister admit that this great coal burning scheme is about expanding energy exports and not providing Albertans with affordable energy and a sustainable future?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we'd be delighted to bring him into the clean, environmental, economic solution of energy of the future, and that's why we're reintroducing him to that clean coal opportunity. He talks about coal plants, but he forgets about the technologies of gasification of coal to liquids, the capturing of emissions. A tremendous amount of opportunity can be under a more economic platform even for an environmental solution for coal of the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. My supplemental is to the Minister of Environment. When jurisdictions like Ontario are phasing out coal generation due to its harmful health effects and significant environmental damage, why is this government promoting a large-scale expansion of coal-fired generation here in Alberta?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, there is such an insatiable appetite for energy around the world, and as the world continues to grow from 6 billion to more, they're going to require more energy. What type of energy? Renewable energy, which is very important and which Alberta is leading the way on. I repeat: renewable energy is one. Fossil fuel energy is very important as well.

Mr. Speaker, let me reassure all Albertans. When Ontario will be in the dark because they will not have any electricity 10 or 15 years from now, they'll be calling to Alberta to look for help, and Alberta will tell them that we'll take your electricity and we'll send it to them, based on your ideas.

Mr. Eggen: Perhaps Alberta will look like Sudbury with the acid rain.

To the same minister: will the government, then, please guarantee that any new coal-fired generating units in Alberta will meet zero emission standards and will not be built using the weak-kneed standards that were just announced for existing coal-fired plants?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just insulted all Albertans. How has he insulted them? This is how he's insulted them. CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance – an alliance made up of NGOs, made up of environmentalists, made up of industry, made up of the public at large in Alberta – has received national awards, and this hon. member just came up and said that their recommendations sucked. Well, I want to say that nothing could be further from the truth, in fact, with our technologies, with our initiatives to reduce the mercury emissions by half. I can only tell you that Albertans will never settle for that type of attitude as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Trade Certification

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, many Albertans are concerned about the labour shortage in this booming economy. I have a constituent that tells me that there is an inequity in the way journeymen welders are treated if they want to come from another province to work in Alberta. I'm told, for example, that a welder from B.C. or Saskatchewan with a journeyman ticket that isn't red seal certified can't come to Alberta without first paying money and writing tests to have their trades credits recognized. However, an Alberta welder with a ticket that is not red seal certified can still travel to B.C. or Saskatchewan and work without having to get their credentials certified. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can you explain what the red seal program is and why this inequitable treatment of journeymen welders exists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the challenges that we have in the trades is that there is a different set of processes and standards in place in every province. Attaining a welding certificate in one province might not involve the same level of training as we have here in Alberta. In fact, Alberta is acknowledged as being a leader of training in the country, and our apprenticeship program is held up as a model in North America. In fact, even from outside of North America people come to look at our apprenticeship training model.

That differing set of standards is precisely why the red seal was created. That was an agreement across the country as to a set of standards so that people could apply in their own jurisdiction for a red seal, which would certify them for the ability to move, labour mobility, right across the country. By adhering to the red seal standard, Alberta isn't doing something unique. In fact, we're upholding the exact same standards that every province has agreed to. If an Albertan wants to hire a journeyperson from another province who doesn't have red seal certification, they can do so. That journeyperson can come here immediately, begin working, and then they can apply for the necessary certification once they're here. The cost is exactly $60 for the necessary exam.

In terms of Alberta welders being able to work in other provinces without having to obtain a red seal, I can't speak to the standards for other provinces, but I can say that Alberta has led the way in making sure that there's a national certification process so that the labour mobility can happen without diluting the standards of care.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question, Mr. Speaker: rather than putting up barriers for workers coming here from other provinces in the interests of maintaining high standards, can we not relax the red seal testing requirement to allow those experienced welders who have their tickets from other provinces to come to Alberta to work?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we're not creating barriers. We're making sure that there's an appropriate standard so that credentials mean something and that employers know what they're getting. It doesn't pose a barrier to people moving across jurisdictions. They can apply easily for a red seal in their own jurisdiction, or they can apply for a red seal here, or they can apply to take the test here.

Relaxing standards is not the way for us to move forward in making sure we have appropriate labour in the province. We make it possible for experienced workers to challenge exams. There's an easy process in place to make sure that workers are credentialled, and in fact workers who got their credentials in other jurisdictions prior to the advent of the red seal program – and I think that in welding that probably was 1979 – can come and work without a red seal, but if they got their credentials post the red seal program coming in, it's very easy for them to apply and to get the certification in this jurisdiction, and they can work while that process is under way.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a moment I will call upon the first of six hon. members to participate, but first of all I would like to draw to the attention of the members the presence of a former Member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta in the members' gallery. Broyce Jacobs served the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner in the 25th Legislature of Alberta.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members may wish to know that in the 1909 provincial election 82 candidates were nominated in Alberta's 41 constituencies. For the one and only time in the history of the province of Alberta a representative of the Socialist Party was elected. The constituency was Rocky Mountain, and the new MLA was Charles M.W. O'Brien, who was elected with 555 votes. I give you this quote which was found in a journal called the Edmonton Capitol, a statement made in this Assembly on March 2, 1910, by Mr. O'Brien: "I am proud to be the first political representative in this House, the embodiment of a new order of things. I am here to voice the interests of the slaves of society." Mr. O'Brien was defeated in the 1913 election, moved to the United States, and became a founding member of the American Communist Party.

Alberta Olympians

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to offer a few words in commemoration of the very special group of men and women who have once again shown Alberta to be at the forefront of athletic excellence. In recent weeks, as the eyes of the world focused on Torino, Italy, we watched our team put in its best winter Olympic performance to date, with Albertans making a significant contribution to this incredible success.

As a result of our world-class training facilities, whether the Olympic Oval, Calgary's Olympic Park, our alpine skiing resorts, or Canmore's Nordic Centre, Alberta has long been a destination of choice for athletes seeking a competitive edge. When combined with traditional Alberta dedication and drive, our athletes, both native and honorary, have a potential as great as any in the world.

As our Premier earlier mentioned, we are proud. We are all proud of their achievements, and I can tell you that the residents of Banff-Cochrane are especially proud of Chandra Crawford of Canmore, who won an astonishing gold medal in the women's cross-country sprint, and Canmore's Sara Renner and her teammate, Beckie Scott from Vermilion, who brought home silver medals in the women's team sprint event. In addition to these incredible results, Albertans received, as we heard earlier, medals in men's bobsled, women's curling, women's moguls, women's hockey, and men's and women's skeleton.

Without a doubt we are developing and attracting some of the finest athletes the world has ever seen, athletes with unmatched determination and incredible sportsmanship. These extraordinary Albertans who ascended the medal podium and all those who honoured us by competing brought a great sense of pride to every citizen of this province. Please join me in once again extending congratulations to our Canadian athletes for representing this country so successfully and pay special tribute to those Albertans whose contributions were so vital in representing our nation to the rest of the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Black History Month

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure and pride that I rise today to acknowledge the celebration of Black History Month. February is celebrated in Canada and many parts of the world as a time to honour the many contributions of members of the black community.

Mr. Speaker, black Canadians can be found contributing at a very high level in many disciplines, including medicine; the arts; music; the trades; community, provincial, and national leadership; and have also served with great pride and ability in our military. I think of Corporal Ainsworth Dyer, who lost his life in the famous friendly fire incident in Afghanistan. On a brighter note we can't forget Lascelles Brown, our silver medallist bobsledder at Torino.

Mr. Speaker, my role as the first black to sit in this Assembly is one that I'm very proud to carry out with the knowledge that the road for me was paved with the determination of blood, sweat, and tears of many people who travelled long and difficult roads literally and figuratively.

Black farmers came to Alberta at the turn of the last century from many parts of the U.S.A., including Oklahoma, and settled in places like Breton, Amber Valley, Wildwood, and Campsie. While these were very thriving communities in their day, now only a few isolated farms remain as the new generation has migrated to our cities. Another wave arrived between the 1950s and '70s from the Caribbean. This group included my parents, who heeded Alberta's call for teachers. Worsley was nothing like they had ever experienced in Jamaica, but they persevered.

Mr. Speaker, Black History Month is not only a time to celebrate the contributions of black Canadians; it is an opportunity to remind us that we are all greater because of the sum of our parts. We are a multicultural nation, and we have so much to learn from each other and so much to share. I'm proud to be a member of Alberta's black community, proud to live in a country where we celebrate our diversity with such exuberance, proud to be Albertan, and a proud Canadian.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Freedom to Read Week

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to speak today in recognition of Freedom to Read Week. This important event takes place during the final week of February and is recognized by the Freedom of Expression Committee in Canada. Freedom to Read Week is intended to remind us all that freedom of expression is an important liberty that we all enjoy in Canada. However, even in Alberta and across the country freedom of expression must not be taken for granted.

Although we as a nation are regarded internationally as a leader in protecting civil liberties, books continue to be removed from Canadian libraries, schools, and bookstores every day. Censorship represents an attack on our intellectual freedom, which is protected under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Freedom To Read Week encourages us all to defend our rights to read what we choose. It is an educational opportunity to teach others to respect and understand this right and to express ourselves openly.

I would like to take this opportunity to urge all Albertans to take part in Freedom to Read Week, ending March 4. There are numerous events taking place in the province during this period. Please visit the Freedom to Read website and show your support for this important event in any way that you can, and in doing so ensure that our freedom of expression continues to be defended with vigilance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Jennifer Heil

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure along with my colleague the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to acknowledge a very special Albertan and Canadian: Jennifer Heil from Spruce Grove, Alberta, the Winter Olympics' winner of the gold medal for freestyle skiing, women's moguls. On February 11, 2006, I am sure you could almost hear the cheering from Torino when 23-year-old Jennifer brought home the gold.

Skiing since age two with her sister Amie and father, Randy, Jennifer is no stranger to winning titles. At age 17 Jennifer Heil was named the World Cup rookie of the year for the 2000-2001 season. In 2004 she became the first Canadian woman to win a World Cup mogul title in the Canadian Freestyle Ski Association event. You could say that her family is very proud of how far she has come.

No stranger to achievement, Jennifer used to run cross country, where she set records in junior high school. She is currently pursuing her commerce degree at McGill University in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to recognize an outstanding Albertan, one we are all very proud of, Jennifer Heil, gold medal winner for women's moguls at the 2006 Winter Olympics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Aboriginal Apprenticeships

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of the announcement by Advanced Education that more than 1,100 aboriginal apprentices are working in Alberta in 54 trades. This is truly a milestone achievement and one that is worth celebrating because, as we all know, Alberta's economy is strong and the demand for skilled tradespeople is high. This figure represents a home-grown solution.

It's a fantastic start, but more needs to be done. We need to be aggressively promoting the trades and apprenticeship to all youth as a valuable and worthwhile career. As the chair of NADC and the Youth Secretariat I know only too well about the challenges facing young people, especially those who live in rural and remote parts of the country. The key to building on this apprenticeship success is educating our talented youth about opportunities and options available to them.

We need to do a much better job at getting good information into their hands and inspiring them about how promising their future is and that they can make certain career and employment choices. One way to address the labour challenges we face is to engage young people in discussion to find out what their challenges are, what they think is working, and how we can do a better job. The Youth Advisory Panel does just that, and apprenticeship has been a hot topic at meetings and has resulted in some very forward-thinking ideas.

There have been many great suggestions like how employers can support youth and how guidance counsellors in high schools can be the students' first step towards a career in the trades. So when students walk into a counsellor's office and say that they want to be a welder or an electrician or, as a matter of fact, any trade, they will get the information and the support they need to proceed down the path. The whole idea is to be responsive to the students' initial inquiry.

I hope that this celebration of over 1,100 aboriginal apprentices will encourage even more young Albertans to see apprenticeship as a rewarding career pathway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Labour Legislation

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November I rose in this Assembly to congratulate the workers of UFCW 401 who had just won a first contract after years of struggle ending in a bitter strike. The Lakeside dispute should have made it clear even to this government and to the minister responsible that important changes were long overdue. The strike proved that Alberta's labour laws – frankly, the worst in the country – give employers every advantage in a dispute.

This government failed hard-working Albertans. It forced workers to take strike action when it should have forced the employer into arbitration. It allowed replacement workers into the plant when it should have respected the integrity of the union's picket line. But the real failure came earlier this month when the Minister of Human Resources and Employment revealed that he had no intention of pursuing first contract legislation. The president of the Alberta Federation of Labour called the news perplexing and disappointing. I have other words that I would use, but they would be unparliamentary.

Alberta is one of only three provinces that do not provide this basic protection for newly organized workers. First contract legislation could have prevented strikes at the Shaw Conference Centre in Edmonton and at the Calgary Herald. Alberta's employers face serious problems of worker shortages across this province. Well, if you want to attract more workers to Alberta and promote healthy labour relations, the NDP would like to offer some suggestions: stop bringing in foreign temporary workers who take non-unionized jobs from unionized Albertans, stop supporting CLAC's efforts to undermine real unions in Fort McMurray, take measures to end the use of replacement workers during strikes and lockouts, and legislate first contract arbitration. In short, Mr. Speaker, show respect for the hard work Albertans do.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: In today's recognitions one hon. member referred to February as a certain designation month, and another hon. member referred to a week as a certain designation. Just so that the phones in my office do not start ringing, I'm going to bring you up to date about all the other events that are celebrated in the month of February so that it can never be said that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta does not acknowledge all of them.

First of all, this year, 2006, is the International Year of Deserts and Desertification, meaning the certification of deserts. February is Black History Month. It's also Heart Month, Potato Month, Junior Achievement Month, Low Vision Month.

February 2 was Ground Hog Day. February 5 to 11 was International Development Week as it was also White Cane Week. It was also Burn Awareness Week. It was also Eating Disorder Awareness Week. February 7 to 14 was Congenital Heart Defect Awareness Week. February 12 to 18 was National Children of Alcoholics Week. February 13 to 17 was National Antibiotic Awareness Week as it also was Random Acts of Kindness Week. February 14, as we all know, was Valentine's Day. It also was Read to Your Child Day. February 14 to 21 was Take It To Heart Week. It also was the Heart Fund Campaign week.

February 15 was National Flag of Canada Day. February 19 to 25 was Brotherhood/Sisterhood Week as it also was Scout-Guide Week. February 20 was Family Day in Alberta. It was also Heritage Day in some parts of the country. February 20 to 26 was Heritage Week. February 21 was International Mother Language Day. February 22 was World Thinking Day.

February 25 to March 5 is National Engineering Week. February 26 to March 4 is Freedom to Read Week, and February 27 to March 5 is Canadian Landmine Awareness Week. Tomorrow, February 28, is Shrove Tuesday.

Now, at the conclusion, before we begin Orders of the Day today, we're also going to have two points of order, one from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and the other from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I wish to make a tabling. The Minister of Finance provided the government's 2005-2006 quarterly budget report for the third quarter to all MLAs this morning. At the same time, she also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. On behalf of the minister I'm now tabling the quarterly budget report as the amended fiscal plan. I'm also tabling the third-quarter activity report describing the major achievements of our government during that period. Likewise, I am tabling the third-quarter update for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two documents. One is from Greenpeace, and the other one is from the David Suzuki Foundation. Both are outlining the health and environmental dangers of relying on coal for electricity and address some of the myths around so-called clean-coal technologies.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition I'd like to table copies of a release he issued today. The release shows that the NDP has accepted the Premier's challenge to propose solutions and improvements to our health care system. As the release points out, we've been making proposals for some time, including legislation introduced last session to reduce the cost of pharmaceuticals.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today. The first is page 189 from the supply estimates from the spring sitting for the lottery fund, which clearly shows under vote 3.0.7, racing industry renewal, that an amount of some $42 million is being allocated to the racing initiative, to the horses.

Secondly, a letter received by my office from a constituent, John Zyp, in which he outlines a number of recent experiences with the health system and comments on a rather chaotic runaround regarding trying to get some kind of assistance for a ministroke on the weekend.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, an e-mail received, again by my office, from Dennis Loughlin in which he was referred to a physical therapy centre and was told they had a waiting list unless he wanted to pay extra and get help immediately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter that was delivered to our constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar from Helen Vermeulen. This letter is addressed to myself and also to the hon. Premier, and it is regarding cuts to services and supports for adults with developmental disabilities. Both Helen and her husband, Henry Vermeulen, indicate that they would like to see an increase in PDD funding.

The second tabling that I have, Mr. Speaker, is documents regarding my question earlier in question period today. This is a letter dated November 28, 2005, to the Electric Utilities Act Advisory Committee members. It's in regard to the paper Role and Mandate Refinements for Alberta Electric Industry Implementing Agencies, and it's signed by the executive director of Alberta Energy, Kellan Fluckiger. I have the response to this nine-page document from Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, the AEUB, and that letter is dated January 13, 2006, and it is signed by R.D. Heggie, executive manager, utilities branch.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, return to order of the Assembly MR 35, asked for by Mr. Martin on behalf of Dr. Pannu on May 2, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order
Parliamentary Language

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I raised a point of order in response to comments from the Premier in an exchange with the Leader of the Official Opposition in which he stated that the Leader of the Official Opposition was telling a fib. The citations that I'm quoting to support my point of order include 23(j), Beauchesne's 488 and 489, and Beauchesne's 492, the question being: is it appropriate to use either that terminology of “fib” or to indicate that someone is fibbing?

I thought: well, fibbing is a colloquialism. I checked in the dictionary to see what that is, and in fact in the Random House Dictionary, concise edition, it notes that a fib and the derivatives, fibbed and fibbing, are a “trivial lie”. So it’s a lie. Saying that someone has told a fib is the same thing as saying that they told a lie, even if it’s a trivial one.

I would argue that there is a significant amount of documentation, including that which has been circulated to all members through the Speaker’s notes, that indicates that falsehoods and lies and not telling the truth and deliberately misleading are all indications of unparliamentary language and have been ruled and deemed to be unparliamentary.

Under Standing Order 23(j), which talks about using “abusive or insulting language,” that is certainly what was, I believe, the tone of what the Premier was delivering and was his intent, that he meant to be insulting, that he meant to indicate and to disparage the character of the Leader of the Opposition.

I have already referred to 488 and 489, which also includes a long list of prohibited language. Although I do note that “fib” is not specifically included in the language that I was able to review in the edition of Beauchesne that I have, I also note that the language is deemed to be parliamentary or not parliamentary as the Speaker sees fit. In this case, I’m asking the Speaker to rule that particular language as unacceptable in this House. I think it also conveys a tone that I’m seeing increasingly and particularly put forward by the Premier that brings all of the members of this Assembly into disrepute.

The second part of the issue here, the first being if it is appropriate to say that a member is telling a lie, is: is the information correct? In this case, I have already tabled page 189 of the supplementary supply estimates from the fall, which was the most recent update to our current budget. So when the Leader of the Opposition was saying that the government allocated or gave more money to horse racing than it did to seniors in its most recent announcement, that in fact is correct, and it’s backed up by the documentation here. If you note, on page 189 it says: reference/element, also called a vote, 3.0.7. It’s clearly listed in the budget documents under the lottery-funded programs.

Now, to try an argument that somehow the lottery-funded programs are not controlled by the government or not allocated by the program is purely specious. I mean, on this one page alone it’s allocating money to a number of different initiatives. Now, whether that money is collected directly in and run through general revenue and then issued by way of a cheque or a grant or some other means back out to a group or whether the government says, “We would normally take that money in, and we’re going to account for all of it, but you, in fact, can keep it at the source,” it’s still running through the government books, and the government is still allocating that amount of money for the group to use. So to try and pretend that somehow money is not being allocated to the racing renewal initiative by this government for the benefit of horse racing truly is a specious argument.

The point of order, I believe, is well founded against the Premier in attempting to use language that’s unparliamentary and also under 23(h) and (i), casting aspersions upon the character of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. At the outset I think it’s important to recognize that the Premier was responding to a preamble by the Leader of the Official Opposition. It was not necessarily a comment relative to the question that was being posed. What the hon. member said was that this government gives money to horse racing, and that was the point that the Premier was addressing in his comments. I think it’s fair to say that in the context of that comment it was a mischaracterization. Given the fact that that statement has been made numerous times in this House and has been responded to numerous times in this House, I would say that it was probably an intentional mischaracterization.

There’s absolutely no doubt that there are monies that are distributed to horse racing, but they are not given to horse racing. There’s a contract between this government and Horse Racing Alberta pursuant to which those monies are earned. If Horse Racing Alberta did not do anything pursuant to that contract, no monies would flow. No monies are given in the context of giving, and in the context of the statement, we are talking about monies that are provided by a particular department to the operations of that department in the true sense of the word “given.” So that is the context in which the Premier was making his statements.

I would agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that the definition of fibbing or fib as outlined in the Oxford Dictionary, 10th edition, does say that it’s “a trivial lie.” I would point out, however, that the Premier was very, very clear that he was not calling the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition a liar. He made that clear on more than one occasion.

So what we are left with, Mr. Speaker, is a situation where we have a trivial mischaracterization by the hon. member, the Leader of the Official Opposition, but the Premier made it very clear that he in no way was calling the hon. member a liar.

The Speaker: Others?

Well, hon. members, we’ve just spent about 10 or 12 or 15 minutes talking about horse racing, and the subject of the question led off by the Leader of the Official Opposition today had to do with the subject of long-term care.

Now, the chair sends nice letters to hon. members, including one he sent to all Members of the Legislative Assembly on February 15, 2006. Actually, it’s very clearly written. Under section 6, Question Period, it says, and I quote from Beauchesne 409(2): “The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply.” Then it says, “A supplementary question should need no preamble.”

We’re on the business of long-term care today, the second question, the Leader of the Official Opposition. Where this came from the chair doesn’t know, but I quote: “The $36 million isn’t even what this government gives to the race horses.” Then “again to the Premier,” and then there’s a question. So then the Premier: “Just as a matter of clarification.” We’re not talking about the question here; we’re talking about the preamble, which shouldn’t have been issued.

Just as a matter of clarification, we give absolutely nothing to horse racing. We give nothing to horse racing. This person is telling a big fib. He’s not a liar, Mr. Speaker, but he’s fibbing. That money is generated through slot machines at racetracks, and it has nothing to do with the government or government funding or taxpayers’ dollars.

Then, “Mr. Speaker, the government has accepted the MLA task force’s final report,” and he goes on to answer the question.

Look, it’s only day 2. There’s absolutely no doubt in the chair’s mind that the usage of the term “fibbing” – although the Premier did say, "He's not a liar . . . but he's fibbing." I don't like that language. I don't think that language is appropriate, and I think that even the use of the word "fibbing" in the context it is – it can be used according to the Oxford English Dictionary. It says, "Often used as a jocular euphemism for 'a lie' . . . one who tells 'fibs'; a fibber, a liar." They're interchangeable words. They're not the kinds of words that we need in our Assembly. If there's going to be an interjection of the chair, the chair is going to start interjecting with the first violation so that we never get to the second violation.

I'm going to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to withdraw the words on behalf of his leader, and then we'll move on with this one, please.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to follow your instruction. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, please proceed with your point of order.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one shouldn't take very long, but again it comes back to the Premier's statements, to something he said in the House. I think that before he says things, he should be a little clearer that he's correct, especially when we're dealing with another parliamentarian. I'm talking about the Canadian Parliament, and I'm talking about Jack Layton. He was trying to justify – and again it had nothing to do with the questions. He insinuated that Jack Layton sort of jumped the queue and went to a private clinic to have a hernia operation. He did not. I will get the record straight right here that this is definitely not true. There's a grandfathered private hospital called the Shouldice Hospital. It does hernia surgeries as a contract to the public system in Ontario.

An Hon. Member: Good idea.

Mr. Martin: We're not arguing whether that's good or bad. It should be part of the public, but it was grandfathered, and Jack Layton had no choice but to go there [interjections] – Oh, aren't they sensitive; aren't they sensitive – for his publicly paid hernia operation as that is where he was referred by a physician. The point is that he did not jump the queue. It was part of the public system. The Premier should not be standing in this House talking about other parliamentarians when he doesn't know the facts, Mr. Speaker. It's not good policy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the point of order the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Sorry. Go ahead, please, hon. member.

Mr. Martin: The point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that this was – I'm careful about how I say this – a mistruth about another parliamentarian, and it should not happen in this Assembly.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say just a couple of things. First of all, I missed the point of order completely, and I still miss it because I don't see where in our rules it would fit in. It also seems to me that what the Premier said relative to this matter, while I haven't followed it closely, pretty much accords with my understanding of it; that is, the individual that was the subject of the comment did in fact go to a private clinic which has been around for some time and which does wonderful work in the area of hernias as a result of the expertise that they have been developing over a number of years. You know, I think it was a comment on simply the perhaps irony of the situation where a particular party rails against a particular public policy and at the same time takes advantage of it. I think that in our Legislature we have an opportunity for that type of fair comment. [interjection]

The Speaker: Well, just once, hon. member, okay? So we can have a ruling on it.

Mr. Martin: We might have a debate.

The Speaker: But then what would I do? I wouldn't be able to rule, would I?

Mr. Martin: Well, go ahead.

The Speaker: Well, thanks. I appreciate that.

One would have thought or at least the chair would have assumed that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview might have risen and given a citation from something. The conclusion of the chair would be that the member would have made the argument that it violated Beauchesne 493 for protected persons. Unfortunately, fellow parliamentarians in the current mode do not fall under that category of protected persons.

I'll quote what was said. This is the Premier of the province.

If he is sick, or if he is in a car accident, he will be treated. He will be treated under the publicly funded system. Now if he has a hernia, like Jack Layton had, then he might have the opportunity to move out of the line and pay for it like he would in the Shouldice clinic. But if he wants to wait, and if the doctor says, "Lookit, it might be causing you some discomfort and pain, but I can't do anything for another year," if he wants to wait, he will get treated.

There was a fair amount of jocular activity, as the chair recalls, in this exchange, going back and forth, and it was not, you know, that civilization was going to come to an end as a result of the answer to the question. So one would take it in the spirit of it all.

One also has to recognize that sometimes in question period members get involved in debating instead of asking, dealing with government policy, and every time we move into that thing, we sort of tend to fall into other kinds of responses. As an example, during this particular series of questions the leader of the third party used these kinds of statements, which certainly could have promoted a response from somebody else. The leader of the ND opposition basically referred to the Premier, and the reference was "hide," you know, you're hiding something, and used the phrase "falsely claimed" in the same sentence, and then said, "I do have a pain but it's sitting over there," at which point it didn't really bring responses other than to get us to the hernia situation.

At this point in time let's all use this and recognize this as only day 2. If we can smile and have a bit of humour, that might be helpful too.

Now we'll move on.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006.

As I said on introduction, the bill is designed to increase the number of Albertans who consent to tissue and organ donation, which will help save and improve the lives of others. This bill will improve the co-ordination of organ and tissue donation throughout the province. While some excellent work is taking place currently in various health regions, we can always do better to ensure that the maximum number of organs and tissue is available for potential recipients.

This bill will require the designated health facility to notify the gift agencies when a person dies, when death is imminent, or when a dead body is received, and the gift agency will then use all reasonable efforts as outlined in the legislation to ensure that the appropriate steps are taken.

The human organ procurement and exchange program, which is more commonly known as HOPE, and the Comprehensive Tissue Centre operate in Edmonton and Calgary in co-operation, as I mentioned, with the local health regions. These agencies have trained staff to handle the delicate and emotional discussions that take place with family members at the time of this distress. Hon. members should be comfortable in the fact that no organ or tissue decisions currently, nor is it contemplated in the future, will be made without the consent of the family.

It goes without saying that the ability to receive a new organ or tissue can mean the difference between life or death. Over 400 Albertans are on waiting lists for various organ transplants, and 15 to 20 persons die every year in Alberta waiting for transplants. That is a number that none of us should be satisfied with until it reaches zero.

This bill incorporates a number of the provisions adopted several years ago in Manitoba. The difficulty that that province at the time was encountering is not unlike what is happening in Alberta today. While the number of deaths that were being reported in Winnipeg continued to increase, the same could not be said for outlying regions. Since similar legislation to this bill was introduced in Manitoba, in Brandon, as an example, the number of deaths January to November last year was 143, of which 124 were reported and 28 donors were attained. This compares to only five donors in 2004, three in 2003, and none in 2002.

The second part of the bill will compel the minister of health to table with this Assembly within one year of the legislation taking effect a report which will include recommendations for a more co-ordinated government response to encourage donations. This review would examine how government forms and documents could be improved to include questions regarding a person's willingness to be a donor. As an example, there might be a provision on all drivers' licences or health care cards that are issued where a person is required to make a choice before receiving that new licence or card. The second example might be a simple question posed by a registry agent at the time of issuing a new driver's licence, and if agreed to, the donor card is signed at the time and then carried by that person.

This bill will also ask the minister to investigate the feasibility of establishing an online registry. This could be co-ordinated either with the human tissue gift agencies' websites or an enhanced Alberta Health website.

Statistically it has been proven that when someone has signed a donor card, family consent follows almost 100 per cent of the time. On the other hand, when a person does not make his or her wishes known, the consent rate by family is significantly lower. Therefore, we must simply do a better job of raising the awareness on this issue and not leave it to chance. I don't have the statistics, but I would guess that especially among young Albertans the number of signed donor cards is not very high. We must do whatever is possible to encourage family members to have that discussion and, hopefully, to take the next step of signing a donor card.

Now, our government could also do a much better job of leading that discussion. If one goes to the Alberta Health and Wellness website, there is no direct link to organ and tissue donation. Furthermore, when one types in the word "organ" and does a search under this website, the first thing that pops up is a survey form to fill out. The information that is being asked for will be compiled "for the Honourable Gary Mar" and must be completed by "October 31, 2000." Simply put, we as government must do a better job in this area.

One of the things that is not being asked for in this bill is the cost saving involved. When a person, for example, receives a new kidney, what is the cost saving versus the cost of dialysis? While that wasn't asked for, it would be valuable information to have because one can only assume that it would be significant.

There was a lot of good work done several years ago by the advisory committee on organ and tissue donation, that was chaired by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This report, A Framework for Action, was submitted in April 2000, and there are many good recommendations in this report. I'd strongly advise the minister and her department to re-review this document. My assessment is that little has changed or improved since that report was submitted more than five years ago.

Currently before the Ontario Legislature are two private members' bills seeking that the law in that province be changed to one of presumed consent. Under this model an individual is deemed to have given consent simply by doing nothing. This is a model to which a lot of consideration was given. However, I have not been convinced that Albertans are there yet. This model could face legal challenges. There are moral implications, and in general Albertans are opposed to a so-called negative option.

I want this bill to be successful. In order to do so, I feel that it's important to take several steps outlined in this legislation which could greatly increase the number of donors. It would be my hope that as a result of this legislation our donor rate continues to increase and a presumed consent model would not be required.

I ask all members of the House for support on this legislation and look forward to the comments. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. This is a very interesting bill, and as the sponsoring member laid out, it does raise a number of issues that I hope we are able to spend some significant debate time on and, more to that, take back into our communities and try to get the debate happening there.

I think the issue that we have is that we are now able to very successfully transplant organs. With the development of antirejection drugs this has now become a viable procedure for us. It does enhance the lives of people and also saves their lives literally. Where we have an option between, for example, dialysis and an organ transplant, you actually can save a significant amount of money. P. Keown from Transplantation Proceedings in 1999 noted that one year after transplantation the annual cost of supporting a person with a kidney transplant is 40 per cent less than dialysis. So it is a good idea for us. The problem is that we can't get enough people signed up to do it.

I think that there is a real willingness on behalf of Albertans and, beyond that, of Canadians to make a choice to assist people and to do that in a volunteer way. We have a different system in Canada than they do in the States. Here we volunteer. We make a choice to donate willingly to the organ transplant and also the blood systems. In the States you can get paid to donate your blood, and you would also get paid for donating various organs, and that leads you down a whole different road. I think my colleague from Edmonton-McClung is going to speak on that after me. But in Canada we have a long and, I think, noble history of donating because we believe it's a good thing to do.

The problem is that there are really two tests before you can harvest an organ from someone. One, they need to have signed a donor card, and the last time I thought about this I couldn't think of where it was I was supposed to sign. I kept looking at my driver's licence because somehow it was in my head that it was on the driver's licence. I finally located it on the back of my Alberta health care insurance card. So if anybody who's reading this Hansard wonders, please go to the back of your Alberta health care insurance card, and that's where you can note that you would like to donate and sign the card. So there's the active participation of signing the card.

We also take the additional precaution here of the consent of the family. That's where it starts to get a bit difficult because people can be reluctant in an initial time of grief. Perhaps there's a certain amount of – I'm searching for a word here, and this won't be the right one – abhorrence or squeamishness about discussing an issue like that when you have a loved one who is about to die or has just recently died. The result of that is that we're not able to harvest and to transplant as many organs as we need. So this bill is trying to find some ways to convince more people to donate.

I have a couple of questions off the bat. This is the second time that I've debated an organ donation bill in this Assembly, and I note that the previous one was never proclaimed. The 1998 Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act was in fact passed in this Assembly and is still awaiting proclamation, and my question is: why? We spent the time on it. What was so wrong, and is that being addressed in this bill and somehow being fixed? That's happened before, that something was overlooked or mistaken or whatever, and the subsequent bill addresses it all or even in one case takes the whole pre-existing bill inside of it, and the whole thing gets passed. So I'm wondering why this 1998 bill is still not passed some eight years later.

Now, I note that the minister did follow up in 1999 and established the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation, and that committee developed a series of recommendations for a framework for a provincial system of organ and tissue donation.

Then there's another one. In 2003 Alberta Health and Wellness established the Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation Interim Implementation Committee. You know, Mr. Speaker, sometimes I think the only thing different here is that the titles are getting longer. This one was to provide guidance on development, implementation, co-ordination, and evaluation of existing donation transplantation efforts, I guess. Again, the good recommendations that came out of this committee haven't been implemented, and I don't really see them in the legislation either.

So maybe if this passes second, we can hear from the sponsoring member as to what happened to the 1998 bill, the 1999 recommendations, and the follow-up committee in 2003. It seems we're getting an awful lot of attempts at this without a lot to show for it. So what is the real problem here? Let's get that out in the open and talk about it.

We in the Liberal caucus do support organ harvesting and transplantation. We're very interested in the debate around the idea of – how does it go? There are a couple of different ways of looking at it. One is the presumed consent, which is the sort of negative billing option that was referred to by the previous speaker, and then there's a sort of mandatory declaration bill that's also been brought forward by a backbencher in Ontario. Actually, I think they're both from Ontario. They're sort of competing Ontario MPPs with different ideas on this.

I would like to see a wider public debate on this because, in fact, we're assuming that Albertans wouldn't go for that presumed consent, but maybe they would. If that was the case, that would save us all a lot of time and grief because mostly what this bill is doing is tiptoeing around trying to get at people in time to bring up the subject and see if they can get their consent before the person actually dies or get to them fairly quickly within the reasonable window that's open for them.

So I'm interested in the rest of the debate around this bill. I'm speaking in favour of the principle of what has been proposed here. I note that between 15 and 20 per cent of all people on waiting lists die before a suitable organ is found for them. Two years ago, in 2004, there were 313 transplants performed in Alberta and 534 people waiting for transplants, so almost 200 people more waiting for a transplant than actually got one, and 42 people who died while waiting. That's in that 15 to 20 per cent range of people who die. They don't need to. We've got the organs there if we can just make arrangements to harvest them appropriately and do the transplants.

We do have 93 per cent of Albertans who indicated that they are in favour of organ donations, so maybe we need to push the envelope on this and try for something like a presumed consent effort. That's a bit more aggressive than what's being contemplated in this bill, but certainly I'm willing to support what is essentially in the bill.

A few questions that I might add on and ask if the sponsor can answer them. What are the goals and targets for increasing the number of organ and tissue donations? Is the government pursuing any other initiatives to increase the amount of organs and tissues that are available for transplantation?

I've already talked about the recommendations from the '99-2000 report. I'm wondering when those would be implemented. I'm also wondering about the government taking direction from its own 2003 consultation paper to implement a policy where the expressed wishes of a deceased individual take precedence over the wishes of the family, which is part of what we're struggling with here. The deceased individual may well say, "Yeah, I'm up for it; I've signed my donor card," but when they're actually on life support, the family that's on hand won't allow it to go forward.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak to this, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be speaking to this bill. When the Member for Calgary-West advised me that he would be drafting a bill on organ and tissue donation, I definitely took an interest in it. Let me tell you why.

About two years ago a dear friend and also a constituent of mine called me late in the evening to advise me that his son was dying in hospital and to come and visit within hours. A portion of the liver that the father had donated to his son had been rejected, and the child was in a dire state in one of our hospitals. After the family had the ability to say their goodbyes to the child, in the last minute, literally the last minute, a child's liver was located in a different part of Canada, flown in, and the child's life was saved. Recently that very same child, young Tyler, was recognized by our Lieutenant Governor as an outstanding community member for his scouting and other achievements in the community. A life, a great life, has been saved. To any parent any child's life is precious, to say the least.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that this bill could go further. I do agree with the Member for Calgary-West that perhaps the public would not be supportive if we instituted a presumed consent for donation of tissue and organs. That is too bad because perhaps sometimes we tend to dilute our legislation or our initiatives to satisfy a select few in our society who would perhaps become overly vocal on the issue of presumed consent with a clear outline allowing Albertans to opt out of this particular program if they chose to do so.

This idea wouldn't be novel because there are jurisdictions throughout the world that are not only considering, like Ontario is, presumed consent on organ and tissue donation but actually have instituted it and have shown it to work very well. One jurisdiction that I know of, Mr. Speaker, is Spain. In Spain they have presumed consent on organ and tissue donation, which is working very well and is satisfying that country's need for organs and tissues.

However, what makes me really happy about this bill is that this bill has adopted the best practices from other jurisdictions, including that of Spain, and it is proposing a central co-ordination of organs for our province and our country as a whole if it is adopted by other jurisdictions. That's very important, Mr. Speaker, because as young Tyler was suffering in the hospital, the organ was actually found, I believe, in another province. Now, this was a matter of co-ordination between doctors, but overall in this country we don't have a good network of sharing information on what organs are available, what organs are about to become available, and what lists of waiting patients there may be to draw from. It's a bit of a disjointed process that we have right now. If we could have a well co-ordinated process, I guess a greater number of lives would be saved.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre has indicated that a prior bill has not been instituted. I'm not familiar with the prior bill, so I can't speak to whether it should or shouldn't have been instituted. However, the benefit of the fact that we're discussing the issue here in the Legislature and the benefit of the fact that this debate, hopefully, will be covered by the media throughout the province is that Albertans will start thinking about the importance of donating organs.

If this debate encourages one extra person to sign their card and, hopefully, donate their organs and allow another person to benefit and save a life, then I think a great mission has been accomplished already. I believe that more than one Albertan will be encouraged to do so, having heard the debate. Nonetheless, if we as government can show leadership and promote among Albertans a donation of organs, I think it is incumbent upon us to do that.

The bill also asks the minister to examine the feasibility of an online donor registry. I think that with our current technology, with the advent of high-speed Internet and its accessibility to every community in this province, again that would make organ donation even easier throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I must support Bill 201 put forward by the Calgary-West MLA, and I hope that every member in this Assembly will support Bill 201 as it will definitely save lives. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you. I must apologize for the way my voice sounds. I have laryngitis, and you can imagine what kind of apprehension I have about the third way and privatization. Anyway, it's good to see you in the chair, Mr. Speaker.

What we're discussing today is Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, and I am happy to be responding in second reading. I must say at the beginning that I'm generally in support of this bill as I realize the need to facilitate tissue and organ donations, and I can also appreciate the fact that 15 to 20 per cent of those people on waiting lists die before a suitable tissue or organ is located for them.

Now, I have some general comments and questions, and I'm really interested in hearing all the points of view being discussed from both sides of the floor. I'm also under the impression that similar pieces of legislation are currently being discussed in the Ontario Legislature, so I'll be paying attention to that as well. I heard the comment that was made about presumed or implied consent, and I know that this is something that they're, as I said, discussing in Ontario. I'm not sure where I stand on this issue because it really poses some questions for me.

Thinking about it, I tried to maybe reach my own decision, and I started thinking about something else. How about a mandatory declaration of intent? Instead of asking people to voluntarily tell us whether they agree with an organ or tissue donation, or if they leave it blank and then we have to ask later, I figure that maybe everyone over a certain age, let's just say 18 years of age or so, would be required to declare what their wishes are with respect to organ and tissue donation. Are they for it? Do they support it? Do they support certain organs but not others? Or are they totally against it? Maybe if they're undecided, then we can ask on-site basically, at the hospital. So presumed or implied consent is one issue. Mandatory declaration is another. That's something I can probably find easier to live with.

Now, reading through the bill, I'm interested in receiving some assurance, especially when no family members or next of kin are identified. For this person that we're approaching now and asking to agree to donating tissue or an organ, how can we guarantee that this person has full command of their faculties? How can we ascertain that this person has a sound mind and can make that decision?

Further to this, maybe it doesn't happen in Alberta, but you certainly hear stories about cases where that person who is on their deathbed is or has been harassed. How can we ensure that utmost respect and consideration are afforded the dying patient or his or her family? We don't want them to be harassed; we don't want them to be pressured. They have to make that decision willingly. The family may be suffering or trying to come to terms with this tragic situation. The patient himself or herself might not be able to make that decision or might not actually like the pressure.

Also you hear some stories from other jurisdictions, certainly from south of the border or from other places in Europe, for example, that there sometimes are situations of deceit or misinformation, or the person is not told in accurate terms what his case is, or the extent of their illness or injury is exaggerated, or whether there exists a treatment or a cure for his case. This is definitely driven by certain situations where tissue and organ banks were sort of low on inventory, and then they figured that these are prime donors. It really alters the quality of care that these guys receive. We don't want to see cases where care is reduced or, you know, somebody is mistreated because he or she has a quality organ or two to donate.

Now, my next point would be on the issue of organ or tissue banks. It's a question of procedure. Are we going to scan everybody on their deathbeds, seeing who is available and who is willing to be identified as a donor, or are we going to do it just based on need? As an example, someone on a waiting list is in need of a compatible kidney. Are we going to examine those who are terminally ill looking for a compatible donor for this case at this time, or will we have the required kidney available as part of a ready-to-go stock or inventory? Are the banks accumulating inventory, or are they doing it just on the spot so the supply is fresh?

The banks, as I understand it – and I hope it continues to be like this – operate in Alberta as not-for-profit centres. Will there come a day when this government would allow for-profit tissue and organ banks to operate in this province? Again, you hear all these grumblings about the third way and privatization. Will this be yet another thing that this government privatizes?

Will people have to pay any fees at any stage? Will there be any charges for harvesting, storage, release, or disposal at any one point in the procedure?

Furthermore, how do we ensure that harvested tissues and organs are used first and foremost for Albertans who need them, then possibly allowing other Canadians to access our banks? I guess what I'm really trying to say here is that priority has to be given to Albertans and Canadians before we contemplate exporting to other jurisdictions.

Lastly, a technical question as to how the obtained consent will be recorded. As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, I am the critic responsible for privacy and FOIP and all that stuff, and this raises a flag in my mind. Will there be a requirement, for example, to have witnesses present to ascertain that this consent was duly given? I think that would be fair because sometimes in certain situations a family member might contest the validity of a consent, and we're opening the floodgates to litigation and lawsuits. Maybe a witness or two would be a simple way to confirm that the person had command of their faculties and knew what they were doing and really did in fact intend to provide that consent.

As well, will there be an allowance for a donor or his or her family member to allow one form of donation but not another? As an example here, what if that person agrees to donate tissue or an organ to be used in medical research but doesn't want it to be transferred to a recipient or vice versa? Will there be an allowance for one form of donation versus another, or is it all or none?

With that, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your time, and I appreciate the chance to speak in second reading, and I will follow the discussion.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to have the opportunity to join in the discussion of Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. I sincerely thank the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this legislation forward.

Mr. Speaker, it's an important bill because it's an important issue. The reason why the issue is so important is that it is imperative that we increase the organ and tissue donation rates in Alberta. This can be most effectively accomplished through the creation of awareness, education, and a strong and efficient referral system. I believe that this bill, Bill 201, is the best start.

I believe that the meagre rates Alberta currently bodes in donations, Mr. Speaker, is symptomatic of the lack of knowledge and understanding that Albertans have about the importance of tissue and organ donation and the ability to do it. Albertans are giving and compassionate, yet for some reason our rates of organ and tissue donation are very low. As I said, this is not symptomatic of the quality of Albertans but symptomatic of the amount of knowledge and understanding they have.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Kidney Foundation of Canada, suitable organ donors represent only 5 per cent of all hospital deaths. Now, to put this into perspective, this means that 5 per cent of all hospital deaths allow for suitable organ and tissue donation. If 50 per cent of those hospital deaths, the people who died, had registered to donate their tissues, it's still plausible and possible that that 5 per cent of viable organs that could be donated would come from half the population that never registered, never considered the option, had no information or inappropriate information to become organ donors. So this means that maximizing donor rates is extremely important and can only be done by increasing awareness.

As a result, it's clear that our duty as legislators is to ensure that Alberta's citizens become informed on this issue. It's necessary for all Albertans to receive educational information on organ and tissue donation. It's important for all Albertans to see how easy it is to become an organ donor. It's important for all Albertans to see how important it is to become an organ donor. It's important for all Albertans to see how much good they can do to save another's life or improve their quality of life. It's important, Mr. Speaker, to caring and compassionate Albertans that they have the chance to make appropriate decisions.

There are always fallacies around organ and tissue donation, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've heard some myself. One fallacy that needs to be addressed is the idea that doctors and physicians will not work as hard to save a person's life if they know that that person is a willing organ or tissue donor. When you give it appropriate consideration and appropriate information, it's easy to realize that that notion is absurd. It almost sounds like a skit out of Monty Python's The Meaning of Life, where they actually go and harvest a live person's liver because he signed a donor card. All doctors sign an oath to save lives. No doctor would ever make the choice that one life is worth more than another and that one person can die so another can live.

Not all tissues and organs either, Mr. Speaker, are donated just to save another's life. A lot of them are donated to improve quality of life. Oftentimes donating a kidney is not for the sake of life or death but to improve the quality of a person's life so that they don't have to have constant medical attention. Cornea transplant donations that come from people who are deceased also improve quality of life. Now, people need to understand that it's only through the administration of the best possible health care as a person passes away that organs will be in the best condition and conducive to donation. So that's one fallacy that I hope will have been solved for Albertans right now.

Now, typically, Mr. Speaker, fear arises from the lack of knowledge. In fact, we fear what we don't understand and we don't have knowledge about. That's where all fear arises. With knowledge the fear of the unknown can dissipate, and with more knowledge, education, and information . . . [interjection] That's not a crock. Appropriate education, information, and knowledge would allow Albertans to fulfill their true giving nature and kind spirit, let their citizenship shine through, and help their fellow man.

Research has shown that a family's prior knowledge of donation and the donation process is one of the most important factors in determining a person's decision to donate. Another critical factor is how the family is asked or questioned about donation. In fact, imagine knowing the situation when a person is passing away: not only just asking the person or their family members if they're willing to donate but the method that the request is made is critical to determining whether or not a donation will be made.

Bill 201 has provisions to create an effective system for referral. Under this proposal the human organ procurement and exchange program, HOPE, and the Comprehensive Tissue Centre, CTC, existing agencies, would be notified by a physician or their hospital staff that a potential donor is available. The professional agencies would then use their existing resources, Mr. Speaker, to determine if the person had declared their wishes for organ and/or tissue donation. If so, there's no prolonged issue, but if not, the agency staff would use their expertise and training to assess whether the circumstances were appropriate to approach the person or their nearest relative and, if so, respectfully discuss their decision to make a donation.

Again I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that though it's a sensitive situation and some people may consider it callous, only 5 per cent of hospital deaths lead to suitable organs and tissues for donation. So imagining that, again, half the population had registered for tissue and organ donation, that's another half of the population that may provide suitable organs for donation that had never considered it and need to be approached at the time when the issue is most critical. It is critical that suitable donors be approached even though it's a delicate situation in order to save lives and improve the quality of life of other Albertans.

The spreading of awareness among Albertans in our health care facilities is such a simple concept. What this concept needs, however, is direction. What this concept needs is leadership. What this concept needs is legislation in the form of Bill 201. The very fact that I've spoken to you about organ and tissue donation today and the fact that you are thinking about the issue now from all of the speeches that have gone on so far has led to an increased awareness and caused the message to go further for all Albertans. If one of us here today signs our donor form, which I did just today and which is found on the back of your Alberta Health card, if 10 of us express our wish to donate to our families, which I did this morning to my wife, if 20 of our friends and associates do so because we brought up the topic with them, if 100 Albertans because they hear about Bill 201 in the news tomorrow or read it in Hansard . . .

Mr. Martin: That's what a lot of people do.

Mr. Griffiths: Yeah. It might be a few more.

. . . then we can rest assured that we have been successful and spread the message to more. The steps may be small as we try to achieve our donation goals; however, any step forward is better than standing still. We can measure the success of this bill not simply by the statistics it creates but by the momentum of public opinion and degree of public knowledge it brings.

The methods behind Bill 201 are not rocket science, Mr. Speaker; they're quite simple. As we all know, simple ideas are often the most effective. Through the spreading of these ideas and explaining the opportunities of organ and tissue transplant, we can and will increase our levels of donation.

On that note, I call on all of you to help expand our provincial organ and tissue donation program. Let us show the rest of Canada and the entire world that we are leaders in this regard as well as many others. The first step, Mr. Speaker, personally I took today by signing my card, speaking to my wife and family about my intention to be a donor. I will be an organ donor if it works out to be such, hopefully not for a long time, but I will be eventually. The second step is in making this happen by passing Bill 201.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bill is generally a very good bill. It moves in the right direction. We can certainly support the principle that other speakers have talked about for deathbed consent, next of kin consent being given to human tissue gift agencies in absence of organ donor cards. Clearly, I think, as the mover of the bill brought forward, we have a problem in Alberta, and anything that we can do to save lives in the long run, I think in principle is very good.

I'm not going to go into the act specifically. I just want to wonder if there's been any thought given because of the privacy part of this particular act, and I'll be a little more specific. Under the act – it's in 8.4, I believe – it says, a human tissue gift agency may share information it receives under this Act, including confidential personal information, with another human tissue gift agency if doing so is reasonably necessary to facilitate a transplant of human tissue.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the need for this. I'm not sure if the member is aware of this, and I'll come to it, the implications that were drawn up in British Columbia. What if the agency in question is part of an American company that can then be obligated to submit Canadians' personal health records to American authorities under the USA PATRIOT Act? I don't know if the member is aware, but this was a major issue. It went to the law courts in British Columbia, and the Information and Privacy Commissioner in October 2004 talked about it. It had to do with health records, and this is an expansion of this particular part. Especially if we talk about privatization, there are going to be American companies more and more involved here if the government gets their way.

Regardless of that, this came up as a result of the B.C. Government and Service Employees' Union taking the British Columbia government to court. As a result of that, it went to the Privacy Commissioner. They asked the Privacy Commissioner there in British Columbia two questions.

1. Does the USA PATRIOT Act permit US authorities to access personal information of British Columbians that is, through the outsourcing of public services, in the custody or under the control of US-linked private sector service providers? If it does, under what conditions . . .

2. If it does, what are the implications for public body compliance with the personal privacy protections in FOIPPA?

I think this is a point that we have to make. I don't know how much discussion has gone into that.

Just as a general thing – and this is across Canada too – there is general consensus that U.S. authorities could at least under some circumstances use powers enacted by the USA PATRIOT Act to make orders for access to personal information located in Canada that is involved in the outsourcing of public body functions to a U.S. linked contractor.

Now, the point is: some people think that's more serious than others, but I think that there is a great deal of worry about privacy, and I think we have an act coming up in this session dealing with the PATRIOT Act in other ways. I think this is something that we should consider in terms of going through this particular bill.

Now, they came back with a number of recommendations. I won't go through all of them, but a couple of them, I think, are important in terms of our debate here. It says:

The government of British Columbia should amend the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act . . .

- (a) pending nation-to-nation agreement, as contemplated by Recommendation 16, prohibit personal information in the custody or under the control of a public body from being temporarily or permanently sent outside of Canada.

That was their number one recommendation there. Of course, they go on to say that it would be much better if we did this province by province and across the country and also work with other countries – the United States and Mexico they mention in it – down the way.

I just wanted to bring this to the attention of the mover of the motion, and I guess the question is at some point: has there been any thought that has gone into this? I think this could be a serious matter in terms of the privacy of an individual if American companies have access to our information. This is true of all health care records, but certainly this would be health care records.

As I say, generally we certainly support the principles of what the bill's trying to do, but I think there should be some thought about looking at the privacy. Perhaps we could take a look at what they did say in B.C. and see if there's any way that we can, if not eliminate, mitigate against the thought of some of these private records getting out where they shouldn't be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to also rise and join debate on Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. I also want to acknowledge the hard work that the Member for Calgary-West has done to bring this forward today.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I can safely say that I'm not alone in my enthusiasm towards the measures proposed in this act. I'm sure it is painfully obvious that something needs to be done in order to increase the rates of organ and tissue donation in this province. It is something that is supported, no doubt, by the majority of the residents of my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace.

As Albertans I think we are among the most generous and caring people in the world. The current lacklustre status of organ and tissue donation doesn't result from a lack of generosity. I believe it is a direct result of a general lack of awareness. Realistically, how many of us have given serious thought to organ and tissue donation? By the time we are in a position to actually donate, we're well past the point of decision-making. The choice often falls to our family, a difficult choice, which becomes even more stressful if there has been no thought given to the subject ahead of time. Imagine being in a hospital, where you've just been informed that a family member is breathing but might be brain-dead. There's no chance of recovery. Suddenly you're posed the question of organ and tissue donation. As I mentioned before, it has to be a tough choice. Will you be saving a life by allowing it? But will you also be going against the wishes of your loved one? Will you be allowing someone on a waiting list to die or continue suffering by refusing?

Things would be much easier if we all made our final wishes known. Unfortunately, this is a subject that many people are hesitant to bring up. It is, quite frankly, something that we don't normally like to think about. Without a catalyst of some sort, without prompting, it's highly unlikely that the subjects of death and donation will work themselves into everyday conversation. People like to think of themselves as immortal. It's a simple fact. Consideration of final affairs is often not open for discussion because we think it applies only to other people. Thousands of people who are currently suffering, even dying, while waiting for a transplant are paying for this attitude. We need to encourage discussion on this subject.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, I think that this will be the most beneficial aspect of Bill 201. It will serve to open a dialogue between Albertans. It will get them talking. It will plant the seed in their minds that a decision regarding organ and tissue donation is best made now rather than later. I especially like the way this issue is addressed by the bill in a nonforceful and informational fashion. We all know what happens when a topic is introduced too forcefully. There is normally a backlash. Whether from a telemarketer or a car salesman, it's quite basic human nature to reject anything that is shoved down our throats.

Bill 201 takes a more subtle approach to raising awareness, that I believe will be very effective in spreading the message to all Albertans. One measure proposed by the bill is to have the Minister of Health and Wellness investigate the inclusion of a letter that will be added every time an Albertan is issued an Alberta health care card or invoice. Such a letter would explain the organ and tissue donation process, urge Albertans to discuss organ and tissue donation with their families, and have a form attached that they could fill out if they decide to donate. This idea is a good means of broaching the subject of organ and tissue donation. Receiving a health care card or invoice would put the recipient in the proper frame of mind to consider important health choices. It might also serve as the much-needed catalyst to prompt a decision being made.

I think that most people, especially those with families, that see a request to consider organ and tissue donation included with their health information will no doubt consider the two in light of each other. The inclusion of a letter will illustrate the importance of making a decision regarding organ donation and put it in perspective. It will show that this decision is an important health care choice and make people realize that they have the potential to positively affect the lives of those in need.

Another method for increasing awareness that might be considered is an inquiry posed by the Alberta Registries agents when a driver's licence is renewed. Albertans could be asked to consider the question of organ and tissue donation when they renew their drivers' licences every five years. This is another unique and beneficial opportunity to increase awareness. It takes advantage of an appropriate time to bring up the subject of donation. Renewing an operator's licence, while it might seem to be a rather mundane activity on the surface, is actually a fairly significant procedure. A driver's licence shows that its holder is capable of operating a motor vehicle that is probably driven virtually daily.

Motor vehicle accidents take a terrible toll in Alberta. Every day, statistically speaking, one Albertan will die, over 70 will be injured, and over 300 will experience some sort of collision on our province's roads. These are sobering facts, and they are facts that might be a little closer to the front of someone's mind as they navigate the legal requirements for driving.

How does this relate to organ and tissue donation? As I said before, I believe one of the biggest obstacles to opening a dialogue, Mr. Speaker, on donation is the commonly held perception of immortality. The age-old "I'm not going to die any time soon, so this doesn't apply to me" belief is a huge barrier to discussion. In a climate of silence it is easier to hear a pin drop. Once we begin to overcome the initial reluctance to talk about these matters, I believe that there will be a groundswell of general discussion and a more open and frank atmosphere of discussion. The end result will be a dramatic increase in donation rates and an increase in the quality of life for those who are so desperately in need of organs and tissues.

This increased dialogue and level of social awareness would be enhanced by another idea proposed by the bill: asking the minister to consider the creation of an online donor registry. This idea would serve to add legitimacy to the concept of consenting as the wishes of an individual would be recorded in a concrete and permanent fashion. As people begin to give more serious consideration to donating their organs and tissues, they will want assurances to guarantee that their wishes are also known. A signed card carried in the wallet is an indication of consent, but I'm sure that many people worry about the very real possibility that this card may be separated from them in the event of an accident and that their wishes to become an organ donor would go unfulfilled. Measures like the consideration of an online registry that records the wishes of potential organ donors in much the same fashion as we record vital statistics and other such data would go a long way to answering these concerns. It could also be a vital tool in increasing the donation rate due to the assurance it would offer that wishes would be followed.

In general, the ideas suggested in the dialogue opened by Bill 201 will be vital in increasing awareness of organ donation amongst Albertans. Even discussing this bill as we are doing now is increasing awareness. Every small bit helps. For this reason alone, this bill has great potential to increase the donations to an acceptable level. As long as there is a need, as long as there are people suffering as they wait for a donor to become available, we have not met our objectives. This bill is a vital first step towards alleviating the pain of these people.

By opening a dialogue and making information available to Albertans, by breaking down social barriers that prevent discussion on the subject, we will increase the quality of life for countless people. By enabling a consideration of the establishment of an orderly system of recording the wishes of potential organ donors, we can increase that potential to eliminate doubt and provide peace of mind for individuals and families. Fewer Albertans would be forced to make agonizing choices on behalf of their loved ones. Fewer Albertans would be forced to live with the doubt that follows such a decision.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, this bill will go a long way towards injecting a measure of clarity into the present situation, which can be somewhat confusing and quite indistinct at times. Albertans on all sides of the donation issue will benefit from the general increase in awareness and improved record keeping. For these reasons, I'm very, very pleased to give this bill my enthusiastic support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to make a few comments on Bill 201, Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. There's been, of course, long discussion amongst medical ethicists about this issue, so we are joining the discussion after some 30 years of looking at the whole issue of transplantation of organs and tissue gifts. Out of that discussion some have suggested, because of the huge need for tissue and for organs, that the removal of organs necessary to help people survive should be routine, and then people should be put in a position where if they don't want their bodies to be used for body parts harvesting for others, they should opt out in advance or veto in advance. Now, I'm totally against that kind of approach, and I'm glad that this bill focuses on the issue of consent. We're not in Siberia. Maybe I've seen a lot of science fiction movies, maybe too many, where we have the image of all kinds of bodies being kept alive for body parts in the future.

Actually, there is a real issue here about the definition of death. I think that over the years we've come to accept that the definition of death has to do with brain death, but you can keep a body alive hooked up to machines even after brain death has been determined. That puts that person in a very interesting status. I don't know what that status is.

An Hon. Member: Purgatory.

Dr. B. Miller: Purgatory. Right.

I think the issue of consent is really important, that a person be able to say in advance whether they want to donate their body for body parts or not.

One of the key moral questions is: to whom do body parts belong after you have died? To the state? Or do you still have some sort of connection to them? My definition of a human person is that a human person is an embodied person, so it's not the case that a person is a soul with a body that's attached; rather, the body is essential to one's identity. If a body is to be made available, it must be as a gift, so the person at some point in their life must be able to decide that they're going to donate their body. It must always be a question of giving, not the taking of body parts. Our language sometimes moves away from the notion of giving to the taking of body parts or the harvesting of body parts. Consent is really important, so I'm glad that this bill focuses on consent, asking people what they think.

I have real problems with the focus on going to a dying person for consent. I mean, the decision about donating your body should be made much, much earlier, and the suggestions about the use of drivers' licences or health cards is really important. When you come to the end of your life, it's enough that you have to be able to deal with your own pain and your own suffering and your own death, and that's extremely important.

There's a famous book – it's a classic – that was written by Leo Tolstoy called The Death of Ivan Ilych, which actually was published in the 19th century. It depicts the stages of death that people go through. Elisabeth Kübler Ross in recent years outlined those stages: rejection, anger, and finally acceptance. That book brings it out quite vividly. When you come to the end, you have to face all kinds of issues about your own pain and your own death. Most of the time that takes place in a hospital, and you're surrounded by professionals, and maybe you're hooked up to machines. In the midst of that somebody is going to come in and ask you for consent about your body after you've died. I mean, there are all kinds of problems with that.

I realize that there's a great need for more bodies, cadavers, being available, but to intrude at that point on a person's freedom to be able to deal with their own pain and their own suffering and their own death and ask them about – well, as one commentator puts it, it's a ghoulish request, and I think that it doesn't show a lot of sensitivity. So I have problems with that.

Also, the issue of relatives. If a person is not able to give consent as they are dying, then maybe relatives can give consent. I think there are some problems with that. I mean, surveys indicate – and this is an interesting one – that more people are willing to donate their relatives' organs than their own. That raises the issue of, well, the person having a kind of autonomy in giving their consent. I don't know if the relatives' consent is equal to the individual being able to give the consent themselves. So I have some problems with that. I think that the emphasis on asking the dying person for consent is, of course, way too late.

All of the emphasis should be on trying to strengthen the programs that raise awareness, as has been mentioned, and to also look at the use of health care cards and drivers' licences, to intervene when people actually have to get a particular licence and then be asked a question. Maybe we should have a required request of persons about whether they're willing to consent or not. For example, the question could be asked: are you willing to donate your organs after your death? The person could answer on the card yes or no or I don't know, and the I don't know should be respected.

One other point that I wanted to make which I thought was very good. I mean, we're dealing with a serious moral issue here about the nature of death. I like the proviso in terms of talking to people about their consent, that their religious beliefs would be acknowledged and recognized, because a lot of people have very definite religious beliefs about their death and about their bodies. I think that there is a kind of sacred aura that surrounds one's body. So that sacred aura has to be acknowledged, and that many people have specific religious beliefs that would lead them to refuse to sign a donor card has to be recognized. It means that it puts a lot of onus on those people who are going to go in and talk to dying people to seek their consent, that they have to have some sort of knowledge about the various religions and be sensitive about where a person is coming from in terms of their religious belief.

Those are the only comments I have, so in general I approve the principle and the direction of this bill, but I just have a few problems about how the issue of consent is handled. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate today on Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-West. I believe that this bill addresses some very important issues that we as a society are faced with. This bill promotes a model of organ and tissue donation that respects the rights of families dealing with the tragic loss of a loved one while acknowledging the gift of life that donated organs and tissues can provide.

The decision to donate organs and tissues is not a decision that should be made lightly. Research has shown us that one of the contributing factors as to the willingness of families to donate a loved one's organs and tissues is the manner in which they are approached. Mr. Speaker, if you can imagine a situation where a young woman has just been informed by a doctor that she is now a widow and will have to raise the couple's children on her own, it's very difficult for that same doctor to then approach the young lady and discuss the possibility of organ donation. Immediately following the loss of a loved one your thoughts are about them and what you need to do to help them, not necessarily on helping others.

Mr. Speaker, despite the best intentions of the attending physician they're placed in a very tenuous position. It's very hard to express sympathy for a family's loss while at the same time mentioning that the recently deceased person's organs would be of great benefit to others. It's hard for some families to believe that everything possible has been done to save their loved one while being told that their loved one's organs are being greatly needed to save several other lives. I believe that doctors may be too attached to the grief or loss to be able to effectively encourage the gift side of the organ and tissue donation equation.

As I mentioned earlier, how a family is approached is very important. An important component of how you are approached is who's approaching you. There are many things that I would do if my wife asked me to but would not do if someone else asked me. That's why I feel that Bill 201 is very important. The mandatory referral process outlined in Bill 201 I believe will help to ensure that people are approached professionally and that doctors are freed from the double burden of talking to a family about the loss and the potential organ donation.

Mr. Speaker, under Bill 201 when a patient dies or when death is imminent, the hospital would be responsible for contacting the human tissue gift agency and providing them with all of the patient's relevant medical information. After receiving the necessary medical information, the agency is responsible for determining whether or not the dying or recently deceased individual is an eligible donor. If the patient is an eligible donor, then the professionals at the agency, who are specifically trained to approach families in a respectful and considerate manner, will contact the family members. Professionals from the agency have the advantage of being at arm's length from the process. They do not have an emotional attachment to the situation. They're not associated with the loss side of the organ donation equation. They're well-trained professionals who will approach people in a manner which will likely increase organ and tissue donation.

Mr. Speaker, some critics have argued that creating a mandatory referral process for organ donation creates ethical concerns. These critics are worried that by reporting imminent deaths, doctors will alter their treatment of patients in order to secure their organs for transplant. Potential critics are worried that patients with a poor but not hopeless prognosis will undergo invasive and potentially painful procedures for the sole purpose of prolonging the patient's life for the purpose of organ donation.

Although I understand the reasons behind this concern with Bill 201, I do not believe that the mandatory referral process will create an ethical dilemma. The mandatory referral process allows the doctors to remain neutral in the organ donation process. Mr. Speaker, under the current system doctors are first and foremost charged with the responsibility of looking after the best interests of their patients. The new system proposed in Bill 201 ensures that the doctors' role of protecting the best interests of their patients is protected and enhanced. No longer is it the doctor who is responsible for talking to the family about organ donation. In the mandatory referral process the doctor makes a call to the human tissue gift agency. After making the call, the doctor's role in the organ donation process is complete. The doctor can now return to treating the patient in a manner that best reflects the interests of the patient and the patient's family.

I do not accept the argument that the mandatory referral process will change the type of medical treatment that a doctor provides his patient. Under the proposed system doctors are not directly involved in the organ donation decision. They are responsible first and foremost for the patient currently in their care. The only responsibility they have to the system is a phone call to a 1-800 number. The new system clearly enhances a doctor's ability to help their patient by ensuring that they represent the patient and the patient's family and their desires during the end of life.

Mr. Speaker, another criticism that has been raised relates to rural Alberta. Concerns have been raised that rural Alberta lacks the facilities to handle donations. That may very well be the case currently, but we can't forget that one of the primary goals of Bill 201 is to increase organ and tissue donation in our province. As organ and tissue donations increase, I believe that the capacity to collect donations possessed by the human gift agencies will also expand. If this government is committed to rural development, as part of rural development it is important that necessary health services are available to Albertans in all regions of the province. It's important that we don't overlook rural Alberta in our attempt to increase organ and tissue donation. Approximately one-third of Albertans live outside of the Calgary and capital regions. In our efforts to increase organ and tissue donation levels, I believe we'd be in error by automatically excluding rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not naive enough to assume that the necessary facilities for major organ donation will be available in every community; however, tissue donations do not require the same level of sophistication and could therefore more easily be accomplished in smaller more rural centres. Additionally, I do not believe that rural Alberta would have that many referrals to a human gift agency. I'm under the impression that most current referrals come from Calgary and Edmonton. Most cases of brain death end up occurring in the province's two major health regions because the most critical patients are transferred there from rural areas. I believe that most often direct referrals that come from rural Alberta physicians would be in regard to tissue donations. Building the capacity for tissue donations is much easier than building capacity for organ donation.

Mr. Speaker, a final concern with Bill 201 that has been noted relates to privacy. This bill does not require the sharing of personal health information between the hospitals and the tissue agencies. Any time that we're talking about someone's personal health information, even in death, it is important to ensure that this information is not used inappropriately. I believe that the information that will be shared under Bill 201 is not excessive, nor is it unjustifiable. The only information that will be shared is information that is pertinent to the potential donation. Use of this information is severely restricted and subject to our province's excellent privacy laws.

At the same time, I believe that the use of the personal information is also justifiable. We permit medical practitioners to share health information about their patients when the sharing of the information is in the best interests of the general public. This process is followed with several venereal and communicable diseases. The sharing of the medical information pertinent to organ donation, I believe, will help to save the lives of many Albertans. It is for this reason that I believe that the sharing of personal health information as proposed in Bill 201 is appropriate.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that I believe this bill is one of the more important pieces of legislation that we will be asked to deal with this year. This legislation is necessary to help ensure the continuing health and well-being of Albertans. I believe that the mandatory referral system will increase organ donation and help to ensure that Alberta's health care system remains among the best in the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. I listened with interest to hon. members who spoke previously. Certainly, this is an issue that is sensitive to many people regardless of their religious views or their particular circumstances, and one has to be respectful of that. This bill, as I understand it, will certainly establish a systematic way of considering potential donors and approaching families of potential donors for consent, and how that consent is given or granted is very important.

Mr. Speaker, before I go any further, I think now would be an appropriate time to thank you and your office for providing to me and, I assume, to every other member information in regard to private members' public bills given royal assent between 1993 and 2005 as of December 1, 2005. I was looking at this one evening last week, and I was astonished to . . . [interjection] I'm sorry, hon. member? [interjection] Pardon me?

The Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, yes. Certainly, there's not one of the bills that I proposed on this list, but interestingly enough, for the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, there's one from 1998, the Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who is currently the hon. Minister of Children's Services. This bill, according to the document that I received from the Speaker's office, requires hospitals to establish policies and procedures governing the donation and transplant of human tissue, and this bill, according to what I received, is still awaiting proclamation.

During the course of the debate on Bill 201 I would appreciate an explanation from the hon. member who initially brought this bill before the House in 1998 as to why this never received proclamation. Certainly, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is absolutely correct when he indicates that this is an issue of importance, and it should be dealt with. So through the course of debate, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful for an explanation as to why this bill in 1998 was never proclaimed.

This bill, as I understand it, formalizes, again, a procedure requiring an agency to request consent for organ and tissue donation from an individual or family. We have to be very, very careful, Mr. Speaker, because we know that medical procedures and techniques are changing all the time while we debate this bill and, I'm certain, while this bill was being drafted. There is the case in France where a woman was mauled or disfigured by a dog, and she had part of her face removed and a transplant done. That certainly attracted a lot of media attention. We've seen in the last week a young man from Winnipeg, I believe, who was just days old and received a heart transplant. So the procedures are really becoming very advanced.

Hopefully, if we were to pass a bill like this, we wouldn't wait seven years for proclamation like the last time, but we would act on this. We always have to be very careful, Mr. Speaker, with these new, developing technologies that body parts or organs don't become a commodity. This, unfortunately, has happened in other parts of the world. There are certainly cases where there has been exploitation of people with modest or no income who are looking at ways to support their family, where they sell a kidney. There are some areas of the world where this happens. There are some other areas of the world where people are kidnapped. They wake up, and there have been examples where a kidney, again, has been removed without anyone's consent. These individuals consider themselves lucky to still be alive.

So, certainly, we must ensure that those sorts of practices never, never occur here because, as previous speakers have indicated, it is a moral issue. We need to ensure, as we encourage people and families in very difficult times, that that is an option that they may wish to exercise; that is, to donate an organ or a body part to assist someone else.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, if it was to be passed and to become law, may help someone in the future. I'm not going to give a long list of the transplant procedures that are available or the waiting list that is occurring at this time in this province. Other speakers have certainly outlined that.

In conclusion, we have to be very, very careful about this. We do not want any human tissue to become a commodity. It should be up to the individual and the individual's family members whether or not they want to participate in any way in donation of a human tissue or an organ. We will wait, and we will see how all this develops, but I am anxious to hear why the previous bill from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek never was proclaimed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, at approximately 5:15 I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-West to conclude the debate on this, but just to advise members, we have about 31 minutes, and there are six or seven members who have advised me they wish to participate. So I just provide that as a point of interest.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and join in the debate on Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. I'd like to begin my remarks by congratulating the Member for Calgary-West on bringing forward such an intriguing piece of legislation. I say intriguing because Bill 201 opens debate on a topic which is not generally discussed. Organ and tissue donation is an issue which should be discussed openly in our province. Admittedly, the topic is somewhat morbid; however, ignoring the inevitability of one's death is a ludicrous idea. After all, there are only two certainties in life: death and taxes. While the government has been working at reducing the second, I don't believe there's much chance that we can reduce the first.

Mr. Speaker, the death of any individual is a sorrowful event, and this sorrow is heightened when the individual was healthy and in the prime of their life. However, from such tragic circumstances comes the opportunity for another person to live out a long and healthy life. Organ and tissue donation brings a new lease on life for individuals suffering from a myriad of ailments. From heart problems to liver failure to blindness the donation of tissues and organs can greatly help another person. Sadly, our rate of donation is extremely low. I believe this to be a direct product of a lack of discussion and planning surrounding this issue. I can't believe it's anything other than an oversight on the part of Albertans to make their wishes known because we in this Chamber have the privilege of living in one of the most philanthropic provinces in the country.

Albertans give their time, energy, and expertise to a variety of causes as volunteers. In fact, over 50 per cent of us donate our time in some way, more than any other province in the country. Albertans have the third highest rate of charitable donations of any province in this country. Obviously, we are a province of people willing to help others. So why do we have such a low incidence of organ and tissue donation?

The only answer is a lack of awareness, and it is this lack of knowledge and awareness that Bill 201 addresses. It seeks to raise the awareness of Albertans of this issue and demonstrate the help that people can give. To be honest, I am one of the many Albertans who simply don't realize how much help they can give by addressing this issue with their family. Before this bill was brought to my attention, I wasn't aware of the difference between organ and tissue donation or the extent of the tissues which can be donated.

Bill 201 proposes simple measures which complement the programs currently in place to increase the rate of organ and tissue donation in our province. This is done by raising awareness in the public and by streamlining the process through which organ and tissue procurement and placement is achieved. Mr. Speaker, these are simple changes to our current system, but I believe that they have the opportunity to radically increase the level of donation in our province. The actions proposed would allow Alberta to catch up to the systems currently in place in other jurisdictions which helped them increase the rate of organ and tissue donation.

Now, in previous discussions there have been points raised that highlight obstacles which other jurisdictions have encountered when trying to implement new systems with respect to organ and tissue donation. In some instances these attempts in other jurisdictions have been held up as a reason to not implement change in our own system. I could not disagree more with this line of reasoning. Mr. Speaker, somebody somewhere has to be bold enough to be the first to attempt a new way of doing something, or systems and procedures become stagnant. This attempt may turn out to be a great success, and it may turn out to be a great disaster. However, the experiments of other jurisdictions provide us and others an opportunity to learn from the difficulties which they encountered and use that knowledge to ensure that we do not make the same mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago a jurisdiction sought to make changes to their organ and tissue procurement and placement program. The implementation of a more streamlined and comprehensive system to allow more citizens to register themselves for organ and tissue donation had the potential to increase donor rates. Unfortunately, this was not the result, and donation rates remained at the same level as before.

The failure of these changes to increase organ and tissue donation rates provides us with the opportunity to examine why this happened. It is my understanding that the changes to the system were not accompanied by an aggressive public information campaign to increase awareness of the issue. By not raising awareness, the majority of the public would not know that any changes had even taken place, let alone what those changes were.

Mr. Speaker, this is an issue which plagues every government across the country. How to get a message out is something which communications personnel deal with every day. Governments can issue press releases on a subject, but there's not a large percentage of the population who read a government press release. If the release is not picked up by the media, then there are very few members of the public who will be aware of any changes. One way to ensure that the public is made aware of a government initiative is to put together an advertising campaign. Through radio, television, and print media a government could then convey changes which affect people. However, the drawback to this is that it is costly. The measure suggested in Bill 201 to raise public awareness strikes a balance between the two extremes described above.

One possibility aimed at increasing awareness about organ and tissue donation is sending every Albertan an information letter. If Bill 201 is passed, the letter would potentially be sent to Albertans whenever they are issued an Alberta health care card or invoice. Additionally, this letter can be included in the Alberta driver's licence and Alberta vehicle registration renewal reminder notices.

If the sending of this letter comes to pass, it could explain the organ and tissue donation process, urge Albertans to discuss organ and tissue donation with their family, and have a form attached that Albertans could fill out if they decide to donate. The benefit of such a campaign is that there is time to have this program return results. It is not necessary that every Albertan instantly know about changes to the provincial organ and tissue procurement system. Also, by necessity, Alberta households would receive this letter several times on different dates if there is more than one person living in the household. This would provide more opportunities for discussion surrounding this issue and give families a greater number of opportunities to understand the wishes of their loved ones in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the public information section of Bill 201 will be the most beneficial in terms of raising the number of Albertans who choose to donate tissues and organs. I support the measures outlined in Bill 201 because it is necessary to raise awareness about organ and tissue donation in our province. Albertans are generous people, who are always more than willing to help out those in need. By raising awareness and understanding of the subject, I believe that we will see a marked increase in the number of Albertans who will take the time to fill out their organ donor cards and to make their wishes known to their families.

I would ask all members to stand with me in support of Bill 201, Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't realize I was up quite so quick, but I appreciate the time to stand up and to debate Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, as well. I've enjoyed the debate that has gone on so far and the many good points that have been brought forth. Because of the number of people that want to speak, I'll try and just speak to those issues that haven't been addressed yet.

I'd like to thank, though, the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this forward, and perhaps I'd like to start off by thanking the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for acting now and signing the back of his health care card. I've personally had two experiences in my own life back in the '70s and '80s concerning tissue and organ donation, so it's been near and dear to me for a long time and to many of those around me and my family. I hope that this awareness will go forward and that it will be a great benefit to Albertans.

I'd like to put a question, though, to the Member for Red Deer-North. I believe that not only taxes have been reduced in this province. Deaths have been reduced a great deal in the research that's been done through state-of-the-art facilities adopting new techniques and world-class research. Just today they're releasing some wonderful research from Calgary benefiting diabetics, being able to do tissue transplants into the liver in order for those with diabetes to be able to start producing insulin again. It's very encouraging.

One of the areas that I really would like to bring into the debate, though, is the question of the donor card, and there's been much debate about that already. The province just recently put out $400 cheques to every Albertan, and that was graciously received by almost every Albertan that I'm aware of. The problem is that we spent over $10 million to distribute that, and there have been some sad cases, as we all know, of those who were wrongful recipients.

I would like to address the fact that perhaps with this Bill 201 and an ID card here in the province – and we know that they're talking about it in order to go through the States and to travel – we should maybe be putting some money towards a good ID program and that when people do receive their ID card, it is on there, and it is a question. One of the biggest problems that we have is awareness and the knowledge that this is wonderful and great and . . .

Rev. Abbott: Socialism.

Mr. Hinman: Socialism?

Well, if we have the ID cards, let's have it so that the question is on there. If my memory serves me, originally I signed my driver's licence and then a health care card. Now, what are we going to do in the future? Because of the problems in the health care system and the fact that we don't even know who has the health care cards, perhaps this is the time to look at changing and updating those and having an ID card that would serve the interests of all Albertans and help us to identify and reduce the fraud that's going on in the health care system at this current time.

Going back to reducing death or reducing taxes, it seems like the only excuse for reducing taxes is if this government is taking two steps forward and then half a step back. So I would, like I say, question the Member for Red Deer-North.

I am very much in favour of this bill and the intent of it. I appreciate the debate that assumed consent is not what we want, though it is being debated in other jurisdictions. I also agree with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in that we want to make sure that this does not get into the money side and the business side of it. This is giving, as we do with blood here in the province.

In closing, I just hope that this bill will not only pass here in the House but will also receive royal assent. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be given the opportunity to join in the discussion on the human tissue gift amendment act. I support Bill 201 because I believe it will lead to greater numbers of organ and tissue donations by Albertans, therefore enhancing the quality of life for those waiting for organ or tissue transplants. This will be achieved mainly due to the bill's focus on enhancing people's awareness through debate and giving Albertans the opportunity to identify themselves as possible future donors.

Additionally, when a person passes away, Bill 201 proposes that all hospitals be required to notify the human gift tissue agencies, thus helping to enhance organ and tissue donation rates. This process would be referred to as the mandatory referral.

In the United States several states have already legislated such a process, known as the routine notification. In accordance with this act all hospital deaths or impending deaths must be reported to local organ procurement organizations, or OPOs, by hospital staff. Many hospitals in other states chose to participate in the system of routine notification even though it is not part of the states' laws. States where routine notification practices are in place, whether legislated or used voluntarily, have seen increases in donations. For example, in Pennsylvania they have seen great increases in the number of tissue and organ donations since new donation laws were instituted in 1994. In the United States as a whole 50 states and the District of Columbia have chosen to legislate a process known as required request. This system requires hospitals to discuss donations with families once a doctor has diagnosed a patient as having brain death.

Many states have also looked at the idea of the mandated choice. This allows individuals to actually express their wishes regarding organ and tissue donation on paper while they're still living. Several states use the driver's licence renewal as the time to have people document their wishes. These programs have helped the United States increase the number of organ and tissue donations. Canadians have approximately 14 organ donors for every million people, whereas countries such as the United States, Spain, and Portugal have somewhere between 20 and 32 for every million people.

Here in Alberta in 2003, Mr. Speaker, there were approximately 12 organ donors per million people. These numbers indicate quite a significant difference in the number of donors in this province and the country as a whole compared to other countries with more successful programs for organ donation. Bill 201 hopes to improve Alberta's donation rates by implementing a system of mandatory referral. Mandatory referral would help to enhance donations within the province of tissues that one is able to donate, including eyes, cartilage, and tendons, just to name a few.

In the United States about 1 million tissue transplants are done annually. Here at home our rates are not nearly so good. In Alberta in 2003 there were approximately 19,000 deaths, resulting in only 91 tissue donors. This gives you some idea of how far behind we are in encouraging individuals to consider tissue donation and instituting effective programs to ensure that this occurs.

As Albertans we need to be concerned not only with how low tissue donation rates are, but also, as a result of these low rates, we are often required to buy tissues from the United States to address these shortages. This is quite costly, Mr. Speaker. Not only is it costly, but there have been many problems with these tissues in the past. For example, in January there were several reports of a New Jersey company who had not obtained the needed consent to remove tissues from those who had passed. These tissues were sold to Alberta facilities and given to Albertans who were waiting for tissue transplants. This case is quite frightening, and I believe that if we were able to get more tissue donors here at home, we would be more certain that these tissues were properly obtained and safe for recipients.

Transplants can also be cost-effective in certain cases, such as kidney transplants. Mr. Speaker, it costs approximately $50,000 per year to have a person on dialysis. A kidney transplant costs around $25,000 for the initial surgery and somewhere around $6,000 per year following the transplant. Thus, kidney transplants are less expensive and generally improve the quality of life for the recipient.

Like the United States, Canadian provinces have also passed legislation to help improve donation rates and, although they are fairly new programs, are experiencing a good deal of success. In Ontario routine notification and requests have recently been legislated. All deaths in hospitals or inevitable deaths due to brain death must be reported to the Trillium Gift of Life Network, as legislated under the Trillium Gift of Life Network Act. The network is responsible for deciding whether or not to approach the family of a deceased individual to discuss donation. They are also responsible for co-ordinating donations in general. Although this program only began this year, it is based on a pilot concluded during the summer of 2005. This pilot program included seven hospitals, and the results of the trial were a 26 per cent increase in tissue and organ donation.

Manitoba has a similar system to ensure that those in need of donations receive them. Under the Human Tissue Gift Act hospitals are required to notify one of the human tissue gift agencies whenever the death of a patient is imminent, when a patient dies, or when the body of a deceased person is delivered to the facility. Once an agency has been notified, it is up to them to determine whether or not to approach the family regarding organ or tissue donation. This particular piece of legislation allows the agencies as a group to determine the amount of notification time to be given by hospitals to the agencies and which agency is to be given notice.

Therefore, although it is still early, Ontario and Manitoba are two Canadian jurisdictions where new legislation on organ and tissue donation appears to be working quite effectively.

Looking at these two examples and numerous states which have legislated either routine notification or require request, one can see that action of this type may be helpful in this province as well. Creating a dialogue to increase donation is a key aspect of this bill. If we can raise Albertans' awareness of the need for organ and tissue donations, we will hopefully be able to greatly improve the number of tissues and organs donated in this province and thus save and improve the lives of Albertans waiting for transplants.

I support Bill 201, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that the bill does not go quite far enough. This is a step in the right direction, but we need to do more to address the challenges of increasing organ and tissue donation.

Thank you very much for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have approximately 10 minutes left, and there are three speakers on the list. We'll go to the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. The subject this bill deals with is a difficult one for most people. Death is a topic that most people find rather hard to think about, especially when it involves themselves or a loved one. Death is a natural and inevitable part of life. It is something that everyone will have to face at some point. We can't avoid it. We can only hope for a long, healthy, and productive life.

For some of us, Mr. Speaker, this wish is granted, but for others it unfortunately is not. There are far too many people that because of accident or disease pass away too soon. There are far too many more that suffer terribly and needlessly because of medical problems that can be cured with donated organs or tissues. As we speak, there are Albertans who face the same situation of uncertainty. They wait and wait, often in an increasing state of pain and discomfort, for a donor to become available. For some the wait is too long, and another family has to bear the pain of a preventable loss.

Some losses are not preventable. This is also a fact of life. Sometimes our loved ones are taken away from us suddenly and without warning in the prime of their lives, and there is nothing we can do to stop it. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are no guarantees for any of us. Sometimes there is nothing we can do to prevent death. Sometimes there is, however. Even in death there is the potential to give the gift of life, to ease the pain and suffering for someone on a transplant list and give hope back to their family. This is what Bill 201 is about: hope. For every Albertan who makes their wishes about organ donation known, there are a multitude who do not. This bill will be a vital tool in improving these figures. It will be an effective instrument to tap the natural generosity of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, one function of Bill 201 will be to open a dialogue amongst Alberta families. It will get them talking about organ and tissue donation, and with any luck we will see a dramatic increase in the number of people who address the subject and provide their consent before it is too late. Perhaps more importantly, however, Bill 201 will simplify the donation procedure by establishing a clear and distinct process for a doctor to initiate when an individual becomes a candidate for organ or tissue donation. Speed and efficiency are key in the donation procedure. The more quickly the process occurs, the more likely it is to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, what Bill 201 proposes is a single-point initiation approach, meaning that a physician would only need to make one phone call to put the procedure in motion.

Mr. Speaker, doctors have an incredible wealth of knowledge about a staggering variety of issues, but their primary focus is on treatment of patients and diseases. There are organizations such as the human organ procurement and exchange, that specializes in organ and tissue donation. As it is their primary focus, they are the ones that are equipped to efficiently, respectfully, and effectively deal with the donation process.

Mr. Speaker, under the system proposed by Bill 201, a hospital would be required to notify a human tissue agency when a patient dies or when death is imminent or inevitable or when the hospital receives the body of a deceased person. By making this contact a requirement, fewer opportunities for donation will be missed. Once a human tissue gift agency is contacted, a detailed assessment of the suitability of a donor would commence. The wishes of the individual in question would be examined. If the donor had previously given consent, the agency would determine this fact. If the patient is deemed medically suitable to be an organ or tissue donor, the harvesting process would begin.

Consultation, Mr. Speaker, between the agency and physicians would ensure that all medical requirements were met. In short, a greater degree of efficiency and co-operation would result. The involvement of an agency in cases where consent had not previously been obtained would also be valuable in dealing with the family members of potential donors.

Mr. Speaker, asking a family to give consent to organ and tissue donation immediately after learning that their loved one is either deceased or about to die is a hard and horrible process. At the worst time in their lives they are being faced with a decision that may have received no prior thought or consultation. People from these agencies are trained professionals. They are trained and qualified to broach the subject of organ and tissue donation in a respectful yet encouraging manner. Furthermore, they are extremely knowledgeable and able to answer any questions the family might have. A general lack of awareness is one of the root causes of low donation rates, so it is only natural that a professional with a high degree of knowledge should be present to give the information.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that this lack of knowledge is a major factor in most decisions that are made against organ and tissue donation. People are inclined by nature to reject a process they don't understand. It is basic human nature. This is why it is vital to have these answers readily available when the situation presents itself. Families need to be aware of the importance of their decisions. They need to know exactly how their choice will affect the lives of those who are waiting on a transplant list. The choice will always be a difficult one, but the presence and guidance of a professional will ensure that making it becomes easier. If the guidance results in one new set of lungs for a person struggling to breathe or the gift of sight to one person who is waiting for a cornea, it will be well worth the effort.

Aside from providing information and counselling services to families, the measures proposed by Bill 201 will increase organ and tissue donation rates by introducing an increased level of co-operation and efficiency into what can be at times a very confusing system. Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 will authorize and require hospitals to co-operate with agencies and share information about patient suitability. Furthermore, it would enable agencies to establish requirements to contact one another to maximize the potential amount of donations from a patient when appropriate. This level of communication and co-operation will greatly streamline the entire procedure. Bill 201 will not only enable the process to be started with a single contact; it will allow that contact to set in motion a process of highly co-ordinated interagency co-operation. The end result will be a maximized level of efficiency and a maximized increase in the quality of life for Albertans.

Everyone in the province is grateful for the prosperity we enjoy. Alberta is a place that presents its citizens with the best opportunities available anywhere. We have the best job market, the best economy, and the best record of leading the country in innovation. It is high time that our policies on organ and tissue donation caught up to this trend. Right now we are far from leading the country in donations, and Albertans are suffering, families are suffering, and children are suffering. Our current legislation, the Human Tissue Gift Act, dates back to 1973, 33 years ago. The world was a different place, technology was different, society was different, and medicine was different. It is high time we updated that legislation. It is time we join provinces like Manitoba and Ontario who have systems in place that are similar to those proposed by Bill 201. In short, Mr. Speaker, it's time we gave organ and tissue donation a shot in the arm.

When considering the benefits of this bill, I am thinking of every Albertan who is waiting and hoping for a donated organ or donated tissue. I am thinking of their families. I'm thinking of their children. I'm thinking that with this legislation we have a great opportunity to ease their pain because easing the pain and suffering that accompany a desperate situation should be the ultimate goal of organ and tissue donation.

Mr. Speaker, on that note, I would like to offer a few words of caution. While I am in favour of the principles of this bill and I believe that it represents a tremendous step for those in life-threatening or grave situations, I believe we also must discuss measures that would ensure that donated tissues are not used for procedures that are cosmetic in nature.

With Bill 201, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we can encourage the generosity of Albertans and make it easier for them to give the gift of life. In supporting this bill we have much to gain, and I encourage all my colleagues to vote on this. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many of the more than 500 Albertans awaiting a transplant in this province this is truly a matter of life and death. Citing statistics from the Canadian Institute for Health Information, in 2004 forty-two Albertans died waiting for a transplant. Even more discouraging is the fact that five of these individuals were young children. For others an organ transplant can mean a much improved quality of life, freeing many from long and stressful and costly ongoing treatments such as dialysis.

I note the remarks of the hon. Member for Calgary-West regarding the possibility of having some sort of notation on the driver's licence card. I believe this is a useful suggestion. With such a notation the family of the deceased person could see the wishes of the deceased person on the driver's licence and they're much more likely to understand the wishes of their loved ones.

The purpose of the bill is to create awareness about Alberta's organ and tissue donation. I believe the act will increase organ and tissue donation rates within the province, and I ask all hon. members to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the one minute that is left, I would quite simply say that I am in full support of this bill. This is a bill that I actually looked at in 1994, when I was a private member as well. At that particular point in time and that particular point in history, the whole idea of potential presumed consent was something that was a nonstarter.

I really commend the hon. member for bringing in presumed consent with a caveat, which, in essence, is a caveat that the next of kin can say yes or no, and I think that overall it's going to be wonderful.

I'd love to talk more on it, but quite simply, Mr. Speaker, what we have the potential for here, and to coin a couple of cliches, I know, is that we can give a gift of life out of the tragedy of death.

The Speaker: Well, I think, hon. members, that everyone on the list has had a chance to participate, so I'll invite the hon. Member for Calgary-West now to close the debate.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much. Thanks to all members who participated in the debate today. I'm glad that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation had a chance to make a couple of comments because his experience as a medical doctor is important.

There were several questions raised during the debate. A couple are very easy to answer. One was: what are the goals of this legislation? Clearly, there's only one goal, and that would be that no one dies waiting for an organ donation.

There were other comments made relative to the privacy laws. We have checked with the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and they find no problems with the particular legislation.

I guess the final comment, Mr. Speaker, would be that I can't comment on why previous initiatives weren't successful. However, if one looks at page 6 of the legislation, this act comes into effect on January 1, 2007, if passed.

With that, I would just like to again thank everyone. I'd move second reading of the bill, and that concludes my remarks.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, February 27, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/02/27

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

High-speed Rail System

501. Mr. Backs moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to develop an electric high-speed rail system by 2012 with a route that would include Edmonton city centre, Edmonton International Airport, Calgary International Airport, and Calgary city centre.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes it is time to dream, and other times it is necessary to act, to do something to create new beginnings. If we do not act soon on high-speed rail, many of Alberta's options will begin to disappear and potential costs will increase dramatically. This will be especially true as the land for right-of-way along possible routes is developed for other uses. It costs much more to buy when it is built up.

If we are to even adequately plan for a better Alberta, we must move on high-speed rail soon. So often this Conservative government of our province fails to look ahead, fails to plan, and fails to act when opportunities arise. Timidity and lack of vision should not be the words that are used to describe the government of the province of our Alberta.

High-speed rail has been killed many times. Big interests have opposed high-speed rail in the past. It does not fit the auto, oil, and highway ethos that dominated the second half of the 20th century in Alberta, but it isn't the 20th century anymore. High-speed rail has been around for many years and has proven very successful in many parts of the world, but government in Alberta has thrown all the public dollars into highways and airports. There has been little to no support for the passenger rail service that actually dominated our province here a century ago.

If you go to much of Europe and Asia and even the United States, you see modern rail service. You see high-speed rail service that is a key part of healthy economies and integral to economic development. We have reached the population levels in Alberta that can justify such a population link. It is vital for the economic health of our Alberta that we take our responsibility here seriously. This is not an exercise in picking winners like Alberta endured when an earlier Tory regime bungled diversification attempts in the 1980s. Rail development is an investment in transportation infrastructure. It is an investment in growth, and it is clearly an investment in economic development and the future.

It should be obvious that high-speed rail cannot be viewed as a stand-alone business that will be developed aside and apart from the public interest. Why do we continue to subsidize highways if this is the case? Why do we consider LRT to be a public good? There will be a need for government commitment and investment in the future public interest of all Albertans. High-speed rail will need a commitment of public dollars, but these investments will save government expenditures in other areas.

Clean air and reduced emissions are now worth something. Certainly, an electric high-speed rail system will be much cleaner environmentally than the hundreds of thousands of cars belching out pollutants as they head between and in our cities. Wouldn't it be nice to remove that choking brown haze that so often envelopes Calgary and sometimes Edmonton? The lack of air pollution is a clear public good created by electric rail transportation.

We'll pave less of our prime Alberta farmland. High-speed rail will save a hyperwidening of the QE II highway and other roads. If we can save a good portion of the costs of increasing capacity on that highway alone, we could save billions that would have had to have been spent by the public purse. We'll save in maintenance. Highway expansion and upkeep is not cheap in a cold climate. Remember that steel rails don't grow potholes.

With high-speed rail Alberta will save in health care costs. In 2004 there were 24,289 injured and 387 people killed in traffic accidents in Alberta. A lot of people get injured and killed on our highways, but it's big news around the world when there are people hurt or killed in a train accident that doesn't involve cars. These accidents occur rarely. Modern train systems are safe.

We will also save in simply having less lost travel time. Just think of it: a downtown to downtown trip in 83 minutes. That's less time than you need for security at the airports. Such short, convenient trips will increase economic activity, will better integrate the Alberta economy on its north-south axis, and will unite Alberta more as a single economic unit. This in the end would create more traffic for both airports in the cities. The Edmonton International should not fear and perhaps could become a stronger, alternative air hub as Arctic and cross-polar flights increase.

One of the best reasons to build high-speed rail is the labour market. We will further integrate the Alberta labour market by making it much easier to make weekly commutes to the burgeoning petrochemical upgrader developments near Edmonton, which will need southern Alberta labour. Indeed, that could be the first spur expansion before we look to expanding to Fort McMurray and Lethbridge, and to look forward to the construction phase, which won't happen for a few years, we must anticipate a likely downturn in the labour market. The conventional oil patch will cool down after it is saturated with wells everywhere in a couple of years. There are hundreds of thousands of workers dependent on that conventional oil patch. That is driving 80 per cent of the activity right now. Most of these workers will not be taken up in the less labour-intensive oil sands. Most long-term Albertans like me remember that booms don't last forever. When the construction will start looks to be a great time to build high-speed rail.

I know that the government will be undertaking a ridership study, and I hope that study will not be hijacked by vested interests preferring the status quo. There will be plenty of increased activity for airlines and buses if this rail link is completed. Any study must factor in all the increased traffic that will be created, not just the division of the existing pie. If you build it, they will ride.

Alberta is the best place in the world to live. We don't have tsunamis, we don't have hurricanes, we don't have earthquakes, and we hardly have winter anymore, yet we still have some of the best skiing anywhere and other outdoor opportunities from the badlands to the Rockies to the northern boreal forest to the Cypress Hills to the prairies. We are quickly growing world class in unique cultural opportunities. We have so much.

We must build on our new economies of scale. We must take advantage of this clear opportunity that presents itself to us. Alberta is worth it. We must create the proper transportation links between our twin cities. We must not only prove Alberta's greatness but even improve upon it. There is a great future for our Alberta, and we must look to building it now. We have just seen the success of our Canadian and Alberta athletes in Italy. A Summer Olympics bid would not be far behind the completion of a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary.

I urge this Assembly and the government to move quickly on high-speed rail. Please make it so. Don't miss the opportunity. Please make sure it is built this time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the next speaker, I would just like to point out that if we could show some respect for people who have the floor and keep the side conversations down, the Speaker would really appreciate that tonight.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to rise to speak to Motion 501 about the institution of an electric train between Edmonton and Calgary. I'm in kind of the uncomfortable position of agreeing with some of what the member actually said. I think the member has made a very good point when it comes to the labour market, when it comes to allowing people in either Red Deer, which, by the way, is not mentioned in this particular motion – allowing people to live outside of the city and still have the ability to commute in. I think that's very laudable, and I think it's certainly a good thing.

Just to give a little bit of history, if I may, Mr. Speaker, on what has been done. There has been a prefeasibility study done on the high-speed rail, which was performed by the Van Horne Institute. It determined that at roughly $57 a one-way ticket, approximately 22 per cent of the people who travel on highway 2 would actually transfer over onto the high-speed rail train. One of the things that they did not conclusively get into is the amount of time it would take. For example, we know that there are some people that would ride the train if it took 83 minutes, as the hon. member has stated; however, they would not ride the train if it took 140 or 150 minutes. So we do need to take a very serious look at that and determine what the time point is as well as what the price point is. For example, how much will people pay to ride this?

I disagree with the hon. member when it comes to: the government must be the one who runs this. Interestingly enough – and the hon. member may or may not know this – one of the groups that was a proponent of the high-speed rail came in and basically stated that they could make a profit on running the train, and they could pay back the money over 15 or 20 years if there was no interest that was there. I tended to look upon that as simply a request for an interest-free loan. However, Mr. Speaker, it does indicate that there may well be some cost benefit, that there may well be a profit that can be made by a different group doing it on their own dollar. I think that all of these things deserve to be looked at.

The other issue – and this is probably where I take the greatest offence with this motion – is the whole idea of electric. I think there are a lot of other technologies that are out there. Potentially, if you can save $2 billion by doing it with a very efficient diesel locomotive, I think that warrants a look at. If you can bring the speed up in a diesel locomotive, I think that warrants taking a look at. A maglev train is not precisely an electric train as we know it.

Although the motion is very well intentioned, from my point of view I think there are some basic flaws. However, I certainly do commend the hon. member for bringing this forward, and as we proceed with the market demand study, I look forward to the support of the opposition caucus as we tend to take the next step in taking a look as to whether or not the train will actually work.

As I mentioned, we just put out the RFQs for a market demand study. We received seven applications back, of which we have picked three that can subsequently go on to an RFP. Once the RFP is in, which we expect it to be by the end of March, we can start the market demand study and actually determine realistically, scientifically if people are going to use it. Typically, what I see in talking to people between Edmonton and Calgary is that there's a huge amount of support for it in Calgary. There's a huge amount of support for it right up through to Edmonton. In Edmonton there is trepidation about support, and that trepidation has to do with the International Airport and the issues that will occur with the potential change in travel patterns from the International Airport.

I believe that we have to look exclusively as to whether or not people will use this, exclusively as to whether or not people will find the ability to do it. I agree with the hon. member that this has the potential to really put Alberta on the map. It really has the potential to change the labour dynamics. It has the potential to change the whole rural dynamics because all of a sudden, providing there is a stop in Red Deer, for someone living in Blackfalds, in Didsbury, in your particular constituency, Mr. Speaker, there is a potential for these people to work in either Edmonton or Calgary with just a short commute. I think that raises a huge amount of potential and possibilities. All of a sudden, you can have a manufacturing outlet in central Alberta where the people can commute from Edmonton or Calgary, and I think it just opens up a world of possibilities.

But the key element here – and I think this is where the hon. member is missing the discussion – is the cost. We're looking at a greenfield approach with a maglev train. You're probably looking at very close to $5 billion. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. It's a huge amount of money. As you back down in the amount of dollars that potentially could be spent, you are saying that the amount of time will go down. Instead of being 83 minutes, it might be 93 minutes. It might be 100 minutes, 120 minutes. So we do have to take a very serious look at what that price point is, at what the time point is, when will people use it, how long of a trip between Edmonton and Calgary.

The hon. member does choose a good time to bring this up because the other point that we have to consider very strongly is protecting the right-of-way into downtown Calgary and into downtown Edmonton before it gets bought up. Interestingly, we do have the right-of-way into downtown Edmonton. The tracks over the High Level Bridge are owned by the provincial government, and all of the right-of-way right into downtown Edmonton is owned by us. We do not own the right-of-way into Calgary; therefore, we have to make some important decisions within the next year or two as to whether or not we're going to move in that direction and whether or not we're actually going to purchase some right-of-way there.

It is a very timely discussion, Mr. Speaker, on a very important issue, but I just don't agree with the parameters that the hon. member has put on it in his motion. If he would have said that he urges the provincial government to investigate the feasibility of a high-speed train, then I believe that everyone on this side and everyone in the Legislature certainly could support this motion, but by limiting it to electricity, by putting an exact timeline when they would want us to spend a huge amount of dollars, by not allowing the private sector to step to the plate and to spend those dollars, I believe that the motion should fail.

Mr. Speaker, I will commend the hon. member for bringing this up at this time. It's a very, very important issue that does need to be discussed, and this is a very good forum in which to discuss it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to have the opportunity to address Motion 501. In preparation for tonight's debate I went back and looked at my maiden speech from just about a year ago. I mentioned in there that if this government was looking for a legacy, if this Premier was looking for a legacy, a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary might be the perfect solution. I'm not so sure that I feel any differently a year later.

As well, in preparation for tonight's debate I thought I should do a little research. I figured that I'd find out how much it would cost me and how long it would take if I wanted to take a train from Edmonton to Calgary. Well, we all know that the Dayliner doesn't run anymore, so I thought I could go to Winnipeg or I could go to Vancouver and then hop a train to Calgary. I can do that, actually.

The first available train to Calgary would leave Edmonton with Via Rail this Thursday, March 2. I would arrive in Vancouver the next day, March 3. It would cost me $223 plus applicable taxes. Now I have a problem: I'm in Vancouver, and the train to Calgary doesn't leave until April 17. I'm not kidding you. I did some research on the Internet, and the best I could find on average for a hotel in Vancouver is $100 a night. Forty-five days times $100 a night is $4,500 not including taxes to put myself up in a hotel in Vancouver waiting for the train to go to Calgary. On April 17 the Rocky Mountaineer leaves Vancouver, travels to Calgary over two days: $689 plus taxes. For a grand total of $5,412 plus taxes I will find myself in Calgary 48 days after I leave Edmonton, meals not included.

I'm not in great shape, but I figure that I could walk 20 miles a day, and I could be in Calgary in 10 days. If I keep up my exercise program that I started a few months ago, I could probably ride my bike and be in Calgary in three days, or I could take my chances and hitchhike and maybe get there tomorrow or maybe not get there at all.

You know, it's funny, but I think it makes a point. I took a high-speed train in Europe this summer from the airport in Frankfurt to Cologne: 220 kilometers, 45 minutes, and it cost me 57 euros. I'm telling you, that is the only way to travel.

Everywhere I go I'm talking to Albertans who are strongly in favour of this initiative, including in Edmonton. I know the minister mentioned the fact that there doesn't seem to be as much buy-in in Edmonton as there is elsewhere, but even in Edmonton people in the business community are saying: what are we waiting for?

Now, I think it's important to look at the benefits of the greenfield option as opposed to the so-called brownfield option. For those who aren't familiar with it, greenfield means new tracks, new bed versus using the CPR right-of-way, which would be the brownfield option. If you go greenfield, obviously you get a straighter track because basically you can buy the land and go right to Calgary. In this case you don't have to go through Wetaskiwin, as an example. Not that there's anything wrong with Wetaskiwin, but it is a longer trip. It just doesn't make sense to me, and I'm sure most people will understand this: why would you build a 21st century train and put it on a 19th century railbed? That just doesn't make sense to me.

It's been mentioned and the minister agreed to do the land acquisition now. You know, given the current situation with the construction boom in this province, it might not be wise to build the train today. That's one of the reasons why the motion says the year 2012. I understand that it might not be prudent to do the construction today, but at the very least we should be doing the land acquisition today. Reserve that land now so that we don't have to stray. Right now the greenfield proposal calls for the track to run within a mile or two, generally, of the Queen Elizabeth II highway. If we do the land acquisition now, that will happen. If we don't do the land acquisition now, we might find ourselves 20 or 30 miles west of the highway. Again, it's going to be a longer track, more turns, and slower. The Van Horne Institute says that it would cost $47.8 million to do the land acquisition today. So we're not talking an awful lot of money to secure that land and make sure that it's there for when we are ready to build.

Now, there have been a number of benefits identified by using the greenfield route. Certainly, one of them is that for the most part it will bypass the smaller communities. A lot of the small communities that the CPR right-of-way runs through now have identified this as a major concern: having that train running right through or very near their communities. By going greenfield, you eliminate that problem. It gives you the option if you want to build a utility corridor as part of the land that's purchased. You could certainly do that.

With the greenfield option all of the track would be grade separated. There would be no level crossings, which, you know, when you have a train moving at 250 kilometres an hour or more, is probably a pretty darn important thing. As has already been pointed out, it does move Red Deer into a practical commuting distance between Edmonton and Calgary.

Another advantage for sure is the fact that there would be no freight service on the tracks. With the upgraded tracks on the CPR railbed we would be sharing a high-speed train with freight service, and the potential for disaster there is evident in everybody's mind, I'm sure.

The minister referred to the Edmonton International Airport as being one of the sort of holdups in terms of getting buy-in from Edmonton. Well, I've actually spoken to folks at the Airports Authority, and what they're telling me is that if this project were to go ahead, they would want to be included in those discussions. In fact, they would give serious consideration to having a station either near the terminal or as part of the terminal. So I'm not sure where the disconnect has come. Perhaps it was previous leadership with the Airports Authority. The current leadership has told me that this is a conversation they want to be part of, and they do not necessarily see it as a negative to the operation of their airport.

Electric versus diesel. The minister suggested that we should leave the door open for the discussion of diesel.

An Hon. Member: Clean burning coal.

Mr. R. Miller: I hear somebody on the other side mentioning clean burning coal. While I have to admit that I'm not enthralled at the idea of more coal, if in fact it can be shown that coal can be burned clean – and I don't just mean cleaner, but I mean clean – and we go with the electric alternative, there's going to be a need for more electricity, and that might be one possible solution. While I'm not a big proponent of going back to the idea of coal, it certainly would make more sense to use that coal to produce electricity than it would to burn the coal in the train, as some people on the other side might have been alluding to when they mentioned coal. Without any question, at the moment and I think well into the future an electric train would simply be cleaner and more energy efficient than the diesel alternative.

For the rolling stock itself there are lower maintenance costs associated with electric cars and electric engines. It's really not that much more. Every time I say something like this I shake my head, but it's only $800 million more to go with the electric versus the diesel-electric alternative. I know that's an awful lot of money, but in today's economic reality, if there's a commitment and a willingness on the part of the government to do this, that really is not an awful lot of money. As an example, it's only two-thirds of the money that was spent on the rebate cheques, or it's less than the Premier's commitment to cancer research, less than the money that was supposedly reinvested in the heritage savings trust fund, when in fact it was actually only not taken out of the heritage savings trust fund, but that's another story.

An Hon. Member: You don't understand the beauty of the concept.

Mr. R. Miller: The concept is questionable at best in terms of the heritage savings trust fund, and I hope to address that at a later point either this evening or in the next couple of days when I give my response to the Speech from the Throne.

Certainly, I believe that the time to start this project is now. As I've said, at least do the land acquisition. Light-rail transit in both Edmonton and Calgary has proven to be a huge success. Thirty years ago it was difficult to get people to buy in. We heard a lot of the same comments that we hear in the Assembly tonight, yet today you can't build either system fast enough. People are crying for it to be extended. I believe that there's a greater understanding in the public's mind as to the benefits of public transportation. Certainly, I believe now is the time to start. Access to the downtown cores and the Red Deer area is competing with other forms of development, as we've already talked about, and time is of the essence when it comes to doing this.

I can't believe my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly support this motion and urge all members to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'm very pleased to see that there is discussion on train travel specifically between Edmonton and Calgary. The New Democrat opposition has some difficulty with the motion as it appears on paper, but certainly the more general concept of reintroducing train service between Edmonton and Calgary and, indeed, to other centres around the province of Alberta I think is something that deserves more attention.

One of my big reservations or concerns about what sort of train we would put between Edmonton and Calgary is the tendency for large projects to move towards the grandiose. You know, the key to a successful high-speed train service is a very high population and also a very high willingness for people to actually use that train. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned the train between Cologne and Frankfurt in Germany. I, too, rode that train and looked at it with some interest as I am a train enthusiast. There is a real difficulty to get a critical mass of people to ride that train between Cologne and Frankfurt even though you're looking at between 8 million and 10 million people within that metropolitan corridor. There are trains that run quite fast between Frankfurt and Cologne and certainly lots of highways, and people make those choices as well.

My suggestion, and this is open to discussion, is to perhaps look at expanding the CPR right-of-way and putting a number of different alternatives forward onto the CPR right-of-way. Certainly, there's room for at least two more rail lines to run along that right-of-way.

If my memory serves me correctly, in the peak time there was a passenger train running between Edmonton and Calgary, and it was a steam locomotive. They could get it under two hours running that steam locomotive at a very high speed. Certainly, it is possible to use conventional trains to have quite an efficient connection between Edmonton and Calgary and points in between as well, so the train can in fact feasibly and economically stop in other centres along the way and not just pass them by at 320 kilometres an hour.

I would suggest that opening and expanding the CPR right-of-way also would provide us perhaps with a model by which we could extend to train service between other centres in Alberta and look for an economical alternative for people to travel, let's say, to Fort McMurray or to Grande Prairie or to points south, Lethbridge or Medicine Hat, and, you know, provide that sort of infrastructure for the future as well. Let's not forget that although the economic tiger, as some people like to describe it, is the corridor between Edmonton and Calgary, certainly there are lots of other areas that deserve this sort of consideration in Alberta as well.

Finally, I believe that we do have to look to the future. We see other countries, including the United States, realizing that an extended train system is going to be part of the transportation future for western countries and, in fact, for people all over the world. So I do like the idea of this motion looking ahead not just to the immediate future but the long-term future, when we will need alternative transportation systems. Certainly, it's incumbent upon this Legislature and the provincial government to be involved in that transportation future, and perhaps there is some interim subsidization that has to take place in order to put the trains on the rails and to have people sit in the cars and actually use the system.

You know, Amtrak certainly is an example of that sort of forward-looking perspective in the United States. The train passengers are subsidized. The tickets are subsidized in the United States. But look to the future, you know, so that when that system is, in fact, more necessary, the system is in place and the psychology of using the train is in place in the citizenry as well.

Of course, we are very much tied to our automobiles, our individual automobiles here in this province, and it takes a long time to break or to change those driving habits. I know, for example, that many, many people wouldn't consider taking a train between Edmonton and Calgary right now because, of course, when you get to either metropolitan centre, what are you going to do? People find the public transport system in either city wanting, especially to go to different parts of the city in either Edmonton or Calgary. People say: well, I need my car anyway, so I might as well drive. So we have to be thinking about intercity travel in concert with an expansion of public transport in the urban centres so that people can make that psychological leap to take the train to Calgary, let's say, and then be able to take trains and buses and conveniently do their business in that centre and then come home again with public transportation.

There are a number of hurdles that we have to overcome, but certainly the possibility of re-establishing the rail link between Edmonton and Calgary I think is part of an integrated approach to our transportation future that we do have to take a serious look at and start spending money on feasibility studies and keeping those rights-of-way open. It breaks my heart every time I see someone building over a right-of-way here in this city. As you know, my own constituency is part of the CN rail link in Calder. There are so many rights-of-way and passages where we can put train systems, public transport systems through. Really, I think that it's incumbent, again, upon this government to protect those rights-of-way and make those purchases for the future and not have them built over because we'll be stuck with cars in the future that are unaffordable for a large sector of the population.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to seeing this motion perhaps becoming an act or something like it in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak in support of this motion by my colleague for an ecological, efficient, and people-friendly mode of travel between our two major urban centres. I've chosen to look at the historical perspective rather than the mechanical or technical because when this proposal finally comes about – and you will note that I do not say “if” – it will not be the first time that the Calgary-Edmonton corridor has been a focus of rail innovation.

In 1936 the Canadian Pacific railway introduced the first light-weight, high-speed passenger train service in Canada. This innovation was intended not only to attract market and improve service and comfort; the downturn of the Depression made it imperative to save costs. Shortening travel time and reducing train wait were cost-saving measures. CPR's response to these needs was innovative, imaginative, and trend setting. Streamlined Jubilee locomotives, that still look classy on art deco posters, pulled smooth, curved-sided, air conditioned coaches with comfortable lounges and buffet service.

Four train sets were built by Canadian Car and Foundry, the company that built our first trolley coaches, and finished inside in CPR's own shops. Three of the sets were for the Windsor-Quebec corridor in eastern Canada. The fourth was for Calgary-Edmonton service. The Chinook Flyer left Edmonton every morning for Calgary and returned in the evening. It reached speeds of up to 105 miles per hour between stops at 19 communities along the way. This train is currently being restored at the Canadian Museum of Rail Travel in Cranbrook, B.C. When completed, it will be a display worth visiting.

After the Second World War the Chinook was downgraded to second-class status. The new corridor express trains were named after the cities' football teams, the Edmonton-bound train being called the Eskimo and the Calgary-bound one the Stampeder. These reduced the number of stops and shaved an hour off the Chinook's running time as a result. In addition to 200 regular coach seats, they offered swivel seats for business travelers in a buffet parlour car.

In the mid-1950s travel time was further reduced with the introduction of rail diesel cars, or Dayliners as the CPR called them, built by the Budd Corporation in the U.S. Unfortunately, the further time savings of the Dayliners was accompanied by a savings in passenger comforts. They did not have the number of washrooms, the passenger lounges, or the sit-down meal service provided by the earlier trains that CP designed for this route.

Because one or two Budd cars were shorter in length than a regular train, they were not as visible at crossings, and a number of accidents resulted. Rather than opt to reduce the number of level crossings, one every two miles between Edmonton and Calgary, the politicians added their voices to the call to phase out passenger train service between the cities, which happened 20 years ago this past November.

Now with congestion on our highways and waiting time increased in our airports with post 9/11 security measures, the rail mode offers us an opportunity again. I understand that some of the planners would like to see the rail route parallel the highway because being overtaken and passed by high-speed trains on winter roads would be its best way to persuade our car drivers to try the new service.

I am pleased to see that Canadian Pacific through the Van Horne Institute is contributing expertise to these studies regardless of whether its right-of-way is used or a brand new infrastructure is used.

I have two incidental suggestions to make, points which I hope have already been considered by the planners. Locating the maintenance shops midway between the two cities would have a number of advantages. It would bring new business to Red Deer, and it would add Red Deer to the easy commute zone of both Calgary and Edmonton. People will generally start out earlier from a smaller city when visiting a larger one. Having the trains overnight and be serviced at Red Deer could also add traffic for an early 40-minute ride to the two larger centres before the travelers are ready to board for the longer intercity trek.

Second, space on a high-speed passenger train could be sold or consigned to courier and express operators, thus reducing the number of smaller vans on the road in exchange for a faster transfer.

Mr. Speaker, the Calgary-Edmonton rail corridor has an illustrious history and an exciting future. With the headquarters of Canada's first transcontinental railway now located in this province and the Calgary-Edmonton corridor leading the continent in economic growth, it is only a matter of time before we return to the rails.

Regardless of where the initiative comes from, let us give this the necessary thought and public discussion to make sure the new mode serves as well as its predecessors did with the CPR. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre it gives me a great deal of pleasure tonight to introduce a group of visitors in the public gallery that are with us from Toastmasters International. Toastmasters International is a nonprofit organization promoting communications and leadership skills within their numbers. They serve 250,000 toastmasters altogether in 10,500 clubs in 90 countries around the world. Edmonton apparently has the highest concentration of toastmasters on a per capita basis anywhere.

Tonight's visitors are from numerous clubs in the Edmonton area. They're led by their past district governor, Mr. Peter Kossowan. I'm thinking that I should perhaps join them, and then I would be able to figure out how to fit all that I have to say about high-speed rail into my 10-minute time slot. Would they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have to change the opening of my speech. As a toastmaster previously, I know that one of the important aspects of learning to speak publicly is to remove the hesitations, the ahs and the ums, from your speech. Of course, as a member of one of the Lethbridge clubs I used to get fined fairly regularly on the numbers of ums. I don't know what their particular club uses by way of penalty for ums, but I hope it's within 10 cents. Otherwise, I'm going to owe a fair amount of dollars. [interjections] But who's counting, eh?

I want to count minutes, though, and my dream is 52 minutes. That is the magnetic levitation presentation that was made in my office by a German company with the idea of a high-speed – you can't really call it a train – vehicle that would connect, of course, downtown Calgary and downtown Edmonton with stops at the two airports that are mentioned in the motion but also would recognize Red Deer. So 52 minutes. In the amount of time that we've been discussing this this evening, had we left on that vehicle at 8 o'clock, we'd be at the Calgary airport, I think, and perhaps almost into downtown. Now, that would be a meaningful amount of time. I think that if people had the choice between the number 2 highway – and a great highway it is – and 52 minutes, there you would have some transference, I guess, from one individual in a car over to the train.

By the way, I might add that in my experience in 12 years of driving from Lethbridge to Edmonton and most of that, of course, on the number 2 and all of it from the portion at least from Balzac to Edmonton, it's just unbelievable how many single occupants we have in the vehicles not only in the cities that we talk about but on our major highways. It's not for me to say whether it's a crime or not, but we should at some time figure out just how much all of this money that we put into infrastructure is actually costing us to continue to rely so heavily in terms of automobiles on our highways. Now, the market, of course is trying to make adjustments for that by the increase in the price of gasoline, but as far as I can tell, we've got even more vehicles on the road at 82.9 cents per litre than what we might have had at 39, so I'm not sure that the market is working very well for us in that particular area.

The minister of infrastructure gave a $5 billion price tag, though, for that kind of a mode of transport. I want to say that the presentation that I was given had a $7 billion tag on it at that point, so if somehow we've been able to knock off $2 billion, then we're certainly heading in the right way.

That brings me to the question: where is the private sector in all of this? Certainly, the manufacturer of this vehicle wasn't pretending that they would in any way pay for this mode of transport or the kind of infrastructure that would be required to be used and, of course, to be paid for, expected the state or in this case the province to pick up, you know, the full cost. Typical of maybe a European mode of thinking. I'm not sure. I'm not European. I'm just, perhaps, giving an impression here. That might be fine, but when you think that we're looking at Calgary and we're looking at Edmonton with only 1 million people in each area, it seems to me, then, that probably we're asking a lot of taxpayers in this province to pony up whether it be $5 billion or $7 billion for a mag lev.

Now, I'm not current with the numbers in terms of electrification of a rail system or the diesel system except, you know, the numbers that have been used here tonight. Again, it would make me wonder whether or not we are being realistic as we look at the kind of population base that we're really trying to serve. If we now start talking about electric, we're talking about – what is it? – 83 minutes, or maybe it's 93 minutes. I forget. Perhaps with diesel we're now over 100 minutes. I think that minute by minute by minute we lose, then, that transference from the individual automobile over onto that highway. Again, I support the study that is going to take place. In fact, I'm not sure, but maybe we'll be asked to get involved with funding. If we do, we'll certainly look at it. In any case, while I support the funding, not to try to prophesize too much, I'd be very, very surprised that with the current population we would find a cost-effective way of being able to do that project.

I do agree with the minister and others that have spoken in terms of making sure that we have the rights-of-way protected. In some cases we'll have to go out and gain ownership of those rights-of-way, and I think that we should of course do that.

I will be voting against this motion because of it simply doing two things, really, confining it to electricity and also to the particular year, but I want to commend the member for bringing it forward. Again, to talk about the timeliness of it: now is the time to be having the discussion. Now is the time to have all members' support in this Chamber when the minister of infrastructure goes and, you know, has the study done. I wouldn't want to hear now, from the support that this motion has been given, whether it passes or not, people then to quibble over the fact that we're going to spend some money on the studies. It would seem to me that everybody is supportive of that. I, like the rest of them, will look forward to the results of that particular study.

I think, though, where the timeliness is important also comes within the whole aspect of an integrated transportation policy, really, for this whole province. There is no question about the importance of northeast Alberta in terms of the economic future of this province. It would seem to me that we have to start recognizing where the golden eggs are laying and make sure, then, that we have provided a system in order to take full advantage of that tremendous resource that we find ourselves in ownership of.

I think I could stand and make the argument. Although I'm not going to do it tonight, at some point in time I might argue for a high-speed rail system between Edmonton and Fort McMurray ahead of Edmonton to Calgary because the situation there is that I think that you have to take a reasonable look at where your future lies and then make sure that the infrastructure is in place in order to do that. I know there's been some resistance to the rail situation from Edmonton to Fort McMurray because people were afraid that if they put a dollar into rail, it meant a dollar coming out of the road system. Well, our minister of infrastructure, I think, is already making it plain about what might and could happen to highway 63. Something has to be done with highway 63, with highway 881, and to me that is in combination with, not in opposition to, what we should do with a rail system.

I believe that it's unreasonable to expect that given the terrain, the territory of Fort McMurray, Alberta, we're going to be able to achieve 5 million barrels by the year 2030 as is now being predicted by some folks and expect that we will have all of the people that are required to reach that living in that particular area. I think it's just like bitumen, where there are upgraders that are going to be at Fort McMurray upgrading the bitumen, but there's also a huge opportunity, of course, in the industrial heartland for the bitumen to come to that particular area. It's quite simple. If you can't take the people to where the resource is, then you have to bring the resource to where the people are. That, I think, deserves some discussion as well.

In any event, I will be voting against this particular motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's actually my honour to follow up on everything but the last few seconds of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West's comments. It's particularly important that he brought up the example of Fort McMurray. When asked this summer what I thought of the idea of the high-speed rail, my comment was that it would be nice for a change to be ahead of the game or at least when the game began, to be fully operational within that game.

Fort McMurray is the best example of potential opportunities that are at this point being held back and to some extent being missed. Fort McMurray in the 1980s used to build their sewers and their roadways ahead of time, and then they would build the housing developments to follow. Right now Fort McMurray is having a great deal of difficulty with its waste treatment plant because of the increased population. I'm not opposed to what the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West said about eventually increasing the rapid rail to Fort McMurray. As he mentioned before – and I will not go into great repetition here – the whole point of this rapid rail system, a large part of it besides the economic driver, is to eliminate the carnage that's currently happening on the road.

I wish the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation had been here last year when I introduced the notion of banning cellphones. I could have used the support that he's provided for rapid rail at that time, and I'm sure that discussion will come up later. The reason we put forward the electric was that it was kind of the middle-of-the-road – I hate to use the word – the more conservative approach to the rapid rail system. We don't want to go back in time. Back in time is the diesel. Even with the new developments diesels tend to have a noise factor associated with them, and it would be very hard to get rid of the sort of exhaust that is traditionally associated with diesels. The electric option is middle-of-the-road in terms of the expense. It's also the clean option, and if we can get to the point where coal is sufficiently clean, that the electricity can be produced without emissions, then this would certainly add to the value of an electric rail.

In terms of the electric style that I would like to see, I'm more in favour of the CPR's existing right-of-way. One of the main reasons I'm in favour of that is because the route has already established. The right-of-way is already there. The savings in expense would be greatly magnified because of the fact that the right-of-way currently exists. Yes, there would have to be developments bringing things up to grade and so on, and there's no thought that we'd be using the existing rail, but we would be using the existing right-of-way. By so doing, we would save a considerable amount of money. One of the sort of requirements, at least at this point, with that CPR right-of-way is that the CPR would expect a great deal of government financing as opposed to the completely private alternative. They've indicated that that is the methodology that they prefer.

Two weeks ago at the Glenbow Museum, when the CPR was donating a number of its records, including the first draft with John A. Macdonald, of the cross-Canada rail, I had a chance to talk to the CEO of CPR and also at the same time Peter Wallis, who was part of the authorship of this Van Horne Institute, who's associated out of the University of Calgary. I said I would be a rapid rail pompom, give me an R, give me an R, kind of person because I believe that this is a tremendous economic opportunity.

It has already been recognized that given our population the Edmonton-Calgary corridor is the hottest market in North America for its population and size. This rail would provide the options that many people have already indicated: taking people off the roads, putting them onto the rail, giving them a quality service, bringing Alberta sort of up to the level that is currently being experienced in eastern Canada between Toronto and Montreal and throughout the States via the Amtrak.

The one improvement that I would like to see Alberta making is that this rail would be passenger only and, of course, that this right-of-way would be divided. I wouldn't want to see the crossovers that currently are being proposed within the CPR model because that's where the accidents have occurred in the States, when freight and passenger trains shared the same rail. Obviously, it wasn't intentionally, but that's what occurred.

I like the idea of two parallel lines and particularly, as I say, going with the electric way of doing things. Peter Wallis came to my constituency office and explained the three alternatives. With regard to the magnetic rail I don't see us needing that rapidity at this point. I don't see us requiring that kind of cost. Some of the most frequent passengers, I think, on this particular system would be ourselves.

You heard my concerns about what I recalled as Ralph Air or Con Air, however you wish to look at it, Con being for Conservative, just the short form. If we're looking for some financing for this project, I would be very glad to see at least two of our three planes done away with because most of the flights are between Calgary and Edmonton. If we could get people riding on this train doing the work as they go, not having to take that long taxi ride from the International Airport, to me this would be a step in the right direction showing responsibility.

With regard to this rail it's interesting that Peter Wallis is also associated with the Calgary International Airport. He's one of the directors. He does not see any concern about the competition putting various air commuters or, for that matter, bus commuters out of business. This would not create an unfair travelling advantage. He believes that connecting the two airports would be a great service to both in-Alberta travelling for Albertans but also for world travellers. It would offer them the type of opportunities, as I've noted, they experience on a regular basis whether they're coming from Japan, whether they're coming from Europe, or what they're used to in eastern Canada and in the States.

I'm pleased that the members opposite are not necessarily opposed to the idea. I am extremely pleased that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is pursuing the study to validate the economic feasibility of this particular proposal. It's very important that within our motion we've indicated 2012. We want the study to occur. We believe that based on the Van Horne Institute study, it is economically viable at this time, but we welcome that confirmation that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation will provide.

I would urge everyone to support Motion 501. This rapid rail I believe is going to happen sooner than later. The faster we get on board the better.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to close debate on Motion 501.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to see the general acceptance of this motion by the previous speakers here tonight. Just a few clarifications perhaps. In the motion it does not preclude stops in Red Deer, or it does not preclude stops that may prove to be working stops for a system.

I've been on a few of these high-speed links in other parts of the world. One, for example, is Seville to Madrid. You didn't even notice the stops, and I think it had four or five. It was just incredibly fast, much of it over almost empty olive groves. There are other examples where, in looking at types of ridership and potential ridership like we have in our type of economy here in Alberta, we would look very good. It's quick, clean, efficient transportation. It's starting with the Edmonton-Calgary route. The need to move with something, to start with, is the need to act. We have tremendous possibilities.

I don't know if I really agree with my colleague for Calgary-Varsity or the Member for Edmonton-Calder on the need for the CPR route. There are problems with that, and sometimes it can get more expensive to refurbish a roadbed than to naturally build a new one. It's an old freight route, and there are some great costs with that. The greenfield route, I think, has some tremendous arguments for it.

There's the possibility of great technological offsets to private companies in Alberta. As the Minister for Economic Development mentioned, there's quite a number of private companies that will be involved in the construction and the building of the actual units and the various technologies that are involved. The route to Fort McMurray would be nice, but some of that would be very expensive for the first leg. Indeed, the maglev option, if that's to be put forward, is very expensive, and it's not really been proven over many long routes.

So we should narrow down our choices, and that's what we did. You have to be somewhat pragmatic and look at what would be the best option for Alberta. The motion deals with that. It looks to electric. It included the Calgary airport and the Edmonton airport because in some of the proposals that have been put forward by the consortiums or whatever you want to call those that are proposing them, the airports were not included, and we wanted to make sure that that was included in our motion. Please do not think that it does not include Red Deer or some other stops. This type of transportation backbone would be fed by buses and other types of transportation from other parts of Alberta.

There is tremendous opportunity with this. It is something that will drive economic development. It will save government expenditures in other areas, as I said: health care, the costs of paving half of Alberta for the Queen E II because that will see a tremendous amount of traffic reduction because of this alternative in transportation, and the sheer economic benefit from time saved and the effect on uniting our labour market and other markets in Alberta.

It has to be and should be, I believe, an independent route that is not used with freight. I'm very impressed by the greenfield options. But what is necessary in the near future is to tie down those rights-of-way, to decide on a route, and that needs some decision on the type of system we have to use. I submit that the electric system as put forward in this motion has been researched extensively. There are some major advantages to it for our province, and I think it would be the quickest.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 24: Mr. Stelmach speaking]

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just before adjourning on Thursday, we talked about the need of expediting the accreditation of professionals that have moved to Canada to help us with our labour situation. Another area that we're keen to work on is aboriginal employment programs. We want to take advantage of Alberta's hot economy to make real progress for our aboriginal people, and the newly minted Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Minister Prentice, is keen to work with us on this particular task.

Another important area, Mr. Speaker, is gaining control of the tools to manage immigration policy. It could be as fundamental to Alberta's future prosperity as the affirmation in 1929 of constitutional jurisdiction over natural resources has been to our present prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, this government believes in fairness. This includes regional balance between rural and urban Albertans. It also means intergenerational fairness, and using proceeds from nonrenewable resources to retire debt is an example of sharing the benefits of our natural resources with the next generation. Building infrastructure that has a long lifespan using innovative P3 financing is another way of sharing costs and benefits over time.

Investing and saving for the future are fiscally responsible actions that Albertans and their government know are right, and that is why I believe that setting aside a portion of the surplus in the heritage savings trust fund is the responsible thing to do.

I also know that you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that fairness also means balancing. It means balancing government investments across regions of the total province of Alberta. Our northern communities are the source of so much of the current wealth that benefits all Albertans, and we need to ensure that they have the tools to achieve their dreams and potential as the hub of the north. I look to participating in the northern development strategy announced in the throne speech, and this will ensure that there are appropriate resources allocated to ensure the continued sustainable economic development of this region.

Now, along with energy and agriculture, forestry is the major industry in the north. It's the third largest sector, contributing about $13 billion to our economy. We understand the challenges that this sector is facing. We'll work closely with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, our office in Washington, my colleagues in the provinces in Canada, and the federal government on the softwood lumber file. I was encouraged that Congress is finally respecting international law and has repealed the Byrd amendment, paving the way for a return of duties paid by Alberta companies to the U.S. government.

Mr. Speaker, this government will continue to focus its efforts on rural development to help rural communities become more prosperous and vibrant, and I am so pleased that the speech has referred to the promise of the biofields industry, which offers the potential of sustainable growth and a new market for canola.

Managing natural resources wisely to create value-added products while minimizing the environmental impacts of resource development is a job this government takes seriously. This principle is the heart of the land-use framework this government is developing. It recognizes that the land supports many uses: resource development, recreation, tourism, agriculture, forestry, and residential.

To address broader, long-term environmental issues, the government will hold an environmental youth summit. It is critical, Mr. Speaker, to involve youth in an environmental policy development. After all of the oil and gas is gone, our future generations could still have a very valuable resource that is in short supply, and that resource is clean air, water, and land. A healthy environment could become more of an economic development attraction than even lower taxes in their lifetime, so we've got to give them that chance.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and, indeed, all Albertans can be proud of the vision and agenda of this government that has been presented in the throne speech. This government's vision respects and reflects Albertans' values of self-reliance, fiscal responsibility, and community spirit.

Albertans have confidence in our Premier; they have confidence in the government. They have confidence in the Premier because he has faith that Albertans can always find solutions to new challenges. The only way to look back is to honour our predecessors.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise at an important point in our session and in our tradition. The way of opening a new session of the House is a long-standing parliamentary practice that we have given a distinctly Canadian twist. In Britain today it's called the Queen's Speech because it's usually the Queen who reads it. In Canada we don't name it after the reader, the Lieutenant Governor or the Governor General, but after a more generic symbol. The throne is an enduring symbol of authority in the same way as the crown is far more than the individual who wears it.

When I speak of the authority the throne symbolizes, I'm speaking of more than power. Power can be naked force or coercion. Authority implies authorship. The throne is not only the seat of the head of state or, in his or her absence, of the Speaker but a symbol of what is most enduring in our system and what is most dear to us personally. It is a symbol of our shared values, and to the extent that we share them, we the people are the authors of that authority.

Our changing the name from the Queen's Speech to the Speech from the Throne is one way Canadians have taken a vintage system and built on it. Canadians have adopted these innovations largely by peaceful means. The Speaker's Mace was once a studded club that stunned or disabled while enforcing order. The aisle in our Legislature was designed to keep factions two swords' lengths from each other, and we who have opposed a party in power sit here as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition whereas earlier generations of those who opposed the rulers did so at the risk of their lives.

In England these rights were established after 20 years of civil war and dictatorship in which a king and many able ministers and other parliamentary leaders went to the block. An even more bloody price was paid in the French Revolution a century later. In Canada and in Alberta these benefits were given to us sometimes after struggles such as the uprising of 1837-38, that led to the granting of responsible government. Alberta and Saskatchewan struggled to win control of their natural resources. When we got it, our form of responsible government was a step more evolved than Britain's. Until a century ago British governments were still being led from the hereditary House of Lords. Canadian governments from 1846 were responsible solely to the elected Assembly.

Canada was the first modern state to emerge without revolution or civil war. This is one of the gifts that we bring to the world. Our orderly transition of power was celebrated by Prime Minister Stephen Harper in his victory speech five weeks ago tonight. Every government to come to office in Canada since 1759 has been without bloodshed. If we regard 1759 as a battle in an international conflict, which it was, and recall the civil way in which the French and English dealt with each other in the transition, we have 400 years of essentially peaceful evolution.

This is our first and greatest shared value. It includes our freedoms – personal, economic, and political – because they were achieved through this tradition of peace, order, and good governance. It includes our other social values as well because the means of our achieving these had made for a potentially human society. Other states have achieved the democratic and social goals we have, but the more violent means by which they achieved them have been at a cost to the fabric of their societies.

A Speech from the Throne recapitulates these long-standing values by the simple fact and way it takes place. By its contents it shows us the values that are most important to a government's interpretation of its mandate at a specific moment. What does this speech then tell us about this government's values at this moment? First, I note that of the five headings in the speech the first three – A Learning Society, A Prosperous Society, and A Clean Environment – are all couched in economic terms. Education is justified because “people with advanced skills, creativity, and education will keep Alberta's economy strong.” Prosperity is by its nature economic. The environment section, less than a fifth the length of the prosperity one, is justified because the land “must continue to be the source of life and prosperity for future generations.”

It is not until we reach the fourth and fifth priority areas – A Healthy Society, with its focus on cancer research, which I applaud, and A Safe and Caring Society, which I also endorse – that we come to human values that stand independent of economic ones. The prosperity emphasis dominates the speech. Economic issues take up more than half the body of the speech, and the prosperity section is more than twice as long as any other. Some people see this as inevitable. They point out that income from resources and industry pays the cost of our programs, and to mention programs first will put the cart before the horse. I believe this outlook confuses ends with means, the how with the why of public service.

Mr. Speaker, I can't help but contrast this Speech from the Throne with the statement from our sister province of British Columbia the day before. The B.C. budget focused on spending on children, with an extra $421 million to boost child protection services. With an emphasis on children this year and on seniors last B.C.'s government has shown a more human set of priorities than our own. It is almost 35 years that we have had a government in power with a primarily economic agenda, yet it is not fair to lay this imbalance at the feet of any one party or leader.

A good friend of mine had a walk in the snow with Ernest C. Manning after Christmas in 1967. Mr. Manning was already Canada's longest serving first minister, a record that has not been surpassed. He had recently won a sixth election by a landslide, yet he told my friend, “I can't be Premier of this province anymore. The new oil money doesn't care about the things we stand for.” A year later he retired. Three years later Social Credit was replaced by the Progressive Conservatives. Our new leaders had fewer misgivings about the new money than Premier Manning did. In getting along with it so well and living through unparalleled prosperity, they and many Albertans have confused our priorities. We have forgotten that the citizen does not live to serve the economy and that the state is accountable to the whole electorate and not simply taxpayers and economic leaders. It is time to revisit these values.

In my first speech to this Assembly a year ago I said that children should not simply be one aspect of public policy but a central focus. We should be looking at every aspect of our collective life – environment, education, health, justice, culture, finance – in terms of how it impacts on children. I believe that even more today. I propose a sixth emphasis alongside the five in the Speech from the Throne, that of a child-friendly society. I believe children's well-being is a value we all share. Whatever our party or our economic point of view we agree that children deserve a high place on our scale of values.

Why do we love children? Biologists point out features such as their large eyes and other facial characteristics and parent/child bonding. They say that we are programmed to be attracted to children for their and our own collective survival. Psychologists talk about regression or projection, how children take us back to a time when we felt more loved or forward to an imagined future where our children live the hopes and dreams we did not achieve. Anthropologists tell us that children represent our biological immortality, the ongoing of life.

These may all be true, but I believe there is something more. I believe that children bring us close to the Divine, by whatever name we call it. Wordsworth says this powerfully in his Recollections of Early Childhood: streaming clouds of glory do we come from God who is our home; Heaven lies about us in our infancy. I experience this with my grandson, when looking into his eyes calls out the best in me. I find it significant that the only time it is ever recorded that Jesus of Nazareth advocated capital punishment was for those who damaged children. I believe that's because in damaging that which is most undamaged among us, we transgress the Divine. So for me respect for children, nurturing children, building a child-friendly society is not only good policy; it is fundamentally a matter of faith.

What, then, does it mean to translate this into present reality? It means to work and build a child-friendly society. A child-friendly society is a more human and humane society. Let us begin by recognizing some things it is not. A society that tolerates cruelty to animals in homes, on farms, in zoos, laboratories, slaughterhouses, or in the wilds is not child friendly for children identify with the suffering of animals. A society built on the principle of survival of the fittest or user-pay for basic services such as health and education is not child friendly. Children deserve our support and are not able to pay their way economically.

A society that permits blood and violence on our streets and on our television and computer screens is not child friendly. This is an assault on their senses and a violation of their innocence. A society that permits poverty and homelessness by people of any age or condition is not child friendly. A society that is run solely by the bottom line, that is materially rich and spiritually poor is not child friendly. It is in their spirituality that children must enrich us. A society devoid of this is like air deprived of oxygen.

A society that is time starved and always has a functional purpose for everything is not child friendly. It is in the spaces in the solid walls that the light comes through. It is in the gaps in business plans and behavioural objectives where new adventures, scientific, and artistic discoveries take place. A society without these, no matter how high tech, is like the dark mills and factories of Dickens time.

I have an educator friend who lived in London for a year and used to spend time in the National Portrait Gallery. He told me that the childlike, in-love-with-life faces he saw there belonged to the scientists and artists. The kings and the bishops had hard faces. This tells me that building a child-friendly society must include a change in our politics and how we handle power. A society based on the adversarial principle in our politics is not child friendly. We've come a ways from the politics of bloody battles where the winners got the crown and the losers went to the block, but we still play battlefield politics in winner take all, bringing down or embarrassing the government, squeezing the losers out.

Building a child-friendly society means a new, more consensual approach to government, one where our common interests and values, such as children, do not become political footballs between parties or the objects of turf wars between levels of government. Such an approach can be a model to the children and youth who visit us here in this Assembly. Ninety years ago nurse Edith Cavell was executed in Belgium for helping prisoners to escape. She died for a patriotic offence, yet on the eve of her execution she said that patriotism is not enough.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my fellow members to recognize that many of the good things we have in this province and many of the values we uphold need to give way for something better. As patriotism is not enough where humanity is at stake, democracy is not enough where democratic decisions separate people into winners and losers and exclude some from the benefits of our society. Capitalism and the free market or social democracy are not enough when they rob people of opportunities and put them into pigeon-holes, and our God-given prosperity, with all the doors it can open, is not enough if it blinds us to other values, including the gifts our children bring and the time and energy we need to spend with them for our mutual benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have an economic or political model for how this can come about, but I do have a dream for the outcome we must share if we are going to bring it about. I see an Alberta where children grow in a wholesome environment, free from fear and protected in their vulnerability. I see an Alberta that unconditionally invests in children, meeting their needs while young and providing opportunities to learn self-support as they mature. I see an Alberta committed to children's health where their daily lives are life affirming and where medication and therapy are universal rights. I invite my colleagues in this House to join me in this vision.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I would take this opportunity to remind all of you that after each 15 minute speech there is a five-minute time period for questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a) if anyone wants to avail themselves of that.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure tonight to rise to reply to the speech from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on this our 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature. My congratulations to the Lieutenant Governor, who I'm proud to say is a constituent of Calgary-West; that is, on the rare occasions when he isn't on official duty elsewhere in the province.

One can't help but listen to this speech and feel a great sense of pride in the fact that we are living in what I believe is the best place in the world. Where else do citizens have a government that is debt free and still able to put a billion dollars away for future generations? I'll return to that in a moment. Where else would a government be able to embark on 60 new or modernization projects in its educational system? Where else would a government be able to undertake 47 major postsecondary capital projects or 21 major health capital projects?

What other jurisdiction with a population of 3 million people will pave a thousand kilometres of highway this year and commit millions more to ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary? Where else would you find a government that had the foresight to set aside half a billion dollars for a cancer prevention endowment fund with a goal of reducing the incidence of cancer by half in the next 20 years? Of course, the answer to all those questions is: right here in Alberta.

Soon we will be introducing a budget, one that is likely to increase spending to an all-time high. While that itself gives me some concern, commitments like those that I just mentioned don't come without some cost. But as government we must be careful not to overincrease expectations. There is an old saying: underpromise and overdeliver. Unfortunately, in Alberta today the expectation by many is: ask for it, and it shall be delivered.

I want to return for a moment to the heritage fund. One way of dampening those requests is to return to an automatic percentage contribution of nonrenewable resource revenue to the fund. In my view, one of the weaknesses of our current accounting method is that we keep announcing these huge surpluses. The public comes to a conclusion that we keep telling them how much money we have, and they just, in many cases, want to spend it. So if we change the law so that revenue from the fund stayed in the fund and a percentage of nonrenewable resource revenue was automatically dedicated to the fund, clearly our surpluses would be smaller, and hopefully the expectations would be less.

His Honour also spoke of a health system that was flexible and provided citizens with greater choice. I'm afraid this is not an option. It is a change which Albertans and Canadians must endure, or we won't have any kind of an affordable system left for us as we grow old and certainly not for our children and grandchildren. We must be prepared to be bold. We must not listen to the 20 per cent who make 80 per cent of the noise without taking into consideration what those other 80 per cent want. My constituents are telling me that when it comes to health care, please get on with it.

I do want to talk a little bit tonight about Calgary-West. My constituents are not a demanding bunch. For the most part they are busy earning a good living, driving their children to school and to recreation. Calgary-West is a constituency where 95 per cent of the residences did not exist 25 years ago. As a result, we are still trying to catch up on infrastructure needs like schools and roads. My constituency has a higher percentage of private school spaces per residence than anywhere in the province.

While I'm not opposed to private schools, in fact quite the opposite – the emergence of private schools in this province has forced our public education system to be better – the concern I have is that of choice. My constituents are choosing the private system over the public one because private schools are closer to home than public schools. School boards must re-examine priorities when it comes to keeping open underutilized facilities in older areas of the city at the expense of actually having schools constructed where the majority of the students live. I would encourage the Minister of Education to work with his counterparts in infrastructure and Municipal Affairs to help get this issue rectified.

Another issue I'd like to address tonight is that of seniors, who are all getting older, living longer, and eventually will require more care. In many cases families are looking more and more to government for this care and its added expense. Government needs to examine immediately a system whereby working people are contributing to their end-of-life care during their working years. Like health care our children and grandchildren will not be able to afford the tax base that will be required to financially support us as we all live to be close to a hundred.

Finally, I'd like to congratulate all of the medal winners at the recent Winter Olympics in Torino. Several of those in Torino are constituents, and the world-class training facility, Canada Olympic Park, or COP, hovers over the north end of my constituency. In 1988, when the Olympics were held in Calgary, Canada won exactly zero gold, two silver, and three bronze. However, that total was the best ever achieved at a Winter Olympics. In the following Olympics in Lake Placid and Albertville Canada won seven medals at each. In 1994 in Lillehammer Canada's medal total soared to 13, then to 15 in Nagano, and to 17 in Salt Lake City. It's my contention that this didn't just happen. It occurred because as a legacy of the 1988 Winter Olympics Canadian athletes finally were on as level a playing field for training as the rest of the world.

During the lead-up to the '88 Olympics there was much made of cost overruns and environmental concerns. However, at the end of the day our government and a certain former mayor of Calgary were responsible for the '88 Winter Olympics. The results of staging those Olympics and the training legacy that was left are directly responsible for Canada's continued improvement showing at these games.

Much will be said over the next four years about the Winter Olympics in Vancouver/Whistler. There will be environmental protesters and media stories about cost overruns. In fact, I think it's already started. However, let's please keep our eye on the ball and remember what the games are all about, and that's the athletes. Remember what our athletes did in 2006 mostly as a result of having those facilities because we hosted the games in 1988.

For decades Americans have shown their pride in country by what was achieved on the international sports stage. Let's hope that this year's performance by Canadian athletes in Torino begins to build some of that same pride in our province and our country.

So I would conclude, as I began, by stating that we simply live in the best place I can think of. We need to keep working harder to make it better. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that, I would move that we adjourn and resume sitting tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 9:48 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 28, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/02/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to introduce today to the House a constituent of mine. Mr. Larry Marcotte is an amateur writer who has written a book and recently has presented it to our Premier. I understand that the Premier actually quite enjoyed reading the book. Today is his second visit to our Legislature, and I would like to ask all members to extend our traditional warm welcome to Mr. Marcotte. I'd ask Mr. Marcotte to rise as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly 53 of the very brightest young people that this province has to offer along with some teachers and parents. They are from Our Lady of Victories school in Edmonton-Riverview, and they are, I believe, seated in the public gallery. The students are accompanied by Mrs. Lorraine Williamson, Mr. Mike Marr, Mrs. Christine Engley, Ms Corinne Didrikson-Law, and Mrs. Kathy Crowell. I would ask these students from Our Lady of Victories to rise and to receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of 37 students from St. Mark junior high school in the riding of Edmonton-Glenora. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Lawrence Allarie and Miss Antoinette Falcone, and with them also are Mrs. Stella Gluwchynski, Mr. Joe Simons, and Mrs. Kathryn Hughes. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and to the rest of the Assembly today several members of the rural community who have been impacted by coal-bed methane in their areas, and I would ask them to rise as I introduce them. The first is Mr. Karl Zajec with the Surface Rights Federation in Warburg, Ms Jessica Ernst, Ms Fiona Lauridsen, Mrs. Brenda Zimmerman, and Mr. Dale Zimmerman. I'd ask all the members to give them a round of welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're joined in the gallery today by my oldest son, Craig. I would like all hon. members to show him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to be able to stand today and introduce 20 employees of the Department of Energy that work on the gas royalty calculations. This is the group that's making sure that we bring in all of those royalties, that we receive our fair share. This year we had over $14 billion of energy revenues come in. They are part of the group that help us facilitate that happening day in and day out. So I'd them if they'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Privatization

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is hell-bent on driving through bad health policy. Despite warnings from inside and outside the province that private health delivery increases costs and decreases the quality of health care delivery, this government pushes ahead blinded by ideology. Make no mistake; this is the Premier's way for health. My questions are to the Premier. In fact, another math question for the Premier: when you have two doctors handling the demand for public care and you allow one doctor to leave to take on the demand of private care, how many doctors do you have left taking care of the public queue?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is the subject of the consultation. I would invite the Liberal opposition to phone the minister, sit down with the minister, and provide the minister with their ideas. I haven't heard any of their ideas yet. Now, there will be a whole month available, and if they can't say it in five minutes, there's something wrong with their ability to communicate because anyone should be able to say anything in five minutes. That's a long, long time. So if they have any good ideas, let us know.

Mr. Taylor: Fifteen seconds.

Mr. Klein: Fifteen seconds. There's the guy from radio. He knows what 15 seconds is all about. It's good. Fifteen seconds is good.

So, Mr. Speaker, if they have any ideas, phone the minister, sit down with the minister, and communicate those ideas.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the Minister of Health and Wellness, who I hope will give some straight answers here: how will this minister explain to a small child why her mother has to wait months for a knee replacement while the wealthy mother of a classmate can get the same surgery in weeks?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think it's unprecedented in Canada that a government has invested, as we have, $20 million into the hip and knee replacement project, has created a tremendous amount of access, improved access, to health care. In the third-quarter announcement by the Minister of Finance we announced even more dollars that would be available for improving access, expanding that project, and looking at both the breast cancer and prostate cancer issues as well as mental health. So no matter what happens with anybody who chooses to deliver private care, this government stands for improving a strong public health care system.

Dr. Taft: Again to the minister: if you stand for improving the public health system, why don't you just improve the public health system instead of dismantling it? This is a disastrous policy.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, since last year, since the Chaoulli decision in Quebec . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair has recognized a question from one and has recognized someone to answer the question. We're going to have civility, and we're going to have good manners. I've recognized the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Canadians have recognized since last June, when the Chaoulli decision rendered a decision that said that a Quebecer should not be stopped from buying private insurance in order to be able to make a choice on their own behalf for something that can enable them to look after their own health care needs in their own way – for me and for many other Canadians it raised the spectre of what, in fact, could be purchased with private insurance, and should we stop people in Canada from accessing or making individual choices based on their perception of their choice and their want?

Mr. Speaker, this health care system will always be here for people who need it, but people who want it in an accelerated fashion should have an opportunity of choice, and I would suggest that they shouldn't just have to buy private insurance and purchase that service in Quebec.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Water Act clearly states that it's the duty of the government to "manage . . . water resources to sustain our environment and to ensure a healthy environment and high quality of life." However, due to the rapid expansion of coal-bed methane operations in Alberta our water quality is quite literally coming under fire. If you doubt this, just ask Dale and Brenda Zimmerman, Jessica Ernst, and Fiona Lauridsen, three Albertans who used to have safe water to drink but after coal-bed methane activities near their property now have water so contaminated that even their livestock refuses to drink it. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Does the minister deny that our drinking water is threatened by shallow fracturing operations?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in this province we've been drilling for natural gas for – I don't know – decades. It's been certainly 50-plus years where we've had a substantive amount of activity in the regulation of oil and gas activity. It's true that there is methane in lots of seams throughout this province, sometimes in our wells and so forth, but they're not all related to the drilling activity. What is true, though, is that we have a very thorough, excellent regulatory regime, of which the Energy and Utilities Board heads up the regulatory function, to which those things can be adjudicated. Very important in all these issues, despite any assertions, is that they be fact based. It is very much in the interest of the development of this industry that we get to and ensure the safety of the water supply. So, yes, we do support the safe development of all of the oil and gas activity in this province, and they're doing an excellent job.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that published industry reports have said that it takes just one part per million of methane to make water at risk of explosion, can the minister deny that Dale Zimmerman's water's methane content of 75,800 parts per million poses an immediate risk to his family, his home, and his livestock?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I've not had the opportunity myself to ever receive such information, so I don't know how to respond to just an assertion. It is very important that we do take these things very seriously. We'd be happy to receive that information. We'd be more than happy to ensure that the Energy and Utilities Board, who are the experts in these matters, who can ensure that the appropriate regulation and the appropriate enforcement happens if any problem occurs – so I'd be happy to receive that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister's department has received submissions and information for months on this issue, will this minister spend a week drinking and bathing in the water from the wells in question? Put your money where your mouth is.

The Speaker: This is really not Stampede Wrestling. The hon. minister?

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The coal-bed methane industry is rapidly developing across Alberta, yet while this increased production is occurring, this government has failed to adequately legislate regulations around CBM drilling and fracturing that protect water wells, that test water wells before they're fractured. Because of this lack of accountability from government and industry some Albertans, including those in the Assembly today, are living with contaminated water that contains methane levels so high that they can now ignite their tap water. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that the minister stated yesterday in the House that he does not support CBM activities without adequate water protection and regulations, will he decisively respond to concerns of the Zimmermans, Ms Ernst, Ms Lauridsen, and all other Albertans affected by CBM operations right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question because it is a very serious and a very important issue, that all Albertans enjoy safe drinking water. I think what is also equally important is that since we were first notified in October by some of the families that you've mentioned, we've been working very closely with them as Alberta Environment in terms of looking at alternative water options for them. We're committed to doing that, as we've indicated to them.

Also, it's important as we go forward to develop a baseline of information in terms of what the impact is from drilling and also what the impact is from the natural flow of methane that, of course, takes place based on how this world has been created. So my commitment in terms of working with the families when it was first brought to our attention: we're doing that. I'm actually looking forward to recommendations very quickly in the future that will be going to the EUB relative to the issue of how we go forward regarding automatic baseline testing for what the hon. member has brought up.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Minister, some of these individuals have been calling since October and are not getting return calls from your department. Can you explain that and why they are paying for their own bulk transport of water?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate to the hon. member and to the families that are here today: it is a very serious issue. As Alberta Environment I will use every fibre of energy in my body to assist this family relative to safe drinking water now and into the future. I'm not aware of any returned phone call, but I can assure you that we are working with them and we will continue to work with them because this is a very important issue to this family and to many other families that have been impacted, be it by the natural flow or because of what is being asserted relative to what is taking place in the water supply.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Minister, this is an urgent public health and safety issue. Will you support a moratorium/cessation of all shallow fracturing of coal now?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time I can say no, but let me be very specific on why I say no. Number one, we are working with the families to get them safe drinking water. Number two, we want to develop a baseline of information relative to whether this is naturally occurring or whether this is the result of drilling, that the hon. member has described. As we go forward, I anticipate that there will be a baseline requirement relative to determining the questions that the hon. member is mentioning.

In the meantime, I'm using my energy to get these people safe drinking water. We will do everything in our power to get them that, and then we can come to conclusive evidence in terms of: is it naturally flowing, or is it the result of drilling? I don't have that answer as of yet, but it's a very important question that we are committed to getting the answer to very quickly on the recommendations that I've made reference to.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the last provincial election the Premier said that an election was not the time to talk about health care policy: shades of Kim Campbell. He promised to consult with Albertans before the government made any clear health care plans, and that has not happened. My question is to the Premier. Why did you tell the people of Alberta during the last election that you would consult with them on health care before making a decision, and why did you not keep your promise?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness held a news conference today – and I don't know if the hon. leader of the third party or the hon. Leader of the Opposition was there, but certainly they could have been if they wanted to – where she outlined the public consultation process that will take place over the next month.

An Hon. Member: A month?

Mr. Klein: A month. As I said, if the mouth over here can't say what he means in five minutes, then there is something wrong with his communication skills.

Mr. Martin: Five minutes is a long time for you.

Mr. Klein: Five minutes? I can say it in 15 seconds. I'm used to it. You know, the minister will begin the consultations immediately. As I said, there are 15 seconds. If they have any good ideas, send them over.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the government has already decided that there's going to be opting out of the health care system by physicians, that there's going to be private insurance, that there's going to be private delivery, what consultation is the Premier trying to convince us is going to take place? It's already decided.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's our idea for the time being, but if they have any better ideas, send them over.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, during the television debate during the election I asked the Premier whether or not they had a plan for privatizing health care in this province, and he denied it. Why didn't he tell the people the truth?

Mr. Klein: That is the truth, Mr. Speaker: there was no plan at that particular time. I did say that health care costs are out of line. Ask his cousins in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. You know, ask Shirley Douglas. Ask Premier Calvert, and ask Premier Doer. Ask the health ministers in those provinces. Health care costs are getting out of line.

An Hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Klein: No, they won't tell the truth, Mr. Speaker. They won't tell the truth. They won't talk about health care costs going up between 9 and 20 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Is that a hundred billion again?

Mr. Klein: No. I'm sorry. It's $1.6 billion, Mr. Speaker. They don't think that's much money. It's peanuts to them because their solution is to spend, spend, spend, and spend more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Insurance for the Disabled

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Persons with disabilities have expressed concern that they'll be unable to purchase private insurance to cover nonemergency procedures because they have pre-existing conditions. If private health and medication insurance is made available, will persons with disabilities be disadvantaged by not being able to access the insurance or by having to pay higher premiums?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are still doing considerable work or, rather, our department officials are still working with Aon to analyze and do actuarial positioning and modelling of what it would look like if insurance was offered for service.

The thing that I want to stress is that we are not making any decision about insurance with this consultation document. That would be something we would bring to Albertans at a later time. What we are talking about in this document is making sure that Albertans know that they always have a public health care system they can count on when they need it. People with disabilities, with a pre-existing condition that have medical needs will get those needs, and they will not have to depend on accessing insurance to get those needs. Our Premier has said that your access to the public health care system will not be based on your ability to pay. Today, Mr. Speaker, this document is for consultation, and I look forward to hearing from all Albertans. When they need that system, they'll get it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loughheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: because persons with disabilities often have compromised systems and may require immediate surgery for a problem that other Albertans would consider nonemergent, will their unique circumstances be considered?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. It would be a point, obviously, that the doctor would evaluate. If it's that necessary, they would get that service. People who spend a long time, for example, in a wheelchair or in other devices have pressure points. For them a sore is a very nasty indicator of immediate need, and they would get that surgery or that kind of medical treatment right away without having to wait. That's quite different from a person who has a wound who is healthy and well and doesn't have some of those neurological or other physical impediments.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the minister of health. Given that the minister told reporters at last spring's Health Symposium that, quote, there's no plan to privatize parts of the system, absolutely none whatsoever, end quote, can the minister outline what evidence she's received since then that has caused her to change her mind completely?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is not about a change of mind. This is about looking to the future, about what options are available to make this system more responsive to Albertans, to provide Albertans choice, and to provide Albertans an opportunity to gain options of service, if they want them, at a more rapid rate than the public can provide.

Mr. Speaker, although I've heard people from the opposite side deny this, it's very clear to me that after the Chaoulli decision there's a need for every government across this country to look at exactly what that decision will mean in the future because of the opportunity it suggests, that to purchase private insurance gives you the full option as an individual to access care at your discretion when you need it. We wouldn't be talking about these things, but the high and rising cost of health care has meant that we've had to restrict services in areas, put caps on things like ophthalmology, like hips and knees. For those services we have long waiting lists, that take over a year. For some people this is just not a reasonable assumption.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how does allowing private doctors to cream off the easiest surgeries for ready cash and dump the complicated, expensive cases in the public system make the public system more affordable or more efficient?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have read our document thoroughly. It is a document for public consultation. It does not say that we're allowing people to cream off anything. It says: under very controlled conditions, with a business case. We are searching for a middle ground between public service and private service, enabling some doctors under controlled circumstances for certain procedures to provide a business plan which can be evaluated on two bases: first, that it not compromise the public health care system and, secondly, that it fulfill a need for building capacity where we need it. That is the very clear outline for what we are suggesting if doctors should work in both systems.

Mr. Speaker, there's one more important issue. In Quebec they have the luxury of gathering people from other parts of the country from a much higher population base, so they can have doctors that work in two systems, some in the public and some in the private. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member is recognized.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the minister of health: given that the stakeholders, the opposition, and the public have all advocated for public consultations, more than just a survey on a website, why did you decide against conducting the public consultations, as the Premier suggested and promised?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will be doing a very public consultation. I have already started the consultation with various stakeholder groups. We will have this document available for every Albertan to respond to this government. We will have opportunities in all parts of the province, both in the regions' libraries and, as well, I plan to conduct meetings where it's reasonable to assume that the stakeholders want to have a chance to represent their views to us. Beyond that, in the formulation of regulations after the legislation is passed, we will have a very formalized consultation period on regulations. At this stage, where this is policy, we are expanding on the 13 points listed on the website last July and asking people to continue responding relative to the policies we're putting in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Health Services for Rural Albertans

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta has always been harnessed with the challenges of sparsity and distance yet having a very high-risk occupation area. Rural health authorities have always struggled to provide equitable services at a cost comparable to their counterparts in urban Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain what this government is doing in the proposed plan to improve access to specialized health services in rural Alberta across the province?

Ms Evans: We will be working on a workforce plan that gives opportunity for specialist services in rural Alberta. Further, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health has the telehealth network, which is one of the largest in the country if not the largest, with 260 sites across the province to support the capacity of rural physicians, something that will make health assessment services easier to gain and improve the diagnosis of patients. I think the telehealth network along with the work that we're doing on a workforce plan and the rural physician action plan will continue to build capacity in rural Alberta.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear about telehealth. My question is in regard to telehealth. Is there going to be an expansion of the telehealth program, or are we building at the same level that we are right now?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. We're looking at some expansion in clinical areas, including diagnosing lung cancer, monitoring heart and dialysis patients, and responding to emergencies of a variety in nature hundreds of miles away. We believe that we can expand on the specialized nature of service delivery and that we can improve the local community support network. A good part of this relates to the training and supports we provide. In this policy framework the discussion about interregional co-operation and the use of rural hospitals in partnership with urban hospitals, particularly large urban hospitals, should help us with this task.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental, again to the Minister of Health and Wellness, is in regard to the recruitment, and I specifically say the recruitment of the support professionals such as physiotherapists and speech therapists. Can she tell me how the plan will assist in this manner?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we found particularly challenging with speech therapists is that frequently they tend to go where their partners go, and sometimes communities can lose three speech therapists within a six-month period. That becomes very difficult. So one of the things we're looking at is creating a virtual primary care network where support services for things like speech therapy can be provided from another geographic centre, and we can expand on provision to off-site service delivery under agreements between the two regional health authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Child Care System

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government chose to neglect the child care sector for years and only decided to increase its support after receiving funding from Ottawa in 2005. Now with this government's Tory cousins in power the province's child care workers are left wondering if this government will once again abandon them. My first question is for the Deputy Premier. In the Premier's recent meeting with the Prime Minister did he make any attempt to defend Alberta's five-point plan?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has informed us that he had a very, very productive discussion with all of the Premiers from across Canada and the new Prime Minister. Definitely the child care file was discussed. Remember that this was an introductory meeting. It was a very short meeting, but certainly the Premier had the opportunity at that time to reiterate the importance of this subject to Mr. Harper.

Mrs. Mather: To the Minister of Children's Services: what stakeholders has the minister met with since the federal election to discuss how the new federal program could impact on them?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the department has been very good in regard to trying to get the message out about the changes that the Harper government is proposing. I can tell you that the stakeholders in this province know that at any time they can pick up the phone and that if they want to meet with me, my door is always open.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: if Alberta abandons its five-point plan, what assurances can the minister offer to child care workers that their wages won't return to the levels that the minister herself recognized as insufficient?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that first of all we have to acknowledge that this is a work in progress. We still haven't met with Prime Minister Harper. I'm looking forward to having a meeting with my counterpart next week. We're hearing different scenarios across the country, and I think that it's important as the Minister of Children's Services on behalf of Alberta to give her the courtesy of meeting her in a face-to-face meeting. We have some questions that we need to have answered in regard to the child care plan. I think it's important that we talk about a win-win-win situation for everybody, a win especially for the families and children in this province. There are many questions that need to be answered.

I can tell the hon. member right now that we have received $70 million from the federal government, and we will be receiving $66 million next year. We provide approximately $70 million out of our own budget. We're looking forward to a discussion with my colleague from Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Continuing Care Insurance

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer as I travelled around the province on the task force on continuing care with my colleagues from Calgary-Foothills and Lethbridge-East, we heard many concerns from seniors about supportive living, assisted living, continuing care situations, and also nursing home situations. They had some concerns about their ability to continue to access health services, especially under the new proposed health policy framework. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could you explain whether the ministry has undertaken any work on examining whether or not continuing care insurance is an option for Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the preliminary review of the Aon model identifies that continuing care may be in the future – and that's the operative phrase: may be in the future – an area we could look at. I have to advise the hon. member that one thing really concerns me.

Today 10 per cent of Albertans are seniors, and for some of those families it's a struggle today to make sure that we have the right kind of opportunity for them to receive either continuing care in their homes or placement outside their homes. So in the future when we move to about one-third of Albertans being seniors, we're going to be challenged even further to find ways and means. If we were to introduce any type of insurance or health savings plan in the future, it would have to be done with sufficient notice, and it would have to be done with a population that was young enough to see an opportunity to build that for the future.

Mr. Speaker, the discussions so far have been very preliminary. They have been so preliminary that we haven't had a chance to even test any models. I would say to people who are seniors today or people who are in that demographic that they shouldn't fear that anything would be imposed on them as a result of this policy discussion. The first line is putting patients first. We intend to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question: if we were to have this continuing care insurance, would it actually reduce health care costs for Alberta, for the government?

The Speaker: That's pretty speculative: "if," "would." Try it if you wish.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, you're right that it will take some period of time to tell, and I think that it will have to be balanced in review and discussion of other options and other opportunities. What this document talks about in consultation is: what opportunities would Albertans suggest that might help us to offset costs in the future and make health care sustainable?

Mr. Prins: A further question: will it be necessary for seniors to buy any kind of insurance at all to continue to access the health services that they currently get?

Ms Evans: No, Mr. Speaker. We have made a commitment. We currently do not charge a health care premium to seniors. Seniors today are receiving service in a way that I would imagine that in the foreseeable future they'll be able to receive it.

The one thing we are looking at is that currently in the hospitals in acute care settings we do keep seniors for the purpose of providing the medications because in that hospital setting they receive the medication at no charge. If we could allow them to go home and receive the benefit of living at home and receive the medication at no charge in their home, many would choose to not stay any longer in the hospital but to return and live with their loved ones. It is one of the options we're considering.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Strategies for Responsible Gaming

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April of 2004 the government received a report commissioned from researcher Harold Wynne on the effectiveness of the so-called responsible gaming features on VLTs. The report concluded that the responsible gaming features, which the government has bragged about endlessly, did not cause players "to reduce or limit their duration of play or the amount of money they spend," nor did they help the player "keep track of time and money spent playing the VLTs." In short, the responsible gaming features were deemed not effective. My question is for the Minister of Gaming. Why does the government continue to sell the myth that responsible gaming features are working when this report and many other reports like it prove that they are of little or no value at all?

Mr. Graydon: Well, you should maybe quote the entire report instead of picking out just the specific paragraphs that suit your favour. Also in that report were some numbers on the awareness, whether people had really paid attention or had even noticed that there were responsible gaming features on these machines. A very, very high percentage of the people said: yes, we know that the phone number is there for AADAC; we know that there's a scrolling on the screen which tells us that we've been at the machine for a certain period of time.

The report also said that they would continue with this research. It's a very preliminary report that was issued last May, but the encouraging thing in that report is that people had noticed what we were trying to do.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: why did the Gaming department sit on this report for nearly two years? Is it because you didn't like what was in the report?

Mr. Graydon: I believe the report was and is available on the Internet. We had actually a request – I believe it was a FOIP request – for the report, and we said: it's on the Internet; go ahead and fill your boots.

Mr. Tougas: When will this government institute real controls on gaming machines like slowing the rate of play or cutting back on the hours of operation instead of these cosmetic measures?

Mr. Graydon: I guess that we'd wait for some real proof that the measures that he's talking about are effective. Some other provinces are trying that, but at this point in time they've been unable to say that it's working or not working. Let's do the research and then react on good, positive, solid research.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under an agreement with the previous federal government Alberta is receiving $489 million over five years for child care. The federal monies are funding long overdue improvements in Alberta's child care system, including increases in the income threshold for child care subsidies, wage supplements for child care workers, and improved accreditation standards for child care centres. The minister has conceded that much. All of these enhancements will be reversed if the Harper government is allowed to get away with tearing up this agreement. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that provinces like Quebec and Manitoba are aggressively protecting their child care programs from the ravages of the Harper neo-con government, why is this government rolling over and playing dead?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, what he's saying isn't true; I'm sorry to say that. This government has been very, very aggressive in regard to doing what Albertans wanted when we started negotiating with the federal Liberals. We are as of right now business as usual. As I explained earlier, we have $70 million from the federal government this year. We have $66 million next year. We currently have in our own provincial budget that we are using for child care another $70 million.

There are lots of questions that I need to ask my federal counterpart about many, many issues in regard to the child care that they're proposing, including a hundred million dollars on an aboriginal initiative, a hundred million dollars that was part of a data strategy. I'm meeting with the federal minister next week. I can tell you one thing: this minister and our government isn't rolling over for anybody.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister stand up to her federal cousins in Ottawa and tell her counterpart next week and demand from her that Alberta children are no less equal than children in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba when it comes to accessing high-quality child care and early childhood development programs?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that this minister stood up against the former minister, Minister Dryden, when we were in negotiations a year ago January. My goal is to go and have a face-to-face with my federal minister, understand exactly what they're proposing, listen to what she has to say, tell her what Alberta does in regard to our five-point plan, and ask her many, many other questions that need to be answered, including the creation of I believe it's 245,000 daycare spaces across this country. As the minister responsible I am going to meet with my federal counterpart. I'm going to listen to her.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say one thing, if I may, please. Albertans endorsed the Harper government in the last federal election overwhelmingly on their platform.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has already sandbagged his own minister's position on bargaining with the federal government, what are the plans when she meets with the minister next week in Ottawa? How is she going to deal with a weakened position, thanks to the Premier's statement yesterday?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I don't believe that our Premier has sandbagged anything. The Premier and I had a very good discussion before he went to Ottawa. Again, Mr. Speaker, I think the position for me at this particular time is to listen to what the federal government has to say, then bring forward Alberta's point of view so she can clearly understand all of the things that we brought forward under this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across my constituency and, indeed, across the north many communities are facing severe shortages of doctors. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. If we're going to allow doctors to opt out of the public system to practise in a private system, how can we maintain or improve access to the public system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the things I'd like to say about this hon. member in particular is that he's paid a lot of attention to the issues surrounding the workforce in the north, and it has been very challenging to say the least. We will have to work with each individual health region. We will have to use the health region's sensitivity to the capacity they need before we will make any decision that would enable physicians to move out of communities where we really, desperately need them. We would have to find alternative approaches to delivering with other doctors available to that community.

Mr. Speaker, in our review of this policy I'm hopeful that we'll have some good suggestions about how we enable people to move off the public system into a private system when they want the service and enable us to keep that public system strong for, I would estimate, the 95 or maybe 97 per cent that want us to keep sustaining the public system. So we will not do anything to compromise the capacity for rural Alberta to have proper physicians in place for people that need that care.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: I'm wondering if the establishment of a private system is going to draw doctors out of the north and out of the rural areas, or does the minister envision that private services will be delivered in facilities outside of the major urban centres?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that will depend entirely on what we see coming forward. If you look at the use of some of the rural hospitals, there may be opportunities for rural hospitals to become centres of excellence in delivering a particular type of care, and I think we'd have to look at the business plan that would come forward. There are some of the larger hospitals that may have capacity; some, none at all. So it will depend, quite frankly, on the community in question.

We're looking at a rural physician action plan that will enable us to support through other, alternative arrangements more physicians in rural Alberta, and despite having the shortages that we have faced recently, we've in fact been a leader in successfully recruiting health care professionals. We will continue to build on that, Mr. Speaker. We have a workforce planning committee that's continuing to do that planning so that in the implementation of any of these new policies we're enabling physicians to serve in the north, and at no time do we intend for the public system in the north to be eroded because of any type of alternative approach and delivery.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental again to the same minister: can the minister inform us if there's anything in the policy that was tabled today that in her mind will affect, hopefully positively, the retention and recruitment of doctors in the north?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I want to go through a number of things that will perhaps provide some assurance. The rural family medicine network also offers 60 rural residency positions; 30 of these are in their second year, and I think that that's a positive. The provincial nominee program that we have in place helps to fast-track highly skilled health employees. Since April 2002 the program has placed 190 foreign-trained physicians and health care professionals in rural areas. We'll continue to build on that, and talking about using our health force wisely and expanding the scope of professionals in policy number 2 is a part of it. Last fall the medical school bursary program began funding programs for 10 new students from rural areas for tuition. We'll continue to build on that program, and since 2000 we have increased the number of physicians in the province by about 20.5 per cent.

That isn't to say that we can't do better. That isn't to say that we won't get good ideas in this health policy framework to continue building on that, and, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to receiving more ideas about how we can build our physician numbers to serve the north.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Professional Organization for School Principals

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday the Education minister justified his series of endless consultations on the Learning Commission recommendations as – I quote from Hansard – being “very open and public and transparent,” yet I have a letter from his ministry denying access to 229 pages on the commission recommendations, and I will table that this afternoon. To the Minister of Education: is it the minister's policy to say that he is transparent when the real decision has already been made and it is described in the pages of this report?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the FOIP Act clearly outlines the process for accessing information. I don't, frankly, deal with it, but if there's some particular information that the hon. member wishes to have, just give me a call and I'll see what I can do for you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you have talked about this report publicly, why won't you make it available immediately to all Albertans and the ATA?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm not even sure I have a copy of the report that he's talking about at this minute, but perhaps he can just refresh my memory of it. If he's talking about recommendation 78, which deals with principals in or out of the ATA, I just sent an e-mail around to school board chairs indicating where things were at with respect to that and that we would be engaging in yet additional consultations during the month of March because this is a highly, highly contentious issue. The point of requiring principals to withdraw from the ATA or not has serious implications on the system.

Now, government did accept the initial recommendation and also indicated that it would appoint an individual to tour the province, talk with principals and other stakeholders. That has been done. The information has come back, and now it's being analyzed, Mr. Speaker, for its implications on things like infrastructure and school space, things like teaching and whether or not a significant number of principals are also teaching part-time, and if they were displaced from that, what the cost implications would be to hiring new teachers to replace them and so on. It's a very, very complicated issue, but if the member would like to chat further about it, I'm always available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Should Albertans assume your policies are already decided on this matter and the so-called consultation is really just an excuse, or are you suffering from decision paralysis?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, there are about three questions there. Take any one.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'll answer all of them, Mr. Speaker, because I'm just in that kind of mood. All joking aside, however, I think I've already indicated that this issue did get significant time from our government and also from the gentlemen and the committee members that my predecessor appointed who had the incredible task of travelling virtually the entire province, meeting with all the stakeholders they possibly could meet with, and I've met with them as well. I've listened to their presentation, and quite frankly there are a number of good positions to be taken for the decision to be made to remove principals from the ATA, and there are an equal number of good reasons to not do that.

Now, what we have said in response and have been very clear about is that in the month of March, which starts, according to my calendar, tomorrow, we will engage in the final round of consultations on this process, and we hope to bring the matter to a conclusion one way or the other.

I might just add this one final point, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of issues on the education plate at the moment, and we have to be very careful to slow down where we must some of those initiatives and speed up others where we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Flexibility in Physicians' Scope of Practice

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. The health policy framework announced today talks about going to a different model of primary care. One of my constituents recently told me he'd have to wait five months for a physical from his family doctor. The framework proposes that the next time I need to go see my family doctor, it might not be my doctor I see. Does this mean that under this new framework I won't get to see a doctor if that's my preference?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the primary care network provides an opportunity for people to still see their family doctor. That doctor still is their family doctor, but it enables them to also see other physicians or team members that can provide service to the patient when the patient so chooses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What other health care providers can treat me other than my doctor?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, you could find an advanced nurse practitioner. We have physical therapists, we have social workers, and we have mental health therapists in many of these primary care networks. So we look at a blend of professionals, a team of professionals that collaborate in the treatment and can serve the person depending on their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third supplemental: will my doctor have access to my treatment records?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the intent of our investment in the electronic health records is to make sure that we have a seamless delivery of laboratory tests to support not only the doctor but to make sure that we don't have duplication of those tests. The investment in the third quarter of additional funds will, we hope, accelerate the electronic health record and the opportunity for the physician to use that record, and I think that will help us reduce the costs in the system and make it possible, yes, for this patient to receive that information and the up-to-date treatment necessary.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'll call upon the first of a number to participate today in Members' Statements, but in keeping with our practice this year of providing you with historical mementos of the past, I provide you with this quote.

It is not only a privilege but a bounded duty on every member of the house to vote according to his honest convictions and judgment and there is nothing in our rules or constitution that I ever heard of that prevents members from doing so.

This was found in the Edmonton Bulletin, March 3, 1922, and it was provided by a Member of the Legislative Assembly called John Robert Boyle, who was born in Ontario in 1871 and died in Ottawa in 1936.

A barrister and an Edmonton alderman, he was elected to the First Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1905 in the Sturgeon constituency as a Liberal. In 1909 he was elected by acclamation and was re-elected in 1913 and 1917. Mr. Boyle served as Deputy Speaker from 1906 to 1909, as Minister of Education from 1912 to 1918, and as Attorney General from 1918 to 1921.

In the 1921 general election Mr. Boyle ran in two different constituencies. He was defeated in Sturgeon but elected as one of five members in Edmonton's multimember riding. Mr. Boyle was recognized as Leader of the Opposition from 1922 to 1924, then resigned to accept a judicial appointment in the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta. Notably, the village of Boyle is named after him.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of several.

Alberta Initiative for School Improvement

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout our province's history Alberta has a reputation for innovation and inspiration in our classrooms. Today I'm pleased to highlight the Alberta initiative for school improvement, also known as AISI, a unique program that sets Alberta apart from other provinces. AISI is a prime example of our government's ongoing commitment to promoting innovation and continuous improvement in student learning. AISI gives school jurisdictions the freedom to explore new ideas in applied settings and the choice of which projects they wish to undertake for local priorities. It challenges school authorities to be innovative and creative and to try research-based approaches in their classrooms.

AISI encourages partnerships with teachers, parents, administrators, trustees, universities, and government. In my own constituency of Calgary-Shaw we have many wonderful examples of AISI projects, two of which include the distributed learning program offered by the Calgary Catholic school district, which focuses on increasing student engagement, improving high school completion rates by using multimedia resources and digital environments in the classroom, and the enhancing teacher capacity to improve students' learning program offered by the Calgary board of education, where teachers across the district join in professional learning communities to focus on effective strategies to improve learning and literacy skills in English and French arts programs.

AISI recognizes that one size does not fit all. Educational needs vary across the province, and there are many different ways to accomplish our goals. Since AISI was initiated in 1999, about 1,300 projects have been funded by our government. In the 2005-2006 school year $70 million has been provided to AISI.

Thank you to everyone who has helped make AISI such a success, yet another demonstration of why Alberta's education system is the best in Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Tori Holmes

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and celebrate an amazing young woman from my constituency. On Thursday, February 23, of this year Tori Holmes of Devon became the first Canadian woman to successfully row across the Atlantic Ocean. She and her companion, Paul Gleeson of Ireland, docked their 23-foot wooden boat, the Christina, at Nelson's dockyard in Antigua after nearly 85 days in the open sea.

This couple now joins only 141 courageous people, 14 of whom are women, who have completed the Woodvale Atlantic Rowing Race. The race, which begins at San Sebastian in the Canary Islands, is the most extreme endurance event in the world, covering nearly 3,000 miles of Atlantic Ocean. In addition to challenging their own limits of mental and physical endurance, rowers also face potential gale waves that can reach over two storeys in height.

Not only has this amazing young woman achieved an incredible feat; she has done so with a focus on a larger issue: to raise funds to help support children in the Third World. The couple entered the rowing race in support of Concern, a nondenominational agency currently working in 27 countries across the world. Concern's work focuses on the key areas of humanitarian disasters, long-term development, education, and advocacy.

This race is merely the latest in Tori's humanitarian efforts. After graduating from John Maland high school in Devon, she went to Bangladesh, where she volunteered for Agriteam Canada. She also volunteered for UNICEF in Bangladesh. In 2003 she and Paul cycled across Australia, a trip of 5,000 kilometres, Mr. Speaker, and raised $400,000 for charity.

I believe that this young lady embodies the best of humanity and the Canadian spirit. Please join me in saluting a great young Albertan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Utilization Formula

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Schools are the heart of their community. They serve more than a strictly academic function. They are the gathering, the celebrating place for a variety of events from recreation to culture. Closing a school deeply affects everyone in the community, whether or not they have children or grandchildren attending the school.

Where is the motivation for young families to revitalize older communities if there is no school serving as a magnet to draw them in? Ironically, it is the inner-city communities, that this government forces to pay the highest education property taxes, which are frequently the first in line to lose their schools.

Last night concerned parents and community members met at Jerry Potts elementary school, where I began my teaching career in 1971. Potts is one of the many schools on the government-forced CBE closure consideration list. Tomorrow night parents whose children attend the currently overcrowded Varsity Acres elementary school will be put through a similarly frustrating experience. Meetings are also scheduled to determine the fate of students at Brentwood elementary school and Juno Beach Academy.

In total, four Calgary-Varsity constituency schools are going through unnecessary turmoil caused by this government's extremely flawed space utilization formula, which considers hallways as teachable space. Many more schools continue to be closed than opened, a testament to the formula's futility. While locally elected, government-handcuffed trustees bear the brunt of parental frustration and anger over school closures, a seemingly endless succession of regressive education ministers continue to wash their hands of the problems their utilization policies have confounded.

I encourage all parents to contact both government and opposition MLAs to make sure that the all too familiar closure stories are actually being heard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Gerald Côté

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has had a long, proud tradition of excellence in sports. This was shown again in the recent Winter Olympics. This province has produced some of the finest athletes the world has ever seen, and it gives me great pleasure to offer a few words of congratulation in recognition of one of them. Gerald Côté was born and raised in the town of Falher and moved to Edmonton in 1996 to pursue a career in professional dance. He has been extremely successful and is currently the co-owner of Dance Central, the largest dance studio in Edmonton.

He has also recently achieved recognition on the world stage. In December of last year he and his partner Annick Paquet won first place at the North American championships in Las Vegas. This victory paved the way for Mr. Côté and Ms Paquet to compete at the 2006 United Country Western Dance World Championships in Stockholm, Sweden. Competing against 700 other participants, Mr. Côté and his partner performed several flawless routines showcasing several different styles of dance. They performed the waltz, the two-step, the west coast swing, the nightclub two-step, and at the end of the competition they were declared winners in the pro-pro showcase male diamond category.

The drive of Mr. Côté is truly remarkable. He has attained this honour without any sponsorship. He has been motivated solely by his love of dance and his dedication to excellence. As a result of his hard work Mr. Côté has attained the title of world champion, an extremely rare and noteworthy accolade. The personal commitment to excellence shown by Mr. Côté is something that we as Albertans can all aspire to. With his achievements he has joined the ranks of the many Alberta athletes who have brought honour and recognition to our province. In recognition of his victory and overall commitment to athletic excellence I would ask my colleagues to join me in extending my heartfelt congratulations to a truly unique and noteworthy Albertan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Hungária Gala Ball

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about one of the most elegant social events in Calgary and in Canada, I must say. It's the Hungária Gala Ball. It took place last Saturday at the Westin hotel in Calgary with the attendance of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and many distinguished guests. I had the honour of representing our Premier at the event, and they told me that it is the largest ever in their 50 years of history. For the last 50 years organized under the sponsorship of the Hungarian Veterans' Association, the Hungária Gala Ball has been a showcase for Hungarian culture in the Canadian community. It is through the tireless efforts of the members of the Hungarian Veterans' Association and many Hungarian cultural groups in Calgary that the gala has become what it is today. The ball's distinct European and Hungarian character adds to the multicultural fabric of Canadian community or Alberta diversity.

After World War II a wave of Hungarians immigrated into Canada. With the help of many existing Hungarian churches as well as Hungarian associations these Hungarians were able to start a new life here in Canada, in Alberta. The former soldiers founded the Hungarian Veterans' Association, the Calgary chapter, under the leadership of Mr. Fülöpp József. The association held annual dinners, followed by a dance, and now it has become the most elegant gala in Calgary and in Alberta, they say, too.

I would like to say thank you to Mr. József and his wife, Ilona Varvizi; Julius Kiss; Tibor Fekete; Dora Magas and her late husband, Istvan Magas; Michael Rose; Alex Poda; and all the members of the wild rose Hungarian cultural group.

Thank you.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government has three basic roles: first, to ensure the protection of people and the environment on which we all depend; secondly, to ensure the ethical development of business, human, and material resources; third, to ensure the fair distribution of wealth and benefits to our society. This government has failed in relation to the first two of these, protection of people and the environment and the ethical development of business and resources for the well-being of all.

The experiences of landowners in relation to oil and gas companies increasingly illustrates the degree to which government is willing to let industry map the course of development in this province. This is always touted to be in the public interest, of course, meaning income and jobs. Coal-bed methane is the most recent example which has taken Alberta by storm after a storm of its own in the United States left a much-depleted environment. We are reassured here by our leaders that we have learned the lessons of the U.S. in the Horseshoe Canyon formation of east and central Alberta. Tell that to the citizens of Rosebud, landowners around Wildwood, Beiseker, and Wetaskiwin as they experience their life source, groundwater, being poisoned by methane and drilling fluids, leaving people frightened of explosion, paying the price in human health and animal costs, costs of trucking in water for themselves, and land value in the basement.

This is not possible, you say? The EUB is strictly required to protect all groundwater. Alberta Environment has the Water Act: no person shall cause contamination of water bodies. Convenient for industry: no one can know the groundwater has been contaminated by fracturing superficial coal because it wasn't tested before the drilling.

So many questions: why is there no inventory and monitoring of water wells in the province? Why does industry do the monitoring of its own activities in relation to the environment? Why, indeed, is there no inventory and plan for groundwater management in 2006?

Government has failed Albertans in the name of facilitating business in its most basic responsibilities to its people: the protection of life and our most precious life support, water. It is time for government to be held accountable, balancing environmental, health, and social values with the economy.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you have a petition?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with 83 signatures on it. The petition urges the government of Alberta to “immediately provide funding enabling municipalities and the RCMP to hire 500 additional community police officers.” This brings the total number of signatures to this petition to 238, with plenty more to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am submitting a petition on behalf of many concerned Albertans from St. Albert, Edmonton, Siksika, Cluny, Grande Prairie, Rocky Mountain House, and other communities petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to take measures that will require school boards and schools to eliminate all fees for instructional supplies and materials and general school services, including textbooks, musical instruments, physical education programs, locker rentals, lunch hour supervision and required field trips, and to ensure that schools are not deprived of the resources necessary to offer these programs and services without additional charges to parents or guardians.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you want to present something?

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in order to extend a Standing Order 30 which reads as follows: pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the government’s failure to implement or enforce controls on companies engaging in coal-bed methane exploration, which poses an immediate and pressing risk to the health, safety, and livelihoods of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table a document on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition. It is an article by respected health policy analyst Michael Rachlis outlining public solutions to wait lists.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve got two documents to table today. The first one is an open letter from the Child Care Advocacy Association of Canada addressed to the Prime Minister, and the title of this letter is Code Blue for Child Care. The letter urges federal and provincial governments to honour and extend the agreements on child care agreed to and signed between the two parties last year.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is called The Choice in Child Care Allowance: What You See Is Not What You Get. It’s an analysis prepared by Ken Battle for the Caledon Institute of Social Policy and argues that the proposed child care allowance program will not improve child care and will disproportionately benefit those who need the support least.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon, and it is a letter that I would like made available through tablings. It’s dated August 4, 2005, to myself from the hon. Minister of Energy, and I’m disappointed to say that the government will not intervene in the proposed Alberta/Montana tie-line project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act request 2006-G-0001.

I’d also like to table How to Improve Alberta’s High School Completion Rates put out by the Alberta School Boards Association. It’s an excellent document, and I hope members of the Assembly look into it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table some documents from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers outlining migration of methane into groundwater and the standards for explosive hazards.

The other tablings have to do with laboratory testing on water in the Wetaskiwin area for gas analysis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter from Anita Moore, board chair of a recently accredited high-quality, nonprofit daycare program in which she expresses dismay and concern that the new federal Conservative government proposes that it would unilaterally cancel the negotiated national daycare agreement.

The Speaker: I saw other hands, but it was so brief. Is that it? Any others?

I’m pleased to table to the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the period April 1, 2004, to March 31, 2005.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of Mr. Zwodzesky, Minister of Education: response to Written Question 40 asked for by Mr. Bonko on behalf of Mr. Flaherty on November 21, 2005.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on a submission under Standing Order 30.

Coal-bed Methane

Dr. Swann: Shall I repeat the motion or simply the arguments?

The Speaker: Now it's the argument for urgency.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Standing Order 30(1) requires the matter to be "of urgent public importance;" 30(7) requires the matter "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." This stands to reason for an issue cannot really require urgent debate if it is not itself a vitally important issue. Marlowe and Montpetit on page 588 indicates that consideration should be "given to the importance and specificity of the issue."

Clearly, this matter of contaminated water is of urgent public importance. When tap water can be ignited and can't be used for drinking or bathing, the health and safety of Albertans is at stake. The health and safety of livestock on affected properties are threatened. The survival of many farms and ranches is threatened. This is a genuine emergency, and it calls for our immediate and urgent consideration for landowners from Wetaskiwin to Beiseker to Wildwood and Rosebud.

The issue is also of broader public importance given the extent of current coal-bed methane exploration and the government's intention to extend the scope of exploration. Dealing with these problems is vital to the public interest.

I would also note that Beauchesne 387 requires that the matter "be specific" and be within "the administrative competence of the Government." Both conditions are met by this motion. Despite the confusion or conflict between the departments of Energy and the Energy and Utilities Board, Environment, and the department of health, this government does have the power, whether through enforcing existing regulations or developing new ones, to require that the appropriate testing is done and that further exploration be stopped and that families be compensated. Without adequate legislation and action potable water cannot be guaranteed, and more fracturing will occur each day, as we speak.

It is, as Marleau and Montpetit 585 requires, "immediately relevant and of attention and concern" throughout this province. This is an emerging crisis in communities throughout Alberta today. No government action has been taken for six to 18 months in the cases of the families that were here in the House today and in the cases of many others who have not been willing to come forward and speak but have spoken to these families. As far as the urgency of debate I have alluded to some aspects, but in Beauchesne 389 it outlines the primary issue is the urgency itself.

I believe that it's necessary to set aside, therefore, the normal business of the day to address this issue. One of the key tests is whether there is another "reasonable opportunity for debate," that is 387, or whether the ordinary rules of the House permit an opportunity to protect the public's interest in having the debate. I do not believe that there is this opportunity in the regular routine of the day. There is no legislation on the Order Paper to indicate that the government has any intention of dealing with this issue, nor did the Government House Leader in his news conference of February 15 indicate that any related legislation is planned. As far as question period is concerned, as the saying goes: question period is for questions, not for answers.

Furthermore, the authorities clearly indicate that the opportunities should be in the context of a debate. The Committee of Supply debates come up with budget year, and they are a few weeks away. Families and communities affected need reassurance immediately that this issue has been identified by the government and that a response is forthcoming.

Finally, it is vital to the public interest that the public, our bosses, see that we are responsive and capable of delaying routine discussions for matters that are genuinely urgent. Beauchesne 389 indicates that the matter "must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer" if not addressed. Together, these arguments indicate clearly that this is so.

Marleau and Montpetit 585 discourages highly partisan issues from being the subject of these emergency debates. There is nothing partisan here. This is about protecting Albertans and a vital resource that we all depend on for life. Many if not all members of this Assembly have constituents who are or may be affected.

To close, Mr. Speaker, we cannot wait for a body count. Citizens, after six to 18 months, have not received diligent and responsible action. I believe this does fall within the meaning conferred by the rule and that it is vital to the public interest that we suspend the ordinary business of the day to have an urgent debate on this matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy on the Standing Order 30 application. Essentially, the argument has to do with urgency.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to stand and discuss the issue, clearly, of urgency. While all of these issues of safety are vitally important, all the development of those resources and the safety and the responsible development are always of great importance to Albertans. They are of great importance to this department. They are of great importance to the regulators that we have. I know that they are to the Department of Environment as well as the Energy and Utilities Board and all of those who are developing standards.

Though that be true, it is not a case of urgency. It states here an assertion: "to implement or enforce controls on companies engaging in coal-bed methane." That, first off, isn't even a true assumption. If you had no rules or regulations, I guess you might construe an urgency, but the fact is that we've been drilling wells in this province for decades. Hundreds of thousands of wells have been drilled in this province. Even last year there were approximately 18,000 wells drilled, and maybe 3,000 of those were coal-bed methane. The fact is that those well applications and each and every well application must be approved by the Energy and Utilities Board. There is a rigorous standard that must be met that deals with water, safety, quality, all of those things, in every and each application, very stringent and built upon decades of experience in how to handle oil and gas.

Coal-bed methane is still natural gas. It's the same natural gas that we drill most of the wells for. It just happens to be natural gas or methane in the coal seams. There is natural gas in most seams. As you go down in the geology, natural gas is prevalent in most of the seams. Closer to the surface it may have already come to the surface and out, but where it's trapped, there is natural gas prevalent everywhere.

We've had such a long-term history of dealing with natural gas that it isn't even a new practice of drilling. They come in, and yes, they modify their techniques as to how to extract and that, but there's no need for a new framework. It's the same framework that we have had for decades and have experience and have had very safe, reliable, predictable outcomes. It's in that context that Albertans do have safety. We have very, very little incidence of public harm as a result of the tremendous amount of activity that happens in this province.

Coal-bed methane, it is true, is starting in that zone, but it's nothing new in the commodity in which it deals. In fact, most of the work is happening in natural gas zones where the pressure is lower than that at which the natural gas comes into your home. In the Horseshoe Canyon it's coming out a safer, cleaner methane than what comes into your home, under less pressure. So even the volatility of that commodity is no different. It's actually quite safe to handle.

It's the assertion that if there were no rules, I guess anarchy would exist, but the fact is that we have a very lengthy, complete list of legislation and regulation and enforcement bodies that are there dealing with those questions. If there was an urgency such that life of any individual was imperiled, there are processes that are active and available to all to access. The Energy and Utilities Board has that process completely. If there's something of paramount importance, that's the first body where one ought to go because they are the ones charged with and who have the ability and competence and expertise to judge the merits of the urgency and to act upon it and to take the corrective actions or enforcement procedures if any need be taken.

There is no case; there are no facts given. There's nothing to even demonstrate or prove that there's something that's wrong other than just a blanket assertion that there is an absence of rules, which for one is false, and that there's an absence of enforcement, which there's no evidence to believe either. There are bodies and rules in place for that.

So if there is an urgency, there are processes for how to deal with urgencies because safety is paramount. The first place you go is to the regulator who deals with that, the Energy and Utilities Board. If there were some things with the environment, you might go to the Department of Environment, and they do follow up, and they do monitor, and they do respond. If someone was in peril, they do and are active and are out there.

That doesn't always mean people get the answers they wish to get. It doesn't mean they might always have the outcome. What we are looking for is an establishment or an adjudication by fact. The safety of an individual or the public is better adjudicated at the Energy and Utilities Board than even here. The fact is that Albertans have lived safely with this for 50 years. Coal-bed methane is the same as natural gas.

We have one other. It's not stated here, but the inference is drawn that because we have this multistakeholder advisory committee that's drafting regulations on coal-bed methane, because we're doing work on improving regulations – the assertion is almost made that there are no regulations, which is false. We do have a tremendous degree of regulation in place. In this case it doesn't precede any immediate risk. We're working on just improving an already good structure. Every application is dealt with rigorously by the Energy and Utilities Board, and none of them goes through without having been vetted and approved and safely monitored.

The Speaker: Very, very briefly now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the subject of urgency, which the chair would like to hear some arguments on.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in support of this Standing Order 30, in regard to the urgency. You know, with all due respect to the Minister of Energy talking about this drilling as being no different. . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. The question of urgency has to do with whether or not there is alternate availability in the Assembly to debate the point, not the genuine emergency side. So it's not a debate with the Minister of Energy; it's a debate of urgency. Now, 12 minutes have now gone by. There's important business in this House. I want to hear arguments on urgency, or else I'm going to just rule.

Please proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. Well, the issue, I believe, why there is urgency is that we in fact have extensive drilling without proper regulation in place. In fact, there is a multistakeholder advisory committee that has put out some findings, and these findings are suggesting that there's a serious gap in the way by which the coal-bed methane drilling and extraction is being regulated, and on a day-by-day basis this is creating a problem that I think we could address best here and now in the most urgent manner possible.

You know, for one thing, until the government's groundwater inventory is completed in accordance with the Water for Life strategy, I believe that the CBM development, in fact, is in contravention or sort of at cross-purposes with the intention of the Water for Life strategy, which is now, I guess, causing problems for people in, for example, Rosebud and Wetaskiwin.

Second of all, we do not have proper scientific data determining the CBM development impact on groundwater. We have some assertions but certainly no clear data about that, and until there are industry and government requirements regarding testing and monitoring of groundwater before, during, and after CBM extraction, we believe that the cost should be borne by industry, but in fact it's being borne by homeowners here instead in terms of their loss of property value and the lack of ability for them to use their groundwater for their own drinking purposes and such.

So based on these and others, we believe that this Standing Order 30 is in order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 30 the chair has to make a decision as to whether or not to call the question. The chair also has in front of him a list of speakers from the Official Opposition and a list of speakers from government members, all wanting to participate in the Speech from the Throne. The Government House Leader provided to the Opposition House Leader the schedule for today. All members are aware of it, and now we have a Standing Order 30. I am prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion is in order.

First of all, let me say that the notice received from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View of his intention to bring a Standing Order 30 application came at 10:12 this morning, and the chair also confirms that the hon. member indicated the subject matter of his application at that time. Therefore, the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met.

Before the question as to whether the motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 30, which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relates to "a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

I want to remind members that I canvassed all the relevant authorities last Thursday in this House with respect to another

Standing Order 30 application, and to refresh everyone's memories, the relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debates are Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 398, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589. That was done three days ago in this House.

The criteria – and I want to underline and repeat the criteria – that must be met are that there must not be another opportunity for members of the Assembly to discuss the matter – the first part of it: there must not be another opportunity for members of the Assembly to discuss the matter. The second part is that it must relate to a genuine emergency. Arguments today dealt with the second part, essentially ignored the first part, other than for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who dealt with the fact about opportunity.

But after listening to these submissions for some 15 minutes, I cannot find that this matter constitutes a genuine emergency within the meaning of Standing Order 30. I cannot sit in the chair today and say that there will not be another opportunity to debate this matter, and that's essentially what it's all about: the urgency. As I indicated last Thursday, there will be supplementary estimates as well as the main estimates. There is the Speech from the Throne, which is legitimate subject matter for the debate of the matter today. The Speech from the Throne began last Thursday. It could have been debated Thursday, yesterday, and today. And, of course, the matter was raised in question period. So in terms of opportunity, in terms of urgency about raising it, there are multiple opportunities with respect to it.

In terms of the genuine emergency of the subject matter itself, that becomes very debatable, as the chair and all members have heard. One member says such; another member says such. That becomes a debating point rather than a genuine emergency point, as far as the chair can understand.

I recognize that the subject of the Standing Order 30 application is a serious matter, but then so many other issues that are brought before the Assembly are also serious matters. There is an agenda. If this was a situation where there was no opportunity whatsoever, the chair might view this differently, but in terms of this particular application on this particular day with respect to this particular matter I will not call the question.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, and recommends the same to the Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary estimates, I wish to remind the House that I provided the government's 2005-06 quarterly budget report for the third quarter to all MLAs yesterday morning. At the same time, I also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to 12 departments of the government.

When passed, these estimates will authorize an increase of $1,354,485,000 in voted expense and equipment and inventory purchases.

Mr. Speaker, the quarterly report serves as an amended fiscal plan when a second or subsequent set of estimates is tabled. This is in accordance with section 8 of the Government Accountability Act.

head: Government Motions

4. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund and lottery fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund and lottery fund shall be two days.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

head: 3:10 Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 27: Mr. Liepert]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, would you like to continue?

Mr. Liepert: I adjourned debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for the opportunity to rise and address this Assembly in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

In my short time having the honour to sit as the representative of the people of Calgary-Varsity, I have learned much. I have learned that ordinary Albertans, who the Premier likes to refer to as Henry and Martha, are recognizing that this government has no vision, that this government has little heart. The recycled content, the high-in-fat promises but low-in-fibre details of the throne speech leave Albertans hungering for a democratic change. This government continues to treat the vast majority of Albertans, the 78 per cent of eligible voters who were either so disenchanting or disenfranchising that they stayed at home or voted for a democratic alternative in the last election, as mushrooms. While mushrooms thrive in darkness, Albertans prefer light. They are demanding greater transparency, clarity of vision, accountability, and respect from their government.

The government in the throne speech: Alberta is leading the country in “nearly every economic measure.” Well, it was quite disheartening to see in the Calgary Herald the other day that Alberta also leads the country in the number of casinos; specifically, Calgary leads the country in the number of casinos: $1.1 billion lost by gamblers and fed into the insatiable government trough. Calgary is first in class. I’m not sure that this is a legacy that we can be proud of. Neither can we take any solace from the fact that Calgary has the lowest bed-patient ratio of North American cities due to this government’s preference to blow up and sell off rather than build public hospitals.

The government speaks in noble terms of funding research to eliminate cancer in the near future but refuses now to pay for the federally approved cancer treatment drugs, thus adding further financial stress to ongoing cancer sufferers.

The government talks about a learning society. While due to the support and dedication of parents, teachers, and elected school board members Alberta students fare well in standardized testing, this government finally acknowledged that we have a problem with almost a third of high school students failing to achieve graduation requirements. This is not a new situation, but it was only this year that the government finally decided to do a public consultation about high school dropout rates, which remain as high as 75 per cent for ESL students.

Albertans spent a lot of money on the Learning Commission only to have most of the recommendations that were accepted still waiting to be implemented. This government talks about the millions of dollars it is investing in education, but where is that money going? It is past time that we had an accountable system which lets Albertans see exactly where all of the so-called investments in education are going. Implement the Learning Commission recommendations. Albertans deserve a government that evaluates education on an ongoing basis and implements changes when the need is first indicated, not after years of wasting money trying to get Albertans to provide the answers that this government wants.

Has this government taken any steps to implement the Auditor General’s recommendations regarding the purchasing of textbooks? Textbooks are a very significant part of the cost of education at all levels. To think that in the year 2005 the Auditor General exposed the fact that we do not have any kind of group-buying program for textbooks that could lead to significant savings for students and for the government. I guess that an old, tired government rich with temporary resource revenues can’t be bothered to look after the pennies. There is an old, old saying that if you look after the pennies, the dollars will look after themselves. Unfortunately, this government acts as though it doesn’t have to look after either.

This brings me to another part of the throne speech, that speaks to prosperity. The government has finally acknowledged that resource revenues belong to all Albertans. This being the case, why doesn’t this government allow the less fortunate to live with some sense of dignity? This government rarely takes the opportunity to explore the successful methods that are available to help the less fortunate to reach their full potential, whether they are seniors warehoused in long-term care or trying desperately on fixed incomes to remain in their overtaxed homes, people on AISH or with developmental disabilities, or the growing number of homeless. Despite growing gambling profits, this government’s version of economic diversification, skimmed off into the black hole of general revenue, charitable organizations and volunteers are more overextended than ever.

Where is this money going? Imagine having a new government that was prepared to keep their books open to all Albertans.

When it comes to infrastructure, this government still can’t talk straight. They talk about work beginning or continuing on schools, postsecondary capital projects, and health capital projects. Let’s come clean to Albertans. Give us a list, preferably not improvised on a napkin, clearly outlining what this government is doing with Albertans’ dollars. How many existing and already announced projects are included in the throne speech? Just exactly what is new spending? We could cure the problems in infrastructure with planning based on reliable evidence. Instead, Albertans live with ad hoc planning in spite of the amount of their dollars that this government says it has spent on research.

The solution to the problem is to elect a government that has new, fresh ideas for leading Alberta into a sustainable future, one that will eliminate the existing infrastructure debt rather than extending it for another 30 years through P3, private profit at public expense, projects. The Liberal Official Opposition plan of setting aside 25 per cent of all future surpluses to create an infrastructure endowment fund would first acknowledge and eliminate the current $8 billion and growing steadily infrastructure deficit and then support future projects. Rather than further eroding the heritage trust fund or providing cash injections once every 20 years, a provincial Liberal government would annually bolster the heritage trust fund with 35 per cent of the surplus.

While this government talks about spending on capital investment in education, health care, and infrastructure, my constituency faces the closure of four schools’ programs based on a very fallible utilization system. We can look at alternative uses for empty school spaces if we use some imagination. It’s time to stop saying that schools must be closed if they don’t reach specified utilization rates, and it’s time to explore the many opportunities school vacancies offer to communities. A good Alberta government will recognize and understand the importance of community schools to the Alberta advantage.

Where’s the postsecondary plan? Why has the University of Calgary been forced to borrow over $700 million for necessary infrastructure? Why were 9,500 students turned away from the University of Calgary, 8,000 from Mount Royal, and 4,500 from SAIT last fall although they had the grades and could afford the high tuition fees? An Alberta Liberal government would bolster and sustain postsecondary education through the creation of an endowment fund created by committing 35 per cent of annual surpluses.

We can actually experience what a caring community means. We can make sure that every single Albertan is recognized as an essential member of our fortunate province. We can recognize and celebrate the unique contributions that every single citizen makes regardless of their physical, mental, or financial circumstances. For those who cannot earn a traditional paycheque, we must ensure that they are able to maintain their dignity and continue to offer their nontraditional contributions to the rest of us.

We must also incorporate respect for the environment into government. Albertans deserve a government that can balance all interest groups and guide the province into a sustainable future: smart growth. We can have a future that doesn’t require the sacrifice of the environment for resources or the sacrifice of resources for the environment, but we have to work for it. Autopilot is not an option. Environmental circumstance brought us our natural resource wealth. We must understand that there are forces other than economic that contribute to the wealth of our society, our community, and our world. Let’s do the work required to ensure that we leave a sound environment for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, in this time of unparalleled opportunity Albertans have little input into what this government is doing with their future. We have to improve our freedom of information legislation so that Albertans can see where this government is spending their money. We need a lobbyist registry so that Albertans can see who is paying for access to their government.

As well, we have to look at electoral reform so that the result of elections reflects citizens' direction. Where does this government address this? Alberta can lead the world in electoral reform. This is a different time from when our first past the post electoral system was implemented. The system we use now was designed over a century ago. We need to find a system that reflects today's realities. We need to look toward tomorrow. We need a government that not only allows but also encourages vision, a new way of doing government that matches the realities of the 21st century. It is in this spirit that the opposition has undertaken to foster a dialogue with Albertans about what electoral reform in Alberta could look like, including the creation of a citizens' assembly and proportional representation.

This government has done some good work. They balanced the budget, but then they continue to starve areas that they see as expenses but we see as investments. School boards and health region boards have been treading water for years, struggling to stay above water. Albertans continue to pay a health care tax. They continue to live with aging infrastructure in disrepair. They continue to have their access to natural areas restricted and made more expensive.

This government talks about healthy lifestyles, which is a very important part of the health care picture, but a year ago they voted against the nonsmoking bill introduced by one of their own members. They limited and eliminated coverage such as physiotherapy except in limited circumstances. Eye care and dental care are now a health necessity that is available only to those who can afford to pay out of pocket or have private insurance: the third way. Campgrounds that used to be accessible to most Albertans have been badly neglected by this government. The government has increased charges to a prohibitive level for disadvantaged Albertans who used to take their families out for a wholesome, natural experience. This, added to putting the less fortunate under increasing stress through more and more prohibitive program-qualifying requirements, shows that Alberta needs a new government, a government that values every citizen and allows every citizen to reach their full potential. It takes many kinds of citizens to construct a healthy, sustainable society.

To its credit this government struck an MLA task force on continuing care in Alberta. We are now about nine months after the Auditor General's scathing report on the situation, about six months after the task force report, and nothing has been done other than the latest announcement of a $36 million fix to a government-estimated $250 million problem. Albertans deserve a government that values all of our citizens, including our seniors. Senior care should not be viewed solely as an expense but as a repayment of an investment made many years ago, an investment that has contributed to the prosperity we are now enjoying. We can treat every senior citizen with respect and allow every senior to maintain his or her dignity. I have constituents who are seniors who have come to me in tears with horror stories about the services in long-term care facilities.

We have many citizens in Alberta that have special needs and require assistance to participate in society. I give this government credit for recognizing that some of our citizens will always need financial assistance. However, this government should be ashamed of the programs that do not acknowledge the individual's right to participate fully in society and do not provide funding for our vulnerable citizens.

The government is to be commended for taking steps to protect children whose parents do not. The government has passed legislation to attempt to help children involved in prostitution and is now introducing legislation to try to protect children whose parents are involved in drugs to such an extent as to endanger their welfare. Our children need a government that will allocate resources and not be remiss in protection. The Alberta government has not said how it will respond to the federal government's cancellation of billions of dollars of child care subsidy transfers to the provinces. Where's the plan? The Premier has recently proven that he has trouble counting dollars. Albertans deserve a government that knows where and how their money is being spent, a government that lets Albertans see how business is being done. Albertans are entitled to an open and accountable government, a new government that understands and fosters real democracy.

I am sorry that this tired, old government has delivered a vague, incomplete Speech from the Throne. In a time of such opportunity Albertans deserve better. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under our Standing Orders do we have questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year we had the pleasure of celebrating the centennial of the province. This year we mark 100 years of responsible government in Alberta, this being the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature. Our form of responsible, democratic, parliamentary government is a proud legacy from the English Parliament, the heritage of which goes back to the middle of the 13th century. It's an appropriate time to look back on our accomplishments and what we have achieved as a province.

Today by almost any measure our province is the economic envy of Canada and much of the world. To be sure, our economic successes are a product of resource wealth, but they're also attributable to the hard-working, risk-taking, entrepreneurial nature of Albertans and to the vision and dedication of our governments.

We can also look forward. As Alberta enters its second century as a province, we face considerable challenges. The first of these is the knowledge that our conventional oil and gas reserves are declining and that resource revenues will consequently be diminished in the future. Our government will put a billion dollars from surplus earnings into the heritage fund this year, with further investments to come in the budget. We must use the current surpluses generated from petroleum and natural gas to continue to build the heritage fund. Increasing the value of the fund will help us to ensure the future viability of government programs, including health care, in the face of declining revenues. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to see that the government will continue to work to see that more value is added to our nonrenewable petroleum and natural gas resources and to our coal resources. I'm also pleased to see that we will add value to our renewable resources, including agriculture and forestry.

The second challenge confronting our province is our burgeoning population, which requires new infrastructure. New hospitals, schools, water and sewage plants, roads, overpasses, and other projects are all required. These require not only capital spending but increased operating budgets. To meet this challenge, the government has embarked on an ambitious construction program. In doing so, priority must be given to immediate and short-term needs, including building health care and education capacity.

The rural development initiative is also a key part of our plan. By encouraging economic and population growth in Alberta's smaller communities, we will help to not only diversify the rural economy and shelter producers from uncertain conditions and low commodity prices, but we will also be helping to relieve the pressures caused by unprecedented growth in our larger cities, and we will also ensure that rural residents are full participants in our prosperity.

The third challenge is the shortage of skilled workers needed in our growing economy. Wherever possible we must increase career opportunities for Albertans, with a view to sustainability. To meet this challenge and to increase access, last year the government announced an ambitious plan to expand postsecondary education systems in Alberta by 60,000 spaces by the year 2020. We must follow through with this commitment. We must also work to ensure affordability of postsecondary education and training for all Albertans.

Our government has also committed to increase efforts to expand the First Nations workforce. This means ensuring that K to 12 education programs on Alberta's reserves are meeting provincial goals and standards for curriculum and quality. It also means a more direct involvement, with early intervention for aboriginal youth encountering learning and social challenges. It means even more skills training and apprenticeships for aboriginals.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth challenge which confronts us with the rapidly expanding population and economy and the attendant industrial development and exploitation of resources is the need to protect our environment for future generations. The protection of our air, water, and land has a direct effect on the future health and well-being of Albertans. We must move forward with policies to enhance and protect the environment even at the cost of forgoing some of the potential wealth which could be taken from our resources. We must develop comprehensive watershed-based initiatives to protect our source waters and to ensure future water quality.

The land-use framework that is currently being developed will assist in planning for our future. Such a framework must ensure that natural areas on Crown lands are protected and not sold and that they remain intact for the benefit of all Albertans now and in the future.

In the area of health and wellness, Mr. Speaker, other challenges now confront us. I'm pleased to note that this year our government is aiming to launch more pilot projects to reduce wait times in the areas of breast and prostate cancer and coronary disease. Our government should also be commended for working to expand the one-stop concept of health services, where doctors and other health care providers will work together to create a team approach to the treatment of Albertans.

I'm pleased that His Honour's speech renewed our government's commitment to making life better for those who presently live in care facilities by committing to new standards for facilities, upgraded training for staff, and better programs for residents, and I'm pleased with the effort to make Alberta an international leader in cancer research. However, whatever reforms are planned, we must ensure that reform of health care is done in a well-thought-out and measured way and in a way which accords with the values of Albertans. We must ensure that reforms do not diminish from the resources available to the universal public health care system, and we must ensure that the quality and timeliness of care for medically necessary services are never dependent on Albertans' ability to pay.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I was most pleased to note that His Honour's speech also included a commitment by the government that our province will remain a leader in Canada for government accountability and transparency. To that end, I feel confident that the government will want to carefully consider the recommendations of a committee of this Legislature, the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee. This committee's report to the Legislature will be forthcoming later this spring and will include proposals for a lobbyist registry and an increased cooling-off period for former ministers as well as other recommendations. The report will recognize the need to attract persons of integrity from all walks of life to public service while at the same time balancing the need to improve the image of elected officials by encouraging impartiality, accountability, transparency, and openness in the conduct of their public duties.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have achieved much in the past. They have created the rich and vibrant communities which make up the diverse parts of this province from Zama City to Etzikom, from Waterton to Wood Buffalo. With such a legacy behind us and with the creativity, enterprise, and industry of young Albertans of today and tomorrow I feel confident in saying that what lies ahead of us in this great province is an even brighter and more illustrious future.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to respond to the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I would like to thank my constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie from the bottom of my heart for the opportunity to represent them here, for showing confidence in me in this Assembly. I will continue to do my level best to represent the interests of the hard-working people of Edmonton-Ellerslie.

The throne speech is obviously an expression of this government's desire to pursue a certain level of action over the years. What I find in the throne speech is clearly a mixed reaction from my constituents. I want to give credit to this government for taking the initiative towards cancer prevention. We have an excellent cancer infrastructure already in place. It's a good place to start. The government can and should take steps to reduce the incidence of cancer through prevention. The government should reconsider a total ban on smoking. I repeat: the government should reconsider a total ban on smoking, something that would not cost taxpayers any significant money and would have a great effect on reducing cancer.

It's great to see government's promise to save $1 billion in the heritage savings trust fund after 20 years. This fund was established in 1976, and it is about time the government decided to put some money into this saving fund.

It seems to me that this old and tired government does not know where they stand as they don't have any long-term, sustainable policies, and they don't have surplus and resource policies or health care policies for the future of this province. Mr. Speaker, 91 per cent of the energy revenues in the last 25 years have been spent, meaning that less than 9 per cent has been saved so far.

Like all Albertans, my constituents have great expectations of all of us here at this Legislature. The people are looking for their government to be guided by professionalism, to be true to the government's promise of an open and responsible government, a government that is frugal when dealing with Albertans' purse strings. We promised Albertans that, and that is precisely what we will do. That is what we should do.

The government has been making various proposals for the privatization of the health care system. In the past they have talked about allowing doctors to operate in both the public and private systems. They also recently introduced a number of proposals, including looking at private insurance, but there was no indication in the recent throne speech that it has disappeared or that it is completely off the radar screen. Is this government afraid of their federal cousins? This is a big, big question mark. They talk about the third way, and now they have turned back and sometimes call it the fourth, fifth, sixth, or seventh way, or perhaps it may be no way or a complete U-turn.

This government is not decisive, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have lost their trust in this government. Alberta has one of the strongest economies in Canada. [some applause] Thank you. People living here enjoy one of the highest standards of living, no doubt. Yet, Mr. Speaker, children are going to school hungry in Alberta. The use of food banks continues to rise. Why don't you clap now?

The gap between rich and poor is widening. Forty-two per cent of Calgary's residents are living on less than $20,000 a year. The throne speech made no mention of a plan to close the gap between rich and poor. The rising cost of housing has kept many Albertans from pursuing their dreams of owning their own home. Government spending has been rising rapidly, but our social programs are failing to meet the needs of Albertans. There is a two-year waiting period for lower income housing in Edmonton. Where is the Alberta advantage for them?

I am surprised that there was no mention of a plan for the shortage of workers or permanent immigration in Alberta. The throne speech has made no mention of new funds for the arts or humanities, nor did the throne speech make any reference to policing or urban development or rapid transit or some other priorities.

Mr. Speaker, gang-related crime is a huge concern in our cities and is making our neighbourhoods unsafe. We need new strategies that will not merely punish criminals but eradicate the root cause of their behaviour. Albertans are turning to drugs, alcohol, and gambling in troubling numbers, and drug addiction is a growing problem. I see very little evidence in the throne speech to combat these problems especially. People are sick and tired of lip service from police officers and politicians like me; I admit that.

The throne speech also made no mention of our social and democratic deficit. The gap between rich and poor is widening. Take our democratic deficit. Alberta is one of the wealthiest provinces in Canada, but the democratic process is the weakest and secretive here. When the primary purpose of this government is merely to be re-elected, the province's wealth is far more likely to serve the ends of industry and government than of the public. If our prosperity is to serve the citizens, then serving the general needs of every Albertan should be our priority.

Unfortunately, this government has no interest in doing anything to renew our democracy. It has shown very little interest in electoral reform, for example, and such reform is absolutely necessary if we want a democracy that accurately reflects the desires of the electorate. Alberta desperately needs a government that is willing to embrace accountability and transparency. Alberta has no lobbyist registry, no fixed election dates, no all-party policy committee, and an almost meaningless legislative review of public spending. We also need to change the electoral system in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the government always proclaims that Alberta has the best education system in the world and that education is a top priority, but it is interesting that the throne speech had very few references to the educational policy. Our education system is facing a wide range of challenges. Right now only 69 per cent of Alberta's students graduate from high school within the normal three-year span, and only 75 per cent graduate within five years. Considering the demands and the opportunities of Alberta's growing economy, considering that within a decade Alberta could face a labour shortage of a hundred thousand people, it is incredible that we are wasting the talent of so many young people in Alberta. We need students to stay in school, and we must provide this for their need to complete their education. For years our education system has had to struggle with rising demand and shrinking resources. Growing numbers of children with special needs are not getting the attention and help they need because our schools don't have enough teachers or counsellors or specialized staff.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a wonderful province of unlimited potential. We can manage what we have so much better. We can reach so much higher. Let's start building a better future for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there questions of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to offer my reply to the Speech from the Throne during this the Second Session of the 26th Legislature of Alberta. As we celebrate the centennial of our Legislature, I'd like to salute the pioneers of our province, and at the same time I'd like to look forward to the incredible future that awaits our generations to come.

In his speech last week Lieutenant Governor Kwong stated that it was an honour for him to serve our province, and I believe that I speak on behalf of all members of the Assembly when I suggest that the honour is actually all ours. His Honour painted a wonderful sketch of our past, and he envisioned an even more amazing picture of what we might anticipate in our second century as a province.

Like His Honour, I've been fortunate to have met all sorts of wonderful people and from every corner of Alberta in the past year. I appreciated learning from people from across the province, and I especially enjoyed meeting with the constituents of my home riding of Calgary-Lougheed, which is located in the extreme southwest corner of our city. Mr. Speaker, each of the residents in the communities of Woodbine, Woodlands, Shawnee Slopes, Millrise, Evergreen, Bridlewood, and the southern and western portions of Canyon Meadows exhibits their own unique attitudes and actions, mission and vocation in life. They also share that strong entrepreneurial spirit that seems to define what it means to be truly Albertan. I was privileged to have met constituents of all ages at town hall meetings and community association meetings, in our schools and churches, seniors' facilities, shopping centres, and recreational areas.

It was an honour to visit with young people like Brendan Bellingham, who was one of the recipients of last year's Great Kids awards. I was also lucky to meet with more experienced folks, people like Marguerite Steele, who is one of our celebrated centenarians. Now, thanks to details outlined in last week's speech, I believe that Brendan has cause for excitement as we work together to create the best possible learning and working environments for our youth, and Marguerite can rest assured that we will be implementing new standards to promote excellence and restore the confidence of seniors and their families in our province's lodges, supportive living, and long-term facilities.

Last year Maclean's magazine proclaimed Alberta to be the most prosperous and the best place to be in the world, and Nova Scotia Premier John Hamm said, "We believe that your [economic] success is good for our entire country."

Now, while constituents of all ages told me that they're hopeful about our future, they also told me they have their eyes wide open to certain current realities. They know that while our growth as a province creates wonderful possibilities, it also creates very real growing pains. They reminded me that we must remain diligent as we continue to build for the future of our families, our community, our province, and our country.

Mr. Speaker, although Albertans know that we are currently experiencing good economic times, they're also very well aware that we would be wise to invest a portion of our wealth today for an even better tomorrow. Those are just a few of the reasons why I'm sure that Albertans as a whole will be pleased to acknowledge that last week's speech outlined a billion dollar investment into the heritage fund.

While Albertans recognize the value of saving, they do not deny that a certain degree of spending is absolutely necessary if we are to provide services that are absolutely necessary and if we are to create an environment of continued growth. I draw attention to this because in the rapidly growing constituency of Calgary-Lougheed some of the issues of greatest concern include the construction of new schools, the south Calgary hospital, the southwest ring road, and the rebuilding of Fish Creek park after last June's floods. Considering last week's announcements that Alberta's level of support for infrastructure is unmatched anywhere else in the country and that in 2006 construction will progress at the fastest rate ever in our history, my constituents will be even more confident that we'll be moving in the right direction faster than before.

Along with the people of Calgary-Lougheed, the Lieutenant Governor, and my colleagues, I share a very hopeful view of the Alberta of tomorrow. I envision an Alberta in which we create and maintain a sustainable balance between industry, environment, and recreation; an Alberta that is truly the best place to live, learn, work, and raise a family; an Alberta which cultivates a diverse economy with much more than just oil revenues to keep us from running a deficit; an Alberta that never goes into debt and taxes reasonably and wisely. I think that we can all agree that with no deficit and no debt and the overall lowest taxes in the country we have a great start in these regards.

I envision an Alberta in which we provide our children with the best educational system possible, and I think we're well on our way in this regard. Last year over 7,000 new learning opportunities, including apprenticeships, were created, a new endowment fund and new scholarship programs were established, and several capital projects were begun. This year by continuing to address the issues that face students, such as rising tuition costs, we'll be creating an even better educated workforce than we have today. Other positive steps include addressing the need for skilled labour and identifying the factors behind high school dropouts so that we can tackle the problems involved in order that students can continue to complete their education and enter the workforce with the skills that they need in order to be successful.

I envision an Alberta that will make innovative changes to health care delivery so that we can ensure even more timely access to even higher quality health care regardless of ability to pay and at the same time providing our citizens with a more sustainable system which features more options than they currently enjoy and a better return on investment for their tax dollar. I'm very pleased to report that each of these points was raised in the Speech from the Throne, and I join all Albertans who were excited to learn that we'll strive to continue to be a leading centre for cancer expertise and that we'll be expanding upon the successes of the hip and knee replacement project as we use these experiences as a guide to improve other aspects of health delivery.

I envision an Alberta that alleviates the harmful effects of the abuses of alcohol, other drugs, gambling, and tobacco. As MLA for Calgary-Lougheed I look forward to bringing forward motions which address each of these issues during this session, and as chair of AADAC I eagerly anticipate continuing to build on the many partnerships that we currently enjoy, along with supporting the growth of the Alberta drug strategy and the Alberta co-ordinated response to methamphetamine. I also look forward to assisting and furthering the world-class work of the fine folks at AADAC in their prevention, education, and treatment programs, as I've already identified in previous members' statements. I look forward to supporting new, proactive legislation upcoming in this regard and partnering with the Crystal Meth Task Force, co-chaired by Dr. Colleen Klein and Dr. Robert Westbury.

I envision an Alberta in which we treat the less advantaged with dignity and grace; we allow, encourage, and empower everyone to be the best they can possibly be, an Alberta that's governed by good old-fashioned family values; we take better care of ourselves, and we take better care of each other.

I envision an Alberta that is even stronger than it is today as it continues to be a leader within Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, it wouldn't mean much if we stopped at simply visualizing these realities. We need to go further and continue to develop specific sets of proactive, future-oriented, practical plans with concrete targets we can strive for, reach, and surpass. Thankfully, that's exactly the direction our legendary Lieutenant Governor sent us in in last week's Speech from the Throne, and now it's up to us. I look forward to working with everyone in this House in delivering on the high but realistic goals outlined in last week's speech. Indeed, the future looks bright for every one of us here in Alberta, and I recommit myself today to helping build the future of our province together with my colleagues and, indeed, with and for every Albertan.

God bless Alberta. God bless Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there questions of the member? Seeing none, the Member for St. Albert, please.

Mr. Flaherty: Mr. Speaker, thank you for acknowledging me. I'd just like to ask the member from Calgary . . .

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. Excuse me, member. Are you asking a question?

Mr. Flaherty: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. I thought you were asking to speak. Go ahead.

Mr. Flaherty: No, I was asking a question.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Flaherty: I wonder if I could just ask the hon. member, in light of his function as chair of the commission, and I think he referred to it in the crystal meth comments that he made: could you tell me, sir, if I can get hold of the terms of reference from the Crystal Meth Task Force? What are the terms of reference they have? Secondly, I'd like to ask you who reports to the Legislature regarding the deliberations and recommendations from that particular group vis-à-vis the Crystal Meth Task Force. Thirdly, can you discuss the resources that they may be dealing with? Are we talking about resources such as facility staffing and research? [interjection] I'm not trying to be a smart ass with this, sir; I'm just trying to find out how we get information. I'm really talking on behalf of my constituents, who are very interested in this particular function and what it's doing.

Thank you. I appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker: The answer, please, member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a fabulous question, and every Albertan has a right to know the answers to those. I am delighted to announce that the CEO of AADAC, Mr. Murray Finnerty, is indeed one of the members of that Crystal Meth Task Force. That is the AADAC presence on that board. Of course, he and I are in constant deliberation. I would suggest that contacting Dr. Robert Westbury is the pipeline that will give you direct access to every single question that you have there, sir. I'm sure they will continue to share their findings as they continue to tour the province and come up with their recommendations that we will work with in AADAC, Health, and the rest of the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Other questions of the member?

Seeing none, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon and make a response regarding the Speech from the Throne as delivered by His Honour Norman L. Kwong on Wednesday of last week. Certainly, I would like to on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar personally thank His Honour for visiting our constituency last fall and presenting the centennial medals. It meant a great deal to the constituents that His Honour and Her Honour would take the time and visit Edmonton-Gold Bar. As the representative of that community, on behalf of the constituents I would like to thank His Honour and also commend him for his time and his patience with many other community groups.

Later in the fall His Honour and Her Honour found time in their busy schedules to visit an awards banquet for one of the local city high school football teams, one of the many successful high school football teams in and around Edmonton. Certainly, I think it's time that we look at some of the trophies that are presented for football in this province. We look, for instance, at some of the other trophies that are presented across the country. We look at the Vanier Cup, Mr. Speaker. We look at the Grey Cup. I think it's time that we in Alberta here have a Kwong cup as one of the trophies that young athletes could compete for. I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to think about this proposal and think about a way that we could honour His Honour. I would think that somewhere there is an award for excellence in football that could be named after our current Lieutenant Governor. Certainly, he's had a distinguished career in business, but before that he had a distinguished career as not only a Calgary Stampeder but as an Edmonton Eskimo.

Now, there are, certainly, many issues that have already been dealt with in regard to His Honour's speech, but there are issues that have been overlooked. As hon. members have already stated, there are many examples of our robust economic activity. We can talk about those, but one issue that I don't believe has been discussed – and I'm disappointed that I even have to bring it up. It's a fact that in this economic climate we are contemplating bringing temporary foreign workers into this country and into this province when there are so many Canadians who would like to participate in this economic activity that is occurring in this province, Mr. Speaker.

I was astonished to learn a couple of weeks ago that there is a proposal to bring in workers from China to construct a tank farm on the CNRL site in Fort McMurray. We still have pockets of unemployment among aboriginal youth, among the youth in this province between the ages of 16 and 24. We have significant pockets of unemployment in other areas of the country. I really think that we have to look at making sure that everyone has had an opportunity to participate in this economic activity before we resort to this idea of temporary foreign workers.

No one will answer how much these workers are going to make, what cut of their wages is going to come off the top for the middleman. No one wants to discuss this. No one. I think it is inappropriate. Look at the massive tax concessions that are being made to companies like CNRL, yet they want to turn around and drive down labour costs with no justification, with absolutely no justification. It's wrong. It's poor public policy.

I said in this Assembly before that when we initiated development originally in the tar sands, there were provisions. These provisions were overseen by Economic Development to ensure that a percentage of the work went to the local economy, to the regional economy, to the provincial economy, and to the national economy. This has all been thrown out the window. I think this is just a sign of greed. It's just out and out greed that these policies would be initiated at this time, when we have not trained our own first. It's wrong.

Now, health care premiums. I was very disappointed in this throne speech to find out that health care premiums have not been eliminated. I fully suspect that when we have the budget here in four weeks, health care premiums will finally be eliminated by this government, completely across the board. It's time we have a tax cut that will help out small business owners as well as individuals. I will be the first one to thank the government if they eliminate health care premiums. If we can't afford to do it now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know when we will have the opportunity.

If the economy was to slow down at some point in the future, well, I would suggest that we cut the size of government. Maybe the RAGE portfolio over there, we could eliminate that. There are many portfolios. I think we could reduce the size of cabinet to perhaps 16 ministries. If we had to reduce the size of government, you wouldn't hear this hon. member opposing that; that's for sure, Mr. Speaker. We can afford to do this. You have taken other ideas from the Official Opposition, and I would encourage you to have a look at that.

Certainly taxes. We have heard from this government in the past that the only way taxes are going is down, but that is simply not true. That has been a hollow, false promise from this government, that taxes are going down. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we were to look at the third quarter budget update, you would see where personal income tax is up; corporate income tax is up since the last throne speech; school property taxes are up; tobacco tax has gone down – we can understand why; fuel tax has gone down – lower than forecast volume; insurance taxes have gone up. Now, as these taxes are increased, this is an ideal time for this government to look at tax reductions.

If you look at submissions from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, they are urging this government to look at ways of reducing taxes. The best way to do this is to eliminate the health care premium. Mr. Speaker, I will be very disappointed if during the budget there is not an announcement made that finally this government is going to realize that they have been wrong; they're going to listen again to the Official Opposition and get rid of health care premiums once and for all.

I look over, Mr. Speaker, at this government, and it reminds me of our Olympic hockey team. It looks good on paper, but too many of the players here want to be captain of the team, and they're not looking after their respective portfolios like they should.

Now we look at some of the issues that have been ignored by this government. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie touched on it earlier. We look at some of the issues that the federal Conservatives, your federal cousins, are implementing around renewal of democracy and accountability and openness and transparency, and we see how the Canadian Federation of Independent Business feels about this. They value accountability, and they value transparency. I don't see anything in this throne speech, Mr. Speaker, that would satisfy the Federation of Independent Business or anyone else.

Small- and medium-size businesses feel that some of Alberta's democratic processes need to be strengthened. They would like to see the Auditor General's powers expanded; 76 per cent of them would like to see that occur. An independent panel to set MLAs' pay: 75 per cent of the business community would like to see that accomplished, and that's another policy of the Alberta Liberal Party. They, 54 per cent of them, would also like to see an establishment of predetermined election dates. That is a policy that certainly we endorse, and some members of the Conservative caucus endorse it as well, Mr. Speaker, if one is to review the Order Paper and look at some of the motions that are being discussed by members other than those that are in Executive Council.

There is also moderate support, research indicates, for capping election donations at $5,000 and for establishing a lobbyist registry and even for examining new election methods to elect provincial governments: 45 per cent of people feel that we should cap election donations at $5,000, 37 per cent think we should establish a lobbyist registry, and 29 per cent think we should establish a committee to look at examining new ways to elect provincial governments.

Twenty-eight per cent think that we should allow citizens to propose bills. I am very hopeful that at some point in the near future there will be a better way for citizens to propose bills to this Legislative Assembly. I think it is a good way to go, with a direct democracy, and I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to contemplate that as well.

Getting back, Mr. Speaker, in the time that I have left, to the third-quarter update that was delivered yesterday. We're never going to be satisfied with the billion dollars that we put into the heritage savings trust fund, but in the sustainability fund, that other good Liberal idea from the former Member for Lethbridge-East, in the 2005-06 forecast $1.6 billion has been left unallocated. Fund assets are forecast at $4.1 billion effective March 31, 2006. Well, I think that money should be taken now, before the free spenders over here get their hands on it, and that should also be put away in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. In order to inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund, we would need to have better than $19 billion in it at this moment, and we're not even near that. I would think that this money should be taken and set aside.

Money that we need to provide social housing; money that we need to provide respectful, decent care for our seniors; money that we need to fix our schools, our bridges, and our roads: it's already there, but it has been poorly managed by this government.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there questions of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

I will call, then, on the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

As the chair of the Standing Policy Committee on Energy and Sustainable Development I was pleased to hear a number of initiatives, which were highlighted in the speech, pertaining to alternate forms of energy. It's imperative that Alberta use our strengths in traditional energy sources such as oil, natural gas, and bitumen to explore and develop alternate energy sources. As was outlined in the Lieutenant Governor's remarks, Alberta is home to vast deposits of coal, and the potential contained within these deposits is also immeasurable.

Mr. Speaker, electrical generation through the development of clean-coal technology is a goal worth working towards. However, at the same time it is necessary for us to consider the strength and development of our electrical transmission system. All the generation capabilities in the world will not benefit Albertans if we are unable to transmit this energy to our industrial and residential communities. As our province's population and industrial needs expand, so does the need for a secure, reliable supply of electricity to power this development and growth. If we do not stimulate investment and development of our transmission infrastructure, electricity shortages have the potential to limit our province's industrial and economic growth.

Increased transmission capabilities will also allow for increased generation in our province. This can come not only from our traditional coal- and natural gas-fired generators but also from renewable energy sources such as wind, hydro, and geothermal energy. Currently Canada generates roughly 1 per cent of its electricity needs through wind power. Alberta is on the leading edge of this technology and is home to the country's largest wind farm, near Fort Macleod. This farm alone generates enough electricity to power 32,000 homes annually.

Diversification of our energy sources is beneficial not only to our environment but also to our economy. Clean-coal technology and renewable resources such as biofuels are innovations that will help Alberta remain a world leader in the energy industry.

The government of Alberta has made a good start in supporting green energy alternatives by entering into a contract which began in 2005. It was to purchase 90 per cent of its electrical requirements from green power. I believe that the government should continue down this road by promoting an environment where the development of green energy is a viable and thriving industry in our province.

Alberta's natural environment is a resource unto itself. As the natural beauty it contains has made our province into a world-class tourist destination, I was pleased to hear the environmental initiatives contained in the Speech from the Throne. But I believe that we need to look further down the road on issues such as recycling and waste management. Mr. Speaker, in Alberta there exists the will to move further along the path to becoming a province with zero landfills. Since 1988 the amount of per capita waste disposal per year has been dropping in our province. This is encouraging, but we need to address our waste management situation more aggressively than we are currently. By being serious about conservation now, we can address waste management issues before they become serious problems in our province. The land-use framework discussed by His Honour yesterday is an excellent first step to ensuring all land-use issues, including waste management, are discussed and addressed. All Albertans have an interest in how our land is used.

Our province gives us opportunities for exploration and recreation as well as economic growth through resource development, agriculture, and forest activities. These three industries are the top economic drivers of our province.

Forestry is an especially important industry in my riding of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. The forest industry has been facing some sizable challenges in the past few years, and it is important to ensure that policy decisions the government makes with respect to this industry are responsive to the industry's needs itself. I applaud the announcement of continued funding to the Alberta Forest Research Institute as well as a commitment of $1.8 million to spur on innovation in this important sector of our economy. By working with this industry, we can ensure that it is sustainable and viable well into Alberta's future.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has long been a land of opportunity, and at no time has it been more apparent than right now. Alberta has a chance to be a world leader in a variety of areas, and the priorities outlined in the Speech from the Throne will give this province a head start in securing its future. I'd like to voice my support for accepting the Speech from the Throne, and I would ask my colleagues on both sides of the House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member. Any questions for the member? Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. On the Order Paper that has been circulated in the Legislative Assembly, Motion 510, as proposed by the hon. Member for Leduc, urges the government to "increase the supply of stable and reliable electricity to meet the demands of advanced manufacturing throughout the province . . . by increasing investment in transmission and associated infrastructure." This motion indicates to me that this hon. member is certainly less than satisfied with electricity deregulation. How does the hon. member feel that electricity deregulation has evolved in regard to transmission and the associated infrastructure, and does he support the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Some good comments. Remember that transmission is regulated; transmission has never been deregulated. Transmission inadequacies that we have throughout the province are in part due to the success of this booming economy that we have. Fifty thousand people a year are moving to Alberta. Nobody brings their transmission lines and their power lines, as you well know. You know, we have to watch. In certain parts of our province today we are very, very close to having an inadequate supply of power. In Calgary alone a home is being completed every 45 minutes. We need to make sure that we have an adequate supply not just to those residents but to the industry that those people came to Alberta to work with.

So I think it's imperative that we move on with a strong, robust transmission policy and that we encourage our companies throughout Alberta to get going and expand our transmission systems. We need to talk with our regulators, whether it be the EUB or whether it be the ISO or whether it be our surface rights folks, to get on with the process and create an atmosphere where transmission can be built quickly and economically.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Another question? There's a question from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View first.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated some of the comments about eliminating landfills. I wondered also about how you feel about incentives for renewable energy and whether we're doing enough to incent some of the renewables, how we might do that and create a level playing field for some of these renewables in comparison to the fossil fuel subsidies we've been giving for so long.

Mr. VanderBurg: There's no doubt it's an opportunity that we have right now here, not just in Alberta but throughout Canada and throughout North America, to embrace biofuels and opportunities to enhance the manufacturing of biofuels.

I want to get to your point on zero landfills. I've seen technology throughout different countries that has allowed these countries to move to zero landfill policies. It's going to be tough here in Alberta, in rural Alberta, especially on the regional side. But I think that it would be very, very easy for cities like Edmonton that have already taken 50 per cent of their waste stream out of the landfill and taken it to a higher value. For that last 50 per cent to me it only makes sense if we went to a system where we could generate heat and electricity out of that 50 per cent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know my time is up, and I appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker: We have another question from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Again to the hon. member. Earlier you stated that there is a home in Calgary that is connected to the grid every 45 minutes, and there is significant new demand for electricity. How is the government policy of allowing the southern Alberta/Montana tie-line to go ahead going to reduce electricity costs for Calgary consumers?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, I talked about a new home being hooked on to the grid every 45 minutes . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That concludes our time for questions.

I'll call now on the Member for St. Albert, please.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the Speech from the Throne. I was elected by the citizens of St. Albert to be a voice for my constituents and speak on the issues mentioned in the throne speech, Wednesday, February 22. The first thing I'd like to talk about is – I believe it's on page 2 – under the title A Learning Society.

In the Speech from the Throne it outlines the idea of a learning society, the idea of "government will work to further strengthen our education system" by sponsoring "a series of roundtables with youth from across the province . . . to help us better understand why students leave school early." The one thing I have trouble with in the Speech from the Throne is that I had the opportunity last week of going to a trustees' event, and they did an excellent job – and I tabled this in the House today – of identifying the top eight factors identified by the Alberta School Boards Association workshop participants dealing with dropouts. It really amazes me that the Minister of Education and staff don't rely on information like this in which to build linkages with school systems across the province.

Just let me quickly go over some of the eight factors because I think they're worth reviewing here today and try and get some insight into them. This is regarding the dropout problem. It suggests here that "Alberta Education ensure there is additional funding to support guidance counselling services and to co-ordinate the delivery of multi-agency and school-based services including exit interviews of students leaving school.”

Then I whipped over today and looked at, for example, one of the smaller school districts. I believe it's the Catholic school system out at Elk Island. In terms of completion of high school, in 2003-2004 the provincial average of kids completing it in three years is 68.9 per cent. This school district in Elk Island has an 81.1 per cent fulfillment of the three-year completion rate. They must be doing something right out there.

The second thing in these top eight factors is “societal pressure to reinforce the importance of education generally and especially . . . outside jobs or leaving school early to work.” I cannot quite understand, when we have a system of education in this province where we're dealing with 15 per cent going on to academic training at the university and we have 85 per cent of our kids needing to be guided and helped, why we don't have, for example, a career education plan in our schools, especially in the junior high schools leading into high school. I don't understand why we don't have a diploma in career education. I think that's very, very important, and I think we've got to open our eyes. If you look at the literature that's put out by this government regarding education, we don't see careers as being a very big focus of their attention.

The third thing in these top eight factors that were brought up in this wonderful document, that I'm glad we have the opportunity to talk about and which I think is significant, is that

Alberta Education improve relevancy of provincial curricula and sequencing of high school core courses to ensure that the learning needs, aspirations and interest of non-university bound students can be addressed effectively in school programs, and advocate that post-secondary institutions review and modify if necessary their entry requirements (especially in Mathematics) to fit the level actually needed for success in the area of further study.

I think we need to explore more carefully the courses we have and how suited they are for kids going into a vocational stream in our schools.

This is the fourth thing they bring out in this fine document: “financial incentive/disincentive to keep kids in school.” Some of our kids leave school for three or four weeks. I think there has to be a way, if they come back, where we give them special tutoring, maybe in the evening, so they can catch up and ways of accommodating them in the school system, maybe even a tutoring process, which some schools I know have developed.

Then in this wonderful outline here: “ensuring each at-risk student has at least one adult in the school who knows them well and will support them in their learning [process].” I had the opportunity of working very closely with a school in Lethbridge, Winston Churchill school – I don't know if it has the same problems now – where teachers had 25 students under their wing. My job was to try and work with those teachers and give them insight into how to work with students in terms of some of their emotional and support needs at school. Bishop Carroll school in Calgary was another example where kids were not just seen as a piece of paper but had teacher counsellors working with them.

On Friday we also had Parkland school district, very close to this city, doing some interesting things. The trustee stood up and talked about interpersonal skills, that teachers carried that load with them to work with kids in the school, again making the environment mean something to them other than just exams and getting personal and knowing kids and where they're going.

Then it talks about here in the sixth point: “cross-ministry cooperation – aimed at increasing high school completion.” That's one of the principles they're talking about. One of our colleagues from Leduc the other day at this trustee meeting talked about the importance of parents instilling in their kids the value of finishing high school, completing it. I thought that was a wonderful point the hon. member from Leduc brought up.

This is the last point in this document:

Alberta Education ensure that curriculum and funding are available for schools to work with students to assist them in knowing their interests and abilities and engage in meaningful and timely career development planning with trained career counsellors (not necessarily certificated teachers).

In my constituency I have several people, who have backgrounds and are retired, who work with kids in the schools' career resource centres and try and motivate kids about the careers that are out there and what's changing out there.

My point of bringing this up in this throne speech was the fact that I don't believe I have any indication that the present ministry is reaching out and linking and bringing some of these things from one school system to another, which was very common when I worked for the Department of Education. We brought the good news about some of the things from one part of the province to the other. I'm really questioning the value of a round-table discussion and what this means. Maybe the minister's got aspirations he's not telling us about.

Anyway, let me then just move along and talk a little bit about a healthy society. I would like to compliment the government on the work they did with the cancer bill. I think they deserve a lot of credit. I have lost my father, Denny, and my senior brother, Charlie, who was a navigator in the world war and successfully completed several operations during the war. Both died of prostate cancer, so I'm very pleased with the government moving on this.

One thing I looked at is on page 2 of the cancer bill, and I'd like to ask whoever's responsible for this – I guess it would be the minister of health – to add one other aspect of that under Purpose, where it would say: to support research that will evaluate what we take into our bodies in terms of our food, beverage, and smoking. I'd like to see some research on that. I think it would be very helpful to us. So I'm very much supportive of that and what the government's doing there. I think it's a good thing, and I'm glad they're doing it.

The other thing I'd like to just comment on – and I'm now speaking for my constituents in St. Albert. We have a wonderful public health system. The majority of people in our constituency think that, and they think it's very, very important. Certainly, it needs some serious updating. It needs innovation.

I just want to tell you that when I had my surgery for my knee replacement in the Misericordia hospital by a very fine doctor, who tried to convince me, by the way, that privatization was very important for health care – I was glad that we had this discussion; I think I'm winning him over. I think that a good example of the kind of innovation we need is the Alberta hip and knee replacement pilot project. That study brought together doctors, surgeons, physiotherapists, and nurses to solve one of the most troubling problems in health care wait times. They dropped a year-long wait time for joint replacement surgeries to an average of only five weeks. This project demonstrates that solutions can be found within the public system, and I commend the government for doing that. Now I hope that we can do it for other things which were mentioned by the minister of health today in addressing one of the questions.

Now seniors. We're talking still about a healthy society. I'm very much for the whole question of having standards. To this day I'm still sitting here trying to learn even from the good hon. minister that I'm looking at about how you monitor what goes on in seniors' accommodations. It's beyond me. I think that we need to have a look at that and have a commissioner that looks at seniors' operations and reports directly to the Legislature.

Every time the minister talks about health, he talks about insurance. I can tell you right now that many of my constituents, who are seniors, widows, cannot start thinking of paying insurance. There's just no way that they can afford that. I don't know where the government thinks that some people in this province, many seniors, are going to get the money to pay for extra insurance. It's beyond me. I really, really don't know.

Now, let me just comment again on one other aspect in the Speech from the Throne, where it says that we need to preserve for a prosperous society. I think it's significant to look at. People are saying that this government needs to have a vision, a long-term economic plan for maintaining where we're going in this province.

What's interesting to look at is the work of the Canada West Foundation, that conducted meetings across the province. Business types, educators, and leaders of nonprofit organizations all offered their ideas on what the government should do with its windfall of money. These discussions highlighted the need to increase funding for postsecondary education, bridge gaps in the province's infrastructure and social services, increase funding for the arts, and address quality-of-life issues so that Alberta will be able to attract and retain people. I think the interesting part of the document that was put out by the Canada West Foundation is that many of the supporters are good Tories. So they must have some really good thoughts as to where the economy must be driven in the coming years to look after the well-being of Albertans.

Also, I think it's worth noting that the president of the University of Alberta had some comments about what the government should be doing in terms of maintaining its prosperity of Alberta society. She said that Alberta ranks seventh among the 10 provinces in providing operational grants to postsecondary institutions and holds the same spot when it comes to the percentage of students participating in postsecondary education, that this means that the province must rely on getting people from elsewhere to meet its soaring demand for skilled labour, and that this simply isn't sustainable. She also pointed out that the fastest growing occupations require the highest levels of education and that on a per capita basis Alberta educates fewer graduate students compared with other provinces even though there are more students applying for spots in postsecondary institutions.

Then she makes a third comment, that the looming skilled labour shortage has put the spotlight on the sciences and technical fields, that these disciplines have received the lion's share of funding from the province and the private sector and that, on the other hand, there are precious few announcements of big dollars going to the social sciences. The president says that we ignore an area at our peril because without what she calls social ingenuity, society will not be able to take full advantage of the scientific and technological breakthroughs. She calls it the third leg of the stool.

Let me just close, Mr. Speaker. If I could just say that the thing that disappointed me – and I guess I'll have to close because I can't find my notes. One more thing I want to mention . . . [interjection] Be quiet, Gene.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Please, hon. member, your time is up. It's not appropriate to tell somebody else to be quiet.

Mr. Flaherty: I'm finished?

The Speaker: You are finished, hon. member. Would you sit down, please. You are finished. It's certainly not appropriate to lecture another member when you're beyond your time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to the Speech from the Throne, which His Honour the Lieutenant Governor delivered in this House on the 22nd of this month and delivered in a very dignified manner. I want to thank him very much for what he represents in Alberta and for his readiness to serve Albertans in this capacity, which is quite demanding of his time and effort.

I also want to note that in responding to this speech, I'll be speaking on behalf of my constituents, the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona. Mr. Speaker, the context of this speech is something that I want to underline first. Alberta is beginning the second century in its historic development. Albertans are duly proud of the accomplishments of the last hundred years, accomplishments that are a tribute to their ability to work together collectively in a co-operative manner to build the institutions from the fields of education to health to government in the democratic realm. So that's the context.

In this context of the beginning of the first century I was hoping to read a throne speech which is inspiring, which sets new goals for the 21st century, which is ambitious, which is not timid in what it conceives of Alberta's possibilities and Alberta's future. I must confess that I'm disappointed in the very timid and uninspiring tone of the speech, given that context. Albertans, while they have been celebrating the successes and achievements accomplished over the last hundred years, were certainly ready to hear where we need to move forward.

Two areas I'll mention very briefly: the area of social deficits that have been developing in this province and child poverty. About 16 per cent of the children of this province continue to live in poverty while our economy is the most productive if not the most prosperous in this country. Homelessness is another issue. When children are poor, we know that their parents are poor, that families are poor where children are growing up, and many of these families live under conditions of homelessness. So I would have thought that at least there would be an acknowledgement that here is a challenge that this government wants to set before Albertans to meet the challenge of social deficits.

The second major deficit that we've been talking about in this province, not only here but across the country, is the democratic deficit. It's important to renew the vigour of our democratic institutions. We need to think about and put before ourselves the goals of re-examining our electoral systems, the election funding systems, the whistle-blowing legislation, disclosure legislation. These are matters that are being addressed in other jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker.

I had the occasion to attend on behalf of this Legislature a COGEL meeting in Boston at the beginning of last month. The key themes at that conference had to do with how to make our governments more democratic, more accountable, how to strengthen whistle-blowing legislation, how to strengthen disclosure legislation, particularly relative to how election campaigns are funded. We were quite amazed to hear how in the U.S., in fact, they have moved forward quite energetically on this front, and some of the governors in U.S. states have been impeached for violating election funding rules that have been put in place. So I would have thought that the second front on which we need to set some goals in the area of democratic deficit and, therefore, the other side of the coin is the revitalization of democratic institutions in this province. I'm afraid that both of these issues are not even touched on in this speech, and that, I think, is a missed opportunity, which I very much regret.

The other issue of democratic deficit and democratic revitalization has to do with our own legislative committees. Particularly talking about the Public Accounts Committee, John Williams, the Conservative Member of Parliament for Edmonton-St. Albert, expressed his absolute amazement to me in a personal conversation with me about the lack of ability of the Public Accounts Committee in this Legislature to do the things that the federal accounts committee is able to do. He was appalled by the lack of powers invested in committees such as those. So these are some of the things that I wish we had the opportunity to talk about, and I wish the government had taken the opportunity to put these things on the agenda.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to focus my comments on the throne speech on the section on a learning society. The idea of a learning society has been around for many, many years, promoted by UNESCO, implemented in many different countries in western Europe and Europe in general. The key idea there is that lifelong learning is the basis, the foundation for a learning society. In other words, you start to learn very early, and you never give up. You keep on learning. You keep on returning to opportunities to learn new things, to educate yourself, to renew your skills and abilities and your knowledge about the world, that is changing and changing dramatically in many ways, not only in terms of technology but also in terms of the total amount of knowledge that we have and how knowledge begins to get very obsolete in this kind of fast-changing society.

I find here that the section on the learning society is one of the smallest ones, yet we talk about entering the 21st century into a society that's a learning society, that's a knowledge society, that's an information society. The amount of space given here and the kind of issues touched on in the throne speech draw my attention to the very limited vision that this government has about what action to take, what agenda to propose to Albertans with respect to creating a genuine learning society. Focus here has been very, very limited, very narrow, and that's a serious disappointment, Mr. Speaker.

Even within that focus some questions have been alluded to with respect to where the government might be going in relation to its policies on postsecondary education. Mr. Speaker, one of the disappointments that I've had is with the very limited public discussion that the Minister of Advanced Education and this government have allowed to happen in the area of the future of postsecondary education. That certainly is a concern. Government missed a huge opportunity to engage Albertans in general into public hearings and public meetings on debating the future of postsecondary education as part of its learning society model. The minister created a sort of committee to consult. It consulted but in a very, very limited way.

I heard from Jeffrey Simpson, one of the columnists for the Globe and Mail, who was invited by Public Interest Alberta over the weekend just past to give a sort of opening address to the PIA's weekend conference on postsecondary education. One of the things that he mentions there is that postsecondary education is absolutely critical to the future society in which we are going to be living and our children are going to be living. It needs more public support, but in order for it to have more public support, the public has to be engaged in debating where we want to go, what direction we want to take. It's very unfortunate that this government and the minister in charge missed that opportunity, in fact limited deliberately the ability of Albertans to publicly engage their government and their political leaders into asking questions about where we want to go with postsecondary education.

So that, in my view, is another concern that I have, that the government is very, very concerned about engaging Albertans genuinely in giving feedback on the government policies and where they want their government to go. It's in a sense a lack of confidence in democratic participation, and here again the whole question of democratic revitalization comes to mind. We need to engage Albertans as citizens. We need to be able to put faith in their judgments. We seem to be missing on that, and this government certainly I think has to take some responsibility for not encouraging Albertans to be engaged on these vital issues of our times.

In the remaining time, Mr. Speaker, I want to dwell on the early end of the learning society spectrum or continuum and the child care and early learning for our children. I am very concerned about the fact that not even a mention was made in the throne speech about what steps, what programs this government is willing to unfold in order to make sure that all children begin to learn early in their lives and that those very early years from age one to age four are the most critical years for us to be able to give those children the abilities and the skills that they will need not only to succeed as they move into elementary school and move upwards but in order to succeed later on. Learning starts very, very early, and the critical importance of learning that takes place in the very early years is something that's not recognized in government papers, in government policies, and certainly in the throne speech.

The government has in my view failed to embrace the opportunity that was before it because the early learning and child development issue became a major issue during the federal election. All parties in a sense addressed the issue, and what I find amazing and somewhat shocking is that whoever wrote that speech and whoever was responsible in the cabinet to give it the final touches didn't see the vacuum, didn't see this strange silence on the issue of where this government stands, what its commitments are to building a system of early childhood development and learning in this province. It is those foundational steps that lead to greater success for our children as they move into the formal education system. So it's an opportunity that was missed, Mr. Speaker, and the government's agenda and its narrow focus are very clearly evident in this field again.

We can talk about a learning society. We can use the sort of flowery language of how learning is important, how we need to build a society which doesn't just rely on natural resources and whatever have you but that, in fact, our wealth will increasingly depend upon creating more enriched human capital for the future society. But that human capital will not happen unless we dedicate our resources, unless we intelligently engage ourselves in debate on how we can make sure that the vast majority of our children who are not in school but will be in a few years prepare themselves to enter school much better prepared than their predecessors have been able to do. With our provincial government's agreement that it signed with the federal government just about six, eight months ago, there was an opportunity for us to begin to develop those kinds of facilities in this province.

My fear is that the fact that this child care issue didn't get even a mention in the throne speech is a result of the fact that the provincial government here is responding to the position that the new federal government has taken on pooh-poohing the whole idea of creating a national system of early learning and child development. The government by its silence on this issue seems to be agreeing with the dismantling that the federal government is proposing of the system of early childhood education and care that we have and, in fact, is agreeing that there's no need for us to put some more effort into making the system better, more easily accessible so that it can provide quality learning experiences to our children when they really need it, in the very early years.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll simply conclude by saying that I'll continue to work on these two issues. The postsecondary issue and the early child care issue are two issues that I'll be certainly focusing my attention on in this session.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, we do have Standing Order 29(2)(a) available. I'm going to need another speaker because the time for this speaker has now evaporated, and his speech has not been adjourned. But we're now in section 29(2)(a).

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, may I rise to adjourn debate?

The Speaker: Well, no, you can't because your time has already expired. I just ruled against the previous gentleman.

We do have this five-minute segment in here, so let's see if there are some questions. The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: It is indeed my pleasure at this time to take the opportunity under the particular reference that the Speaker has mentioned to talk about the important initiatives that have been identified in the Speech from the Throne. I might also want to take the opportunity to compliment many of the points that the hon. member has mentioned relative to the proactive initiatives that have been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, all of us have two types of energy, be it positive energy or negative energy, and it's all in the attitude that we take and how we choose relative to the Speech from the Throne.

The Speaker: Please work with me, Minister of Environment. Are you under the section 29 subsection with the question and answer, or are you participating in the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Boutilier: I was going to pose a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Boutilier: I appreciate his indulgence relative to that. I would, through the chair to the hon. member, pose this question when it comes to what we imagine pertaining to the issue of environment. I ask the hon. member, relative to the important initiatives on environment that we identified in the Speech from the Throne, if in fact he would like to offer additional suggestions and help in terms of how we build on the excellent work we are doing on the environment and what we can do in terms of enhancing it even further in this the 21st century pertaining to protecting the environment.

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you like to respond?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to respond to this energetic Minister of Environment's question. I think that on the environmental issue again the emphasis on the environment was very limited in the speech. What is there is there for everyone to read, so I won't regurgitate what's there. What's not there is something that I do want to mention.

I was reading the business section of the Globe and Mail this morning, and there was a very interesting article there about what European societies have done on the environmental front in terms of reducing the consumption of fossil fuels; conservation, that is. I find absolutely no mention, no commitment on the part of the government through this throne speech on what measures it proposes to Albertans that it will take in order to move us towards conserving energy so that the use of energy is not seen as something that's left to every individual but that we all collectively take responsibility for cutting back on the dependence on fossil fuels, on fossil fuels that have only a limited life. You know, after that, they're not renewable.

We need to be developing alternatives, and one of the key points that was made in today's article in the Globe and Mail with respect to this conservation focus that European societies have is that as a result of this, these societies are investing huge amounts in alternative energy resources. They'll be the ones who will be selling this technology all around the world, and we'll be still using our fossil fuel and, in fact, increasing our dependence on it and missing the boat on entering into a sort of new world of technology, of knowledge, of information where wealth will be drawn from our ability to conceive of these new technologies, new ideas, new ways of both conserving and protecting our environment yet also becoming rich as a result of it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's comments, but I think that perhaps what has been lost in this discussion and what has been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is the idea that this province will be the only province and the only government in the history of Canada when it comes to holding an environmental youth summit. There are no other governments in Canada that have chosen to do that. What has been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is the fact that this government will be in fact holding a youth environmental summit, referred to as YES, where we will harness together young minds and young ideas from all over this province in the upcoming fall, when we will be in fact talking in even more detail in terms of the importance of the youth and the ideas and the energy and the ideas that the hon. member mentions.

In fact, it has been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and this province will continue to build on the ideas of harnessing the ideas of youth in this environmental youth summit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 4, the Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006.

In August 2005 the government of the United States passed legislation extending daylight saving time by four weeks, beginning in 2007. Following the decision, Alberta began to look at the pros and cons of changing daylight saving time in our province. As part of making the decision, Justice consulted all ministries and relevant stakeholders, including agriculture, education, energy, and the financial, industry, and transportation sectors. The decision among the majority of stakeholders was to synchronize with the United States.

Presently daylight saving time is observed from the first Sunday in April to the last Sunday in October. With the passage of Bill 4 daylight saving time would be extended by four weeks, starting on the second Sunday in March and ending the first Sunday in November.

Mr. Speaker, history would indicate that changing daylight saving time has been met with some reservation. In the past Alberta made attempts through plebiscites to have daylight saving time run on a full-time basis. This never came to be, but in 1971 a majority of Albertans did vote in favour of daylight saving time on a full-time basis during the summer. Since that time, there has been only one occasion when the act was amended. In 1987 the period for daylight saving time was extended by having it begin sooner, moving from the last Sunday in April to the first Sunday in April. This decision was the result of the United States changing when they observe daylight saving time. In Canada all provinces with daylight saving time followed.

At the time of the 1987 amendment the department of federal and intergovernmental affairs conducted a study into why we had daylight saving time. The study concluded that most jurisdictions in North America observed daylight saving time, and it was important for Alberta to be consistent with our trading partners.

Nineteen years later the rationale for this change to daylight saving time remains the same. Alberta needs to maintain its competitive advantage by co-ordinating time changes with our major trading partners and ensuring that our financial, industrial, transportation, and communication links are harmonized. For example, the financial sector noted that banking, money market, and investment operations deal with Toronto- and New York-based institutions every day and already face deadlines for settling transactions based on the hours banks are open in the east. Shareholders in the agriculture sector suggested that co-ordinating time changes would be helpful in the transportation of live animals and perishable food at border crossings. The transportation industry expressed concern over the impact on flight schedules if we did not make the change.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that when I speak of trading partners, this is not just our southern trading partners but our partners within Canada. Four other provincial jurisdictions have already made the decision to proceed with the change to daylight saving time, including Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I've touched on the importance of changing daylight saving time from a trade perspective, but there are other benefits as well. Transportation Canada has advised that there will likely be a reduction in the number of pedestrian and motor vehicle occupant fatalities and injuries as the highest frequency of accidents occurs between the hours of 5 o'clock and 8 o'clock p.m. The extra daylight would make pedestrians more visible. Another major consideration to take into account is energy savings. Individual households could benefit from extended hours of daylight as less electricity and natural gas would be used.

Mr. Speaker, I've outlined a number of important reasons to support this bill. I ask that members do support Bill 4 as it goes forward. Thank you very much.

At this time I would ask that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 5

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill deals with minor amendments to three pieces of legislation; namely, the Civil Enforcement Act, the judicature amendment act, and the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act. Amendments to the Civil Enforcement Act will further refine and clarify the process for creditors who are seizing property, amendments to the judicature amendment act will refine and clarify original amendments that allow structured settlements in injury and death cases so that payments can be made in instalments, and amendments to the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act will modify the requirements for filing and duplicating records and will allow records of court proceedings to be certified both orally and in writing.

There are two amendments being proposed to the Civil Enforcement Act so that all types of creditors who are seizing property can use the same process under the act. The courts have ruled that a seizure of property that was already under seizure is invalid. Amendments to this act will help to resolve conflicts between various creditors about who has the right to seize property and who does not. A distress creditor is usually someone, such as a landlord, who is owed rent by a tenant and who has the right to seize the debtor's property without a court order or judgment. An enforcement creditor is someone who has the right to seize the debtor's property under a court order money judgment.

The act now provides that a distress creditor can give notice of his or her claim to a civil enforcement agency that has seized a debtor's property on behalf of an enforcement creditor. This means that the seizing agency would have to notify the distress creditor before releasing property that has been seized. The distress creditor may then choose to obtain a court order to take control of the seizure or effect a second seizure to protect his or her interest in the seized property. The proposed changes would allow the same provisions where the property is already under seizure for a distress creditor and an enforcement creditor.

One amendment to the Civil Enforcement Act addresses the situation of a distress creditor, such as a landlord, having seized property when an enforcement creditor, such as a credit card company, also wants to seize that property. There is no mechanism in the legislation now that allows an enforcement creditor to have the same property seized or to have the existing seizure transferred to him or her when a distress creditor releases a seizure. The amendment would allow an enforcement creditor, a person who has a right to seize property under a money judgment, to give notice of his or her claim to a civil enforcement agency that has seized personal property on behalf of a distress creditor. The civil enforcement agency would have to give notice to the enforcement creditor before releasing the seized property. The enforcement creditor may then choose to make an application under the act. The act already addresses the situation of when two enforcement creditors want to seize property; that is, when an enforcement creditor seizes a debtor's property, he or she does so on behalf of all other enforcement creditors.

The second amendment to the Civil Enforcement Act requires an enforcement creditor to obtain a court order when taking control of the seizure process or when effecting a second seizure of a property that is already under seizure on behalf of a distress creditor.

The second piece of legislation we're dealing with is the judicature amendment act. Minor amendments will refine and clarify original amendments that allow the courts to order that monetary awards be paid in instalments. This will help protect the current and future needs of Albertans impacted by injury or death. The original amendments, passed in 2004, allowed for structured settlements so that payments could be paid in instalments rather than in a lump sum. Mr. Speaker, these were very important amendments as lump-sum payments can pose difficulties and additional challenges for victims of serious injuries or families who have lost an income earner. Lump-sum payments are subject to inflation and tax on investment income. Some victims and their dependants with long-term needs either spend their awards or greatly reduce them through investment choices. Following the 2004 amendments there was more feedback and consultation that have brought forward the minor amendments before us today.

One of the amendments will provide clarification of the court's discretion to order a structured settlement when it is in the best interest of the plaintiff. Although the initial amendments allow the courts to order structured settlements, the section now provides guidelines for doing so. A hallmark of structured settlements is their tax-free status. To ensure the status, another amendment reflects provisions of the tax act.

Amendments to the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act reflect developments that have occurred with the introduction of digital recording in the year 2000. The proposed amendments will change the definition of court reporter and will allow more flexibility in how records of court proceedings are certified. The amendments will also clarify how records of court proceedings are stored and how long the originals are kept.

The current legislation defines reporter as "an official court reporter appointed in accordance with the Alberta Rules of Court" and includes a stenographer or typist appointed by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Today official court reporters are not necessarily appointed. The Alberta Rules of Court were amended so that any person certified as a shorthand reporter under the Alberta shorthand reporters regulation is by definition an official court reporter. Typists who work for persons or companies appointed by the minister as court reporters do not receive individual appointments. The proposed amendment states that a reporter is "an official court reporter as defined under the Alberta Rules of Court" or a person appointed by the minister as a court reporter, including an agent or an employee of that person.

The act permits evidence given in court proceedings and civil cases or matters under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act to be recorded by machine. The judge who presided over the proceedings or the clerk who was in charge of the machine must certify the machine-made recordings. A certificate signed by the judge or clerk can be used as proof that a recording is the record of the evidence taken in the court proceedings.

Before digital recordings tapes were used to record court proceedings, and the judge or clerk would sign a certificate stating that a tape, identified by number, contained the record of the court proceedings held on a specific day. Tapes are no longer used because court proceedings are digitally recorded and stored on servers. As a result, clerks certify the digital recordings orally by speaking into the digital recorder. The regulations were amended to permit oral certification of the record, and now the act is being amended to reflect that.

A related amendment is the transfer of authority to make regulations prescribing the manner and form of certifications given under the act. The authority is being transferred from the Lieutenant Governor in Council to the minister, and it includes the power to prescribe that certifications relating to records and transcripts may be done orally or by electronic means. This will make it easier to make changes in how records and transcripts are certified in the future as the need arises.

The act now requires the records of court proceedings "be filed in the office of the official having custody of the records of the court." Digital recordings are not filed. They are made on the hard drive of a computer in the courtroom and are transferred to a server. The amendment provides that records shall be "stored and maintained by the official having custody of the records of the court and shall not be removed except as required" by statute, a rule of court, or a court order.

Section 7 of the act says that any time after six months from when a record is created, a duplicate may be made and the original record may be erased. It's proposed that this section be repealed as it gives the impression original recordings are being erased shortly after they are made. That's not the case. Original recordings are kept for at least 10 years, until they are destroyed in accordance with the act.

I'm happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that that concludes my remarks relative to this particular bill. I do ask members to support the bill. While they are minor amendments, they are important to the proper operation of those pieces of legislation.

I would like to conclude by asking that the debate on this particular matter be adjourned at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 6, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, there are four amendments included in this bill which facilitate better access to justice for Alberta families dealing with the maintenance enforcement program. The legislation will also clarify existing sections of the Maintenance Enforcement Act to allow for better client service. Specifically, the four amendments relate to the application of payments, financial examinations, maintenance agreements, and access to certain locked-in retirement savings.

The first amendment deals with how payments are applied and will ensure that more money reaches creditors before MEP keeps any for penalties or fees. Mr. Speaker, under MEP there are a number of possible support payments that debtors can be required to make. The most common would be the regular court-ordered payments paid every month, twice a month, or weekly in some cases. These are called periodic support payments. However, there are other kinds of payments that might be owed to a creditor for the current month that are not periodic support payments. For example, the court might have ordered that court costs be paid or a large one-time lump-sum maintenance payment. Another type of common payment that might be owed is what is called additional expenses, like the share of the children's medical costs, daycare, or extracurricular activities.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, money collected by MEP is applied first to the current month's periodic support payment, then to arrears and penalties, and, lastly, to those other amounts owed that I just mentioned. Because additional expenses, one-time maintenance payments, and court costs are not periodic payments, the Maintenance Enforcement Act now says that these are to be paid only after arrears and penalties have been satisfied.

The changes to the act will clarify that all current maintenance payments, whether periodic or one-time-only payments, must be paid first before any funds can be applied to arrears or MEP's penalties. This reflects the priority of the financial needs of Alberta families while still allowing MEP to maximize its collection of fees.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment deals with financial examinations. This amendment will improve current process, including allowing staff to better accommodate debtors' schedules and reach debtors who are avoiding MEP. Currently MEP can summon a debtor to appear at MEP's office to be examined regarding their employment, income, assets, and financial circumstances. Financial examinations have been exceedingly successful for MEP. This initiative has realized the collection or resolution of a monthly average of about $900,000 of support arrears. That's a significant amount of money for Alberta families.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to point out that this process has been valuable for debtors, who have had the chance to come clean with MEP and make a fresh start. Many have provided enough evidence to MEP to result in a significant reduction in arrears. These debtors have also avoided the default hearing process, thereby avoiding potential jail time. Financial examinations have also saved the department in court time.

The amendments will allow for substitutional service orders for summonses and for any other orders the court feels are advisable. The ability to obtain substitutional service orders will allow the program to bring debtors who are constantly evading service in for financial examinations. With these amendments we will also clarify that examinations can be adjourned and continued at a later date without re-serving the debtor. This means that fewer cases will be brought to court for default hearings, and adjournments will allow MEP to accommodate debtors' schedules. In sum, Mr. Speaker, these changes will allow MEP to put to better use one of its collection tools, one that has already proven to be of tremendous benefit to the program and its clients.

The amendment to maintenance agreements under the bill will make it easier for people with these agreements to have MEP administer their maintenance. Mr. Speaker, two people who enter into an agreement for maintenance for a child, spouse, or adult interdependent partner can use a maintenance enforcement support agreement. The maintenance enforcement support agreement is also the form of agreement used under the Family Law Act. These agreements are invaluable for separating parties because they save time, money, and litigation. They also encourage noncourt methods of resolving child and spousal support issues, which can mean more amicable settlements for families.

With the advent of the provincial child support guidelines contained in the Family Law Act, it is expected that more parties will choose these agreements rather than to go to court. Currently to have their maintenance enforcement support agreements enforced by MEP, parties must first file the agreement at the Court of Queen's Bench and serve notice of the filing on the other party. The amendments proposed in Bill 6 will mean that parties will not need to file the agreement or give notice of the filing to the other party. Instead, MEP will file the agreements and give notice for their clients. This provides Albertans with increased customer service. Furthermore, these changes will increase access to justice as it will be easier for unrepresented parties to make their own enforceable maintenance agreements.

Mr. Speaker, the final amendment I wish to address is to the current rules locking in some retirement accounts. These can be a hindrance in giving needed support to Alberta families. The proposed amendments will facilitate children being supported by locked-in retirement account, or LIRA, funds in cases where debtors are not voluntarily paying maintenance. Currently MEP can garnish retirement savings vehicles, including locked-in retirement accounts.

The ability for MEP to access funds in LIRAs was approved and passed in this Legislature in 2004. This tool improves collections on behalf of Alberta families. It also contemplates debtors' existing ability to access these funds in cases of financial hardship. However, the intention in this Legislature in allowing MEP to garnish funds in LIRAs was not realized in practice. Even with the authority granted in the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, financial institutions have taken the position that MEP will not receive money from the LIRA garnishment until the debtor is at least 50 years of age and chooses to withdraw the funds.

The amendments before us today will ensure that the intention of the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, is fully realized. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, they will allow Alberta families to benefit from funds collected from LIRAs immediately, when the need is most pressing. More importantly, the amendments will ensure that children and families will not have to wait for the debtor to retire before they are paid the support that they are due.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments will increase access to justice for Albertans. They will also enable MEP to achieve even better results than they have been in recent years, and those achievements are indeed significant. More importantly, they will assist MEP in continuing the work they do in helping Alberta children and families.

I encourage members of this Assembly to support this bill, Mr. Speaker, and at this time I move that we adjourn debate.

Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 7, Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006.

The amendments are designed to adjust wording to clearly indicate that a personal injury lawsuit involving the motor vehicle accident claims program can be commenced at either the Court of Queen's Bench or Provincial Court. Amended terminology will also indicate that parties have a choice whether or not to be represented by counsel when moving forward with a claim. While some may consider these amendments to be housekeeping, they are, nonetheless, important in our overall goal of improving speedy and efficient access to justice for Albertans.

Before discussing the amendment further, I'd like to give the Assembly a very brief description of the purpose of the motor vehicle accident claims program. The program itself was established in 1947 to protect victims by ensuring that they have recourse to claim against uninsured motorists for their personal injuries. As we are, unfortunately, all too aware, motor vehicle accidents occur in Alberta every day and often involve personal injuries. Because liability for a motor vehicle accident can be very expensive, all vehicle owners and drivers in Alberta are required to have valid liability insurance. Regrettably, there are some who don't, and they also usually don't have the money to pay for the personal injuries that they have caused.

Sometimes the at-fault driver flees the scene of the accident, and the injured party does not know whom to sue. If an accident occurred in Alberta, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act protects victims of uninsured and unknown drivers by ensuring that they have someone from whom to recover damages for personal injury. Mr. Speaker, I do want to clarify that the program is not meant to be a substitute for private collision insurance and, therefore, cannot be used for property damage claims, only personal injury.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this program has worked very well for many years, but a fairly recent change to the small claims limit in the province means that people are accessing the program differently. I say fairly recent in that it was in the year 2002 when this province raised the small claims limit from $7,500 to $25,000, which just happens to be the highest in the country. The result has increased the use of the Provincial Court for a number of civil matters, including the Alberta motor vehicle accident claims program. Quite simply, with the ability now to recover more for personal injury damages in Provincial Court, more Albertans are opting to go this route as it is often faster, less expensive, and less legally complicated than going through the Court of Queen's Bench.

Mr. Speaker, that's what brings this before the Assembly today. While the personal injury lawsuits involving the motor vehicle accident claims program can be commenced at either the Court of Queen's Bench or Provincial Court, current wording in the act is exclusive to the Court of Queen's Bench. We recognize that depending on the extent of a person's injuries, people may seek higher damages than $25,000 and therefore need to file their claims in the Court of Queen's Bench. These amendments would not alter in any way their right to do so, but it is our anticipation that people would opt for the more simplified route in order to get their claim dealt with more quickly so that they are able to get on with their lives. As a result of the simplified process, some of these individuals may forgo legal counsel and represent themselves in their litigation.

It is therefore the purpose of the amendments to adopt wording in the act that represents language of both the Provincial Court and the Court of Queen's Bench and make other amendments reflecting the fact that unrepresented litigants may sue under the act. Once again, Mr. Speaker, this bill is to improve access to justice for all Albertans, and I would encourage the members to support Bill 7 as it goes forward.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 8

Trustee Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Once again it is my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006.

In 2001 we made provisions to allow trustees to be more flexible in their approach to investments and to diversify investments and minimize risk. The old approach confined trustees to investing in only those securities that had been identified in the so-called legal list. This method limited the flexibility of trustees in their choice of investments. It was outdated and no longer the best option to ensure that trustees were acting in the best interest of the trust.

Therefore, in keeping with modern theories of investment, we introduced the prudent investor rule to allow trustees more freedom to make good decisions. The goal was to have a reasonable return while avoiding undue risk with the ability to consider the specific circumstances of the trust. We retained the legal list in a schedule to the act for transitional purposes. During the transition trustees of some private trusts that were already in effect when the 2001 amendments came into force continued to be governed by the legal list. Five years later trustees of those pre-existing trusts have had time to become familiar with the 2001 changes, and we are now prepared to remove the legal list entirely from the Trustee Act. With this amendment, unless it specifies otherwise, a trust will be governed by the prudent investor rule no matter when the trust was created.

In addition to the trusts in effect before 2001 there are several acts that also refer to the legal list for the purpose of defining investment powers under those acts. This bill amends those statutes to allow the investment powers to be defined by regulation. The regulations will set out customized investment rules that are appropriate to each act.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage members of the Assembly to support Bill 8 as it moves forward, and at this time I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour and the outstanding progress this afternoon I would move that we now adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 28, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/02/28

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Strang]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered so eloquently by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor. I'd like to begin my speech, as others have, by commending His Honour on the work that he has done over the past year. His love for the province is evident, and his dedication to our home is beneficial to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the speech delivered was one that laid the plans for our province for the next 12 months. I'm very excited about many aspects in the speech. Quite a few of the areas covered are directly related to the constituency of West Yellowhead. As I'm sure my constituents are aware, West Yellowhead is a growing and a vibrant area. There are challenges within the electoral boundaries, but the people are facing these challenges and meeting them with innovation and success.

One of the areas touched on by the Lieutenant Governor was that of education. One of the challenges that West Yellowhead is facing is education. The challenge is not enticing students to postsecondary as much as it is having students make it through and finish their high school. I appreciate the creation of the high school completion symposium to help all legislators understand some of the reasons why students decide not to complete their studies. The government not only needs to find out why our students leave high school early but has to show young people in Alberta the extremely successful postsecondary schools in the province. We all know about how good our universities are in the province, but I think we need to highlight how good our consortium and technical schools are.

The education system in Alberta is top-notch and cannot be overlooked. I do not think there is a province in Canada that can match the performance of our system. This excellent system extends from kindergarten to grade 12 as well as to university and to our consortiums and technical institutes. In my constituency the consortium and technical institutes are extremely important as a lot of our citizens of West Yellowhead attend these schools. I think the government needs to continue to entice young people into the consortium and tech schools around the province. By doing this, it will encourage the students to stay in school and finish their high school studies. The government must stress the importance of high school education because without it life can be very difficult in this day and age.

West Yellowhead is seeing a boom in the region through the coal, forestry, oil and gas, and tourism industries. This boom has brought with it many positive changes as well as many challenges.

My constituents are also heavily tied to the forest industry, and I'm very pleased to hear His Honour mention that the government will ensure a strong and sustainable forest sector. We must ensure that there is long-term sustainability in our forest sector. The future of West Yellowhead depends on a very smart approach to forestry management. My constituents depend on the government continually looking for new ideas and ensuring that this vital industry continues to grow. This industry will grow. I'm extremely confident that it will remain strong not only through the commitment to harness innovation but also the support to the Alberta forestry institute. West Yellowhead will always be intrigued by changes done to the forest industry. As a government we need to ensure that there is balance in the industry so that we will see full utilization of all products and services that forestry offers.

Another important industry for West Yellowhead is the coal industry, and my constituents were pleased to hear that there will be a commitment to the coal industry. Now, while debate is looming about this resource, we cannot underestimate the usefulness of coal, nor can we underestimate the effectiveness and the environment-friendly aspect of clean burning coal technology.

Coal has a rich heritage in my constituency, with the Mitchell family running Luscar in the early 1900s. This area was called the Coal Branch. Many of the communities in my area were established, built, pretty nearly destroyed, and rebuilt again all because of coal. It is so vital to communities like Edson, Hinton, and Grande Cache, which need the government to continue its focus on this valuable resource.

Although many people believe there is no such thing as clean burning coal technology, I would like to tell them to come out into my constituency. See for yourselves the work that is done in the area on research of this new technology. As the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor mentioned, we have coal reserves to at least a thousand years. We must continually push forward to find the clean burning coal technology as fast as we can. Even though many think we are not environmentally sound individuals, the environment is one of the most important things to my constituents, and they are extremely supportive of clean burning technology as they realize the economic benefits that we have. My constituents are also depending on the technology to move forward, to become more and more viable. The opportunities for West Yellowhead are immense, and I cannot wait to see some of our coal technology.

The final thing I'd like to touch on is the mention by His Honour of the rural development strategy. As you know, the strategy is very important to West Yellowhead as it is a rural constituency. There is so much development in this region, and much of it can be attributed to the rural development strategy. I believe my constituency is going to benefit because the people of West Yellowhead are striving to work with regions surrounding it to make sure we are prosperous. The rural development strategy pushes this idea of teamwork. I'm very excited to see how this government is going to invest in our rural areas.

I feel this strategy is only going to be successful if all rural regions work together. This has already been seen through the many economic partnerships that exist around rural Alberta. West Yellowhead shares an economic alliance with communities in the Drayton Valley-Calmar and Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituencies, and this strategic partnership has proven extremely valuable to our economic growth. The Grande Alberta Economic Region is a very good example of how a rural development strategy will be successful. As the government promotes partnership and teamwork, it will become very significant to my constituents. The rural development strategy will complement the already established economic partnerships and will only make my region stronger.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are optimistic about the future of this province. They have no reason not to be. The government has put a multitude of effort and resources into helping this province succeed, and this is the same for my constituency. We are excited. I am excited. I look forward to the next 12 months.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and offer my response to the Speech from the Throne. It has been about 15 months since I joined this esteemed Assembly, and let me start by saying: wow, what an incredible journey. I have found my time and experience as an MLA both engaging and rewarding. A year ago 13 of our 16 caucus members were new. We had to learn quickly, and we hit the ground running. Looking back, I am pleased with our work and promise you, Mr. Speaker, and the people of this great province that we're going to work even harder to advocate on their behalf and continue to take their issues and concerns forward.

Like I said last year in my maiden speech, sir, I represent a wonderful constituency. One observation I made in my 15 months of service so far was that my constituents are paying a lot more attention, and this is probably true for most other constituencies in Alberta. People are starting to ask questions and investigate available options. They demand answers and are only convinced when presented with facts and clear evidence. This is a trend I like and encourage. Albertans no longer have blind faith in their leaders. This may yet need to be reflected at the polls, and I hope that one day voter turnout would increase from its currently low levels.

Talking about observations, Mr. Speaker, I have also reached the conclusion that there's definitely a democratic deficit in this province. Alberta is exhibiting clear signs of democratic sickness. Take the short legislative sessions. We're lucky if we sit for more than 50 days a year, and that's counting both the spring and fall sessions. Take the lack of opposition representation on standing policy committees. Talk about the Public Accounts Committee and how handicapped it is. Take our privacy legislation, which really exists to ensure secrecy and privacy of government actions and decisions, where, in fact, it should be people's privacy we're guarding. Access to information has been turned into denial or restriction of access.

This province desperately needs democratic renewal. Part of the problem, I think, is attitude. Most cabinet ministers and some government backbenchers – and I'm not saying all, but some – believe or want us to believe that everything is A-okay and nothing better could be achieved. Why is the opposition questioning their divine wisdom? How dare we suggest alternate solutions? Many of them think: if it comes from this side of the House, then it must be bad. Now, how would I characterize this attitude, Mr. Speaker? I'd probably call it childish. I view it as regressive, misguided, and arrogant.

This government has made a habit of introducing and passing a budget and then blowing it to pieces, sometimes in less than two months or so, by incurring budget overruns, which I call an overdraft or a deficit, but the government spin doctors so cleverly call them supplementary supply. In any sound business when your spending exceeds your budgetary allowance, it's called an overdraft or a deficit. Could it be that this government intentionally lowballs and underestimates its revenues? Could it be that the ruling Tories are using annual surpluses to cushion their ad hoc, one-off, pet projects?

My friends across the floor should think about this point for a second.

An Hon. Member: What friends?

Mr. Elsalhy: Few. A few friends across should think about this for a second. I hear the hon. Member for Castle Downs laughing. I really enjoy entertaining him.

Why are we spending more than we're earning? Think about this: why are we spending more than we're bringing in from stable funding sources like taxation or non resource-based income? This government's reliance on surplus, nonrenewable energy, resource-based income is dangerous. Markets are volatile and unpredictable. Better budget planning and fiscal restraint are really warranted. I'm hoping for a day when the budget would more accurately reflect our financial situation and when budget surpluses would be more closely forecasted. When will Albertans demand that their government think to the next quarter century rather than just to the next fiscal quarter?

Moving on to my next observation, which is the practice of governing from one crisis to the next and the demonstrated shift from need to greed, after 35 years in power the ruling Conservatives' prime directive, Mr. Speaker, is to sustain their grip on power and get re-elected. They're tired and stale. An open-ended question: why is it that the government is so bent on things like deregulation and privatization that it appears to have become a goal and not a means? Why wasn't privatizing health care, for example, and the so-called third way discussed during the November 2004 election?

People were promised the opportunity to be fully consulted. The government said that they were going to consult with people, but here we are on the verge of dismantling our public health care system, and no consultation occurred. Some people argue the fact that there's going to be a website where people can send e-mails to the government or that some documents would be put on the Internet for people to access. I don't think that this is consultation. I was not consulted. I wasn't consulted as an elected official, nor was I consulted as a front-line health care worker and not even as a citizen. Now, what do Martha and Henry think?

The next issue, Mr. Speaker, which I would like to talk about is the rate of growth this province is experiencing. Just today we tried to debate the urgency of people's drinking and farm water being contaminated by methane and other gases and contaminants, to just cite one example. The government side didn't think that was urgent enough, and the discussion went nowhere.

I guess my message here is that people should really come before profit. People before profit: I'm not sure that this is a sentiment that is shared by all 83 members of the House, but I know that at least 21 of them in opposition share that sentiment. Most likely the government has other plans for this province.

Think with me, Mr. Speaker, to the early days. Think a First Nations' tribe which hunted buffalo. They hunted one every two to three days, and that was good. Then they were able to organize their hunt and capture two or three animals in one expedition, and that was great. Then they reached the idea that if we drive the entire herd off a cliff, we can harvest tens or even hundreds of buffalo in a single day. What they had was a lavish feast for a short period of time, followed by famine as they depleted the resource. Is our speed of development and rate of growth taking us in that direction? Are we not spending our children's and grandchildren's money today? What are the ecological and environmental implications of our actions?

This province needs structure and control as it forges ahead. No one hates money. We all want to get richer, but it's the nature of growth that's in question. What I am advocating is smart growth. I want a future that is sustainable. This province needs a solid plan, and the Conservatives, unfortunately, cannot muster one. It's really time to wake up and take stock. Albertans deserve the best open, transparent, democratic government; the best affordable education, K to 12 or postsecondary; the best public health care system; and the cleanest and most sustainable environment on the planet. All Albertans should share in the Alberta advantage, not just a select few.

Many Albertans, Mr. Speaker, including many constituents of Edmonton-McClung, are hoping for better leadership and a clearer vision for the future but are also convinced that this government is incapable of delivering that. They're hoping that the next provincial election will provide a leader who is inclusive, collaborative, and in touch. They want a government that is responsive, representative, and accountable. People also hope to be fully engaged in the decision-making process, and I'm all for that.

This year's Speech from the Throne and, similarly, the taxpayer-funded 30-minute infomercial on television featuring the Premier were nothing more than feel-good, pat-on-the-back media stunts, a patchwork of mini-announcements and policies on the fly, big on short-term promises from a Premier who is now a short-term leader. It's a boom-year speech with no sense of a concrete framework for the future of Alberta.

Take, for example, the heritage fund. I'm pleased that, finally, some money is going to the fund. But, really, think in terms of your own RRSP, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking in proportion here. If you contribute $1,000 annually into your RRSP account over 20 years, you achieve significantly more than $20,000 in your 20th year, a lot more. Why didn't this government follow good fiscal reasoning and a proven practice and contribute annually, even in smaller amounts – we're not asking for a billion every year – rather than wait for years and years to finally put a billion dollars into it? The math doesn't add up. Again, there is no plan.

We were also pleased to see a number of issues addressed that we as the Alberta Liberal Official Opposition and Albertans across this province have demanded action on for years. We have long advocated for the twinning of highway 63, the development of an inventory of groundwater in this province, and for developing a strong land-use framework. We were excited about the announcement that some assistance will flow through Alberta Works to Albertans who cannot work. No details were given though. So, yes, we're glad the government has made an initial commitment to tackle these issues. We just hope that they are as good as their word.

I'm also happy with some recent announcements showing that this government listened and favourably reacted to some of my own concerns with respect to the threat posed to the privacy of information of Albertans by the USA PATRIOT Act, for example.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on and on about the hits and misses, what was in the Speech from the Throne and what was ignored or omitted. However, in the interest of time I will just recap by saying that the Alberta Liberal opposition will continue to work with the government if its members are reasonable and willing to co-operate. We will also hold their feet to the fire whenever they lose sight of why they sought office. We will constantly remind them that people should come before profit and that there is no contradiction between guarding individual rights and interests on the one hand while advancing business and growing capital on the other. We can all be winner and enjoy what Alberta has to offer. The Alberta Liberals have what it takes, and we're ready to serve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure and a privilege to be able to respond to His Honour's Speech from the Throne. Having just listened to the previous speaker, one would think that either I live in a very different part of Edmonton or in some very secluded part of Alberta where we're blessed with privileges and blessings that other parts of Edmonton wouldn't enjoy. As I look at my constituents and as I look at the situation in my riding, it differs significantly from the doom and gloom that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung is professing there to be.

Let's start, for example, with the Speech from the Throne. The first main issue raised by His Honour was a learning society, education. Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton public school board is renowned not only throughout the province, not only throughout the country, not only throughout North America but throughout the world as a leader in education. It's not that long ago that I had the privilege of spending some time with the Minister of Education for Bavaria, Germany. Guess what? She was aware of the Edmonton public school board. As a matter of fact, they're remodeling their system in Bavaria based on the Edmonton public school board because of the approaches and the results that they achieved with the Edmonton public schools. It's quite unusual that the Member for Edmonton-McClung would not be proud of the system. Having the Member for Edmonton-Decore sitting behind him, who was a member of the board of trustees for the Edmonton public school board, I imagine that there must be a little bit of dissent on the Liberal benches because it is indeed a system to be proud of.

It's not only Germany that's looking at us. Governor Schwarzenegger just last year sent a whole troop of educators from the state of California to examine the Edmonton public school board and to remodel now California's school system based on the Edmonton public school board. That's just one of many school boards in this province who are doing exemplary work.

Mr. Speaker, we're not resting on our laurels. The Minister of Education and His Honour in the speech have indicated that roundtables will be taking place throughout the province which will be looking at some of the weaknesses within the system because no matter how good we are, you can never assume to be perfect. One of the issues that we will be looking at, according to the Speech from the Throne, is high school completion rates. The economy is booming in this province. There are many competing interests, and obviously for some when you juxtapose the potential of making some money versus attending classes and writing tests, money seems to be a bigger draw than writing tests, and they withdraw from school. That's only on the three-year completion. If you look at the five-year completion for high school students, we actually fall within the national average and do quite well. But that's not good enough, and His Honour has clearly indicated in the Speech from the Throne that we will be addressing those issues.

Now, again, maybe the media doesn't reach the southwestern part of Edmonton, but if one was to watch the news within the last couple of days, one would see, as indicated by His Honour in the speech, that the Minister of Advanced Education is addressing the issue of the trades and, as a matter of fact, extending the opportunities to our native population and making sure that they equally share in Alberta's booming economy and have the ability and the opportunity to work within the trades and avail themselves of not only a good income but the intrinsic reward of being a member of a profession and learning the skills that will be transferable later on, no matter how the economy may turn in this province. That's just, Mr. Speaker, in the area of learning.

The Speech from the Throne carries on, and it talks about a prosperous society. Now, we all know that Alberta happens to be in a position where we can refer to ourselves as a prosperous society. But as I always say, the Stone Age, Mr. Speaker, did not end simply because they ran out of stones; it ended because another material came about. Bronze I believe it was, those days. Well, the prosperity in Alberta will not end on the day when we hear that slurping sound coming from the ground and the oil runs out. The prosperity coming from this particular resource will end because other resources will come online, and this government, according to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, is quite prepared to look at that.

If you look at the Speech from the Throne, you will find that such innovative ideas as biofuels are being looked at, and as I can hear to my right, there are some serious considerations taking place to redevelop coal in this province. Mr. Speaker, we're lucky again because we have coal that is actually, comparatively, relatively clean coal, low-sulphur coal. If you look at the coal that's being dug out in the province of Nova Scotia, for example, or if you look at the coal that's being dug out in Europe, our coal happens to be one of the cleanest coal that you will find on the face of the planet. But we can do better. We know that there are possibilities of gasifying coal, and there are possibilities of developing secondary industries, which can carry our economy into the future.

So are we stagnant? Are we just relying on gas and oil? No, we're not. We're looking at value-added. We're looking at other resources. We're looking at stripping gas. We're looking at developing secondary economies, and we are already seeing progress in those particular sectors.

Also, in order to be competitive in this world, we are looking at infrastructure. The province is only as good and the economy will be only as good as the infrastructure that's put in place to support it. Supernet was just one example of the infrastructure that's being put in place to carry our economy into the future. Actually, a solid infrastructure such as highways, such as schools, such as hospitals, such as bridges and overpasses: those require investment as well, and the Speech from the Throne clearly lays out a plan that's affordable, a plan that's rational, a plan that's staggered over time to put that infrastructure into place. It appears that this kind of information simply is not getting across because the doom and gloom would make one believe that Alberta is on the verge of collapse economically and the infrastructure as well.

Now, in order for this province to prosper, there has to be a big plan in place, and His Honour has laid out that this government will be undertaking a land-use strategy. Mr. Speaker, we are blessed with wonderful land, with wonderful landscape over here, but in order for us to enjoy it and in order for our children to enjoy it into the future, we have to manage this. We have to preserve our environment, but we also have to have a co-ordinated plan about how we are going to manage our land. To do so, just like we have done with water, with the Water for Life strategy, the government will be developing a land-use strategy, which means that we will develop a co-ordinated plan on how this precious land of ours in this province will be used for industry, for development, for recreation, and for other uses. According to the Speech from the Throne that plan is being put in place. Albertans will be consulted, and municipipalities and other orders of government will be consulted on developing this land-use strategy.

Another issue touched upon by His Honour in his Speech from the Throne and a very topical issue at this point is the issue of a healthy society. No doubt this government places a great deal of value on the publicly funded health care system, but we also realize that changes need to be made. I think that realization is acknowledged by all members of this House, that certain changes have to occur in order for this system to be permanent, to be sustainable, and to be available to our children and our grandchildren. One of the changes and one of the alternatives that has to be introduced is innovation, and we have shown clearly, Mr. Speaker, and His Honour has noted in his speech that innovation actually works in the health care system. A prime example, as pointed out by His Honour, is the fact that with just a little bit of innovation, just a little bit of outside-of-the-box thinking, the wait-list for hip and knee replacements could be shrunk from 47 weeks to five weeks.

Now, if that kind of innovation could be introduced to other sectors of health care, that kind of innovative thinking and the ability to think outside of the box, if that ability to be different and to try something different could be applied to the health care system overall, clearly we could achieve better results perhaps for less money and an increased accessibility for all members of our society so that they can enjoy a good quality health care system into the future.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, is our health networks. A partnership between physicians, between specialists that can operate in cities 24/7 and provide ongoing, high-quality care to our residents is something that's being introduced. The Member for Edmonton-McClung will notice that in Edmonton, in the near future, there will be some announcements allowing doctors to practise and provide better care with the resources that they have and provide more continuous care to our patients.

Perhaps most importantly, as noted by the Lieutenant Governor, is the initiative of this government on cancer. One of the biggest parasites in our health system is cancer, killing our children, killing our parents, our brothers and sisters, and costing the health care system at the same time an enormous amount of dollars. Now, what can we do about it? Can we just treat it, or can we research it? Can we look at alternative treatment? Can we look at perhaps even preventing it? Well, we can, and this government will be not only a leader in this country and on this continent, but this province can actually become an international leader on cancer research with this injection of $1 billion, and I think we all should be proud of it. Now, that's a positive story that again didn't get to Edmonton-McClung.

Superimposed on that, Mr. Speaker, is the initiative on battling crystal meth, which again is another parasite within the health system that's costing us not only in health care but also in justice and in other social departments. One needs to not only look at the money; we have to look at the moral cost that it brings to our society. Again, we are leaders in combatting crystal meth.

Now, another issue that His Honour brings as a challenge to this government, which is being addressed, is the issue of law enforcement. If we are to have a healthy and prosperous society, we also have to have a safe society, and I think, again, quite a well laid out plan is being put forth by His Honour in his Speech from the Throne.

Just to give you one example, a program that's being instituted by the Edmonton Police Service here in Edmonton, which perhaps the Member for Edmonton-McClung would have heard about, is a program that deals with issues of multiculturalism. We are the only police force right now in North America that has members of all visible minority groups – be it racial, be it gender preference, or other minorities – who get together with officers at Edmonton police headquarters once a month and discuss issues of hate crime and resolve those issues together in a very consultative manner and educate our society. The results that they achieve are phenomenal. The percentage of hate crime in this city has dropped significantly ever since that task force was put together.

Another one is NET, Mr. Speaker, the Neighbourhood Empowerment Team, put together with the assistance of the Solicitor General of this province, putting one police officer together with a whole bunch of civilians and allowing civilians to take control of their own neighbourhood and basically chase crime away from their neighbourhood by patrolling neighbourhoods, by providing neighbours with Clubs to protect against car thefts.

Those are positive things that somehow do not penetrate across this aisle, and perhaps we ought to communicate them louder. Maybe the media is not doing a good job.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the Speech from the Throne. I'm very proud of the plan that has been laid out. I think that it's a plan that is second to none. I think it's a plan that makes this province yet again, this year, a leader in all realms of government. Is it perfect? No. That's why government continues to be needed. If you look for perfection, you will never find it because there is always room for improvement, but if you want to focus only on the negativities, you will never bring anything positive about. So I think we should continue on the positives. We should proliferate the positives and just only improve them and ignore the negative comments from across the aisle.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask our hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs whether the NET program is a provincial initiative. It's certainly an Edmonton city police initiative and has had some success in various neighbourhoods. I like the program very much. It's presently working in the Britannia Youngstown area of my riding. In what way was the province involved in that program?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Good question, Mr. Speaker, and I'd love to meet with the member after and explain it to him. In the instance of setting up the NET program in Edmonton-Castle Downs, I approached the Solicitor General and said that we need this program. Even though, indeed, the program is managed through the Edmonton Police Service, the Solicitor General, with the assistance of the Minister of Gaming, extended a grant allowing the program to move into that particular neighbourhood. That's usually how it is co-funded. Even though the program is administered by the Edmonton Police Service, the co-funding that comes for this program comes from the minister of lotteries, which allows them to put this program in place. If the member would like more information so he can set one up in his riding, I'd love to share that.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the Speech from the Throne.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour to rise and honour both the Lieutenant Governor and his message, a message of hope and a message with wide-ranging ideas for all Albertans. After one year in this position my constituents continue to support me and also to challenge me and stimulate me to seek better ways to address the public interest. Many of the issues that were raised by the Lieutenant Governor are dear to my heart, so I'll respond to some of these with some amplifications that I hope are appropriate and helpful in the House.

Let me talk about democratic response-ability in the sense of a hyphenated word with the emphasis on the ability of people to respond and to be responded to on issues affecting their lives. One of our greatest challenges is finding creative ways to engage citizens, especially young people, who must learn ways to participate and influence our future, indeed their future.

I have many young people in my constituency who are seeking hope, they're seeking trust in a system that doesn't seem to be responding to them in many ways in a society that doesn't seem to be responding to them in a constructive way, and they're looking for integrity in their representatives. They're remarkably aware of the difference between looking good and being good, of speaking and acting, of material success and true personal success. I'm very proud of our young people and their motivation for more humane and simple lifestyles, recognizing the frenetic pace that's killing so many of our fellow citizens.

My constituents are looking generally for more respectful, responsible leadership in the province, particularly in relation to cherished values, including fair social supports, particularly for those in disadvantaged positions; better environmental protection and enhancement of our environment; predictable educational investment that they can feel significantly supported in; and real health care reform.

A welcome sight to see in the message from the Lieutenant Governor was an emphasis on a land-use strategy. Indeed, this is the third time this decade that this process has been attempted, and clearly this must be the foundation for all else that happens in the province, yet it is so late in coming. It remains to be seen whether it will actually govern decisions rather than simply guide decisions to be easily overcome by vested interests in and out of government.

We must have three elements if this strategy is to be effective. First, it must have significant public involvement, including our municipalities. Any land-use planning without that is doomed to failure.

Second, it must have true integration in all the ministries. Five or six ministries are now involved in it, and that's appropriate. Any policies now need to be integrated well into those ministries such that they all understand the same rules, the same goals, and the same process.

Third, whatever we come to in terms of a land-use strategy must be enshrined in legislation, not guidelines. Without legislation it will continue to be undermined and manipulated.

Without these, Albertans will continue to be rightly cynical about the real intentions, especially after two previous attempts at a land-use strategy, in relation to taking control of our future and not leaving it to the industrial community and vested interests.

In relation to social supports my constituents are very concerned about the mismatch between the economic success of the province and the penury in which many of our disabled and disadvantaged people are living. They want to see more fairness, indeed generosity, from this government. How can we expect people with disabilities to live below the poverty line, to receive less than a 4 per cent increase over the past decade while we in privileged positions, indeed, set our own salaries? Now, if that isn't a conflict of interest, I don't know what is. We ourselves received 4.5 per cent just this year.

In relation to the democratic deficit I am struggling with many in the House to find ways to engage more people in discussion and active involvement in our political process for healthier communities and for better public policy. How do we get more participation in our constituency work?

Well, there are a number of ways that have been discussed across the country and are being embraced in a number of different jurisdictions. They have to do with, in the first instance, a citizens' assembly, such as the one that was held in B.C., and it holds real promise for engaging people, thinking perhaps for the first time about what a responsible electoral process might look like and looking at the whole electoral process for ways in which it might be more responsive in the election of their representatives.

We've talked repeatedly in the House about all-party committees, and it's not clear to me what the fear of this might be. Most jurisdictions in democratic countries argue for an inclusive, participatory democratic process where all ideas are shared and debated openly. It can only benefit our democracy to have this.

Fixed election dates would also be progress in terms of moving us towards a more stable, less manipulated, important election time.

Whistle-blower legislation: clearly one that this government has resisted for years but would demonstrate a clear commitment to wanting dissent, seeking opportunities for honest dissent. Many are looking in both the academic community and in the public for signs that this government is willing and courageous enough to welcome whistle-blowers. The most recent events around the grizzly expert being demoted is just the most recent example of undermining the public confidence. The scientific community needs a voice in public policy, and it's not clear the extent to which they are receiving that. Obviously it's not the only contribution to public policy, but science and public values, constituent values, should be determining more effectively the public policy we embrace.

Fossil fuel use is obviously a big issue in the throne speech and is rightly highlighted. I think it's important to recognize the new thinking south of the border, where President Bush himself has indicated that we have to end our addiction to fossil fuels. How are we embracing that in Alberta? Or are we continuing to hide from the reality that fossil fuels are fossils, that they're a thing of the past, and that we need to move quickly away from fossil fuel use as a primary form of energy production in this province? Our young people know it. Even our old people know that it's time to make the break. Rich as we are, there is no reason why we can't extend our fossil fuel life well into the future and be leaders in renewables and energy efficiency in this province.

I know that the Environment minister has talked about this. I would like to see some investment, significant investment, incentives in these kinds of initiatives, and we have yet to see that in a significant way. This is a win-win-win for Albertans. It would give us an economic competitiveness, not paying the same prices for energy that others would be paying because we would be generating more of it with renewables. We would have reduced fossil fuel costs, we would have new technology and jobs, and we would contribute to the global climate change problem. We would be truly leaders on the planet.

Biofuels are an excellent addition, and these were identified in the throne speech. They will diversify our agriculture, and they will move us along toward some of the renewable energy sources we've talked about, but they need a fair, level playing field to compete with the fossil fuel industry, which has had ample, generous, some would say ignominious subsidies over the years. Especially now, we need to incent energy that is good for the environment. We do not need to give incentives for fossil fuels any longer.

Coal is not clean. There may be some experimental and scientific research that's showing how to burn it in a way that gasifies it and where some of the capturing of pollutants can be achieved. There is still a tremendous amount of energy that goes into extracting coal and into transporting it, and it is not clear to me from the literature I've read that we are even within 10 years of having clean coal. So I have real concerns about this, as many Albertans do. It's another demonstration of addiction to a fuel that has to be partitioned closely and slowly as we phase out of it.

Ironically, in the face of tremendous commitment to fossil fuels, we are talking about a billion dollars in cancer prevention when fossil fuels are a major contributor to cancer in the country. How does one reconcile these two, except in an unhealthy way, to see that an emphasis on fossil fuels is going to definitely require much more investment in cancer treatment and cancer prevention? There's a mismatch there that I think is not lost on most Albertans.

I was very pleased to see a youth environment summit being discussed, and I look forward to that very much. I think our young people have a great interest and a great willingness to give ideas and get involved in a very substantive way in protecting our environment and developing new ways of approaching a more sustainable environmental practice.

How will we measure a clean environment? After 30 years it's still not clear that we even have the general progress indicators in mind, let alone significantly measuring these measures of sustainability. The Pembina Institute has given us a wonderful model from which we could examine a broad look at social, economic, environmental indicators that would give us a proper balance on whether or not we are developing a more sustainable society. I hope we can see some of those included in our annual reports in this Legislature before long.

The Water for Life strategy has been a great prototype, a great guide. It has been there for almost five years. What we need now is sufficient investment to establish commissions, to protect watersheds, to monitor industrial activity, to prosecute polluters, and to shift to best practice wherever we can. We continue to focus on the end, on water treatment, instead of on the prevention upstream, upslope and on the preservation and conservation of water. This clearly has to be a focus for this next decade, especially in southern Alberta.

Why do we not yet have all water wells registered in Alberta? With hundreds of thousands of oil and gas installations and hundreds of spills every year, when will we see a monitoring agency with teeth? Why aren't there prosecutions for all these spills? How many contaminated sites will go unreclaimed and, ultimately, be passed on to the public purse? These are concerns that many of my constituents raise because many of them are in the oil industry, and they also have concerns about their future.

I think it's important in thinking about prosperity for the long term to remember how many of our so-called investments are actually expenses, and they've been externalized costs as a result of environmental and human health costs. I'm thinking here again in terms of our extensive dependence on fossil fuels. If the energy industry was paying its share of health and environmental costs, we would see a much different playing field for renewables.

In relation to health care it's I think fair to say that the primary care networks have made a great contribution to health care in all of our jurisdictions. It's nice to see health practitioners working in teams. They can produce more efficient, more effective results than isolated practitioners who are not co-operating and working on the same agenda.

I need to remind this Assembly, perhaps not my colleagues but the Assembly, that economic competition does not improve the care of people. It never has. Money will not be an incentive for improving the care of people. We need administrative efficiency. We need more investment in prevention. We need full investment in home care and physiotherapy to keep people as active and mobile as possible. We do not need private options that will reduce public quality and access.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: I'd like to ask the hon. member: does he feel that we need more administration in health care then? He didn't quite get to finish his point there. I'm concerned that it seems like we're already heavy with bureaucracy and not enough front-line service. Is that what you were intending? What did you mean?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an excellent question. It's not clear to me what has been the result of regionalization of our health system in Alberta. Has that meant less bureaucracy or more? Has that meant more efficient leadership? Has it meant more investment in the kinds of preventive and health promotion activities that would actually reduce the population demands on the health system? Already we're recognizing that over 70 per cent of what's coming into the health care system is preventable.

So, no, I don't think we need more bureaucracy. I don't think we need more administration. I'm asking: have we assessed the relative merits of the changes in regionalization and the present administrative relationships? Could we make them more efficient and more effective and streamlined?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his comments relative to the importance of youth and the role they play. It's often said that the greatest environmental victories of the future will be not what label we carry, be it as a Conservative or a Liberal or a Bloc or a Green or a New Democrat. It ultimately will be the victory we carry as people concerned about the health of ourselves. Taking care of the environment is also taking care of ourselves, and that carries no label because we're all involved.

But I pose a question. On numerous occasions you've made reference to Water for Life. You've made reference to the issue of investment. As much as this government in the past and the federal government of the past had a fiscal regime relative to attracting investment in this province for some of the fossil fuels you make reference to, I would ponder his thought relative to a fiscal regime for environmental initiatives of the future, speaking to that responsibility that companies and others might also have as we invest in these important points that he makes reference to.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an important question, how we incent in the right ways citizenry that is used to consuming. I think that one of the key indicators of whether we're moving towards more sustainable energy policy will be the degree to which we give incentives for people to consume less, to consume smarter with less in the way of pollution and throwaways, and to consume, particularly, appliances and material goods that are much more efficient and much more beneficial in their level of pollution. In that sense Climate Change Central has conveniently put on their website every province in the country and all the incentives that each province has created for some of these changes in lifestyle that all of us need to make and that industry needs to make.

Alberta needs to do more relative to what other provinces are doing in incentives for citizens to do the right thing, to take the one-tonne challenge, for example, and to live in a different way that will demonstrate not only to our own society but to our children that we take seriously our commitment to living lighter on the Earth.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: No others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort on the throne speech.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered last week by the hon. Lieutenant Governor. Before commenting on the Speech from the Throne, I would like to recognize the outstanding job that the hon. Lieutenant Governor has done in the busy, exciting centennial year of Alberta. I also want to congratulate the government, our Premier, and our Minister of Community Development for putting together a great centennial celebration across our province.

Talking about the centennial, 2006 is the centennial year of our Legislative Assembly, the seat of our Alberta democracy. I want to thank the founding members of the Alberta Legislature and all the members during the last 100 years for keeping this legislative institution strong to serve the people of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to celebrating with you and all members of this Legislature the 100th anniversary of our democracy. Our democratic parliamentary system has over 800 years of proven tradition and experience. As long as Alberta follows this proven parliamentary system, we have no democracy deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly address the Assembly today on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Fort. In the past year I have had the opportunity to work with so many of my constituents. I'm proud to say that working together, we have made life in Calgary-Fort and elsewhere in Alberta better and better each day. Making life better is our commitment. Making a better life in our community and in our province is the government's goal.

There are several aspects of the throne speech that I would like to speak on today because they are of particular interest to my constituents and to myself. I will start by saying to the government of Alberta: thank you for a job well done. Indeed, our leader and our government members have done an excellent job in making Alberta the leader and a model in Canada. Where else in the world can we find a jurisdiction that's free of public debt, living within our means, having windfall surpluses and, yes, public issues that other jurisdictions only wish and dream to have? As a matter of fact, Alberta has the highest economic growth rate, the highest employment rate, the highest average income. Alberta is only the lowest in overall tax burden on its citizens in the country.

Mr. Speaker, to anyone who cries that Alberta's sky is falling or shouts that the glass is a quarter empty instead of three-quarters full or complains about living in Alberta or criticizes Alberta, I advise this person just to go out of the province for a while and look back. I also want to ask that person the question: why has Alberta the highest population growth? Yes, more Albertans may be indoor bound during the long winter months, and we love each other lots more, but that's not enough to account for the tremendous growth in population. The true answer for Alberta's growth can be found in the 2,500-year-old saying of the great sage, Confucius: good land; birds nest. To that this not-so-wise Cao-fucius adds: good governance; people come. These growth statistics are very impressive, and they point us to the belief that our government is on the right track, and this second century belongs to Alberta.

To be a leader in this country in the long run we must use extreme caution with our surpluses because, as history has shown, our future can slip from under us before we know it. I'm so pleased to know that we categorically disburse the windfall surplus in three areas: namely, saving for the future, spending on priority items, and returning to Albertans to meet their rising costs of living.

This is why I am so enthusiastically supporting the announcement of the $1 billion investment in the heritage savings fund, and a further investment will be tabled in Budget 2006. Today's windfall revenue comes only once, but with substantial investments into the heritage savings fund we will guarantee the future generations the benefit of today's economic prosperity. As a member of the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee I welcome this addition to the fund on top of the inflation-proof amount and also suggest more savings in any form in the coming years.

Mr. Speaker, our wealth is created by our people. To continue our road toward prosperity, we need to develop our people, our human resources. I'm very pleased to hear of the government's big investment in education, making its priority education and training to be accessible and affordable to Alberta's youth, who are our future. This requires investment to create space in our educational institutions and provide financial assistance to the learners. It also requires lots of innovative approaches in learning and teaching.

Our full-steam economy indicates that there's a shortage of workers, but I want to emphasize one point here, Mr. Speaker. My constituents want to ensure that our Alberta human resources development should first focus on the people who are already here before bringing in people from other places. I'm pleased to see that our government tackled this labour shortage by partnering with aboriginal groups and industry on our new training projects for aboriginal people. We need our aboriginal population to be of higher capacity and ability and to contribute as much as possible to our economy. I support any effort to encourage this participation.

Mr. Speaker, we also encourage people to move to this province, but we need to support them when they arrive here and to integrate them into our economy as quickly as possible. My point is that in order for our economy to continue to roll like it is, we need highly skilled and hardworking, ambitious people to move to our province, but when they get here, we also need to help these people to be productive with their ability and to work in their fields.

I also want to draw our government's attention to helping the people who have already emigrated here, our fellow Albertans. More encouraging is the government's expansion in immigrant settlement services and English as a Second Language training and a commitment to making it easier for foreign-trained professionals to work in Alberta because getting our skilled immigrants working in their field as quickly as possible is one of the fastest and most efficient ways to tackle our labour shortage.

Businesses in my constituency have expressed to me that not only do they need skilled workers, but they also need more unskilled or low-skilled workers in their operations as they cannot find these people in the local labour market. Our government should develop initiatives to bring in low-skilled workforces from outside Canada, working with the federal government to sustain our economic development. Mr. Speaker, making Albertans more productive, more skilful and innovative will continue to ensure our leadership in the world's economic competition. It also raises our quality of life in Alberta.

I also support the upcoming comprehensive regulatory review our provincial government will undertake this year to identify and remove the unneeded red tape. To open successful small businesses takes an unbelievable amount of dedication and risk, and government red tape cannot stand in the way of these businesses' progress. It's as simple as that.

Now, the other important matter for my constituents is health care. Another aspect of the throne speech I would like to address is government's commitment toward improving our health care system. My constituents are pleased to hear that the government keeps on improving our public health care system through innovative ways. Our current spending on health care is huge, over 30 per cent of Alberta's total budget and rising. To me, this is solid proof that our publicly covered health care system is the highest priority in our government.

My constituents and other Albertans are assured of this publicly paid system and services available to them when they need it. But to be better, we need to do more with the same spending. Let's just say that we sustain our public health care spending at the level, say, of $9 billion. If we cannot make this spending amount more effective – that is, get more results from the same amount – then any additional spending should be more effective and innovative. That's what I mean. It's more bang for the buck, so to speak.

Mr. Speaker, there's always room for improvement, and I'm very pleased to see the drive for continuous and evergreen improvement in our health care system. The government also intends to improve the quality of health care services to Albertans, and any successfully delivery model utilizes the teamwork spirit of professionals together to provide this excellent care. An example is the Alberta hip and knee replacement project, that has successfully reduced waiting time from 35 weeks to six weeks, and so on. This is a tremendous achievement.

On the preventive side prevention in health care is very, very important. I'm very pleased to know that our government shows vision in this area by investing in cancer prevention and treatment research. Cancer is a leading cause of death in Alberta. We know that. I have heard some experts say that Alberta has the ability and the capacity to lead the world in this field, and now we have the will and determination, and the government sets it in motion.

Mr. Speaker, on another, more personal level before I conclude, I would like to share with the Assembly and my colleagues what I call the four-E principle for government operation: that is, to be ethical, economical, efficient, and effective. Why do we need this four-E principle? Because Alberta is a wealthy province. Alberta has no problem in revenue, but the issues are in spending, the problems and issues that other jurisdictions wish to have. For a population of just over 3 million people last year's public operating budget was around $25 billion, and our capital spending was in the tens of billions.

This is just like in a family. When we have ample money, if we're not careful, we can easily spend on things that we do not need, or we buy things, and we don't even look at the price tags. There are many stories of individuals who won a huge windfall of lottery, but in a short time all is gone, all is spent. So just imagine if Alberta could and should gain only 1 per cent in economical and effective spending of our $25 billion, that would free up $250 million to invest in other needs or to save for the future. I don't want to lose the big picture here, but, Mr. Speaker, I can buy a pen at $2, $5, or $20, but the function is to write. So small things can add up very quickly.

Mr. Speaker, on the macro perspective my constituents are concerned with the fact that our public spending has been growing faster than our population growth rate, our economic growth rate, and our demographic changes, so I want to conclude by suggesting the government focus on the spending priority. As being ethical in spending is a must already, governments should also create a drive for being economical, efficient, effective in spending our valuable and huge public dollars.

With all of what I've said above, we should not forget that another purpose of public spending is to assist in or stimulate the quality of life in Alberta. In this area I would like the government to continue effective programs to help vulnerable fellow Albertans: seniors, children, people with disabilities. I also would like to see the government continuing investment in programs that develop our community spirit, our cultural and recreation activities because these are what make Alberta the best place to live, to attract people, to develop our economy further and higher.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to compliment the member on his excitement and the enthusiasm that he always shows to the House here. I have to ask the question. The members of the government continually bring up that we're the lowest taxed area in the country. I wonder if, in fact, he's one of those who felt that they needed to criticize our women's hockey team for excelling and reaching their full potential. My question is that after we've educated them we've lost many of our best that have left our country to places of lower taxation. Do we ever consider that maybe we need to lower our taxes to bring those that have gone to other jurisdictions back home? It's not about what we're doing here in Canada but on the world level and the fact that we have to compete with other countries. Does the member consider that in his thoughts?

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, for your compliment of my speech. I thank you for that.

Also, I want to agree with you that, yes, we need to compete with the whole global economy, and we need to have our taxes not just the lowest in Canada but over the world. To attract people to come to Alberta, sometimes we need to tell people not just to look at your income tax but your other taxes netted up, and you see your net income would be better if you stay in Alberta. I know it for a fact. My relatives live in California, earning much more, but their taxes on spending or other taxes gobble a lot of things there. The cost of living is higher too. So that's a very good point.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is a pleasure to speak and reply to the Speech from the Throne. I missed the last time because of a curling accident, so I missed all the debate last time. This is the first time I've had to reply to the Speech from the Throne in probably – I can't even think back that far – 13 or 14 years, so I'll take my opportunity to do that.

An Hon. Member: We're keeping track.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, you're keeping track. The hon. member used to live to hear me all the time, and I don't want to disappoint him tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to talk just briefly about the riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. As do all city ridings, it ranges across a wide range of types of people. What I want to say is that in this particular riding, ranging from Beverly and Abbotsfield up over as far as Delwood, we have a lot of groups. You know, people get lost in the city. Both our major centres, Edmonton and Calgary, are growing larger, and without some focus and some groups that help in the city, the cities would be very hard to live in. We are fortunate in the riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to have a number of groups at work, the community groups that we all have. They do excellent work. Without community groups, I think, to make it almost like a small town, it would be very difficult for the city of Edmonton and, I would say, the city of Calgary to operate in a very efficient way. But we're fortunate in the northeastern part of the city and in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to have a number of groups that really provide some first-rate service for people. Again, I don't know what we would do without the work that these people do.

We all had the medallions that we could hand out; I believe 30 medallions for each of the MLAs. Rather than pick individuals, what I tried to do was pick groups because it's very hard to pick 30 individuals. We tried to pick groups and organizations that provide useful community service to people, and it was well received. I just want to list some of the places where the medallions were handed out because it's not only in my riding; they go into other areas of Edmonton: region 6 children's services, Candora Society, WeCan, Emmanuel Home, KARA, Belvedere Community League, Partners For Youth, ABC Head Start, Abbotsfield Seniors Stop In Centre, Bosco Homes, Delwood Community League, South Clareview Community League, Goodwill Industries, ACT Aquatic & Rec Centre, the Northeast Teen Centre, DECSA, Clareview Head Start, Active Claims, and then we had the people – and I won't mention the names necessarily – that deal with people with WCB, which is tough in itself, Planned Parenthood, Balwin Community League, Chrysalis, Boys' & Girls' Clubs.

All these provide a type of service, and if they didn't do it, a lot of these services would come back on government. I for one wanted to show some recognition. I'm sure all members would agree that it is important to recognize these people that do very difficult work. They don't often do it for the money – that's for sure – because they're vastly underpaid, generally, the people that work in these organizations. They provide a very important service, and I just want to take the opportunity here, Mr. Speaker, to recognize them again in the Assembly.

Now I will move to the Speech from the Throne. It may not surprise you, Mr. Speaker, but I'm going to be less complimentary than some of the previous speakers. I watched the Premier's TV address, and then the following day we got the Speech from the Throne, delivered very well and very ably by our new Lieutenant Governor. You know, if we were looking for sort of the direction we want to go and were looking for substance, we didn't see it. I watched the TV address, and it was so complimentary and self-congratulatory that I would have thought the Premier would have worn out his arm slapping himself on the back. The point is that the rhetoric becomes over the top.

You know, I used to tease people opposite because everything was always the best here. We're the best in everything. They'd say the best in Canada, and then it was the best in North America. And I'd have to yell: we're the best in the world, the best in the universe. It's all right to be proud. It's all right to be proud of our province, and so we should be, Mr. Speaker, but to sort of have this self-congratulation over the top serves nobody well. In fact, it gets downright embarrassing after a point. We think everything is perfect here, that there are no problems, that it's the most perfect society that was ever brought on God's green Earth just because we happen to live here in Alberta and we have oil and gas.

Mr. Speaker, I think that adds to sort of the first general theme I want to talk about, and it's ethics and accountability. The last federal election was fought on ethics, and Stephen Harper did a very good job during that election campaign nailing the federal Liberals on ethics. I won't go into what he has done after, but during the election campaign it was a very effective campaign. He talked about the culture of entitlement, and he went after the public inquiry there with Gomery. Of course, we should be outraged about that. When I heard the Premier say in the House the other day that, oh, he would be hanged or he'd be kicked out, well, we'd never even come close to ever having an inquiry. We'd never do it in this province.

So that's the reality. It's not that things don't happen here. To say that this is such a perfect, ethical government is just absolutely ridiculous, and people know that. The only reason we know it with the federal government is because we had the Auditor General that dug it out. There are serious ethical problems here, and I just talk about ethics in a broad sense, just what we've seen dealing with health care. We did not debate this during the provincial election. In fact, the premier said: we will not talk about it, and if I ever was going to do anything in health care, I would consult the people. Well, we saw what consultation is: we put out a little book and a website to get beyond the leadership convention of the provincial Conservatives.

Now, I say that that has to do with ethics. It has to do with why there's so much cynicism in politics today, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier had run, laid out what he planned to do a year later and said that this is a mandate, then he would have the mandate. I may not agree with it, and probably we'd still fight it in the Legislature as an opposition, but at least he would have a legitimate reason for going ahead. We wonder why people are cynical. Here it is; I guess it's a legacy of one of the people that helped destroy a medicare system that we're very proud of in Canada. That's a legacy that we want?

What's so frustrating about it is that the Premier is not accountable to anybody. He's not running again, and clearly the provincial Conservatives aren't going to do anything about it. So we're going to be in this debate, Mr. Speaker, about health care and privatization and doctors operating in two systems and private health care and the rest of it. Where was that in the Speech from the Throne? Where was that in terms of the TV debate? I say to you that ethics in government: you tell people what you're going to do, and you try to follow through with it. Then we wonder why, as I say, people are cynical.

Mr. Harper talked about the culture of entitlement. Well, that was true, frankly, and I think that even some people out here would agree that with the federal Liberals, when people are in power too long, maybe that happens. But there certainly is this culture of entitlement here and this idea that if you disagree with the government, somehow you're un-Albertan. Mr. Speaker, I say to you that this is frightening to me as a parliamentarian. I want to say to you that I've sat in the House before with Conservative governments, and it's much worse now than it used to be with Premiers Lougheed and Getty. Sure, you'd have the debate, but it wasn't nearly the situation that it is now, and I speak from generations of having been in this House before.

The Conservatives here should take a look at what happened back in those days. This culture of entitlement is there, this arrogance that somehow you're going to be here with absolute power forever. I would remind the government that last election the 21 of us over here had more votes than all of you over there. To think that you speak for all Albertans is insulting. It's not the case. I say to you that you may think that you're invulnerable, some of you people that have never lost or seen any other governments. Mr. Speaker, that's an attitude that will come back to haunt you. Just ask the federal Liberals.

I say to you that this whole idea of the democratic deficit – my God, what we elect here are four-year dictatorships. Our House doesn't work. We complained about what was happening federally, but at least they have a Public Accounts that meets outside the House. They have a Public Accounts that can bring people in and do the job. Even Member of Parliament Mr. Williams sort of laughs at the one we have here, a lapdog. In fairness to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, I understand that he's going to bring in a bill to try and make this a better situation in terms of our budget. It's ridiculous. We spent $7 billion in November, you know, just with two or three or four days' debate.

What really makes me angry about it is that we refuse to look, as other provinces are doing, at a different system rather than the first past the post. Other provinces are looking and, I expect, the federal government will look at perhaps automatic four-year dates for elections, proportional rep, and other things. But do you know why they don't want to look at it? Precisely because they'd have less votes. They have 61 seats. They don't care about democracy, Mr. Speaker. They don't care about democracy because the system works well for them, but I'll tell you that it doesn't work well for all Albertans, and you see more and more people complaining about it.

So I'd just suggest that there are a lot of areas. When you say that everything is perfect, Mr. Speaker, well, there are a whole bunch of vulnerable people out there that don't think everything is perfect. We talk about the people with developmental disabilities. We've had that debate. We talk about seniors and long-term care. The money that they gave out last time: most people know that that's not going to begin to solve the problems. We have a class action lawsuit that was brought against this government and won. We have AISH people still with no indexation. We can index our own salaries, but we don't index for them, the poorest people in society. Ask them what they think about Alberta right now and their opportunities. Not everybody lives in downtown Calgary, where there's a lot of money being made. There are still a lot of people falling behind in the Alberta advantage.

We have the worst labour laws in the country for working people, absolutely no doubt about that. We saw what happens in Brooks if we don't begin to deal with some fairness. We wonder why there's a labour shortage. Well, people want decent labour laws. They want to have some respect in the labour place.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on. I just want to go to education, public education. Now we're going to have a round-table. We can't make a decision about the remaining items on the Learning Commission. We know that certain things work in the high-needs area. We don't need to start throughout the province with junior kindergarten and kindergarten: it's absolutely crucial for high-needs kids. Absolutely crucial, and we're sitting there. Where is the Alberta advantage for them?

Now we're going to have a round-table. We're worried about high school completion rates. Rightfully so, Mr. Speaker. We're worried about that. What do we do? We set up a round-table. In Edmonton public, for example, we look at what's happened. We used to have 99 counsellors in 1991. That's down to 43.8. Learning resources, librarians, those sorts of people: from 81 to 12. That tells you some of the reasons. If we don't deal with the kids, as I say, at the junior kindergarten/kindergarten level, those rates are going to stay high because those kids will not have a chance. We know that if they're behind one year in reading by the time they hit grade 9, they're not going to complete their final years. We know those things. We don't need a round-table. We should get on with it.

I realize that I'm running out of time. That's, I think, an appropriate place to end my thoughts. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and put some thoughts on the record about the throne speech and its anticipated effect on the people who live in Edmonton-Centre. One of the things that is an offshoot of this, I'm hoping, is that I represent the constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and I'd like to see the name Edmonton reclaimed. I remember being told by one of the government members who is no longer elected that the reason that everybody was calling it the capital region was that the governing party had not been successful in getting very many people elected in Edmonton, and they needed to have some kind of a showing and wanted to be at the table, so they just lumped everything around Edmonton and were able to call it the capital region. It brought in Sherwood Park and Spruce Grove and Stony Plain and a number of other ones, and in that way they were able to get a number of their MLAs at the table. But now the name has stuck, and as a native Edmontonian I'm seeing the name "Edmonton" disappear, and I'd like to see that reclaimed from the capital region. It's somewhat reminiscent to me of having Edmonton Tel and AGT, and then that morphed into Telus, and then Telus moved away. So there was a resource that we'd invested in and took a certain amount of local pride in, I think, and now it's totally distanced from us. Frankly, I think they broke a deal, but that's aside from what we're talking about with the throne speech today.

I still see a bias for Calgary in this government, and I hope that that's going to be addressed. You know, I noticed that this year the Great Kids awards are in Edmonton, but I'm struggling to remember the last time that it was. I was expecting it to sort of go back and forth, and it didn't seem to do that. The first couple of ones were in Calgary. I was waiting for it to move to Edmonton, and I noted they were in Calgary.

Something else I noticed was the Alberta centennial money that paid for the cowboys to descend upon the New York Stock Exchange, a big promotion for Calgary and paid for out of the Alberta centennial budget. Not one mention of the rest of Edmonton. Not one mention of the capital city of this province, which is Edmonton. Very interesting because that was supposed to be promoting the whole province, but it wasn't. It promoted Calgary, and that was Alberta centennial money that paid for that. I remember seeing the banner behind the shot that they had of them inside the New York Stock Exchange.

I always notice the government's announcements. The very good announcements and the very bad announcements all happen in Calgary. If they're going to announce that they paid off the cash debt, not the infrastructure debt, not the social debt but the cash debt, they do that in Calgary. Or if it's an announcement that they don't want people to pay very much attention to, then that happens in Calgary, but the rest of the time they can manage to do it in Edmonton.

I'm just hoping we'll see a bit more reclaiming of the name of Edmonton but also the important position I think this city holds in the province. It is the capital city. It is where the Legislature is. I'm proud to have the Legislature in my riding of Edmonton-Centre. I know I take a lot of teasing – and I deserve it – because every time I'm introduced in a committee or at some function of the government, I'm very proud to welcome everyone to my constituency of Edmonton-Centre when they're visiting the Legislative Assembly.

When I look at my riding, I am so blessed to have a constituency whose constituents are so very diverse. I truly treasure that, and I am so pleased to be able to continue to represent the people that live in this area. It is a very dynamic constituency. In between any given election 50 per cent of my constituents will have moved away, so when I go door-knocking, the chances are pretty good that I'm pretty much starting over every time. It's getting a bit more stable now as we have more people buying lofts and condominiums, and there's a bit of a shift to more of a sort of urban/metro mentality in downtown Edmonton, but it is very wide-ranging. This is, I've been told repeatedly, the most economically diverse riding in the province. We really go from the homeless guys that are living underneath the bridge behind my office to the million-dollar-plus apartments that are along the top of Victoria Golf Course there on Victoria drive and everything in between.

I have a lot of older housing stock, and with the older housing stock are lower rents, quite frankly. So we have a lot of people here that are really watching their pennies, a lot of students attending the University of Alberta, Grant MacEwan, NorQuest, Alberta College, NAIT, just about any postsecondary institution you can think of in Edmonton, and they're likely to be living in the downtown area. Lots of seniors are living there, artists, new Canadians, and immigrants newly arrived to the country. We have a really diverse community. I'm looking through the throne speech and thinking: "Okay. How does this affect the people that live in my riding?" Let's start with the seniors.

Long-term care is a big issue. The government is certainly well aware of it, but I don't think any of the seniors that live in my constituency are going to be very happy with the glacial movement on long-term care and strengthening long-term care. If anything, what I'm seeing is a move for the government to divest itself of responsibility and funding in long-term care as they reclassify a number of long-term care facilities to assisted or supported living, which doesn't have a medical component to it, so it doesn't get the same kind of funding from the government, if at all, and not the same kind of legislative overlay or standards for it, and standards is one of the things that we were most aware was lacking from this government. It's certainly an area the government needs to continue to work hard on because it has not come up to the mark on that one at all.

One of the issues that's been raised by my constituents in a number of different sources, both from home-care providers, those that are representing organizations that hire home-care workers and contract with the government, and also from individuals who are under self-managed care programs who hire home-care workers on their own to organize that – the availability of home-care workers is at a crisis state. We just can't get them. We don't pay enough to home-care workers. People are not willing to do it.

The most recent thing that came across my desk was the price of gasoline to put in their cars to drive from place to place. Nobody is increasing a home-care worker's wages to cope with the increasing cost of the gasoline, and they're just looking for other jobs and moving to other sectors. When you've got a hot economy like we've got, they can find another job, and off they go.

So we're saying, "Don't worry; we're going to look after you" to a number of the vulnerable in our society, but then we actually haven't made sure that we've got the systems in place to in fact look after people, and when we can't get workers who are willing to be home-care workers, I think our systems really start to fail the vulnerable.

We on the Liberal side do have Bill 205, which is coming forward later, sponsored by our critic for seniors, the Member for Lethbridge-East, which is in fact proposing standards for long-term care and additional framework to allow for an ombudsperson or someone to whom complaints could be directed and would be investigated. So I'm hoping that the government, if they're not able to follow through on their own promises for home care, can support the Liberal bill that's coming forward.

I have a large gay and lesbian, transgendered, and bisexual community that lives in Edmonton-Centre. I'm very proud of them. The feedback I've had from them on the throne speech is that they were pleased to see that the government did not go forward on any kind of action around changing the marriage commissioner requirements. They're pleased to be going on with their life and with their families and are glad to have the recognition that they now have federally for their marriages and are pleased to see that the province has stayed out of it.

The students that I talked about earlier are not getting any certainty around tuition increases, certainly not whether it's going to drop but how much it's going to increase, and I'm countering that against the Liberal idea of looking at providing 16 years of public education. I mean, it's very hard to get a good job now without a minimum of an undergraduate degree. So if that's the status, then why aren't we looking at supporting education to that level? I challenge the government to start looking at that.

I have a couple of organizations and agencies in my constituency which are experiencing some change, and I thank the government for their support of them, and that would be the new YMCA downtown. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has been a long-time supporter and I know was really pitching strikes for them in the cabinet, so I thank him for his support of that project. I think it's very important to the people that live in the downtown centre but also beyond that, and the YM has worked with the communities to try and address some of the concerns that have been raised about access and location and things like that.

Also, the Edmonton Art Gallery, now the Alberta Art Gallery. Once again we lost the name of Edmonton, but we'll give it up for the sake of Alberta. Again, I thank the government for finally coming through with some additional funding to help us get a wonderful new art gallery. It is an art gallery for all of Alberta, and it does house the Alberta collection of art, so thank you for that. I'm proud to have both of those in my constituency, and I thank the government for recognizing how important they are to their communities.

A number of people, a lot of people actually, in my constituency are on AISH, particularly with mental health issues. They tend to cluster downtown because of the cheaper housing stock but also the access to various social agencies that assist them. They have experienced a great deal of uncertainty and some very hard times. I know they're glad to see the increase that has been offered by the government, moving them up to I think it's $1,000 now, but there still continues to be uncertainty about whether they will be subjected to asset testing, whether that level would be raised. They continue to point out how difficult it is to try and live with a disability. That's why they're on AISH, Mr. Speaker. You know, that's why they qualify for that program. They have certain needs and requirements and are not able to function in a Monday to Friday, 9 to 5 working environment.

They qualify for this money, but, boy, is it tough to be an able-bodied person out there living on a thousand bucks a month, never mind somebody that has some other disability that is a barrier to them. That's really hard. I think that keeping them in constant poverty is not the most positive thing we could be doing with the vulnerable in our society. I continue to urge the government to recognize the immense contribution that they make through their volunteer hours but also as members of our community and to try and support that.

I was very pleased to be appointed by the minister of infrastructure to the new design committee around the Legislature Grounds. I'm looking forward to working with that committee. I've got some great and exciting ideas on incorporating designs for winter cities, the importance of connecting to the surrounding community, including particularly Rosedale, looking at environmental design, safety through design, and public places as gathering spaces. I'd love to see a public art policy, with 1 per cent of the budget going to public art. Just think of all the sculpture and neat stuff we could have if we incorporated something like that and also to be able to maintain as many of our heritage buildings as possible.

The last thing that was mentioned to me about that was: could there please be some bike lock-ups worked into that? I thought: "Well, yes, that's true. We could, and that would certainly be working with an overall support for public transit." Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity.

I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:45 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 1, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/01

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a distinguished constituent of Lac La Biche-St. Paul, Mr. Brian Storseth, the newly elected Conservative Member of Parliament for the federal riding of Westlock-St. Paul.

Mr. Speaker, Brian Storseth was raised in Barrhead and is a graduate of the University of Alberta. He owns the Co-operators in St. Paul. Brian is a former youth vice-president of the Barrhead-Westlock PC Association, a former councillor for the town of Barrhead. It is interesting to note that Brian also worked for the Speaker as a summer student. His experience allows him to recognize the diverse needs of rural Albertans. I know that Brian is committed to working hard to represent our joint constituents, and I look forward to continuing our association.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Brian Storseth is seated in your gallery this afternoon, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce the first-ever recipients of the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship. Now, as we all know, Alberta's former Lieutenant Governor, the late Hon. Dr. Lois Hole, was a rare and indeed a treasured individual. Never before has someone so deeply touched so many people with her openness, her warmth, and her empathy. She was someone who fostered hope in the future and faith in the goodness of humanity. She urged us to stand up for what is right, what is just, and what is meaningful, and she encouraged us all to be kinder to one another. To say that she was highly respected and much loved is an understatement.

Most of all, she reminded us of the value of education and its fundamental importance to the future strength and the vitality of our province. That's why it was so appropriate for our government to honour her memory by establishing the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship.

Earlier this afternoon it was my great pleasure to join Mrs. Hole's son Jim and the Minister of Advanced Education to present each of four students with a $5,000 scholarship in memory of Mrs. Hole, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Advanced Education assist me later on. In the members' gallery are several guests from today's event, and I would ask the Assembly to hold its applause until they are all introduced.

Our guests include Mr. Jim Hole, of course, Sandra Kereliuk, who served as the former Lieutenant Governor's executive assistant, and with them are the most important people of all, the four inaugural recipients of the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship. I'd ask them to stand because they're very special people: Roman Sokolowski from Athabasca University, Barbara McLean from the University of Alberta, Karen Leung from the University of Calgary, and Jacqueline Quittenbaum from the University of Lethbridge. Congratulations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they are joined by a number of their friends and family members. As well, Stuart Dunn and Helene Lagace, staff members with the Alberta scholarships program, are with us today. So please join me in extending the warm welcome of the Legislature to all of these honoured guests.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. the Premier indicated, we had a scholarship ceremony awarding the scholarships, and we had obviously very proud members of families, friends, and professors join us. I'd like to introduce them and ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Karen Grove, who is the mother of Roman Sokolowski, Stefan Sokolowski, grandparents Mike and Lena Sokolowski, Don McLean, Gail McLean, Willy Petryk, Issy McLean, Selena Robinson, Sara Grove, Lise Gotell, Linda Trimble, Dallas Cull, Sean McLean, Matthew McLean, and Brenda Dietrich. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly people from the constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere, particularly one of my favourite schools in the world, the Airdrie Koinonia Christian school. They try very hard to come every year, and despite the bad roads last night and the snow they made it today anyway. I would like to introduce Mr. Dean Hughes, Mrs. Sylvia Irvine, Mrs. Terry Mammel, and Mrs. Judy Vellacott, the parents and teachers for this group of students. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to all members of the Assembly students from St. Martin Catholic school in my constituency. There are 21 of them altogether. They are accompanied by their teacher. They're in grade 6, and they've completed a tour of the Legislative Assembly building, enjoyed it thoroughly, and answered all my skill-testing questions perfectly, so they're a very bright group. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Dennis John Nowoselsky. He is a former pastor and public servant from Saskatchewan hoping to move to St. Albert. I wish him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 73 students from St. Matthew elementary school in my constituency. They are accompanied by their grade 6 teachers Mrs. Sylvia Synenko, Mr. Roman Tarnawsky, Mrs. Crystal McNabb, and Ms Carrie Forster as well as Mrs. Bonnie Smith. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Tony Clark. Tony has joined our caucus team as our new communications officer. Tony was the northern Alberta organizer for the NDP in the recent federal election and previously served as research assistant to our caucus, where he substantially increased the popular vote, I might add. Tony is also an avid rugby player and graduated from the University of Alberta with a degree in theology and a degree in economics. He's seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two very special guests, Kathryn and Stewart McLean. Kathryn and Stewart are both my cousins who are here today to watch the proceedings. Kathryn has been teaching in Taiwan for the last two years, and Stewart has been travelling the world and has just returned from Australia and Thailand. I would now ask if they could rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two very dedicated young ladies that are currently enrolled in the third-year nursing program at the University of Alberta. We all know the commitment the nurses make to their patients in care and caring, and I can assure you that if the rest of their class are as dedicated and committed as these two, that portion of our health care is in very good hands in years to come. Kaley Saumer is from Onoway or, as I'm told by my colleague, Whitecourt-St. Anne, and Lynette Stalwick is from Vermilion. I would ask them both to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Lois Hole Humanities and Social Sciences Scholarship

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I speak for everyone in this Assembly when I say that since the late the Honourable Lois E. Hole left us, Alberta has not been the same. We miss her warmth and compassion, we miss her grace and elegance, we miss her practical yet poetic vision, and of course we miss her great humour.

Mrs. Hole was a champion of education who spoke often of its power not only for the individual but for our communities, our province, and our nation. She deeply believed that education was crucial not only for practical purposes but for creating a moral and compassionate society. Time and again Mrs. Hole spoke eloquently in inspiring words of support for education, the arts, and humanities, but her actions spoke even louder than her inspirational words for she lived a life that truly embodied a passion for learning and education, a passion for art, music, books, and creativity, and a passion for people, particularly children. She left us with a legacy spanning so many areas from libraries and literacy to music and theatre, from gardening to health care.

Last year the Alberta government in the throne speech established the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship to honour Mrs. Hole's memory and her commitment to education, and today the first recipients of the scholarship were honoured during a ceremony here at the Legislature. We're very proud that many more will receive the scholarship in the years ahead.

There is one recipient from each of the four universities in the province. Each receives $5,000 towards his or her education. These recipients, Mr. Speaker, truly embody the future strength of our province. Yes, they are academically gifted, but they were selected by their institution to receive this scholarship primarily for their leadership and their contributions to their communities. In this they are true role models for our province. They are role models who are living out Mrs. Hole's legacy in their daily lives not only by pursuing excellence in learning but by giving back in whatever way they can to help improve the lives of those around them.

The four scholarship recipients are pursuing studies in the humanities and social sciences, a pursuit which is vital to the future of our province. Academic excellence in the humanities and social sciences builds on our province's knowledge base in countless ways. Research and innovation in these areas allow us to know more about societal trends, demographics, social issues as well as community and individual development. This knowledge feeds valuable research into issues that Mrs. Hole cared passionately about, issues such as learning disabilities among children, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and illiteracy. As a government we support the arts and humanities in many different ways and are working towards even stronger support for the years and decades ahead.

Mr. Speaker, today is a day to celebrate the future of four talented Alberta students, four individuals who stand ready to take hold of a bright and promising future. They've been introduced, and I'll say it again. They are Roman Sokolowski, Athabasca University, taking a bachelor of arts in political economy; Barbara McLean, University of Alberta, taking a bachelor of arts in political science and women's studies; Karen Leung, University of Calgary, taking a bachelor of arts in psychology and hoping to go on to a master's in clinical psychology; and Jacqueline Quittenbaum, University of Lethbridge, also taking a bachelor's in psychology and hoping to go on to a master's in speech language pathology.

Mr. Speaker, today is also a day to remember, to honour, and to celebrate the life of a truly great Albertan and Canadian, Lois Hole. We see here in the faces of these students the power and the inspiration that Mrs. Hole left for each one of us, a legacy that will last for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I regret that I never had the personal pleasure of meeting the late the Hon. Lois Hole, but like tens of thousands of other Albertans and, indeed, other Canadians from coast to coast I've been inspired by her commitment to public education. Mrs. Hole respected all the educational disciplines, but there was a special place in her heart for the arts, the humanities, and the social sciences. She understood the tremendous value and power of a well-rounded education, strong in the liberal arts. Mrs. Hole knew that a liberal arts education is the best tool for developing critical thinking and creativity, for creating stronger communities, and for building bridges between different cultures. She believed, quite correctly, that the arts and letters are absolutely indispensable to our progress and our prosperity.

Not long before her passing the late Lieutenant Governor, remarking on Alberta's good fortune, said: "It is a time of great opportunity for Alberta. We must not miss it." She was right. With the resources currently at our disposal we could create the best educated population in the world and, by doing so, enjoy the kind of Alberta that Lois Hole always dreamed of, a place where creativity, tolerance, compassion, respect, and imagination combine to create a new and better society. She might have called such a place a kind of paradise. To Lois Hole compassion and kindness were the ultimate virtues, so it is fitting that the scholarship that bears her name rewards students who use their talents in the expression of those virtues, providing leadership and service to their communities.

I would like to congratulate the first four recipients of this new scholarship. They should be very proud both of their individual accomplishments and that they have helped to carry Lois Hole's legacy forward. If Mrs. Hole were still with us, I'm sure she would have given Roman, Barbara, Karen, and Jacqueline each a warm hug and a few whispered words of advice or support, and then, in all likelihood, she would have told anyone within earshot about the importance of maintaining and improving our public education system. In her absence it falls to us, the people of Alberta, to carry on her work. Let's keep building great public education in this province. Let's bring Lois Hole's dream to life.

Thank you.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'd request unanimous consent for the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to reply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the distinct honour of knowing Her Honour the late Madam Lois Hole before I ever had the opportunity to sit in this Legislature. I learned a great deal from her life and drew lots of inspiration from her life's work. It is, therefore, a distinct pleasure for me to rise today and commend the government of Alberta for establishing the Lois Hole scholarships in humanities and social sciences to celebrate her work and to salute her. I'm particularly glad that Jim Hole could be present this afternoon, and on behalf of the NDP opposition I would like to extend warm greetings and best wishes to Mr. Hole and the entire Hole family.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Hole dedicated her life to hard work. She worked side by side with her husband, Ted, to build a successful farm business and then extended that success by becoming an author and a public speaker. Her true success, however, was in her generosity and sense of community. Mrs. Hole was a model of hard work, leadership, and community service. It is fitting, therefore, that the scholarships bearing her name should be awarded based on those attributes.

Her Honour's dedication to education is beyond question. Before becoming the Lieutenant Governor, Mrs. Hole served as a trustee and chairperson for the Sturgeon and St. Albert school boards. She also served as a member of the Athabasca University governing council and honoured all Albertans in her position as the chancellor of the University of Alberta. Her Honour will be remembered as one of the best-loved Lieutenant Governors to ever serve in this province, and it is no wonder. Lois Hole was truly the queen of hugs, a tireless advocate for the arts and literacy, and a true champion of public education.

I extend my warmest congratulations to the first four recipients of the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarships and their families. I'm confident that these scholars will follow the exceptional example set by Lois Hole, and I wish them all the best in their studies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Privatization

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is full of contradictions. Yesterday the Premier introduced a proposal that would see some Albertans receive far better access to health care than others if they just write a cheque for it, yet on the same day the Premier insisted that the ability of Albertans to pay will never determine their access to health care. Can't have it both ways. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain his claim that Albertans' ability to pay will not determine their access to health care when his own government has just proposed a plan that would allow certain Albertans to receive much quicker care if they're able to pay?

Mr. Klein: Wrong, wrong, wrong. You know, the Leader of the Official Opposition stands up and fibs not only to this Assembly but to the world.

The Speaker: Please. We've had discussions on the usage of certain words. I'm going to ask the Premier of the province of Alberta to withdraw the word "fib."

Mr. Klein: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I won't use the word "fib." I'll say that he doesn't tell the whole truth all the time – most of the time.

The Speaker: We have a point of order on that point. I think it's really important that we use proper decorum.

Please proceed.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my point is taken and made, but I do apologize for calling the hon. member a liar.

Mr. Speaker, if this member or any person in this Assembly or any Albertan is sick or injured, they will be treated. They will be treated under the public system, and they will be treated immediately according to the triage procedures that are available in our health regions.

Mr. Martin: The rich first.

Mr. Klein: No, no. Not the rich first. It doesn't matter who you are. You could be Ray Martin. You could be . . . [interjections] Oh, no, I'm sorry. You can't use a name. You could be the hon. member. You could be anyone. You could be Mrs. Jones. You will get treated whether you have no money whatsoever if you have a heart attack, if you're banged up in a car accident. But if you have a hernia, like Jack Layton, the leader of the NDs, and if the doctor says that you will have to wait a year, and it's bothering you, then you can buy insurance, or you might be able to. That's the proposal. If there's a better idea, then send it over.

[Several members displayed a publication]

The Speaker: We've got a point of order on the utilization of exhibits, I gather.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. A straightforward math question: when two Albertans are waiting for a knee replacement, and the richer Albertan pays for treatment and waits two months and the poorer Albertan stays with the public system and waits 12 months, how much longer did the poorer Albertan wait? How is this equal?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. leader is saying is that the poorer Albertan should wait 12 months. That is unacceptable. We want to improve access for both those who can afford to pay and those who can't afford to pay. Now, aside from that red book, which, by the way, contains absolutely nothing in terms of bringing the costs of health care in line with the rate of inflation or improving access – it says nothing about that whatsoever. You know, they can hold it up all they want because it does absolutely nothing. The whole idea of this proposal – and it is a proposal because there is a public consultation process – is to improve access for those nonemergency situations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, assuming that we all want to improve the public health care system, can the Premier explain how allowing doctors to practise in both the private and public systems will reduce costs for all Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for the public consultation process. As I indicated yesterday – and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was at the media scrum – he can participate in the public consultation process and present those ideas. There will be plenty of time for debate in the Legislature if – and I underline the word “if” – legislation is introduced. If they have better ideas, if through the public consultation process they can present an alternative way to bring the costs of health care in line with the rate of inflation, if they can demonstrate very concrete ways to improve access, then fine, we'll consider those.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Care Insurance

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only is this government unable to provide evidence that supports the Premier's reforms to health care, but they're unable to answer the questions that are on the minds of most Albertans. These are basic questions that a government pursuing massive reforms should be able to outline clearly. I will speak slowly. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what other health care services currently covered by public insurance plans does the minister intend to delist?

Mr. R. Miller: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Just a second.

A point of order on what? I'm sorry.

Mr. R. Miller: On the Premier's language and his behaviour in the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it later.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I heard him suggest that we were planning to delist services. That is not the case. It's neither in the consultation document nor is it contemplated as we go out and talk to Albertans about the policies here that, number one, talk about putting the patient first, talk about building a stronger public system, talk about doing things to improve the public system, talk about interregional co-operation, alternatives in paying and compensating health care professionals. Perhaps he could elucidate more clearly so that I could contemplate his question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take it that nothing will be delisted, and we'll keep her to her word.

To the Premier: given that half of Alberta households make less than $50,000 per year, why does the Premier think that the average Albertan can afford private insurance? Is that what Aon said?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, all we're proposing at this point is a public consultation process. Now, if the hon. leader is opposed to us consulting the public, then stand up and say so. If he's not, then I would hope that he will participate in a meaningful way and provide positive input, not the red book because it contains nothing, positive input, input that will achieve two things: one, bring the costs in line with the rate of inflation, if we can do that, and improve access. If he has any ideas on how that can be done, any idea.

You know, as I said, there are a thousand pieces to this puzzle. What we're proposing is one piece contained in – I don't know how many recommendations in the framework. One piece. That represents about one or maybe two pieces to the puzzle. There are probably a thousand pieces to the puzzle. We'll consider any good advice from any of the people who submit thoughts and ideas to the public consultation process.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: for the record is there a plan to eliminate health care premiums and have Albertans pay for private insurance instead?

Mr. Klein: No. There is a plan to consult with Albertans. I'm going to say it very slowly. There is a plan to consult with Albertans, including members of the opposition Liberals and the opposition NDs and the opposition Alliance. There is an opportunity to consult with Albertans and an opportunity for all of these members to provide their input.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As experts predicted, the Chaoulli case is being misinterpreted and misused for political purposes to justify reforms that the court never envisioned. Yesterday in the Assembly the minister of health began that process in Alberta. The Chaoulli decision lifted the ban on private insurance on the understanding that the rule against doctors working in both systems would remain in place. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the minister proposing to allow doctors to work in both systems? The Supreme Court decision provides no basis for that.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, as our Premier has said many times, this will be a part of public consultation. What I referenced yesterday were papers that were provided last November at a conference in Vancouver where Peter Hogg, a constitutional lawyer, and Marvin Storrow spoke about the very real question of Madam Justice Deschamps' ruling that cited the Constitution in Quebec and the Charter of Canada and suggested that if one is approved for one part of Canada with the Quebec Charter, it may very well apply for the rest of Canada. The great body of evidence that they were providing at that time suggested that all provinces should be looking at that.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when I was at the meeting with Mr. Clement and the other health care ministers from across the country, I was told that at least six other provinces are reviewing their own legislation and regulation in light of the Chaoulli decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the majority decision was that allowing private insurance would not necessarily improve waiting lists, and some insisted that it would in fact weaken the public system, how can the minister say that private insurance will improve public wait times?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the document, in fact, though suggestions were made that there may have been some deleterious reference, the vast majority of the opinion cited that the proponents of the Canada Health Act failed to show any illustrative point where private care had eroded the public system. They cited that very definitely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: since the court ruled that Quebec's restriction on private insurance was valid only if wait times in the public system were reasonable, why not simply fix the public system?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, and there is a great deal of work being done to fix the public system. The arthroplasty project, that sees hip and knee replacements done in this province in ways that reduce the wait times, is a primary example of something that leads the country in reducing the wait times. That's an outstanding event that takes place right here in Alberta. We intend to keep advancing in this direction, reducing the wait times in the public system.

Simply put, what concerns me a great deal is that we can do these things. We can make the public health care system more efficient, and we'll continue to work on that every day, putting the patient first, but we cannot guarantee that the system and the way that we're delivering it today with the rising costs of drugs and technology is sustainable for the long term. We are not looking at today and tomorrow; we're looking at the long-term horizon of delivering public health care responsibly.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, earlier today I released a study that shows a direct link between the amount of private health care in a system and increased waiting lists. It found that even small increases in the percentage of private delivery cause wait times to jump dramatically. This is far from being an isolated study. It represents a consensus of health care experts around the world. My question is for the Premier. Why is the Premier misleading Albertans by telling them that two-tier, private health care will reduce wait times when the opposite is true?

The Speaker: A little while ago I interjected with the use of a certain word. Now the leader of the third party is saying to another member that it's a deliberate misleading, which violates our rules. Please find another word, okay? This is only the fifth day of this spring session. My hair is already starting to turn.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has this information – I'm sure he does – then I would strongly suggest that he make it available to the public consultation process. That's what it's all about.

Mr. Mason: Can the Premier, who is attempting to turn our health care system upside down, stand in this place and cite one single study that shows that more private health care improves wait times?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's not my place, either to show or not to show, but it is my place to consult the public. The hon. leader of the third party is a member of the public, and he is welcome to share his views with the public consultation process.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier admit that he is leading Albertans down the garden path where longer wait times and higher expenses are the only result?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, he can repeat those comments to the public consultation process.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if I may. The study in question was provided by the hon. member opposite and the information provided cites data from a very different system. The system in Australia is quite different in the way they provide public/private partnerships.

We're pleased to take their comments, as the Premier said, but it does not constitute the full wealth of knowledge that we can have available to us in looking at the way that we can remarkably modify the system in Alberta to make sure that the public system stays strong and still explore an opportunity for selected services of a nonemergent nature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The release of the health policy framework is appreciated by all Albertans. However, the fear of the unknown now shifts to the devil in the details. The government seems confused between forgive and forget the repentant offender and promise and forget. The Premier promised to improve our health system by regionalizing and then promising elections of our health boards. This government also promised to have public consultation on this framework. This government controls the funding, procedures, and opportunities of the health regions as well as the health boards. What they are presenting is not the third way; it is their way or the highway. To the Premier: will you put the people of Alberta first and keep your promise and allow the people to elect health boards that have the power of requisition?

Mr. Klein: Well, the power of requisition: you know, an interesting question. It's one that I would invite the hon. member to put to the public consultation process. If you want to go back to requisitions, that's an interesting proposal. It might be interesting to have one board or maybe no boards since the government provides all the funding for health care. You know, these are questions that can be put to the public consultation process. As I say, there are a thousand pieces to the puzzle.

They want to concentrate – and by “they” I refer to the opposition – on the kinds of things that create controversy and conflict and confusion and chaos, the five Cs of journalism. As my hon. friend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said, if it doesn't bleed, it won't read.

There are all kinds of things that are constructive that can be considered; i.e., the whole governance model and the cost of administration within our health systems, the common purchasing of not only pharmaceuticals, as the hon. leader of the third party pointed out, but uniforms and the numerous supplies that are used by the various hospitals and health authorities and doctors.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of things that need to be considered, and I would ask the hon. member to submit his ideas to the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: I would love the opportunity to meet with you and the minister of health.

Thank you. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: would you elaborate on what, according to the health policy framework, you consider to be small rural hospitals? The plan appears to be to downgrade these facilities. What are the details?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on page 13 of the plan it deals quite extensively with rural hospitals. Some are larger; some were built in the '50s. Reconfiguration of them would be necessary because there are many different ways that we treat patients, new technologies and so on. So what the policy framework suggests is that we look at what is practically possible, look at the health authorities' use of the Capital health critical care line, look at the use of telehealth, look at the services that are needed in particular areas, that we partner between larger urban hospitals supporting smaller rural hospitals. When I talk in that report about multidimensional care in facilities, primary care, we talk about teams providing care. There's absolutely no intent to downgrade the hospitals but to in fact move them more into the century of rapid technology and treatment of patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness allow innovation and efficiencies to be developed by the health regions by allowing funding to follow the services which the regions feel they are able and wanting to provide to the people of their regions?

Ms Evans: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opted-out Physicians

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Many Albertans are concerned with proposals for health care reform which would allow physicians and surgeons to opt out and to carry on practice in both the public system and the private system. Will the minister assure Albertans that allowing physicians and surgeons to opt out of the public health care system and work for private facilities will not result in a reduction of scarce human resources such as specialists which are now available in the public system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, what we're proposing in the health policy framework is to make sure, in fact, that we launch this with a limited number of procedures, procedures of a nonemergent nature, where people want to get services more rapidly than they actually medically need those procedures. We will very carefully control that with business cases that have to be provided that show that there's no interference with the public system in delivery of those particular private opportunities.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the Assembly how her department will ensure that waiting times for ordinary Albertans do not increase as a result of specialists such as orthopedic surgeons, anaesthetists, cardiologists, and so on allocating some or all of their time to private clinic settings?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to make this observation. One of the reasons why setting benchmarks and targets and wait times is so difficult on a national scale is because many things can interfere; for example, the health of the region, traumatic events, the kinds of resources that may be called away for something like a pandemic, and so on. So you have to be careful when you establish benchmarks for wait times that you do that in a way that steadily improves progress to access but doesn't necessarily mitigate against better clinical decisions.

Our intent is to make sure that any use of any professional in any part of the private system would in fact not compromise the public system. We're being very, very careful to define just a very small amount of opportunity here so that we can evaluate it, we can monitor it, and we can make sure, Mr. Speaker, what we are committing to; that is, that the public system be strong and ever stronger and improve wait times there, that we keep working on that, and that anything else that's done in any private clinic will not mitigate against the public system.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise whether any steps are contemplated to ensure that the best and most skilful physicians and surgeons do not flee the public system to work for higher financial rewards in the private system?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that the question does is make an assumption that there will be higher rewards in the private system, and we cannot evaluate that. We cannot make that assumption at this time. What we have to say, simply, is that if there had been higher rewards in a private system in a nonpublic tract right now, you would have no doubt that there would be several of those opportunities available all over Canada. Quite frankly, what we are going to look at is how we control, how we evaluate and monitor the doctors that would make a case to go into that kind of private delivery opportunity and make sure at all times that the number one mandate of this government – namely, the strong public health care system – is maintained.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow. [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order in the gallery! You're not part of the proceedings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the floor.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this House in relation to contaminated drinking water in rural Alberta the Minister of Energy indicated that coal-bed methane extraction, a new technology of the last few years, is just like drilling conventional gas. However, he apparently does not know that coal-bed methane recovery is very different, with many wells per section using shallow fracturing with toxic chemicals and explosives, some at levels up to 200 metres deep. EUB directive 027 of last month stated, "There may not always be a complete understanding of fracture propagation at shallow depths." My question to the Energy minister: will this minister finally admit that coal-bed methane drilling is proceeding without understanding the risks and placing Albertans and their water in danger?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, when we look at the safety of water, that's what the Energy and Utilities Board works on, that's what we work on, that's what Alberta Environment works on, that's what we all work toward: ensuring the safety and security of people, their water, their air, and all those quality issues. That said, you're always looking to improve a regulatory environment. Through the years we've had decades of experience in drilling in deep and in shallow zones, not just coal. This isn't the first time that shallow drilling has occurred for natural gas. There are plenty of shallow wells being drilled for natural gas in southeastern Alberta all the time. So when you're looking at the coal-bed methane zone, it's true that we want to make sure that we're up to speed and have the best regulatory environment to continue to facilitate and have the best structures in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister is not listening. Last month the same EUB directive said, "Oilfield and water well drilling and completions practices may not be adequate and should be reviewed." Does this minister disagree with the EUB?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I support that we have been very active, the Energy and Utilities Board, our own department, consultations with industry, with the public at large. That's why we initiated the multistakeholder advisory committee to look at coal-bed methane in particular, acknowledging that there is going to be an increase of activity. It's started to happen; therefore, we want to be in front of it. The final report is with me now. The draft report was submitted last fall. The draft report was actually public information. We are going to be acting quickly to ensure that we continue to improve upon an already very solid regulatory environment.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Minister, these wells are being drilled as we speak. The EUB itself has said that they do not understand the risks. Will the minister stand up for public health and safety and consider halting all new coal-bed methane fracturing until we know what we're doing?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's convenient to take an extrapolation of one sentence from the Energy and Utilities Board. It's also true that the Energy and Utilities Board, who has a tremendous amount of engineering and geological expertise on their board to adjudicate, has approved already the drilling of wells because they have been able to assure the safety of Albertans in those very specific applications that have gone forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In today's society I'm really pleased that we have the technology that allows our constituents to phone you three hours ago with a question that they'd like asked on a very timely topic, which is health care. My questions are to the minister of health. Minister, one of the constituents that phoned this morning wanted to know if you or your department have established any guidelines on how much a doctor could make working in the private health care system that is being proposed, talked about, or otherwise discussed?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I've looked across the country. There are a variety of approaches that are undertaken. Some are capped; some are not capped. For the largest extent most surgical services in private facilities that are provided are not capped. We will have to very carefully consider what the case should be in Alberta. Again, it's a part of the consultation document, but we will take a look at how those doctors are paid, how the staffs are compensated. We have alternative relationship plans that pay health care teams in different ways, so we can look at how those fees are accomplished.

Currently at HRC in Calgary those physicians are paid on the public scale, but there are facility fees as well. So we would take a look at the business case and determine what seemed to be fair and reasonable. A criteria of fairness is important in this system in Alberta. I think that's appropriate. We would take a look at the service itself, what level of service was being provided. It may be individual and may be different dependent on which service was provided in that system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another very specific question that this lady from the county of Lethbridge asked is: will doctors operating in the private system collect the same fee for the same procedure that doctors are compensated for in the public system?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's very clearly an important element. It is tied with whatever business case is made. We're not likely to amend the fees in the public system except through the trilateral agreement, which, as you know, is how we compensate our physicians. Quite frankly, we have yet to make a final determination on what would be done. We're looking at policies from a number of places, but most of all we're going to hear from Albertans first.

Again, on the principle of fairness, we don't want to make a predetermination on something that may or may not happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last question that I received this morning was: will doctors operating in the private health care system be able to use public health care facilities to perform some of their procedures?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, public health care facilities will always take precedence for public health care. Where we have extra or surplus space or community facilities that may be made available, there would have to be a business case develop so that the public tax dollars that had paid for that space were fairly recognized in whatever business plan would be available.

Mr. Speaker, I looked at a hospital in Bonnyville that had some space that was surplus, that had never been completely developed. It's possible that in a space like that, if a private clinic were to provide a business case, pay for the renovations, locate there, and provide some supports alternatively back to the public system, it would make sense for the public system in Bonnyville to look at that. We would have to deal with these on a case-by-case basis, what makes sense and is it fair to all concerned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The continuing care system in this province is in crisis. This has been pointed out by the Auditor General, the MLA task force, and every brave Albertan who has come forward with their heartbreaking stories about the experience of their loved ones in continuing care. Last week's announcement was too little. To the minister of health: given that the safety of vulnerable Albertans should be this government's number one priority, will the minister act on the recommendation to regulate personal care attendants, who have the most direct and frequent contact with residents?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the question is a good one. Initially when we looked at this response, I feared that the member opposite might in fact suggest that it is too little, but it is what has been assumed could be spent to help us to complete this calendar year to the end of this fiscal year to provide ceiling lifts, support for reviewing medication administration, to provide another amount of money for administration of the long-term care facilities generally, and to provide another $15 million towards the long-term care hours that are designated at 3.4.

Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well that there is training of staff and other things that have to be done, and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and I working together have yet this spring to make sure that we are able to release a plan for addressing the standards issue, which was a part of the Auditor General's report and which has been cited by the hon. members that completed the study.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to the minister for that, and I look forward to discussing this more in depth in the next thing that's coming up.

What is the minister doing to ensure that therapists are available and accessible to work closely with the residents to prevent disability and maintain health?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, various health regions have plans to do this type of activity. Some are more developed than others. Some are in fact contingent on the willingness and the partnerships already created by the various facilities that are administering continuing care. We have things that are different. In Calgary, for example, the chronic disease management strategy has a whole different methodology of navigating through the system. With compliments also to Chinook. I know that in the Chinook health region there have been a number of different approaches taken.

Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties that we're trying to manage with the workforce requirements is the training of special therapists to make sure that we have an adequate supply, and where we can, we are trying to use therapists from other parts of the system, from the regional authorities, to provide supplementary supports to those facilities that require them on a needs and case-by-case basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. When will the minister legislate clear, measurable, province-wide, and resident-focused standards to protect the vulnerable Albertans that remain in our continuing care?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that in the very first instance we have to release the standards and get the feedback from the people that are resident in continuing care circumstances, their families, the providers of service, and make sure that the standards are appropriate. Whether those are carried further in terms of legislation I cannot commit to at this time, simply to say that the target that we have is to elevate the standards and make sure that patient safety is improved and that the work that we're doing to provide supports in the long-term care and continuing care facilities has measurable outcomes, that the things that we're undertaking there are evidence based, and that we're accountable for a higher and better quality of care. I know that that's the intent of every member of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Medical School Spaces

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to experience a shortage of doctors in this province as well as in this entire country. We recently heard a report in the city of Calgary that we're short 500 doctors today, with the average age of a doctor being 50. As we look at these shortages, we have hundreds of qualified students looking for seats in medical school, and when they're not successful, they'll often go to foreign medical schools for their training. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Are there plans to increase the number of residency spaces in our medical schools so that we can bring these new Alberta doctors back home?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, an excellent question. We have been looking at that very closely with the minister of advanced learning. Clearly, we have had the greatest amount of success of any of the other provinces and territories in attracting physicians, in attracting applications. In terms of increasing the number of residency seats in medical schools, we are looking at that. We've had a 16 per cent increase between 2003 and 2005, and looking not only at international graduates but our own graduates returning home is a strategy that we hope to be able to improve on.

Mr. Speaker, I would just give the member some hope that we are going to make improvements on that. Hopefully in the new budgetary year there will be some evidence that we have made at least some additional steps.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. My first supplemental actually goes to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister tell me if there are plans for future expansion of our undergraduate medical schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just about this time every year we do what we call enrolment growth or access growth fund allocations. In the late fall we asked every institution to come forward with their plans with respect to how they want to expand enrolment growth. I can tell you that over the past number of years there has been considerable growth in the health professions and health occupations areas and, as well, that we have a number of applications in to expand enrolment growth in health professions and health occupations now. Those allocations, those determinations will be made, actually, by the end of this week and subject to budget approval, but I anticipate that we will have, again, growth in health professions, health occupations, and particularly in the medical doctor field.

Mrs. Ady: Then my final supplemental to the same minister: can you tell me where Alberta ranks compared to other provinces in the number of seats that we have available?

Mr. Hancock: Well, in terms of the number of seats, we are third in the country. Of course, Ontario and Quebec, having larger populations, would be ahead of us in terms of the absolute numbers. In terms of percentage per population, we were actually second in the country, but we've dropped now to fourth. That's between the year 2000 and the year 2004. The reason for that drop to fourth is not because we've cut back, I want to assure people, but because our population has grown. A number of provinces have added medical graduate positions over those four years. Quebec, in particular, has added a significant number of positions. Alberta has added a number of positions, but we do need to add more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness announced the government's intention to move towards two-tiered health care. Today and yesterday they said: don't worry; be happy because we're going to consult with Albertans. Now the consulting is going on there for a month. You can e-mail the Premier or the minister of health, or you can even telephone them. That's their idea of consultation. My question to the Premier is simply this: why doesn't the Premier admit the truth and tell Albertans that this so-called consultation is nothing but window dressing and that they've already decided to move towards a two-tiered system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's not window dressing. It's something we committed to do, and we are doing it. We committed to do it as part of our overall program relative to achieving sustainability.

Relative to the consultation process I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, he cited a couple of things, but we also have stakeholder consultations. We have made slots available. We are already booking those slots. I'm pleased to say that there has been considerable interest in that. We will be working on weekends as well to make sure that wherever possible we hear from Albertans. The groups that want to come forward, the individuals that want to write and provide their feedback: we're doing our level best to reach as many as possible.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, given that it's probably just a coincidence that this month's consultation takes us beyond the Tory leadership convention, my question simply is this to the Premier: why is the government ignoring the evidence of its own health symposium – that was consultation – as well as views of Albertans in this headlong rush to privatize?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no headlong rush to privatize or do anything else for that matter. There is a headlong rush to consult. Indeed, the international symposium was part of the consultation process, but it didn't involve the people of this province; it involved experts from around the world providing their views. It was part of the exercise that we spelled out loud and clear: we would convene a symposium to hear what works and what doesn't work around the world, and then we would have a public consultation process. Now we are in that phase of the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, the results of the symposium were pretty clear. They said: don't go in the direction that the government's going. Why are we continuing with this after that evidence that came from Calgary?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, maybe the hon. member of the third party can recall for me, but I don't recall the symposium saying: don't have a public consultation process.

An Hon. Member: Don't have private health care.

Mr. Martin: That's what they said.

Mr. Klein: No. Well, I don't recall them ever saying, Mr. Speaker: don't have a public consultation process. That was all part of our plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Provincial Infrastructure Deficit

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions have to do with this government's 3M approach to budgeting, ministers' magic math, which Albertans view as a song-and-dance routine. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that the 2005 internal infrastructure documents indicate that Alberta's infrastructure deficit is $7.2 billion and last fall the minister publicly mused that the deficit could be as high as $10 billion to $12 billion, would the minister please share with this Assembly the current infrastructure deficit in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The last work that we did, which was in the 2004-2005 budget year, showed that there was an infrastructure deficit of about $7 billion. We are looking at how we can bring that down. When it comes to cost escalation, what we're seeing, quite simply, is that costs have escalated very much in the last year, so there could well be that component that is built in. What we saw this past year was an escalation of very close to 25 per cent. We have not gone out and updated those numbers, but it's my job as the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to ensure that that deficit goes down as opposed to going up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Finance. Given the multibillion dollar infrastructure deficit as well as the multibillion unfunded teachers' pension liability, can this minister continue to claim that Alberta is truly debt free?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an argument you might want to take up with the people who do financial statements and the Auditor General because there is an agreement on the pension fund that was reached, and it is not shown as a debt to the province. However, having said that, the Minister of Education is working very closely with the teachers in this province and their representatives to look at what can be done because we have a concern there.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know what's wrong with these people over here that find it difficult to celebrate the fact that Alberta enjoys the best fiscal regime in Canada. Each day that I come in here, I feel very sorry for them because it must be sad to try to find something wrong when everything is so good in this province today.

Mr. Chase: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given the volatility of natural resource revenue, will the minister consider taking a page out of the opposition playbook and endow capital dollars so that Alberta roads, schools, and hospitals can receive sustainable funding in the future?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the short and dirty answer is no. We certainly do have to look at sustainable funding for capital, and that's exactly what we're doing at this point in time. We have something like a $13 billion capital plan over the next three years. That's a huge amount of dollars. That's a huge amount of money. It's money that we're putting back into infrastructure. The infrastructure and transportation part: there still is some work that needs to be done, but it will always be work that needs to be done, and $13 billion is a lot of money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Hospital Bed Capacity

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are frustrated with the shortage of beds in the Calgary health region, yet we hear even today of excess hospital space in rural areas. Is the minister satisfied the region is doing all it can to address the bed shortage in Calgary?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, just yesterday the Calgary health region had a meeting on capacity issues, and they recognized the improvements that they would like to make in various management strategies. Some of the measures they looked at would be: a southern Alberta referral centre, increasing the number of program-based patient flow co-ordinators so that they actually help move the patients, expansion of home care with after-hours admissions. They looked further at opening extra continuing care beds, which they have, at least 14 in number, and increasing the use of urgent assessment clinics. At that meeting the Calgary health region made a commitment that directly related to the member's question. They will move patients, when appropriate, to rural acute care sites, and there is a plan to do just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. What will the new framework do to address this disparity?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the new framework, talking about inter-regional collaboration and expanding the examination of the role of hospitals vis-à-vis community care facilities, will start to address that in various ways. Like I described earlier to one of the other hon. members, we will be looking at the use of rural hospitals, and we'll also look at ways that partnerships can improve the health care in both centres by partnering rural and urban hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, today as I speak, a great deal of work is done with the Capital health region in support of the Northern Lights region. It is one of the ways that we can expand on in other centres of the province to make sure that there is a very cost-effective and patient-centred safety-first method of admitting people and providing them space in hospitals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will the third way approach capacity issues?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that goes right to the heart of reshaping the role of hospitals. We think that hospitals can be used in smarter ways. We have to improve access in regions. We recognize that. We also have to find ways that we use the technology of today – telehealth, Health Link, and ways of connecting people – so that hospitals can serve the role that they are most well-equipped for, and that is taking care of the very sick, and so that we can use the community facilities and the policies in the third way in ways that make sure that outpatients, where it makes sense to do so, can be cared for.

Today in Sturgeon within the existing hospital there was a reconfiguration and a renovation of the cardiac care centre. It will enable us to do more of those early intervention strategies in that hospital. This is the type of energized renewal I see for hospitals that may have been built in decades past, where the kinds of activities that we can engage in now have not taken place. In St. Albert, for example, they've moved from taking care of four patients with pacemakers to 300 patients with pacemakers. This clinic will enable to do that, and that's right in the hospital. I see this kind of innovation taking place all across Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for question period has now evaporated, but we're not going to leave this question period until we deal with a decorum issue.

The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your giving me this opportunity to apologize most sincerely for my actions. I ought not to have thrown the Liberal health policy at our page Jennifer. To Jennifer I apologize most sincerely. I also apologize for referring to the document as crap.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll begin today with an historical vignette, and I want to provide you with a quotation. This quotation comes from the Canadian House of Commons. The statement was made on May 13, 1946. "The most important responsibility we have [is to] the individual citizen of this country. He it is who should be considered; he is the man whose rights should be the fount and source of all the things we do." That statement was made by a Member of this Legislative Assembly outside, after he left this Assembly.

The person I'm referring to is a gentleman by the name of Solon Earl Low, who was born in Cardston in 1900. A farmer, teacher, and school principal, Mr. Low was elected the Social Credit member for the constituency of Warner in 1935. In the March 21, 1940, election he was defeated in Warner. Member-elect George Woytkiw then resigned his seat in Vegreville, and in a by-election held on June 20, 1940, Mr. Low was elected by acclamation. He returned to the constituency of Warner in 1944 and was re-elected. In 1945 he resigned and was elected to the Canadian House of Commons representing Peace River, which he did from 1945 to 1958. He served as Alberta's Provincial Treasurer, as a minister without portfolio, and as an Education minister. He sponsored the bill establishing Alberta Treasury Branches. He was the leader of the federal Social Credit Party from 1944 to 1961. In 1961 he was appointed a family and juvenile court judge in Lethbridge. Mr. Low died on December 22, 1962.

Members' Statements

Be Smart, Be Safe Program

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, every day in Canada 6,000 people are injured, and another 40 die from injuries. Unintentional injuries are a serious health concern and cost Canadians $14.7 billion a year. These injuries have one thing in common: they are predictable and preventable.

On February 25 Canada's home, car, and business insurers brought the Be Smart, Be Safe national injury prevention program to Lethbridge. Teaming up with the city of Lethbridge, Lethbridge fire and emergency services, Lethbridge regional police, and local injury prevention programs and groups, the Be Smart, Be Safe program increases community awareness of injury prevention through a week jam-packed with events, facts, and fun for the whole family, all designed to help prevent injuries in the home, on the road, and at play.

As well, financial and equipment donations were made to the Alberta Farm Safety Centre, Safety City Society, and the Lethbridge fire department. Local insurance brokers also donated $2,000 to the Gift of Safety, a group that provides car and child booster seats to families who cannot afford them.

Please join me in recognizing Canada's home, car, and business insurers for their commitment to injury prevention and for bringing the Be Smart, Be Safe program to Lethbridge.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Fraud Awareness Month

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today was the launch of Alberta Fraud Awareness Month, the first province-wide fraud awareness campaign in Canada. The campaign is a joint initiative between Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security, the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta.

Fraud is a crime that is growing across the country, but Alberta is a special target because of its growing economy and the high disposable income of its residents. Identity theft alone is the fastest growing commercial crime in North America. Statistics show that 1,079 Albertans reported being a victim of identity theft in 2003, and that's just identity theft. Thousands of Albertans fall victim to all types of fraud every year.

Educating the public is a key for both the enforcement and prevention of fraud in Alberta. Throughout the month fraud prevention forums and seminars will be held across the province, helping Albertans learn how to identify various types of fraud. Public service announcements will promote the slogan Fraud: Recognize It, Report It, Stop It. This slogan will be accompanied by information for Albertans on how they can protect themselves. In addition, Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security has distributed campaign brochures to all MLAs to share with their constituents.

This awareness campaign will go a long way to providing Albertans with valuable information so that they can protect themselves from becoming victims of fraud. I want to congratulate those involved for making this campaign a reality and making Alberta a leader in fraud awareness and prevention.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Team Kleibrink

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise in recognition of a team of athletes who brought one of the many Olympic medals back to our province. The Canadian women's curling team, headed by Skip Shannon Kleibrink, defeated the Norwegian team in a gripping match to seize the bronze medal almost one week ago.

Winning a medal in the Olympics is an incredible achievement under any circumstances. The path to the bronze medal for this rink is made even more remarkable because two of the members of the team battled fairly severe bouts of flu or perhaps even food poisoning while competing in Turin. The Olympic spirit displayed by Shannon Kleibrink, Glenys Bakker, Christine Keshen, Amy Nixon, and Sandra Jenkins to stand on the podium while overcoming obstacles off the sheet is inspiring.

The victory these ladies achieved is perhaps even a little more special to me and the members of the Highwood constituency because the skip hails from Okotoks. I know the big city to the north likes to claim credit, but Shannon does indeed reside in the Highwood constituency, and we are very proud to claim her.

I would ask all members to join me in congratulating the bronze medalists in curling for the 20th Olympic Winter Games as well as all the Canadian athletes. Mr. Speaker, our athletes performed admirably in all sports, and they deserve our gratitude and our continued support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care Agreement

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What do democracy and child care have in common? First, they are values that unite most of us. Whatever type of democracy, whatever kind of child care we prefer – and there are many possibilities – we have more in common here than the points of difference that divide us.

Second, democracy is about choice. We don't have it if there is no alternative. Child care, too, involves choices. In the negotiations that led to the national child care agreement, this province through the insistence of the hon. Minister of Children's Services made sure that choice was enshrined in the Canadian program along with universality and the other three pillars of accessibility, quality, and a developmental approach. Democracy and child care were served in an agreement between levels of government, among regions and provinces, and across party lines. This was a significant achievement in co-operation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this achievement and this agreement may be in jeopardy. A new government in Ottawa may be unable to sustain this mix of choice and quality child care. Now we need to join together again to confirm the status quo of the national child care agreement signed by our government. Albertans may value well-thought-out tax cuts, but we're not prepared to let child care be the block on which the axe falls. Our willingness to stand together will send a message across Canada as the new government meets. The national agreement we negotiated and improved on needs to be honoured. It is a cause worth standing for. The way we make this point, in an affirmation across party lines, is as important as the point itself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Viking Cup

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a unique event which happens every two years in my constituency. The Viking Cup is an international hockey tournament which celebrated its 25th anniversary this year. The Viking Cup has been setting the stage for world-class hockey and global cultural exchange for youth from countries like Russia, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Finland, the U.S.A., Norway, Germany, Switzerland, and Sweden to come to Camrose since 1980. In addition, all-star junior teams from Alberta, B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba and university and college teams have competed in this internationally known tournament.

Since its inception over 300 players who competed in the Viking Cup have been drafted into the NHL. Of these, over 100 have either played or are currently playing with an NHL club, and many play on various national teams, as we saw in the recent Olympics. What this points to is that there is an exceptional level of hockey played in the Viking Cup. This event encourages not only a high level of competition in sport but also increases cultural understanding between the young people who participate.

In the past this tournament was owned exclusively by Augustana University College, and Camrose was the exclusive community involved in this tournament. Now the tournament is hosted in Camrose and Wetaskiwin and is jointly owned by the University of Alberta Augustana campus and Hockey Alberta. The Viking Cup will now be an annual event, with the host city alternating between Alberta Junior Hockey League cities in odd-numbered years and Camrose during even-numbered years. I look forward to seeing many of my colleagues at Fort McMurray when the Viking Cup takes to the ice next year.

Another change which was seen in the most recent tournament was competition in two divisions, junior hockey being one and a university division the other.

In closing, I would like to congratulate this year's Viking Cup winners: the University of Guelph, who won the gold medal in the university pool, and the Alberta Junior Hockey League North All-Stars, who won the gold medal in the junior pool.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Frank Atkinson

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Frank Atkinson, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar who will be celebrating his 60th birthday on March 2. Mr. Atkinson was raised on a farm in the Fort Saskatchewan area and graduated from Fort Saskatchewan high school, after which he attended NAIT studying industrial instrumentation, graduating from there in 1968.

His lifelong passion for community service does not go unnoticed. He became the first mayor of the new summer village of Larkspur in 1985, a position he held for 16 years. From 1986 to 1991 he served as president of the summer villages of Alberta. From 1988 to 1991 he served on the board of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association as villages and summer villages member. His long list of community service includes membership on the Ottewell Community League council, where he has a lifetime membership, southeast Edmonton community planning coalition member, civic planning member from Ottewell, and chairman of the Capital Region Assessment Services Commission. He was also involved with the South East Truck Route Planning Group, the Edmonton southeast communities association, and the Municipal safety codes inspection commission.

Mr. Atkinson is married to Fay, and they have two children, Cynthia and Bryan.

As a young man he enjoyed swimming, motorcycling, waterskiing, and snow skiing. He is a very avid hunter, and he uses both a bow and arrow and a rifle to satisfy his hobby.

On behalf of all the residents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, particularly those in the Ottewell area, I would like to thank Mr. Atkinson for all his service to the community and wish him a very happy birthday. May he and his family have good health and prosperity for many, many years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: As a further point in our recognitions, yesterday was the happy, happy birthday occasion for the hon. Minister of Environment, and today is the happy, happy birthday occasion for the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. Wish them both well.

head: 3:00 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is correspondence from a constituent, Brock Skywalker, who writes to urge me to help stop the plans to reform health care. He strongly supports the Canada Health Act and feels the government should be upholding it and expresses a number of other concerns.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of the book Prescription for Excellence: How Innovation is Saving Canada's Health Care System by Michael Rachlis, MD. This is in response to the Premier's call for innovative ideas in health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the requisite five copies of a bid conference document between the Horizon oil sands project north of Fort McMurray and Shanghai Construction of the People's Republic of China. In this document Horizon calls on Shanghai Construction to provide temporary foreign workers and that they become members of the government-sponsored union of convenience, CLAC, in order to avoid the use of Alberta building trades.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a little bit of business to deal with. Three points of order; maybe a little lecture. First of all, I'll deal with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm citing Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j) and Beauchesne 485 to 492 and the Speaker's memo of February 15, 2006. This is all around unparliamentary language and, I would say, the tone of what we are seeing in the Assembly.

I'm specifically referring to the first exchange between the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition. I will note, although I've been unable to get the Blues, that I believe I heard the Premier withdraw the word "fib" and then go on to make another statement about telling an untruth or lying. That is the particular issue that I am dealing with now.

He then I would say dishonourably withdrew the comment about fibbing. I'm sorry. He said, "I do apologize for calling the hon. member a liar," and managed to get it in the record one more time. I'm increasingly concerned with the tone that the Premier is setting for this House. It is very difficult for us as members to counter the public opinion, a very low public opinion, held of politicians when we have the Premier of the Legislature in Alberta setting such a tone. I'm concerned about the increasing abusiveness that I'm hearing, Mr. Speaker.

Now, citation 23(h) is referring to allegations that are being made against another member, in this case the lying; 23(i) on motive; and 23(j) on insulting language. I noted "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," and I think that's exactly what's happening in this House, Mr. Speaker. Every action is escalating to the point where we ended up with a second episode today for which the Premier has already apologized. I also note the unparliamentary language that was found in Beauchesne between 485 and 492 – there are obviously pages of it – and, again, the Speaker's memo that was issued to all members of the Assembly on February 15, 2006.

I'm asking for the Speaker to find a point of order against the Premier and to help us in curbing the increasing abusive tone of what is coming from that side of the Assembly towards members of the Official Opposition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, participation.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's clear both from your intervention and from the actions of the Premier in both withdrawing his remark and apologizing twice in the House this afternoon that your point was made with respect to both the language and decorum of the House. I note that you interjected as well when the leader of the third party opposition member used language. I think you made the point in the House for all members of the House to appreciate that we do have to be careful in our decorum and our language in the House and that we must do our utmost to make sure that this House is seen as a place of parliamentary discourse.

It would be useful in that process if members engaged in less hyperbole and more straightforward preambles to questions and those sorts of things. I think that as we go forward in this session, in terms particularly of question period, where these incidents most often arise, if all members of the House in framing questions could frame them in the context of true questions and less in the context of political rhetoric and hyperbole, we would have fewer opportunities to engage in this type of point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the outset the position that I take as chair of this Assembly is that I would like to see as few interjections and interventions of the chair as possible. That's been my tradition from day one, and it's been repeated periodically. I really believe that it's extremely important that when the chair recognizes one hon. member and gives that hon. member the right to ask a question and the chair then recognizes another hon. member and gives that hon. member the right to respond to a question, the least interventions by anyone allows for the greatest flow of the activity and provides for the best form of democracy, period. It's not my style to want to get up and interject. Today I did it three times, and that's really very much abnormal. I feel saddened about that because I don't think this was an exemplary day.

Can we just repeat again several little things? Usually there's a response that's given to something that provokes it, not necessarily all the time, but sometimes. So I would refer to oral questions in Beauchesne again, and 409 is the operative one. It has to do with, number one – let's start right at the source, the drafting of questions. Citation 409 says, "It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate." Virtually every question that we've had in this question period since the start of this session could have provoked a response and interjection from the chair. If I'd have done that, this wouldn't be called a question period; it would be called a Speaker's comment and interjection period.

Let's just go on to the next one in 409.

The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply. A supplementary question should need no preamble.

Well, I've got a list of all the supplementaries on the preambles. I will give two examples. One, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View in his second question to the hon. Minister of Energy interjected in his preamble: "The minister is not listening." Well, if that doesn't provoke the first thing that we said, then the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East in her second question provided a preamble saying how wonderful the Minister of Health and Wellness was. Well, that was unnecessary too. So you've got two extremes. Nevertheless, it basically pretty much summed up what it was. And I can go on on 409.

Listen, the responses that came from the leader of the government today were not exemplary. I say that again. There was an immediate interjection from the chair on the first one. There was a response with respect to "fib," and there was a withdrawal of that. Then there was a statement – and I'm not so sure it was, you know, a really enthusiastic apology – with respect to: "But I do apologize for calling the hon. member a liar." The chair has to take someone's word. The chair doesn't think that that was the best way that could have been phrased, hon. member.

The point of all of this: there was interjection, there were responses, there were apologies, some enthusiastic, some complete, and others not so much so. I don't think that was the best example of anything. We did get an apology. We got two apologies, I guess. One was sincere. One, well, we'll put some question on it, but, okay, it's done.

I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raising the point of order because the chair does not want to interject. If hon. members want the chair to interject, he will interject on virtually every question and virtually every answer, and this will not be what you think it is. So there's a bit of give-and-take in this business, but we can do it in a positive way. Why don't we start doing it with wit, bring in some more irony, maybe even, you know, some nice, likeable sarcasm. Who is the guy who wrote the book Gulliver's Travels? Is it Thomas Swift?

An Hon. Member: Jonathan.

The Speaker: Jonathan Swift. Read Gulliver's Travels if you want to see the greatest form of wit to be found, and that would really help us all.

Okay. So that's number one, point number one. Not a good display. Thanks for being raised. We've had a little lecture, discourse. We've had some apologies.

Point number two, the hon. Government House Leader. I presume it has to do with exhibits.

Point of Order Exhibits

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Need I say more? Beauchesne's 501, 502, 503. It's always been the order to the House that one does not use exhibits. Members of the opposition in response – in a clearly flagrant violation of the rules because of a clearly orchestrated response – simultaneously waved some red paper. That was clearly a violation of the rules that I've just cited.

Again it goes to the order and decorum of the House. The rules are here for a reason, and order and decorum is appropriate in a parliamentary place. I find it strange when in arguing one point of order one member of the opposition raises the issue about how people perceive us as parliamentarians while clearly there was an orchestrated violation of the rules in displaying exhibits for exactly that purpose.

You've made your ruling. I'm not sure we need more, but that was the point of my point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and maintain that there is no point of order on this. If we actually look at Beauchesne's 501 under Exhibits, 501 is referring to props including "boxes of cereal, detergent and milk powder," 502 is referring to "samples of grain" and the possibility of "dead fish, herrings, or red herrings, damp grain or wild oats," 503 is with apologies talking about "potatoes."

I will note that what was held up by various members of the Official Opposition is a document that, in fact, is a sessional paper of this House. It was tabled in this House on February 23. It holds the sessional paper number of 8/2006. I'm sitting in the front row, Mr. Speaker. Nobody poked me in the back and said, "Raise this and wave it now," so from my point of view this was not orchestrated. If others felt the need to raise this, they may well have done that, but I didn't participate in that, and I'm certainly not aware of it happening.

Members of the Official Opposition have been working with the health policies a great deal. I, in fact, brought those documents today and handed them to every one of my colleagues to make sure that they had a copy of that document with them at all times. So, yes, everybody had them in this Assembly at this time.

This is not a dead herring. It is not a potato. It is not a box of cereal. We work with paper in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. Every MLA does. Every Assembly has paper. To be told that we can't hold up a piece of paper or move a piece of paper on our desk during question period – well, I'd be delighted to try and work in this Assembly with no paper at all, but in this case this was a duly tabled document, a sessional paper, part of a publication from the Official Opposition. It's not an exhibit. It's not a prop or a potato or any kind of food source.

The only other citation I can find is, in fact, a Speaker's ruling from May 6, 1999, page 1533, in which the Speaker ruled that the then member for Edmonton-Riverview's minibanners did not offend the rules of the Assembly under the definitions of exhibit, and that's the principle I'm guided on here, Mr. Speaker.

We're dealing with paper. We're dealing with paper that one would expect to find on the desks of these members. There was no orchestration that I am aware of. In fact, I would rule that it was not an exhibit but a document that we have on our desks.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, it's very clear that the document in question was not a red herring, it was not a dead fish, it was not wild oats or anything else. So that's Beauchesne. And the chair's interpretation of what the hon. member said about the chair's ruling in 1999 is not exactly the same as the hon. member's.

Let's get this book. It's called House of Commons Procedure and Practice. Now, let's just listen very attentively to these words. I quote from page 520.

Speakers have consistently ruled out of order displays or demonstrations of any kind used by Members to illustrate their remarks or emphasize their positions. Similarly, props of any kind, used as a way of making a silent comment on issues, have always been found unacceptable in the Chamber. Members may hold notes in their hands, but they will be interrupted and reprimanded by the Speaker if they use papers, documents or other objects to illustrate their remarks.

So the point has been made: we do not use exhibits of any kind in this Assembly.

We had a great debate at one time when somebody mimicked something that happened in the Quebec National Assembly, when members of the Parti Québécois put up little fleurs-de-lys on their desks, and this got all kinds of coverage across the country of Canada. Then we had a former Provincial Treasurer stand up and put a Canadian flag in front of his desk when he was giving a speech, and for consistency the Speaker interjected and made a comment not having anything to do with loyalty to the flag but having to do with what was considered to be an exhibit.

When you stand up in this House and throw up documents – well, I would never suggest for a moment that it was co-ordinated but in a way that a whole bunch of them came up: I think not. Look, this is not a hill to die on, and nobody's going to be quartered. We're just going to have a little lecture by the chair with respect to this.

The third point of order had to do with an interjection by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Now, there was an exchange of notes, and the chair wanted to clear that one particular matter up. It arose when the chair had recognized the Leader of the Official Opposition. The chair's eyes were on the Leader of the Official Opposition. It's the courtesy provided to the speaker. On that side something happened. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford got up on a point of order. I said, "A point of order?" and he responded something about decorum in the House and language. As the question period evolved, it was brought to the attention of the perpetrator, which was the Premier of the province of Alberta, and at the conclusion of the question period the Premier of the province of Alberta got up and apologized to the page whom he had startled and apologized also for the use of a word in the Assembly. I presume that's what it was, so we're not going to deal with that. It's March 1, day 5.

Oh, yeah. We had a shot for the third party as well. Remember, the chair also had to interject when the leader of the third party used the word "misleading" in his question. There was an interjection. My Lord, I had more notes today than I normally have.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2005-06
General Revenue Fund, No. 2

Finance

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The supplementary estimate for Finance is found on page 18 of the supplementary estimates. I was just remarking that it's probably the shortest explanation for the most money, but that's because it's so straightforward. The request is to increase the investment in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund by $1 billion. Of course, this is possible because of higher than expected resource revenue. In this Assembly through this process now, members of the Assembly will have the opportunity to vote on whether, in fact, this money is placed in the heritage fund.

All members know that prior to this year our priority was paying off the debt. I don't think anybody disagreed with that priority, and our surplus revenues went for that purpose. With the accumulated debt eliminated and this year's higher energy revenue, we believe it's time now to look to increasing our savings. The $1 billion will be in addition to the $750 million that have been added for the Advanced Education endowment and the $345 million that are forecast for inflation-proofing the fund. Of course, you understand that it's a forecast number because it is set on a formula. The allocation follows our plan, which has been clearly enunciated since this fiscal year's budget, which was presented in April of last year, and it is a combination of smart investment, savings, and giving back to Albertans.

We are building the value of the heritage fund. This is not a shell game, as was remarked by one member. Certainly, without this year's unanticipated high revenue we would not be able to increase the fund value to this extent. We may hear about our inability to forecast prices. Well, I suggest that maybe in the future everybody write it down on a piece of paper, like we do in some of the games we play, and then at a certain point in the year we'll pick it out and see who was the closest, or maybe we'll do it as gas prices were this year – every week – and see if any of us fall in the right spot. It has been volatile. It has been unpredictable this year, far more than any energy analyst ever predicted, but it is a good opportunity for us to add to our savings.

Now, I want to save some members a little bit of time on this in their speeches. I made the comment previously – and I want to make it one more time – when I was asked why we don't just leave the $1 billion in the fund. Today we are asking the Assembly to approve adding $1 billion to the heritage fund value, that would be deposited to the fund, but it is currently legislated that the government transfer the investment income from the fund to the general revenue fund for budgeting purposes. It is currently legislated. Section 8(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act says:

The net income of the Heritage Fund less the amount allocated to the Heritage Fund under section 11 . . .

Section 11, knowing that not everyone might have that act in front of them, refers to inflation-proofing.

. . . shall be transferred by the Provincial Treasurer from the Heritage Fund to the General Revenue Fund annually in a manner determined by the Provincial Treasurer.

End of section.

We have been using that investment instrument over the years to pay for program costs to our general revenue, and over the life of the fund about $28 billion has been utilized and allocated for a variety of programs and projects. If we were to change that, we would amend the heritage fund act in order to do it. For the purposes today, for the ability to add $1 billion from our unbudgeted surplus, we must move it as per the act, not leave the money in the fund. As I say, for the purposes today.

I want to make sure that everyone's clear on that. When we look at this over time, people may have some great ideas of how to change that. We've heard all manner of them. Should we take a percentage of resource revenue? Should we not take the revenue from the fund? Some of these things are quite easy, but in a year of average oil and gas prices I want to know where the billion dollars is going to come from if it's not available through surplus. When people give us good ideas, would you please tell me whether you want to take it from Health, whether you want to take it from Advanced Education, from Education, from Children's Services, or from Seniors, because those actually are the only program budgets in this government that could supply those kinds of dollars. I don't think any of us want to do that. So while we want to invest money and we want to save, we want to make sure that we can sustain our program spending.

We'll all have more to say about this, I know, in Budget 2006, but for the purposes of the debate this afternoon I thought it might be helpful if I clarified for the Assembly the rules, the legislation around the heritage fund act and why we are adding these savings in this manner and why we're voting on those today.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll look forward to questions, and I'll look forward to answers that people provide on better ways to do this mousetrap, but I will challenge those easy answers that say "just do it" without any explanation of how you fill in the ditch, if you wish, if you do certain things.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As you can imagine, I'm looking forward with relish to having the opportunity to address this particular issue of the billion dollars that's being added to the heritage savings trust fund. I apologize for having had to step outside for a few minutes. I missed the minister's comments, and I had really hoped to have been here to hear them.

I do think it's relevant to share very briefly a little bit of the history of the fund. This fund was established in 1976 by a Premier who had a vision and a government that had a vision, something that I've argued for some 15 months now that this Premier and this government do not have. In 1976 the government of the day listed three objectives for the establishment of the fund: to save for the future, to strengthen and diversify the economy, and to improve the quality of life of Albertans. For a period of time we did in fact save for the future and met that particular goal.

To strengthen and diversify the economy, Mr. Chairman: I would submit to you that it is certainly my belief and that of many economists that we've fallen down in that regard. I believe – and there are many who concur – that today's Alberta economy is not necessarily any less dependent on nonrenewable resource revenue than we were in the late '70s and the early 1980s. That's not entirely for lack of effort, but it does cause a great deal of concern.

It once again brings to mind the bumper sticker that many of us had on our vehicles in 1983: "Please, Lord, let there be another oil boom. I promise not to piss it all away next time."

Mrs. McClellan: I don't think that's in Beauchesne.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I think I'm quoting from a bumper sticker. In fact, I know I've quoted from that bumper sticker in this House previously, and I was not called to order that time, if precedence means anything.

The Chair: The hon. minister is rising on a point of order?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Chairman, I just raised this issue. I don't think it matters where it's quoted. There is language that's acceptable in this House, and there is language that is not. I don't think that I can take any book that may have quotations with what is unacceptable language according to parliamentary procedure and use it. There are other ways of expressing this. I find it offensive, and I just wish the hon. member would refrain from that in the House.

The Chair: Hon. member, you wish to respond?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If I have offended the minister, I do apologize, and I will retract and insert another word: I promise not to waste it all away next time, squander it all away. There are many words that could be used.

Mr. Chairman, quoting from that bumper sticker I think is relevant because it expressed a sentiment that many, many Albertans held to be true at that time and that many are expressing to me today as I travel this province. I think it's relevant to remind the minister and the government that not only was it a concern of ours in 1983; it remains a concern of ours in the year 2006.

The Chair: Hon. member, if I could maybe comment on the point of order that the minister had called, my comment would be that the Speaker has just lectured the whole House on decorum and the use of language in this House. We haven't got 10 minutes past his comments, and we're dealing with them again. I would hope that in the future we would take to heart a little bit more the Speaker's comments on these things and that we would be less provocative.

If you'd like to carry on, I accept your apology.

Mr. R. Miller: I appreciate the chairman's comments. However, I will express my consternation at the fact that the rules do seem to change from sitting to sitting and, in this case, from day to day because I know for a fact that another member quoted the exact same bumper sticker the other day and was not called on it. So I'm a little confused, quite frankly, as to the ruling. Nevertheless, I have retracted and apologized for the comment, and I'd like to proceed with my debate if I could.

Debate Continued

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Chairman, from 1976 to 1983 this government had a policy of investing 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue into the heritage savings trust fund. I think it served us quite well. In 1983 there was a decision made to reduce the amount of investment of nonrenewable resource revenue to 15 per cent. Under the economic circumstances of the day that was probably a wise decision and continued to serve us well.

In 1987 the decision was made to not only cap the fund and stop making contributions to it but to withdraw all income from the fund. That carried on from 1987 through to last year, Mr. Chairman. That had a dramatic effect on the fund and on the goal to strengthen and diversify the economy. In 1987, when the fund was capped, it was at $12.681 billion or thereabouts. Had it been inflation-proofed at the very least, which I really believe is a failing of this government which will have ramifications on generations in this province for years and years to come, it would be nearly $20 billion today.

The Premier has spoken many times, although not recently – so I suspect that maybe the Premier is starting to understand. Many times over the last year or so the Premier has referred to the current surplus situation as a one-time event and not to expect this every year, that this is an anomaly, that this current boom that we're experiencing is not par for the course, an exception, my colleague from Edmonton-McClung cites the Premier as having said.

The simple fact of the matter is that for year after year after year we've been experiencing surpluses: in 1999-2000 a $2.9 billion surplus, in 2000-2001 a $6.6 billion surplus, in 2001-2002 $1.1 billion. I'll remind everybody that that is the year of 9/11, a pretty drastic year for businesses not only in Alberta but across the world. Certainly, my own personal business had a tough year that year reacting to the events of 9/11 and how that changed the business world. Nevertheless, we managed to show a $1.1 billion surplus that year, $2.2 billion in '02-03, $4 billion in '03-04, $5 billion in '04-05, for a total over that period of years of $15.2 billion, Mr. Chairman.

This year the third-quarter update showed a $7 billion surplus. In fact, I expect that by the time we get to the end of March 31, it will most likely be a $10 billion surplus. Clearly, the situation of surpluses is not a one-time event. The situation of surpluses is what I call a chronic surplus problem. It's something that has happened year after year after year and I believe is an indication of either intentional lowballing by the government in terms of resource revenue or just plain bad fiscal management. I'm not sure which. I'm not sure that one is better than the other.

I do believe that when you look at those numbers, it's quite clear that we have every reason to expect a surplus again next year and the year after that and the year after that and perhaps for many years into the future. If that is the case, if we're fortunate enough to have surpluses next year and for many years into the future, then it begs the question: what are we waiting for in terms of having a plan, a solid, concrete road map as to how to best utilize those surpluses, how to make sure that not only today's Albertans but the Albertans of the future benefit from it?

When you look at these numbers that I just cited, the surpluses year after year after year, I cannot comprehend why somebody on the government side sitting around the cabinet table didn't sit down five years ago and say: look at these numbers. Look at the year '03-04, a $4 billion surplus. Look at the year '04-05, a $5 billion surplus. Are you telling me that the cabinet minister sitting across from me right now didn't look at those numbers and think: "Holy cow. If this keeps up, we're going to have that debt paid in a couple of years. What are we going to do with it?"

I sit around my kitchen table with my wife, and we look at our budget, and we say: "You know what? Things are going pretty well right now. Alberta is doing well. Rick has a stable job for a couple more years, I hope, and there's a very real possibility that we might have our mortgage paid off in a couple of years. What are we going to do when that mortgage is paid off? What is our plan, our vision for the future of this household? How are we going to set ourselves up so that when we retire, we can live comfortably, so that when we're no longer here, our children and their grandchildren will have some legacy left over from their parents?"

It's exactly, exactly the same thing that I and many, many other Albertans are asking this government to do, and that is some solid long-range planning so that next year when the Finance minister goes downstairs to give a third-quarter budget update and it's $7 billion, everybody in this province will know exactly how that money is going to be allocated, not on the whim of the Premier, not on the whim of a couple of cabinet ministers sitting around a table in a bar scribbling on a napkin, but we will know. We will know exactly how that money is going to be allocated, how it will benefit today's Albertans, how it will benefit future Albertans. I think every Albertan in this province deserves to know that in advance, not after the fact but in advance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm not the only person saying this. I've been saying it now for 15 months. It's becoming a chorus, and it's becoming louder and louder. We're hearing from people like the respected former Premier Lougheed, the man who had this vision initially, the man who had a vision for the future of the province, who wanted to save money for the future, wanted to strengthen and diversify the economy, wanted to improve the quality of life for all Albertans. We're hearing it from groups like the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

An Hon. Member: Who elected them?

Mr. R. Miller: Their members. I'm not sure which member across asked, but their members represent them. In particular, I'm referring to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Their members represent thousands of small and medium-sized businesses, many of those located here in Alberta. A very, very respectable and reputable group they are.

I was referring to those that are lending their voices to this issue: the Canada West Foundation and, more recently, even the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, a relatively young fellow who clearly has his feet on the ground when it comes to matters of finance and who understands that there is a desperate need for a better way to deal with the surpluses in this province.

Mr. Chairman, under an Alberta Liberal plan there would be no question as to how this year's surplus would be dealt with. A $10 billion surplus would have seen $3.5 billion put into the heritage savings trust fund. I'm certainly not suggesting that a billion dollars isn't a good step forward. It's a wonderful step forward. I applaud the government for finally reacting to the pressure that I've brought on them, the pressure that some of these other groups have brought on them, the pressure that the former Premier has brought on them. I think it's a step in the right direction.

The only question is: why has it taken so long? Why weren't those decisions made five years ago? Why weren't those decisions communicated to Albertans five years ago so that everybody would have known and understood what would be happening to those surplus dollars? In fact, in a press conference the other day the Finance minister referred to the problems that she's having with all of the pressures that are being put on her to spend this money. I have the perfect solution for her, and that is a plan. If you had a concrete plan that said exactly how those dollars were going to be spent, there would be no pressures on you because everybody would know. The members of your caucus would know, the members of the opposition caucus would know, and all Albertans would know exactly how that money is going to be dealt with. In fact, as far as that goes, all Canadians would know how that money was going to be dealt with. The fear that the government seems to like to bring up all the time about somebody coming in and raiding Alberta's resource wealth wouldn't be a fear at all because the money would be allocated. It would be spoken for. It would be decided long in advance how it's going to be dealt with, and there would be no issue to fight over.

Mr. Chairman, as you can tell, I'm passionate about this. When I first entered the business world, my father told me to save for myself first. Put 10 per cent aside, he said. Boy, there are days when I wish I had listened to him right from the beginning, I tell you, days like today, when there is such concern about the future of our health care system in this province, and nobody knows exactly how much money they're going to need to afford that hip replacement or hernia operation when they need it, how much their insurance might cost every month.

I have and most of us have friends in the States that are paying anywhere from $500 to $600 to $800 to a thousand dollars a month for health insurance. I hope that's not where we're going. I really do, but nobody on the other side has convinced me yet. I'm telling you that even on the wage of an MLA, which is a pretty good wage, I can't afford $500 or $600 or $800 or a thousand dollars a month for insurance, and if I can't, then I know that the majority of Albertans can't.

So I'm wishing that I had listened to my dad when he said: start saving for yourself now. I didn't initially. I learned from him though, and there's a powerful lesson there for all Albertans. It's time that we started saving not just for ourselves but for the future, and there's no better time than right now. In fact, it's never been more important than it is right now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I wasn't going to take too much time, but I've just got to refer to a couple of things. I think the hon. member was referring to the amount of surpluses over the last decade primarily. I find it interesting when the subject is there that we have wasted it – was that one of the words? – squandered it.

You know, this is something that really, entirely bothers me. It's not the truth or the lack of truth. It's the part of the story that you tell. It's the omission. It's the same thing happening in this health debate. You can say that all we have saved is $2.1 billion in endowments and $726 million in inflation-proofing and some $6.9 billion that are in other funds if you neglect to say that you paid off a $22.7 billion debt in that time and saved about 1 and a half billion dollars in interest payments.

Now, the argument could be made that you should never have got in debt in the first place. Well, most of us know how that happened, and we're not going to go back and rehash the disastrous national energy program that was put in that really brought this province to its heels. You don't have to do that. History is well documented in that area. It was a bad thing to do. It's over, done with, behind us, and we can't revisit that every time, but you do have to recognize that it did cause some very, very serious difficulties in this province.

So the surpluses that have been gained over the years have been well spent, I think. I think that most people would agree that saving 1 and a half billion dollars in interest payments that are now available for good programs in education and health and services to seniors is a good thing.

It's interesting. I talk to the very same people, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and I talk to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, believe me, quite often. What they really tell me is to cut taxes. Cut taxes, cut taxes, cut taxes, cut taxes. They've got a whole bunch of documents that give you every which way to do it, and I don't disagree with them one bit. I believe that one of the best ways to improve your economy, to make it work is to keep a competitive tax regime. People should have the money in their pockets. They will put it into the economy and make it work. You know, I can say another time that we have a plan – it's a concrete plan; it's spend smart; it's savings; it's give back – but it's better for many purposes to say that we don't have a plan. But you know what? Most people aren't buying that.

I was interested in something that I read in a Sun poll, and it surprised me a little bit, frankly. You know, polls are polls, and readership is readership. You don't know who responds, but we all tend to read these things and take some information from them. The highest percentage of what to do with surpluses was rebate cheques. That surprised me a lot because at the outset of this it didn't seem that that was the most popular thing. The second was cut taxes, the third was savings, and the fourth was spend more on programs. But the interesting thing is how big those first two were: like, 38 per cent and 32 per cent. That's the majority, and that quite surprised me.

My colleague's motion was referred to. I look forward to that debate. It's actually a Treasurer's dream. It really is. We would have no further first-quarter, second-quarter, third-quarter reporting other than a revenue report. The only spending would be one time, in budget, so no matter how badly a school was needed or a hospital was needed or something came up in year, you wouldn't be able to do it because legislatively you would be prohibited from it because it clearly says that it would have to be at one point. So, like I say, it's a Treasurer's dream. I'm going to have to listen to the debate very carefully, and I'm going to probably have to try hard not to stand up and support it, even though I know that no government in Canada does this, because it simply doesn't work in its purest form. There may be ways you can do it.

But that's why we're here today. We're here to approve or not putting this billion dollars into the heritage fund. To say that it doesn't come to the Legislature, that the Legislature doesn't have a voice in it is wrong. We're here today. If this Legislature doesn't support putting a billion dollars in the heritage fund – you know what? – it's not going there. It will not be disbursed. So every dollar that has been allocated, recommended that's in this book has to be approved by this Legislature before it is disbursed. I want everyone to get that back in their minds, and please don't tell people that the Legislature doesn't have a voice in this. You do yourself a disservice because I just simply have to go and say, "Whoever said that doesn't know what they're talking about because the Legislature has the last word on this," and they will have it today.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I listened with interest to the explanation about the billion in and the billion out, and I accept what the minister is saying. But I want to go back in terms of history and put it in perspective and then talk about the way we budget and the way we budget in the future.

It is interesting to me – I'm sure it was just a coincidence – that these articles came out from former Premier Lougheed and I think the Canada West Foundation. I've seen their study. I'm sure it's just a coincidence, now, that that billion went in after the publicity.

Mrs. McClellan: I can assure you that this was done long before Premier Lougheed.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Right.

Anyhow, the point that the minister was making – and I understand what you're saying, that it's part of the legislation as the legislation now stands that you have to take so much out of the trust fund and put it into general revenues. That's probably true in terms of what we do right here. But remember that at one time – I think it was up to 1987; if I'm wrong, the minister will correct me – we did have to take part of it and put it in. Circumstances change, and I think that was the minister's point, that circumstances can change and she doesn't want to be sort of shackled in terms of what we can do if the circumstances change and we don't have as much money flowing into the treasury as we do now.

The point I would make is that we change the legislation before we could do it again. I think the point that people are making – with the amount of money that we do have coming through right now, perhaps for the time being we should rather than just the one time, again come back and change the legislation. We have time to do this and change the legislation. I don't know if it's 30 per cent – I think that's what it was before – or something.

The point about that is that if we do that, then we build up the trust fund for the rainy day down the way if we run into the problems that the minister is talking about. In fact, that's what Premier Lougheed's point of view was, that we would save it. As I understand it, back in those days the whole purpose of the heritage trust fund was to save it for a rainy day, the types of things that the minister is talking about. Just as the legislation was changed in '87, if something happened – and we don't see that in the foreseeable future.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that we can't always predict something that might happen, but surely we could change that legislation, just as we did before, and in the meantime build up that trust fund towards the sort of situation that the minister is talking about. I think that in terms of budgeting that would make a lot more sense, and I would hope that the minister would come back and take a look at changing the legislation so that we can do that in the future. I expect that it's probably not possible this session unless it's already on the books, but I think that should be a high priority fairly quickly, especially as the money is running in.

I just want to, Mr. Chairman, talk about how we are budgeting. It's not that we're not spending a lot of money. They may be one-time expenses and all the rest of it, but things have changed since I was first here. We have the supplementary estimates that we're dealing with here for a reason, and the minister alluded to it. There could be an emergency, you know, a huge forest fire or whatever. So there's always the potential to have that money there for those sorts of emergencies. It was never meant to be dealing with billions and billions of dollars, as we did just in November, and now we're back here. I don't know how much it'll be to now, but I would say with all due respect to the minister that we're defeating the purpose of supplementary estimates. Nobody is saying that the government shouldn't have the ability to move fairly quickly when there's an emergency, but our provincial budget right now is becoming sort of: what does it mean? We'll come here and have a budget, and it won't mean much because we'll spend $7 billion or $8 billion more if we give another prosperity bonus or whatever.

So our budgeting has become, I think, out of control, ad hocery, Mr. Chairman, and I think that's a problem that we're facing. The budget should mean something in the spring. Yes, there's a place, as I say, for supplemental estimates but not for the billions of dollars that we're doing now after the fact. The minister says: well, it's coming to the Legislature because the Legislature turns it down. Well, we all know the numbers there. Nobody on the opposite side is going to vote against it, and I'm certainly going to support, you know, the billion dollars going now into the estimates, but I think we really have to get a handle on how we're handling the budget. I think that over the years the budgeting process here is lacking much more than it was, as I said, 15 or 20 years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to take a lot of time, so I'll conclude by saying that I think we should look at, as the minister says, changing the legislation to make it possible to put money away on a year-by-year basis to build up the trust fund, to follow Premier Lougheed's original idea about it. That would be there for the rainy day fund that she's talking about if circumstances warrant it. I really think we're abusing supplementary estimates now with the amount of money coming through. It was never meant to be that. The minister goes back some ways. It was never meant to be passing billions and billions of dollars, as we are, and I would take that not as criticism, but we've got to tighten this up, I believe, because I think we're losing credibility on it here in the Legislature and elsewhere.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll be very brief. I appreciate your comments. Yes, we could change the legislation. I think we should have a lot of discussion on how. Thirty per cent of overall oil and gas revenues are nonrenewable resource revenues. Actually, that's what it was then. Should it still be that? Can we do our programming? Maybe it's a different percentage today with the demands. I think the health budget at that time was well under $3 billion. Today it's $9 billion and growing in a huge way. I think our education budget is probably more like double what it was.

We have to look at this, but for this purpose today I appreciate your support for the savings and the understanding that for the third quarter, for in year, this is the only way we could do it, in a supplementary estimate. Then when you look at the rest of them, I was expecting some recognition that this was considerably lower. The supplementary estimates in the third quarter, if you take the billion dollars that's going to the heritage fund out, are $354 million, which is considerably lower than what we have seen. I know that on Seniors and Community Supports – I mean, what I heard is that this isn't enough. What a strange statement to make when you've got one month of the year left.

All I ask is that people think it through. Think it through. Don't make it sound like this is what we're doing for the next year. Most people out there understand that there's a budget coming soon and that this is in year, the last month of the year, and it's a way to get this thing going. I don't expect to hear from hon. members that any of these expenditures are bad. What I have heard over and over again in all my experience, not just as Finance minister: it's the process that we debate.

I thank you for your comments. I think they were positive and meant to improve the system.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity. I'm not going to repeat some of the arguments that were made before. I, too, think that had the province inflation-proofed the heritage fund in '86 or '87, we would have a fund that's almost twice as much now, but in real dollars it did really shrink.

However, I have two simple questions. Notwithstanding the ups and downs in economic circumstance from year to year, yesterday when some of us were delivering the responses to the Speech from the Throne, I made the argument about one's investment into his or her own RRSP account. Like my banker tells me and my financial advisers tell me, making an RRSP payment into your account every year, however small, with the compound interest is beneficial to you rather than waiting five or six years and making one and then waiting five or six and then making another and so on.

The way I understand it, this is the first payment into the heritage fund in 20 years, since 1986, and this is 2006. One billion over 20 years doesn't look like a lot. Anyway, I need an assurance that there is going to be a provision or a plan that we are going to commit annually, every fiscal year, some allocation of surplus money into the heritage fund. I am hoping for an assurance from the hon. minister that this is going to occur annually from now on.

The second question – and I appreciate her explanation that only the investment income is drawn out from the heritage fund to be deposited into the general revenue – will we ever have an assurance or a guarantee from her ministry that the principal of the fund is not going to be raided for whatever reason? It could be pet projects. It could be what's deemed to be an emergency or so on without coming back to the Legislature and debating it. I'm not sure if this mechanism is in place already or if it needs to be put in place. I urge the hon. minister to consider it. What I'm talking about is the principal, not the investment income.

I spent some time reading a report that was produced by a government commission back in 2002, and it's called the Financial Management Commission. It had a whole bunch of MLAs and members on it. The report was called Moving from Good to Great: Enhancing Alberta's Fiscal Framework. The committee actually did some useful and very respectable work. They consulted with Albertans, and they received submissions. They asked questions and then made recommendations to the government at the end.

One of the recommendations was basically that the heritage fund should not be looked at as a static savings account and that it should be not only retained but strengthened and allowed to grow, so this is back to my point that the heritage fund did not really grow since 1986.

They also made note of the volatility of revenues because this government seems to be happy with or dependent on the nonrenewable resources that come, and we all know how volatile that market is. They instead urged the government to look at stable and predictable funding. They also urged the government to have a conservative plan to basically take out from the heritage fund. What these guys recommended is basically to take all the surplus money every year, even the general revenue that the government accrues or collects, put it into the heritage fund, then draw out from the fund based on a very conservative estimate. They said that this should in itself allow the fund to grow.

Now, whether we all agree that maybe every penny that comes in has to go into the fund first before it's drawn out, that's a different argument for a different day. But of the submissions that these guys received – and they received actually quite a few – most of the submissions as I'm reading here say: "a consistent call for some form of stabilization fund, better long term planning, and a more open budgeting process." They go on to say: "Views were mixed on the Heritage Fund. Of those who commented, most said the Heritage Fund should be kept for the longer term, inflation proofed and allowed to grow."

We did inflation-proof it, I understand, last year, in 2005, which is tremendous. It's a little late but good that we did this. Now we should really allow it to grow annually by contributing to it. Will we receive an assurance from the minister that this is a plan that she's willing to adopt from now on?

Also, the minister indicated that the survey on the Edmonton Sun website, I believe, indicated that most people wanted rebate cheques. I heard that same argument. The minister indicated that it's not how you tell the story or what's in the story; it's how you deliver it. I think we can interpret from this that people are not happy about certain things. For example, we received a $400 rebate cheque, but we pay more than $550 in health care premiums. We pay it every year. So, you know, maybe we should ask for a rebate cheque every year.

Another calculation that I did on my computer – you know, you can download all these financial tools from the Internet, and one of them is actually a calculator that gives you amortization and gives you mortgage simulations and so on. I ran a simple simulation, $12.7 billion, what we started with in 1986, and I used a very conservative interest rate. I put 2 and a half or 3 per cent, and I said: what happens if every Albertan since 1986 was given a dividend from the heritage fund while allowing it to grow?

We received $400, which was amazing – thank you very much – but with that simulation that I ran, we could have paid every Albertan a hundred dollars year in and year out from 1986 till today. A hundred dollars in 1986 was a lot more than a hundred dollars in 2006 if you're talking the strength of the dollar and the buying power. Nevertheless, at 20 years times a hundred dollars each, every Albertan would have made $2,000, and the heritage trust fund would not have shrunk. It would have actually maintained its value, and this is without infusing any money into it.

Interpreting that poll, you know, people wanted tax cuts, or they wanted rebate cheques. It's basically telling us as legislators that people think that they're paying too much, and maybe we should look at ways to reflect fairness in the taxation regime. Health care premiums are a tax because they're not used for disease prevention or health promotion. They're just put into general revenue. So that's another thing.

The Fraser Institute in February, I believe, of 2005 indicated that government spending in Alberta has deteriorated on something called the government spending subindex. They rank all the different provinces on an index based on sustainable spending. I argued yesterday in my response to the Speech from the Throne that this government spends more money in a fiscal year than it makes from non energy-based income. Energy is volatile. We should look at the other forms of income, like taxation, like forestry, like agriculture, all that stuff, not only resource based.

Nevertheless, the Fraser Institute indicated that Alberta dropped from second place to eighth place. I am quoting from their report. They say that spending increases in Alberta are cause for concern and could potentially jeopardize the fiscal advantage the province currently enjoys. So, yes, we have paid down the debt. It was a paper debt that the Conservative government incurred and then paid off, and we know whom to thank for this. We thank heavens or we thank the God in heaven because it's something that just came out of the ground.

Mr. R. Miller: They didn't put the oil in the ground.

Mr. Elsalhy: No. It was given to us by a higher power.

They paid off the debt on paper, but now we have an infrastructure deficit that is downloaded onto the municipalities most of the time. We have nonfunded liabilities for the teachers. We have shortages in the workforce. We have many things that could have been averted if there was a plan from the beginning.

To make my argument short, I am not really against the $1 billion going in. I actually applaud that decision. I think it's late, but we take it the way it comes. What I need to know from the minister is that they will not raid the principal and that whatever the reason is, they have to come back to the Legislature to approve it, and second, that there is a commitment from the government to actually put money into the heritage fund annually from now on.

I thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak very briefly on this particular issue. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund is something, I suppose, that grew up with me in many ways, being a lifetime Albertan myself pretty much. You know, the sentiments that created the Alberta trust fund in the first place I think were very highly regarded by most Albertans. Indeed, when I am speaking to my constituents in Edmonton-Calder, they still have a very high regard for it. Older people especially will ask me, "Well, what happened to the Alberta heritage trust fund?" Perhaps as much as anything we need to raise the profile of this particular fund and to in fact demonstrate to the citizens of Alberta, who otherwise are the owners of this fund, just what the long-term plan for it is.

Again, people who were around and cognizant of the intention of the Alberta savings trust fund from the beginning are pretty much stuck on the original intention of the heritage trust fund for saving for the future, diversifying the economy, improving the quality of life for Albertans. You know, it's great to see that perhaps we're casting a more specific and critical eye on this now again in 2006 from the inception of this fund in 1976. In fact, to see this billion dollars being placed in there I think means a lot to Albertans, so I would like to compliment the government on choosing to do so at this juncture. It's certainly something where I can say to my constituents that it's a positive development in terms of putting money into the heritage trust fund.

However, I would like to see perhaps some focused legislation to determine how – I know that by law some money must come out as well. This is perhaps the nub of the confusion in these last couple of days. My suggestion and the suggestion of our caucus, then, is to perhaps change that legislation so that, you know, we are realizing a net increase in the principal of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund while we are enjoying these budget surpluses as we have been in these past few years.

This whole issue of saving for a rainy day and investing in diversification is perhaps a subject of a much larger debate that we desperately require here in this province. The funds that are constituting our surplus that we see today are finite, and the nonrenewable resources that are generating these surpluses will not be around in the infinite future. The urgency of making investments today, especially in regard to diversification, is perhaps the most wise financial choice that we can possibly make.

Banking money and investing in the market is one thing, but actually building tangible means by which we can diversify will realize this fund much larger returns than we could ever see from most financial markets. For example, the diversification of our industrial base into alternative energy would not only give us, in fact, less of a reliance on hydrocarbons and nonrenewable energy but, in fact, give us an industry and a technology to sell and to export to other parts of our country and other parts of North America and such. I believe that we deserve to focus on the heritage trust fund not just now with this one-term, $1 billion investment but to integrate it into some much larger and more comprehensive legislation in the future.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would just like to speak briefly to this. On behalf of the Albertans that I've spoken to, they're grateful that we're now going to put some money into the heritage trust fund.

The thing that most people have pointed out to me is that we all need to have a savings plan. We all need to have a budget. If we don't have one, it's much like the cartoon that we saw in the paper yesterday. As we're on our way to the bank to deposit that, we're busy reading all of the sales that are coming up and whatever, maybe holidays that we can take. It seems like the mode that we've been in is where can we spend it before we get it to the bank.

Albertans very much would like to see a plan where we're going to have a percentage go in, especially when we have the windfalls that we've taken in recently. Wise financial planners tell people who have won the lottery to put it in the bank and to think about it and come up with a plan on what they're going to do. I'd urge this government to continue putting the surplus into the bank and to have its goals being guided by Albertans.

Albertans are speaking very much that. Yes, we have low taxes here compared to other jurisdictions, but compared to the world they want lower taxes. We can and are able to do this. Albertans are wanting the three levels of government to work together to become more efficient in providing the services of our area and by doing that again being able to lower taxes.

Another interesting point that was brought up to a group that I met with the other evening is that they would very much like to see the heritage trust fund being directed more to help Albertans. Then one asked the question: well, how can the heritage trust fund help Albertans in a more meaningful way? The idea that was being talked about that evening in one of my constituents' home is that first we could put it into the Alberta Treasury Branches or credit unions that are actually based here in the province. These facilities loan money out to Albertans, and it's a benefit to Albertans to have that there and low interest rates. We've seen the boom that these low interest rates have caused. If, in fact, the money was here in Alberta being deposited in the Alberta Treasury Branches, it would give great access to funding. The bank and the credit union, though, would be very much protecting that money and loaning it out on the same basis they do any money. So I'd urge the government to consider thinking about that.

The other idea that people were talking about is that perhaps the government should follow what China and India and some of these other European governments are doing and actually buying hard assets and keeping such things as gold and silver.

But in general what Albertans are asking is that when we have this surplus, please continue putting it in the bank. Don't just go on a spending spree. Have disciplined plans and a budget that's going to benefit Albertans in the long term. Albertans are asking for that. We would urge the government to continue putting as much into the heritage trust fund and using that trust fund for Albertans at the most appropriate time and places and not continuing to charge the economy right now with this enormous amount of money that's come in.

In my jurisdiction, the area there, they're saying that things are up 30 to 50 per cent. They can't even get bids. They need to put the money in the bank and wait two or three years, possibly, for some of this infrastructure when there's more equipment and firms are willing to bid again at a more competitive price.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question after considering the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$1,000,000,000
---	-----------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Seniors and Community Supports

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the third-quarter supplementary estimates for Alberta Seniors and Community Supports for the 2005-06 fiscal year. I believe that these supplementary estimates are important because this funding will provide housing services and will assist our seniors and our persons with disabilities. As you can see in the section beginning on page 45, the third-quarter supplementary estimates for Alberta Seniors and Community Supports total $31,850,000. My ministry requests funding for three areas.

Mr. Chairman, the first estimate refers to an additional $11.85 million required for the settlement of a class action lawsuit involving assured income for the severely handicapped, known as the AISH program. Our government decided that the best course of action was to settle the lawsuit and to simplify the process for people to be compensated. Specifically, this funding will be used to compensate those AISH clients who were overpaid or underpaid and are eligible for a payment now. These funds are based on a court-approved settlement which is fair and reasonable for claimants and for the government.

My second supplementary funding request has been identified to increase salaries paid to community-based staff contracted with the persons with developmental disabilities, or the PDD program. It is important to ensure that those with developmental disabilities are supported by a stable and well-trained workforce. Traditionally, agencies offering support to people with developmental disabilities have had difficulty recruiting and retaining employees because they cannot offer a competitive salary. With your approval an additional $10 million will provide an increase to the salaries of up to 12,000 PDD contracted staff members through agencies retroactive to April 1, 2005. I have targeted this funding to ensure that it gets to those front-line workers. This will assist with creating fair and equitable wages for all staff providing important support services to Albertans with developmental disabilities throughout the province.

Mr. Chairman, the final estimate that I'd like to address today is regarding continuing care. An additional $10 million is required in order to continue to provide the meaningful improvements that Albertans are expecting and to respond to the recommendations of the MLA task force on continuing care. Approximately $5.3 million of this funding will bridge the current gaps in the benefits that we provide to our seniors and those with disabilities who require continuing care services. The changes to the Alberta seniors' benefit and the AISH program will allow us to better support low-income Albertans who cannot afford the full costs of accommodation. It will also ensure that those individuals have access to benefits that assist them with the cost of living in a facility that best meets their needs. Albertans moving into our seniors' lodges are older and more frail than they were in the past, and with $4.7 million in additional funding we will address the increased demand for quality services in our seniors' lodges and ensure that the additional costs are not passed on to low- to moderate-income seniors.

In closing, I'd like to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and would be pleased to answer any questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In reply to the hon. Minister of Finance, not for a second am I not grateful for this little bit of money that is coming to us, and I do realize that it is for the last quarter. I am looking forward to the budget discussion when I'm trusting that Treasury will look fondly and fairly on the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and get us the money that we really need.

I just have a couple of questions if I might. It overlaps a different department, but perhaps you can help me with it. On page 46, the $11,850,000 that is to be paid out for the settlement of the income supports. If I look on page 26, it looks like part of that money is coming from Human Resources and Employment based on lapses in the skills investment program, which is a totally different discussion. So is that part of these dollars? I'm not sure. Could I get a clarification on that?

Have any of these lawsuit dollars been paid out yet? Sorry. I'm assuming that answer isn't coming right now, which is fine.

My other question would be again back to page 46 in the Seniors and Community Supports section. What exactly are service needs? On the very first line, "$4,700,000 . . . to cover residents' increased service needs." Would that be considered staffing, or is that considered housing? Is that care staffing or, you know, to top-up for housing?

I'm just going to make this comment because really I believe that this is for the further budget discussion, but there is a deficit in the south region for PDD of 8 per cent and in Edmonton of 3 per cent. Some of the money is going forward for staffing, which I'm sure is much appreciated, and is going, I'm hoping, to front-line staff. My questions are: how can we be sure that it really is going to front-line staff, and is that only for contracted staff, or is that actually for unionized staff as well?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to answer those questions. The answer to your first question, hon. member, is yes. That funding that you identified, that's on page 26 under Human Resources and Employment under the supplementary estimates that will be coming forward later, is the $6.1 million toward the estimated $11.85 million, and the $5.750 million that you identified is a part of that for the class action lawsuit. It is shared between the ministries in that way.

Ms Pastoor: It is shared?

Mrs. Fritz: Yes.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

Mrs. Fritz: Then the next question that you had regarding services. The $4.7 million is to increase grants for not all seniors' lodges but for the lodges that provide a higher level of support for our residents. As I said in my opening remarks, because residents are older and frailer in our lodges, many require additional support services such as a special diet or more than weekly housekeeping services and other personal kinds of assistance. The grant funding will rise from $7.50 to $9 per lodge resident per day for those lodges providing that additional service. It's not for the care; it's for the service provided through this ministry related to accommodation. So that's the answer to that.

Then the funding for ensuring that the funding that's here in the third quarter for wages for PDD staff gets to the front-line workers. I can see why you are asking that question because we do have government employees as well that work in the area of PDD. This funding is for the 12,000 workers that are employed through the contract agencies, and I've written to and mandated the provincial board to ensure that this money goes to the front-line workers and not into administration only. So I hope that helps.

Ms Pastoor: If I just might perhaps make a bit of a point. When you were explaining the housing portion of it and the extras, perhaps the special diets, et cetera, I think that again it brings out one of the recommendations from the MLA task force. I think you were talking about enhanced lodge beds, and I'd like to just point out the absolute necessity that we have provincial definitions for what we're all talking about.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks again also to the hon. minister for bringing forward these supplementary estimates. I find that it's reasonably within order. Considering the overall size of this budget, these supplementary additions are not inordinate. However, I do have a couple of questions, perhaps, or clarifications that you can help me with, and I think that the members of the public are interested in these things too.

I have quite a number of continuing care facilities in Edmonton-Calder. One of the ongoing concerns that the administration and the families and the residents themselves, if they can express it properly, are continually telling me about is that there is a shortage of qualified staff to operate the continuing care facilities, especially for the residents who require intensive assistance. So for this $10 million to be earmarked to increase the salaries of what I believe you said were 12,000 contract front-line workers, if you know – or perhaps you can forward the information to me later. First of all, what percentage increase in their salary are you expecting to be directed to each of the front-line workers? Second of all, what percentage of that total funding is obliged to go directly to those people?

One of the problems that I have is that there is an unevenness between different facilities in how they manage their funds. So I might expect that I would see some of these funds being spent in different ways at different continuing care facilities in my constituency. I know that there is some problem associated with that, the administration perhaps taking an inordinate amount of the funding in any given situation. So that's one concern that I do have, and if you could answer those questions for me, I would be most appreciative.

Second of all, in regard to the underpaid claimants' case by AISH workers – and I guess I could just look at this myself – I'm curious to know which ministries are in fact sharing this cost estimate together. I'm wondering as well, perhaps more importantly, if there has been any projection as to how much more this lawsuit is going to cost the Alberta government in view of how long it took to actually come to a settlement. It's my understanding that if we had dealt with this problem before, not only would the people who most need funds to survive in our society – that is, the people on assured disability – have received this money. In fact, I'm sure that many of the people who were underfunded don't exist anymore. The mortality rate for people that are living in such poor circumstances is very high, so not giving the money to those people in a timely manner I find to be morally reprehensible. Also, I find that there has to be a dollar figure on how much more we have to pay because of the truancy of the government in actually settling this issue.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just refer to the first question. I think, hon. member, that we discuss continuing care in a different way. When I review the continuing care system, I refer to people that are in lodges or in self-contained apartments and on through the system. You were inquiring about the qualified staff being paid through the funding that I've requested, but that's for the staff for PDD, and it's actually completely different. So I'll answer the second part of the question and just refer to the $10 million for the staff for PDD.

That staff is the 12,000 people that are contracted through the agencies, and it will be dedicated funding. We are hoping that for most agency staff it will provide funding at about a 3 per cent increase. I hope that helps as well. It isn't continuing care; it's PDD.

The area that you addressed on the class action lawsuit, as the Member for Lethbridge-East referred to, that is on page 26. It is being cost-shared with the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment. That explains that too.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for this opportunity to discuss the supplemental request. I, too, just want to go a little bit further, and I've spoken with the minister in private on these issues. One of the questions that I have is the concern on the facilities that I've gone and visited for PDD. One of those facilities has had a shortage of workers of 800 hours in a given month, and they had to have their own staff make up that shortage. I'm wondering. This money that you say is going to increase the wages: is it possible that they're going to actually be using it to increase the number of staff as there is that shortage? I'm concerned about: are we getting the right balance and addressing that problem?

At another enhanced facility that I went and visited, they're finding that in order to present their case and get the wages that they need, they're actually making the workers document every little thing they do because the health regions are saying: well, you know, you've got the 3.1 or the 3.4 hours. But they have high-needs people in there, and because they're not recording everything they're doing for those people, they're not assessed with the proper amount of hours. Perhaps one needs five hours. It's an ongoing problem to do the assessment in these long-term care facilities and then, therefore, get the workers that are needed.

The biggest dilemma, I guess, that the facilities are facing both in seniors' care and with the people with developmental disabilities is the turnover of staff and the shortage of staff and not being able to get them in there. I definitely commend you on the $10 million to increase the wages because that's a major problem. People are drawn out and can take a much easier daytime job that isn't as labour intensive.

It also concerns me with the Michener that they've got guaranteed raises, I believe, of 3 per cent, 3 per cent, and 3.9 per cent. I think you referred to this yesterday, but I'm not clear. They know that this wage increase is going to be ongoing and that they'll be able to reach their budget. The letter that I've received from PDD south is that the facilities have shown that they need to have a reduction in their costs of $1.7 million, $3 million, and $5 million in the next three years. They're very concerned about how they're going to do that with just a 2 per cent increase. So that reduction is causing a lot of grief to those facilities. Two of them in the area have been told by PDD south that they need to reduce their expenditures by 8 per cent.

One of the problems, they're saying, for the people they're moving from child services to PDD is that there isn't funding for them to go forward. Also, is there any money to help them in assessing the individuals for their needs? We have many that are high-needs, and they don't necessarily get the funding, so therefore the workload is increased on those other individuals.

The other area that I'd like to bring up again with you is that the per capita funding formula doesn't work for southern Alberta as there is a higher percentage of people with PDD in the south than in the central and northern regions, and I don't see anything in here to reallocate that funding to help them meet their shortages.

I appreciate the efforts that are being taken and, I trust, will continue to meet the needs in these two areas, and I thank the minister for her work.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. I appreciate your comments, hon. member. We did have that discussion yesterday, and you certainly brought forward some great ideas, like you did today as well, about the funding following the client, changing the formula, and looking at low-to-moderate needs for clients with PDD.

I'd like to go back to being clear as well that this funding is not for staff in continuing care, which you mentioned earlier in your remarks. This funding is for staff that are employed through the contract agencies that look after people that are persons with developmental disabilities.

The PDD south region for 2005-06 received a budget allocation of $52.1 million, and that represents about 10 per cent of the total PDD budget. The funding for the PDD south region community board has increased 68.9 per cent since 1999. Now, PDD south has brought this issue forward to a number of MLAs. I am addressing that, and I will give you further information in that regard.

You say that there's a deficit with PDD south. Their funding has not been decreased. There will be spending reductions to the boards throughout the province that the provincial board has mandated to the boards as they allocate the funding, but there hasn't been a funding decrease overall, and there won't be one. I'll give you that information as I put it together in a comprehensive package.

Thank you.

Mr. Martin: To the minister: we understand that there has not been an overall cut. I think that in actual fact there's probably been a 2 per cent increase. But the point that the groups and PDD are making is that the reality is that with institutional inflation and inflation, it does mean a cutback in the services that they're providing. What they've been asking for is just to keep at the inflation level. As I said before in the House, yes, there has been more money put in – there are more clients – but that doesn't enable them to maintain their services right now.

The latest figures that I have from the Association for Community Living – it hasn't been announced in Edmonton, but there are regions that have already started some of the cutbacks, certainly the south and I forget which other region. They've told me that these figures are rough, but there'll probably be the equivalent of about $18 million in cuts over the whole province. I'm told that even the Edmonton region will be $4 million.

Now, it's good that the extra funding is coming, and I'm sure it'll be greatly appreciated for the people that work under very difficult circumstances there, but the reality is that when you cut across, no matter whether the minister says that there's a 2 per cent increase, out in the field some people are suffering a fair amount of stress. We're all getting the e-mails, the phone calls. That's the reality of what's happening, and that's why the very intense lobbying is going on. It doesn't necessarily matter, Mr. Chairman, who's right or wrong in this. The bottom line is that if there are the cuts that are occurring and that family is out there and it's a cut to one of their people, this is a very severe matter. They don't care who's right or wrong about inflation and all the rest of it. The bottom line is that this is occurring with people right now, and there's a great deal of concern about it.

I would just say to the minister that certainly it's appreciated. We certainly support it. I think – and she can correct me if I'm wrong – it will probably mean about a 3 per cent increase in terms of their salaries. I think that's appreciated, but there's the other part of it that's creating the concern across the province. If the association and the groups representing the people with developmental disabilities are wrong, that there aren't these cuts going on, then I think that the minister should show us that this is not the case. But it's coming from them pretty clear that – and it's just an estimate at this point – there'll be the equivalent of $18 million in cuts right across the province. That's pretty severe.

As I say, the minister is right in the sense that there's not an overall cut in terms of the amount of dollars. As we say, it's probably a 2 per cent increase. But we all know that we've looked at, through Members' Services, what it means in terms of MLAs' salaries. With inflation, the way we do it, it probably means about a 4 per cent increase just for that, for salaries here. We all know that institutional inflation runs higher. As I say, I don't think that they're asking for the sun and the moon. They're just asking to cover inflation so that they can continue doing what they were doing in the last number of years.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for those comments. I will take them under advisement, and, as I said, I will be putting together a comprehensive package to give back to you regarding PDD.

But you're right. It depends on, you know, what words people use and how they interpret the words. In this case, I'd like to just say once again, Mr. Chairman, just to have it on the record, that I really believe that the spending reductions that have been requested by the provincial board and in the allocation of the approximately $500 million budget have been interpreted as funding reductions and that what people would like to see in addition to funding that has been put in place – they're coming forward with it as being deficits. So you're right. A lot of it is in the exchange of words.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: After considering the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the Department of Seniors and Community Supports for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$31,850,000
---	--------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Innovation and Science

The Chair: The Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Introducing the topic, I just want to refer the members of the House to page 328 of the published business plan where it talks about unleashing innovation. It says:

This business plan reflects strategies to strengthen Alberta's capacity for innovation, with an emphasis on: building the capability and capacity of Alberta's research system; building excellence in three priority areas (energy, ICT and life sciences); developing, attracting and retaining highly qualified professionals; encouraging technology commercialization; and fostering the growth of knowledge-based industries.

I focus on those last two comments, because this is what this supplementary estimate actually addresses, which talk about encouraging technology commercialization and fostering the growth of knowledge-based industries.

The supplementary estimate of $30 million is requested to support the expansion of AVAC Ltd. to provide managerial and financial assistance to new businesses in information and communications technology, life sciences, and other industrial technology ventures. The goal is to increase the economic success of Alberta's high-technology industries and the rate of technology adoption within these sectors, similar to what AVAC Ltd. has accomplished within the agrivalues product sector. I would note that AVAC was established in 1997 with $35 million, and the government invested an additional $35 million in 2005. To date $31.3 million has been invested in 154 agrivalue projects and companies, and these investments I believe raised an additional $120 million from private sources.

Start-up and early-stage companies need mentoring and funding to grow and become successful. Alberta investors are very knowledgeable about energy and natural resource businesses but less familiar with high-tech operations and reluctant to invest in new and unproven science and technology ventures.

Desired outcomes of this expansion of AVAC include more successful start-up companies, more investment-ready companies that offer investors better quality deals, development and attraction of more capable technology and entrepreneurs and managers, and more sustainable growth in technology and value-added sectors. This initiative will help to provide managerial and financial assistance to new businesses in Alberta's targeted growth sectors: information and communications technologies, life sciences, and industrial technology. Support services offered will include business mentoring, financing assistance, marketing and operational guidance, professional assistance in company formation, and support for proof of concept and prototyping of new products and services.

AVAC's membership and scope will be broadened to include representation from the advanced technology sectors. An investment advisory committee will be created to address the needs of the advanced technology sectors.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would ask for the support of the House in this request for a supplementary estimate of $30 million.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We have a response from the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's good to see you in the chair. First, let me start by thanking the hon. minister for having agreed to meet with me yesterday, briefly, after responses to the Speech from the Throne. It offered us an opportunity to actually go over this supplementary supply, what it really means and why it was necessary.

Notwithstanding the discussion that we had yesterday, I still had a few points that I wanted to leave on the record. Let me start by saying that I fully support allocating money to research and development initiatives mainly for start-ups and early-stage, growing companies. I definitely want to see our economy diversified, and I hope for a day when we will see a Silicon Valley right here in Edmonton and another research cluster in Calgary and one in Red Deer and perhaps one in Lethbridge and one in any one of a number of cities throughout this great province.

Diversification, of course, and research and development will sustain us into the future, and I urge the hon. minister and his staff to really expand and focus on other things besides oil and gas – I know that they're doing this, and this is a trend that I would encourage and I hope to see expanded – things like clean energy, renewable energy, health research, IT, communications, et cetera.

Now, this is an expense of $30 million, and as it shows, technology commercialization initiatives in the budget was $3.175 million, and now we're infusing $30 million, which will raise it to $33.175 million. This is a tenfold increase, or really, if you think percentage, it's 1,044 per cent, so tenfold. My question is: why wasn't it in the regular or initial budget?

Now, I know that sometimes research or development or encouraging young start-ups, you know, people who need venture capital and so on, might not be a priority because we can make a lot more money a lot quicker from other sources. Perhaps it might be that this wasn't identified as a priority that was high enough on the priorities list for the government, so it wasn't in the initial budget.

Okay. If we accept this argument, it's not an emergency today, so why couldn't this wait till the next budget? Then perhaps the hon. minister would have made a stronger argument for his department competing with all those other departments by saying: I definitely need $33 million for R and D and commercialization initiatives because this is the way of the future. He could have pitched hard for his ministry. So it's not an emergency today, and it could have waited for two to three more months, when the new budget comes down.

Now, I'm not arguing that this is money that is not needed, but I seek assurances with regard to, one, what guarantees or accountability mechanisms are in place now or are going to be put in place to ensure that this sum of money, $30 million today, or future allocations are going to be divided and awarded appropriately to deserving, sound, and potentially successful ventures? We don't want the money to be allocated to ventures that are hopeless or are not going to succeed. So we need to have some guarantees here.

I also have some suggestions. I think that it should really go to Alberta companies first and foremost, and then maybe whatever is left should be allocated to other companies from other Canadian jurisdictions. So start with Alberta, invest it locally, and then expand if there is room for expansion.

I also think that we have to put in place some ceilings or maximums, so per recipient you're only allowed a certain amount from this pot, and if you exceed a certain amount or if you want to exceed a certain amount, there are other ways to approach the government for help.

Third, I would urge the hon. minister through IVAC or through AVAC to instruct them that there has to be maybe a small part that is treated as a grant, something that is a gift to that company to help them get off and start their journey. The rest, however, the bulk of that money, should be recoverable in some way, recoverable in the sense that maybe it could be a low-interest or no-interest loan. So you give it to them with the promise or the contractual agreement that they would give it back in a certain number of years or once their costs have been recovered.

You could do it another way by maybe sharing in the copyright or the patent once they market their product or service, some way to ensure a return on investment, as really it is taxpayers' money that we're allocating here. We're dispensing taxpayers' money, so maybe we should look at a return on investment so that it's not all a grant. Some of it, maybe a small portion, should be, but the majority of it, the bulk, would be an interest-free loan or a low-interest loan or maybe sharing in the patent and in the copyright and definitely sharing in the revenues, then, once that product or service is marketed.

I'd also like to see a list of companies or projects which were successful in securing funding under this structure but also those who applied and were turned down or rejected. It would offer us a comparison of what went through and what was allowed or accepted but also what was blocked or rejected, to study it and scrutinize and say: okay; maybe one of those was deserving, and it was not allowed in error, or maybe one of the ones that was allowed shouldn't have been.

A question would be: what systems are in place to ensure that the money is allocated fairly? We don't want it to be left to the whims or the wishes of a board or a closed circuit of a few people who make decisions and play God with which contract gets $1 million, which contract gets a hundred thousand, and which contract gets $5,000. We want to have some criteria to make sure that the money is allocated fairly and equitably.

With the reporting, what kind of reporting will be in place at the end or regularly or periodically? We would definitely like to see a report on the measurable goals, targets, deliverables, evaluation methods, periodic evaluations, peer evaluations, and so on. Hopefully, that report would be tabled with the Legislature so all of us would see it and would determine what kind of return we're getting from that IVAC initiative.

The hon. minister also mentioned something about business mentoring, which I really commend him on because this is useful. I can take it a step further and maybe advise him to start an inventory of resources. There is help from the government. There is help from nonprofit organizations, help from nongovernmental organizations, and so on. Have a database of all these available resources. Put it in a kit or a tool kit. Give it to that aspiring business or young emerging company and say: "This is what we can do for you. Here is some money to get you started, and here are the resources that you can refer to." They could be federal. They could be municipal sometimes with the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation, for example. Whatever the source is, package it together and not say, you know: "We're the province. We'll give you anything that is provincially administered. You look for the other stuff." No. Maybe we should facilitate and offer him or her a tool kit, and we'll say: "Here. These are all the means and tools that are available for you. Good luck to you, and we'll see you in a year, and we'll report on your progress."

So not a lot of concern. I support having money put into research and development. Commercialization is one thing; pure science is another, but that's an argument I'm going to make in the regular budget debate. Overall, I'm in support with some assurances. I thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Doerksen: If I could just provide a couple of brief comments in response. I would agree with the hon. member that this not an emergency, but it is an opportunity. Frankly, we had the opportunity. There were some resources available. We presented our case, and we were successful in terms of the $30 million, much the same as we were successful in getting another $100 million for the ingenuity fund. So there was an opportunity presented because of our fiscal situation, and I think that it was incumbent upon us to actually try and move this agenda forward, which we have done.

I would point out to the member, though, that by moving the funds into AVAC, it doesn't mean it all has to be spent this year. The organization there will actually take this money over a period of time, so you can't really say that it's $30 million just in this one year. It will be allocated over a period of time.

Some of your suggestions are very good suggestions. I think the intention, certainly, would be to invest in Alberta companies first. No argument from me on that one. Return on investment: the entire object of this exercise is in fact to have a return on investment. You're going to have some companies that are very successful that will provide a greater return based on, of course, how you structure the agreement and will pay back more than others who perhaps will not be so successful. In some cases I'm sure that some will in fact fail.

That leads me to your point on accountability. Here's the problem. If I as a minister keep too tight a hold and make the decisions about which companies are to get the money, then I'll be accused of picking winners and losers, and I'll be accused of supporting friends. Frankly, we have to get this money out into an arm's-length body that makes proper investment decisions and treats the money in that fashion without influence from the minister. That's a very clear reason why we put the money into AVAC.

The other reason we put the money into AVAC is that it's an established organization. I did not want to create another new organization and have to go through the whole learning situation again, so we're using the expertise that AVAC currently has because we think we can get on the ground and running a lot quicker by using that particular expertise.

As for accountability AVAC will continue to report just like they have now. You'll be able to see all of the companies that have been successful with respect to their application. I'm not convinced that we'll be able to show you the companies that are not successful. That's a different question. But certainly in terms of the companies that have received money, that is reported on an annual basis and will continue.

The rest of your comments we will review as we set up the details of how the money is allocated. So thank you for your comments.

Thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, hon. minister, for your very informative and frank replies to questions thus far. I only have a couple of specific things to ask of you in regard to this supplementary estimate request. As I often am questioning each department for which I'm responsible, I'm seeing increases being, you know, about 20 per cent more than the original budget that we agreed to last year. I appreciate your explanations to the Member for Edmonton-McClung in regard to the process and how these things come to fruition and whatnot.

But, you know, I would like to see the accelerate innovation line increased substantially from the main budget this next time around because we are in a situation where we require diversification and specific technology investment, especially in the energy resource sector in this province. I think that by us making an allocation beforehand, earlier and with some greater vigour, we would be sending a message to technology companies that we are, in fact, the place to do these things. So if we can telegraph our more firm commitment to accelerating innovation to the technology firms and to individuals who might have projects to bring forward, then I think that we would be serving our purposes much better.

My question is: are we increasing that line so substantially because of a new-found interest in that, or is it just an indication of things to come, I suppose? I would be curious for you to comment on that.

In terms of priorities for investment in science and technology I'm hoping that I could be given sort of a clearer picture in regard to the priorities that we have for science and technology investment in this province. I would like to see that as well. I think that would help me to understand the choices that are being made in regard to research investment.

I would like to know which specific projects or companies were the recipients of this rather large increase in innovation investment. You don't have to give that to me now, but if I could have that information at some point, I would be appreciating it. Why at this juncture was it so important for them to receive that money?

That's about it. I look forward to debating the budget for Innovation and Science in the upcoming session. I think that this is perhaps one of the most important places for which we will receive a dollar value for public dollars in this Legislature. I am a firm supporter of increasing your budget. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: I would have absolutely no argument with the Member for Edmonton-Calder about increasing the support for my budget, so on that line he and I are both in agreement.

So just to cover a couple of points. Is this a new-found interest? No, it's not. One of the issues that we have been dealing with over a number of years is the whole – well, there are a couple of aspects. One, of course, is access to capital for particular emerging companies or start-up companies or whatever to be able to grow their business, also mentorship or the support you need at the management level for good ideas to make it into the marketplace. This has been one tool that has been proven to be effective in the agricultural sector and one that we thought we could use in a different sector. So quite clearly it's not new-found.

We've always been looking for opportunities on how you increase investment capital. We've tried through the Banff Venture Forum to introduce companies to venture capitalists. We take them through an entrepreneurial school, if you like, to teach them how to present their business plans, how to best target investors that have money. We've been working on a number of different fronts in the whole area of commercialization. Is it perfect yet? Absolutely not. We've got a lot of work to do. I think this is a good step.

I wanted to just clarify one thing. The $30 million is not going tomorrow or the next day to specific companies. That decision is going to be made now that the money is put into AVAC, then I have to set up the process whereby companies will apply and present their business plan for that money. I actually anticipate that the investment in these companies will take place over the next one to five years. These companies will be identified over that period of time, then the money advanced. So it's not likely that the $30 million program expands every year. A lot of this is going to depend on the take-up, how good the quality deals are, or if there are any quality deals in this space. That will take time.

The companies that are successful are reported on. I'm sure that AVAC has a website. I've seen their annual report. It actually lists the companies that have been successful. That reporting will absolutely continue and should continue. It has to be transparent.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

There was one other thing I was going to tell you, and it has slipped my mind. If it comes back to me, I'll pull you aside and tell you later about it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question after considering the 2005-2006 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the Department of Innovation and Science for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006?

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$30,000,000
---	--------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Health and Wellness

The Chair: The Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The notes on Health and Wellness supplementary estimates to be voted start on page 21 and go right through to page 24. We are requesting $141.2 million in supplementary estimates for 2005-06. The majority of the money is being used for the expansion of the electronic health record.

An additional $28.1 million from higher than budgeted health care insurance premiums will be used to primarily address wait-time pressures. So that's over $28 million coming from higher than expected health care premiums from the extra influx of people. Traditionally or frequently in the past these monies have been profiled for health for additional expenditure if the need arises.

A hundred and fourteen point nine million from supplementary funding and $1.1 million from the additional health care premiums will go towards helping the regions update their point of care systems. Mr. Chairman, this includes tools to health care professionals so they can better collect and manage information at the point of care. It also in turn enables better clinical decision-making in inpatient and ambulatory care settings. For example, these systems will have decision support tools that flag potential adverse events and assist providers in tracking care needs. To date more than 17,000 health care providers are registered and users of Alberta Netcare. There are 570,000 Albertans who have health records in the system, and we're on track to achieve our goal of having a record for all Albertans by 2008.

Continuing care will receive $26.3 million from supplementary funding. The government has accepted in principle the final report of the MLA task force. The money will address the most urgent recommendations. The money will go toward a number of things: increasing the number of nursing care hours in facilities from 3.1 hours per resident to 3.4 hours. It will go to buying and installing patient lift devices in all long-term care facilities, a very important thing, Mr. Speaker, that we anticipate will help residents as well as assisting the providers of care so that residents are looked after in the proper fashion. It will go towards implementing an immediate review and upgrade of medication management practices and speeding up the implementation of residents' assessments and care planning tools.

New health and accommodation service standards will be implemented this year for all continuing care facilities and services. The standards will ensure that continuing care residents are cared for with the dignity and respect that they deserve. In 2005-06 $25 million will also have been allocated solely to increasing staffing levels and care hours in continuing care. This funding concentrates improving the hands-on care for residents, and I believe it represents a good first step.

Each recommendation of the MLA task force on continuing care will be considered in detail by this Ministry of Health and Wellness and by Seniors and Community Supports for implementation through our 2006-2009 business plans and approved annual ministry budgets. So in the next three years we will be working at implementation. Twenty-seven million dollars from health care premium revenue will be spent on innovative projects to reduce wait times; $12 million will be spent to sustain the hip and knee replacement project in three pilot regions: the Calgary, David Thompson, and Capital health regions. Pending the outcome of the final evaluation of the pilot later this spring, we expect that this project will be expanded over the next two to three years. So far it has had great success in reducing wait times. The remaining $15 million from health care will go towards the development of projects to reduce wait times for other health services such as cancer care, mental health, and cardiac care.

This investment will help Alberta meet national wait time benchmarks that were announced in December and is evidence of our strong commitment to a public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a number of questions for the minister. I understand that I may run out of time this afternoon; if so, I'll continue this evening. Maybe I'll start from the top of the reasons that the supplementary estimate has been requested.

The $15,200,000 that's increasing the number of nursing hours in long-term care facilities from 3.1 hours per resident day to 3.4 hours: this is one of these figures that keeps getting announced over and over again. Could I get the minister to please supply exactly what the increments were? When we were here in the fall, we were at 1.9 hours, I believe, and I'd like to know exactly what the increments were and when they came into effect. If we're now at the point where we're funding 3.1 hours of care per day, when did we hit that time? Are there any plans to go beyond the increment of 3.4 hours, and when do we expect to reach that? The date is what I'm looking for here.

The reasoning is that the Long Term Care Association, supported by many others, was in fact advising that the number of hours of care that were required would be 3.6 hours. I've questioned the minister in the House previously on why she chose not to go to 3.6 hours but, in fact, to stop at 3.4. So I'm wondering about that.

There is money in here to support the purchase and installation of patient lift devices. That will help, but what that actually does result in is fewer staff in long-term care facilities. Where you have patients that require a two-person lift – in other words, they're often paralyzed or immobilized, or they cannot assist themselves at all – you have what is called a two-person lift, and with these devices you can have one staff member operating the mechanism, the device, to move someone, for example, from a bed into a wheelchair, from a wheelchair back into the bed.

Interesting things start to arise from that. I've just gone through a sit clinic with someone who was really struggling, being terribly uncomfortable, in fact in pain, in their wheelchair. So with a great deal of assistance from the Glenrose and various physiotherapists, all very dedicated professionals, they worked along with this individual to fit them into a better wheelchair with more comfortable padding and more secure. But then they were saying: well, we have to make sure that when this individual is put in the wheelchair every morning, they are positioned at the back of the wheelchair. I said: "Hang on. Hang on. You're standing there with two people, one at their shoulders and one at their feet, and you're actually positioning that person in the wheelchair. Well, you don't get two people in a nursing home anymore, especially if you've now got somebody using the device." You've got one person with their finger on the button, and they're standing five feet away operating the device, which is basically like a big crane. It picks up the person, and you move it over, and then it drops them back into the chair. So there's no possible positioning in the chair at all.

I appreciate these devices, but they don't result in more actual staff on the ground. There's less staff on the ground because they now have the assistance of the device, and that's how it's allocated in these nursing homes. There is a downside to that: you've got less care, and you're also unable to work with things like positioning in wheelchairs. Seeing as most of the people we're dealing with in long-term care centres are in wheelchairs, this becomes a real consideration for people because it means that they're going to be uncomfortable and badly positioned in their wheelchair for four or five hours.

I can see that the chairman is moving to have us rise and report, and I look forward to continuing this debate this evening. Thank you.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(1), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration of estimates, I would invite the hon. Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of Finance, Seniors and Community Supports, and Innovation and Science and report progress on the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

The following resolutions relating to the 2005-06 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund have been approved.

Finance: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,000,000,000.

Seniors and Community Supports: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $31,850,000.

Innovation and Science: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $30,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply also reports progress on the Department of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a list of those resolutions voted upon by the Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Orders.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we'll return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:25 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 1, 2006 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 06/03/01
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it's 8 o'clock. We shall call the committee to order.

Before we proceed with the estimates before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of Cubs. I used to be a member of the Cubs. I was a sixer back when. This is the 160th Latter Day Saints Cub group, and with them today are Christine McCaw and Marilyn Borely. I'd just ask all the members of the Assembly to give them the usual warm welcome.

Thank you very much.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2005-06
 General Revenue Fund, No. 2

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is set between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: If I may. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would like to proceed, but if I could just give a couple of responses to the questions that were posed in the afternoon session.

First of all, the hon. member is quite right that the regulations in our standards stated 1.9 hours. However, the position of 3.1 hours came into effect in the 2004-05 year, and over the past year we have been endeavoring to reach 3.4 hours per patient on average for staffing. By August the varied authorities and varied facilities in some authorities had achieved that level. By January it is my understanding that all of the authorities reported that all of their facilities had achieved a staffing mix equivalent to 3.4 hours. However, in doing so, some reported that their targets, though they may have been met, were met with some difficulty to the overall budgets of the regional health authorities. So when this supplementary estimate provided additional dollars for the long-term care hours, it did so knowing that we were topping up what was already spent by the health authorities in transfers to the long-term care centres.

Now, why not 3.6 hours? That might well be something that comes as part of our new budget year. It is not something that is part of this. We knew that we had to be realistic in how we reported and spent money towards the end of this fiscal year, and that's why the announcements that have come out in the third quarter cover simply that.

The other point I want to make is that the intent of the lifts that have been installed was not to reduce staff but, rather, to boost staff morale because of the very grave difficulty – and I've been there and done that in long-term care facilities – where if you're one person and you're managing somebody who is not able to help themselves into a chair or into a bathtub or into a bed or in any other place, you can't manage that even with a lift as a one-person activity. We knew from what we'd heard from the staff in these facilities that the expenditure of these ceiling lifts would help us to at a minimum give them some assurance that we would make their lives easier in managing the patient, and in turn the patient would be able to relax better in a lift.

It was with no thought that they wouldn't still need the staffing complement at all. In fact, I think that that would give them some extra assurance. If it was possible for somebody who was fully lucid to manage with a staff member and one person operating the lift, presumably another staff member would still be managing other care and treatment for other patients on the ward or in the facility.

The lifts of their own accord were never installed with the thought that we were going to be reducing staff. It was strictly to make it safer for the patient and to make it a simpler procedure for people that are providing care to folks who need long-term and continuing care. Not once did anybody ever raise the point: well, then you can use fewer staff because you're having a lift. It might be a simpler situation, but for safety reasons for the largest part, if you have somebody who really needs to have a lift – and I know that in a couple of the long-term care facilities that I'm most familiar with, people are not able to be fully connected to their environment either because of their own state of dementia or because of their physical lack of well-being and so on. For many of the people it's still going to take two people even to manage that lift properly.

I don't know if there's another point I can respond to on that, but I look forward to the rest of the questions. I just thought I'd clarify what I'd heard up till now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the remarks that the minister made in response to the questions that I put on the record at the end of the afternoon session. I appreciate that the minister believes that the intent of funding the lifts was not to reduce the staff complement. I can tell you that I watch this every week, and there's one person there. There are not two people; there's one person there operating the lift. I've never seen two people there, actually, in all the time that I've been there. So that's the effect. That's the long-term outcome of what happens. If you've got just one person to operate it, that's what happens.

My illustration with the story about the woman trying to be positioned appropriately in the wheelchair: that's the result of it. When you've now got just one person operating the lift, you are unable to have a second person there that can help position the person appropriately. So you end up with someone who's not positioned properly, and they're slowly sliding down over the four or five hours that they're in the wheelchair during the morning or during the afternoon when they're back in the chair. There are outcomes as a result of choices that are made, and that's one of the places where I see it. I've already said that there are dedicated professionals there, and they're all working very hard, but that's what happens.

It was interesting to me that the physiotherapists that were working in the sit clinic were unaware that that would be the result. To give a very crude example, it's like going to the hairdresser's or barber's and getting a wonderful haircut which you are never ever able to repeat on your own. So it only happened in the sit clinic that they were able to position the person appropriately, and that's unlikely to ever happen again because they don't have two people on in the actual facility to help them get in the position they're supposed to get in. That's the outcome of some of these things, whether they're intended or not.

The $3 million to accelerate the implementation of the continuing care system, especially around availability of information used in decision-making: could we please get some details? I'm looking specifically for timelines, whether they're incremental or not. What are the points you're trying to hit with this, and what performance measurements are in place to allow you to look back on this and decide if it was in fact useful and an efficient project?

I'm looking for the same kind of information for the $600,000 to support the implementation of the new standards for medication management, and if we could also get a layperson's description of exactly what's being anticipated there. Is this around a new charting system? Is it around computerization? Is it around some kind of robotic packaging, bubble packaging of pills in single dosages for individuals? What exactly does that mean?

There's an awful lot of money in here: $114.8 million to accelerate the expansion of Alberta's electronic health records. Oh, boy. I think that we are all looking at the electronic health records with great anticipation and optimism that this will make the system better.

However, there are some huge pitfalls involved there, and the minister has been warned about these. There were several very good sessions at the minister's symposium in May 2005 in Calgary, in which they clearly said: you've got to know what you're doing here because there are a lot of examples out there of people rushing off and getting systems in place and then finding out that they don't interface well with other systems they need to interact with. Then I look in Alberta and go: "Great. We've got the Capital health authority developing one kind of electronic health record system and the Calgary health authority developing a completely different system."

Now, I've asked about this before, and I've been told: "Oh, yeah, they're going to interface well. They're going to communicate. This will be seamless. We're working on this." At that point I just have to pause and go: what were you thinking? Basically, each region could potentially develop their own electronic health records. How is that going to work, especially when we start bringing in all the other components that are involved there, the pharmacists and diagnostics and everything else? I'm noticing that more and more money is going off into this.

There were transfers of money in the third-quarter update around this. Now, this may well be the money that was in the third-quarter update, but I thought: wow, we're just pouring money into this system. Are we really watching? I'd like to know what the benchmarks are for checking that this stuff is working because we can pour literally hundreds of millions of dollars into this and end up with a system that doesn't work. We have examples elsewhere in the world of exactly that situation happening, so I'm not talking about the sky falling here. I'm talking about studies that the minister should be aware of.

I am interested in the explanation of why the regional health authorities were allowed to develop independent systems. Who is it that's supposed to knit these systems together and get them all to talk to one another electronically? I think there's a real issue there. I understand that we're in a hurry for this, but it strikes me that we were out front to begin with, and now we're behind. So what's the problem here? I'm getting reports that we're now behind on the electronic health records implementation.

The other issue around that is what we're seeing happening, and we got a little taste of it with the debacle over the privatized registries. This has been the point I've maintained all the way along. You can have lots of different levels of security in these electronic databases, but it's always going to come down to a human being deciding that they're going to do it anyway. That's where we really need to be watching the system because, obviously, if we've got certain parts of our system like the drivers' licences and vehicle registrations privatized, through private companies, and they pay their staff minimum wage or slightly better and somebody rolls in and says, "I'm going to give you $25,000," well, duh, yeah, they're going to take the bribe. No, they shouldn't, but how do we set up the system, aside from all the electronic blockers and alarm systems? There's a description of these levels of security that are in it. What systems are we looking at to deal with human nature and human behaviour? Because that is where our system is actually failing.

You know, we get the journalist shot in the parking lot in Quebec because the girlfriend of the Hells Angels biker gets his licence plate number out of the private registry there. That's exactly how they got it. They had his licence plate number. They walked around in the parking lot, found his car, waited for him. He walked out there, and bang, they shoot him. So that's where the problem is, and we don't seem to be looking for any kind of systems that are dealing with it.

When we've got electronic health records and we're shipping X-rays to India overnight and then shipping them back again and all kinds of information is being accumulated on someone, access to that information by sources that aren't supposed to get at it, frankly, I think, can have deathly consequences for people. I'm just not seeing anybody being alive to this and quick on the uptake.

Now, the minister had gone through the various transfers, how there was more revenue than expected and that that money was transferred inside the department to pay for other things. What I would like to do is get a breakdown of details – and you may wish to supplement this in written form after the fact and just send it over to me, Madam Minister – of the $27 million for the access and wait time projects. There was an additional amount of money that was transferred internally for that. These access and wait time projects: exactly how does that break down? Who's getting cheques cut to them? What's the line-by-line breakdown on how those projects actually worked? We don't get very much information from the government financially. We tend to get sort of everything rolled up into one big vote line. I'm interested in: what is the detailed breakdown on this one?

I know that my colleague from Lethbridge-East is going to talk, I'm sure, about the progress that's not being made on establishing the standards of care, so I won't spend a lot of time on that. I will note, in fact, that that Member for Lethbridge-East is bringing forward Bill 205 with some excellent recommendations on standards and monitoring and enforcement through an ombudsperson, and I hope that the minister will give that very strong consideration. I'll leave the continuing care questions to her because she has a real passion for it.

Okay. I'm going back to the medication management. I asked for the details on the implementation of the standards. Could I also get information on what the standards are, please? In addition to that, are these going to be province-wide, and will they apply in both public and private facilities? The additional breakdown to that one is: how small a facility will the standards still apply to? You know, we've got some of these day homes now where people can take people into their homes and take three or four or five or six seniors into their home, but the standards are usually not applied to them, so we're getting somewhat concerned that there's an unlevel playing field out there with security.

I'm wondering overall why this money was not in the original budget. I'm increasingly concerned about the amount of off-budget spending that this government is doing and the efficiency of this off-budget spending cycle that the government gets into. It is, in fact, inefficient. I wish we could see a budget that really was exactly what we needed to provide excellent health care to Albertans rather than this sort of A version and then the supplementary supply we get in the fall and then an additional supplementary supply that we get in the spring and, frankly, always after the fact. I'm sure this money has all been spent. It's not an efficient way to do things because people are not able to incorporate it in their planning from the beginning.

We talked about the breakdown on the electronic health records. What are the additional plans for these electronic health records? I've already noted that I'm seeing a lot of extra money being plowed in there. What are the plans going forward? Again, are there sort of incremental points, targets, or benchmarks that the ministry is trying to hit as they develop these? I know we're on an accelerated timeline. What is that timeline now, what points are they trying to hit, and how much money do they think it's going to require? I know that some of that will be in the budget, but I would like to hear what the overarching plan is here because I'm beginning to feel that it's a bit piecemeal. I would like to be reassured that there was, in fact, a through-line plan.

There's some interesting wording in here in the last bullet under the reasons the supplementary estimate is requested. This is around this additional money for "higher-than-budgeted health care insurance premium revenue on additional health services." Could I get an explanation of what the additional health services are? It's saying: "including $27,000,000 for Access and Wait Times projects." What else is included in that? The $27 million for the access and wait times projects: I don't think that's the full amount of money for that project. So when I asked for a detailed breakdown, a line-by-line breakdown of that before, I was meaning the full amount of money, including this particular injection of the $27 million. But I'm interested in what the additional health services are for that.

When will we get the final results and evaluation of the access and wait times projects? I'm also interested in when we would hear the final evaluation of – I'm not going to get the name right now – what's essentially the hip and knee project, that just announced its results, its quite spectacular results actually, about a month ago.

So those are the specific questions that I have. I look forward to hearing from the minister. I understand that some of this is quite technical, and I've asked for a line-by-line. I'm happy to receive that in writing because I don't expect the minister to particularly have that off the top of her head.

I know I've got a couple of colleagues that would also very much like to ask questions of the minister in this department. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond, or would you like to listen to the others?

Ms Evans: Well, I will give a response. I will perhaps be more cursory on the matter of some of the continuing care hours and staffing hours just to enable further questions to come later.

Let me just go back for one minute to the safe lifting practices, that have been referenced once again by the hon. member. Injuries related to lifting and moving patients account for considerable lost-time claims and costs. For example, in 2004 the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta accepted 3,493 lost-time claims from health service workers. Long-term care facilities had the highest lost-time claim rate of all the health service areas, at a cost of $2.9 million in 2004. Back, neck, and shoulder injuries, Mr. Chairman, resulting from the lifting and the lowering of patients, the holding, pushing, and pulling of patients while assisting them in their daily activities, and inappropriate patient lifting may have contributed to falls, strains, and safety issues for the residents.

Unsafe manual lifting of residents in long-term care facilities can be significantly reduced by the use of mechanical lifting devices such as the ceiling lifts. I will take under advisement the hon. member's comments that in her experience on a weekly basis there's only one person operating the lift. It has not been my experience, but under the circumstances I believe it's important for us to take a look at it. Clearly, the driver for this, in my view, was the safety of the workers as well as the patients, and I think that some of the statistics I've cited relate to that.

Now, about the continuing care system management project, I'm very pleased to report that it involved the implementation of standardized assessment and care planning tools for continuing care clients and residents. The totals include the interRAI MDS 2.0 for nursing home and auxiliary home residents, the interRAI MDS-HC for home care clients, including clients in supportive living residences, and the electronic submission of client, resident, and service information to Alberta Health and Wellness. These new tools and the data that results from the use of the tools will facilitate standardized comprehensive assessment and care planning for all residents and clients receiving continuing care services and will provide quality indicator and resource utilization information for use by health regions in the department.

Right from the time that we first heard from the Auditor General on the intake procedures and on the assessments when patients came in, I have been very concerned about that type of assessment and intake process as well as being able to have the proper tools in place for a plan that's easily understood not only by the resident and their loved ones or guardians but also by the staff that are using that plan.

Nine point five million had previously been allocated to the health regions for the project: $3.3 million to each of Calgary and Capital and $2.9 million to the nonmetro health regions. It's our belief that with the additional funds that are being provided, we will be able to complete the project and have the proper tools in place.

Now, the hon. members also asked about the plan for the $600,000 for immediate action on medication management. Naturally, we were as a government highly concerned about the Auditor General and the MLA task force reports of overuse of psychotropic drugs to restrain long-term care residents and by the general problems of managing complex medication issues, especially for seniors in care. The funding will support the work of a multidisciplinary expert review panel. This panel will have to do not only the work of assessing the complaints that have been provided but make sure that we have accountability from those who are dispensing medication so that we know, for example, they're not simply left at the bedside or that there's not overuse or overprescription of certain psychotropic drugs and so that the charting and the use of these drugs is very clear in the purpose of them and how the patient has responded to those drugs.

The panel will conduct a comprehensive review of current medication management practices in all of our long-term care facilities and assisted living spaces receiving publicly funded health services; for example, nursing homes, the auxiliary homes, designated assisted living, et cetera. It will review the current practices here in Alberta and internationally and develop a medication management practice standard for implementation in our continuing care system during this coming year of 2006-07.

I want to talk for a few moments about the Alberta Netcare project charter, and I swear that the hon. member in her speech has been collaborating with some of my colleagues who would pose some of the same questions because of the significant investment we've made both in information technology and in the electronic health record.

Let me back up to the starting point of the discussion, and that is: why is it that various regions have been enabled to develop their own processes and procedures? Well, I think, simply put, it's because they were quicker off the mark than we were. They were able to identify a need on the ground running, seeing the very disparate needs of some physicians, some who wanted to get involved and quickly embrace the notion of the physician office system management and get their own electronic health records in place plus the additional tools that were available. Some were receiving that information from various vendors who would approach them and give them that opportunity, and the health regions themselves of necessity found that in order to make proper links not only between their facilities and their providers of care but in terms of the accountability for the system, they developed systems that were put in place in a way that was generating information for those various regions.

What we are looking at now is a portal system that utilizes the advantages in these already-built systems. Some, yes, have been in place for a considerably long period of time, but I looked very carefully at what had been done, and if you eradicated everything and started fresh, we would not have been in any better position than we are today, in fact much worse. We are better now to look at the advantages of advanced technology and with the portal system build with the capacity that's already been generated and try to make those connection points.

Although it may have seemed like an impossible dream, it is advancing quite well because for the very first time the governance group of the providers – the Calgary health authority, the Capital health authority, and the rural regional health authorities – are working together with the Department of Health and Wellness in establishing protocols for how monies are spent, how initiatives are undertaken, and how we are advancing in the gathering of information and connecting with one another.

Alberta Netcare requires the ability to share information across disparate systems to achieve its objectives, and that has been accepted. It's not one system but a group of projects guided by the provincial IM/IT three-year plan, which will achieve the common goal of a provincial electronic health record.

Here I must thank my hon. colleague the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency because we have been working in close partnership with his ministry, knowing that we have the SuperNet in place in Alberta and knowing that we're trying very hard to be cost-effective in the systems that we deploy but being very conscious of other systems that are being built around us.

The major provincial projects and 2008 targets by the project charter include a P viewer, a provincial portal which will be ready for provincial rollout by May of this year and which will provide access to patient information through one common provincial tool, the PHIE, the health information exchange, which is integrator technology to connect more data sources such as the lab reports, which will be added with software selected and contracted this month, and phase 1 implementation will be ready by the fall of 2006.

The drug information or the pharmacy information network. Most drugs dispensed by retail pharmacies and by the Alberta Cancer Board can be viewed across the province, and I see that most of that is in place. By this coming year, 2006-07, 50 per cent of physicians prescribing medications online will be able to check for possible drug allergy interactions. For 2007-08 our targets are for two-thirds of physicians frequently using the electronic medical records to document care, prescribe medications, and view lifetime health records of patients. It has been amazing to me over the last several months to listen to physicians tell me: I wasn't too enthusiastic, but our Premier said that we would be there by 2008, so we know that we must be there.

The laboratory test information. Eighty-five per cent of all lab test information is available province-wide for physicians and pharmacists who have access to laboratory results, and this coming year 95 per cent of all lab test results will be available for physicians. So we're closing the loop on that one, and we expect to have a hundred per cent available by 2007-08.

Our diagnostic images and tech report information. In 2005-06 they were available from Calgary and Capital for physicians, and in 2006-07 the filmless and shared electronically from Calgary and Capital regions for X-rays and MRIs for the diagnostic image and tech reports will be available from all regions and health boards. This will be an enormous cost saving. Most diagnostic images and tech reports will be completely available by 2007-08.

I want to comment briefly about registries and security. This past year every patient accessing the health system has at a minimum a record that includes their name, address, and personal health identifier. This coming year health care providers will have a secure single sign-on access to appropriate health care based on the principle of need to know. In 2007-08 health care providers, planners, and policy-makers will be able to track health services by provider, location, and type of event. Mr. Chairman, along with our wait-list registry and the use that we've made of that so that people all over Alberta can see the wait times across Alberta, I think there are maybe subtle but certainly clear signals that we're making some advancement on the use of information technology and our Netcare project. Our project charter now has tripartite sponsorship, as I've indicated, with the CEOs being involved. RSHIP has done a remarkable job.

If I may talk about the benefits of Netcare that we see, enhanced patient safety and more effective and efficient use of our health resources. We feel that we'll be better able to facilitate team-based care. Clearly, with the primary care networks we're able to track that in a much better way for multidisciplinary providers, and we believe that we will be able to improve access. This Assembly knows that the EHR will reduce medical errors dramatically; 18,000 Albertans requiring hospitalization due to improper medication use is just one frightening statistic of circumstances where Albertans have been either unintentionally overdosed but accessed medication from more than one provider and, as a result, have taken ill. Principally, this affects seniors because of medication-related problems. It's my belief that as soon as pharmacists and physicians alike can check that electronic health record of the patient, we will be able to curtail significant amounts of those circumstances, which will not only reduce costs but increase patient safety.

We've talked about reducing the duplication of data entry and the reduction in the lab tests and the paper production and, finally, the legacy system savings which will be achieved with discontinued use of expensive-to-maintain older legacy systems with the introduction of the new systems. The 10-year cost for the acquisition of an EHR in Alberta is estimated to be $1 billion and can range from $0.8 to $1.6 billion. The 10-year cost of ownership, including both acquisition and recurring costs, for an EHR in Alberta is estimated to be $2.3 billion. The total gross savings over a 20-year period are estimated to be $8.7 billion and can range from $6.6 to $10.4 billion.

Now, these are incredibly huge numbers with a significant magnitude, but let me break it down with one of my favourite examples. There was a forensic report done in Ontario just a few short years ago where 15 per cent of the physicians' records were examined in terms of determining the accuracy of their coding and billings to government. When that was reviewed by a team of professionals, forensic accountants, they determined that of the 15 per cent sample they were looking at, there had been some $800 million worth of errors made, and that particular amount of errors were made in billings that went to the government that were billings over and above what those dollars should have been based on the procedures that were actually done to benefit the patient. It is not for me to suggest that any one of those billings was done with any malice or deliberate intent, but it shows that the lack of familiarity sometimes with the medical language, sometimes with the codings that should be used, sometimes with the business planners or practitioners that operate on behalf of physicians and manage the course of events in their office, perhaps even their reading of the procedures or the handwriting of the physician, resulted in some $800 million that was spent that didn't need to be expended.

So when I look at an electronic health record, I look at it as not only a useful tool for patient safety but as an opportunity to create a much healthier and safer environment and a much more efficient system because we will be able to track the costs that have been billed to us and we will be able to check much more easily what we have done.

If you look at Canada Health Infoway's 10-year investment strategy in the Pan-Canadian electronic health record report prepared by Booz Allen, dated March of last year, our benefits in Alberta were assumed to be proportional to Canada's total public and private health expenditures; in other words, 10.5 per cent of Canada's total health expenditures. Canada Health Infoway's 10-year investment strategy estimated Canadian gross savings over a 20-year period to be $82.4 billion; 10.5 per cent of this amount was assumed to be representing Alberta's savings. Over a 10-year period this amount is reduced by 50 per cent to $4.35 billion of which two-thirds, or $2.9 billion, is assumed to be savings realized by the public health care sector. In other words, the duplication that today clutters up our health care system is part of what we'll be able to achieve a savings in.

I can speak here of my own mother, who has had batteries of tests and never really realized the benefit of the results of those tests and who challenges me almost every week about why she has these tests when she's not feeling any better. I believe that ultimately an electronic health record and a patient care record that we would be able to access on behalf of our parents would tell us not only what the test was, what the benefit of the test should be, what the outcome should be, and what we could expect from the expenditure of those dollars, but more than that with the kind of suffering and discomfort they go through while they go back and forth to the doctor to get those tests. So, in my view, this is one of the best ways that we can make the health care system not only more accountable but more cost effective.

I think the hon. member also asked about the additional health care as written in the report where it states that "in addition to the Supplementary Estimate request, the Ministry will spend $28,117,000 of higher-than-budgeted health care insurance premium revenue on additional health services." The additional health services were services that were acquired by additional individuals who came to Alberta and purchased the health insurance plan, or bought into the health insurance plan. There are more Albertans, so we had a total of $28 million more collected in health care premiums. So that is what we're talking about.

Of that, we spent $27 million for the access and wait-times project and then put the $1.1 million into the other portion dealing with the – I believe it was the electronic health record. I'll just check back on that, and I'll have that answer prepared. But certainly the first part of it was put towards the access and wait-times project, and then the rest was moved into the amount of money that was spent on the electronic health record. That total expenditure is $116 million. [Ms Evans' speaking time expired] I've talked to the limit for now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Madam Minister.

I have the following three individuals who've indicated that they want to speak on this subject: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the supplementary estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness. I would like to start with the $26.3 million increase to long-term care, and I want to talk a little bit about some of the things that have been said in the past.

As we know, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General did a report in this area that was quite scathing about the conditions that many of our seniors lived in. The Premier at that time stood in the House and committed to implement every single recommendation that the Auditor General had made, but subsequent to that an MLA committee was created to study the thing. This was a curious development because the Auditor General had done a fairly comprehensive job in his study. So the rationale behind creating an MLA committee to further study the issue was something that was questionable in our view. Sure enough, when the MLA committee completed its report, its recommendations were considerably less rigorous than the Auditor General's report. So it raised a question about which set of recommendations the government was going to implement and whether or not it meant that if they simply implemented those recommendations of the MLA committee, they would not fully implement the Auditor General's recommendations.

Now, the government had admitted at the time that the cost for carrying out these recommendations was much higher than the amount here. These are supplementary estimates, so I'd really like to know from the minister if she intends to bring forward in the actual budget the remainder of the money that's necessary to meet this. It was admitted by the government that between $150 million and $250 million would be needed to properly implement the changes proposed by the Auditor General and committed to by the Premier on behalf of the government. So my question is whether or not this expenditure is going to be forthcoming outside the supplementary estimates in the upcoming provincial budget.

Mr. Chairman, I want to talk a little bit about some of the government's claims about costs in our health care system. It's interesting that the document that has been released, highlights from Alberta's new health policy, indicates that today one-third of Alberta's budget goes towards health care, and it goes on to say that if current spending trends continue, health care will consume Alberta's entire budget in 25 years. Now, I'd like to know what the underlying assumptions are in making that statement because it's interesting if you go back to the Mazankowski report. Back in the year 2002 he makes a similar claim. Mazankowski says in his report on page 4, "If health spending trends don't change, by 2008 we could be spending half of the province's program budget on health." This is in 2002. Clearly, that's not acceptable.

Now, there was an attempt there, in our view, to do what's being done today, and that is to create artificially a sense of crisis in the growth of spending. It's not to say that spending on health is not growing, and it's not to say that steps have to be taken to constrain cost increases in the health care system. This can be done through innovation in the public system.

It's interesting. I've got a report here, Mr. Chairman, that was prepared on behalf of the leader of the New Democrat opposition at that time, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and the report indicates that the assumptions in the Mazankowski report are incorrect. They use 1996 as the base year to begin tracking increases in health spending, and that's misleading. It conveniently overlooks that health spending was cut by over 17 per cent between '93 and '96, and some of the increases were simply making up for previous reckless cuts in health care spending. It also assumed that revenue growth would only be about 4 per cent a year. Of course, despite substantial tax cuts government revenue has increased by an average of 10 per cent annually since 1996, roughly matching increases in health spending. Vastly underestimating revenue growth as the Alberta government has done consistently might be seen as a virtue in other contexts, but it leads to erroneous conclusions in this context.

Mr. Chairman, not very much has changed in the last four years, when this response to the Mazankowski report was put forward. The government is still attempting to create a false sense of crisis about growth in health care expenditures and at the same time rejecting practical solutions that would in fact control costs within the context of a public health care system. The clearest example of that is the NDP bill that was defeated in the fall, calling for the creation of a pharmaceutical savings agency.

Now it's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that while it's true, as the Premier has said, that New Zealand is a country and that Alberta is a province, they both have the same population more or less. In New Zealand it's 3 million people not including sheep, and in Alberta it is 3 million people not including Tory backbenchers. Since 1993 New Zealand's pharmaceutical expenditures have only risen 3 per cent annually compared to the OECD average of 14 per cent and the Alberta average of 10 per cent. In fact, some observers argue that New Zealand saved $624 million on its drug subsidies in the year 2002-03 alone, and that comes from the Conference Board of Canada. Clearly, the government has turned its back on the single most effective way to control health care costs. Why have they done that? Well, in our view they've done that because it falls entirely within the public system. It takes away the growth in health expenditures and therefore takes away the sense of crisis that the government needs to engender in order to create public support, they hope, for bringing in the third-way health care proposals that they have in mind.

I said at the point when I was concluding debate on the bill, Mr. Chairman, just before it was defeated, that we had two objectives in bringing forward the bill. The first objective was to show that substantial savings can be found by innovating within the public system, and the second objective of the bill was to show that the government is not interested in doing so. I think that's exactly what happened.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to conclude by saying that the suggestions that have been made both inside the House and outside the House by the Premier and the Minister of Health that we are now entering a consultation phase on these proposals is absurd in our view. These are clearly defined objectives that the government has had for some time that they are intent on carrying through, and the so-called consultation that is taking place in our view is a sham. There is no opportunity for broad public input. There has been no public consultation since the provincial election, when the Premier promised that it would take place. All of the work has been done by the government in putting forward proposals to implement what they've long sought to do, and that is to create a second private tier of health care and to fund it through private insurance. It will allow queue-jumping, it will allow enhanced services, and it will inevitably increase waiting times, reduce the quality of care received in the public system, and according to Dr. Herb Emery, who is an economist at the University of Calgary and a senior fellow of the Fraser Institute, it will not save the government any significant amount of money and may in fact cost more.

I just want to say in conclusion that I don't believe that Albertans want to see private, two-tier health care. They have not asked for it, they have not been calling for it, nor have they been given an opportunity to provide any significant feedback to the government on this. The government does not intend over the next month to provide meaningful ways for them to do so, so I have to say that it is being driven from somewhere else than either the costs, which we've already dealt with, or public demand. It is not designed to control costs. Quite the contrary. It will increase them simply by adding additional middlemen. It is not being demanded by the people of this province.

The question then comes, Mr. Chairman: where is this idea coming from? Where is the pressure and the impetus to bring in private, two-tier health care in this province? Quite simply, it's coming from a number of corporations who provide private health care services, drug companies, and some physicians who stand to make very, very significant financial gains if the government system is put in place. That's where it's coming from.

It comes at the expense of people. As Dr. Emery has indicated in his paper, at most about 28 per cent of the people of Alberta will be able to afford the more expensive private tier. In order to get them to be willing to pay very substantial amounts of money in order to access that system, it must provide much higher levels of service than the public system, and it will inevitably result in a declining level of service in the public system and increased waiting times rather than shorter waiting times as the government has indicated.

On that note, Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to conclude my comments with respect to the Department of Health and Wellness supplementary estimates. I call upon the minister to provide clear rationale for the cost increases in the health budget that they are projecting and give us their assumptions. As one of my math teachers was fond of saying, "Show your work."

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Chairman, one of the things that all the members of this Assembly will be pleased to note is that the comments from my learned colleague across the way very eloquently addressed the view of the advancement of the health policy framework which we have just delivered. Not one cent of this supplementary estimate is carved in any way towards any part of the private care that he has so eloquently decried. He attributed motives to this government and to the corporations, I know not of whom, that have advanced the case that they may benefit from it. I've never heard this. What I've heard, in fact, is people wanting choice. What I've seen in the expenditures of the supplementary estimates is an opportunity to advance efficiencies, to improve the nursing hours in long-term care, to provide patient lifts and supports for medication and assessment tools.

Mr. Chairman, in answer to the colleague from Edmonton-Centre's previous request about where the $1.1 million extra was going to, it is in fact on point 2, as I suggested, the electronic health record, for work done on the systems management there.

I would just simply state that in due course, pending the outcomes of the consultation with Albertans, we will be providing more detailed estimates of costs. I think that we've been quite clear that on that subject, we haven't defined so much cost savings on the policy number 8 or 9, but several of the other policies, in fact, will lead to cost savings with a more efficient system.

With that, I'll conclude and wait for others to comment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the minister of health being here this evening and taking these responses. I guess there are a few things that I'll just run over quickly. First of all, the people in the long-term care facility are very grateful for the money that is being added to these different areas. One of the problems, though, with the people that I've been talking to down there is that it seems like all of a sudden we're just doing a political pressure thing here, attending to long-term care when, in fact, home care and DAL and enhanced care are facing these same shortages and problems. I wonder if the minister is aware of that and if there's something possibly coming in for those.

The extra home care really does help seniors stay in there a longer time. I've had two or three seniors that have called and talked to me about the problems of their home-care people not coming in the morning. They're sitting there saying: well, I guess I'd better get back and get into a different system and get out of my home here. I had a 90-year-old senior who fell a month ago because her home-care person didn't come in the morning. She tried to shower on her own, and then the complications went on. I'd like to bring that to the attention. I think home care has been an excellent program, and perhaps we need some additional looking in that area there.

With the $15.2 million that we're spending on increasing it from 3.1 to 3.4 hours, I'm just wondering if you could give an actual number of additional workers that we're talking about. When my constituents and people come and ask me, these numbers don't mean a lot to them. To be able to say that 5,000 more are going forward or what the numbers are would possibly be helpful.

I have some concerns with the lift devices. In the one facility that I went into, the power went down. All of these lift devices that they're putting in now are electronic. There are a few of them. If the thing burns out or something else – it seems like the old hand pumps worked. They were functional, worked well. The $7.5 million just seems like an incredible price to pay. I'm wondering how many extra lifts that is putting in or whether we're buying Cadillac lifts. I agree with all of the points that the minister put out on helping our seniors as well as the workers and not hurting them by two people struggling and pulling and trying to lift them, but I have to wonder about it.

The question that I have on that is that I'm going to go to an electronic wheelchair that I was helping a senior with that reclines so that she can rest. She's got MS, and she's stuck in this wheelchair, so in order to take the pressure off, it reclines. Anyway, it's got an electronic actuator on there – a screw jack is what it is – and it allows her to tilt her machine back, but it was not functioning well. Myself being a jack of all trades, I took it apart to look at it to fix it for her, and the cotter pin was coming out. I was able to fix it.

I went into the local farm dealer – it was a Timken activator – and I said, "Can you get me one of these?" They're the Timken dealer. They looked at it. "Oh, absolutely." I said, "Well, can you give me a rough estimate as to what this is going to cost?" He looked at it and said, "Well, it shouldn't be more than $150, but I'd say $125."

I said: "Please order me one in. This came off a wheelchair, and the senior told me it cost $1,500 to get this." Being a jack of all trades I thought, "Well, I'll get it, and I'll adapt it for this senior." Anyway, two weeks later the farm dealership calls me back and says: "I can't believe it, but we're not allowed to bring those in. It's a medical device, and therefore we can't get it." The point that I want to bring up on this, with the health records and some other areas: it seems like as soon as medical is attached to something, we take a fleecing on the price.

I had another senior whose wheelchair axle – it was a rubber-tire device with actual plastic rims instead of steel, and the plastic had broken. She took that in to get it fixed, and the facility said: "Oh, that is outdated. You can't use it anymore. You've got to get a new wheelchair. We don't have those." There was a half-inch axle bolt that went through it. They wanted her to spend $750. I told that senior: "Look, we'll find one. Those wheels have got to be around." I found her two steel axles for $50 apiece and put it on, but the facility said: "Oh, no. That's outdated, and we can't get the parts for it."

It just seems like we've got a major problem in the medical system where we take an incredible fleecing on these services because they can and will take advantage of it. I wonder if the province has done any looking at where we're getting our sources from and if we can get a more reasonable rate and change the attitude of: this is government funded, and it's okay to charge $600. So I have concerns in those areas.

When it comes to the different drugs now, I believe that we announced awhile back $10 million to cover some drugs for cancer patients. We're picking areas again. Different physicians that I've talked to say, "You know, Paul, we've got seniors, whether they've got degenerative disease or other areas, and too often we're playing politics again." We're saying, "Well, here's $10 million for these drugs." But other people, whether they've got MS, Lou Gehrig's, or something else, aren't entitled to those drugs. They're feeling that we need more global programs, that if these drugs are going to be accepted, it doesn't matter what the tragedy is or the health problems, they need those drugs. Why we would say that a cancer person needs the drug and we'll pay for it, but for someone with Lou Gehrig's we won't. It seems like we're playing politics here and going for the bigger groups, and some of those smaller groups are feeling left out and very much concerned about the decisions that are being made and how it's coming forward.

The $114 million to accelerate the expansion of the Alberta electronic health records: another area that there's some question on and whether we're getting value for our money. But the biggest question, I guess, that some people outside health care are wondering, you know, is: are these totally going just to enhance the records and to enhance our evaluation and our treatment of people, or is this going so it's transfers of costs and other analyses? How much of that money is really being targeted to help with the evaluation and client care, like you were mentioning, with allergies and those types of things that come up?

I guess the other two things that I want to talk about are our lineups and our backups that we're dealing with. Quite often it seems like the shortage that we have is beds. We're saying that we've got these doctors, and you're talking about allowing them to go into private practice because they don't have the ability to do all the surgery they want in the public system. The question has to be asked: are the beds available there, and how could they possibly be working part-time in our public system, yet somehow be able to go to the outside and work and utilize their time there when, in fact, if we had the beds available, they'd stay in our public system and continue operating and putting people through? So I have questions on that line of thinking and where we're going.

The last area I'd like to cover is actually when, you know, this whole supplementary budget said it's under expense and equipment and inventory purchases. There are many things that the different health regions want to provide. I've talked to you before about angioplasty down in the Chinook health region, the MRI equipment down there. They had to raise the money. Currently there's a doctor that is trying to come back and is interested. He does colonoscopies, but the hospital is going to have to raise $150,000 to get the equipment to allow him to come back and work here if, in fact, he gets accredited to work here in Alberta again.

It seems like if we were to put some of this enormous amount of money into some actual equipment like for colonoscopies and into an angioplasty room and some of those things – we've got an enormous amount of money, and I guess I wonder how much is actually being spent on equipment and beds so that we can actually get people through and shorten the list down and do the best we can with the dollars that we're spending.

I'll look forward to the minister's response in writing or however. Thank you very much for the time.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to say that I am quite enchanted with the hon. member's observations across the way. It occurs to me as I listen to him that I've heard some of the same remarks and frustrations from people like yourself, hon. member, and several others in this audience that would probably wonder if there are ways that we could find an orchestrated response to making sure that we get those professionals in appropriate places at appropriate times.

Maybe what we need to establish – and I'll take a very sincere look at it – is some kind of central appeal mechanism for MLAs of all sides of the House to go through and say: this is your contact person if you've got somebody you believe should be working at a greater involvement in the health care delivery system and these are the barriers. Perhaps if I kept a registry of that, I would see some clearer way of unraveling and untangling these issues with members of the public.

I want to just give an answer to your first question on the number of staff. We will provide an analysis of how many staff were added, but I want to make clear that I will define it in two ways: the number of staff that we believe were added not so much as a result of the move to 3.4 hours of care per patient but equivalents so that we're comparing apples with apples and not just looking at the numbers that have been inflated because people have moved into long-term or continuing care residence. The other part, though, I should tell you is that in some cases dollars that were provided for long-term care were provided to increase the salary levels of people who were advanced either by merit or by some other agreement with their institution, so it not only provided more dollars for increasing the number of hours of staff care on that patient ratio but increased the number of dollars that individual providers received for the work they did interfacing on the front lines.

In terms of medical devices and alternative supports I think this is one of the areas that intrigues me most, Mr. Chairman, probably because as a woman living alone, I have suffered with not knowing what prices should be for repairing the simplest of implements and finding myself quite vulnerable because of my lack of mechanical capacity to evaluate that. Your comments about whether or not some of these substitutions would be acceptable, whether we should be entitled to importing other devices, or in fact are we being exclusive because they are, quote, unquote, medical? Are we being exclusive because someone has a lock on the market? I'm not sure, but I'm going to undertake to do some analysis of that.

If we could hire handymen or get people to do some kinds of replacements or repairs to equipment rather than replacement of equipment or just completely cancelling one chair that might have some use – we ship literally hundreds of pieces of equipment that we deem unfit to use any further for our own purposes to Third World countries. Perhaps some economies could be achieved if we would undertake to do the kind of repairs you have.

Mr. Chairman, I'm delighted. I'll sit down. I find now that if I've got something that needs help, I know exactly who to call.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do realize that the time is running out and we have other departments that want to be discussed, so I'll try to be very brief. A lot of things that I'd like to say have already been said. I'm not sure that I actually need a reply from the minister. I think if you would just consider what I'm saying, it'll probably suffice for tonight.

One of the things that you mentioned – and I'm not sure if it was a misspeak or not on your part. You referred to the lifts as ceiling lifts. I'm wondering if, in fact, that was correct: they're ceiling lifts. It comes out of capital accounts. Now, ceiling lifts, in my mind, are totally useless. We need mobiles that will move around the rooms and down the halls and into other rooms, so it may just have been a misspeak.

Certainly, speaking about the injuries, in my mind it's partly because of inappropriate training, but I would venture to say that it's probably because people are working short. They can't wait for their partner to come, and they just do the job because they've got to get in and do it. I would suspect that a lot of those injuries lead toward that. Certainly these lifts will help, but I'm not going to bother going into it. I think it was pretty well described this afternoon what can happen.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner sounds exactly like the maintenance person that we had at our nursing home. We were so, so fortunate. He could feed his mother. He could do anything. He could repair them, but once we started getting into a more sophisticated way of having wheelchairs, he was told that he couldn't repair them because then the insurance companies wouldn't accept what he had done. So we often had things just sitting for no reason because of insurance. Perhaps that's something to look at.

The interRAI tool. I think that you explained it in a fairly comprehensive manner. Part of my problem with that, though – and I was given some education on the use of the interRAI when I was fortunate enough to sit on the MLA task force with my other two colleagues. It's my understanding that it's to establish a care plan, and that care plan has been made: three assessments with multidisciplinary people on that thing. The most important people that are often missing are the families, and they should be a crucial part of it, and I do know that they aren't in some areas.

The other thing is that that tool in my mind is supposed to be a care plan. It is not supposed to be used as a placement tool for where people will live. In essence what is happening is that they say: this is the care you get; therefore, this is where you're going to live. They're using it as an excuse not to put people into long-term care because they're trying to downsize long-term care. I'm really opposed to that because I have horrific stories that, of course, I'm not going to go into about people being very inappropriately placed for housing.

Another thing with the interRAI tool. It has to be used – again I'm back to my mantra of provincial standards – absolutely the same across the province. People have to understand the use of it and also the definitions. I would like to see at the bottom of that interRAI tool the care plan. The care plan, then, equals the hours required to deliver that care plan and the number of staff that would be required for it. It would average out, I'm sure, but I think it's a better way of figuring out what actual staff hours should be, based on the actual care plan that the interRAI had come up with.

The medication. There are some excellent studies, as you know, that have been done and have identified a huge problem. Part of what I see as a problem is the downgrading of our professionals. I'll go into a little nurse talk here that I'm sure both you and I will understand, and it's just a very short story. I have a file on my desk where a woman came to me and said that she had actually been paying somebody to make sure that her mother got her medication. The mother suffers from Parkinson's. She came to me and said that sometimes she comes in and the medications are on the floor because, of course, the mother is shaking. I said, "Did you check the chart?" She said yes. The chart had said: medications given. Now, had it have been a nurse, like you and I, you would have assumed, because as a nurse and as a professional it is assumed, that when you say "medications given," they're also taken. However, if you're the cleaning lady for 50 bucks a month and you say "given," what you have done is given them and left them at the bedside. That is a huge problem, in my mind.

The electronic records. My fear for that is that I think that I as a patient would like the choice of what goes onto that electronic record. For one thing, I fear insurance companies getting it. I honestly don't believe that anything is secure in this day and age. There are just too many clever hackers out there. My fear is that insurance companies would get it and hold it against you in terms of pre-existing conditions for jobs or whatever. As I said, I really think it's important that patients have the right to say: "No. You will not put these in the electronic records. I want that between you and I." I'm thinking perhaps of some kinds of psychiatric records that may hit that because it comes in under a medication. It's a medication that starts the record, and then the rest of it would hit it.

You also had mentioned the report that I had also heard about with these huge mistakes in terms of the codings and dollars not being spent. It went both ways; the mistakes were made on both sides. You were talking about the dollars, and I'm talking about the mistakes that can be made in terms of the privacy. In computer-speak, not that I'm computer literate, the one thing that I did learn was garbage in and garbage out. If people can make mistakes in the filing of the billing, they also can make mistakes in the filing of the privacy or in actual fact of what they're supposed to be putting in in terms of: it was the left leg and not the right leg and whatever. Those sorts of little mistakes could be made. So I question that as well.

I think that if you would just consider all that, that would be fine. I don't need a reply tonight. Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, I stand corrected on the – I've always called them ceiling lifts – safety lifting devices. I agree, and I would be very pleased to look into the kinds of things, and I'll get the Blues later to check.

I just want to make one point. I'm not sure that we can ever agree to the patient agreeing to what is placed on the electronic record for the simple fact that some patients, although I recognize that there is a risk always with information – one of our grave problems today is the management of those with psychiatric problems that choose not to take their medications, community treatment orders, et cetera. We have to have some kind of way of keeping that kind of record for the medical professionals and making sure that the patient record that they may be able to have access to isn't fettered with so many descriptors that could be in the hands of somebody else in the home, perhaps, given to the patient in a way that somewhat compromises their dignity.

I think there are a couple of things we can look at here, but I will make sure that I look at the Blues, and I'll give you a response later. I do look forward at another time to the opportunity to talk to you about the continuing care standards. I agree with you that interRAI should not be used as a placement device, but we should be careful to use it as an assessment tool. I always – always – believe that a patient should have a guardian or a family member as part of their care plan.

9:20

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. It's just really a personal comment, I guess. The fact that I recognized that you used "ceiling lifts" I think probably dates us both, so thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. One of the concerns, an ongoing concern that was brought to me over a year ago from a constituent, is gastroparesis. I talked with the hon. member very early on last year about this concern, and it has to do with information accuracy. At the very beginning the mother of the two children who were suffering from gastroparesis had had a great deal of difficulty with receiving misinformation or the province was misinformed that a device was available. It had been approved federally, and the cost was, I think, relatively small. It was the equivalent of the cost of a pacemaker, basically, under about $5,000, but the technology and the medical expertise did not exist in Alberta at that time. Hopefully, the minister can update me as to whether she's found out whether Alberta has finally recognized that the device has been approved and if there are any steps towards being able to implant that device within the province.

In this particular case, the family was forced to mortgage their home and go down to the States, where fortunately the teenage children had the devices implanted. It made a significant difference to their daily lives – they were able to return to school – but at a great cost to the family, approximately $60,000.

There are a number of patients, both older and younger, who are so debilitated by gastroparesis that they have to be fed through a tube, and the minister is very aware that one of the greatest ways to increase the cost of care is to institutionalize a person. If this person who is being fed in the Foothills hospital through a tube and requiring this kind of care had had this device implanted, based on the percentages of success there's a good chance they would have been able to return home, return to work, and contribute.

This is just an example where we need to have updated information, and we need to have the specialists on hand in Alberta. Failing that, I gather that since this family had to travel down to the States, there is the capability in Quebec at this point, and hopefully the minister will consider that the travel costs associated with going down to Quebec, until we can deal with the problem here in Alberta, would be considered covered by the department of health.

Another concern I have has to do with cancer drugs. The province refuses to recognize federally approved cancer drugs, and by this failure cancer sufferers are suffering the financial costs of drugs that in some cases, I gather, are up to $15,000 a month. With these drugs having been proved effective in arresting the development of cancer, I would like to see that money being spent right now to improve the patients' treatment because without it they're not necessarily going to be around in the future for the research to have kicked in.

A second concern I have. I met recently with directors of the Calgary health region, and I was asking about the Children's hospital, which is going to be opening later this year in the Calgary-Varsity constituency. I asked: would the hospital be fully operational? I was told: no, it wouldn't. In fact, while we're going to have state-of-the-art, wonderful operating facilities within the Children's hospital itself, they're basically going to be kept in cold storage because we don't have the individuals to perform the operations within these rooms.

When we're talking about achieving efficiencies and having to contract out operations – granted, they're hip and knee, and there are not very many children that are going to require that type of surgery early on in their lives that would be attending this hospital – it seems to me a terrible waste when we have operating facilities within our public system that are being mothballed or at least underutilized.

Likewise, in terms of achieving savings, in talking to a radiologist with the Calgary health region, the individual indicated to me that there was absolutely no need for contracting out such things as MRIs and a whole variety of ultrasounds, scans, and so on. They could be done within the public system because this is one area where we're doing well in terms of having the equipment available. But because we only have a single shift, this work gets contracted out at a much higher expense. Yes, it's paid for under the public system, but if we were performing these scans, et cetera, within our own public system, which we have the capability of – we also have the trained individuals to do the testing. This is just an example of a greater efficiency that would be considerably less costly.

Another concern I have is with regard to the security of health records. This didn't happen under the current minister's watch, but we can remember that at one point we had a population of 3.2 million, but there were 5 million health cards out there. Based on the fact that it's not nearly as secure a form of identity as the driver's licence, which the minister of government affairs pointed out, we're still talking about a piece of paper. Yet that piece of paper can be used to apply for a passport. It's got the equivalent significance of a social insurance card. If you have to show ID at a police station because you had the misfortune of getting a ticket or you're looking for a police clearance, you can use this card as a statement of your identity. I would like to think that at some point in the not distant future we would have a more secure card system and that that would be part of the entire record system.

An ongoing concern of mine that comes up on a very frequent basis at the constituency office is patients falling through the gaps, whether they're supposed to be funded by seniors' care, whether they're supposed to be funded by health care, whether it's a community living concern. It seems that no one necessarily takes the responsibility, so a question I would have for the minister is: would you like to see anything to do with health, whether it's persons with disabilities, whether it's seniors, under the health care umbrella? When I've talked to people, for example, at the Bethany care homes, they would like to see anything to do with seniors – health, recreational programs, et cetera – under Seniors because they felt that they wouldn't have to go to three ministries, necessarily, to get support. It would be one-stop shopping through seniors' care. I'm just looking for a reflection if you think this is potentially a good way to focus on seniors' care.

With regard to the lifts, I'm glad that the difficulty was cleared up as to whether they were stationary or mobile. One of my constituents had the misfortune of basically going through nine years of frustrating denial from the Workers' Compensation Board because while working, again at a Bethany care centre, the lift that she was using to take a senior out of her bed broke. So this very dedicated registered nurse intervened and, in so doing, ripped the muscles out of both her shoulders and failed to receive appropriate compensation and was put through a series of very demeaning, frustrating reviews of her circumstance. She went to see an endless stream of different doctors, who didn't seem to have records from the previous visit. So she basically was unable to work, being put through a series of "Lift this box; lift that box," which she wasn't able to do. So I'm so glad to hear from the minister that more lifts are being put in place.

I do believe, as the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner pointed out, that there are possibilities of greater efficiency within the system. Sometimes the types of devices that we're giving to patients are of such a complex, built-in computerized nature that the ability to repair them no longer exists. So while I want the best for people, maybe we have to look at what is also very practical in terms of wheelchairs and power chairs and so on.

Thank you very much.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, there have been a couple of points relative to follow-up on certain correspondence and discussion that the hon. member provided me with last year. I will have to examine the Blues and follow up on them, and that goes for some of the other points as well.

I think that overall what I hear here is genuine concern that we get it right in dealing with both the electronic health record and the hours of support for particular patients, and I appreciated his interest in some of those particular cases. I'll follow up and correspond directly, and I have my staff member Mr. DeBolt here that will make sure that we follow up on his questions.

The Deputy Chair: You're ready for the vote, I presume, after considering the 2005-2006 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases: $141,183,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Solicitor General and Public Security

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed an honour to be here this evening to discuss the supplementary estimates for the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security in the amount of $4,982,000, which is requested. The spending pressures are due primarily to policing costs and salary settlements. The three significant incidents that have resulted in spending pressures that must be addressed as part of the third-quarter update: $2.1 million for the Lakeside Packers strike in Brooks earlier this year, $2.3 million for the RCMP settlement, and $582,000 to provide policing services to the municipality of Crowsnest Pass.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to comment briefly on each of these spending pressures. With regard to the Lakeside Packers strike the cost from the strike at Brooks was $2.1 million, representing 70 per cent of our costs as part of the provincial policing service agreement. This labour dispute was unexpected, but additional manpower was required to diffuse any possible conflicts that might have occurred. In fact, there were some incidents that had the potential to escalate had it not been for the additional officers that were on scene. The strike lasted approximately three weeks and required support from the Edmonton and Calgary police services, the RCMP K Division municipal police service, the RCMP K Division provincial police service, and the RCMP F Division tactical team from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Chairman, regarding the RCMP salary settlement, funding is required to address $2.3 million in RCMP manpower costs resulting from the salary settlement impacts this fiscal year. The 2005-2006 provincial policing service agreement estimates included a salary settlement forecast of $2.1 million, which is consistent with historical increases. However, the total settlement amounted to $4.4 million, based on a federally negotiated increase for the RCMP.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Crowsnest Pass policing issue. An additional $582,000 is required to assume responsibility for policing the municipality of Crowsnest Pass. This is a result of the government's decision that the population of Crowsnest Pass be calculated as if it were five separate communities under section 604 of the Municipal Government Act.

Mr. Chairman, that's a brief look at our budget pressures and program review. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak to the supplementary estimates on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Looking at these some-millions of dollars and all of the millions of dollars that are debated here under supplementary estimates, I just have to put in the point that I think it is shocking that we spend so little time and have so little time left to deal with many, many millions of dollars for each department. There should be more time allocated to debate these matters.

Just a couple of questions on these particular matters. On the Lakeside Packers strike and the cost of RCMP for that were any of these offset costs to communities that lost police personnel for short periods of time because of that strike? Were they compensated in other ways, or were they asked to be short of police for that period? I see that you've broken it down in your comments, Mr. Minister, through the chair, but why were they lumped together in the supplementary estimates document?

A minor question. Can the minister explain what he means by the costs of the RCMP salary settlement? Are these funds going to be used to adjust the salaries of police officers in Fort McMurray? If so, are the funds provided enough to allow these RCMP stationed in Fort McMurray an adequate standard of living given the extremely high cost of housing there? You might also look at Fort McMurray. If we're looking at urgency, the need to help those communities and, indeed, those personnel in those centres is very pressing. You know, if not, why aren't more funds being diverted to assist these officers?

As to the Crowsnest Pass: is this a reverse of the position that the minister took in the spring of 2005, when he actually denied the extra funding to the municipality of Crowsnest Pass? Is he now honouring the provisions of the Crowsnest Pass regulation, which stipulates that the government provide for funding for policing based upon whatever way that delivers more money? Why is there now a reverse in that position, and are these monies going to continue?

Another matter is in terms of the RCMP salary settlement again. Are there any training costs or extra training costs involved in that or any extra monies involved in the preparation for the training facilities that will be coming up, in the police academy or whatever we want to call that facility that's coming up? Just to speak to the potential siting of Edmonton: it is again, I think, in the primary position for that because of the siting of the Edmonton maximum institution there. Of course, we've also heard that another primary site might be the city of Drumheller because of the site of the institution there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Some very interesting questions, and I'll respond to each of them as briefly as I can.

Were municipalities short of policing resources when the strike at Lakeside Packers in Brooks was taking place? What the RCMP do throughout our province: they use a concept called a post system, where the officers in a community – for example, let's use the community of Brooks. They have a number of officers that work in this municipality, in the city of Brooks, that are paid for by the municipality. The provincial government provides the RCMP officers that work in the surrounding community or in the rural communities around Brooks. In a post system officers can work, actually, in the municipality or can work in the rural area. So they can actually cover each other, and that's the "post" term that's used by the RCMP.

Because of the issue that this was 24/7 coverage for the strike, some RCMP officers had to be transferred in from various parts of the province to ensure that sufficient resources were there to ensure the safety of not only the employees of the plant but the safety of those that were on strike at the plant as well as ensuring the safety of the community of Brooks. Officers were brought in from various parts of the province to ensure that the number of resources that were required were there. That's why resources from Edmonton and Calgary police services were brought in, to ensure that, again, the right number of resources were in place, just to ensure that the police were there to provide a safe and secure environment for both those that were on strike and those that were not on strike.

In the supplementary estimates the hon. member asked a question about why both amounts were lumped together. The reason both amounts were lumped together, the $2.3 million and the $2.1 million as $4.4 million, is that they both fall in line with the provincial policing programs within the ministry. It's separated out for information purposes, but it's still in the same line item in the business plan and in our budget totalling $157 million. It's a small portion of the larger picture. It all ties in with our provincial policing service agreement that we have with the RCMP as well as some of the other smaller programs for the provincial policing programs that are provided.

The RCMP salary settlement, Mr. Chairman, is determined by the federal government. The RCMP are in a unique position where they do not have an association or a union that negotiates for them. Normally what occurs is that the finance department looks at the policing contracts throughout Canada, and it tries to keep the RCMP in line in the middle of, I believe, the top six police services throughout Canada. So they'll usually be in that number three position.

We don't have any say regarding what type of salary increase they get at all. Historically over the past number of years it's been roughly about 2.1. A 3 per cent increase would be roughly around that $2.1 million which we budgeted for. This past year they received substantially more, nearer the 5 per cent mark, and that, of course, created some issues for us, obviously, coming back to this Assembly asking for additional funding to ensure that the RCMP officers got the raise that was given to them by those in Ottawa.

The member also asked, though, regarding the issues in Fort McMurray, which is a very good question: are those funds there to assist those officers at Fort McMurray? These funds are not. These funds are strictly for the salary. He raises a very good point, a very interesting point, in fact. We've been working with Commissioner Zaccardelli in Ottawa, the commander of the RCMP. There are some real issues regarding the fact that we have recruits coming out of Regina that are going to Fort McMurray. Their starting earnings are in the $40,000 range or close to that. Obviously, the cost to live and to provide for a family in that community can be very expensive, so we are working with the RCMP to look at being able to supplement their salary for the provincial positions. I know that the city of Fort McMurray is looking at working with the RCMP from that aspect as well. We're hopefully going to come to an agreement very soon.

I met with Commissioner Zaccardelli about three weeks ago, and he reassured me that it's on the table in Ottawa and that it's moving forward. There is a real concern for us with those officers because, obviously, we want to ensure that they have a quality of life in Fort McMurray that provides them with a salary that can provide the necessities for themselves as well as for their families.

The hon. member, Mr. Chairman, as well asked regarding the Crowsnest Pass legislation. Have we changed our position regarding the Crowsnest Pass legislation under the Crowsnest Pass amendment act? No, we haven't changed that because the Crowsnest Pass amendment act wouldn't allow us to split those communities up. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and I met with the MLA from that area and discussed this at length with the mayor. It was an agreement that under section 604 of the Municipal Government Act the five separate communities in the Crowsnest Pass area could then be continued five separate, thus allowing them to be funded provincially under the provincial police service agreement, being that they were each a municipality of less than 5,000 population versus the town of Crowsnest Pass having a population of 6,700 individuals.

Training costs for Lakeside Packers, I believe, was one of the last issues the hon. member spoke of. Training costs are always an issue that we want to deal with year-round. Training costs of any type are not included in these estimates. This is strictly for salary, overtime, and the costs of the strike: food, lodging, which was done, I believe, at the armed forces to the south and west of Brooks on highway 3. Training costs, though, are provided in their normal budgets that we provide to the RCMP throughout the year in the lump-sum negotiated budget that we have with them, which is near the $135 million, $140 million a year. So training costs are included in there.

Did we learn from issues at the Lakeside Packers strike? Yes, we did. There are opportunities that we have to learn from. Obviously, one of them was very simple and very clear regarding communications at the site between the Calgary Police Service or the Edmonton Police Service and the RCMP. Our radios are not compatible. So we have to work on issues such as that as well as some of the techniques. The techniques in training for the RCMP are different than the techniques that the Edmonton Police Service and the Calgary Police Service use, for example.

There are some differences between municipal policing in this province and federal policing provided by the RCMP. Those are things that we've been reassured by the RCMP and the Alberta Chiefs of Police Association that they are going to continue working together on in the future to ensure that those training practices are going to come together. As we move towards integration in the province, as we move towards collaboration with our policing services, as we look at sharing services and sharing responsibilities, along with that will come, obviously, the training capabilities to in fact train together as one.

I'm not saying that one service has a higher standard of training than the other, but they do have different techniques, whether this service uses riot control techniques and this service on occasion uses bikes at a strike or a lockout. So there are a number of different techniques that are used. In our province we've been fortunate to have more training than other provinces. From the fact that with the WTO here about six years ago, with the G-8 here a few years ago, there were opportunities for us to work together in collaboration in a larger picture but, as well, bringing officers from throughout Alberta from all of our police services to one location and actually working together. So it's actually very interesting to watch because it is an opportunity to see a seamless police service work together with officers in different uniforms.

I think I've answered all the questions, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to address the supplementary estimates for the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security.

The large majority of the funds that are being requested were included in the Lakeside Packers dispute, which the minister has talked about. The difficulty I have with this is that I think these expenditures were unnecessary and would have been avoided if the Minister of Human Resources and Employment would have worked towards bringing the parties to a resolution prior to the strike.

I attended at the picket line on several occasions, Mr. Chairman, and I found that the police presence generally was very positive. They were even-handed, by and large, and worked I think fairly effectively to defuse tense situations that developed from time to time. So I think it was a positive use of the police in that case, but the potential for violence was clearly there. It certainly wasn't violence restricted to one side. In fact, some of the tactics used by the employer were, in my view, deplorable.

But the question is why we have to pay this. This is a great deal of public money for a policing presence that might not have been necessary. The cost to the workers, the cost to the plant, the cost to the town's local community, and the cost to our agricultural producers were tremendous as a result of this strike. I believe that that strike could have been avoided, and we needed to see more action from the Department of Human Resources and Employment. Opportunities to head off the strike, in my view, were not taken.

So I guess I'd just ask the question. Before we make a decision that might involve extra expenditures in another department, in this case the Solicitor General and Public Security, is there some consultation when another department takes certain decisions that may in fact result in a dramatic increase in costs for that department? It might be in the agricultural department, or it might be Economic Development. I don't know. Clearly, the extra costs in Solicitor General and Public Security were caused not by that department but by another department, and I'd just like to know whether or not these things are discussed or worked out in advance and whether or not the Solicitor General has an opportunity to express his view with respect to decisions of another department that might substantially affect his budget.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member makes some interesting comments, and I'll try to answer them as best I can. The police presence. I think they were very kind remarks. I think they were very professional comments made, and I know that the police service members and RCMP members that read Hansard will appreciate the comments that you made regarding their presence being positive in that community and their presence being there to diffuse serious situations. Obviously, the potential was there, and the hon. member was at the site.

The question that the member raises was: could the strike have been avoided? That's a tough question to answer. I think we in this province have had very little unrest with our labour unions and associations. The labour atmosphere and environment is very good. When this strike did take place in Brooks, it was one that was unusual in the fact that we had not seen a strike of that magnitude in a long period of time. But from a policing point of view we did have the resources that we wanted to ensure that the residents of the community of Brooks as well as those that were striking and those employees that were not striking were all protected in that community.

The hon. member also suggests that costs related to our Ministry of Solicitor General and Public Security may have increased due to the Ministry of HR and E possibly creating the problem. That's another good question. First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. member for supporting this budget request. That's what I thought he was inferring, but on the other hand it's always something that we have to deal with when we work in cross-ministry initiatives. Obviously, legislation is in place regarding strikes and lockouts. I had the fortunate ability in my previous career to be the strike lockout co-ordinator for the Calgary Police Service, and I know that going to the front line on a daily basis at various strikes in our industrial areas was very tense, but it was very interesting to talk to both sides because both came from different points of view. It was a matter of getting down to the table and being able to negotiate a contract fairly and in a reasonable frame of mind.

The last question: did the Ministry of HR and E create an increase for my ministry? No, I can't say that it did. The Ministry of HR and E is there to assist with employment standards throughout the province, to ensure that unions have rights out in the workforce but as well to ensure that management has the right to manage. Therefore, the strike itself was something that we have to live with and did, and I'm just thankful that no incidents of major occurrence occurred other than one incident where an assault took place, but nothing of a more serious nature occurred.

So thank you for those questions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have two minutes left.

Mr. Hinman: Wow. That's a good time constraint. Well, I guess I'll have to be really brief and efficient. For the strike: $2.1 million. I guess I'd be interested in the breakdown on that on whether that was for the number of officers, the salary, or the resources that you had to bring in for that.

I wish that this supplement would have had recognition of the inequity for small towns throughout the province that have over 5,000 and are not receiving any funding as causing a major strain on those mid-size communities. Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that that would have come in there. On behalf of Mayor Irwin from Crowsnest Pass, he's grateful for the money that's come in for the policing there. But, as I say, the province really needs to take a look and realize that those small towns over 5,000 need a stepped approach where they're funded. It puts a tremendous strain on those small communities.

The other quick thing to mention is the training costs. These small towns that have had their officers come in, they often lose them to larger towns because of the salary inequities that they can't pay. Perhaps we should be looking at some sort of compensation when a small town loses a trained officer.

I also want to talk briefly about the police training facilities and to remind the Solicitor General again about LCC in the south and the facility that they have there and that we don't need to be necessarily looking at a whole new facility in the province but perhaps funding those that we already have and getting the best tax dollars for the number of officers that we can train and put out there.

Because of the shortness of time I guess that that's where I'll leave it.

head: Vote on Supplementary Estimates 2005-06 General Revenue Fund, No. 2

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I would have liked to recognize you, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(1) and Government Motion 5, agreed to February 28, 2006, I must now put the following question. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions not yet voted upon relating to the 2005-2006 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chair: The motion is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of Community Development, Education, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Infrastructure and Transportation, Justice, Municipal Affairs, Solicitor General and Public Security, and Sustainable Resource Development.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2005-2006 supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

The following resolutions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, have been approved.

Community Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $30,200,000.

Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $11,000,000.

Health and Wellness: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $141,183,000.

Human Resources and Employment: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $6,100,000.

Infrastructure and Transportation: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $39,900,000.

Justice and Attorney General: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $3,720,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $39,850,000.

Solicitor General and Public Security: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $4,982,000.

Sustainable Resource Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $15,700,000.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a list of those resolutions voted upon by the Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:06 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 2, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together in a minute of silent and personal prayer as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian police officers and military personnel lost in service to their countrymen.

May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is again my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students from Bluffton school. There are 29 students accompanied by teacher/principal Mr. Mark McWhinnie and by Nolan Krauss, Deneen Evans, Karen Bevans, Judy Lamb. They're seated above me in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three very hard-working members of Alberta Justice: Trina Sharp, Gisele Wright, and Dana Purves. These individuals are staff in the department of human resources and are here today to tour the Legislature and to see the political process in action. I would ask them to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping my visitors – they are in the public gallery – have arrived safely because I understand they had a bit of a harrowing trip on the highways. I understand they were dealing with some snowy conditions today on their trip up from Calgary. They're a group of students from a school in my constituency of Calgary-Elbow. Visiting us today are 67 students from l'école Sainte-Marguerite Bourgeoys along with their teacher, Chantal Piché, and nine parents and helpers. They're here to learn about government and the work we do in the Legislature. I'll ask members of the Assembly to join me in offering them the traditional warm welcome, or bienvenue, of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Elmer Jules Half, a First Nations member from Goodfish Lake in the Lac La Biche-St. Paul area. Mr. Half is a correctional services worker with the Solicitor General's department, and he is here to take in the pageantry and warm good feelings of question period. I'd ask that he please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Jason Rockwell. Jason is the communications director and organizer for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, local lodge 99, district 14. Jason recently oversaw the successful resolution of a six-week strike with Finning International. Most recently he was a candidate for the NDP in this past federal election in Edmonton-Spruce Grove. He's seated in the public gallery. I would ask that he rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

First Anniversary of Mayerthorpe Tragedy

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to honour the memory of four heroes, four brave young men who gave their lives in service to our province. Tomorrow marks the anniversary of one of the darkest days in the history of policing in Alberta and in Canada. It was on March 3, 2005, that RCMP constables Anthony Gordon, Leo Johnston, Brock Myrol, and Peter Schiemann were murdered. The four officers were gunned down while guarding a crime scene near Mayerthorpe. They died upholding the oath they took to protect each and every one of us.

On that tragic day a year ago both myself and the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne met with the families of these brave officers to offer our government's heartfelt condolences and support. A full year has nearly passed, but the pain and the grief felt by the families and friends of the slain officers and by all Albertans still remain. As Alberta's Solicitor General and as a former police officer I will remember March 3, 2005, as one of the most difficult and trying days of my life.

Time will eventually ease our pain, Mr. Speaker, but we must ensure that it does not erase the memories of these courageous young men who made the ultimate sacrifice. They are heroes, as are those police and peace officers before them who laid down their lives to protect our freedom, our values, and our way of life. We honour them now. We honour them forever.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the House for the moment of silence to honour the Fallen Four.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to pay tribute to the lives of four very brave, very dedicated young men. As the minister said, they are heroes, and as an Albertan I am both grateful and proud that such men lived and worked in this province. March 3, 2005, was indeed a black day for this province and this nation, a day that will be forever remembered as the greatest tragedy in the history of policing in Alberta.

Though we rightly mourn the deaths of these officers, I believe that we should also celebrate their lives and accomplishments. Without question these men had the respect of their peers, the admiration of their communities, and the love of their families and friends. During their all too brief time on this Earth they inspired their fellow Canadians with their courage, their decency, and their desire to do the right thing.

In life and in death constables Schiemann, Gordon, Johnston, and Myrol upheld their oath to serve Albertans, to defend and protect us whatever the threat. By choosing to wear the uniform, they knew that they were taking a risk, yet they accepted that risk knowing that to do so was necessary and right. These brave young men were not just police officers. They were members of the community of Mayerthorpe. They were sons, husbands, and fathers. They were friends and role models. Let us never forget the people whose lives they touched, the families and friends who have bravely carried on and who have worked to provide a lasting legacy for the Fallen Four through music, memorials, and through their sharing of love and memories.

We are truly touched and inspired by the response of Canadians. Perhaps the best way to honour the memories of these four constables is to do our utmost to make Alberta a safer, more secure province and, furthermore, to always remember and respect all the men and women who wear the uniform, who put their lives on the line every day on our behalf.

Tomorrow let us gain strength and solace by remembering the heroes of Mayerthorpe and by offering our thoughts and prayers for all the police officers who have given their lives to protect our way of life, and let us do the same for those officers who every day dedicate their lives to our protection.

In closing, I offer my condolences to the families, the friends, and colleagues of the four fallen officers. I know that you will always carry the pain of this terrible loss in your hearts, but I hope you can take some comfort in the knowledge that Canadians and especially Albertans will never forget their sacrifice or their courage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I'm assuming that you're asking for the support of the House to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Unanimous consent for the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in respectful memory of the four fallen law enforcement officers to express our sorrow and regret for the tragic event in Mayerthorpe, Alberta, one year ago. The memory of the tragic killing of the four RCMP officers and the sense of pain and loss will forever live in the hearts and minds of the members of this Assembly, the people of Alberta, and especially the families of Leo Johnston, Anthony Gordon, Peter Schiemann, and Brock Myrol.

On behalf of the New Democrats I offer our sincerest condolences to all those who have been affected by this loss. Our hearts and thoughts are especially with the families and friends of the fallen officers, whose lives have been devastated by the loss of their loved ones. I also express my sympathy for the residents of the Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt areas, who have witnessed up close this terribly tragic event.

Every day, Mr. Speaker, we ask our law enforcement officers to put their lives on the line for our safety. We ask them to put themselves in harm's way in order to protect us and to uphold the laws of our democracy, and they do so with courage, honour, and integrity. Whenever a police officer loses her or his life in the line of duty, it stands as a reminder of the personal sacrifice that law enforcement officers make in protecting us and our democratic values. The memorial park in Mayerthorpe will be a fitting tribute to the fallen officers and the sacrifice and dedication shown by the men and women who enforce our laws and who by doing so uphold our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for this opportunity.

The Speaker: Would the Assembly also permit the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to participate?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we mark the anniversary of a tragedy, one that has caused us to reflect on our lives and our communities, it is painful to see the loss of life and more so to see the lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Brock Myrol, Anthony Gordon, and Leo Johnston cut short in the line of duty protecting and serving our communities.

It is important that we recognize and remember the great sacrifice of the lives of those who serve us. Peter, Brock, Anthony, and Leo were dedicated to their duty to preserve the peace and keep our communities safe. They were much more than RCMP officers. They were our friends, neighbours, sons, fathers, husbands, and, most important, members of our community in every sense.

If there is one thing we should take away from these times of remembrance, it is that remembering is not enough. The RCMP is one of the most respected police forces in the world. That respect starts with the citizens they serve. The greatest tribute we can show to our fallen officers is to continue to work with and stand by those whose job it is to protect us. Just as these officers gave their lives in fighting crime, we as citizens must not turn a blind eye but aid in every way possible. We can only keep our communities safe by working with and showing respect for our police officers. We enjoy such peace and prosperity today because we respect other people and their property. We respect common law or equality before the law.

We need to cherish our freedoms. Other places in the world live in turmoil because they do not have a just society, where people are equally protected under the law. We need to continue to show our respect for our police officers and the law to our next generation so that we can continue to enjoy a safe community.

May God bless and comfort all the families affected by this tragedy. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A legitimate public consultation process includes open dialogue and the commitment that differing opinions are heard and respected. An ad hoc, 30-day consultation is not sufficient for an issue as fundamental as health care. This discussion cannot be reduced to one-page memos and 15-second sound bites. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this government has replaced town hall meetings by putting the health care framework in Alberta libraries, that won't even receive the document for at least another week, will this government extend the consultation until next fall?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the purpose of health care reform is twofold. One is to improve the accessibility and choice in health care for Albertans, and the second, of course, is to bring health care costs in line with the rate of inflation. I challenged both the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party to offer me solutions that would lead to those objectives. [interjection] Well, they can do it on two pages or three. One page would do.

We have introduced a framework that includes ten principles that will act as a guide for government in making positive, innovative changes to health care for the benefit of all Albertans. We said that there will be public consultation. There is. The minister informs us this morning that she has already received over 400 phone calls, e-mails, and letters since Tuesday but none from the opposition. She also informs me that she has received numerous requests from stakeholder groups wanting to meet with her, and she will meet with them. So I'm thrilled to hear that the consultation is taking place, and the government looks forward, of course, to hearing what these individuals have to say. We are moving forward, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. We are also receiving many phone calls and letters. Will this government commit to tabling all of the feedback they receive from Albertans on this issue, such as these cards and letters and phone messages and e-mails sent to the Premier's office and the minister's office, and produce a comprehensive report on the results of the consultation process? Will they do that before they act?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the minister in charge of the process is the Minister of Health and Wellness, and I'll have her respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that has been overlooked in the comments of the Leader of the Opposition is that at such time as we have a legislative piece, if we have a legislative piece and, certainly, whatever that constitutes, when it comes forward to this House, there is if you have legislation a process for consulting on regulation. That's another important part of it. This is a policy framework that started way last year. Well, it's been ongoing for some period of time but in earnest on the third way last year, and in July on the web page we put up a 13-point document that identified various ways that people could make a contribution to it. We've been consulting, and we'll continue to consult. I'd be pleased to take any suggestion of groups I should meet with. We've already booked in other parts of the province to make sure that I get an opportunity.

One more thing, Mr. Speaker, when groups . . .

The Speaker: I'm sure you'll have greater opportunity for clarification.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: does the Premier genuinely believe that the solutions to the challenges facing Alberta's health care system can be presented on one page?

Mr. Klein: I believe that they can if there is a concrete solution to accomplish two things: that is, to improve quality and access and to bring costs in line with the rate of inflation.

Now, there are all kinds of things that can be done. Some of them were suggested in the three-year-old Liberal book that was presented with a new cover the other day. [interjection] No. I think it's a different cover – right? – but it's red.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Liberal Party.

1:50 Health Care Privatization

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has produced a health policy framework that raises some genuinely alarming questions. Taken as a whole, this framework will lead to health care becoming a consumer product with a citizen's right to health care being replaced by a corporation's right to market it. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that this framework repeatedly refers to consumer choice for health care, does this government take the position that making a profit should be a factor in clinical decisions concerning patients? Yes or no?

Ms Evans: No.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Second question to the same minister: does the minister take the position that the relationship between a doctor and a patient is essentially the same as between a buyer and a seller? Yes or no?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we could debate the merits of that as a statement for many days and nights. It's an oversimplification of the trust and confidence between a doctor, the Hippocratic oath, and the patient, and I would never suggest such a thing. So, quite frankly, I'm surprised that the suggestion has come on the floor of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister refers to the Hippocratic oath. Has she reviewed the Hippocratic oath or, in fact, the oath that the Canadian Medical Association actually requires of doctors? Does she know what she's talking about?

Ms Evans: Yes.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Federal Transfer Payments for Health

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Health Act's accessibility principle says that all insured persons must get access "on uniform terms and conditions" without financial barriers, and the consultation document from the government says on page 2 that Albertans support the principles of the Canada Health Act, but the Premier's proposed reforms clearly violate this principle. My questions are to the Premier. Given that you were quoted as saying, and I quote, the last thing we want to do is contravene the Canada Health Act, close quote, will you commit today to abiding by it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we have stated, in fact, that we don't want to violate the Canada Health Act, but nothing is carved in stone at this particular time as we move through the public consultation process. I've said time and time again that if the Liberal opposition have any good ideas to improve accessibility and choice and bring health care costs in line with the rate of inflation, then send them over.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

An Hon. Member: We did yesterday, and it got thrown away.

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has only provided $36 million of the $250 million to fix long-term care because, and I quote, you can't snap your fingers and expect dollars to fall from the air, how can the Premier justify risking nearly $2 billion in federal health transfer payments if you violate the Canada Health Act?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the $2 billion to which the hon. member alludes is for Canada. It's not for Alberta.

Ms Evans: We get about $1.6 billion.

Mr. Klein: Oh, no. I'm thinking – it's about $40 million. Yes, $1.6 billion. That represents about 10 per cent of our total budget, Mr. Speaker. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have a portion of the money that's part of the federal transfer. We have received about another $52 million for the wait times project and about $52 million for diagnostics, which ends this year. So we have roughly 1 and a half billion dollars that comes in terms of federal transfers.

Mr. Speaker, in the past when provinces had been illustrated to in any way contradict certain evaluation by the federal government of certain procedures that went in contradiction to their interpretation of the Health Act, the charges that were levelled back to those social union transfers were an equivalent of what was actually deemed to have been spent. We don't have any precedent to identify exactly what, if anything, would be done if there was an evaluation by the federal government that this was out of order.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that we have not yet . . .

The Speaker: You don't have to remind me of anything. I'll just remind the hon. member of the time factor.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is the Premier so willing to risk losing federal health funding for violations that are neither wanted nor needed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that remains to be seen. Right now we're going through the public consultation process. I would remind the hon. member that there is in place now a disputes resolution process that would have to be used before any consideration was made relative to whether or not the proposal – underline proposal – violates the Canada Health Act. The proposal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier plans to spend the next month hiding behind a fig leaf of a phony consultation process to avoid answering questions about his government's radical plans to privatize health care. On the one hand, the Premier asks us to send over our better ideas to him, and when we do, he throws them back in our face. Clearly, consultation is not the real agenda here. It's avoiding answering questions and avoiding debate. To the Premier: why does the Premier refuse to answer legitimate questions from the opposition and Albertans about his government's plans for a private, two-tier health care system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're not avoiding any questions. We have a proposal – a proposal – that could be tabled sometime in April or perhaps May, and it is a proposal, unless the NDs have a better idea to improve accessibility, provide choice, and bring costs in line with the rate of inflation. I have received absolutely nothing. I did receive from the Liberals – and we have had the document for some time. The minister will respond in detail I believe on Monday to their document; that is, the Liberals' document. I would remind Albertans and the NDs, in particular, that we have received absolutely nothing from them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Then I would ask the Premier if he is aware that the NDP opposition conducted public hearings on health care reform around the province last winter and that we forwarded a copy of our report to his health minister, and she has done nothing about it.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no, I wasn't aware. I'm aware of what our caucus does and what the government does in terms of public consultation. I do recall seeing a signboard – now, I don't know whether it was sponsored by the Liberal Party or the NDs – one of those portable signboards calling for a town hall meeting on health care last year, or maybe it was the year before. But, no, I'm not familiar with the details.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier tell the House why it is that he's prepared to head down the road of very radical reforms to our health care system if he doesn't know what's going on?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what's going on with the NDs. There are four of them, and they were fewer – well, maybe they weren't. [interjection] Last year, was it? Well, okay, there were four of them.

You know, we give them money. They can do what they want, I guess, with the money.

2:00

Mr. Mason: You don't give us money.

Mr. Klein: Oh, I'm sorry. We don't give you money? Well, then they did it on their own. You know, I commend them for that.

Mr. Chase: It's all your money, is it?

Mr. Klein: No, no. It's taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker. But if they did it on their own hook, good on them.

Mr. Speaker, I don't involve myself with their politics. I'm sorry, but I've got so many things on my plate that I can't involve them with my politics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Education Property Tax

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the mayor of Calgary issued a glossy annual report in which he says that the province should get out of the education property tax to allow the city to have access to more money. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the province shortchanging the city of Calgary with respect to provincial funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it's quite the contrary. As a matter of fact, I think the brochure that the member referred to does a very good job of outlining the support that the province has provided to the city of Calgary. I'd like to just point out to the member and to all members that Budget 2005 actually provides for about $4.14 billion to Calgary and area, which would include $1.1 billion for basic education, $1.9 billion in health, and about half a billion dollars in infrastructure. That's in addition to the $95 million in fuel tax that flows through to the city of Calgary, and of course Calgary, like all municipalities, shares in the $3 billion in the municipal infrastructure program that the government put in place, which was the first opportunity that the government had to share with municipalities the fiscal situation the government found itself in when the debt began to be paid off. So the first program we instituted was of significant financial support for municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: has the minister given any thought to taking up the mayor's request that the province get out of the education property tax so that the city can access those tax dollars?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, not only have I given it some thought; I've been quite vocal as a proponent that we should begin to put the groundwork in place for such an event to occur. At the same time, I've also said that it is absolutely essential that we define the roles and responsibilities of both the municipal governments and the provincial government. To that effect, I have recently instituted a minister's council on municipal sustainability, that will do just that. That council consists of the mayors of both Calgary and Edmonton as well as representatives from AUMA and AAMD and C. That council is working very well and is moving that process along quite nicely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question: if the situation is as rosy as what the minister would like us to believe, why is the mayor constantly sending out these types of brochures?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the mayor has his job to do; this minister has his job to do. We choose, perhaps, different ways of getting the job done, but at the end of the day we're both heading in the same direction, and that direction is recognizing that there are financial pressures on municipalities and identifying and securing long-term, secure, sustainable sources of revenue for municipalities, not only just the city of Calgary but all municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifty thousand coal-bed methane wells are planned for the next decade in Alberta, including fracturing of coal seams. Growing numbers of Alberta landowners and farmers are expressing fear and anger at the inadequacy of protection for their drinking water. Not only are they concerned for family and animal health; they're also concerned about losing their livelihoods and property values. To the minister of health: given that toxic chemicals are used in these drilling and fracturing episodes and that some individuals have been adversely affected, what is Alberta Health doing to investigate and ensure safe drinking water?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Public Health Act and the Regional Health Authorities Act make provision for RHAs to respond to incidents of this nature to protect human health. We have been working with Alberta Environment on issues that have been raised frequently on the floor recently about methane. I think methane alone isn't the problem. It becomes a problem when it's restricted to confined places. The immediate health hazard is in the possibility of explosion and burns. Drinking-water wells can have inexpensive vents added to their well caps to allow this gas to escape. I think it's incumbent upon us to work as regional health authorities with the legislation we have available to pursue the issues that have been identified.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the health minister: will the minister, under the precautionary principle, support the stopping of all new coal-bed methane developments until she is assured, in the Horseshoe Canyon particularly, that water is not being adversely affected?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have our public health officials that are working on this with the officials of the David Thompson region, and I believe that when they are prepared to provide me with such report and recommend such action, then that would be in my prerogative to do so. However, having said that, we have had no indication yet that this action is necessary. Our officials continue to pursue and identify what issues should be considered and are doing their due diligence in this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of agriculture: given your responsibility to protect and support the viability of farmers and landowners, what is the minister doing about the growing complaints of tainted water and its potential to affect the health of animals and agriculture?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a good question. Dissolved gases in well water in this province are not an uncommon occurrence. It has been around for some time. We've been dealing with it as a natural occurrence. In a number of wells around the province natural gas has been there. Having said that, if you go to our website, Ropin' the Web, there's a lot of information there on what farmers should be doing about testing their water on a regular basis. Certainly, if they feel that their water has been tampered with or contaminated based on energy exploration, whatever kind of energy exploration that is, the first recourse for them is to deal with the energy company. If that fails, through the Farmers' Advocate office there are other avenues of recourse to either bring the well back to where it was in terms of safety or, in fact, in some cases to explore other alternate sources of water for either their livestock or for personal use. There are a number of areas where Agriculture does follow this up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Labour Supply

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The strength of the Alberta economy has always been with its workers. Without the skills and the expertise of Albertans our economy and prosperity would not be what it is today. Given that the economy grows and evolves, employment rates are highest in our province, and businesses are clamouring for needed workers, my first question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment is: what is the government doing to develop Alberta's workforce?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as I've mentioned before in this House, we are blessed to be in Alberta. We are expecting over 400,000 new jobs in the next 10 years. Through our 56 employment centres we are of course providing skills upgrading, job search services, career counselling, language training, and other services to our clientele. Human Resources alone will be spending over $205 million this year to address some of those issues. The government, of course, has committed within the next 10 years to provide at least 60,000 additional training spaces in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. I know that the government is working on a labour force development strategy. How does this fit in with what this government is doing right now for the Alberta workforce?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, that's a very important question. This 10-year strategy, of course, is a broad and long-range strategy designed to meet Alberta's labour needs now and in the future. It involves working with representatives, of course, from industry, labour groups, education, aboriginal groups, just to name a few. We need to work together to address this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Given that the labour strategy highlights a need for better ways of recognizing the credentials of immigrants, what are you doing to ensure that skilled immigrants can quickly get their credentials recognized so that they can contribute fully to Alberta with their skills, experience, and expertise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an area that does have significant challenges, but of course we want newcomers to Alberta, people that we can attract to Alberta to help build our communities and develop our economy, to be able to very quickly use the skills they bring with them.

We have in the Department of Advanced Education a branch we call IQAS, international qualifications assessment service. Historically we've been prepared to go abroad to help prequalify people who want to come to Alberta, or we'll qualify them when they do come. In other words, what they do is take the credentials that the newcomer brings with them, do an assessment to determine what the equivalent credentials would be in this province, and then give them a certificate so that they can present that certificate to an employer to show that they're qualified to do work.

We're working with our IQAS and with persons in both the professions and occupations and in the immigrant community to make an easier access to that type of process so that we can also look to help them find bridging mechanisms. When people come to the province, many times they might need the language of work, for example. They may need some programs through NorQuest or Bow Valley College or another postsecondary institution to help them get the language of work, and many other ways in which we're helping newcomers to this province participate in our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Education Achievement Testing

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues its focus on testing, not teaching, by spending $4 million on testing last year. Elementary students and teachers are stressed with standardized testing that does nothing to improve learning. The addition of the grade level assessments and computer-assisted assessments leaves us wondering how far this government will go in sacrificing learning for the sake of meaningless rankings. To the Minister of Education: why won't this minister abolish grade level assessments and computer-assisted assessments and replace this effort with meaningful remedial support for children?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think we should remind the hon. questioner and all members here that we spend about $4.7 billion per year doing exactly that: helping our children in the kindergarten to grade 12 system to succeed and helping them become better educated and good, contributing citizens. Now, one of the reasons that we have the very best education system in Canada and one of the best in the world is because of things like standardized testing, is because of standardized curriculum that runs province-wide, is because of outstanding teachers and dedicated parents and hard-working school trustees and a government that really cares about the education of these children, and we're going to continue doing that.

Mr. Flaherty: Mr. Speaker, there are many, many children falling through the cracks. How come this government won't replace standardized testing with diagnostic testing, which will improve kids' learning in school, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of projects under way that are helping to improve learning for children. In fact, I would point to a number of AISI projects. Perhaps I could bring them in and read them all to the House one day. We spend tens of millions of dollars on AISI projects that are designed in large part to do exactly part of what the hon. member is asking about, and that is those children who need some additional help. That's over and above the per capita monies that we provide through the instructional component. In an effort to help them even more, we do have a flexible funding framework review going on right as we speak, and if there are some improvements that are imminent, we will look at making those. In the interim I'm quite satisfied that the diagnostic testing that we have been looking at – and the hon. member will know this – which in fact is replacing the PATs at the grade 4 level, is proceeding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the individual program plans are important for high school retention and for the completion of high school, why is the government focusing on standards and not teaching children?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think 30,000 teachers would appreciate reading that in Hansard. I think there's outstanding teaching going on in this province because of outstanding teachers. We recognize that, and it's unfortunate that the critic from the Liberal opposition doesn't recognize it and won't give them credit to that effect.

We do a lot to help our children. We do a lot to help with professional development. We do a lot to help with standards, which have been referred to, and we also are very helpful in terms of outcomes that are expected, in terms of the new accountability pillars that are there, which are all focused on improving education. Mr. Speaker, we will continue to do that to the very, very best of our abilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Employment Opportunities for Foreign Students

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. International students make important economic, social, and cultural contributions to Alberta. When they come here to study, they pay higher tuition than domestic students because it's one way to ensure that international students pay a reasonable share of the actual costs of their education. Recently some of my constituents in Calgary-East were asking if there is some way to make it easier for these international students to work off-campus to help pay for their bills. Current rules prevent or restrict foreign students from working off-campus while they are studying. [interjections] Can you listen, please? And the rules make it difficult to join the workforce here in Alberta after they have graduated. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister tell this Assembly what the government is doing to make it easier for foreign students to work in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An important question because there are more than 6,000 international students studying in Alberta's postsecondary institutions, or at least there were in 2004. As the hon. member has indicated, international students are very, very important to our postsecondary system. One of the four pillars of our strategic plan is competing in the global marketplace, and if we're going to do that well, we need to build those international relationships, and we need to build the understanding that we get from studying with people from around the world. So it's important that those students can come here and can study and work to finance those studies.

We've been working with the federal government. The federal government had a pilot project in a number of jurisdictions in the past year to allow foreign students to work. We've been working with them to sign an agreement with respect to that process so that foreign students would be able to work for approximately 20 hours a week while they're going to school. They could work during the breaks between their terms, and they could work for a period of time after graduation or after their term ends. We're hoping that that agreement will be in place shortly and that it will be available to foreign students in Alberta within the near term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How does this initiative support Alberta's proposed 10-year labour force supply strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. It is very important that we attract and retain new immigrants to build our workforce in Alberta both short term and long term. Of course, international students are excellent candidates to fill some of these jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall in this Legislature the Minister of Education said that the unfunded teachers' pension liability wasn't even on the government's radar. Today and tomorrow thousands of teachers are meeting down the street at the Greater Edmonton Teachers' Convention, and I can assure the minister that this issue is on their radar. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Why is this minister so slow to sit down with Alberta teachers to work out a better pension deal?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obviously the member is not in the loop at all. I have sat down with members of the Alberta Teachers' Association. In fact, I've sat down with them a number of times and talked about this very issue. I also addressed that particular assembly of schoolteachers this morning at the Citadel Theatre. We talked about this, and we talked about it at some great length. If the member had read Hansard from yesterday, when the hon. Minister of Finance addressed this particular question, she said that the Minister of Education is working on this issue, and I am.

I think we need to be reminded of two things. Number one, there are a number of unfunded pension liabilities out there, not only the teachers'. So we have to look at that. Secondly, we have to respect the fact that in 1992 a specific agreement had been made during which the government of Alberta said that it would undertake two-thirds of the responsibility and the teachers would undertake one-third.

Now, for a variety of reasons that unfunded liability arose, and we've been doing our best to address that. There was an offer, in fact, that had been put verbally on the table by my predecessor to eliminate this. Unfortunately, it wasn't able to be taken up by the ATA.

Mr. R. Miller: It's going to cost Alberta taxpayers $32 billion.

To the same minister: will the minister commit to attending the unfunded pension plan liability session tomorrow afternoon at the Shaw Conference Centre?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I don't know about that particular session, and I haven't been invited to it. Had I been invited, I might have been able to accommodate it.

I have met with numbers of teachers on this, and I have met with numbers of school boards, and I will continue to have those meetings because I do understand that the unfunded pension liability has the potential to negatively impact teacher retention as well as future teacher recruitment, and I don't want to see that happen. But we're talking about $6 billion here, Mr. Speaker, $4 billion of which the government is responsible for, $2 billion of which teachers are responsible for.

I should end by just reminding the hon. member that a couple of years ago this government, in fact, bought out one entire year of the unfunded pension liability at a cost of $63 million. So there are optional ways to look at this, and optional considerations that will be part of the mix as we continue talking about it.

Mr. R. Miller: Once again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why doesn't the minister just admit that the only reason – the only reason – this government isn't sitting down with the teachers to find innovative ways to reform this pension is because the idea tank of this government has run dry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again. We have had a number of meetings. In fact, very recently I just met with their executive council. I've been to their ARA, and I've met with their executive officers, and I've had a number of meetings with them. I've met with principals. I've met with teachers. We have all kinds of ideas that are floating around this issue, and I've just indicated a couple of ideas that I think need to be considered. So the tank on this side is very, very full. It's just one of those issues that takes some time to negotiate our way around.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty obvious that there are some nervous Nellies in the ranks of the Tory rural caucus, and they have every right to be nervous because they're being sold a bill of goods by the Premier and the health minister. More private, for-profit health care means an even wider gap between big cities like Calgary and sparsely populated rural areas. Just follow the money. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is the minister championing a privatized, two-tier health care system that will lead to a further drain of medical specialists from rural areas to the big cities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when I look at the benches in this House, this wonderful Legislative Assembly, I see anything but nervous Nellies. I see very dedicated men and women who want to develop policies that will help us build a better future in Alberta. I see people who want to build a strong public health system, and putting patients first is the first policy in the document of putting health care in proper perspective. We want to build not only for today's generation but for tomorrow's.

Mr. Speaker, in the document on page 13 it identifies strategies for rural Alberta hospitals. I provided those yesterday in this House, and I'll be pleased to reiterate them should the member wish.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister avoided the question. I'll ask it a different way. Given that private health care is all about profit, isn't it inevitable that many medical specialists will move to the cities, where they can make more money through the private clinics?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the context of . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the context of access proposals that could be developed by people, physicians coming forward to take advantage of an opportunity to provide private care, the first principle is to make sure that the capacity of the public health system is not damaged. That would go the same way for Lloydminster; Carbon, Alberta; Barrhead, Alberta; Lethbridge, Alberta; or High Level.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the point is: how can you stop the damage? If people can make more money in the cities, that's where many of these specialists are going to go.

The Speaker: That's very debatable.

An Hon. Member: Is that your question?

Mr. Martin: That's the question to the minister.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is purely conjecture at this point. It's a hypothetical case at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Support for Olympic Athletes

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Team Canada recently achieved its best ever results at an Olympic Games. Our athletes finished third, with 24 medals and many personal bests, and Albertans were a large part of the success, bringing home numerous medals. With the Olympics returning to Canada in 2010, expectations are high to be even more successful. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. With the high expectations placed on Canadian athletes for 2010 and beyond, how much provincial funding is directed towards our Olympic training program?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, those athletes who compete for Canada at the international level, for example at the Olympics, most recently in Torino, are supported through Sport Canada, which is a federal funding agency. Here in Alberta this province supports the development of provincial level athletes, but we also, of course, do work with partners to provide exceptional training and competition facilities in our province for international level athletes. So we don't fund international level athletes directly, but we do so indirectly through the provision of support for facilities.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: then if we don't provide funding directly to athletes, how does the province support their development?

Mr. Mar: Well, we know that Olympians certainly aren't born overnight. They're built through a great deal of developmental sport. What we do, Mr. Speaker, is have strong provincial sport programs that allow athletes to compete at regional, provincial, and national levels. We spent in this province $12.8 million in the last fiscal year on these programs. That includes the sponsorship of programs like the Alberta Winter Games, which commenced last week in Hinton, Alberta; the Arctic Winter Games, where our Arctic winter athletes will be participating in the Kenai Peninsula of Alaska starting this weekend. It also includes the Alberta Summer Games. It would include the Canada Summer Games, last year held in Regina, Saskatchewan.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, for the Alberta Games that some 73,000 young Alberta athletes have taken part since those games were commenced in 1976, and some of the athletes that come out of that program, of course, go on to things like the Western Canada Games or the Canada Games. The result is that athletes like Haley Wickenheiser, like Chandra Crawford, like Jenn Heil all have participated in these provincial level games and have also represented Alberta at places like the Canada Winter Games, but once it comes to international competition, that's where support from Sport Canada comes in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. To the same minister: are there any plans to establish satellite Olympic training centres in other parts of the province; that is, other than Calgary?

Mr. Mar: None at this time, Mr. Speaker, but I should say that it's been over 20 years since the Olympics took place in Calgary. We have been proud to support the facilities that are there. For example, most recently we did put in $23 million worth of infrastructure at the Canmore Nordic Centre. The result was that we were able to host a World Cup of cross-country skiing last December. It was the first time in 16 years that such a competition took place in Alberta, and the result is that some 70 million people in 54 countries saw the televised event in Canmore. We've also contributed some $600,000 to the refurbishing of the Olympic ski jump, and there has been some suggestion that we should look at some of the other Olympic facilities, such as the speed skating oval where, of course, our national team trains. As business cases come forward for the renewal and upgrading of those facilities, we'll certainly be happy to entertain them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Adoption Quotas

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 23 in this House the hon. Minister of Children's Services stated that she does not believe for a minute that having adoption quotas is out of line, yet in a letter dated February 7, 2006, the minister states: I do not condone the use of a quota system. My questions are for the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the minister contradicted herself about her own policies, will the minister clarify today whether she does in fact support a quota system for the adoption of Alberta children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd be pleased to do that. When we had the question in the House, the hon. member asked me about a quota system, and I did talk about a quota system. I think there needs to be some clarification in regard to what I was trying to say. All of our senior managers across this province and many of the ministries have what they call performance measures, and I think that's a good indicator of how they're doing their job, what they're doing right in their job, and what is being done wrong.

What I will say is that in my business plan we have goals that we would like our workers in this province to make. One of the goals in the business plan is about getting higher adoption rates, and I don't think there's anything wrong with this. I have hundreds and hundreds of children in my care who are looking for homes, who want to be adopted. We put that as a priority in government. We encourage our caseworkers, who do a wonderful job in this province, Mr. Speaker, to find these children a loving home and get them adopted.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: can the minister please explain how a policy that financially rewards regional CEOs for the number of adoptions they perform relates to the best interests of the child?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I think I have to again clarify something. There are no financial rewards, for one thing, when we're looking at performance bonuses. Overall they could have 10, 15, 20 things that they have to make on their performance bonus. If they don't reach the quota that we have given them on the adoptions, they're not penalized for that individually. We want to make sure that the children in our province go to loving, caring homes, and if, for example, a senior manager doesn't happen to make that individual personal performance, for example on an adoption, he's not penalized for that.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: given that the draft report A New Casework Practice Model has been hidden from the public, will the minister summarize for this House what this report states regarding this quota system and the impact that it has on adoption processes in Alberta?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, the report the hon. member is speaking about is a draft report that we have put out to our stakeholders, all of the people that work so hard in this province for Children's Services. We brought forward an act I believe it was a year ago in November called the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. We wanted to find out from that innovative piece of legislation, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo took on, what we were doing right, what we were doing wrong. We asked for input in regard to that particular draft. Once we get the final copy of that – and it is a draft, Mr. Speaker, and I want to repeat that. We have asked people in the field to respond to this particular draft, and once that is finalized, I'd be pleased to table it. But we're not hiding it. We've asked people within the field, that do good work, to give us their input and respond to the draft report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest quadrant of Calgary is one of the fastest growing parts of the province. Now, hundreds of new families are moving there every year, and our existing school infrastructure is simply not keeping pace with the demand for more and improved spaces. The needs are becoming intense, so I would like to ask the Minister of Education: what can I tell my constituents about the latest developments in the plan to address the very pressing needs for more educational facilities in Calgary-Lougheed and other rapidly expanding areas of the province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have about 60 different types of school infrastructure projects that are under way or will go under way this year, totalling about $580 million province-wide. Now, a lot of that activity is in Calgary, and quite specifically a lot of it is in south Calgary. Recent numbers would probably add up to about $50 million worth of school construction of one type or another going on in south Calgary. There are projects, I think about five or six schools, that are under way there right now, and perhaps more will come. We'll wait for the next meeting that I'm going to be having with the board there, and we'll wait for available dollars to fund as many of those pressing needs as we can, not only in south Calgary but wherever we are able to across the province.

Mr. Rodney: My only supplemental is to the same minister. I understand that the Calgary public school board is asking for dozens of schools, and the Calgary Catholic school board suggests that they desperately need at least four more schools. I'd like to have the minister, if he would, clarify his department's policy on prioritizing these requests to ensure that the areas that need the schools the more are indeed getting the schools first.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the process is really quite straightforward. For the benefit of all members, who I know are interested in this because we are all affected one way or another, let's just be reminded that school boards develop a capital plan, submit it to us every year. We review that. We look at the priority needs. We look at things like the health of the students attending the schools, the safety of the students, the issues that might pertain to capacity or crowding or aging infrastructure or whatever. So there's a very thorough review process, which our good friends in Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation have been doing.

Now, as the Department of Education works more closely with infrastructure issues and as that particular part of the portfolio comes over our way, perhaps in the next short while, we will be doing a lot more of our detailed planning with them. But a lot of that, Mr. Speaker, is also an issue of taking a look at where your populations are going to be versus perhaps busing them to where the schools exist, so we're looking at a variety of factors in that way. I'll be meeting with the two board chairs here very shortly. I'm sure we'll be hearing more of their needs, and we'll be doing the best we can to address them along with all the others we have before us.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, from the throne speech debate held on March 8, 1968, in this Assembly we find these words:

Northern Alberta is the new frontier – the land of tomorrow. I am glad that I had the wonderful privilege and experience to see the virgin lands and forests, streams and parklands, before we commenced to push the frontiers back. The pioneers were young men and women with a spirit of adventure and the will to conquer the new land, and with a hope to build a future for themselves and their families . . . Their needs were simple, their lives were full, their contributions great.

These words were given by Adolph Fimrite, born on February 15, 1913, in Kingman, Alberta. He was the owner of Fimrite's department store in Wanham, Alberta. Mr. Fimrite served as a Social Credit member for the constituencies of Spirit River and Spirit River-Fairview from 1952 to 1971. He was appointed deputy chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council on April 23, 1963, and oversaw the creation and the building of the Alberta Resources Railway as well as the highway 34 bridge and the highway 2 suspension bridge. He was appointed a minister without portfolio in 1966.

Mr. Fimrite is only one of several MLAs in Alberta's history who received more votes in each of four successive elections, as he did in 1952, 1955, 1959, and 1963. His vote count went down in 1967, and he was defeated in the election of 1971. He died on July 18, 1990, in Kelowna, British Columbia.

In 30 seconds I'll call on the first of several members.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Memorial to Fallen RCMP Officers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 16, 2005, eight months after the murders of four young and brave RCMP officers, the owners and tenants of the Bower mall in Red Deer unveiled a life-size bronze statue of an RCMP officer and his horse in a beautiful ceremony that included the families of the four fallen officers: Peter Schiemann, Brock Myrol, Anthony Gordon, and Leo Johnston.

A limited edition of 50 bronze medallions depicting the statue of the RCMP officer and his horse were created and presented to the families and official representatives from the RCMP and government. Our Premier received a bronze medallion, and I have the honour of presenting one of those very special medallions to the Lieutenant Governor next Thursday. Brock Myrol and Tony Gordon were both from Red Deer, and this tribute to all members who serve and protect is a memorial that their families and friends as well as members of the community will always cherish.

Mr. Speaker, as you enter the south door of the Bower mall in Red Deer, you are confronted by this life-size memorial and reminded of the sacrifices that RCMP and all police officers make every day to protect and serve the people of Alberta and all of Canada. Tomorrow we will commemorate the first anniversary of the four brave young men who gave their lives in the line of duty, and we will remember them. I would like to extend my sincerest thanks and appreciation to the owners of Bower mall, Sterling Vanreal and Centrecorp, to the tenants of the mall, and to the artist, Cameron Watt, for their generosity and vision in creating this magnificent memorial.

I would also like to thank John Van Haastrecht, representative of the owners, and Gary Seher, manager of the Bower mall, for a beautiful unveiling ceremony, that expressed our deepest appreciation to the officers and their families for the supreme sacrifice that was made for us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mayerthorpe Memorial to Fallen RCMP Officers

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow will mark the one-year anniversary of the tragedy at Mayerthorpe in which four young RCMP constables lost their lives. This senseless act of violence shocked the communities of Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt, our province, and our country. A year ago the RCMP lost four respected brothers, their families lost four loved ones, and the towns of Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt lost four active and well-liked members of these communities. A year has passed, and the time of mourning for these young men continues.

In order to mark this occasion, the Mayerthorpe Fallen Four Memorial Society is holding a dinner and a charity sports auction to coincide with the annual Wranglers old-timers versus RCMP hockey game today and this evening. The funds raised through the various events will be used to support the activities of the Fallen Four Society in commemorating the sacrifice which was made by these four young men. These events will give members of the community the opportunity to come together and share their memories of March 3, 2005. This function is being held this evening as it was agreed that there would be no large events held in Mayerthorpe on March 3 as the members of this community would prefer to spend that day privately with family and friends.

In the face of a great tragedy people near and far have shown compassion and understanding. I'd like to thank my colleagues in this Assembly, Albertans across the province, Canadians, and members of the international community for their expressions of grief and support over the past year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mountain of Heroes Foundation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that I was privileged to bring greetings on behalf of the province to the second annual Mountain of Heroes gala last night. Five people were honoured, and they include Randy Fowler, whose life took a drastic turn 24 years ago. Randy was literally on his way to a career in professional football when he was involved in an accident that left him in a coma, and doctors feared the worst, but today Randy gives inspiring speeches on behalf of the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, which he serves as a board member. He also speaks on the dangers of drinking and driving for the PARTY program, the United Way, and the Cops for Kids program.

Dale Taylor has initiated the sandwich club and the Warm Feet for the Street projects at the Mustard Seed street ministry. She also supports Inn from the Cold, the Sheriff King Home, and the Calgary Foundation through the Taylor legacy fund as well as projects in the West Indies and Central America.

Dr. Morton Doran has taught anatomy courses to medical students at the U of C for the past 15 years and received no fewer than three gold-star awards in each of those years. Dr. Doran has also volunteered with medical missions in Central and South America and has become a hero to those with Tourette's syndrome.

Marie Nicholson has donated countless hours to a plethora of causes as a member of the Stampede City Kinettes, holding every executive position at the club and zone levels for the last two decades and serving at the district level as well.

On November 4, 2002, Karen Venables' 18-year-old son, Devin, took one punch to the temple and died 16 hours later. Since then, Karen has been working on the DEVIN Foundation: Diligently Ending Violence in Neighbourhoods

My wife, Jennifer, and I as cofounders of the Mountain of Heroes Foundation would like to thank the board of directors, the volunteers, and the corporate partners of the event for raising research funds for cystic fibrosis and at the same time recognizing these Albertan heroes who have truly turned tragedy into triumph.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Building Alberta's Labour Force

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the hottest economy in the country and there are no signs of this slowing down. Help-wanted signs are everywhere, and forecasts show that in 10 years Alberta will face a shortfall of workers that may be as high as 100,000. Now, I know the media and others often comment on the doom and gloom aspect of this challenge, but what's not reported or widely known is all of the government actions under way to address skill and labour shortages. I think this is important to share with Albertans.

For example, the number of apprentices in our province has grown by 103 per cent in the past 10 years.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Rev. Abbott: A hundred and three per cent, which is a phenomenal number. We are training more apprentices in Alberta than at any other time in our history, and this year government is boosting funding for apprenticeship by $5.7 million, which will add many new spaces for apprentices.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to getting even more certified tradespeople and apprentices working in Alberta. This commitment can be seen in the province's action to increase the number of registered apprenticeship program scholarships from 50 to 500. This will encourage more high school students to continue their apprenticeship programs after graduation. The total funding for RAP is half a million dollars.

Our government also initiated the youth apprenticeship program, a pilot project that helps students in grades 7 through 12 explore career options through integrated learning activities. There are approximately 163 students enrolled in this program in Alberta.

Connecting job seekers with employers is also an important role government plays. In Drayton Valley Alberta Human Resources and Employment is working with our local employment agency, Cardium Employment Services, to connect people looking for employment directly with employers looking for workers. A number of people new to Drayton Valley have come into these offices and walked out a short time later with a list of employers looking for people. These agencies are also working to develop a survey of employers to find who is looking for workers and what kinds of jobs are available.

Mr. Speaker, this government is also working closely with industry and businesses to partner on activities such as career fairs and others.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Municipal Franchise Tax

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to talk about more financial hardships that Alberta energy consumers continue to face because of deregulation. Specifically, I would like to speak about the municipal franchise tax. It's not a fee; it's a tax that consumers pay on their monthly electricity and heating bills. A recent thorough, province-wide study by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows that there is no link between the charges that some consumers pay in this province and the intended purpose of the tax. This, in my view, is a consumption tax, not a fee like the Progressive Conservative government would like to have consumers believe.

Consumers in some municipalities continue to see their municipal franchise tax fluctuate with the price of natural gas and electricity. Despite the stated purpose of this tax a resident of Calgary may see their charge double, even triple from month to month depending on what the costs of natural gas and electricity are.

In 2004 this tax accounted for nearly 10 per cent of the city of Calgary's total revenues. Calgarians may expect to pay 300 per cent more than the residents of Red Deer in a given year for this arbitrary tax. A small-business owner in Leduc will pay about 425 per cent more than a small-business owner in Hinton. Clearly, there is no logic to the formula that is used by Leduc, Calgary, Beaverlodge, Fort McMurray, Wetaskiwin, and others when calculating the municipal franchise tax.

We need to have a good, close look at what research the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has done and be mindful of some of their recommendations. They recommend among many things that the government of Alberta take the initiative to put in place a common fee calculation that ensures that electricity and natural gas consumers are treated similarly across the province and local governments do not profit from high electricity and natural gas prices. They also say that local governments, especially those that impose high rates, should find ways to lower the fees.

At this time I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly for this opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

2:50 Government Reform

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are at an opportune time, a crossroads, and together we can soar into the future. We can raise our society to new heights. Peace, prosperity, and protection are universally held by people around the world. However, few have attained all three at the levels we have. We have achieved such peace and prosperity because of all the people and the choices they have made. We have respect for one another and the law, which protects people's lives and property, which in turn has enabled us to enjoy peace and prosperity.

Prosperity is a two-edged sword. It can destroy the individual as easily as it can the country. Is prosperity going to destroy us or make us stronger? To paraphrase Alexander Tytler: democracy is doomed to fail when the people choose to vote for the government that promises to give the most. The result is a tax-and-spend government that destroys the economy.

We need our three levels of government to work as a team. Each level must accept and recognize where its responsibilities are and how the people will be best served. We have gone through a long period of centralization and the notion that bigger is better. What we need is a government that is smaller, more efficient, and effective. For years the federal government has promised more and more federal programs, everything from early childhood care to seniors' care, cradle to grave. This seemingly free gift is too good to be true. We are tearing apart our families with social engineering, everything from our tax structure to our caring for our loved ones. There is a vicious circle of taxing more for more programs, which in turn creates the need for more taxes. We need to create tax credits for families who choose to care for their loved ones. Why do we think it is better to pay an institution $3,000 a month instead of a thousand dollars a month tax credit for a family?

With a new government in Ottawa, led by a Prime Minister who understands the need for governments to be responsible for their own areas, we have a golden opportunity to change the tide. We must work with him to reform Canada. Canadians are overtaxed and overgoverned. We must act now to work with the new federal government to reduce the duplication of services, the size of government, the universal programs, and most important: their taxes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter that is similar in tone and content to phone calls and e-mails that I am sure are flooding all of our offices. This one is from Alice Williamson, who's concerned that instead of listening to Albertans and fellow MLAs, he chooses to insult them and bully them. Ms Williamson points out that this behaviour increases voter apathy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. Because working families are going to be the hardest hit by the proposed two-tier health reforms, I'd like to table a release from the Alberta Federation of Labour dated February 28 and entitled Government's Third Way Plan: A Love Letter to For-profit Health Care and a release from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta from the same date entitled Government's Third Way Plan Undermines Public System.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one document to table. It's a news release from Public Interest Alberta entitled Alberta Must Defend . . . Childcare System. PIA, Public Interest Alberta, is urging the Minister of Children's Services to defend the agreement with the federal government that she signed just last year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask that the Government House Leader please share with the Assembly the projected government business for next week.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 6, at 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 19, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006, and thereafter consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

On Tuesday, March 7, in the afternoon we anticipate messages from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor with respect to interim supply, thereafter to deal with government motions 8 and 9 with respect to the referral of interim supply to committee of supply and the number of days of interim supply, thereafter consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech and, time permitting, second readings of Bill 9, Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006, and Bill 10, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech, Committee of the Whole on Bill 19, and second reading of Bill 14, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, Bill 16, Peace Officer Act, and Bill 17, Libraries Amendment Act, 2006, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 8, in the afternoon we would anticipate, presuming that the interim supply has been entered, committee day 1 of interim supply and at 8 p.m. day 2 of interim supply, and, time permitting, third reading of Bill 19, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006.

On Thursday, March 9, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 11, Architects Amendment Act, 2006, Bill 12, Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006, Bill 13, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006, and Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act, and Committee of the Whole with respect to any bills that might be available.

Second Reading

Bill 3
Protection Against Family Violence
Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006.

Family violence has devastating consequences for children and families, and it plagues communities throughout our province. It means constant fear and despair to many. No one should have to live like this. That's why one of this government's top priorities is to end family violence.

As the MLA for Red Deer-North, where the hon. Premier first announced the provincial round-table on family violence, I'm extremely pleased to see this process coming full circle. The amendments proposed in this act respond to the issues and concerns Albertans shared with us at the round-table.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

One of the most significant changes is the expansion of the definition of family violence to include stalking. Too often after an individual leaves a violent relationship, they become a victim of stalking, and too often this results in serious injury or even murder. This civil protection legislation will ensure that those who have gathered the courage to leave violent relationships are protected from further family violence. Alberta is only the second jurisdiction in Canada to make this provision.

Bill 3 also includes the addition of a preamble. This will clarify the legislation's objectives and allow for a more consistent interpretation of the act. The preamble confirms the commitment of the people and the Legislature of Alberta to preventing family violence. The proposed amendments also expand the definition of family members to include relatives who don't live together. This means that vulnerable family members, including seniors and people with disabilities, can be protected.

Bill 3 also provides a more comprehensive explanation of family violence and removes the word "intentional" from the definition. This will provide caseworkers, police, and judges with an increased understanding of the dynamics of family violence and help them determine when an emergency protection order should be granted. It also means that emergency protection orders can be granted even if abusers say that they did not mean to hurt the victim. The proposed amendments also extend the review time for these orders by two days to ensure that the court has the best information possible when reviewing an order.

Bill 3 removes the requirement to impose counselling on victims because best practices suggest that positive outcomes for victims of family violence are best achieved through personal choices and voluntary participation. Counselling may still be ordered by the court for the abusers. Research also indicates that the effects of family violence on children need to be addressed in order to prevent long-term social and economic impact. That's why the proposed amendments will remove barriers so that children may receive counselling with the consent of only one parent or guardian.

These proposed amendments will make us more responsive to this issue and will protect even more people affected by family violence. I ask for the support of all members of the Assembly for Bill 3 to help ensure that Albertans are protected from the threat of family violence.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Assembly giving me time to introduce. It's at an appropriate time too. I have some very hard-working staff who are in the gallery observing the debate on the bill, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, and I would like to acknowledge them if I can, please.

I have Sheryl Fricke, who is the executive director of the prevention of family violence and bullying; Laura Alcock, who is the director of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, child and family services; Susan Taylor, senior manager from the office of the prevention of family violence and bullying; Sonja Ford, executive assistant, prevention of family violence and bullying; Debbie Malloy, who is my special adviser in the minister's office; and Jeri Romaniuk, who is my special project co-ordinator in my office. I'll ask everybody to give them a warm round. If they could rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading
Bill 3
Protection Against Family Violence
Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we consider Bill 3, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006, I would like to share some thoughts on violence. We talk of violence as a thing, a noun, a subject, or object, but it comes from "violate," a verb, a set of actions and attitudes. That's where I want to start.

What are the actions, the attitudes, the words and thoughts behind them by which we violate another living thing? We violate when we invade another's space or property, when we snoop or eavesdrop on words or sights not intended for us, read private letters or journals. We violate when we intrude on personal space, when we stand too close, talk in someone's face, make intimidating gestures or personal remarks. These can assault as much as a body blow. We can violate by impersonating someone or mimicking them unkindly, grabbing a purse or other personal object, even as a joke. We violate by slander, what we say about them, and by remarks about their relationships, families, friends, and the groups they belong to. All these things stop short of mugging, beating, sexual and other violent assaults.

These more serious offences grow out of an attitude of violation that does not hold sacred one's person and space. A culture that condones brutality in movies, video games, and some professional sports signals that violence may be okay. When we tolerate these assaults in our minds and on our screens on a regular basis, we place the onus on the individual to decide why certain kinds of violence are unacceptable when others are not. We violate not only when we commit acts towards specific people; we are implicated in policies that target groups, another race or gender, or another species.

This Bill 3 intends to protect against family violence, and we must support that effort. Violence against women continues to grow to epidemic proportions through acts of harassment, spousal assault, sexual violence, and the ultimate price to pay, death. In fact, we heard at the World Conference on Prevention of Family Violence, recently held in Banff, that there was a global agreement that domestic violence is a pandemic, and domestic violence should be addressed with the same attention as is given to the avian flu or HIV/AIDS. Abuse must end. When we hear statistics about violence, remember too that each number is more than a statistic. It is someone's life.

I would like to quote from Standing Together from the story Measures, by Leslie Wraithen, about violence against women:

Imagine cutting yourself off from your family and friends and everything you love. Imagine trying to contain the danger to just yourself.

Picture yourself moving your children in the middle of the night to another shelter because he has found you again.

Try to imagine making life beautiful for your children while you heal from three broken ribs.

Picture yourself thinking you would rather be dead than be hunted. Imagine being more afraid of life than death.

That is what violence does.

3:10

Last year Alberta shelters provided a safe haven for nearly 7,000 women and 7,000 children, assisted nearly 56,000 callers on crisis lines, yet they were unable to accommodate nearly 4,400 abused women and 4,000 children because they were full. Know that Alberta leads in many of the sorry statistics, whether it be the number of women who report being stalked, the number of women who report experiencing abuse, or the number of murder suicides. We also have one of the highest rates of women killed by their intimate partners.

Most of us are repelled by the violence that increasingly characterizes our society, but what are we doing about it? Women in Canada make up the vast majority of victims of crimes against the person, including sexual assault and spousal violence: four out of five victims of spousal homicide are female. Criminal harassment or stalking: female victims are overwhelmingly stalked by men. Kidnapping or abduction: violence against women is not random but an act of power and control.

We cannot forget the women who are afraid to ask for help, the child who won't speak, or a death that goes unsolved. So many voices have yet to be heard. We must work for change. This was driven home to us all during the Fekete inquiry last spring into the murder of Betty Fekete and her son Alex by Josif Fekete. The judge, after hearing five days of testimony, still has to recommend in 2005 that police officers should not treat chronic complaints made by a recipient of domestic violence, such as those made by Betty Fekete regarding death threats, as a nuisance and, therefore, unworthy of belief.

We must support the efforts of the shelters and family violence prevention programs here in our own community. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this amendment forward to clarify the Protection Against Family Violence Act. The purpose of this bill is to widen the scope of family violence to include stalking as a form of family violence. Furthermore, this bill will make enforcement against family violence easier for law enforcement officials by providing some clear definitions of what constitutes family violence. The bill looks at improving the emergency protection order process by making it easier to apply for such an order.

This bill is a positive step in protecting victims of family violence; however, I find some points requiring more clarity. If this bill is accepted as it is currently drafted, we're going to see a sharp increase in the number of people charged for committing family violence. In particular, this will be the case due to the broad terminology used to define conduct considered to be stalking. Also, removing the previously required intent of a respondent will mean more people being found guilty of family violence.

As I look at the rationale behind this, I realize that according to the 2005 study by Statistics Canada, Alberta does have the highest family violence in Canada. Alberta women are more likely to be physically abused by a family member than other women in Canada. Furthermore, aboriginal people report twice as many cases of stalking as nonaboriginals. One point that should be made regarding this bill is that it does not mention or address the higher rates of family violence and stalking that are experienced by aboriginal people.

I'm pleased that 4(b)(ii)(C) adds stalking as a form of family violence, that 4(b)(iii) adds a clause that defines stalking, and 4(c) adds a clause that defines conduct considered to be stalking. However, section 1(2)(c) may be problematic. Specifically, the clause is very general and includes terms such as "being present at . . . any place where a family member, or anyone known to the family member, resides, works, carries on business or is . . . likely to be present." This clause seems to be far too wide reaching. Referring to this clause, there are endless innocent situations that may be deemed stalking, especially in a small community, so I am concerned about that.

I notice that 5(b)(iii) adds two clauses which include two new factors to be considered by a judge when issuing an EPO: "whether the respondent is or has been controlling" and "whether the family violence has been repetitive or escalating." The portion of this clause that includes "controlling" may be problematic. How exactly do we define controlling behaviour? At what point does a judge decide that a respondent's behaviour should be classified as controlling?

Section 5(b)(iv) adds two new factors to be considered by a judge when deciding whether to grant an EPO: the vulnerability of elderly claimants and the effects of family violence on a child who is in custody or care of the claimant. In my opinion, this is the most valuable amendment in this bill.

Looking at section 8, there's a new clause, 8(1.1), which states that a claimant's location may be disclosed by the court if an order is made that the respondent be restrained from attending that location. The previous clause stated that the location of the claimant must be kept confidential. From my understanding this clause is intended to allow a judge to order the respondent to stay away from the claimant, but if the location was required to be kept confidential, this would be difficult as the respondent would not know where they could not go. Perhaps we can get some clarity on that point.

Overall, this bill is a positive step in protecting victims of family violence, and I support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for leading this important bill through the legislative process for me. I want to also acknowledge the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who has spoken very passionately about the issue of family violence. On the questions that she is asking, we will certainly get back to her.

Mr. Speaker, family violence has devastating consequences on individuals, communities, and society as a whole. It can leave scars that last a lifetime. Thousands of Albertans are affected by family violence every year. Helping Albertans understand what family violence is and what can be done to prevent it has been a strong agenda for this government. Making improvements to the Protection Against Family Violence Act will help us meet those goals.

I'd like to remind everyone what this act is about. The act was created because there's no time to cut through red tape, like getting a peace bond or a restraining order, when violence is happening. It's all about immediate, emergency protection for victims. This act helps in situations where one family member is violent against another: punching, slapping, knocking down, or causing physical harm in some way. It is also used when a family member has threatened death or severe violence.

This act is not used to intervene in ordinary family tensions and disagreements, but it does protect all family members, Mr. Speaker – seniors, women, men, and children – and it helps anyone who has been a victim. The Protection Against Family Violence Act enables police, child intervention workers, and judges to act quickly in order to stop the violence, provide protection from future violence, and provide a breathing space so that family members can put longer term safety measures in place.

The amendments which the hon. Member for Red Deer-North just outlined will make this a more user-friendly piece of legislation, legislation that builds on what we heard at the World Conference on Prevention of Family Violence. During the conference we heard from 1,100 participants from 31 countries, and it served as an excellent reminder that no matter where we are in the world, we all have something in common: we are all touched by family violence, and we all want to do something about it. At the conference the United Arab Emirates made a commitment to establish the first women's shelter in their country, a huge step forward.

The world conference also helped to reinforce the fact that family violence isn't an issue exclusive to spouses and that we need to broaden our thinking and offer protection to other family members who could be vulnerable, such as seniors and the disabled, which is why we're expanding the definition of family members in the Protection Against Family Violence Act to include individuals who do not live together.

One of the most significant changes to the Protection Against Family Violence Act that I am particularly pleased with is the inclusion of stalking. Mr. Speaker, research indicates that 57 per cent of stalkers are partners or former partners of their victims, and you see it all too often. Someone tries to leave a violent relationship, their abuser attempts to retain their control by stalking, and that person ends up either completely traumatized for life, seriously injured, or dead.

I'd like my colleagues to imagine for a moment what it's like to live in constant fear for your safety and for the safety of your children, afraid to answer the phone or listen to the messages on your answering machine, always looking over your shoulder when you go out, afraid to answer the door, afraid of what that person might be doing to your children.

This change will help protect those who have left violent relationships and their family members. I want to be clear, though, that adding stalking to the definition of family violence under this act is for the sole purpose of protecting victims, not for investigating or laying charges against a stalker. That's what the Criminal Code is for. However, the definition of stalking in Bill 3 is similar to the one used in the Criminal Code, allowing for both pieces of legislation to work hand in hand. With this amendment we will become only the second province in Canada to protect victims from stalking.

Stalking victims are numerous, but they're afraid to speak up because what protection did they have before? With these amendments we're giving victims of stalking, victims of family violence a voice, and, Mr. Speaker, we're shattering the silence of family violence. Adding stalking to the Protection Against Family Violence Act as well as extending protection to seniors and the disabled, granting emergency protection orders more quickly, and helping children who bear witness to family violence receive the counselling they need will make this very good piece of legislation even better.

Before I finish, though, I'd like to share with my colleagues a powerful poem that was shared with me. I think it really puts things into perspective as to why our government is taking such a strong hand against family violence.

I got flowers today.
It wasn't my birthday or any other special day.
Last night we had a fight and he hit me.
But I know he is sorry . . .
Because I got flowers today.

I got flowers today.
It wasn't our anniversary or any other special day.
Last night . . . he threw me against the wall and started to choke me.
But I know he must be sorry . . .
Because I got flowers today.

I got flowers today . . .
and it wasn't Mother's Day or any other special day.
I was so swollen and bruised
I was ashamed to answer the door.
But I know he's sorry . . .
Because I got flowers today.

If I leave him . . .
Where will I go?
What about money?
What about my kids?
It's getting worse every time . . .
But I'm afraid to leave.
But I know he's sorry.
Because I got flowers today.

My friends and family filed by to see me . . .
Asking why I never left him.
If only I had the strength and courage to . . .
But I didn't.
So . . . I got flowers today.

Mr. Speaker, I think this poem says it all, and I ask all members of the Assembly to support Bill 3.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate both the Member for Red Deer-North and the Minister of Children's Services bringing forward Bill 3, strengthening and diversifying the Protection Against Family Violence Act. It certainly is a necessary thing to do. Here in the province of Alberta we have a very unacceptably high rate of family violence, and this can only be stemmed somehow by a combination of changing the laws that can penalize offenders but also combined with a means by which we can educate our population and perhaps the next generation to understand just how destructive the various elements of family violence are to individuals and to our society as a whole.

I, too, was struck by the statistic of the fact that over half of stalkers are, in fact, former partners of individuals, mostly women having this violence perpetrated on them by men. You know, this is indicative of a way by which the pattern of violence is enacted in our society. I just wanted to, if I could, reflect on some of the reasons why, in fact, men are abusive towards their partners or former partners. You know, most of it centres around this issue of control. It's not anything to do with creating a loving family situation. Rather, it's an extension of control turned to violence. A lot of this sort of behaviour stems from a very rigid definition in the perpetrator's mind of what male and female roles are and where the power does lie. Therefore, I do certainly support initiatives such as Bill 3, but the importance of educating our own children, particularly male children, to understand the importance of equality in a family relationship I think is equally as important to stemming the tide of violence.

Also, of course, a very large emerging reason why, in fact, people do perpetrate violence against their spouses or ex-spouses or partners is that they are continuing a pattern of violence that they themselves were victim of in their earlier life or as children. Once again, we know that if we can break that cycle at any point in time between the generations, then we're likely not to be just benefiting the women and families that are amongst us now but for generations to come.

Certainly, I do, as I said, have mostly positive things to say about this particular bill. As I've been reading it here, I suppose that extending stalking into the act is a good idea, but, you know, the reason that perhaps it was slow to become part of this act previously is that it's a little bit more difficult to define. As a previous speaker, I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, pointed out, there are several places here where I think we need to look at the language more specifically, and perhaps we can do that in the committee stage. Just looking at when a person is defined as being dangerous perhaps to the person, then just how we control a person's movements can be problematic. Certainly, it's not something that's insurmountable for the fine minds that sit and stand around this Chamber to come up with some way to make it work.

Specifically, I would like to just draw your attention very briefly to section 5(b) on page 4. It's adding the need to take into consideration when issuing an emergency protection order "the claimant's need for a safe environment to arrange for longer-term protection from family violence." You know, our own WIN House here in Edmonton, just one of the shelters available to people in difficulties, had to turn away more than a thousand women seeking assistance last year because of lack of funding and space to care for endangered women and children. You know, if we have a lack of proper community and public support for many women and children who choose to remove themselves from difficult situations, then I think this is an important piece of the puzzle that is in fact missing. Not to take away from the importance of this bill, but we have to have other services in concert that can work to reinforce the good intentions of this bill.

Also, I would suggest that one of the problems that law enforcement officers have with, say, restraining orders and the whole mechanism by which stalking is dealt with now in the law enforcement service is that it's simply very difficult to monitor and to carry forward. I know from the work that we do in my own constituency of Edmonton-Calder that when people do come forward with difficulties associated with family violence, of course the police can advise very admirably and competently what people should do, but in regard to enforcement they're often simply short of staff to be able to follow through and perhaps come when a call is made for someone who is violating a restraining order or something of that nature. So, once again, for us to make sure that we have adequate law enforcement in place at a community level I think is an important part of making this bill effective.

Finally, I just would like to certainly suggest our tentative support of Bill 3. We are interested, however, just to perhaps clarify some of the language contained therein and again reinforce the importance of other elements in our own society that need to be strengthened, including education and police enforcement and shelters, so that we can have an integrated approach to attack this problem of family violence in our province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 3 on behalf of my constituents of Edmonton-Decore. I do think this is a good bill, and I do support this. It's a growing concern. It's been growing for years, and it's finally being addressed here today with this introduction of the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006.

It doesn't surprise me that we lead the country in violence, as quoted from Statistics Canada by my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods. We also lead the country with privatization of liquor stores. We also have gambling, which leads to addictions. We have these people gambling, which is available all the time. A person can come home after spending their paycheque and become violent after that and take it out on their family. We recognize that that does happen.

There's also the fact that after having the liquor stores being privatized, they're available everywhere, making it more accessible. We need to address that. With the drinking that goes on out there, more counselling is needed. Its availability is becoming alarming. We have increased family violence due just, I think, to the privatization that we've allowed with our liquor stores. There's one on a convenient corner near you, which does concern me as well.

If this bill is accepted in its current form, I think you could see a sharp increase in the number of people charged with family violence. I'm pleased that it includes seniors as well as family members. We know that as we're an aging population and kids now are living at home longer and longer, they may in fact come to their aging parents and want money. We've seen commercials advertising it and how subtle family violence in some cases is. Unfortunately, it's some of the seniors, the aging parents, that are recipients of that.

Family members – some people may not be willing to come forward. I know that in my constituency I don't have that many people coming forward. I think maybe they don't recognize it perhaps because it's subtle in some cases, or in some cases they, in fact, are embarrassed that it's even happening to them and how they allowed themselves to get into this position for this long without leaving. Some fear for what's going to happen to the kids, and that's a big thing as well. The kids are an important fact here that needs to be addressed, and I do believe that this bill will protect the children as well as the spouse, whichever one is in fact under the abuse piece here.

The other portion that I'm concerned about. Mr. Speaker, it is a positive aspect in respecting family violence. I said before that I do believe it's a good bill, but I'm disappointed it doesn't in fact address more cases for aboriginal people living out in the rural areas as well as in the urban areas, too, because it is becoming an alarming rate among the growing population. That is a population that is in fact – you read time and time again in the paper – on the receiving end of violence or murders. It's a growing population that we need to address, and I'm glad again that this does bring it in here as well.

School is an excellent source. If we're going to nip this in the bud, it's got to start with education. I'll give that to the education system. They have that Safe and Caring Schools initiative. Then they have the conflict teams to recognize and tell them already at a young age that this behaviour is not acceptable, that this language is not acceptable. But it's going to take a lot of time to go through this.

I've got a couple of questions with regard to what would be considered stalking. I know that the police sometimes are at a hard point because it's not within the bill. A person has now taken up residence across the street from their spouse, looking across the street from their window, perhaps with binoculars. Is that considered stalking, and can they do anything with regard to that? They said that sometimes, as the member said, as it is, they can't do anything about it. I don't know. Hopefully, this bill can address something like that as well.

What about internal conflicts? This came to my attention during an open house town hall meeting with Chief Boyd taking on crime. He was doing his tour of all the communities. A constituent had come up with repeated violence that she was in fact the recipient of by her husband, her spouse, but that spouse was a member of the Edmonton Police Service.

Now, they'd like to keep a lid on something like this because they don't want to taint the members or the force with something like this because it doesn't happen in the force. But this lady, in fact, was a recipient of this, but she's being muzzled: can't talk about it, cannot call the police, cannot call the mayor. Does this preclude being investigated by their own? Will it be able to take on services such as the police force when they have investigations on one of their own, or does it allow just the police force to investigate their own? That would be one of the concerns that I would have.

Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not prolong the discussion. The point I want to make is that certainly the intent of the bill is good. Adding stalking I think is important, and I especially like the idea of the disabled and the elderly claimants because we're hearing more about elder abuse all the time. As I say, I think the bill is a good bill. But I think, as my colleague was talking about, it comes down to how you begin to enforce it.

I think we know pretty clearly what stalking is. If you look at the family violence in Canada from Statistics Canada – I'm sure the minister has seen the stalking, criminal harassment. They talk about obscene phone calls most frequently, but they say that "more than one-half of female stalking victims reported that their stalker phoned them repeatedly or made silent or obscene . . . calls" – that was 52 per cent of them – "while one third reported being spied on . . . and/or being intimidated or threatened." That was 34 per cent. "In contrast, more than half of male stalking victims . . . reported being intimidated or threatened." So, generally, I think that when we get into stalking, it shouldn't be just an isolated thing. I think it's a number of repeated phone calls and these sorts of things.

What I'm coming to is that in the same report it's been alluded to that Alberta has the highest rate of stalking for women in the country, 13 per cent; for men, not quite the highest but 7 per cent. My point, to come back to a good part of the bill, 5(b)(iv), is that if we're going to add stalking, as we should, and when we do have the numbers – now, I'm sure that with adding to this bill, there's going to be much more pressure on the courts. There's going to be much more pressure in terms of people needing the help, safe places, shelters, and that sort of thing. That's my concern, not the bill but what happens after in terms of the situation.

I know that the minister is well aware of this. There are shelters that my colleague talked about in Edmonton – but I'm pretty sure it's true throughout Alberta, that the shelters that we have now, with the laws we have now, we're being turned away. Even though we have the laws, if we can't do something about it if it gets clogged, then a good piece of legislation, if we don't have the enforcement, might not be particularly helpful. So I lay that out as a concern, not about the bill, but what happens after is my concern.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. My apologies. I was remiss after the previous speaker. Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you still want to ask your question to the Member for Edmonton-Decore or speak on the bill?

Ms Blakeman: I think I'll just go ahead and speak on the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I guess with some regret I thank the Speaker for the opportunity to speak to this bill again today. I really would like to be able to not get up in this House and speak about violence against women, and I would really like to not have to deal with another bill that's trying to protect women because I would really like to see the resolution of this issue. I've now been working on this for probably 30 years. In many ways it seems to be escalating, and none of us that work in this area are able to identify whether, in fact, there are more women and family members that are victims of abuse or whether we're just getting better at getting them to come forward and identify themselves so that we can make note of their numbers and compile the statistics.

I look back to the genesis of this bill with pride. This bill was originally proposed by the Liberal member for then Edmonton-Highlands, Alice Hanson. It was the first time, I think, that an opposition member's sponsored bill ever passed second reading in this Assembly and had support of the Assembly. It was a fairly historic document at that point. It did go through an additional consultation process over the summer and was brought back in Committee of the Whole, at which point there was a parliamentary procedure that was used to have the chairman leave the chair, actually, in Committee of the Whole, and the bill basically disappeared into thin air. I sponsored it the next year, and then it reappeared as a government bill. It was sponsored by the then Member for Calgary-Currie and passed at that time.

I believe this is the first amendment act that we've had to that bill, and that original bill must have passed in about 2000, if I'm remembering things right. So I would say that this is a tribute to Alice Hanson. This bill has stood the test of time. We're really not having to go back and correct it for any mistakes that were made in the original drafting of it; rather, we're dealing with the refinements that we feel we need to be making to the bill to make sure that we are protecting everyone that needs to be able to take advantage of what's being offered in this bill.

It's interesting. I at one time was the executive director of the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, and because of that I was stalked by a member of the public for a period of time. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I had the full resources of the Edmonton Police Service behind me to help me out, and I got to carry around the phone number of a detective, and they checked on me I don't know how often. I was aware that I was being helped and protected and that people were watching out for me, and I was able to continue to move about my city and through my life with a degree of confidence. At the same time, I knew that the very women that I was working for on behalf of Albertans and on behalf of the advisory council – those women that were being stalked by domestic partners did not have the same protection that I did because I was being stalked by a member of the public. Yes, it was political, but I never understood, and to me it was a great irony that in my position I got that protection and the women that I was working for didn't. That's 15 years ago. So it's taken us 15 years to come to this point.

I understand that the sponsoring member and the minister are saying that we're one of the first two in Canada to recognize that and to offer legislation to protect victims of stalking. What a sad comment. All we seem to have been able to do with the issue of violence against women is to find the layers. I don't think it's gotten more complicated. I think it always was complicated. We slowly peel back the layers, and now we've reached the layer and the understanding of what stalking does to people's lives.

I always approach this issue from a point of fear, in the same way that one of the tests that we look at in law is harm. Is harm being caused? Who is being harmed by a particular action? I always approach this issue about fear because to me it wasn't enough that you had to appear bloody and beaten. I think that women's lives were and are changed forever by the fear that they could not move about in their city and through their lives as I was able to because they were having to deal with that element of fear and to bring caution into their lives on all parts. This is doubled, tripled, quadrupled with every child that that woman is likely to be responsible for. My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods was quoting from a book in which a mother was talking about: how do you teach your children that there are beautiful things in life when you are paralyzed and locked inside of your own home for fear that if you go outside, you will be discovered and stalked and worse to follow that?

So I am pleased to see the addition of the stalking amendments. As always, I want this to be Charter proof. I want this to work. So I am wondering: what was the feedback? I'm assuming that this bill was run through the Legal Resource Centre or the Law Reform Institute, which is usually the avenue that the government takes to sort of test new law. I'd like to hear back some assurance that this, in fact, is going to stand the test.

Three other issues I'd like to raise. One is the health connection, and it's something that I talk about a lot now as the opposition critic for health. There are a couple of ways that we can reduce the cost in health care: by reducing some of the demands on the acute care systems and particularly the emergency system that are completely preventable. One of those is motor vehicle accidents, and the other one is domestic violence. This is completely preventable, and if we continue to work hard on it, I'm hoping that the numbers are going to go down. This is a consumer of acute care, high-cost health care dollars, and there's no reason for it. This is not accidental. This is not some act of God that we have no control over. This is a societal problem, and we all have to continue to work on it.

It does cost our society in many ways. It costs us through police services, through hospitals and health care, lost production time, incarceration, penitentiary time. It costs society a great deal to have violence perpetrated, particularly when it's systematic, it's systemic, and it's family-based. The family is the basis of our society, and when we allow people to be in fear in their own homes, it's a challenge to us to try and address that.

I'd also like to talk about the need for cultural education and support for cultural education. There's been a great deal of discussion in Alberta recently about the need for workers and skilled workers and looking at whether we could bring in short-term temporary workers or whether we need to increase immigration. Mr. Speaker, in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre it's both a blessing and a challenge to be able to welcome a significant number of the immigrants and new Canadians that arrive in Edmonton, who tend to come into Edmonton-Centre mostly because of the cheaper housing stock, I think, and because of the availability of some of the social service helping agencies' settlement services that are clustered downtown. But we see a lot of people that are coming here from other countries. They stabilize and then they move off to other neighbourhoods.

In Edmonton I'm aware that Mill Woods, of course, is also a large cultural centre for people that have come from other places. That's a challenge for us, to continue to work with those communities in a way to be supportive but to also be firm that in Canada and in Alberta that's not acceptable behaviour, that it does cost all of us, and that we expect society to work together and to help each other to break through that cycle of violence.

That's not done in isolation, and I think that it's important that the ministry recognize and that the government recognize and fund settlement and cultural agencies that are working with distinct groups to try and get programs in place to combat family violence, to educate women and family members that this is a crime and that it is not acceptable behaviour. We just have too many people that don't get out and circulate, and they don't have an opportunity to find out that there is help there for them, that this is not behaviour that we accept. We have to reach out into those communities, and there are some innovative ways to do it.

In Edmonton, and I think now beyond that, we have the multicultural health brokers, which is a coalition of people in the health professions and social service professions who come from various backgrounds and speak various languages. It's very high. It's 30-some languages that I think the group in Edmonton speaks. They're able to get out into those communities. They're approaching people to give them advice about prenatal care and that kind of thing, and as they do that, they're watching for those signs. They're educating women in those communities and helping to draw them out and to give them tools to work with. But they're doing something there that's not specifically paid for under what we would call traditional medicine. That's preventive medicine, and it needs to be funded and supported.

The Mennonite Centre for Newcomers is also in my constituency along with an organization called Changing Together. Both of these organizations work almost exclusively with immigrants and new Canadians who have come from other places, and those are exactly the kinds of programs we are trying to offer.

So we have to remember that as we invite new immigrants to come to our province to augment our labour base, they need a good start here. That includes things like assistance with language training but also assistance with what the Mennonites call settlement services. It's about housing. It's about how you get around the city: how to use a bus, how the shopping and grocery stores work, and all of that kind of thing. It's also what society expects from you and how you get help if things start to go wrong.

I continue to advocate for funding for those groups: reliable, predictable, long-term funding and not piecemeal, where you're getting one grant from this Department of Health and another grant from that Department of Children's Services and a third grant from Human Resources and Employment. It just means that their administrators spend all their time writing grant proposals and not any time actually doing the work that they're supposed to be doing. We need to get out of the silo on that one.

Lastly, I think we need to have the conversation – and maybe we can have it as part of this debate – around incarceration. If we're going to follow through from this bill, which is offering protection, and if someone contravenes that and crosses the legal barriers, then what are we comfortable with as a society? Do we want people locked up, or are people comfortable with some sort of house arrest or electronic bracelets or community service? We haven't really had that conversation, and I think it's a conversation that we need to have.

What value do we place on this? What are we looking for? There's a common phrase about correctional institutions: are you looking to punish, or are you looking to rehabilitate? We need to have that discussion here. I think we're trying to protect people and members of our society. We don't have enough jail space, literally. We've got huge problems in the remand centre. We have to start having that discussion about what our expectations are, about whether people would be locked up or not. I hope that that's a conversation that flows from this because it's part of this discussion.

So I am pleased to support this bill. I think the government has done a good job in following through on this one. I've been very critical in the past, and I was right to have been very critical in the past. This, I think, is a positive step forward. My colleagues have shared some of the concerns that they have coming from their areas of expertise, and I'm glad I got the opportunity to speak to it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I notice that the member was cut off just short of finishing a sentence. I would have liked to hear what she was going to finish with. Would the member be able to continue on with her conversation, what she was giving?

The Acting Speaker: It's a session for questions or comments.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I was talking about the continuum of violence from the identification of the services in the community, the support services that are offered by those agencies in the community, the existence of legislation like this that gives us that framework to work from, and the end point, where I feel the discussion hasn't happened. The one piece that I didn't get into that continuum is the whole court system. In Alberta we have been very good at developing some innovative programs, particularly – and I'm not going to get the right name; I'm sorry – a special department working through Justice that is specially trained Crown prosecutors who deal specifically with family violence caseloads.

My one concern around that is that there seems to be a desire on the behalf of somebody in the Justice department to move the Crown prosecutors around every six months. But for that particular area the whole point was that you developed a specialization, and when you're moving one Crown prosecutor out of there every six months – and it's a fairly small team to begin with – you actually are creating huge upheaval in that department because somebody's on their way, like, every couple of months. So I'm asking as part of the context of this bill for the Minister of Justice to have a look at that.

Thank you for the opportunity for me to get that in there when I wasn't able to get it in earlier.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 1

Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Premier.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to rise this afternoon on behalf of our hon. Premier and in tandem with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness as well to request leave to move at second reading Bill 1, which is the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act.

The legislation before us today is extremely important for the health and wellness of Albertans now and in the future. Bill 1 will leave a legacy for our children, our grandchildren, and our great-grandchildren. Most importantly, it will save lives. Cancer, as we all know, is a leading cause of death in Alberta. Today 81,000 Albertans are living with cancer. Without this particular legislation the numbers would otherwise grow to about 200,000 by the year 2025.

Currently almost half of all Alberta men and two out of every five Alberta women are likely to be diagnosed with cancer at some point during their lifetimes. The number of Albertans living with cancer is increasing rapidly due to population growth, an aging population, and patients living longer. The economic burden of cancer is also growing at an astonishing rate, rapidly consuming resources, increasing costs, and eroding economic activity.

There is good news, however. Research does show that half of all cancers are preventable. As our Premier said when he introduced Bill 1 last week, Alberta is very well positioned to attack cancer at every level, from prevention right through to potential cures. This bill, Bill 1, is very consistent with our priorities for health renewal in Alberta: to take action on wait times and improve both quality of care and regional service integration. The strategic investment that will be facilitated by this legislation will also allow greater collaborative work in the areas of cancer prevention, screening, and research. Increased cancer prevention strategies will involve a combination of research, education, public policy development, and social marketing initiatives. There will be expanded and new cancer screening programs to detect the signs of cancer at an early age. A virtual Alberta cancer research institute will be created to co-ordinate all cancer research in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, the target is to reduce the incidence of cancer by 35 per cent by the year 2025 and to reduce the mortality from cancer by 50 per cent by the same year, 2025.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will help ensure that Alberta is positioned as a leading centre for cancer expertise in North America. It will help Alberta prepare now for the growing demand for cancer services in our province. The work that is done and the expertise that will be achieved through this legislation will create a cancer-free future for Albertans.

I ask on behalf of our Premier for the support of the House at this important second stage of Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, and I'm delighted to move it at second.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in my role as opposition critic for Health and Wellness and speak in support of this bill in second reading, that being Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I think that Alberta is at such a point of opportunity, and this bill is maybe able to take advantage of that position of opportunity. Certainly, Alberta Liberals have looked a lot at how well positioned we are right now and the immense possibilities that are open in front of us.

Seeking a cure for cancer is one of those things that I think we all dream about when we look at things that we would like to accomplish. It's admirable that the Premier wanted to take a first step in achieving this dream. It's a part of a larger dream. I think that if we are successful in implementing what is envisioned in this bill, it moves beyond Alberta to information technologies, methods of treatment, research, and hopefully prevention that can be shared with other parts of Canada.

We're under intense scrutiny in this province right now from others because they see the amount of money we have and encounter often an attitude from the government – you know, “It’s mine; you can’t have any” – which is difficult for others in Canada to understand when we seem to have so much. Here’s an opportunity for us to invest in something that, in fact, has a much wider ripple effect, that all may benefit from. I hope that this bill, this idea is looked at by the government as part of a continuum. I’d be very disappointed if the government dusts off its hands and goes: “Well, there, we’ve done it. That was it. This bill is all we needed. Let’s go home. Done.” I really believe that we need to look at this as part of a larger context.

I, too, have met with the Alberta Cancer Board. I was very impressed with them and understand what they were seeking. In fact, I see what they were seeking exactly reflected in this bill. So we have the infrastructure side of things, and really what we’re talking about there are the cancer centres in Edmonton and Calgary.

The cancer centre in Edmonton. We’ve identified what needs to happen. We’ve moved on to the stage of design. We know where it’s going to be situated. It’s well on its way, and we have a pretty good idea of how much money it’s going to cost. It’s a little bit more difficult in Calgary. Haven’t looked at exactly what we need the building to do and what would be in it and who would be working there. I think they have identified where it’s going to be. But the design of the building to support the functions that they identify: they’re not at that stage. So we’re less aware of how much money, but I think there’s a ballpark figure that people are working with. So the money that is identified and set aside in this bill is going to get us most of the way there but not quite all of the way there.

The larger part and the more optimistic part and the more exciting part of the bill is the funding that should play out to research, the testing and screening component, and prevention. What I’m trying to urge the government to do is to stop siloing cancer, to stop looking at cancer as something neatly put in a box because I think increasingly what we’re learning is that that is simply not true. If we’re actually going to tackle this one, we have to come at it with a much more holistic approach. That can sound rather tired and a little crunchy granola to some members here, I’m sure, but it’s said with the best intentions. We can research cancer till the cows come home, but if we don’t combine it with the other components that are outlined here, we are not going to move this forward. Again, we can test and screen forever, and we will identify all kinds of cancers, but if we don’t combine it with the research and the prevention modules, it won’t move us forward. We have to combine all three and take those seriously.

I’m always interested in the juxtapositions that I witness in this House, and there are two of them that I’m seeing come with this bill. On the one hand, we have this bill being tabled in the House on one of the same days that we have people here who have come from elsewhere in Alberta because coal-bed methane exploration is resulting in contamination of their well water to the point where they can set it on fire. You juxtapose that kind of toxicity in someone’s life with this grand bill to deal with ending cancer. You’ve got to put those two things together, folks. You’ve got to understand that they’re both existing in Alberta at the same time and start to understand that those two things have to be dealt with at the same time. They’re part of the same thing.

The other juxtaposition, the one that the media and a number of other people picked up on very quickly, is: well, how come we didn’t get a stronger nonsmoking bill out of the government if they really meant this? Why did they allow it to be watered down? Why is it okay to protect people in most workplaces in the province but not to protect people if they’re working or playing, I suppose, in a casino or a bar, where a minor wouldn’t be allowed? Indeed, that’s an interesting juxtaposition, and I can’t explain that, so I’ll leave it to the government members to explain it.

What we have to look at is that we have to understand and integrate the social determinants of health, and that especially comes into play when we look at the prevention module of what’s being proposed here. Certainly, the Alberta Cancer Board and its affiliates and agencies and supporters and academic institutions are more than capable of dealing with the research side of what’s being proposed here and dealing with the testing and screening side of it. That’s what they do. They’re experts in that. That’s where their capacity is, and it’s not particularly the capacity of government. I mean, we fund those agencies, but they’re the experts at it. We turn to them to do that work. But they do not have the capacity for prevention. They can put out some good brochures or PowerPoints or web pages with some information, but if we’re really going to get at prevention and we’re really going to deal with social determinants of health, the capacity lies with the government.

I’m asking the government to recognize that and to pick up that piece of what we’re looking at here because that’s where the ball falls. To pretend that it’s nothing to do with them, this bill is not going to be successful. This idea will not live long enough to become a legacy to anyone and certainly not create any kind of legacy for Albertans.

We need to create healthier populations so that they can cope with what either genetics or the environment throws at them. We really are starting to get a pretty good idea of what causes cancer. If we can get well on the road to getting healthier populations so that they can better withstand this, whether it’s coming at them from a genetic basis or whether it’s coming at them from an environmental basis, we need to work towards that. Let me give you a couple of example of things that we could be doing.

Hot lunch programs for kids. We know that if we can set kids up to be successful by age six, their chance becomes equal with any other child in this province to be as successful as they want to be. If we don’t help them get to that point, then we know that they are much more likely to turn up using the resources of the police system, the criminal system, the corrections system, also the health system, social services, and a whole range of other costs that we share as taxpayers. But, frankly, we don’t need to be paying that money out if we could have prevented it in the first place. So it’s programs for kids. It’s things like hot lunch programs.

It’s things like safe, affordable housing. For that, I think the government could be taking more of a leadership role in working with its municipalities to make sure that we have safe, affordable housing, and that we’re also looking to the consumer protection side of things. This government was embroiled – and I think it was just settled recently – in the pine shakes debacle, which started just about the time that I got elected. The government is the only agency that really is capable of gathering the information and doing the unbiased testing and then being able to give that kind of consumer protection advice, and the pine shakes episode is a classic case on how not to do it. But I think we should learn the lessons from that.

When we talk about safe, affordable housing, I’m not only talking about the availability of it and that we try and help cities design neighbourhoods that work well together but also that we’re not recommending or promoting any particular kind of material being used. One of the things that we need to look at is the building materials that are used in houses. We know that many of them contain materials that are known to be carcinogens, but we still continue to promote them because they’re cheaper. But are they really cheaper? If we’re building houses that, when people live in them, contribute to the likelihood – this is the environmental part of what I was talking about – of their getting cancer at some point, have we really saved ourselves money? I don't think so. I think we've cost ourselves money. This is part of what I'm talking about. You've got to really start to look at this in a holistic way, approach it with that kind of attitude.

Some of the other social determinants of health that we know are really important are access to education, things like wages. The city of Edmonton has committed with the assistance and inspiration, actually, of the Edmonton Community Foundation to a program working with low-income families – it's a study actually, a long-term study – to give families access to different levels of support and, particularly, access to recreation. Again, that's something else that I'm sure some of the colleagues in here would say: "Oh, that's a frill. You should be on your own for that. You should be paying for that yourself." But when we look at it in context, we know that if people start to build up that stress and they have no way of getting rid of it and they have no education that helps them understand that they need to work that out of their system, we do start to see it turn up as a contributing factor.

I think that we also want to look at curriculums in schools. You know, if we're going to be serious about this, let's approach the whole thing. If I may just give a very quick example. I was really impressed when I was in Austin a couple of years ago because they set out as a city to brand themselves as the music capital of North America. You'd go: "Oh, yeah. Ho hum. Big deal. It's a tourism tag line." But they took it seriously. They really went through everything in their city and said: what can we do to promote music and promote ourselves as the music capital of North America in this department, in that department, in the way we do this, that, or the next thing?

Here's some of the stuff they came up with. The music in their airport is not muzak. It is the CDs of local bands that are played through that system. So when you get off the plane and walk through that airport in Austin and you're hearing that music and you're going, "Oh, that's kind of cool" – you know what? – you're listening to local music. So right from the minute you walk into that city, you start to be a part of that atmosphere that they created, that they are a music capital.

In the city hall they have a stage set up and they have a band that comes in once a week – one of the local bands, new band, touring band, whatever – and plays for one set for the city council. It's a free concert, and anybody else can wander into city hall and hear it at the same time.

So they took that kind of integration seriously, and they looked at the traffic patterns and bussing people into the festival sites and how they could move people around to hear more music. They took that seriously and looked at everything. That's why it works, and that's why they were successful. They didn't just limit themselves to tourism brochures. They really took it seriously.

The last part I want to talk about is minimizing the health hazards. I've talked about prevention. I've talked about making people healthier, making you stronger so that as a population you get healthier. If we're going to make those changes, we're not being very successful with us. We're really having a hard time convincing people that are 40 and 50 and 60 that, you know, you've got to change your whole lifestyle; you've got to lose that weight; you've got to change the way you've been eating your whole life. We're not very successful at that.

What do we know works? We know that it works if you start with kids. So really we need to start with the kids now in order to have a change in our population 20 years from now. The curriculum is important, but it's also a range of other things that become really important. If we want people to be healthy and, you know, think nothing about walking for 20 or 25 minutes to get to an event or something, you've got to start that stuff when they're kids. That's why I'm talking about the recreation part of stuff.

You've got to talk about nutrition and accessibility to good food. Frankly, if you've got a kid growing up in a neighbourhood where Safeway has locked down the only grocery store for 15 years and they can't get another grocery store there – all they get is the gas quick stop stores, you know, which only sell milk and pastries – how are the people that live there supposed to get access to good food? So there are a lot more parts to this than just saying: we're going to throw money into this, and they're going to screen and research, and it'll all be solved.

Back to minimizing the health hazards. I think we need to look at aggressive environmental standards and evidence-based environmental standards. If this government doesn't want to listen to me, then listen to your own friends, listen to the Canada West Foundation, listen to Preston Manning, listen to the TD Bank, who are all telling you that we have to be green. We've got to be conscious of what's in our environment and how we're handling environmental – I'm just going to call them toxins for want of a better word. My apologies if that offends anybody. I'm just trying to get a word that encapsulates that I'm talking about.

Let's look at some of the things that have already become issues in our province that we know put things into the atmosphere, the water, the food, the ground, that we eat, that we consume, that our animals consume, that get into our bodies, that cause us trouble and have links to cancer, things like sour gas flaring, things like coal-bed methane exploration and development, things like intensive livestock operations.

Thus far, what this government has done is to facilitate business improving all of that, and we've got to take another look at that and go: what are we really enabling here? Is there really a balance from the decisions that the government has made? Are we really going to come out ahead on this one? Not just a couple of smart entrepreneurs that have done a good job in lobbying the government and in running their business efficiently that come out on top, I mean all Albertans coming out on top. I would argue that if you've got a couple of successful entrepreneurs balanced against a high rate of a particular kind of cancer in a given neighbourhood, we haven't done this very well. We've allowed that set of scales to tip in favour, and all Albertans pay that price.

I think we need to look very carefully at really strengthening the citizens' ability to get at and present anecdotal material and support them with research when we're talking about things like applications to the EUB and the other environmental boards that make decisions about exploration that's being allowed in various sectors versus what can get into our water, our air, our ground, our animals, that kind of thing.

So just to close, Mr. Speaker, I think we have a huge opportunity here in Alberta. I encourage the government to proceed with this investment. I'd like to see this benefit Albertans and, further, benefit all Canadians and beyond to the world. I don't want to waste opportunities or to underutilize here. The government has a tendency, in my opinion, to start well and then not follow through, and I think it would be a real shame if we didn't follow through on this one.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I want to indicate how important I view the fight against cancer. It needs to be a priority for not just the government but for all aspects of society in Alberta, and I believe that the act is a good start towards doing that.

Alberta has a strong history in dealing with cancer, and the Alberta Cancer Board, in my view, is an outstanding organization that over a period of many years has made a real contribution to people who are living with cancer and towards eventually eliminating the scourge of cancer. As our population ages and increases in this province, Mr. Speaker, we're going to be faced with a dramatic increase in the number of persons living with cancer and, ultimately, the number of deaths that occur as a result of this terrible disease.

My wife worked for many years at the Cross Cancer Institute, Mr. Speaker, and during that time I had the opportunity to become somewhat familiar with some of the issues and some of the operations of the Cancer Board and of the Cross. I can't say how many people came to me and talked about the wonderful compassion and professionalism of the people that work at the Cross Cancer Institute, and I heard similar things about the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary. Those people have done a great deal to save lives, to do research, and to comfort and care for people in their last weeks of life. I can't say enough about the wonderful care and compassion that is provided by those people.

Mr. Speaker, we are looking at a very substantial amount of money going into cancer facilities. As the population ages and as cancer rates rise, there's a need to care for those people, and that means major investments, including major investments in capital. But unless we take very clear and bold and forward-looking steps to deal with prevention and early detection of cancer, we may become overwhelmed by the financial costs of duplicating that investment not just once but many times. So the focus on prevention, in my view, is essential. It's obviously more than a money-saving exercise; it's an exercise in preventing people from getting sick and preventing people from dying premature deaths and all of the things that means for those people and their families.

So I think it's very much a good overall direction. I want to say, though, that I think that there are other things that need to be done, and the government is not being consistent in its stated aim of doing all it can to prevent cancer and to bring down the rates of cancer and ultimately even find a cure for some types of cancer in this province. The most obvious example, Mr. Speaker, is the lack of resolute action on smoking. I heard the Premier say today in his news availability that it's just a matter of some old guys that still smoke and they wouldn't be around forever and eventually we could move toward a totally smoke-free environment.

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that 30 per cent of cancers in Alberta are caused by smoking. If you allow smoking in bars, it doesn't matter if the people doing the smoking are old codgers or whatever it is that the Premier said about them; the fact is that the people who have to work in those places, often young people, are exposed to second-hand smoke and thereby exposed to the risk of contracting lung cancer or other serious diseases. The objective is not just focusing on getting smokers to quit, but it's to protect nonsmokers from exposure to second-hand smoke. I think that the government has not done all that it could in that respect, and it needs to have the political courage to go a step farther than it has so far.

The other area where I think we need to look very carefully at what we're doing is with respect to environmental risks for cancer. Particularly because Alberta is the centre of the petrochemical industry in Canada, it has a higher rate of exposure to many cancer-causing chemicals than you might find in other parts of the country.

One of the most common chemicals that arises out of the petrochemical industry is benzene. It's one of the most carcinogenic chemicals that is commonly found in the environment.

I don't think that we are doing enough to protect people from exposure to these kinds of chemicals in the environment. We have, in my view, an EUB that doesn't do enough, that doesn't take into account the legitimate concerns of people around exposure to the petrochemical industry. I would like to see Alberta have the most stringent regulations and the most rigorous enforcement of those standards of any province in the country when it comes to the petrochemical industry and its impact on the environment. We have far from that, Mr. Speaker. We know too well about the exposure to sour gas and to other pollutants in the environment that takes place as a result, and I think that the government needs to put its money where its mouth is with respect to regulation of dangerous chemicals that arise out of our petrochemical industry.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk a little bit about coal because that also represents environmental risks. The Premier is talking about building the economy on the basis of the development of coal. Whenever we raise the question of burning more coal, he says, well, that's old-fashioned thinking, that we're going to be getting into things like the gasification of coal and the using of coal as a primary source of chemicals that are needed to maintain and extend the chemical industry in this province.

That's fine, Mr. Speaker. Coal gas is a very old concept. It's basically a process of destructively distilling coal to produce carbon monoxide, and that's basically what coal gas is. That's fine if you want to replace the natural gas, which we are pumping out almost as fast as we can find it to the United States, with coal gas. That would be one thing, but the burning of coal in order to provide electricity exports to the United States is, in our view, unacceptable because there is no current use of real clean coal in this province.

Even if new coal plants were built with absolutely the latest technology, there would still be a risk to the environment and pollution that would be faced by Albertans and would certainly have a contribution to rates of illness in this province and death rates, as well, in order to provide energy exports to the United States, something that Albertans as a whole would not benefit from. People that own those coal plants would benefit a great deal, but it wouldn't be something that would be anything but harmful for most Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if the government really wishes to follow through systematically on its stated goal of reducing cancer rates, it's going to have to do a whole lot more than just pass Bill 1. Bill 1 puts some significant money towards the issue on an ongoing basis. That's positive. But the goals that the government has stated for itself are, in our view, completely unachievable with the present regulatory regime in this province with respect to smoking, with respect to the petrochemical industry, and with respect to plans for future coal development. Unless those things are addressed by the government, the goals here remain just nothing but window dressing.

While we will be supporting Bill 1 and strongly supporting the stated goals of Bill 1, we remain very skeptical about the government's actual intention of meeting those goals. I would urge all members, including those opposite, to ask some pretty tough questions about the government as we go through this session and following it and through the budget. I think there are a great number of unanswered questions with respect to the government's capacity to meet the fine goals set out in this legislation.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak on the first bill, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I do think this bill is a very good piece that's come from this government, and I would wholeheartedly support that along with my opposition colleagues as well. It establishes, as it says, a $500 million initial investment in the fund.

One of my first questions is: this is a great investment to start with, but how much further will it go? Where is the rest of the money going to be coming from later on to continue with this? We realize that cancer is not going to be a quick fix. It's been around for many, many years. It's just suddenly being recognized with our technology and our ability to diagnose it better. We've got to make sure that we're in this for the long run. This is something that's going to benefit generations to come, children born today as well as generations later on. If we're serious, we've got to make sure that we've got the leadership in place willing to stick with this for the long run.

We realize that cancer in some way, shape, or form has touched everyone, and I can say that for myself, that it's touched my family as well. My father-in-law passed away just a couple of years ago with pancreatic cancer, a terrible disease. You know, one day you go in for a routine biopsy, and all of a sudden you discover there's a shadow or something. It's unfortunate. Well, I would call it an autopsy, unfortunately, because it was just like a death wish there. Unfortunately, no cure for that one. He managed to survive another year, but you could see a man go down slowly, slowly from 200 pounds to maybe a hundred pounds. It was a terrible thing to have to go through. He hadn't even retired. This is a story that a lot of people have to talk about, unfortunately. You know what? People wait for their golden years to be able to start living, and they don't even make it there.

If we're serious about this, as some other members have stated, then I think we have to try and look for the root cause of this. Again, it's going to take millions. It's going to be into the billions of dollars, but this is a long-term investment that this province is committing to to ensure that we have a healthy, prosperous province for the next hundred years. It means slowly figuring out exactly what we are consuming. Is it through the agricultural products that we're eating? Is it in our food? Is it how we cook our food, with our Teflon, or is it with the aluminum? Is it the products that we spray, the pesticides, to keep our fields resistant? I don't know. Is it even in the water? This is something that I think needs to be thoroughly investigated. Again, this is going to be a long-term investment.

I'm not sure, in fact, if we're even going to have the infrastructure. As our population continues to grow, are we going to have the availability to be able to accommodate? It looks like it's an increasing population that have cancer. Are we going to be able to accommodate the need? Are we going to accommodate the workers? Are we going to have enough people in the professions? What are the specific prevention initiatives that they're planning to initiate? These are a number of questions. It's $500 million, but I'm not sure specifically what the plans are. I'm giving my support to it, hoping that there will be specific plans that will be rolled out in the coming months and coming year. Other than the money, what other specific steps, as I said, is the government taking to bring in training and recruitment and retention of the health care specialists?

Somebody mentioned the fact that the people that work with the patients at the Cross Cancer Institute have a very, very tough job.

They go there knowing that they're working with people in palliative care and the terminally ill. I have to commend the people that are in those particular fields. They, in fact, have taken a calling that a lot of people I don't think could handle because you know that you're going to deal with people who are on their deathbed. Whether it be young or old, you've got to work with these people. Some of these workers get to know them on a personal basis, get to know their stories, knowing that they aren't going to be around for a whole long time. We do have success stories, though, that are coming out of that, but it's an awful treatment that a lot of these people have to go through, with the chemotherapy as well.

It was mentioned that if this government was serious about this, they would toughen up on smoking. We all know that smoking is a leading cause of cancer. The opportunity was before the Legislature just last year, and unfortunately this government took the easy way out and took the softer approach instead of showing true leadership and standing up to one of the root causes. We all talk about the burden on the health care system. Well, that is one specific burden. If they're serious about it, they would bring in tougher rules and regulations governing smoking.

I think I'll just conclude my remarks because I know that maybe the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would like to speak as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise and offer support to Bill 1 and to thank my government for this particular initiative. One of the things that I have noticed during my treatment is that cancer is a very democratic disease. Cancer can strike old and young, rich and poor. When I take my chemo treatments at the Cross Cancer clinic, it's absolutely amazing to me the vast spread of humanity that is there receiving treatments of different kinds, but of course the ones that I particularly see are the ones that are currently involved in chemotherapy. I see some getting better; I see some getting worse. Of course, our hearts go out to all cancer victims that are out there at the present time. I refuse to see myself as a cancer victim. I like to see myself as a cancer survivor, but I'm not there yet.

In many ways the writing of the bill and the providing of the dollars is enabling for the Alberta Cancer Board, and I think that is appropriate. When we look at the record that the Cancer Board has in terms of offering services to residents of Alberta and far beyond our borders, then I think that by any measure they have done a tremendous job and would deserve the support not only of members here in this House but right across Alberta. I realize that I'm getting fairly anecdotal in this particular speech, but it's current in my particular case.

Just to add another little bit of flavour to it, I happen to be part of a clinical study that is examining a new, aggressive treatment for the type of cancer that I happen to have. I want to say that when I was first diagnosed, it was really frightening to hear your name and cancer in the same sentence. I hope that no one else in this room is ever going to have to hear that, but I can't guarantee it. We know what the odds are. Probably over the intervening years, unfortunately, I won't be standing alone.

In any event, when I got home, like most people, I would think, I went onto the Internet as quickly as I could to try to understand what these terms were. Believe me, fellow colleagues, I'm learning more about this stuff than I ever, ever wanted to know and want to know. But I discovered on the Internet that for this particular myeloma Alberta kept popping up: Alberta, Alberta, Alberta. I found then that there are doctors here in Alberta who are leading the way in the research on my particular cancer.

So I took the time to write a note of thank you to former Premier Lougheed because the funding for the particular clinical study – at least some of it and perhaps all of it, I'm not sure – is from the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. Here was foresight, you know, 20, 21 years ago. I think it was set up in 1985, if I'm not mistaken, but that would be something that anybody could quickly look up. But I just sent a note of thank you for the foresight that people had in setting up this fund. There's no question that this fund has attracted top-notch researchers, top-notch practitioners to this province.

To remain in the anecdotal stage, I've actually had it said to me that I was lucky. I looked at him: yeah, lucky. He said: "No, no. Actually, you are. The odds were that you were going to get cancer anyway, and the fact that you have cancer, you've got a good cancer to get. It's incurable, but it's treatable." So that's what they're finding.

When I first started into this particular protocol, just to show you how quickly things can happen, at the time they said that we would be able to provide one stem cell transplant. The whole idea is to put it into remission and try to keep it there as long as you can, but it'll come back, and when it does, then we'd probably have to start looking for matches in terms of blood types to have the kind of transplant that is fairly normal and a proven protocol.

Well, that was October, and now the treatment seems to be changing to the point where when they harvest stem cells from me to provide, then, for the stem cell transplant that I'll go through, they're actually going to take enough because they believe now they can do it twice. This is more than just a doubling of the ability to provide treatment because, obviously, in the second transplant one would be older and, perhaps, maybe not as strong as one might be at the first time. The fact that you can get your own blood again and not have to fight off the body as it tries to reject something different that's coming into your body I think is a huge move, and it's happened just this quickly.

I hope that doctors that are involved in the current situation not only will read this act but will maybe read the Hansard, read the speeches, read the concern that other members have offered up, and read my little testimony. You know, if I'm wrong in any of the facts, then we need to get them straightened out. But what I'm revealing here today is my understanding of the situation. The reason for doing that above anything else, Mr. Speaker, is that I want to try to remove the fear that we might have in the diagnosis. There are tremendous – tremendous – changes that have happened. There are tremendous changes to come.

This kind of foresight on the part of this government and hopefully the support of all of the colleagues from all of the parties in the House is the kind of thing that people will want to remember Alberta for. Twenty years from now, 30 years from now, whenever it is, they'll look back. They won't remember who were the people particularly sitting in this House. They'll just remember that it was the Alberta government – and everyone in this room is part of that; we're part of the Alberta government – and that they had some foresight. They had some faith in the future to go ahead with this program.

Now, I look at the words of the purpose, and it's primarily in the prevention. Under section 2(b), which is, "support and encourage any other initiatives set out in the regulations," I hope there will be an opportunity to have a look at how the current set-up is organized throughout the province. There are small things that could be done in rural regions that would take tremendous pressure off some people that are suffering cancer like I am.

I happen to be lucky in the sense that I have a second residence here in Edmonton, so I can go to the Cross cancer clinic. I agree with everything that the hon. leader of the third party said about the Cross cancer clinic. I can't say enough about how well we are treated in that institution.

There are people in my part of the province that need radiation, and they have to drive to Calgary for radiation. Now, radiation is going to last five, 10 minutes. It's very quick, but they have to drive and find accommodation or drive every day, I guess, depending on the distance. For very little effort, very little resources, I think, in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Fort McMurray, places like that, these little satellite operations could be set up with the help of this money. It would save the inconvenience, and I can tell you that when you are frightened, inconvenience is a major, major hurdle. I'm now starting to understand just how big the little things can be when you're in the kinds of situations that I find myself in.

I believe that I have an opportunity given my position in this House, given my experience now with this disease – I need to stand up, I need to talk frankly and honestly about this situation and encourage everyone to get behind these kinds of initiatives. [applause]

I forgot a duty. I've been asked – and I'm pleased to respond – to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Drug-endangered Children Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act.

Mr. Speaker, I've got two of my staff up in the gallery, who are watching eagerly, who have done an incredible amount of work on this piece of legislation. They are Lisa and Justin. I just want to acknowledge them.

Drug activity is increasing throughout our province, and this is frightening. Even more frightening is that innocent children are being caught in the middle. This is an emerging issue in Alberta, but unfortunately the United States has been dealing with this problem for many years. While I was researching this legislation, I visited the United States with Staff Sergeant Ian Sanderson of the RCMP K Division drug awareness service. We heard so many heart-wrenching stories about drug-endangered children, and I'd like to share one with you.

In Denver two days before Halloween the police were staking out a meth lab and preparing for a drug bust. While they were watching the house, they noticed a small boy dressed in a Halloween costume. He kept looking out the front window as if he was waiting for something. The police later learned that he was worried he would miss his bus to take him to a school Halloween party. He said that he wanted to be ready because his mom was already sleeping and she didn't remember things. Who knows how long he had been waiting. After he had been removed from the house, he had to be decontaminated and examined by a doctor. They even had to burn his Halloween costume because it became toxic.

This kind of life is all too common for too many kids. Research has found that 30 to 35 per cent of meth labs are located in places that children call home, and children were present in 21 per cent of indoor marijuana grow operations. Children who are exposed to such damaging physical and social environments face many dangers.

Their strollers are used as drug couriers. Their bedrooms are hiding places for drugs and chemicals. Their basements are filled with mould and carbon dioxide, and the air they breathe is loaded with toxic fumes. They are at high risk for chronic respiratory problems, neurological damage, and, Mr. Speaker, even cancer.

Putting a child at risk in this way is abuse and requires immediate intervention just like any other kind of abuse. Sadly enough, more than once a week we remove a child from an environment where drugs are being produced or being sold. But this isn't a straightforward or easy process. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act does a lot of great things in this province for children and families. It focuses on much-needed rehabilitation and on keeping families together. Unfortunately, some cases are so horrific, like children who are drug-endangered, that a different response is necessary. In addition, the enhancement act doesn't specifically identify who is a drug-endangered child or that such children are at an extreme risk and need intervention.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that if a child is found in a drug house, we can't automatically remove them from that home. This on its own is enough to warrant immediate intervention under the enhancement act. That's where Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act comes in. Bill 2 will allow us to take immediate action to effectively protect children exposed to serious drug-related activities.

This proposed legislation is a first in Canada. Bill 2 specifically defines who is a drug-endangered child and makes it clear that these children are victims of abuse and must be removed from that environment to ensure their safety. When passed, it will allow the police or a caseworker to apprehend a child if the child's life, health, or safety is in danger due to exposure to serious drug activity. If the child can't be returned home within two days, an application for future care and longer term services would be made under the enhancement act. It's another tool to help caseworkers and police rescue these children. Bill 2 clarifies and focuses the action that can be taken to protect children exposed to serious illegal drug activity such as manufacturing and trafficking. As a stand-alone piece of legislation it will be clear, concise, and not buried within a much larger piece of legislation. This means, Mr. Speaker, that it's more likely to be understood and used than an amendment to the enhancement act. It also ensures that Albertans know that any child exposed to drug manufacturing and trafficking is a victim of abuse.

We need this legislation to keep ahead of this emerging social issue. We can't stand by and watch these kids be abused. We have a responsibility to take action, and that is what this proposed legislation will do. I ask all members to support this very important piece of legislation. Your support will mean a safe and promising future for some of Alberta's most vulnerable children.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak today to Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act. When we look at a child, what do we see? It doesn't matter whether hers was a planned or accidental birth, whether he was born naturally or by Caesarean. It doesn't matter whether she is a fourth-generation Canadian or born to newcomers just off the plane. Blood type; skin, hair, and eye colour; and performance on an IQ test don't matter. Obviously, it doesn't matter if his parents are Liberal or Conservative, socialist or fascist because to a child these labels have no significance whatsoever. What does matter is that the child be loved, nurtured, protected whether in sickness or in health – the unconditional words of the traditional wedding service apply here – that she be encouraged, supported, and given every opportunity to face life confidently and to develop and share the unique gifts and strengths he or she brings.

It doesn't matter if these supports are provided by one full-time parent or by two who share the responsibility, by a sympathetic grandparent or by a caring nanny in a publicly funded or privately run daycare centre. What does matter is that there be standards and safeguards to ensure that children receive the love and care to which all are entitled. It may matter if a child is born on the wrong side of the tracks, as we used to say, to a parent on the street or in dire poverty or addiction or with a condition that requires special treatment. In these situations a just and caring society accepts that we are our brothers' and sisters' keepers, that we need to be there with the necessary supports for child and parents or to intervene if the parent is unaware of the condition or unable or unwilling to take the necessary measures for the child to receive the special help needed.

Abuse is like the definition of a verb that most of us learned in school: an action or a state of being. Abuse doesn't have to be something that's done to someone. It can be a condition in which they live. It can be something we leave undone. We who stand by without intervening or doing anything share the responsibility with those who commit the acts.

In this bill we are looking at this type of state of being: ongoing abusive situations. What makes a situation abusive is not simply that an illegal substance is being produced where children live. If we were to decriminalize crystal meth or replace it with another noncriminal substance being produced on the premises, it would still be harmful to children and, therefore, still be an abusive situation. What makes the situation abusive is not simply that the substance may be illegal or even that it may be toxic. Unfortunately, we have found over the past half-century that we have raised children in the presence of asbestos and other substances we didn't realize were toxic or carcinogenic at the time. We are still paying the price for our ignorance, including First Nation children without pure drinking water, yet we call this neglect and not abuse.

No, Mr. Speaker, the factor that makes these houses abusive is to be found when we look at the word itself: a-b-u-s-e, "ab" as in abrupt and abnormal in combination with "use." It is the using of children for something less than their own good that constitutes abuse. Using this criterion, we can see that there are many other situations that are abusive to children. There are, of course, the classic stories of children working in mines, mills and factories, and their modern equivalents, in sweat shops and Third World construction sites. These are the children who are sacrificed to violence in war-torn regions and, less dramatically, in other types of conflict.

Whenever children are pawns in a marital or political dispute, whenever they are used as bait in advertising or sales, whenever they are simply statistics to win capital funding for grand programs or paraded for a cause, however well-intentioned, it is an abusive situation.

Drug addiction represents a complex and troubling challenge in our society. There is no easy road to travel in seeking a solution to drug addiction. Still, we must continue to explore methods for deterring our youth from abusing drugs, thus reducing the harms.

Given the traumatic nature of any apprehension, I believe that it would be most beneficial to put these children in an environment that they are familiar with, so I reviewed the matters to be considered in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. It states:

If a child is in need of intervention, a Court, an Appeal Panel and all persons who exercise any authority or make any decision under this Act relating to the child must do so in the best interests of the child and must consider the following as well as any other relevant matter:

- (a) the family is the basic unit of society and its well-being should be supported and preserved;

- (b) the importance of stable, permanent and nurturing relationships for the child;
- (c) the intervention services needed by the child should be provided in a manner that ensures the least disruption to the child;
- (d) a child who is capable of forming an opinion is entitled to an opportunity to express that opinion on matters affecting the child, and the child's opinion should be considered by those making decisions that affect the child;
- (e) the family is responsible for the care, supervision and maintenance of its children and every child should have an opportunity to be a wanted and valued member of a family, and to that end
 - (i) if intervention services are necessary to assist the child's family in providing for the care of a child, those services should be provided to the family, insofar as it is reasonably practicable, in a manner that supports the family unit and prevents the need to remove the child from the family.

As I look at this bill and after my discussions with the hon. minister, I believe that the intention is that every effort will be made to work with the family unit. With that understanding I support the intent of this bill to be protective rather than punitive but at the same time strengthen the legal framework to hold parents responsible when they have put their child at risk through involvement in drug activities. This is another action to support the ongoing battle against addictions and illegal drug activity.

I thank the hon. Minister of Children's Services for bringing this forward, and I give my support.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you from a personal standpoint that it really, really warms my heart to know that we have people inside this Chamber bringing forth bills like this one, Bill 2, and the one previous, Bill 1. I want to commend and thank our hon. colleague from Lethbridge-West for sharing something so dear to his heart, and now on Bill 2, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the fine Minister of Children's Services, for bringing forward something that I think is crucial if we are to continue to protect our children.

I know that the minister developed Bill 2 with great sincerity and dedication to helping drug-endangered children. The hon. member's commitment has helped to further a wider public debate on how to best meet the needs of young Albertans who suffer physical or physiological harm or neglect. These children may benefit from more intensive intervention such as Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I'm not alone when I say that I share the public's and our colleagues' concerns about the harm and neglect our children are suffering because of exposure to illegal drugs, because of persons under the influence of illegal drugs, and because of exposure to dangerous environments where drugs are being manufactured or where chemicals used to make drugs are accessible. These children are indeed victims of abuse, and they need our protection.

Serving the needs of children in our province is certainly amongst the most important of our callings as government members, and responding to these problems involves more than just dealing with presenting medical and behavioural symptoms. It also requires attention to issues like housing, employment, child rearing, and the development of social supports. A comprehensive and collaborative approach focusing on preventing use, minimizing harm, treating dependency, and reducing the drug supply is required.

The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission in collaboration with government partners and community groups has responded to the call from Albertans for government leadership in directing these efforts through the Alberta drug strategy.

This strategy lays the groundwork for a co-ordinated and community-based approach to alcohol and other drug issues in this province. The intent of the Alberta drug strategy is to complement efforts such as the Drug-endangered Children Act and guide further collaborative action in this province.

Bill 2 supports a commitment in the strategy to protect children exposed to illegal drugs and remove them from dangerous environments. The Alberta drug strategy increases opportunities for co-ordination and support at all levels and across all sectors. It enables better planning and use of resources and establishes a common frame of reference for action on alcohol and other drug issues.

Although these problems have a pervasive effect on health and well-being, they are amenable to intervention. Early intervention can break the cycle of drug abuse in the home, protecting children, and minimizing the risk of predisposition to drug use and criminal activity in the future.

Use of intervention protocols is one option. However, Albertans require access to the continuum of information, prevention, treatment, and harm reduction services that address critical stages in development and important life transitions and also provide a range of options for dealing with current problems.

With more than 50 years of experience in helping Albertans, AADAC plays a key role in supporting the objectives of health in this province. It provides leadership for the Alberta drug strategy in sustaining an effective response to alcohol and other drug issues, and in this capacity AADAC will continue to work with partners to address alcohol and other drug problems.

Maintaining a comprehensive service system in Alberta is a wise investment. Preventing and treating alcohol and other drug problems benefits individuals and their families, the province's health, education, and social service sectors, and the business community. Albertans will benefit from legal and regulatory responses to these problems that reduce exposure and access to substances by minors, reduce drug-related crime and violence, and reduce substance-related mortality and morbidity.

Mr. Speaker, a number of states have implemented the drug-endangered children protocol. This is meant to be an early intervention tool based on the principles of crime prevention. Police, social services, pediatric health practitioners, and dangerous goods responders all work together as a team to investigate when children are found in clandestine drug labs, marijuana grow ops, or other situations where children are victims of abuse, neglect, or contamination caused by drug activity. Use of this protocol and other options for intervening with drug-endangered children are currently being investigated.

In order to move forward and effectively address alcohol and other drug problems in Alberta, key stakeholders must commit to a collaborative approach. Reducing demand, reducing supply, and reducing harms associated with alcohol and other drug abuse are equally important. Actions must demonstrate shared ownership of problems and solutions, building on lessons learned from the work already under way in the province and across the country.

As chair of AADAC I support legislation and regulations that promote health and well-being and discourage illicit substance use. These measures should be sensitive to changing community needs and values and should not result in more harm to the individual or society than would occur from the actual use of illicit substances. The Drug-endangered Children Act provides us with an opportunity to consider an additional avenue open to us to help children who are in harm's way. I am very pleased to support Bill 2 because its intent is to act in the best interest of young Albertans, and it's clearly evident.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, effectively responding to the protective needs of drug-endangered children is a priority for the province and is part of the government's commitment and approach to a healthy Alberta. It requires comprehensive, effective action, including the availability and a range of information, prevention, and treatment services. I urge all members to support Bill 2, and I would like to advise them that AADAC will continue to work with key stakeholders such as the Minister of Children's Services, the Solicitor General, and others in meeting the needs of children with respect to this bill.

Thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, are you rising to ask a question?

Dr. Pannu: Correct.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead.

Dr. Pannu: Perhaps I should have taken the opportunity to ask a question of the minister, but hopefully the member who just spoke can address some of these questions that I have, one or two.

We know that the incidence of exposure to these drugs that endanger children is increasing, perhaps, but is there any estimate of the number of children in Alberta who might come into this category of children endangered by drug exposure? That's one. AADAC might have some information on it and maybe not, but it would be I think significant for us to know how big the problem is and whether or not we have these numbers over a period of years so that we can know the trend of this problem that's there before us.

The bill clearly is intended to address this serious problem and protect children from this kind of danger. I think that in the House there would be many colleagues interested in knowing what the scope of the problem is.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: A very good question. Sadly, the answers are difficult to find, and when we find certain answers, they are difficult to trust, I might say, because of the clandestine nature of this situation. I'm happy to offer to the member the information that has been gathered after we close here today but in consultation with the ministers of Health, Children's Services, the Solicitor General, and Environment. Perhaps we can find out more when the minister closes debate as well.

The Acting Speaker: Unfortunately, Madam Minister, I cannot recognize you because recognizing you would close debate. However, the question has been put on the floor, and there's nothing stopping you from providing a written response.

Any other questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, if I could go back to the previous debate, I'd just like to thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West for sharing his experiences with cancer. I think it's important to put a human face on these debates from time to time, and I appreciate what he had to say. On behalf of everyone on our side of the House I wish you all the best, and I hope you'll be here for a nice long time.

On to Bill 2. We're very supportive of this legislation. Sometimes you have to take extraordinary measures to protect children, particularly when the parents aren't doing it. Predominantly, this is a very good piece of legislation. I have a few problems with some of the wording in it, particularly when we're talking about the definition of children who are endangered. A child whose guardian possesses a chemical with the intent of manufacturing an illegal drug: I think what we need here is perhaps a definition of what these chemicals are. I don't know that much about the production of drugs, never having done it. I assume that it's probably straightforward as to what they are, but I think we really do need to lay out in the rules exactly what we're looking at here so that there's no confusion about, you know, what constitutes the chemicals used for illegal drugs.

We also have a child whose guardian exposes him to a cannabis grow operation. Again, we have the question of what actually is a cannabis grow operation. Is that five plants in the basement of a house? Does that constitute a grow operation? Now, obviously, if the house is filled with plants, that's a grow operation. But we could get to the point where we're wondering, you know, if somebody maybe has a vendetta and says: "Oh, they've got five plants in their house. You've got to remove the child from that house." This is an important question here because we really have to narrow down these things. Everyone seems to know what a grow op is in their head, but we really need specifics on it, I believe.

We also have the provision for a child who has been or is likely to be physically, emotionally, or sexually abused due to its guardian's illegal drug activity. I don't know how you're going to prove that. This is another question. Perhaps, again, it may be obvious, but on the other hand, you know, I think we really have to sort of narrow these things down a little bit before we take the drastic step of removing a child from their home.

So for the most part I think this is a fine piece of legislation, and we support it. I commend the minister for bringing this forward. I think you'll find a lot of support on this side of the House, but I really would like these I think quite important matters to be addressed.

At this point I'd like to adjourn debate on this issue.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it has been yet another very fast-paced week of debate. That having been noted, I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 5:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 6, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and to our guests here today, would you please join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would you kindly participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Dr. Musaed Al-Haroun, the ambassador of Kuwait to Canada. His Excellency is accompanied by the Kuwaiti ambassador's third secretary, Mr. Al-Kulaib. The ambassador is on his first official visit to Alberta. His Excellency has had a very busy schedule with courtesy calls on the hon. Premier and my cabinet colleagues and the MLA for Calgary-East.

Alberta's exports to Kuwait reached over $40 million in 2005, consisting mostly of oil and gas machinery and agricultural products. There has been increasing contact between Alberta and Kuwait. This summer Kuwaiti oil companies will meet with their Alberta counterparts at energy conferences in Houston and Calgary. In the meantime, I'd ask our honoured visitors, who are seated in your gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Shanly Donahue. Shanly and her husband, Jack Donahue, are close friends to Colleen and me and, of course, are close to many members of the government caucus. Shanly is a proud Albertan and active in her community, and I'm honoured to have her join us today. She's seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that the Assembly please join me in giving her the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 26 enthusiastic grade 6 students along with their teachers Ms Nancy Ellestad and assistant Maria Flammia and parent helpers Donna McLean and Colleen Smith. They are from the Archbishop Joseph MacNeil school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government, although I understood from the question time I had with them earlier day that they've learned about government very thoroughly both from their teachers and through the tour that they had today at the Legislature. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled two residents of Strathcona constituency who are seated in your gallery. They are Frank and Adele Peters, who are the proud parents of page Robyn Peters, who is a student at Ardrossan junior/senior high school. I'd ask Mr. and Mrs. Peters to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Carter Snethun, who is seven years old and just yesterday received the Great Kids award. Carter is accompanied today by his parents, his grandparents, and his sister. When Carter heard about a family in need, he decided to do something about it. The family was staying in Edmonton to be by their baby, who had just received life-saving open-heart surgery. The family needed $1,000 to make a trip home for Christmas. Carter sold his and his sister's artwork to raise the funds and in three weeks raised over $3,500. Carter isn't big in stature, but he's big in the hearts of all Albertans. They are seated today in the members' gallery. I would ask that Carter and his family stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce some incredibly talented and hard-working individuals who are here in recognition of National Social Work Week, from March 5 to 11. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature social workers from the Ministry of Children's Services. My guests are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and it's my honour to introduce Brenda Mazurek, Edward Garrick, Denine Kalita, Judy Pearce, Morris Chaban, Fran Champagne, Janice Adamson, Debbie Osbaldeston, Clay Golden, Cathie Aquirre, Dinah Weeks, Rod Adachi, and Guy Quenneville. Also supporting Social Worker Week is Gord Johnston, the CEO for the Edmonton and area child and family services authority. I'll ask my guests to stand and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 26 of the best and brightest grade 6 students in Alberta. They're from Meadowlark elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Moreau, and two parent helpers, Mrs. Kaliel and Ms Mack. They're here for a week in the School at the Legislature program, which, I must say, is an outstanding program. They're in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm reception of all MLAs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend and assistant, Marj Carroll. Marj is an assistant in the Edmonton-Mill Woods constituency office. I'd like to ask her to stand, and I'd like to ask all members of the Assembly to give her our warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a huge group, 70 students from Meyonohk elementary school in my riding accompanied by their teachers Mr. David Fairfield and Mr. Victor Wang and parents Mrs. Chan, Mrs. Hai, and Mr. Chan. This is a Chinese/English bilingual school program established over 20 years ago. They are all sitting in both the public and members' galleries. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive a warm and traditional welcome.

Now it's my second group introduction. Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise again to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Aman Khanna, visiting from England, U.K. He is here to check out the Alberta health care system. I want to thank him for coming to the Legislature. He is sitting in the public gallery with my son, Ricky Agnihotri. He has a master's in public health. I request both of them to please rise and receive a warm and traditional welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Sharla Ozeroff, my constituency assistant in St. Albert, who is well known in northern Alberta as one of the best hockey referees we have. Would you please rise? Welcome to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a young lady who is the newest member of the Official Opposition staff. Her name is Kelly FitzGibbon. She is seated in the public gallery. She is joining us to perform admin support duties. I would ask Kelly to please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce someone who is well known to members of this Assembly, but I want to introduce him today in his capacity as vice-chair of the board of governors of the University of Alberta and head of their strategic planning. Mr. Brian Heidecker is with us in the members' gallery. I can say to the House that we've relied on Brian to head up a committee for us in terms of the access to the future fund and help us design a report around how we put the regulations in place. He has done strategic planning with the University of Alberta and, generally, has helped to advance education in Alberta. I'd like members to give him a warm welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last 13 years at least 10 different deputy ministers have presided over a health department so dysfunctional that after commissioning over 20 different reports, symposiums, summits, frameworks, plans, and initiatives, they still appear to be stopped at step 1. These reports include in 2006 the health policy framework; in 2005 the health reform implementation; in 2000 We Are Listening, Here's What We've Heard; and on and on and on. My questions are to the Premier. How many tens of millions of dollars has your government spent producing these numerous reports, symposiums, summits, frameworks, plans, and initiatives going all the way back to 1993?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: after spending 13 years and millions, probably tens of millions of dollars on these reports and plans and initiatives, why does the most recent one have as action 1, "Put an overall health policy in place"? Surely, after 20 reports there's a health policy for this province.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, much of the health policy has been implemented. Some has yet to be implemented. What we see in the policy is a proposal that is now under public consultation, and we will take the public's feedback into account, as we will the Liberal opposition's feedback and the NDs' feedback and the Alliance's.

I'm glad to see that our proposed reforms have sparked what I think is a needed debate about health care in Canada. I see that the federal Minister of Health was speaking about our proposed reforms on CTV and agrees that this kind of debate is good. I also see that the Montreal Economic Institute has waded into the debate and has said that there is absolutely nothing illegal about opting in and opting out. That remains to be seen. But the federal Liberal candidate for the leadership, Mr. Martin Cauchon, was quoted last week as saying: "The nature of democracy is to allow discussion and debate. To reject the simple idea of exploring alternatives is unhealthy for the future of health care in this country." That comes from a Liberal.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If open debate is a healthy thing, why did the Premier dismiss our policy last week as "crap"?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I won't use that word again. I apologized. If he is not man enough to accept an apology, then he doesn't deserve to be sitting there.

The Speaker: There is a tradition in the House that once a matter is dealt with, it is dealt with, so it's probably not good language to repeat.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cost of Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation, one of the most expensive and unpopular public policies in Alberta's history, was forced through by this government on the misguided claims of lower cost, more choice, and better service. I was at an REA meeting recently where delegates spoke about electricity deregulation costing Alberta a staggering $15 billion. Now this government is preparing to force through health reforms with the same phony arguments of lower cost, more choice, and better service. It amounts to health care deregulation. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the Premier has already admitted that the proposed health care reforms will cost patients more, how much is he planning to shift onto the backs of individual Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I haven't made that admission. I've said that we will consult with the public, and if the Liberals or the NDs have a better idea, send them over. I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness speak to the proposals in the red book because many of those, as the minister will elaborate, have been carried out already, and they are a key to achieving sustainable health care.

Relative to electricity, Mr. Speaker – it was included in the preamble, so I think I can speak to it – first of all, the retail side of electricity has not been regulated. People have the choice of staying on the regulated rate. As a matter of fact, if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition listens to the Enmax commercial, the Enmax commercial clearly says: we will offer a rate competitive with or under – I'm paraphrasing now, and I don't know exactly what it says – the government regulated rate. The only thing that has been deregulated is the production of energy.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Premier: given that even basic service from a private clinic in Calgary was going to cost $300 per month out of pocket per patient, is the Premier happy to support a policy that could easily cost Albertans another car payment a month?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is all part of the healthy debate that ought to take place, and certainly inside or outside the Legislature the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has ample opportunity to provide his insights.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that electricity deregulation led to soaring costs, worse service, and dismal choice, why should Albertans have any confidence in this government's health policies, which amount to health care deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I explained before relative to the deregulation of electricity, the only thing that was deregulated was the production of electricity, not the retail of electricity. People can still secure electricity through the regulated rate and can for some time, as I understand it. Indeed, the hon. member should listen to the Enmax ad, but if he hasn't, I'll send it to him.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Hospital Capacity

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At 8 a.m. on March 1, 2006, there were 81 people in the Capital region emergency rooms waiting for a bed, but none were available. We've heard from the ER physicians that the situation is in crisis and not just, and I quote, horrible, as is normal, end quote. Currently hospitals are often forced to cancel elective surgeries because there are no beds to put the patients in afterwards. My questions are to the minister of health. Why don't these hospitals have the staff and resources to function properly?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, traditionally this season, the flu season, always sees an extra burden on health care delivery systems. The work that's being done by the Capital health authority and Calgary health authority is very aggressive in trying to find alternative strategies: moving day surgeries to other locations, finding ways to work with the people that are delivering patients by ambulance in this city, working on a different protocol so that we efficiently use staffing, both from the city ambulance delivery as well as providing some other options. It is regrettable when we need extra space for patients, but I can assure this Assembly that everything possible is being done to accommodate those patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister: what concrete steps has this minister taken since December to improve this situation? Flu season happens every year; you should have been expecting it. This has been a day-to-day crisis.

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that Albertans want us to find solutions in a collaborative way. Each health region is working to do just that, not only with partners in other health regions.

If one is going to talk about how we have provided for health care in Alberta, let's look at the success rates in health care. In Canada there's probably no other place that people would be able to get such quick and responsive service. The $1.4 billion in capital planning that was added this past year for new spaces will help address a lot of the problems. The bed reclamation project and other new projects have been announced.

Mr. Speaker, over and above that, the primary care networks, which are a community-based response facility, in this region have increased. In total now we have 11 primary care networks to help take off some of the pressures of the burden of the people that arrive sick.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My last question, again to the same minister: will the minister assure Albertans that the new hospitals that are being built or expanded will have the resources to function?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, with the best that we know today, they will have the resources to function. Today we are looking at an expansion of the role of hospitals, looking at the expanded use of community-based facilities for health care. If you look, for example, at some of the facilities we're building – and I'll address one right now, the Calgary Children's hospital, which some have apparently criticized as not being big enough. The expansion of the outpatient there is going to increase the capacity by 60 per cent at that facility. Three other spaces in three other hospitals look after other children's issues.

Mr. Speaker, children don't want to be in hospital, and the acuity level for those that will be in hospital will be higher than ever before. We're working very hard to allow children to heal and recuperate in their own homes, where they're likely to heal better in a loving atmosphere.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, today I sent the Premier a letter calling for real, meaningful, and transparent public hearings on the government's proposal for two-tier, private medicine in Alberta. The government has hurriedly announced that previously closed-door SPC meetings dealing with health care would be opened up in an attempt to show that the government was actually listening. It shows, on the contrary, that the government's public-input process is ad hoc and excludes the public from being heard. My first question is for the Premier. Will the Premier support the NDP opposition's proposal to establish an all-party Legislature committee, which will hold public hearings around the province on the government's proposals, before introducing legislation that will inevitably lead to two-tier, private health care in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's an assumption to say that legislation will be introduced that will lead to two-tier health care. I would remind the hon. leader of the third party opposition that the so-called third way is a way to achieve sustainability in health care without resorting to what the hon. member describes as that awful, evil, two-tiered, American-style system or the Canadian way, which is not sustainable. ND Premiers, Liberal Premiers, Conservative Premiers, and the federal minister all agree that health care as we know it today in Canada is not sustainable.

Relative to the consultation process and the way it's being carried out, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: Perhaps the next question.
The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is the Artful Dodger when it comes to answering real questions.

My question to him is: will this government commit to full public hearings around the province with a legislative committee made up of all parties in this House before he introduces two-tier health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. leader of the third party is the Artful Dodger when it comes to asking a question because he always ties in what he alludes to as that evil, American-style, two-tiered health care system. We're talking about a third way. That's what the international symposium was all about, to find out what is happening in other countries.

You know, I had a visit today with the ambassador to Canada from Kuwait, one of the richest countries in the world, where they have a parallel system of delivering health care.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the public consultation process, again, I'll have the hon. minister reply.

The Speaker: We may get to it.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier has found a new way to avoid answering questions.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Now, just a second, please. I try and administer a basic time factor in here, about 35, 40 seconds. That has now been evaporated. Then I with a great deal of politeness recognized the leader of the third party. The leader of the third party needs to be reminded that he cannot have a preamble. He can't have it both ways.

Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that most excellent admonishment, Mr. Speaker.

Health Care Reform Consultation (continued)

Mr. Mason: I'm going to ask the minister the question. Will she agree to hold public hearings with an all-party committee around the province so that the people can speak directly to their representatives and they don't have to come up to Edmonton and go to an SPC meeting?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think it's quite evident that they don't have to come up to Edmonton and speak to their minister or their MLA. I'm going this . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday I'm in St. Paul and in Bonnyville. I'm listening to the groups that are coming there. I have been doing my best to register the groups that want to come forward, individuals as well.

Mr. Speaker, it is worthy of note that although the Alliance Party has asked for an opportunity to provide their comments, I have heard from none of the other opposition parties.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

2:00 Health Policy Framework

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents want assurance that the government and the Minister of Health and Wellness are considering all new ideas from all sources. Now, we understand that the Liberal opposition has their red book with some ideas for health care reform. Have the minister and her department evaluated those red book ideas?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has been recognized.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very hard to speak over the noise here, and I don't want to speak over the noise. If that would diminish, I would speak.

The Speaker: That's better.
The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the ideas contained in the Liberal paper have been reviewed. They were reviewed in 2003 and in 2004. A communication from my predecessor to the hon. Leader of the Opposition took place talking about the Creating a Healthy Future document. At that time there were 24 health care ideas in the paper. It appears that eliminating premiums has been dropped from this latest version, but we will accept all ideas and evaluate them accordingly. We'll provide response to them, and I will be prepared to table that later today.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, if there are no new ideas in the Liberal red book and constituents are asking for new ideas, will the Minister of Health and Wellness describe the new ideas in the health policy framework released by the government last week?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, many of the ideas that we have been tabling, both in the document Getting on with Better Health Care last summer, in July, plus the policy handbook, talk about putting patients first and work towards keying in on accessibility and sustainability in a nutshell. There are many ideas in the opposition document that have been provided that have been also works in progress, including the wellness funds that we have given to regional health authorities, the extra work that we have been providing along with dollars for children's mental health services, and the pharmacare program that we have been working on extensively.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, would the minister explain to members assembled and all Albertans who are watching question period in their living rooms this afternoon where they can get copies of the health care policies and how they can have input in the most effective way?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, they can go to the library, they can get it from their MLA, they can go to www.yourhealth.gov.ab.ca, and they can also call 310-4455. We have produced some 6,000 reports over this weekend, and we are distributing them as rapidly as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, no matter how you cut it and leaving aside the fact that eliminating health care premiums is now in our fiscal policy, you can't get away from the fact that the hospital system needs more beds, more doctors, and more nurses. The government has committed to funding the Calgary health region's capital expansion plans through to 2010 so that the region has enough beds eventually, but to actually open those beds to patients will take approximately 25 per cent more operating funds over the next four years. To the minister of health: how much operating funding is the minister prepared to provide to address Calgary's acute need for acute care expansion?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is a question of budget. I believe that at the appropriate time the Minister of Finance will table the budget, and we will speak to that accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain this government's reluctance to commit to sustainable funding certainty for this or any other organization that relies on it for the money to keep our citizens healthy?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, when I start thinking about what's going to be available for my children and my children's children, it keeps me awake at night. Today we are spending almost a billion dollars more every year in health care. We've doubled in the last five years the amount of money we're spending. We have spent a considerable amount of money both on capital and operating, and it's simply not sustainable. Why are we worried about this spending? Well, Water for Life, supports for moms that are single with children and don't have work, all the kinds of things that affect the social determinants of health. If we had the money that we're putting in to treat people, looking after people who are most vulnerable, we would do a lot better. I think that we are doing our very best to spend our resources wisely.

One other item I'll mention: there's no place else in Canada that spends so much money on health care as we do in Alberta.

Mr. Taylor: To the same minister in an effort to bring some focus back to the issue at hand: should the people of Alberta take this government's refusal to commit to sustainable long-term funding as a sign that the government has concluded that it's not going to be the government after the next election?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think there's no real response to that question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development announced the management decision to suspend the grizzly bear hunt while a DNA census of the involved grizzly bear population is completed through the province. Why didn't the minister just name the grizzly bear a threatened species?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The preservation of the grizzly bear is more than just coming up with a single number, it's more than just an annual hunt decision, and it's more than just looking at any single aspect of grizzly bear management. We're committed to having proactive management of a sustainable grizzly bear population. We do that whether the species is designated as threatened or not. It's important, for sure, that we have good, solid information when we make those kinds of determinations, but we don't need that designation to do the proper management when species are threatened.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, we should be talking about sustainability, proper management, and monitoring to make sure that the species is sustainable for the future. Even though I did suspend the hunt for a few years, I'm planning on keeping grizzlies on the landscape and definitely on people's minds. We're increasing our education as well as increasing the information that goes to our BearSmart program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How is it possible to manage a wildlife species if you don't have the complete information about the grizzly bear population?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. In Alberta we manage a wide range of species, and where we don't have estimates, we have very good systems to make sure that we monitor the trends that are on the landscape. How do we manage grizzlies without the numbers? Well, we've already established a recovery team. We've changed our management regime over the years. We use DNA work to make sure that those estimated populations are within range. We dedicate extensive manpower and resources in planning and research for the species. We've put 1.3 million additional dollars into management and into research, and there's more on-the-ground work than there's ever been in grizzly bear management.

What amazes me, Mr. Speaker, is to hear people say that suspending the hunt is the first step in conserving bears. Well, the regulated hunt is only one part – one part – and it's only one of the tools that we've ever used in the extensive management of grizzly bears.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to address the concerns of ranchers, farmers, and communities about grizzly bear safety?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very important question. I don't underestimate the concerns of the ranchers or the people that live on the eastern slopes when their livestock, which is their livelihood, has been threatened, and I don't underestimate the public safety component of grizzly bear management.

2:10

I'm increasing the public safety efforts through our BearSmart program, as I had mentioned, and that will include an educational component for all of rural Alberta. We will be stepping up our bear aversion programs with farmers and ranchers, who need to know that monitoring of all sightings of grizzly bears is the responsible thing to do in risky situations. At the same time we'll continue with the spring program to fly food sources into the backcountry so that grizzly bears do not come down to eat the livestock that is so important to our farming and ranching community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ministerial briefing documents from October of 2004 advise the human resources minister that the division 8 declaration for the Horizon project could be seen as, I quote: a misuse of an otherwise legitimate labour code provision in order to avoid unions affiliated with the building trades and that "critics will try to politicize issue during the expected election campaign." My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why did this government approve a division 8 application for the CNRL Horizon project before the 2004 provincial election and delay the announcement until days after that election was over?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. It gives me an opportunity to clear up the issue. A legal challenge, which will be heard in May, has been filed with the courts, as the member knows. You know, it is related to the major project status that was granted to CNRL for the Horizon oil sands project.

Mr. Speaker, as you are aware and as the member should know, because the matter is going to be heard in court, it would be inappropriate for me to in fact make a comment on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order?

Mr. Backs: Yes.

The Speaker: I've recognized you for a question.

Mr. Backs: Point of order on the answer. It wasn't answered because of sub judice. He didn't answer the question.

The Speaker: You've been recognized for the question, sir.

Mr. Backs: The point of order, Mr. Speaker, is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. It is at the conclusion of the Routine that we deal with points of order. I will recognize you at the conclusion of the Routine for the point of order, but right now I've recognized you for your second question.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the minister of human resources: is the Department of Human Resources and Employment considering at this time any other division 8 applications, and if so, to what sites do they apply?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of any applications.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister: why did this government choose to so quickly and quietly approve the division 8 declaration when it clearly favoured the use of the CLAC convenience union and also favours the use of temporary foreign workers in that document?

Mr. Cardinal: Again, Mr. Speaker, the same answer. Because the issue is before the courts already and will be heard in the very near future, I can't make any comments on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both the federal government and the provincial government have provided short-term relief to the grain and oilseed sectors of the ag industry. I know that it's encouraging news, but I really haven't talked to too many producers who have received many federal cheques recently. But they have indicated that they really would like to see some substantive changes to crop insurance programs. My question is to our Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Would the minister pursue with our new federal ag minister the possibility of developing a farm income insurance program, one that would vastly simplify our current crop insurance program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have already begun working very closely with our new federal minister of agriculture, and I can say that my impression is that he's very committed to working to improve our business risk management programs as a package. We want to make them more bankable. We want to make them more responsive and predictable and simple. Indeed, we also perhaps want to add some regional flexibility into the package overall, and we're talking to him about that.

Really, production insurance has been one of the most stable tools producers have had to use over the last 40 years and has been a program that has stayed with us over those 40 years, where many other programs that we've tried to dabble in have kind of come and gone. What producers do need is stability, and we are committed to working to achieve that stability and improving those programs. Should that mean a change to the crop insurance programs as we know them today, we are open to those discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first supplementary to the same minister: is it possible, in your mind, to establish a revised program based on a selected income level by the producer that's still shared in cost by all the present or current participants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the CAIS program as we know it now is more or less a margin insurance program. When you couple that with our production insurance, it does allow for that flexibility. Coverage under both programs is related to the productive capabilities of the farming operation. Indeed, CAIS is related to the economic operation of that business.

The real question that I think we need to explore is: can we make these programs better? Can we make them bankable? Can we make them more of a program tool for producers? I think the answer to that questions is yes. In the short term and in the meantime we need to recognize that our producers, especially in the grains and oilseeds sector, are hurting. To that end, today we'll be announcing that we will be reducing the cost of production insurance by some 20 per cent for producers. That is good news to producers in the grains and oilseeds sector. That will be coming out today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Minister. It is good news.

I would ask if any financial lending institutions have indicated to you that they would prefer to have a client who has a relevant income program or return on investment type of income program available as opposed to crop insurance?

Mr. Horner: Well, that's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. To that end, in addition to the grains and oilseeds recovery strategy, which we announced some weeks ago, we're working on, as I mentioned earlier, the bankability of these programs. We will be meeting with financial institutions over the course of the next weeks and months to talk about the changes that we're making to both crop insurance and CAIS, to the ag policy framework discussions that we're having with the federal government and our other colleagues around the country, and we are committed to working as a group to ensure that the financial sector understands our programs and can use them as bankable programs of business risk management for our producers. Whether that means that it would be an investment vehicle or an income vehicle we'll leave to those discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Water Quality at Ellerslie Elementary School

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November the Education minister assured this House that he would investigate the drinking water situation at Ellerslie school in my riding. In fact, he stated that he would investigate the situation and get some action moving. Well, four months have already passed, and students are still relying on a water truck for drinking water, as they have for decades. My questions are for the Minister of Education. Why is the minister continuing to allow some Alberta children to have to wait for water in their schools?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I did act on that issue. I had my officials contact the school board, and I talked to some of the school board officials myself, and I understood that the situation was being looked at or at least looked after. However, I also understand that in some subsequent follow-up to that intervention that I made, which I think the member for bringing to my attention incidentally, there was an issue to do with something about the boundary, exactly where the school is located. I can't recall offhand, Mr. Speaker, if it was an issue of a municipal boundary or a school boundary or something else, but there was some issue like that that came into play and, unfortunately, prevented the speedy resolution of it. But if it hasn't yet been resolved or looked after, then we can certainly have it revisited, hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: It isn't the boundary.

A question to the Minister of Education: does the minister believe that students should rely on trucked water in what he calls the best school system in the world?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have the best school system in Canada and one of the best in the world; that's true. However, we have a number of partners who help in the delivery of that, and municipalities are one of them, so we'll have a look at this again, hon. member, just to make sure that it is being tracked and followed. Perhaps within a few days I would hope that we can get an update. But what surprises me is that the hon. member hasn't called the school board directly to find out because that's where I'm going to call, and he'd certainly be welcome to do the same.

Mr. Agnihotri: When will the students at Ellerslie school have reliable hot and cold running tap water like the homes in the new development across the road from that school? Are the property developers in that area a higher priority than our schoolchildren?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, you know, if in fact four months have gone by since this issue was first raised, I'm surprised that the hon. member has waited this long to actually do something about it. It's in his constituency, and he'd be welcome to do something about it. However, given that he's chosen not to do anything about it, then I'll direct my officials to follow it up yet again, and we'll do whatever we can to help ameliorate the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, fools rush in, and unfortunately Albertans must learn to duck for cover. In the mad rush to develop the coal-bed methane industry here in this province, the Alberta government has approved thousands of wells before a proper regulatory framework to safeguard public safety and the environment is in place. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Considering all the trouble that's gone on in these past weeks and months, could the minister please commit now to a moratorium on coal-bed methane drilling until after a proper inventory of groundwater has been completed in the affected areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I'd like to mention that there is a tremendous, strong, rigorous regulatory environment in place to ensure that Albertans are protected, that their water is protected. We're continuing to improve upon that platform. In fact, I'd like to have the Minister of Environment supplement some of the work that they do on Water for Life.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, on the important question, the Water for Life strategy is a long-term strategy that talks geologically about mapping, that talks about inventory. It talks about a long-term strategy of getting a baseline of information. To all Albertans: I want to assure them that that is exactly what this government is doing.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: would the minister not admit that the bargain basement royalty reductions that he has offered energy companies have in fact contributed to the headlong rush to drill CBM wells without proper consideration for the environment and for the rights of residences?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we have a very good regulatory environment in place. We also have a very good and fair royalty structure in place. It has to balance the risk. It also comes in as part of the royalty. As for fair share, I'd like to compliment the industry on the $3.4 billion that they've reinvested back into the lands and for the future development of that resource. The coal-bed methane is a huge opportunity for Albertans. Albertans have benefited substantially in the royalties of that. Almost 14 and a half billion dollars of revenue have come to Albertans directly. In addition, we could go into the income tax. But Albertans have benefited tremendously by this resource. It is being done responsibly and safely.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister, please: to what degree is this so-called urgent need to exploit CBM in fact a direct result of the mismanagement of our conventional natural gas supplies here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this industry actually is one of the most responsible of any of the industries. They take the environmental issues as well as the landowner issues. Clearly, with the volume of activity there are always some challenges to be met, but they are trying to be proactive, ensuring that they do address everything from the surface issues to the landowners to the environmental to the water to the air quality. Substantive improvements in technology likewise continue to ensure that we have the safe air, the safe water, that those things are protected, that we can also receive the tremendous benefit from those minerals that are there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Access to Education by Nonresident Students

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was amazed to hear that a 17-year-old student who recently moved from Lethbridge to Calgary is being prevented from enrolling in the Calgary public school system because her parents live in Lethbridge. It seems rather strange that at a time when our province is increasing its emphasis on students completing high school, we see examples of the reverse occurring in the system and access, in fact, being denied. My first question to the Minister of Education: does the fact that parents pay property and education taxes in one city preclude their child from enrolling in a school jurisdiction outside their own community?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obviously high school completion is extremely important, but I don't recall there being anything specifically in the School Act that would prevent or preclude the situation that the hon. member is asking. In fact, I don't think there's anything in the School Act that specifically ties the issue of accessing an education directly to the payment of school or property taxes. Now, that having been said, the simple fact is that the funding doesn't follow the student in the way that the situation might otherwise dictate it should in this particular case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister is: what options do exist for a student who is caught in exactly this kind of situation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the options if the child or if the young adult is over 16 but under 18 would be to see if that person can be qualified as an independent student. Automatically when a student turns 18, according to the School Act, they can be deemed to be independent. There could be circumstances that one could construe as options in the 16- and 17-year-old age range, which I believe is what the member said describes the student in question.

Now, the locally elected school board – and in this case I think he's cited the Calgary public board of education – would have some locally developed policies that would further flesh out what constitutes being an independent student at age 16 or 17. It could include factors such as whether the student is married or is cohabiting or is paying rent or has some other means of private dwelling, so it'll depend on the individual circumstances as to what the options might be.

Mr. Magnus: Given that this student has been denied access, Mr. Minister, what exactly are you going to do to get this student back into school?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I did immediately after being called by the press yesterday on this issue was that I directed one of my Education officials to get in touch with the particular school board and try to find out a little bit more about what the circumstances are. Quite frequently when we're dealing with issues like this, there is sometimes sensitive or delicate information. Sometimes there's private information. Sometimes there are other hardships or difficulties that perhaps aren't ever going to be made known publicly, but they might exist. I'm not saying that that's exactly the case here, but each one of these circumstances has to be looked into for its full value.

Secondly, I also indicated, which, as you know, was also indicated in the throne speech, that we were going through the process of organizing a high school completion symposium, and as part of that, Mr. Speaker, we will certainly look at removing any roadblocks that exist that might otherwise prevent a student from completing high school, or we'll fix or clarify any other difficulties that may exist, be they in policy, in law, or in rules.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Consultant Contracts

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General writes, "... contracts are a cost-effective means of delivering services, it is important that contracting policies and practices are appropriate and adhered to." Albertans work hard for their money and expect this government to be accountable and responsible when spending that same hard-earned tax dollar. My accountability and transparency questions are to the Minister of Finance. Would this minister agree that consultants should provide sufficient documentation to justify their consulting expenses?

2:30

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding, certainly of contracts that I'm aware of, that the terms of the contract do outline exactly what you expect for the contract. Each contract is put out singly, generally, and all of the obligations in the contract are expected to be met.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does this Finance minister pay consultants to provide verbal advice without supporting documentation?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me if I have paid out money to consultants to give me verbal advice without any supporting documentation, if I heard the question right. My answer to that would be: not to my recollection.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Finance ministry pay consultants to provide verbal advice without supporting documentation?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I will discuss this with my deputy and provide an answer to the hon. member. It is certainly not my knowledge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A strong electrical transmission system interconnected with neighbouring jurisdictions can provide a stable source of electrical energy to all Albertans. I'm concerned that the ever-increasing demand on our system caused by industrial and residential growth will cause some parts of Alberta to experience outages in the coming years. My question is to the Minister of Energy. A new 500 kV line that will service the Calgary area is being planned for, but no construction is happening. What's the delay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's critical that this line that's just recently been approved by the Energy and Utilities Board – at least, the needs application was approved – go forward as expeditiously as we possibly can. We know of the growth in Alberta, and the demand for electricity is growing. The transmission lines are one of the next key components to make sure that we get into place to ensure the reliability of electricity delivered to our homes. It is paramount that this line go ahead as expeditiously as possible.

That said, also at this stage in the process it's making sure that appropriate consultation with the public has gone forward. Alberta Electric System Operator has done a 10-year analysis of the need for transmission. Some of that, this specific 500 kV line, has been approved by the Energy and Utilities Board for need. Now it's down into the needs of and the issues with landowners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that part of the answer talked about consultation but that rural MLAs are getting many calls from constituents about the lack of information on how this line will impact their farms and their residences, what are this minister and his staff doing to inform these folks in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know of the need for the transmission line though it's a very difficult issue to know where to locate those transmission lines. No one really wants to have them on their property, but it's very important that they go somewhere, so right now there is extensive consultation going forward.

The transmission facility operator in this case is AltaLink. They have begun consultations with the United Power Transmission Area Group. That's a group representing landowners along the Genesee to Langdon corridor. They've also had a number of consultations – November through December was their first stage open house – talking to landowners. Over 500 landowners attended AltaLink's open house information sessions that have been held throughout 2005. They continue to be working through them in the first half of this year and want to ensure that those landowners that are particularly affected have been listened to and that their issues have been addressed appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I understand that southern municipal leaders are calling for buried lines on this project. These lines will just drive up the cost for all Albertans. What's your response to this?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in some ways it would be wonderful if all of our transmission lines could be put underground. We'd certainly get rid of the sightline issues and the disturbance on the surface, yet that would likely add 15 times the amount of cost to bury those lines. When you put in a 500 kV line, it's not just a matter of burying it, but that wire also has to have special materials to be encased. Then, if there were a power outage or something, you've got to dig those lines up. If there is a disturbance or a problem with those lines, it is a tremendously more expensive option. Though it might appear attractive just to get rid of the sight, it is really a cost and servicing issue that is the problem.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, very shortly I'll call upon the first of six but first of all our historical vignette. Let me quote.

The greatness of Canada will not depend upon the number of her people, upon the quality of No. 1 Hard Wheat, or the fine Shorthorn cattle she raises – her greatness in the future will consist in the character of her people

This quotation was found in the Edmonton Journal, March 5 edition of 1918, and these words were given by James Robert Lowery, who was born in Campbellford, Ontario, in 1884. He studied at Queen's University and at the University of Alberta, and he was among the first to have received a bachelor of arts degree from this new university in the province of Alberta. He was elected to this Assembly in 1913 in the Alexandra constituency as a Conservative and served until 1921. Notably, as a sitting member serving in the armed forces, in the 1917 Alberta general election he was among 12 others who were automatically returned by acclamation. Mr. Lowery also served overseas in the First World War as a major of the 1st Canadian Mounted regiment. He was wounded at Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. Mr. Lowery died December 12, 1956.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon, first of all, the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week certain hon. members on my left made alarmist allegations that the government's health care initiative is going to reduce the number of doctors caring for Albertans. These nervous Nellies seem to assume that the number of doctors working in our health system is static and that it never changes. Nothing could be less accurate. Doctors and nurses enter and leave our health care system all the time. During the decade of the '90s 1,000 doctors a year left Canada. The challenge to Alberta is to design a health care system with incentives that will keep and attract our health care workers.

Mr. Speaker, the good news is that the government of Alberta is meeting this challenge. [interjection] The opportunities created by our health care reforms will attract more doctors into our health care system. The balance between the parallel public and private systems is not a zero-sum game. It is not a question of dividing a fixed-size pie between the public and the private sector. [interjection] It is a question of growing the pie so that there are more doctors, more nurses, and more technicians.

The government's third way reforms will grow Alberta's health care sector. Allowing doctors to work in both the public and the private health care systems will give doctors more opportunities and greater flexibility to structure their practices. This option will help to retain the doctors already in Alberta and attract new doctors to our great province. These reforms will mean more health care to more Albertans more quickly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is not good to have interjections when hon. members have Members' Statements. This is a very unique thing that we did in this Assembly, and one of the key discussions among all members was that members when giving a member's statement could discuss any particular kind of item they wanted to discuss. There would be no points of order, no points of privilege considered by the chair, and there should be no interjections. None.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and recognize that March 5 to 11 is National Social Work Week. National Social Work Week celebrates this proud and dedicated profession and its long history of commitment to improving the well-being of people in society. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to advise Albertans that I am a social worker and proud of the profession.

Throughout their long history social workers have made a difference in the lives of others. We should all be very proud of them and the work they do. Across Alberta social workers provide a variety of services. They work in hospitals, mental health clinics, public and not-for-profit agencies, and in private human service agencies. As independent practitioners they counsel families, work as researchers, educators, and as policy consultants.

Social workers are skilled and ethical practitioners who give help to society's most vulnerable members. They work for positive outcomes for individuals, families, and groups within each community. Ministries within the Alberta government are lucky to have these dedicated professionals deliver social programs to Alberta's children, youth, families, seniors, and people with disabilities, among others. With integrity, dedication, and commitment to helping society's most vulnerable, they provide services as diverse as the many people they serve.

I commend the women and men who take on this rewarding and challenging line of work. I hope that this week we all take time to celebrate the contribution social workers make to the lives of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Liberal Opposition Vision for Health Care

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberal opposition health plan, Creating a Healthy Future, addresses the present concerns the Conservative government is attempting to tackle through two-tiered private health care. The solutions our public health care system needs are in this plan. The problem is this government's inability to take off the privatization blinders and focus on improving our public system. Just as they did with electrical deregulation, they're trying to convince Albertans that privatizing health care will be in their best interests, but I can assure you that it will not.

Today during a technical briefing the Alberta Liberals outlined a number of concrete solutions to create a high-quality, affordable, and sustainable health care system. The government has thrown the challenge at us to prove our system will effectively reduce waiting times and keep health spending affordable, and today we responded. Our plan will work to meet the government's goals and will uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Kevin Taft, the leader of the official Liberal . . . [interjections] The Leader of the Official Opposition and myself as health critic outlined six major initiatives contained in Creating a Healthy Future which would improve the public system by increasing access and affordability and ensure that all Albertans receive the same quality of care: one, the integration of specialized surgical centres into the public system to reduce wait times, reduce costs, and improve quality; two, the expansion of community health centres to improve access to primary care; three, the introduction of a pharmacare program to reduce costs and ensure equal access to prescription drugs; four, the creation of comprehensive continuing-care legislation, including minimum hours of patient care and staffing ratios; five, the re-examination of the roles of medical professionals and the systems of payment to allow a more collaborative approach to delivering health care; and, six, the use of health impact statements and assessments and a wellness fund to focus on prevention.

A good health care system has a cohesive approach based on the principles of affordability, accessibility, equity, and quality. When you take these elements apart, the system is left in chaos. I fear the government's current plans will do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: There was no interjection from the chair during that participation by the hon. member, but the hon. member knows . . .

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: But then the chair did not intervene either when the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness did it today. Let's all try to remember.

Should I give you the reason again why we don't use names? [interjections]

I'll come back to that a little later. Right now we're going to deal with the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Great Kids Awards

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today and recognize Alberta's great kids. Yesterday the hon. Premier and the Minister of Children's Services presented awards to 16 outstanding Alberta children and youth for making a difference in their homes, schools, and communities. I had the honour of attending the seventh annual Great Kids award ceremony to recognize one of my constituents, Great Kid Browne Courtorielle from Cold Lake.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity acknowledge all the other Alberta 2006 Great Kids. They are Colton Meronyk from St. Albert, Carter Snethun from Spruce Grove, Dennis Brown from Calgary, Chance Szott from Daysland, Britny Martens from Alix, Colin David Price from Sangudo, Savannah Symmonds from Medicine Hat, Taralyn Chapman from Edmonton, Stephanie Armstrong from Calgary, Beau Brietzke from Airdrie, Danielle Hilsabeck from Lacombe, Tanessa Lynn Andres from Bassano, Karleen Beaverbones from Rocky Mountain House, Clayton Muff from Blairmore, and April Roan from Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Speaker, these Great Kids were selected from among 236 province-wide nominations, and yesterday I saw first-hand what an amazing bunch of children and youth we have in Alberta. As the Premier said, we are very fortunate to have a generation of young Albertans moving towards adulthood who are in a position to take this province to even greater heights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Brokeback Mountain Oscars

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate nearly 600 Albertans. They are the cast and crew behind the Brokeback Mountain movie, which last night was awarded three Oscars at the Academy awards. The Blackfoot hotel in Calgary was home last night to a local Oscar ceremony hosted by IATSE, the union representing the crew. Complete with red carpet and a big-screen TV showing the ceremony, hundreds of people gathered to celebrate the highlights of the entertainment industry this past year. The celebrants included the set builders, costumers, wranglers, and makeup artists: the people behind the camera. When Ang Lee, the director of Brokeback Mountain, was named the winner of the best director award, I bet the crowd's cheers were heard all the way to California. When he went on stage, standing behind him in spirit was a crowd of happy and proud Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the real winners were Albertans. The movie highlights the beautiful countryside of Alberta and, I am proud to say, the Highwood constituency, home of the best western backdrops that nature has to offer. The movie shows everyone what we offer tourists: big skies, beautiful landscapes, horse trails, ranch experiences, and more.

Congratulations to all the hard-working Albertans in the film sector who made these Oscars possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Education Achievement Testing

Mr. Chase: Early in June this government forces grade 3, grade 6, grade 9, and grade 12 students to participate in a questionable exercise called standardized testing. Not satisfied with the unnecessary stress it has caused students, their parents, and teachers in June, the Alberta government cranks up the level of abuse in March. It shares the results with its ideological partner in crime, the Fraser Institute, which broadcasts the results across the province in local papers. By so doing, it rubs salt into the open wounds of disadvantaged schoolchildren, whom this government pushes further down rather than providing the means to pull them up. Is it any wonder that Alberta has the highest high school dropout rate of almost a third, including a 75 per cent dropout rate for English as a Second Language students in Canada?

This government in its false show of veneer accountability spends three times as much on creating, administering, and marking these tests as it does on developing the curriculum that these tests supposedly measure. What these tests accurately and predictably reflect is the socioeconomic level of the student writing the test. With very few exceptions private schools, subsidized to the tune of 60 per cent of public per-pupil grants, with restrictive, selective enrolment policies, not to mention high tuition fees, are compared to their underfunded public counterparts, which, not only as a result of their mandate but out of a genuine desire to improve the human condition, accept all children regardless of their socioeconomic or learning luggage.

If this provincial government truly wanted to improve its educational outcomes, it would increase its curriculum support for the schools at the lower end of the achievement results. There is no educational purpose served by publishing the results of these highly questionable tests.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairperson of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I hereby submit five copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts dated March 1, 2006, which outlines the committee's recommendation for changes to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I also submit five copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts covering the committee's activities for the First Session of the 26th Legislature.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of over 4,500 residents of Grande Prairie I would like to present the following petition to the Legislature: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation to build a skywalk across the Highway 43 bypass in Grande Prairie."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a petition that's signed by 185 constituents of mine in Whitecourt-St. Anne. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to do what is necessary to complete the plans to widen highway 32 in my constituency as soon as possible.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling an e-mail from Elaine Hyshka, a constituent of mine. She is deeply concerned about our Premier's latest attempt to privatize health care. She disagrees with queue-jumping and forecasts great detriment if doctors are allowed to practise in both the public and private settings. She urges me as her MLA to oppose two-tiered health care and reaffirms her belief in the five guiding principles of the Canada Health Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table two of the many letters that I've been receiving about the government's plans to privatize the health care system. One is from David Finch, and he warns about the return to the days when people's lives were often in danger because they didn't have the money to buy health care.

The second one is from Reny Miklos from Edmonton, and he's concerned about the changes to violate the Canada Health Act and to create a two-tier system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I believe that a constituent of his, Craig Colvin, writes expressing his outrage at the government's proposed third way, great concern and objection to having doctors working in both systems, and a question about how private insurance companies will not allow us to get the most bang out of our health care dollar when most of the money goes to paying the shareholders.

The second tabling that I have today is from one of my constituents, again very opposed to the health care. She's a health care professional herself, opposed to what the government is proposing, is particularly concerned about the shortage of health care professionals, and believes that the third way would create a situation very similar to the American system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings. First of all, I'd like to table a copy of a letter sent by the leader of the NDP to the Premier. The letter calls for thorough and sincere public consultation on health care reforms, including transparent, all-party public hearings. He notes that the current consultation period "is a sham."

I would also like to table two documents from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Their news releases are dated February 19 and March 4 of this year. The first raises concerns about the so-called third way in health care. The second also calls for proper public consultation on health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail from a constituent, Frank Jenkins, who copied me his responses to the government's website asking for consultation on the third-way changes. The comment he particularly wanted me to highlight is where he says:

Please spend our money and your time on getting more doctors and nurses into the health care system. Stealing doctors from the public sector for the private sector . . . does not change access (the number of doctors is the same).

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to provide the proper five copies of documents of advice to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment on the Horizon oil sands project and their use of temporary foreign workers and the Christian Labour Association union.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of the Edmonton Urban Aboriginal Dialogue document, the Your City, Your Voice report, which was released today at Edmonton city hall.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, pursuant to the Architects Act the Alberta Association of Architects 2005 annual report. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Zwozdesky, Minister of Education, return to order of the Assembly MR 27, asked for by Mr. Flaherty on May 2, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on a point of order.

Point of Order Sub Judice Rule

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this point of order to speak on the question of sub judice regarding the question that was brought by me during question period. I'll cite 509 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms.

The Special Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members recommended that the responsibility of the Speaker during the question period should be minimal as regards the sub judice convention, and that the responsibility should principally rest upon the Member who asks the question and Minister to whom it is addressed. However, the Speaker should remain the final arbiter in the matter but should exercise discretion only in exceptional cases. In doubtful cases the Speaker should rule in favour of debate and against the convention.

Also, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, edition 2000, on page 428 in the second paragraph it says:

The Committee clarified further that while all Members share in the responsibility of exercising this restraint, the Speaker is the final arbiter in determining whether a subject matter raised during the consideration of oral questions is sub judice.

In reality, I was not ruled out of order by the Speaker under our rules of order, the Standing Orders of our Legislative Assembly, under 23(g), “where there is [any] probability of prejudice” to any individual because of speaking to a court case, because I did not speak to a court case. I spoke to a decision which was essentially a political decision as to the timing of a declaration of an announcement.

Basically, in arguing that the question cannot be answered because it is before the courts – the question should be that it is before the courts. This question is not, in fact, as I argued, before the courts. The question before the courts is whether this declaration after the fact prejudiced the interests of tradesmen in this province. My question did not cite the criminal case in any way. The question did not in any way prejudice the rights or interests of the individuals and organizations involved in that civil case, and in no way does the question affect the interests of the government in this case. What this question speaks to is the clearly political decision of the government to delay the announcement till after the election, and this decision was made before the election. The case before the courts is not a criminal case. Again, it does not speak to the timing of the announcement.

I ask that the Speaker rule that this question be answered. Indeed, if we are to limit questions under division 8 in this manner, any question regarding this huge project, important to our Alberta economy, could be avoided by saying that the division 8 application is before the courts and may be for some time with appeals. I ask that the Speaker exercise his discretion and that this question be answered.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m not sure quite how to approach this. First of all, I’ll say thank you for attempting to clarify where you’re coming from, hon. member, on this. Issues pertaining to what a Speaker’s role is or should be or whatever are enunciated, too, in the various documents, which the hon. member obviously indicated.

I think that the current Speaker and previous Speakers, who have had the privilege of sitting in that chair, have made it abundantly clear to all members what their role is as Speaker and what the rules of question period are. The rules of question period simply are for private members to hold the government accountable for its policies, its actions, its directions, and that sort of thing. While there is, I guess, an incumbency upon ministers to provide answers, it is totally up to the ministers or the Premier to provide whatever answer they feel is fit in the appropriate part of the response. But I have yet to hear a Speaker that would compel a minister to provide some type of an answer such as the hon. member opposite is looking for. I’d like to see that one somewhere if it exists. I don’t think it does.

Now, it’s true that sometimes, Mr. Speaker, members may not like the answer they get, or they may feel that the answer isn’t as pointed to the question. That happens in all parliaments where we have this particular system. But whether something is before the courts or not is another matter, and I think the minister was attempting to answer that particular part of the question if that’s in fact what was said.

I’ll just end by saying, Mr. Speaker, that frequently there are causes for misinterpretation or misunderstandings when it comes to the ebb and flow, the to and fro of question period. That may or may not be the case here. We’ll await your ruling in that respect. But we don’t have the Blues or the ability, unfortunately, on this side of the House to have looked up exactly what the exchange was and whether or not there is any validity to the point being raised. Nonetheless, we’ll leave it up to the Speaker to make some insights into this and see if, in fact, there is some resolution to this curious matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in terms of the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, first of all, while it is useful and it is convenient to reference sub judice in Beauchesne, all hon. members must note that this Assembly in the past has gone beyond the conventions that were used in Beauchesne in dealing with sub judice and views sub judice and the whole question of sub judice to be of extreme importance. That’s why we are one of the few Assemblies found anywhere that follows this model of government to actually have a sub judice section in our Standing Orders. That goes way beyond anything that can be found in terms of these other documents that we would use from time to time. Under Standing Order 23(g) this Assembly debated the whole question of sub judice and dealt with it, and it’s dealt with in a pretty dramatic way.

Secondly, it must be very, very clear: the chair certainly did not hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning saying that the chair ruled the question out of order because that certainly was not the case whatsoever. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning was raising a question to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, and the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment basically came back and said: look; this matter is before the courts, and as a result of that I am prohibited from dealing with the question. I believe he even gave a date; he said in May.

But all of that is totally moot because there are some good paragraphs to read in Beauchesne. The chair would refer hon. members to Beauchesne 416, which has the subtitle Replies to Oral Questions. This is what it is:

416. (1) A Minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for refusing, and insistence on an answer is out of order, with no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such a refusal. A Member may put a question but has no right to insist upon an answer.

(2) An answer to a question cannot be insisted upon if the answer be refused by the Minister on the ground of the public interest; nor can the question be replaced on the Notice Paper. The refusal of a Minister to answer on this ground cannot be raised as a matter of privilege.

This goes back, actually, in the Canadian House of Commons as far as 1942, and there’s another citation dealing with it again in 1974. So the whole question of sub judice basically, as I repeat, is quite moot.

The fact of the matter is that this is called question period, and hon. members have the right to ask questions, and the chair will recognize some person of the government to respond to it. The government can choose on its own merit as to who should be the answerer to the question, and then it becomes totally subjective and subject to interpretation what the answer may or may not be.

Bill 202
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 202, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006.

As most members are probably aware, I have been looking for ways to stop the damage that this horrible drug, crystal methamphetamine, has brought to our province. While some members choose to address the problems produced by the effect of the drug, avenues which I wholeheartedly support, I feel that it is better for me to go after the cause of this drug problem. I want to take down the manufacturers and distributors because if we eliminate this aspect, we will eliminate some of the problems that we are seeing in our province. If we can get rid of the people who make or distribute the drug, we are a lot better off.

Methamphetamine is a challenge within my constituency. Many of the communities around West Yellowhead are battling the effects of this drug. This drug has the power to overtake communities and lead them to disaster. My constituents call me on this to do something about it.

In the past within this House we have discussed how addictive this drug is. We have discussed how devastating this drug can be. The province must and is taking action against this devastating drug. But one of the things that I've noticed in my research on this topic and in speaking to my constituents is that there is a part of Alberta that is being hurt by the drug, and it's been overlooked, not necessarily on purpose, because I don't believe it has been considered when we are dealing with the adverse nature of this drug. That part is our environment.

Now, many of you may not understand why I've linked meth with environment, so to grasp this, you will have to look at how this drug is made. A quick search on the Internet gives you a litany of ingredients, none of which are safe, which are put into making the drug. Here is a short list of some of the chemicals used to make crystal meth: hydrochloric acid, sulphuric acid, starting fluid, and Freon. They are four of the chemicals that are going into making this drug. This is what goes into your body if you take this drug. Now, this is bad. But after you make the drug, there is waste generated which is extremely dangerous.

The waste produced from manufacturing crystal meth is very toxic. First, there is a toxic sludge that is produced. This sludge is a thick, black, tarry mess, that should be classified as hazardous. In fact, there are many toxic warning labels that can be attached to this filth.

Secondly, outside of this sludge there is a lot of ether that is left behind. Ether is normally used in the producing process of crystal meth, but there is always a lot of substance left behind after the initial process is completed. Not too long ago there was a meth lab bust in Edmonton, west side, and so much ether was discovered that had it been ignited, it would have levelled six city blocks. Now, some may shrug their shoulders and say: well, how easy is it to light? How easy? Considering that the making of crystal meth requires the use of open flame, you can rest assured that the chances of ether exploding are very real. So not only is it toxic; it is explosive.

Leftover toxic chemicals can get absorbed into the walls and furniture and cause immense damage to the place that houses this operation. The outcome is devastating, and you have to realize that this damage is only from the absorption of the chemical, not from the chemical being spilled or dumped. Now, think of the damage that is caused when this toxic, hazardous sludge is dumped in a field or down a toilet or down a storm sewer. The damage to the environment is immense. It is beyond compare the damage that has been done through the irresponsibility of crystal meth producers.

Some detractors may say: how do I know this toxic waste is being dumped into our environment? Well, you need to think about this with some common sense. When crystal meth is made, there is about six times the amount of toxic waste produced as a by-product. To put this in perspective, if a producer makes a pound of meth, they will produce six pounds of toxic waste. But these manufacturers do not make one pound of meth; they make five, 10, 15 pounds of meth at a time, from which at least 30 pounds of sludge is produced. Do you really think meth producers keep this sludge in their labs? Of course not. They get rid of it, and I can assure you that they do not move it down by travelling up to the Swan Hills facility. They take this mess and dump it. They dump it in waste ditches, in farmers' fields, or down household and storm sewers.

With all this in mind I have produced Bill 202 in hopes that it will allow officials to charge individuals who operate a meth lab with crimes against the environment. This is not hinged on a conviction. My hope is that when officials arrive on the scene of a busted lab, they can charge those responsible with not only the federal narcotic crime but also provincial environment crime. By having another charge brought under EPA, we can cut off the drugs at the source, and we just may be able to scare the makers to disband the making of this drug. It's my hope.

Now, I know that there will be those out there that say that EPA has many different areas that can already be used against polluters, and while I realize that this is the case, I don't think there's a section specific enough to go after what we need. There's no specific meth production section within the act, and without that I feel that we are not going to be able to be successfully charging and convicting operators of environmental crimes. To be brutally honest, I have no knowledge of the EPA ever being used against meth producers.

How can we strike fear in these people if we do not even use the tools that are available? How can we show that we are serious about these repercussions if we don't have the specifics available?

Bill 202 specifically states: "A person who releases substances into the environment in the course of producing methamphetamine is deemed to cause or to have caused a significant adverse effect." By having it specifically say what I just read, we have in my opinion opened the door to getting these manufacturers without having to worry about whether the current rules could really apply. I believe that Bill 202 gives our officials an easier avenue to get these manufacturers, put them behind bars, charge them for the cleanup, ensure that they will never be able to hurt our province again.

Mr. Speaker, methamphetamine is a problem in my constituency, as it is around the province, and my constituents have asked me to do something about it. I realize that this government has done a lot to combat this problem by adding more money for treatment centres, supporting AADAC, and creating a task force to investigate this problem. However, I feel that we are dealing with the effect of this problem and not specifically dealing with the cause. With all due respect, my constituents cannot choke off the supply with treatment centres or through task force committees. My constituents are demanding action from me. My constituents need to see proper tools in place. They need to see officials use tools to ensure that their communities, their children, their livelihoods are protected.

I realize that this is a tough battle for all of us here in the Legislature. Drugs are systematically destroying our future in many cases. We need to come up with a new and out-of-box way to meet this challenge. I think Bill 202 is a start in that direction.

I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate on this bill, and I hope that all will be convinced to support Bill 202. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006. This bill amends the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to add meth specifically to the section on a prohibited release where no approval or regulation is given. The amendment makes the production of meth prohibited under this act and makes a person deemed responsible for such a release into the environment liable for penalties that include a $100,000 fine and imprisonment for a term of not more than two years.

This bill is another tool that can be used in the fight against crystal meth. Specifically, this amendment addresses the production of meth by making it illegal to produce meth by any method or process. A person who is found to have released substances into the environment in the course of producing meth is deemed to have caused a significant adverse effect and thus is liable for penalties.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is important in the fight against crystal meth. From an environmental standpoint it addresses the adverse environmental effects caused by producing meth in clandestine labs, or, as we call them, clan labs. It makes it illegal to use any method or process of altering a chemical or physical properties of a substance to produce meth. It allows for additional charges to be brought to bear on those deemed responsible for producing meth as well as causing the release into the environment of any materials that cause an adverse effect.

The spread of crystal meth use in Alberta and across the country has become almost an epidemic. It is a highly addictive and potentially lethal drug that can be bought for a very cheap price. Due to this and the devastating impact on those who use it, their families, and society as a whole, it is very necessary for governments to move quickly with legislation that makes it more difficult to access the ingredients for the production of crystal meth as well as enact any law that gives enforcement officers more tools to lay charges for the production or possession of ingredients that are used to produce crystal meth. Amending the EPEA to provide another mechanism to lay charges relating to the production of crystal meth as well as making it a crime to release those substances into the environment is a necessary step to deter the production of crystal meth in labs.

Clandestine labs, or what we call clan labs, can cause serious harm to the environment. Illegal operations are extremely dangerous. Whether they are large or small operations, these clan labs can cause significant damage to the environment. For every kilogram of meth produced, there are five to seven kilograms of waste. This discarded waste that is produced is toxic and can remain viable and present in the environment for years. Due to the massive environmental risk inherent in the production of meth, producers must be held accountable, and there must be a mechanism to lay charges against those deemed responsible for a discharge into the environment. This bill allows for such charges to be laid.

Mr. Speaker, meth production is extremely dangerous. The chemicals used to cook the meth are very hazardous. Solvents and fumes from meth labs are flammable and explosive, and gases formed in the meth manufacturing process can cause very serious health problems or death from inhalation. Meth operations also produce highly toxic wastes, which can pollute dwellings, water supplies, and soil. The wastes include liquids, acid vapours, heavy metals, solvents, and other harmful materials.

Mr. Speaker, the operators of these labs almost always illegally dump the waste in ways that severely damage the environment. The federal government has already moved to list meth in schedule 1 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, which provides the maximum penalty for production and distribution of meth. The move increases the maximum penalty from 10 years to life in prison. There is a growing trend across Canada and also in the United States to take legislative steps to combat crystal meth production. The move to include production of meth under the EPEA is another tool to use in the fight against crystal meth.

This is a drug that is destroying families, that is destroying the lives of Alberta youths and Alberta families. We need to use every tool we have to fight this scourge, from harsher penalties to protecting our children from established drug houses. This bill provides another tool in this fight and allows for additional charges under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. It is necessary to use every means we have to punish those who produce meth and pollute our environment with toxic by-products. This bill is a good move and a good tool to fight crystal meth.

I personally support this bill and urge all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: I would advise all members of the House that this so far is the order which members have indicated, if they need to take a telephone call or something else: the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then the hon. Member for Highwood, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview or Edmonton-Calder, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. members for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Lac La Biche-St. Paul, Calgary-Fort, Drayton Valley-Calmar, Calgary-Hays, the Minister of Environment, Calgary-North Hill, and Calgary-Lougheed. So that gives you an indication.

Now we'll go to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to make this quick. I'm happy for the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006. I would like to commend the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for his sustained effort in the fight against crystal meth, which is plaguing our society.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

In a few short years crystal meth has done a lot of damage in our province, our country, and much of our continent. This drug has the most devastating effect on the users but may hurt all of us in ways that we are not even aware of.

Mr. Speaker, every single Albertan has a stake in the fight against crystal meth because its production is so incredibly dangerous. This drug is so dangerous because of the chemicals used to make it and the fact that the people who make it have little or no experience with these chemicals.

An article in Newsweek, which was published in August, tells a story about a crystal meth producer. This story is becoming far too common. I would like to quote a few sections of that article because it highlights the need to get tough on this drug. The article reads:

As the concoction simmered, Houchens, [the cook] . . . noticed it was getting too hot. When he picked up the pitcher, the bottom gave way and the combustible mixture splashed onto a burner. The resulting blast engulfed Houchens in a ball of fire. "I felt my face just melting," he recalls. "The skin was running down my arm . . . like lard."

Mr. Speaker, chemicals that can produce such damage are extremely dangerous and are almost always regulated by the highest environmental standards. However, most of the chemicals that are used in the production of crystal meth can be found under the kitchen sink. These chemicals are dangerous on their own but extremely deadly when mixed together.

According to authorities in the United States meth labs have been discovered in houses, apartments, motel rooms, sheds, and even vehicles. As the meth problem grows and agencies seek to restrict the products needed to make methamphetamine, the methods and the locations of the production are changing. This adds to the difficulty health and environmental agencies face in assessing meth-related health risks.

Mr. Speaker, meth is produced using a variety of methods, and the pollutants that are produced as a result also vary, but there are some common chemicals that have been found in meth labs across North America.

In Alberta the police say that crystal meth producers are polluting groundwater with toxic by-products. According to a report that was released by the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, toxic chemicals used in cooking the drug are often dumped with no regard to their negative impact on the environment.

I am disturbed by the fact that each pound of meth produced leaves behind five or six pounds of toxic chemicals, which are usually poured down plumbing pipes, storm drains, or directly into the ground. The chlorinated solvents and other toxic by-products used to make meth create long-term hazards because they can persist in soil and groundwater for years, and the cleanup costs related to meth labs are very high because the solvent-contaminated soil usually has to be burned away, which can be a difficult process. According to statistics the average cleanup cost is about $5,000, but it can cost up to about $150,000.

But the cost of meth to society is much higher than the cost of cleaning up the environment. Car accidents, explosions and fires that are triggered by the manufacture of meth, increased criminal activity including domestic violence, emergency room and other medical costs, the spread of infectious diseases, and of course the addiction problems: all are very concerning. This is why we need to ensure that those people who are caught manufacturing meth are punished to the highest extent possible.

Mr. Speaker, although I support what this bill attempts to do, I don't know if it takes the best approach. This bill, as well as every other private member's bill that has been debated in this House about meth, is the result of frustration by private members, who are continually hearing meth-related stories. Much of what this bill tries to do can be accomplished by strengthening our government's regulations. This would give the government the advantage of flexibility since regulations can be changed easily in comparison to legislation. I think flexibility is very important in the fight against meth because, like I said earlier, meth producers are doing all they can to stay one step ahead of law enforcement, and we must be able to adapt quickly.

Although I said that private members are frustrated by the meth problem, I must backtrack and applaud this government for responding quickly and aggressively to it. The government's new Crystal Meth Task Force is a welcome announcement. Also, the democratic first that occurred in this Assembly last year to ensure that Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, was passed is another example of how government members, ministers, and opposition members came together to fight against this and all drugs.

The larger problem in this fight has been the past federal governments' weak laws. Punishing criminals is the responsibility of the federal government, and the laws are, quite frankly, a joke. People who make meth are simply not afraid of or deterred by the law. In their minds punishment from getting caught is well worth the risk. They know that they will serve their short time in jail, and they will be out making meth again within a couple of years.

3:30

Earlier the Member for West Yellowhead mentioned some toxic chemicals that are used to make meth. Mr. Speaker, those chemicals are poison. Poisoning somebody intentionally is called murder or attempted murder. This is the approach the federal government should take towards meth makers and meth dealers especially because these meth makers and dealers target our children and try to get them addicted as young as possible. If federal laws were stronger, we would likely not be facing the problems we have with meth today. Luckily, now that the federal government is being run by a responsible party, we should see some of our laws strengthened.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to reiterate just how harmful meth production is to the environment and how costly it is to our society. I'd like to let the Member for West Yellowhead know that I support what he is attempting to do with this bill. I support this idea, and I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate on this issue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to support the Member for West Yellowhead in his attempt to limit the effects of crystal meth, and I do appreciate his explanation as it related to putting this legislation under the environmental protection act. My colleague the Environment critic from Calgary-Mountain View would like to be participating in this debate, but he has a meeting at this time with the Environment minister with regard to coal-bed methane and the water pollution. He's hoping that he'll be able to join in support of this member's statements a little later.

I would like to think that the arms of this bill would also be applied to marijuana grow ops. Although it's not the same type of chemicals involved in the grow op, nevertheless there's danger to the environment. There is danger through the mould, through the miswiring and stealing of power. There is the possibility of similar damage occurring in the neighbourhood as is the case with the crystal meth. I would also like to see the teeth that are being proposed in this legislation being applied to such things as abandoned well sites, former refineries such as what the people in Turner Valley are experiencing, and creosote locations as is the case with what the city of Calgary is dealing with. Our environment is being challenged in a wide variety of ways.

Crystal meth is a very serious addictive drug, and I am pleased that the member is addressing not only the effects of the drug itself but the manufacturing of the drug and the lingering damage to not only people directly but the environment itself. I support whatever measures this government can take to clean up our environment and ensure its safety and sustainability in the future.

Therefore, I very much support the Member for West Yellowhead's attempt to listen to his constituents and carry out their desires. Well done, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join the debate surrounding Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006. This bill brings to the fore an aspect of the situation which – I'll be honest – had never really crossed my mind before. The scourge of drugs and various societies' efforts to stop them are well known. The focus of the debate centres on the damaging effects of drugs on those who are addicted. These effects are ones which we are all too familiar with. However, because this is such an important issue, other related factors can be overlooked, and this is what I feel has happened in this situation.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard on the news, from our constituents, from experts, from our colleagues in this Chamber about crystal meth. There is no doubt that this drug is one of the most dangerous substances that a person can encounter. It is relatively new in Alberta, and this awareness adds to the havoc it can wreak. As far as being a recipe for disaster, it doesn't really get much worse than meth. It is relatively easily produced using substances which can be found in almost any small town. The drug is highly, highly addictive, it is cheap to purchase, and the damage it does to addicts' bodies is incredible. From rotting teeth to damaging the nervous system, crystal meth attacks the mind and the body of those who use it.

As if this wasn't bad enough, the residue from cooking meth is even worse than the drug. With ingredients including sulphuric acid, naphtha, benzene, and chloroform it is no surprise that the wastes from meth production are harmful. Also, given the fact that producing crystal meth is not exactly a legitimate business, those responsible are not very responsible about the disposing of their waste. The toxic residue from meth labs ends up in storm drains, dugouts, sewers, and ditches. The environmental damage which these types of substances can cause is immense.

Mr. Speaker, I have been farming all my life. One of the most important lessons that can be taught in farming families is that we have a responsibility to work with the land, not just take from it. As farming has changed over the years, we have seen a rise in the number of chemicals which are used in the industry. As we have learned more about how these chemicals affect our environmental attitudes, regulations surrounding the use and disposal of chemicals in farming communities have changed. There now exist regulations and standards of practice which dictate how chemicals involved with herbicides, pesticides, and fertilizers are used. Time and research have proven that the incorrect use of these substances can have wide and far-reaching effects on our environment. As agriculture producers have learned more, they have become more and more careful with these substances as they have a genuine concern for the land and understand that proper management will ensure that this land will be healthy and fertile for our children and our grandchildren to farm.

I would hazard to say that individuals who are producing crystal meth are not quite as concerned with the health of the environment as am I. Mr. Speaker, from 2002 there were 30 incidents with respect to the production of meth. This means that police have found the evidence of production, equipment being in place for production, or the dumping of lab waste. In the most recent year, 2005, two labs and one dump site were found. One of the labs was quite large, and police discovered 21 kilograms of meth in it. This lab was capable of producing an additional 165 kilograms of the drug.

While the number of busts are low, police services believe that the meth is being produced in larger amounts in our province. Part of the reason for the low number of labs being discovered is due to just how portable they are and the relatively short amount of time it takes to produce the drugs. In other jurisdictions labs have been discovered in automobiles, apartments, abandoned warehouses, and even in sheds in the woods. The production of meth does not require large amounts of electricity or water, such as a hydroponic grow operation for marijuana, so it is easier to hide these operations.

Another indication that large quantities of meth are being manufactured is the street-level activity with respect to the drug. Police organizations are reporting that the methamphetamine on the streets is being sold at lower prices yet is of greater purity and of higher quality. Mr. Speaker, the laws of supply and demand are as applicable to this illicit substance as they are to the legitimate businesses. If you are getting a better quality product at a lower price, there probably is some competition for the business.

Finally, evidence provided by undercover officers in other jurisdictions tells a tale of meth being produced in Alberta and being shipped to other provinces. This indicates that the scale of methamphetamine production in Alberta is most likely higher than the number of labs and dump sites which are discovered by the police.

There is no doubt that meth production is a growing issue in our province, and this means that more and more toxic chemicals are ending up in our environment. The measures proposed in Bill 202 would give officials a specific charge to lay against those who are operating meth labs. Having a specific charge would eliminate the ambiguity of whether or not an individual can be charged with an environmental offence. Also, putting a specific reference to drug labs in our legislation would raise awareness of this topic for peace officers and prosecutors.

This province has long been committed to good environmental stewardship. Our current hon. Premier, while serving as minister of the environment, oversaw the development of the Alberta Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, acknowledged as one of the most progressive environmental laws in Canada. In his Speech from the Throne the hon. Lieutenant Governor outlined the government's priorities for the coming months, and those contained advances in both water and land management. The provincial Water for Life strategy is a comprehensive plan designed to ensure that Alberta's water resources are well kept for future generations. The groundwater inventory plan for the new future will give the province more information which can be used to make the best decisions possible with respect to Alberta's water. The land-use framework being developed by the province will institute a single process for making decisions on how Alberta lands are utilized. The importance of all of the facets of land use were taken into consideration in developing this mechanism.

Instituting measures against crystal meth labs in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act fits well with other environmental measures that the government is currently undertaking. The proposal contained in Bill 202 is forward thinking and, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, draws attention to an aspect of the drug trade which is often overlooked. In one way it is saddening to have this realization thrust upon us. Not only are individuals and families falling victim to this horrible drug; so, too, is our environment.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for introducing the bill to the House. I have enjoyed the debate surrounding the bill thus far, and I am looking forward to hearing what others among my colleagues have to say about it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you as well for the introduction of this bill, hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Certainly, we have been hearing a tremendous amount of information from all quarters, including this Legislature and around North America, with the emerging problem of methamphetamine and its use and now the problem of the toxic leftovers from drug labs around our province.

The main problem, as I see it, with methamphetamine is that it's very simple to make, and people can have clandestine drug labs in almost any sort of situation. They've been found in apartments, inside of the trunks of cars, in campers, in hotels, out in the back of a field. It doesn't take a tremendous knowledge of chemistry to put these things together, but it does take, I suppose, a lack of care and attention to one's own health and the health of others to consider selling such a noxious substance but also a lack of care and attention to the people in the surrounding area where a methamphetamine lab might be and the larger environment where the chemicals are disposed of.

So I can say with some certainty that the NDP caucus is in support of this bill with some reservation, I suppose, because the first thing that came to my mind, Mr. Speaker, when I was reading about this is: why are we, in fact, just mentioning the drug methamphetamine specifically when we're dealing with toxic substances in the environment and the drug culture that does exist, unfortunately, in our province? There are many other chemical problems that we have in this province besides this one specific one. Indeed, there are many other drug problems that we have in our province besides this one specific one. So, you know, my first impression and something that I would like to continue to bring up as we speak on Bill 202 is: why are we not including other illegal drug operations and perhaps other illegal chemical industrial sites in this legislation?

You know, we do have, unfortunately, a situation where if people can hide toxic substances that they might be using in different clandestine processes or even industrial processes and somehow circumvent the proper disposal of those chemicals, then there are people that will take advantage of that. So I would like to perhaps see something taking in a wider range of illicit activities here specific to the disposal of drugs.

Unfortunately, I think that methamphetamine is a problem that is emergent and something that we need to deal with in a more pressing way, but certainly there are lots of other criminal activities going on around illicit narcotics labs. My question might be: why are we being so specific to crystal meth? You know, I can think of quite a number of other possible chemical sort of processes that we might be able to include in this same thing. I know that grow operations don't have the same toxicity with marijuana as crystal meth does, but certainly it leaves similar environmental damage and problems with people with a lack of attention to the real estate in the area that they are building these illicit labs in. So that's one of my concerns in regard to this bill.

The second one. This is a funny situation, perhaps, to be in, but one of the things that I was finding myself being increasingly concerned about is building new laws or increasing very specific bills and stacking them one on top of the other instead of dealing with larger issues in a wider sort of way. You know, when we keep making small laws very specific to one specific thing, I'm wondering if we perhaps aren't sort of building a body of law that is great to deal with the small problems as they come up but are not dealing with the larger laws and initiatives that we could generate here in the Legislature that could deal with whole wider issues.

Of course, every time we talk about illegal drug activity, I hasten to bring up the importance of dealing with the root causes of these activities. A lot of it's to do with a lack of education and vision or perceived opportunity for young people, from lack of attention to the social service needs of young people at a very young age where they are through, certainly, some choices of their own but not entirely a fault of their own, led through poverty and through broken homes to a life of using such terrible substances such as crystal meth. I always like to just remind ourselves and the persons in this Legislature and the province of Alberta about the importance of dealing with these drug issues in a wider context. So I do feel obliged to mention that as well.

Another issue, of course, is the question of enforcement. You know, it's becoming increasingly clear that the responsibilities that are put upon our law enforcement officers have grown geometrically over the last 20 or 30 years in regard to the types of responsibilities that we expect them to undertake. Considering that plus the vast, fast growth of our province's population would lead me to believe that none of these small bills or laws are particularly effective if we don't have the enforcement capacity to carry them out. So without, say, Bill 202 being in concert with a real increase in our law enforcement capability in this province, specific to community policing and being able to have the eyes and the ears of law enforcement on a very neighbourhood sort of level, then I question the value of a bill that becomes law that otherwise is not particularly enforceable. That is an issue that I do want to bring forward in regard to Bill 202 as well.

Also, as I said before, the whole issue of the disposal of toxic substances is a huge concern as Alberta becomes more industrialized and, you know, particularly as the manufacture of methamphetamine involves such noxious substances as toluene and phosphorus, ephedrine, methanol, alcohol, sodium hydroxide, paint thinners, ammonia. But each of these individual substances also exists individually, and people are using them in processes either industrially or around their home. So my concern – and I think it's a very serious concern borne out by the increase in the overall level of toxicity in our environment – is that we must be sure to capture these substances in a more systematic way before they build up in our environment and create a carcinogenic atmosphere that we all have to live in.

It's becoming evident that the cumulative effects of various toxins that individually, perhaps, do not cause ill health to us but cumulatively build up over time and deposit themselves in our fatty tissues, in our livers, and in other tissues in our body, in fact create a toxic point where we are more susceptible to cancer and other debilitating illnesses. You know, as we push headlong into the industrial process, the industrialization of our fair province, I think we must be very much more conscious of that. So if we could use Bill 202, perhaps, as a harbinger of further attention to this pressing and growing need in our province and industrial society in general in North America, then I think that I would support it more wholeheartedly, but certainly this is an interesting step in the right direction.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join in on the debate on this bill. The aim of this bill is to protect our environment and the health of Albertans by punishing those who recklessly disregard existing laws and add dangerous pollutants or toxins to our ecosystem through the production of meth. Moreover, the bill will hold accountable those who harm the environment through crystal meth production by making them and not the taxpayers of Alberta responsible for the often staggering costs of cleaning up a meth lab. Specifically, this will be done by amending section 9 of the current Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act so that meth producers may be convicted under provincial law for the degradation of the environment without the charge hinging on the conviction of the federal Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

We're all familiar, Mr. Speaker, with the devastating impacts of crystal meth on the bodies of those who use it. This drug causes insomnia, heart palpitations, hypertension, irritability, paranoia, and strokes, just to name a few. Furthermore, we have all seen the devastating impact that crystal meth has on our communities and particularly on our youth. Throughout Whitecourt-Ste. Anne methamphetamine has been used directly, and it's been associated with levels of violence and crime that threaten the very fabric of our communities as well as an increased incidence of HIV, AIDS, hepatitis, and other communicable diseases.

Mr. Speaker, this issue really hits home to me. As you know, the sponsor of this bill has been having a very difficult time trying to get a rein on meth problems that have arisen in his area. My constituency neighbours West Yellowhead, and I've noticed that meth is beginning to become more and more prevalent throughout my area as well. I've noticed that the meth use has been harming the youth of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. It's a problem that's throughout our schools, and we can see it on our streets. This is why I think we need to ensure that the government begins to take some steps to go after the people responsible for making this horrible drug.

There are too many instances where drug dealers and drug makers are getting off seemingly with a slap on the wrist, and I think the law needs to be tougher. The government has taken action, but I think that more definitely needs to be done. I like the idea that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead is proposing in amending the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act so that our law officials can throw the book at perpetrators.

The environmental impacts of crystal meth production often lurk beneath the surface and are often overlooked but are equally as devastating as the social and psychological costs. Production of crystal meth produces many dangerous toxins, including hydrochloric acid, iodine, benzene, ether, and chloroform, to name a few. The production process typically produces the chemicals in very large amounts. A recent lab bust in Edmonton yielded 12 pounds of crystal meth and 72 pounds of toxic waste. Meth producers often dispose of these toxins by dumping them down the sink or the toilet or into drainage ditches and canals, causing tremendous environmental damage and compromising the long-term health of Albertans. Being a rural constituency, the members can appreciate how much room there is for waste to be disposed of in a large constituency with such a great MLA as Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, and we need to guard against it.

Exposure to the by-products of meth production has been linked to health complications such as kidney disease, lung disease, and brain damage, just to name a few. What's more, the production of meth is inherently dangerous because many of the chemicals used are highly explosive and flammable. A large meth lab can produce enough explosive material to level many city blocks in some Calgary areas. Indeed, there are countless cases where meth labs have exploded, causing severe injury and fatalities.

An American study reports that explosions and releases of toxic chemicals that are related to meth production are far more likely to cause personal injuries than other explosions and releases of toxic materials that are not related to meth production. Additionally, those most likely to be injured were police officers and innocent bystanders. Mr. Speaker, we as legislators have the duty to do all we can to stop these incidents from occurring.

Why all this concerns me is because I fear a lot of the environmental waste that is produced will affect my constituency and those in rural Alberta. It's a growing problem, and none of us are immune from it. Other jurisdictions have realized that harming the environment through the production of crystal meth is extremely harmful.

In 1999 a West Virginia man was successfully prosecuted on environmental charges relating to the production of crystal meth. The court imposed a sentence of 12 years and seven months in jail. Here in Alberta we need to empower our law enforcement and judicial systems to take similar action to protect the environment and the welfare of the citizens of this province.

Alberta has been an innovator in finding solutions to the problems posed by meth production and distribution before. A recent regulation change by the minister of health has made the main ingredient used in the production of crystal meth much more difficult to access, Mr. Speaker. Furthermore, Alberta and other provinces have taken on a new and comprehensive interprovincial approach in dealing with the problems posed by crystal meth use. It's time we applied the same innovative approach to protecting our environment from the destruction caused by the production of meth.

Bill 202 fits well into a comprehensive approach to eliminating meth use because it recognizes that meth production is dangerous on numerous levels. Under the amendments proposed by Bill 202, law enforcement would have the tools to prosecute those who produce meth on a number of different fronts. Bill 202 proposes that a specific section be added to the act to give law enforcement officials a tool to target meth lab operators for crimes against the environment. You see, I would like to make punishment for meth lab operators more severe, but that is federal jurisdiction, so we have to go about it differently. Protecting the environment is a provincial jurisdiction, so it's good to start here, Mr. Speaker.

The future of all Albertans is linked to our environment: the air that we breathe, the quality of the water that we drink, the purity of our land, which will sustain us for many generations to come. We simply cannot allow producers of meth to jeopardize our future through the dangerous and illegal release of pollutants into the environment.

I urge this Assembly to pass Bill 202 and send a message to all Albertans that we are serious about protecting our future. We must also send a message to the operators of these meth labs that their actions will be taken seriously and that they will be punished for the full extent of their crimes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a few quick comments, I guess. First of all, I'm always concerned as we pass more and more legislation that sometimes it's too limiting and not covering all of the bases, and when it comes to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, it just seems to me that when we start making lists, we start excluding a lot of things. To want to put crystal meth and the chemicals being used in it on there I think is a commendable thing. We want to limit them. On the other hand, I just find that as we make a list, we're leaving things off.

I just wonder if under the Environmental Protection Enhancement Amendment Act it shouldn't be any substances that are deemed harmful to the environment. To be much more open and not have a specific list – you know, what's going to come up next year? What are they going to be making and manufacturing? If we have substances that are on a list that are moved and found harmful to the environment, we should be able to act on them. It seems that we're always trying to solve it one problem at a time rather than with a comprehensive act that just says things that we've deemed environmentally dangerous, that we should be able to go after all environmental hazards and not just the ones on a specific list. I would hope that we'll go forward and be able to make, I guess, less amendments and less bills and to get wordings that are more inclusive and cover all the problems with the environment.

I definitely must say that we do want to remove and have a way of getting after these crystal meth labs, and I approve it on that side of it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and join the debate on Bill 202. I am very concerned about the rising use of crystal meth amongst the youth in our society. This drug is one of the biggest challenges facing our society today.

Methamphetamine use is becoming more prevalent in all areas of the province, both urban and rural. Crystal meth has affected both rich and poor. This drug knows no boundaries and is spreading rapidly throughout our province. Part of the reason for the rapid spread of this deadly drug is the fact that it is so addictive that many people are hooked after first-time use. Another reason for the rapid spread of meth is the ease with which it can be produced. Anyone with access to a pharmacy, a hardware store, and the Internet is able to get all the necessary ingredients and materials required to make crystal meth. Practically any space could be converted into a chemical laboratory with the potential to addict and ruin the lives of hundreds of Albertans.

I would like to commend the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for all of the hard work that he has done in attempting to prevent the rapid spread of this drug. Through the efforts of this courageous member many of the necessary precursors to crystal methamphetamine have been moved behind the pharmacists' counters, restricting their availability. Bill 202 is a fitting next step for the hon. member's crusade against methamphetamine use.

The police, in conjunction with the government of Alberta, have worked hard to shut off the tap that has been allowing crystal meth to flow through our province. We have been taking a very proactive approach to trying to remove the drug from our streets. The government and this Assembly have also taken important steps to repair the damage that has been done to Albertans by crystal meth. Thanks to special co-operation between all parties last spring, we were able to pass legislation that would ensure that parents have the ability to get their children into treatment programs.

Mr. Speaker, the important work that is left to be done focuses on cleaning up the mess that meth has created. When police successfully shut down a crystal meth lab, the potential damage to the community has not completely been eliminated. As with any chemical reaction the production of crystal meth also results in the production of several by-products. The by-products of crystal meth production include many noxious, toxic, potentially explosive, and deadly gases and chemicals. Potentially, phosphine gas, hydriodic acid, hydrogen chloride gas, and phosphoric acid are amongst the by-products that are produced in the production of crystal meth. I do not think that I have to elaborate on the potential dangers associated with each of these chemicals. Each chemical has the potential to be quite lethal and needs to be disposed of in the proper fashion.

Mr. Speaker, as a province we have the ability to properly process and dispose of these hazardous chemicals. However, I doubt that the people who are trying to make money by destroying the lives of children are as concerned about the environment as normal Albertans are. Albertans would never tolerate a legitimate chemical waste dump in a residential neighbourhood. It is imperative that we take steps to ensure that meth producers are not able to further ruin our communities. The people we are trying to deal with are less than honourable and, therefore, deserve special treatment.

Alberta's environmental protection laws currently operate under the philosophy that the polluter must pay. Those responsible for making the mess are held responsible for cleaning up the mess. This is the way it should be. If you decide to destroy the lives of young children, risk the well-being of a community, and cause immeasurable harm to our pristine environment, then you deserve to pay. Bill 202 proposes that we do just that. By amending section 109 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act so that meth labs are specifically referenced, a provincial charge can be laid without the need for a conviction under federal law.

Mr. Speaker, you might be asking yourself: why do we need this special provision as I have already indicated that Alberta's laws are already based on the polluter-pays system? While this is true, Alberta's legislation and subsequent regulations were not designed to deal with specific situations created by meth labs. Under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act a regulation exists which deals with the storing and disposing of toxic waste. This regulation has rarely been used to go after the operators of meth labs as the regulation has been designed to deal with waste stemming from legal activity, not illegal activity.

The major problem that we run into when applying current environmental protection laws to meth labs is that often the operator of the lab does not own the property. Current legislation allows an environmental protection order to be issued if a meth lab has caused damage to the environment. If the criminal who was running the operation is in jail, the EPO is served to the owner of the property, who may or may not have any knowledge of the meth lab. The main problem with the current situation is that the rules appear to allow the responsible party to avoid having to pay for the damage that is being done.

I believe that the changes are needed so that the blame can be properly attached to the guilty party. Our current laws and regulations have been set up to stop large industrial polluters from cutting corners in order to improve the bottom at the expense of the environment. The laws and regulations have been not been designed to deal with an operation whose entire foundation is illegal. The approach that has been taken in Bill 202 is to simply ensure that the current approach to environmental protection prevails. I feel that it is important to give the lawmakers every available tool in attempting to eliminate both the supply and the effects of crystal meth.

I have outlined why rules like the ones proposed in Bill 202 are absolutely necessary. I am supportive of the idea and in the absence of an alternative method to advance the goals proposed in Bill 202, I am inclined to support it.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon to join the debate. There have been a lot of good points raised, and I hope that my comments will add some thoughts to the proceedings this afternoon.

Methamphetamine is a very serious problem in our cities and towns, Mr. Speaker. In a very short time it has risen from the most obscure to one of the most dangerous, notorious drugs in our communities. We are fighting a bit of a war on crystal meth in this province, and there have been many different ways that we have gone after this drug. From the work done by the Solicitor General and the health ministers to the work done by the private members, this is an issue that we must all co-operate on.

Mr. Speaker, what I find interesting about Bill 202 is the method it uses to go after those that make crystal meth. Most of the provinces and the U.S. states that have been dealing with this kind of drug use increased drug penalties or try to limit ingredients people can purchase. During the debate on the Member for West Yellowhead's bill in the last session, Bill 204, we heard about many different ways the U.S. states are limiting the purchase and tracking the sales of the drug pseudoephedrine. Pseudoephedrine is found in many common cold medications, and Oklahoma state decided to track sales of this drug by using a registry style of system. This system seems to work, and the state reported that instances of meth labs seemingly dropped as the rate and control of this ingredient tightened.

This is a step that this province took in December, 2005, and I commend the Member for West Yellowhead on this initiative. After our hon. Member for West Yellowhead brought forward his bill to limit the sales of cold medications containing pseudoephedrine, the Minister of Health and Wellness changed the regulations and put those medications behind the counter, limiting their sale. However, there are not many jurisdictions, to the best of my knowledge, that have tackled the issue of the environmental damage that is done while making this drug. This is truly an innovative and creative way of tackling a problem that has begun to grow since its inception in our society.

The government is also very committed to addressing this problem, as was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. The commitment to fighting all drug abuse in Alberta is extremely important. One of the main things that we as legislators should focus on is how this particular drug harms us, not only as citizens of the province but in our environment as well.

It has been mentioned that the waste that is produced from manufacturing of this meth drug is quite substantial. I know that many today have talked about the mess that is left behind after the extraction of ephedrine in the final stages of meth production. The waste is very damaging and in many cases has the potential to do irreparable damage to the facility that it is housed in and the surrounding environment.

Before us we have a bill that addresses this problem, and we have to look at this bill in an outside-of-the-box context. This amendment to the existing act is another attempt at snatching those who make the meth. The bill gives provincial authorities the opportunity and some power to go after meth makers without meddling with the federal crime jurisdiction, and this is something that I think the province needs. Those who make meth are not concerned about anything that surrounds them. Meth production itself does incredible harm to the person who makes it, and if the producers neither care enough about themselves nor care about the damage to the human lives of drug users, what makes us think they would have concerns for others or even the environment?

Now, I realize that some critics of this bill will go on about how we need to help those who are in the business of addicting our children. They talk about how we need to ensure that there are enough community supports and social programs to ensure that a person making the meth can be made into a good person and made a productive member of society. Now, while this might be the case, we need to also punish those who hurt our children. My question to the critics who would rather have the social programs instead of punishment is: if you had a daughter who came home one night and was having a mental breakdown because of an addiction to this meth, would you be calling your government and asking for more social programs to help the meth makers? I don't think so. I think you would be calling your local police station and trying to do everything you could to ensure that those who produced and sold this drug to your little girl were put away where they could not hurt anybody else. I believe this is what the bill does. Currently there are many ways to go after the makers of this drug, and now there could be one more.

There is one thing about this bill that I find very interesting. I do have a concern that we are allowing meth makers a small window to get around the law by figuring out the different ways of making a drug similar to meth but not specifically defined by the amendment we are debating. Are we limiting ourselves to one name of a drug, or do we need to make it more general so we can roll with the punches as we adapt it to the drug makers? We all know that this is not the last drug we will wage battle against. Every time the grip of the law comes down on one substance, a new one shows its face and becomes a new target. This has been the case throughout the last 50 years when it comes to the war on drugs. Take out one, and they make another one. I think we should look at this and figure out a way to adapt more readily.

Mr. Speaker, I'm in total support of the idea behind this bill. What I find extremely rare is the fact that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, sponsoring this bill, came up with a very interesting idea, an innovative way to fight this drug without getting into the federal jurisdiction. I commend the member on this initiative.

I think that by supporting this idea, we will be showing our province that we will bring the fight to the meth makers or any other drug makers. We are not going to stand idle while a very few destroy the many. We will fight this battle, and we will get more ideas like this one. We will surely come out on top.

Again, I commend the Member for West Yellowhead on attacking this drug's social ills. I appreciate the time to speak, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006. I want to sincerely thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, segments of our society are gravely ill. The individuals who encourage and feed the culture of drug abuse are like a cancer that eats away at everything we hold dear. It attacks our families, it threatens our children, it consumes the lives of thousands of Albertans, and it is a disease that we must fight with every tool at our disposal. We have a long and hard road ahead in this fight. The criminals who make and distribute these poisons to our friends, our relatives, and our kids are crafty and manipulative. They feel that they can trick law enforcers. We must in every way possible show them that they cannot. We must hit them hard, hit them repeatedly, and hit them where it hurts the most with everything we've got. Above all else, we must send a clear and distinct message to those who would profit from human misery that we will not in any way tolerate their behaviour.

In the fight against meth we've recently added several weapons to the arsenal. Bill 202 may be the most significant of them all as it will introduce another method of inflicting justice on these purveyors of poison. Cicero once said, "Let the punishment match the offence." Taking away a meth producer's freedom by incarceration is just and proper. Fining them to the tune of up to $100,000 is just and proper and fitting. These individuals poison not only the residents of Drayton Valley and area, not only the citizens of the rest of Alberta, but they poison our environment as well. They make thousands upon thousands of dollars producing meth and leave a wasteland of shattered lives and toxic chemicals in their wake. They profit from this misery and destruction, so it is only fitting that they should be held financially accountable for their actions. Just as they profit, Mr. Speaker, so, too, should they pay.

Bill 202 would amend existing environmental legislation by making specific reference to the toxic by-products of methamphetamine. The law already provides heavy fines for those who violate it. This bill would make it easier and more practical to bring the full force of our environmental law and its fines against those who make meth. In short, this bill would be not only a powerful weapon of justice but a powerful deterrent as well. Criminals will be made aware that crime truly does not pay in Alberta. They will come to know that making meth will in fact be a very expensive undertaking. When the potential financial loss outweighs the potential financial gain, I believe we will see a dramatic drop in meth production.

We will also see Alberta emerging once again as a leader. No other province currently has specific provisions in their environmental legislation to make reference to meth and its by-products. No other province is actively pursuing this environmental approach even though they technically could with their existing legislation. Essentially, each province has in place prohibitions against releasing toxic or noxious substances into the environment, but the by-products of meth and the chemicals used to make it all fit the category. Things like phosphorus, acetone, ether, and benzene are present in large quantities in any meth lab, big or small. Any amount of meth manufacturing can cause a significant environmental impact, but as of yet there has been no action in this area. Why not? I honestly don't know. Perhaps there's a perception that criminal law is the only way to deal with meth producers. Since we've always dealt with drug offences in the same way, perhaps we've been blinded by tradition. If so, it's time to take off the blinders.

Mr. Speaker, meth is unlike any drug we have dealt with before. Old-line, hard drugs like cocaine and heroin are bad – make no mistake – but meth is worse. It's worse. It's worse because it's cheap, it's easy to make, it's highly addictive, and its by-products are nightmarishly toxic. Meth can be cooked by anyone anywhere. As you heard, we're seeing it in houses, apartment buildings. We're even seeing mobile labs in the back of vans. Lured by the promise of easy money and low overhead, criminals are cooking it at every opportunity in record numbers. They produce as much as they can with the sole objective of addicting Albertans so they can turn a fast buck. Using environmental legislation to go after these criminals is not only innovative; it is logical and necessary. These people poison the environment, so it's only fitting that they be punished accordingly. The punishment is not only appropriate to the crime; it is an effective and potent weapon to drive into the heart of drug production.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker. We are at war. It's a war of attrition, and the decency and values that we as Albertans cherish are being eroded. The innocence of our society is drowning in a tide of methamphetamine, and traditional methods and strategies can't hope to hold it back. To fight meth, we must take the fight to the enemy. We have made a commitment, and we must commit totally with every resource at our disposal. Not only will this bill work in Alberta; it has the potential to inspire other provinces to follow our lead. As I mentioned before, they already have in place environmental legislation that can be used against meth producers, and a small, simple amendment such as the one we're discussing now would bring the full force of that legislation into play easily and effectively.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, meth is not just an Alberta problem. It's not just a Drayton Valley problem. It knows no borders. Right across the country there exist thousands of covert labs and operations that are pumping out this poison as we speak. Every minute new people are being sucked into a private hell as they become addicted, and the problem gets worse by the day. If left unchecked, there is no limit to how far it will go. A unified approach is vital. With meth it is a case of hanging together or hanging separately, and we have a unique opportunity with Bill 202 to help not only ourselves but to help our friends and our neighbours across Canada as well. We can be a source of inspiration for the nation. We have in our hands an idea that has the potential to benefit every Canadian, so why would we not support it?

I suppose the argument could be made that this amendment and the approach of environmental prosecution of meth producers in general isn't desirable. It may be seen by some as too harsh or restrictive. Some may call it excessive in light of the criminal penalties that already exist for producing and trafficking in drugs. Well, I don't agree with this argument. The people that this bill will target are not worthy of our sympathy, Mr. Speaker. These are not the people who in a moment of weakness and bad judgment tried meth and became addicted. They're the people who have made conscious and deliberate choices to poison and destroy the lives of others for money. They cause untold pain and suffering, and they don't care. They pollute our water and our land with toxic chemicals, and they don't care.

Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity with Bill 202 to make them care. We can with this simple change make it easier to force these individuals to pay for the harm they have caused. We can more effectively deal with the toxic messes left by meth labs, and we can make the guilty parties pay for the cleanup. With environmental charges added to criminal charges, the potential jail time for these offenders could increase. In addition to facing huge fines, they could also be made to pay back any profits that they might have made from their illegal activity. In short, this bill will make it easier for the good people of Alberta to take back what these criminals have stolen from them.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 will help Albertans to get back the things that we cherish. It will help us get back our clean air and our water. It will help us get back our neighbourhoods and our peace of mind. Most importantly, it will help us get back the safety of our children.

I think that Bill 202 represents an innovative and necessary next step on the war on meth, a step which I feel must be taken for the good of the province and for the good of humanity as a whole. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by endorsing this idea, and I urge my colleagues from all sides of the House to join me in offering it full and enthusiastic support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to speak to Bill 202. This bill proposes an interesting solution to reduce the harms caused by methamphetamine production. As other members of this Assembly have mentioned, meth labs cause considerable damage to individuals as well as the public health at large and the environment. The manufacture of methamphetamine is a dangerous and volatile process that generates a significant amount of waste, the volume of which is about five times greater than the mass of the product produced. This waste is rarely, if ever, disposed of properly and can cause substantial damage. It is often dumped down sinks, toilets, or drains or dumped into rivers, streams, or lakes or even just dumped on the ground. The disposal of the toxins may lead to the poisoning of water supplies or soil. In addition, the cooking process itself severely contaminates the surrounding areas and can thoroughly taint the structure in which it takes place.

I will not delve into the personal or public health effects of exposure to the chemical by-products of meth labs, but they are devastating.

Currently no other Canadian jurisdiction makes specific reference to the by-products of illicit methamphetamine production in their environmental legislation. However, a few jurisdictions in the United States have taken specific measures to deal with the environmental contamination caused by meth labs. Several states, including Colorado, Kansas, and Washington state, have taken legislative or regulatory action regarding the cleanup of meth labs. These states and several others have been forced to deal with the devastating environmental and public health consequences of methamphetamine production and have taken steps to deal with these effects. While these states may offer interesting insights as far as dealing with the effects of meth labs, their legislation does not go as far as Bill 202 would. Bill 202 is a more proactive legislation and seeks to get to the heart of the problem and limit production itself.

Minnesota is one jurisdiction that offers a comprehensive methamphetamine strategy that seeks to limit and address the negative effects and limit meth production. Its legislation makes specific reference to restitution for meth crimes by persons convicted of manufacturing or attempting to manufacture methamphetamine, to pay restitution to all public entities that participated in any needed emergency response and also to property owners who may have incurred removal or remediation costs. The legislation also contains provision regarding limiting the over-the-counter drugs used to produce meth, harsh penalties for the manufacture and possession of chemical reagents with the intent of manufacturing meth, and meth lab cleanup procedures.

One proactive and innovative measure which I find interesting is provisions dealing with the purchase and possession of anhydrous ammonia and associated container crimes. For example, the legislation makes it illegal to put that ammonia in a container that is not designed, maintained, or authorized for it. This, like the provisions in Bill 202, offers one more enforcement tool for officials to aggressively pursue meth producers. Minnesota's legislation offers an innovative approach to dealing with both the cause and effect of meth production.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to see that Alberta is heading down the same path. Bill 202 would offer one more instrument to fight against methamphetamine production and penalize meth producers. This bill also brings more attention to the environmental harms and the public health risks that accompany meth production. It is important to recognize these effects, which are not discussed as prominently as the individual or social consequences of meth use and production.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward another original solution to the meth problem facing our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be here before you in the Legislative Assembly to speak to Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006. I'd like to extend my thanks to the Member for West Yellowhead, who has brought this bill forward. The insightfulness of this proposed legislation truly impresses me, and I say this because it brings attention to an issue of which I suspect some Albertans have little knowledge. This is the true mark of excellence for legislators. Creating solutions ahead of the curve is always a difficult task, but it is certainly a welcome approach.

When I think about the devastation of drugs such as crystal methamphetamine, I think about elements like addiction. I conjure up images of producers, distributors, and users caught up in a deadly game of dependence. I think about all the lives that are impacted by this carousel of destruction, especially the children who will be raised in these situations with little support or direction towards a healthy and positive lifestyle. I also try to think of new methods that we can utilize to battle against those supporting the drug trade, the goal of such efforts being the creation of secure homes for all Alberta families.

Mr. Speaker, we don't think of the environment often enough. However, this is of great concern because of the negative impact of methamphetamine production on the environment, and the impact of that is extreme. Thankfully, we have the opportunity to develop legislation in the form of Bill 202 to address this issue.

In Alberta and most of western and central North America crystal methamphetamine is created through two different chemical means. Though different in some regards they share a common thread: the use of harmful chemicals and the creation of hazardous by-products. The list of substances used in the process includes hydrochloric acid, sulphuric acid, toluene, benzene, and charcoal lighter fluid. This is a potent mix, and it gives a clear indication of the severity of the problem. However, the starting elements also create an obscene combination of wastes as end products. Included in the effluent is a toxic brew containing a variety of potentially flammable sludges which spew harmful gases, such as hydrogen chloride.

One must realize that the wastes and by-products associated with meth labs will not be disposed of properly. For obvious reasons, it would be unlikely for any of these operations to spend their free time hauling empty containers to the local eco station for disposal. It is unlikely that profits are spent on equipment to ensure that gases are filtered or scrubbed before they are released through a vent. Excess chemicals will not be transported in a certified vehicle to an appropriate provincially regulated facility for storage, destruction, or reuse. Effluent will not be treated to any standards set by anybody, including Alberta Environment, before it's flushed down the toilet, washed down the gutter, or thrown into the closest field. Illicit drug production and the illegal handling and disposal of hazardous chemicals go hand in hand in this case. Both are threats to society, and both require actions by us, the legislators of Alberta.

Meth labs have been known to exist in homes, hotels, vehicles, and warehouses. Dumping grounds around these sites could include everywhere from the local ravine, park, or even schoolyard. Liquids poured down drains collect in plumbing systems and often lead to the release of noxious gases. This means that all of us could breathe in fumes from meth labs, and our children could be playing in the toxic waste that these drug producers have dumped illegally within our neighbourhoods.

When these operations are found and busted by our trustworthy city police or RCMP detachments, who do you think currently pays for the cleanup costs of the pollution which is uncovered? You guessed it, Mr. Speaker: the taxpayers of Alberta. The very people who suffer from the effects of the pollution and the effects of the drug trade have their hard-earned tax dollars spent on cleaning up the aftermath too. The funds spent on the cleanup of these facilities are then unavailable for use in programs dealing with future prevention. No progress is made in the fight against drugs, and no people involved in the production, sale, or use of meth are assisted in getting their lives back on track. The money is simply used to clean up one site while another sets up across town. We can change all that by giving our continued support to Bill 202.

Bill 202 recognizes the dangers of methamphetamine production on the environment and acts to ensure that the proper people, those who cause the mess, are actually responsible for cleaning it up. This legislation seeks to ensure that those operating a methamphetamine laboratory will be held accountable for the reclamation of the facility and its associated waste. We'll also rightly penalize such groups with appropriate fines for damaging the environment. Such measures will not only help to preserve and revitalize the air, water, and land we all enjoy but also decrease meth production because this legislation will also provide another deterrent in the fight against drugs within our province. With our strong law enforcement presence in the province it's only a matter of time before meth labs are brought to justice, and if the fiscal costs through environmental cleanups and fines are substantial and binding, then this will be a definite deterrent against starting one in the first place. Therefore, we're killing two proverbial birds with a single stone.

By supporting Bill 202 we can protect our environment and decrease the availability of methamphetamine for trade. With less methamphetamine production comes less methamphetamine on the street, fewer methamphetamine users, and decreased social and environmental impacts. The overarching result is the protection of Albertans, the safeguarding of our children from the dangers of meth use and the drug lifestyle, and, of course, the elimination of exposure to the pollution associated with its production. We don't want to live in a place where methamphetamines are commonplace in our schools. We don't want them in our homes, and we don't want them on our playgrounds. We don't want the damage that the production of methamphetamines has on our environment because we must realize that our environment includes our schools, includes our parks, and includes our homes.

The environment, Mr. Speaker, is a shared responsibility for all of us. We all have to work to uphold the integrity of Mother Nature and all it includes. After all, it is one of the few things that all of us share and enjoy. We're in many ways connected to it and through it. The threats from methamphetamine labs show that now more than ever we must be concerned about our environment, which is why it's so appropriate for us to be discussing Bill 202 here today. Although it's not one of the first aspects that most of us think of when discussing the obscene dangers of drugs, it certainly should be. Just as the playgrounds of our children must not be a haven for the evils of methamphetamine, our environment must not be the dumping ground for the toxic waste of crystal meth labs. Just as it would be absurd for the Alberta government to pay for the production of methamphetamine, it's unacceptable for us to pay for the cleanup and disposal of the by-products from these facilities. Just as it's our duty to protect our children and the environment, it's our duty to stand together in support of Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to first of all compliment the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward Bill 202. As Minister of Environment I want to say that crystal meth presents a serious and challenging issue that this government is committed to addressing. The waste products of crystal meth production can cause significant environmental damage, as has been mentioned by others here this afternoon. Legislative tools will ensure that those convicted of operating crystal meth labs are held responsible for any environmental cleanup costs caused by their illegal activities. While effective provisions already exist within the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, Bill 202 gives prominence to an issue affecting so many communities and so many Albertans.

I am working closely with the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to realize in regulation the full spirit and intent of this important initiative. I applaud him and applaud those that are so active in this important initiative, such as the first lady of Alberta, Dr. Westbury as well, in creating this awareness, in righting something that is so wrong. I want to congratulate the hon. Member for West Yellowhead and all those who are working so hard to make a difference in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Bill 202. Since I was named the chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, in December 2004, I've learned more about methamphetamine than I ever imagined I would. I've heard countless stories, disturbing and heartbreaking stories from Albertans whose lives have been severely affected by meth abuse. I've heard tales about lives and families torn apart by meth addiction. Methamphetamine is a highly potent, highly addictive illicit drug that has become a growing concern as its production and abuse increases. Communities across the province are seeing first-hand the horrible effects of this drug, and they're forced to deal with the serious health, social, and economic consequences that accompany methamphetamine use and production.

Mr. Speaker, you've heard the long, long list of health effects of meth abuse. It's a very, very ugly list. But the harmful effects of methamphetamine use and drug abuse in general, I may say, extend far beyond personal health issues. Drug abuse often leads to deterioration of personal and family and professional relationships. It leads to reduced effectiveness at work and school. Drug abuse often leads to criminal activity to pay for the addiction. There are also broad social, economic, and public health costs resulting from the use of illicit drugs, and productivity is diminished. The public health system is further strained by the costs resulting from drug use. Illegal drug use, production, and distribution bring increases in property crime and violent crime, and resources must be expended to repair this damage. As you can tell by the list of effects, we're talking about a very nasty drug. Crystal meth is an exceptionally addictive drug as well, so easily accessible and relatively inexpensive for users to purchase.

The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission has worked hard to assist Albertans struggling with addiction, including addiction to meth. AADAC offers counselling and treatment services to individuals and their families who are seeking help. These services may be accessed through AADAC's confidential 24-hour help line, visiting any AADAC office, and via aadac.com. AADAC also provides further treatment options for individuals with addiction problems. This past November AADAC began two new treatment programs designed to help youth aged 12 to 17 recover from substance abuse. This treatment initiative includes residential and detoxification programs located in Edmonton and in the Calgary area that assist with recovery from abuse of a range of substances and includes a special treatment protocol for meth users.

Detoxification gives youth support during withdrawal and prepares them for residential treatment or other treatment options. The voluntary adolescent detox program is usually a six- to 10-day program, or longer if required, in a safe and supervised environment. The program provides stabilization, assessment, referral, information sessions, introduction to self-help groups, and addiction treatment planning facilitated by an AADAC counsellor.

Residential treatment is intended for adolescents with severe, chronic substance abuse problems. The voluntary, no charge, 12-week AADAC residential programs include an urban-based model here in Edmonton and a wilderness adventure program based outside of northwest Calgary. The treatment includes on-site schooling, group and individual counselling, a family program, and recreational activities. Having seen these two programs with my own eyes, Mr. Speaker, I am very, very impressed with the work that goes on with these individuals every day. These two programs, I might add, are linked to family aftercare counselling provided by AADAC.

Mr. Speaker, with all that being said, they're just one part of the government's overall drug strategy. AADAC has actively been working with other government departments, regional authorities, community agencies, drug coalitions, families, and individuals. Why? To develop an overarching strategy that will effectively address the problems associated with drug abuse. AADAC focuses on four key elements – prevention, harm reduction, treatment, and policing and enforcement – to ensure a balanced, comprehensive approach in responding to the issues associated with drugs, which brings us right back to Bill 202.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead should be commended for his tireless work in finding ways to reduce the production of methamphetamine. Bill 202 offers another opportunity to address the source of the problem, methamphetamine production, while protecting the environment and public health at the same time. We need to consider more innovative solutions like this to slow and eventually eliminate the production of methamphetamine and other illegal drugs.

Now, many of the initiatives mentioned earlier, such as counselling and support, treatment and detox, deal with the harmful effects of methamphetamine use. Bill 202 also deals with the detrimental effects on the environment and public health. We need to do all that we can to stop the production of methamphetamine. Bill 202 offers another avenue to go after the producers. The additional punishments that could be levied provide more mechanisms to deter meth lab operators and reduce production and distribution of this deadly drug.

In addition to increasing the supply of meth on the streets, meth labs themselves also pose a significant danger to the population at large. The cooking process is highly dangerous. The chemicals involved are extremely volatile, explosive, and toxic. The significant volume of waste generated when meth is cooked is not safely disposed of, and it pollutes our environment. Yes, Bill 202 addresses these concerns and offers innovative enforcement avenues to combat the problem.

However, Mr. Speaker, we do have another problem. While I'm very pleased with the thought behind Bill 202 and I agree wholeheartedly with its intentions, I have one apprehension in a technical aspect of it. Specifically, I'm concerned that this bill's exclusive focus on methamphetamine may be too limiting. There are a lot of illicit drugs out there, and we must be certain to not focus our priorities on just one aspect of the overall drug problem. I am concerned that the phrasing of this legislation may be too narrow and exclude other drugs – past, present, and future – that could have similar public health or environmental consequences.

It's also important to consider that the Minister of Environment has stated that the changes proposed in this bill could also be implemented just as effectively through regulatory change. Now, in light of the concerns of the hon. minister and other members of this Assembly, I propose hoisting Bill 202. If the minister does not implement regulatory changes, then we should revisit this bill when the time is appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: I'll wait a moment for the amendment to be circulated to you all. Does anyone wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Chase: Speaking to the amendment, I very much appreciate the intent of the member who proposed Bill 202. He proposed it because his constituents asked him to do it, and he believed that it was the best vehicle to accomplish the end, which was to limit not only the production but the sale and problems associated with the cleanup of crystal meth. There is no doubt that in the future we're going to be faced with other types of drugs and other circumstances that pose threats, but I think that the member has focused on crystal meth, which at this moment is an extreme problem, and in so focusing on this, has created a bill to address the situation.

I speak against the amendment, which would put it back six months. I believe that the discussion should take place throughout the process of Committee of the Whole and third reading. To further amend the bill if we need to sharpen its focus, fine, but simply pulling it at this moment to me dishonours the member's intent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. Minister of Environment stated that he is going to modify the EPE Act to make sure that we look after this dreadful drug production. I'm in favour of that, and I'd at this time call for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to address this shortly as well. I said earlier that I was in favour of Bill 202 but was very concerned, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed is, that it was too inclusive and that we need to go after all areas with this drug.

I don't understand. Last spring we came together as a House and moved the crystal meth bill in short order, and I feel that we should be able to get an amendment and bring it forward here with the unanimous consent, I believe, of all parties. We need to be able to move on this quickly, and six months seems like a tremendously long time to me. I would like to see an amendment come forward to move to make this a more inclusive bill but in a much shorter term than six months from now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Bill 203
Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway)
Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to move second reading of Bill 203, Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006, on behalf of the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

The hon. member regrets that he cannot be here today but has expressed to me how important he considers this bill to be.

As the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka I am familiar with the Alberta Central Railway Museum, which is located near my riding. This fine organization provides the citizens of the area and the entire province with something truly special, a glimpse into the past. The name Alberta Central Railway Museum recognizes the historic railway which served central Alberta from 1913 to 1981. It originally ran from a location near Red Deer to a point beyond Rocky Mountain House. The museum site represents the 1907 Wetaskiwin Canadian Pacific Railway depot in a scaled-down form. It is a public venue that prides itself on its wealth of knowledge of pre-1965 CPR artifacts and history.

In conjunction with the museum's 10th anniversary celebration in 2002, the final spike was hammered to complete a full-gauge rail line on the museum grounds. This mile-long loop of track is utilized by visitors who board a restored 1926 passenger car. This vintage, first-class equipment gives passengers a first-hand look into Alberta's history. Having a track of this nature allows for something more than a site. It offers an experience. To feel the cool steel of a passenger car as you climb aboard while the unmistakable beat of the engine begins to fill the air is truly remarkable. I know that for me personally, being able to visit these heritage sites and relive a part of the past is something I cherish and enjoy very much.

Through its active rail yard and exhibits the Alberta Central Railway Museum is able to tell the story of train travel in Canada. This includes a vivid portrayal of the work involved with the railroads and the incredible importance of railways to western Canada. The railway is something more than our highways, and a train is something greater than our cars. The railway built our country and gave birth to the province of Alberta. The railway was the only means of transportation other than walking or riding a horse or a cart. Really, it was the only fast transport available in the entire western part of the country.

The laying of each new length of track gave rise to great opportunity for many of the first Albertans. It is still apparent from glancing at a map of our province that towns grew on the routes of railways. This is because the railways brought not only settlers but a steady source of supplies and a reliable means of transportation to export markets.

The once countless wooden elevators are wonderful examples of this aspect of railway transportation. These elevators symbolize farming and the location of communities themselves. Railways and elevators were synonymous symbols of service for farmers and the west for many years. Though the role of these structures has diminished in the new era of agriculture, their importance in terms of our heritage is still evident. Thankfully, organizations such as the Alberta Central Railway Museum are working to preserve them. In 2002 the museum was able to acquire a 1906 Alberta Grain Company elevator. According to Alberta Central, it is the second oldest standing grain elevator in the province.

Despite the success of the Alberta Central Railway Museum they have approached the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, in whose riding this museum sits, with an issue that is troubling them. While their passionate spirit for their cause bodes well for their operation, in the case of their active track this is simply not enough. This is because the legislation and regulations that currently apply to the track at this museum are making it difficult for them to operate.

A great example of this is the fact that the folks at the Alberta Central Railway Museum have to complete an inspection of their track just as often as major rail companies. This means that heritage railways are checking their line just as many times as CN and CP. It is my understanding that under the current regulations an inspection must be done twice per week. It is easy to identify that this is difficult for the small organizations that run heritage lines. It is also easy to see that two sets of regulations would be more appropriate.

It is clear that there is a huge difference between national carriers and heritage operations. Under the proposed legislation heritage railways would operate at speeds below 30 kilometres per hour and travel less than 240 kilometres per day and would not operate for the purpose of transporting commodities. National carriers travel much faster, cover much more ground, and carry many dangerous goods. In fact, a typical train that would run through my constituency, down the track between Edmonton and Calgary, would have as many as 100 cars, each car weighing more than 100 tonnes, which is over 10,000 tonnes at high speed many times per day. Alberta Central runs about 20 weeks per year, two trips per day, about a mile per trip, which is 10 trips per week, with one engine and one or two other cars at very low speeds, mostly below 10 miles per hour. So just as we cannot compare apples and oranges, we cannot judge national carriers and heritage railways with the same degree of scrutiny.

The difficulty the Alberta Central Railway Museum is facing is not an isolated case. There are three other active sites in Alberta that utilize vintage equipment on full-gauge tracks. These include the lines at Fort Edmonton Park, Calgary Heritage Park, and the Alberta Railway Museum. All three of these organizations are dealing with the same challenges as the Alberta Central Railway Museum. These difficulties can be erased with a simple amendment which is proposed in Bill 203. By creating a heritage railway designation under the Railway (Alberta) Act, we will build a platform to free them from the unnecessary burdens they currently face. By following this legislation with more appropriate regulations, we will be giving them a chance to operate under more fitting guidelines.

However, it is important to note that we will not be giving them free rein that will endanger visitors. Unique regulations will be established that will take into consideration the risks involved in running these heritage railways. A major risk involved in railways is the wear on track switches and other such devices. This is a valid concern for major carriers whose repeated trips over these tracks include a large number of cars carrying huge loads. The vintage railways dealt with under Bill 203 have a handful of cars with minimum tonnage. I'm not claiming to be an expert, but it would make sense that less weight and fewer trips would mean a lot less damage or wear and tear per day.

With these sorts of differences between the demands on the track used by national carriers compared to those in heritage sites, an amendment to the Railway (Alberta) Act is a much better approach than making exemptions through regulatory reform. Bill 203 achieves the desired end in a simple way and at the same time gives these historic sites a designation of heritage railway which is accurate, fitting, and honourable. It is worth noting that this designation could not be created with regulation changes alone.

The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has been assured through the process of stakeholder consultation that safety will not only be maintained but will be the number one, first priority in the creation of the new operating standards for heritage railways. At the same time, these rules will be more appropriate to the capability of the organizations and the vintage equipment they run.

Now is the perfect time to be addressing this issue. The Alberta centennial has made all of us reflect upon the great history of our province. It has made us realize that we have all been a part of making it the success story that it is today. This connection is important because it is a part of who we are.

Because of the vintage qualities of the equipment used on these lines and the regulations that currently govern them, these railways are being unnecessarily burdened. Grouping historical railways in the same category or the same regulatory sphere as major carriers such as CN and CP makes no sense. Creating a separate classification for them as heritage railways is a logical and reasonable solution. Please join me in supporting this legislation in Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I rise to speak in favour of this motion.

An Hon. Member: It's a bill.

Mr. Chase: A bill. Thank you very much. I appreciate that clarification.

I speak in favour of this bill for a series of the same reasons that have been put forward before, so I'll not go into great detail. But it's important to connect the number of kilometres travelled with the safety of the line to ensure that the line is properly maintained. Given the small percentage of kilometres that are annually expended in the Fort Edmonton, Heritage Park, and the heritage railways, it makes absolute sense to not require the same strenuous rules. The vintage railways are a part of our celebration that we just experienced with our 100-year, centennial birthday, and encouraging history in this province, which this bill promotes, is of utmost importance.

Just a very little sidetrack comment. For the three years that I worked as a campground host in Cataract Creek wilderness park, I would travel from Longview along the highway past Eden Valley. Along the Highwood River there was an historic railway car being used as a cabin. The people in the area objected to the use of this stationary rail car as a cabin. They felt it was an eyesore. The cabin owner decided that since stationary was the problem, he would simply mount this rail car on a set of rails that basically extended about 10 feet on either side of his car. So that he was within the Alberta regulations of a vintage rail car, he would make sure that he moved the rail car a few centimetres to the left, a few centimetres to the right to make sure that he came under the legislation associated with vintage rails. I'm sure he will enjoy, as will all other heritage railway buffs, Bill 203, which differentiates historical railways from the regular freight on a day-to-day basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be very brief. The hon. member has talked very much about this bill and has basically said the majority of what I was going to say.

I would give a little background to this bill. Many people are familiar that there is a railway in Heritage Park. Mr. Speaker, over the past three to four years there have been some significant issues with the Heritage Park railway about the cost of upgrading that, in essence, to the level that would occur on all other railways around the country. You and I both know that in Heritage Park, quite simply, it goes around in a circle. It makes absolutely no sense to have the same regulations for CN/CP as well as the other short lines in Alberta as it does on these closed-circuit railways.

In talking to the railway associations, they in no way want to endanger people. On the other hand, they are spending an inordinate amount of money to go through all of the qualifications, go through all of the track checks twice a week, as was mentioned, and it's causing them severe hardship.

The central Alberta railway, for example, is looking at costs of around $50,000 a year, which quite simply could be used for other things. It could be used for other things for their museum. To let the Assembly know why we are talking about railways, CN and CP, being national carriers, are governed by federal legislation. The short-line railways, of which there is now just one, as well as the heritage railways are actually under the jurisdiction of the Railway (Alberta) Act and therefore come under our jurisdiction.

This is a case, Mr. Speaker, of quite simply doing what is right. It's a case of some common sense. It's a case that a railway going 10 kilometres per hour or 10 miles an hour, under 30 kilometres per hour, is not going to pose the same amount of threat to people's safety as a railway that is travelling 50 or 60 or a hundred kilometres per hour carrying freight over large distances, yet, as it is today, the regulations are exactly the same. So I really commend the hon. member for bringing this bill forward. It is something that I and my department are completely in favour of, and it is something that I certainly will support.

The regulations will come after this. It will come with some consultation with the actual railways. In no way – in no way – Mr. Speaker, are we going to diminish the safety of these railways. In no way are we going to allow the railways to diminish to such an extent that they become a safety hazard. What we're going to do, quite simply, is put a level of common sense into this. I feel that that is incredibly important.

Again, I really commend the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing this forward and for paying such attention to his constituency. Although it may be seen by some as being an issue that is very simplistic, it is a very important issue. In places such as the central Alberta railway, Heritage Park, Fort Edmonton this is a very large issue, so I absolutely commend the member and look forward to the speedy passage of this bill through the Legislature, Mr. Speaker.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, take some great interest in seeing the speedy passage of Bill 203. I had the opportunity to speak to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose last week, and he informed me of the details of this bill. I can with very little hesitancy say that I certainly agree with the spirit if not the details of Bill 203. We have quite a number of vintage railways operating throughout the province of Alberta. Certainly, encouraging this sort of development as a way for people to learn about the history of our province as well as to promote tourism in the province of Alberta – I think it's incumbent upon us to encourage that as much as possible by allowing these vintage railways to operate in the most economical way possible.

You know, for more than 80 years we've had different companies operating branch lines all over the province, through the mountains and up to the north country and down south to the States. We see a lot of our history directly linked to the development of these rail lines, and some of our most beautiful architecture is associated with rail lines as well. Now, in 2006, we see some of our, I guess, most interesting tourist attractions somehow being linked to these vintage railways. I myself and my family worked for a number of years at Fort Edmonton as costumed animators, as volunteers. We greatly appreciated the vintage rail lines that do exist there, and certainly it was a big draw for tourism in Edmonton, as it is in Calgary and central Alberta, where the member who introduced this bill is from.

I do have a couple of specific questions that perhaps we can work through during the speedy passage of this bill. First of all, we have here in Edmonton a very well-organized and industrious group called the Edmonton Radial Railway Society. These are the people who operate the streetcars at Fort Edmonton, and they operate streetcars of different vintages there. As well, they operate the streetcar that goes over the top of the High Level Bridge. They have been very proactive in developing that as a way to transport people to the south side, back to the north side, and as a tourist attraction too. I know for a fact that the Edmonton Radial Railway Society as well has very ambitious plans and, in fact, has built up the rail capacity in storage to run a streetcar from Fort Edmonton up to the University farm area, where there will be a new LRT station in the not-too-distant future.

I'm curious to know if perhaps this legislation would be pertinent to the Edmonton Radial Railway's plans as well. I know that they are fully deserving of our full support in what they do. While perhaps it's problematic to apply this particular legislation to the route that they operate over the High Level Bridge since those are also, I believe, commercial railway lines, certainly I would like to entertain the possibility of the line that they have proposed from Fort Edmonton up to the university farm. They will put in their own line. They have bridges stored away already. They have rail lines stored away. If we could perhaps accommodate for their plans for that route under this legislation.

The area, specifically, that I would focus on in regard to perhaps some minor changes is the 240 kilometres a day stipulation which is in this Bill 203. Perhaps we could look at that. I will take it upon myself to contact the Edmonton Radial Railway Society to see if that works for them with their plans because I would like to certainly see them accommodated within the structure of this Bill 203.

As I said before, I think that railways have a very strong connection to our past and teach us a lot about the history of how our province was developed, but they also teach us about the future and how railways will in fact come back to serve us again here in Alberta. They're fun, they're interesting, they attract people from all over the world, people who are dedicated to vintage railway as a hobby and as a field of study, and I certainly hope that Bill 203 will help to facilitate that here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to join in debate on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. I support the bill and support the intent of improving the existing legislation in terms of how it addresses certain railways.

Mr. Speaker, the original act, the Railway (Alberta) Act, was debated in this House in 1998, and it had really three purposes. First, it eliminated administrative barriers to individuals or groups in the private sector who were contemplating starting up a public railway. Now, under the old system it was necessary for each railway operator to obtain a special act in the Legislature, as you would recall, in order to formalize their railway. The Railway (Alberta) Act eliminated the need for a special act.

Secondly, the purview of the act was expanded to encompass all full-size railways which operate in Alberta. Now, prior to this, only public railways were identified under railway legislation in our province. Railways operating on industrial sites as well as other railways, such as the one located in the Alberta Railway Museum, as we heard about today, were not included in the railway legislation in the province.

Finally, this act empowers the minister responsible to create and enforce regulations with regard to rail safety under legislation which falls under provincial jurisdiction.

This act is a great improvement on the original act, and I do support it. We do have to allow the Alberta Railway Museum and others to operate in this province, albeit in a very safe environment, and remove some of the administrative barriers.

With that, I support Bill 203, and I wish to adjourn debate on Bill 203. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a good afternoon of debate, and in view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Boards of Directors Guidelines

502. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate patronage appointments and increase openness and accountability of government institutions and agencies by establishing new principles and procedures for recruiting, training, and evaluating boards of directors as outlined by recommendations 1 and 2 of the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, 2004-2005.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure at this time to lead off the discussion on Motion 502. Patronage appointments to public boards is this motion. I think it's about time this Legislative Assembly had a debate on this issue, and this certainly follows from the Auditor General's report from last year where there were recommendations made to improve recruiting, evaluating, and training of public boards.

This motion provides the opportunity to point out, number one, the patronage in the appointment process. Do we have a democratic deficit here? Is there sufficient openness? Is there sufficient public oversight? Given the poor system for evaluating and reporting on performance and the potential or real negative impact on the performance of important public boards and agencies, many of which are responsible for significant decisions and considerable amounts of tax dollars, I think that this is an important time to have this debate.

Now, certainly, when we look at the Auditor General's report and we look at how the report ranks or gives priority to its recommendations – there are three categories, of course: key recommendations, other numbered recommendations, and unnumbered recommendations. Both the recommendations we're talking about in this motion are about key recommendations. I have no idea what caught the Auditor General's eye in this matter or, as a matter of fact, the other auditors' that work in the office. The Auditor General's report includes both cross-ministry and ministry-specific recommendations, and since most ministries have established boards or agencies with delegated powers, these recommendations were cross-ministry.

Now, there are a lot of agencies and boards and commissions that have been created by this government. Research indicates, starting with A, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: there's the Northern Alberta Development Council and the Métis Settlement Appeal Tribunal. In Advanced Education, of course, we have a significant number of boards of governors of institutions all over the province that are set up. Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: many different organizations. Children's Services certainly; Community Development; Economic Development. In Finance we've got ATB Financial, the Alberta Insurance Council, the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, the Alberta Securities Commission. In Gaming we have the Alberta Gaming Research Council and the liquor commission. There are lots of boards, Mr. Speaker.

We can look at the necessity or the need to improve public confidence in the political process, and I would urge all hon. members to consider supporting this Motion 502 if for no other reason than to restore public confidence in the political process. There are many examples of what the federal government has done right and what the federal government has done wrong. One of the things that they have certainly done right is that they have for public circulation a book on appointments. It's a public document. Now, I researched this, and I couldn't find a similar book for this government. I can't find, if it does exist, a comprehensive list of all these agencies, boards, and commissions: who was on them, what they are making, and who appointed them.

Now, perhaps we could even go further than have a book. We could have a website linked directly to the front page of the Alberta government's website, and we could have a list on here so that the public could be confident that they don't need a Progressive Conservative membership to apply for one of these agencies, boards, or commissions. This website could let everyone know what positions are available, how long is the term, the compensation and/or benefits, and also we could find out the vacancies, the listing of those vacancies and if there is to be a competition to fill these vacancies and for how long the competition is open to the public. I think that would be a good first step.

Was there an open competition when we appointed the former Minister of Energy to his patronage job in Washington, DC? I don't think there was an open competition. I don't think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was aware if there was an open competition. Who knows? With her background in the arts maybe she would have been interested in applying. You never know. It's hard to say. I for one didn't see an open competition when Murray Smith got this job. There was certainly no indication of the salary that would be paid.

Mr. Ouellette: You have to admit that he's doing a hell of a job, though, isn't he?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry, Minister of RAGE; I didn't catch that.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. My apologies, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly, Mr. Smith's compensation package, his accommodation, his expense account: none of this was made public prior to that patronage appointment. The hon. member can roll his eyes if he wishes, but it is a patronage appointment pure and simple. That's all it is. This is a government that a little over a decade ago eliminated all these patronage positions in these sort of foreign capitals.

Ms Blakeman: The offices.

Mr. MacDonald: They closed those offices as a cost-cutting measure.

Now, when we see some hon. members retire from this Assembly, they're not satisfied with their payout. Oh, no. Mr. Smith goes to Washington at the taxpayers' expense, and there's no rhyme or reason as to why that is happening. The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency may think that there are valid reasons for this patronage appointment, but I can't see any. Sorry. The federal government has a series of embassies and ambassadors and staff in various places around the world, and I would encourage this government to work with that group. In fact, we have the former Minister of Finance in the Progressive Conservative government, Mr. Michael Wilson, going down to Washington to work as our ambassador.

So maybe we could work with him, save a few dollars, and eliminate that patronage position because we still don't know all the details of the selection process. This is where, if we had a website, there could be a lot of people seeing that position open up, understand that the government is going to create that position . . . [Mr. Macdonald's speaking time expired] Boy, I wish I had more time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am also pleased to join in this debate on Motion 502 dealing with patronage tonight. You know, there is a lot that can be said about the staffing of agencies, boards, and committees, but I will keep my comments brief and fairly narrowly focused to enable others to cover the issues as well.

Across Canada there is an astounding number of positions on federal agencies, boards, and commissions that are appointed by the Prime Minister and his cabinet. There are some 2,800 of these positions, and that number does not include Crown corporation appointments, judicial nominations, or appointments to Ottawa's unelected and ineffective Senate. The Official Opposition's Liberal cousins in Ottawa displayed naked cronyism and unadulterated patronage in doling out literally thousands of these positions over the years. A large number of these appointments by ministers and the Prime Minister's office are made without consultation or the advice of the affected agency, board, or commission. Can you believe it? Without consultation with the affected agencies, boards, or commissions.

Many of these appointments are unvetted and completely arbitrary. Far too often plum appointments were used to simply reward loyal Liberal acolytes. These appointments were indicative of the obscene culture of Liberal corruption and entitlement in our nation's capital. In the two weeks leading up to the dissolution of Parliament and the onset of the federal election campaign last fall, during the frantic last days of this disastrous and corrupt Liberal government's prolonged death rattle, Paul Martin handed out a staggering 212 appointments. Let me repeat that: 212 appointments in a mere two weeks. That's not all.

An Hon. Member: That's not all?

Mr. Prins: That's not all. This cornucopia of appointments that were handed out during this two-week span like bite-sized chocolate bars and boxes of Smarties on a Halloween night included lucrative goodies such as a dozen ambassador positions, directorships of large Crown corporations, executive positions in important federal agencies, immigration adjudicators, high-ranking judges to the federal judiciary, high-level promotions within the RCMP, and trustees of national museums.

The sad thing is, Mr. Speaker, that this two-week patronage bender looks almost reasonable compared to the patronage spree that Martin went on between April 14 and May 19 of 2005 when 448 orders in council were hurriedly approved, including more than 300 public-sector appointments. That Trudeau-esque flurry of patronage and pork-barrelling just happened to coincide with the period last spring when Martin's government precariously teetered on the brink of losing the confidence of the House of Commons – 448 orders in council. The Martin Liberals decided not to take any chances and made very sure that they could take care of as many Liberal friends and followers as possible in their potential final days as the ruling party in Ottawa.

Unfortunately, the federal government did not fall on May 19, and Canadians were forced to endure several more months of Liberal governance, which included more patronage and a very transparent ploy to spend their way to try and buy votes and attempt another election win using an obscene amount of taxpayer dollars, including pre-election spending announcements in excess of $20 billion in the month of November. Can you imagine $20 billion of new spending in one month?

Just to add some credibility to what I'm saying and some incredulity to what you are hearing, I'll share a few examples of these appointments. Here are a few of the noteworthy beneficiaries of former Prime Minister Martin's plentiful patronage appointments. I'll just name a few of these, just for the benefit of the Assembly.

Glen Murray, former mayor of Winnipeg and defeated Liberal candidate in the 2004 federal election, appointed as chairman of the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy despite the rejection of his appointment by MPs in the House of Commons environment committee. John Harvard, former Liberal MP, appointed Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. Ironically, he was appointed Manitoba's LG to make way for Glen Murray, who would eventually go on to lose his seat in the 2004 election.

Allan Rock, a former Liberal cabinet minister, appointed Canadian ambassador to the United Nations. Frank McKenna, former Liberal Premier of New Brunswick, appointed ambassador to the United States. Jim Walsh, a former Newfoundland and Labrador Member of the House of Assembly and cabinet minister who headed Martin's leadership campaign in Newfoundland, appointed to the Federal Transportation Safety Board. Yvon Charbonneau, former Liberal MP, appointed ambassador and permanent delegate of Canada to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris. Stan Keyes, former Liberal cabinet minister and one-time chair of the National Liberal Party of Canada caucus, appointed Canadian consul general to New England and Boston. Howard Sapers, former Alberta Liberal MLA, appointed as correctional investigator of Canada.

Karen Kraft Sloan, former Liberal MP, appointed Canadian ambassador for the environment. David Haggard, defeated federal Liberal candidate, appointed chair of the newly created advisory committee on apprenticeship. Robert Fung, prominent long-time Liberal financial supporter, who also happens to be Martin's former college roommate, has been the beneficiary of a plethora of patronage perks over the years.

I'm not even going to touch on the ridiculous partisan patronage appointments that the Martin Liberals have made to the federal judiciary or the undemocratic lifetime appointments to the Senate to reward personal friends, financial contributors, and good soldiers within the Liberal ranks, Mr. Speaker.

The sheer volume and opportunistic timing of Martin's patronage appointments may be sickening but hardly surprising. It was just business as usual for the Liberal Party of Canada. Mr. Martin was just following the well-treaded path of his Liberal brethren Chretien, Turner, and Trudeau, who in the grand Liberal tradition opened the federal appointment troughs for the rest of the partisan Liberal hogs to feed at on their way out of the Prime Minister's office. The level of taint involved in Ottawa's appointment process is stunning. Unfortunately, it even gives a bad name to hogs.

Here are a few of the more infamous patronage appointments made by former Prime Minister Jean Chretien: Roger Simmons, former Liberal Trudeau-era cabinet minister convicted of tax evasion, appointed as consul general in Seattle. David Dingwall, former Liberal cabinet minister, the man who claims he was entitled to his entitlements, appointed president and CEO of the Royal Canadian Mint. We all know how that one turned out. Jim Munson, Prime Minister Chretien's former press secretary, Chretien's last Senate appointment. Munson joined Percy Downe, Chretien's former Liberal chief of staff in the senate. Alfonso Gagliano, a Chretien cabinet minister of federal sponsorship scandal fame, appointed Canadian ambassador to Denmark.

I could continue for hours, Mr. Speaker, about the long Liberal lineage of questionable patronage appointments. I didn't even get to Trudeau. I said at the outset that I would be brief, so I'll exercise restraint and cede the floor to the next speaker.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we seem to have an urge tonight to enthusiastically coach and help out the person that's recognized to do the speaking. It's really not necessary. If anyone wants to speak, I can certainly put you on my list. Just raise your hand to be recognized, and hopefully we'll get to you.

The next speaker will be the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that wasn't the most amazing case of the pot calling the kettle black, I don't know when I last saw it. This is so typical of what's wrong with Alberta. Here we have a motion that's attempting to make things better in Alberta, and what we have is a government backbencher who gets up and whines on for 10 minutes about a defeated federal government. Hello? We're not talking about the feds; we're talking about right here. Did that member contribute to what was happening here in Alberta? Did he have anything positive to say about moving us forward? No. He's going to whine on about the defeated federal government. Well, let's look at what his own people have to say. [interjection] If it's good for the goose, it's good for the gander, honey. Sit tight.

8:20

Here we have a favourite member of this particular Alberta government. That would be Rod Love. In a press release with the Edmonton Sun we've got Mr. Rod Love explaining "Alberta's process of holding open competitions with panels of bureaucrats and outside experts vetting the candidates," and he's promoting this to who? That would be the Gomery inquiry, that went across the land. What is Mr. Love quoted as saying? I'm sorry. There's a brief word in here that's an expletive deleted, but bear with me, Mr. Speaker. In quotes, Mr. Love says, "There was too much goddamn cronyism in our own government." Please forgive me. It's a direct quote, and I'm happy to table it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we just had a discussion earlier, last week, about quoting using unparliamentary language or language that's not fitting to be used in this Assembly.

Ms Blakeman: I understand that. I just wanted to be accurate with the quote, and it's in the quote. I'm happy to table it. I'll get you the copies and table it later this evening.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member withdrawing that comment? Would you like to withdraw that comment?

Ms Blakeman: It's a quote, but I can withdraw the word in the middle of the quote, and I'm happy to table it so that you can see I was quoting, Mr. Speaker. Thanks very much.

We have this representative of this government not talking about anything in Alberta but talking about something happening outside of Alberta. You know what, Mr. Speaker? Almost every word that he spoke is absolutely applicable to Alberta today. We've got somebody whining and talking about how there was a government in place for so long, that it was so totally corrupt, that everything was permeated throughout their culture with corruption, and they've been in power how long? Oh, my goodness, this was such an immense amount of time. We should have all been ashamed of how long they sat in power in the federal government. How long was that? Was it 12 years? Oh, my. How long do we have the Conservatives in power here in Alberta? Well, that would be 35 years. That's almost three times as much. Three times as much and, I could venture, three times as corrupt perhaps, Mr. Speaker.

Let's have a little look-see at what our possibilities here are: patronage appointments to government boards and agencies. Mr. Speaker, this was already brought forward by our very own Auditor General not once, not just the most recent Auditor General but a previous one as well, talking about the need for this government to clean up the way it appointed people and to get people in place because they actually knew something about the issues. This is important because these people are supposed to be representing the citizens, and they should be representing the citizens. Frankly, more people in this province did not vote for this government than did vote for this government.

Therefore, to have citizen representation, there surely should be people appointed to these government boards and agencies who are not card-carrying members of the Conservative Party. More of them should not be card-carrying members than are card-carrying members, I would argue. They're also dealing with distribution of money, particularly government grants, so it's very important that this is seen to be open and transparent and accountable, and it is not, Mr. Speaker.

Let's have a look at some of the names. We have our very own gallery of rogues here, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to be able to go on for as much time as I have here. We've got Mr. Smith, who was a former provincial minister who did not seek re-election in the November 2004 election. What happens to him? No competition. Gosh, gee, he is appointed as the counsellor for the Alberta office in Washington, DC. My colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar had already commented that this was not an open and tendered job and that, in fact, that very minister had been responsible for cost-cutting measures earlier in which he closed all of these very same trade offices. Now they're reopened, and he's given the plum job in Washington, DC.

How about former Auditor General Peter Valentine? In the spring of 2005 he was appointed as interim head of the Alberta Securities Commission. He currently serves as senior adviser to the CEO and leader of internal audit projects at the Calgary health region authority. Well, my goodness, Mr. Speaker, what goes around comes around, doesn't it? Okay. Let's look at the Calgary regional health authority. In the late 1990s the Calgary regional health authority was run by a number of confidantes of the Premier, including former treasurer Jim Dinning as chairman, former chief of staff Rod Love as communications adviser, and former Executive Council deputy minister Jack Davis as CEO. Very interesting. The pot calling the kettle black again we have here.

How about Mr. Hartley, former VP, communications, for the PC Party association of Alberta, who also served on the regional health authority board there in Calgary? How about Norman "Skip" MacDonald, president of the Premier's constituency association, who was also appointed to the Calgary regional health authority, or perhaps Mr. Libin, who is a lawyer and, I understand, is responsible for some assistance in fundraising, who also served on the Calgary regional health authority? How about Jack Davis, former Deputy Minister of Executive Council under this current Premier, appointed as president and CEO to the Calgary health region? They've also appointed this same Mr. Davis to a variety of things: president of the Alberta Social Housing Corporation, director of Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, now known as the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, member of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board advisory committee, member of the Mount Royal College board of governors. My goodness, Mr. Speaker, this is a very long list indeed.

How about Mr. Gary Campbell, a long-time associate of the Premier who currently serves as the vice-president of finance, north, for the governing party's political association, serving on the Ralph Klein foundation and government appointments including the internal audit committee, the board of governors of the Alberta Treasury Branch Financial, and the Alberta Economic Development Authority. He was co-chair for the government's Alberta Tax Review Committee in 1998, also chairman of the government's Business Tax Review Committee in 2000. I bet you're starting to regret doing that, aren't you?

Let's look at Wendy Kinsella, who was the former assistant deputy minister of Alberta labour. She is now appointed or has been to the Capital health authority board. How about chair of NorQuest College board of directors? She's also been a member of the University of Alberta board of governors and a former executive director of the Alberta Human Rights Commission.

We have the previous Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who was appointed as a provincial judge. I'm sure she was very well qualified for it, but I do note she was, immediately upon not running in the last election, appointed as a provincial judge. How about Bob Maskell, the former Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, appointed to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts?

Well, my goodness, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine all these names, all these close associates, all of them appointed to various influential positions handling money, developing policy? They're supposed to represent the citizens. The distance between them and this governing party is nothing; it's about as wide as a piece of paper.

How about Audrey Luft, a member of the Alberta Economic Development Authority, also a former chair and member of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts? Additionally, Doug Goss, who turns up as a board member of NAIT, turns up as a board member of the Capital health authority, turns up as a member of the Environmental Protection Commission. How about Julian Nowicki, a former Deputy Minister of Executive Council: turns up as chair of Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission? Oh, yes, my friends. We even have a lovely woman named Paula Tyler, a former Deputy Minister for Children's Services, I think, and she turns up as a senior official for mental health services for children, Capital health authority.

There are a number of members, people that are closely associated with the political party from which this governing party comes. So when we talk about whether there's a bias, whether there is a process in place that's open and accountable, there isn't. [interjections] I'm loving this, Mr. Speaker, because every time we get people whining and moaning, and there's the Minister of RAGE yapping away on the other side again. I'm hoping he's going to get up immediately upon my finishing and actually put something on the record instead of just yapping off from the other side. Thank you very much for allowing me to get that out, Mr. Speaker.

Oh, I'm so sorry. How could I have possibly forgotten Bob Westbury, a favourite of this government, who is appointed on the government's behalf to a very long list of boards and different positions?

The Deputy Speaker: I'm not sure. Was the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency the next one wanting to speak on this? Oh, I was mistaken.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and to speak to Motion 502. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing forward this motion as I believe it presents a unique opportunity to prove the old analogy about stones and glass houses.

I'm sure we all remember the final days of the Liberal Martin government, Mr. Speaker, that tired, decrepit old beast that still managed to shove its snout into the pork barrel for one last apocalyptic feeding frenzy. Let me say that again: that tired, decrepit old beast that still managed to shove its snout into the pork barrel for one last apocalyptic feeding frenzy. What didn't disappear down the throats of departing Liberal MPs was tossed about randomly in every conceivable direction to friends and party contributors.

I was pleased to see my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka refreshing the collective memory of the opposition with a few examples of what their federal cousins find to be ethical and appropriate behaviour. The cronyism and wastefulness of the federal Liberal juggernaut as it gasped its last was a lasting and eternal testament to the celebration of mediocrity.

I actually wish I had more time at my disposal, Mr. Speaker, but regrettably I'm bound by the orders of this House. If this weren't the case, I might actually have a chance to completely catalogue and recount the extent of corruption and patronage present in every federal Liberal government since the time of Trudeau. Since this amount of time isn't a possibility, I'd like nonetheless to at least scratch the surface in the time I have remaining and mention a few more friends of the federal Liberals that achieved fame, fortune, and power with the mantra: it's who you know at the PMO. Those who kissed the Grits, so to speak, were handsomely rewarded, and ordinary Canadians footed the bill for this unprecedented financial philandering.

Mr. Speaker, as long as there was a Liberal government in power, Canadians could count on an overwhelming majority of Liberal friends filling the upper echelons and cushy cubbyholes of every government organization in sight. Whether they were talking heads or figureheads, they ascended to notoriety mostly on the back of association, not always by virtue of merit or ability.

Last April former Heritage minister Liza Frulla announced the appointment of three individuals to the board of the CBC, for example. One of these was Rai Sahi, a chief executive of Morguard Corp. He had a direct association with Paul Martin in the 1980s for his involvement in a deal to buy a Martin-owned company, Kingsway Transport Group. Let us also look at a couple of appointments made during the same period of time by the former minister of transportation, Jean Lapierre. B.C. businesswoman Kazuko Komatsu, who had donated thousands of dollars to the Liberal Party of Canada, was appointed to the board of directors of the Vancouver Port Authority. Former minister Lapierre also appointed one Michel Crête, a consultant to the Liberal government, to the board of Via Rail. Former Labour and Housing minister Joe Fontana appointed a renowned residential and commercial builder, Alexander Werzberger, who incidentally was a staunch Liberal supporter, to the board of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

What is really amusing, Mr. Speaker, are the comments made at this time about these and other appointments by Mr. Lapierre's spokeswoman, Irene Marcheterre. Ms Marcheterre made a statement to the effect that those who were appointed were giving a valuable service no matter that they had been giving money to the Liberal Party as well. She also commented that all individuals were qualified. Now, why should this even have to be said? I would think as a taxpayer that those who were appointed to these posts by the federal Liberals would have been considered on the basis of merit. That a staffer would feel the need to justify the appointment with a statement of qualification speaks, in my opinion, directly to the pervasive perception of corruption that surrounded the Liberal Martin government. Ms Marcheterre herself, after making these comments, was implicated in the Gomery investigation for allegedly receiving under-the-table payments along with other Liberals: simply unbelievable but not isolated.

The great statesman Benjamin Franklin once said, "He that lies down with dogs shall rise up with fleas." Now, I'm not saying that the federal Liberal Party was infested with fleas in a literal sense, Mr. Speaker, but I will say that they left pieces of their legacy of patronage scattered far and wide across the country. These individuals caused and, regrettably, continue to cause an itch in the nation's collective sense of decorum.

One must also wonder at the issue of association, Mr. Speaker. The opposition seems to have a rather warm and cozy relationship with their federal cousins. I certainly think that this relationship makes the proposals in Motion 502 . . .

An Hon. Member: Prove it.

Rev. Abbott: Grant Mitchell.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Rev. Abbott: I certainly think that this relationship makes the proposals in Motion 502 rather amusing but also sadly ironic given the track record of the Martin Liberals.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order?

Point of Order

False Allegations

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please; 23(h), (i), and (j). The speaker is saying that there's a cozy relationship between the provincial Liberals and the federal Liberals, and there is absolutely no proof to that. I would quote 23(h): "makes allegations against another member"; 23(i), imputing false . . . [interjections]

Hey, you know? [interjections] Order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I can't hear what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying with all the background noise.

Hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Continuing on, 23(i) is imputing "false or unavowed motives to another member" and 23(j): using "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." In that one comment he has managed to do all three of those things, and I would ask that he be brought to order on this, please. He's making an assumption here that is simply not true.

Rev. Abbott: If I may respond, Mr. Speaker, 23(h), (i), and (j) – and I would think that the member would know this after the many years she has sat in this House – are referring to situations about another member. I was not referring to any member specifically, but rather I was referring to the Liberal Party as a whole. Of course they're associated with their federal cousins. They share the same name, and they share many of the same values and beliefs.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone else who wishes to comment on this point of order?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, it seems that there has been a bit of a misunderstanding here because what I understood to be said was with respect to some former members of the Liberal Party in Alberta such as Grant Mitchell and Howard Sapers. Obviously, there is a relationship between some former members and the now extant Liberal government in Ottawa, and I think that's all the hon. member was trying to point out. In that respect, there was some coziness. We're all aware of it. So if we could just move on, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with the hon. member. It is a terrible insult to be accused of being in any relationship with the federal Liberals.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I've allowed a lot of leeway in all of the speeches so far tonight as far as relevance goes. Let me read the motion to you. We're debating:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate patronage appointments and increase openness and accountability of government institutions and agencies by establishing new principles and procedures for recruiting, training, and evaluating boards of directors as outlined by recommendations 1 and 2 of the annual report . . .

I've heard no mention of the annual report in any of the speeches. I've heard no mention of establishing new principles. All I'm hearing is examples of patronage at the provincial and federal levels of government.

If we're going to debate the motion, let's stick to the motion and the principles of it or else we'll be in points of order all night. May we move on, or I will be calling a point of order on relevance on all the speeches from this point on.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Debate Continued

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for clearing that up. That will bring us back to the parable about glass houses and stones that shouldn't be thrown. In true Liberal fashion the walls of the former federal House weren't glass. In fact, they were taxpayer-funded Waterford crystal, and the House staff were the homeowner's friends on permanent paid leave. In the end the people of Canada were given sufficient illumination to see through these walls and express their horror at the goings on within, thank goodness.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind whatsoever that these glass house building plans were distributed far and wide within the Liberal family, including the provincial Liberals, and that's the relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order, Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hinman: Relevance. You just made the point of talking about it, and he got up, and he hasn't said a single thing with relevance to Motion 502. I'd ask that you would keep your word and print them to point every time that they speak and they're not relevant. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Are you challenging the chair? I want to read to everyone Beauchesne's 459: "Relevance is not easy to define." In this case I would have to argue with this particular clause because tonight it seems to be quite easy to define. "In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate." I will be admonishing them when I feel it's necessary to do so or unless someone calls a point of order.

Mr. Hinman: We'll be standing up lots.

The Deputy Speaker: What was that?

Mr. Hinman: I said: I guess we'll be standing up lots unless they change their ways.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on the motion.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the motion I think what I'm trying to get at here is that the provincial Liberals are also representative of the culture of entitlement that David Dingwall made famous. You see, the opposition has not placed a lot of distance . . .

Mr. Hinman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on a point of order. What's your citation?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hinman: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). There is no relevance on new principles or procedures, and that's what this motion is about. It's about new principles and procedures for recruiting, training, evaluating of directors as outlined by the recommendations of the Auditor General's report. I don't hear any of that, and I question the relevance of his speech.

Rev. Abbott: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member would simply let me finish the speech, then he would see the relevance as it will all tie in at the end and become a very eloquent piece of literature. But he won't let me finish.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, your citation of (h), (i), and (j) doesn't refer to relevance at all.

Mr. Hinman: How about Beauchesne's 469 then? Does that one work any better?

The Deputy Speaker: It's Beauchesne's 459, so you quoted the wrong points. As I said before, it's not easy to define, and it's up to the discretion of the Speaker to do that, and I will do that.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar again on the motion.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm trying to get my speech finished here, and I can tell you that if this was the opposition trying to finish a speech, they would be allowed to do so. Now let me get back to the speech.

Rev. Abbott: The opposition hasn't placed a lot of distance between themselves and their disgraced federal cousins, so it would also seem reasonable to assume that by not vigorously denouncing the behaviour of the Martin regime, they aren't in the best position to comment on the appointment practices of other governments. It would appear that with this motion, they've gone beyond handing out stones. In fact, they're handing out slingshots as well, Mr. Speaker.

I honestly fail to see how any institution or individual could sink to the depths of depravity, greed, and corruption that we as Canadians came to expect from the last federal Liberal government. I also don't see the point in encouraging provincial reforms when they're already being investigated and acted upon. Furthermore, I think the achievements and accomplishments of this government speak for themselves. We have members of all political stripes and members of no political stripes sitting on our various boards and committees, Mr. Speaker. In fact, up to 80 per cent of Albertans are conservative, so it wouldn't surprise me if 80 per cent of our boards' members or makeup were conservative people because that's Alberta.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank once again the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and all the colleagues that have helped me with this speech for bringing forth Motion 502 and giving this Assembly an opportunity to reiterate the litany of shameless Liberal patronage that used to echo down the halls of federal power. As informative an experience as this has been, I'm afraid that I will have to join my colleagues and withhold my support for Motion 502.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the website dictionary.com patronage is explained, and one of the definitions given is

- The power to distribute or appoint people to governmental or political positions.
- The act of distributing or appointing people to such positions.
- The positions so distributed or filled.

Synonyms given on that same website for patronage include pork-barrelling and cronyism. Cronyism itself is defined as favouritism to friends "without regard for their qualifications."

Mr. Speaker, in the early '90s a Premier appointing his barber to head the gaming commission was considered a bad move. It caused his popularity to slip further and accelerated his departure from provincial politics. Fifteen years later this government still makes the same mistakes and doesn't seem to have learned anything. Granted, they may apparently not be receiving the same level of attention or criticism as before or as they should, but that's not an excuse for corruption. Maybe they're not troubled by it much because this government is more secretive, hiding more and more behind FOIP, or the public and/or the media have become desensitized to news of patronage appointments. Unfortunately, this government acts mostly after being exposed or shamed into taking action. This is a sign of fatigue and stagnation. Of course, 35 years of monolithic rule and a tight grip on and addiction to power leads to such outcomes.

What we're suggesting here is for the government to be proactive this one time and clean its house on its own accord before it's forced to. The direction I am taking, Mr. Speaker, is one of appearance. The visual is really bad now, and it needs to change dramatically. The public doesn't trust politicians and has lost faith in this government. This distrust was only magnified or compounded when they found out what this government is doing: appointing its friends and loyalists to comfortable, nice paying jobs on various boards and commissions. We have a chance today to significantly improve this government's image by alleviating some of the concerns that the public, we in the opposition, and even the Auditor General have with respect to cronyism or patronage appointments.

Motion 502, as presented by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, offers the hon. members across the floor a chance to try to begin to appear to be a little more transparent and forthcoming. If they have nothing to lose or hide, they would all support it. What we are proposing here, to bring it into focus, is to establish principles and procedures for recruiting, training, and evaluating people who are appointed to serve on boards, agencies, commissions, and committees. This is in tandem with the recommendations of the Auditor General in his annual report, 2004-05. We need the best people for these jobs: people with iron-clad, irrefutable qualifications and sound, relevant experience. Someone whose sole value is his or her friendship with or backing of a Tory MLA may not necessarily be the best candidate to fill this vacancy.

Of particular concern and cause for great irritation to me is when a position is created or invented, when it's custom-made to fit a certain applicant. This is unacceptable in our province's second century. If Mr. Harper is trying to clean up government in Ottawa, we should too, right here in Alberta. If the ruling provincial Tories don't do it, Mr. Speaker, we Alberta Liberals will.

Now, I know that people will say that the Auditor General didn't use the word patronage, per se, in his report, but we all know how diplomatic our Auditor General is and that those around him helping edit his releases are ones who pay great attention to their choice of words. The examples are there, and listing them off one by one today will extend this discussion for hours. We've just gone through it, and I think it's not necessary to go further into it.

This government has a chance to start to come clean and avoid embarrassment and scandal. This is the visual or appearance that I'm urging them to take into consideration. The greater benefit, however, is going to be that the citizens of this province will be served by individuals who are competent, trustworthy, and hard-working. These agencies or boards dispense hundreds of millions of public taxpayer dollars and oversee essential and critical services, from health and education to finance, to energy, and environmental protection. You have everything from the Treasury Branches and the Securities Commission to college and university boards of governors, from AADAC and the health regions to persons with developmental disabilities and the Workers' Compensation Board appeals commission, et cetera.

Accountability and trust are missing from the equation, Mr. Speaker, but really can be easily restored if this government chooses to act. I urge everyone to accept our Motion 502 today. Participation on public boards, agencies, and commissions is an important and integral part of our democratic process. Every Albertan with the proper experience and education should be able to apply to fill such a position. The decision should be based on merit and qualification; that is to say, on what you know not who you know in the government caucus or the PC party aristocracy. Thank you, and good luck to you all as you vote on this proposal.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take a little bit of a different angle on this. Quite frankly, I don't have any problem with people in this Assembly naming Mr. Smith or Mr. Westbury or other people that have taken appointments in Alberta, but when you do the drive-by smear in a motion like this, that's inferring that all of these people on these boards are Tories, are patronage appointments, that's very unfair to literally thousands of Albertans who go to work once a month, once a week, twice a year on the hundreds of boards that make this province the great place that it is.

8:50

We have a motion that says that we're going to do in with this patronage – and the hon. members brought up the connection to Gomery, but there is an absolutely huge difference between that level and the appointments that are in Alberta because hundreds of millions of dollars haven't left with the appointments that these boards and these people look after in Alberta. They spend this money on behalf of Albertans, and the money is accounted for by an officer of this Legislature, the Auditor General, who has also been accused of being a patronage appointment by the opposition in this motion. Mr. Speaker, that's astounding, to a certain degree, that an officer of the Legislature would be included in a motion about patronage appointments.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is a . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against Nonmembers

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Certainly, I would allow the hon. member time to withdraw that comment. We had never on this side of the House said that the Auditor General was involved in any sort of patronage appointment or patronage process. Clearly, if the hon. member had been listening to the debate previous, he would have realized that we were following up on a recommendation from the Auditor General's 2004-2005 report. I would ask now that the hon. member withdraw that statement.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I will not withdraw it. They also used the former Auditor General, Mr. Valentine, as another appointment. So they can check their Hansard. I am saying that including all Albertans, including these people, when you're discussing a motion like this, wipes them all with the same brush. They brought these names up, not me. I am more concerned with Mr. and Mrs. Jones who serve on these boards and who serve diligently and faithfully. Yes, some of them are Tories – that's just a fact of life – but lots of them are Liberals, are NDs, are nonpolitical, and the motion and the conversation has been around the fact that: well, this is all bad; it's all dirty.

Mr. Speaker, by and large, rather than name names of people who have been appointed to these boards, give examples of where the boards have done something wrong with taxpayers' money, where these people have improved their way of life or their bank accounts. Like other patronage appointments across the country we can all be compared to other provinces or the federal government, if you'd like. It doesn't serve a lot of good, but the fact is that these people shouldn't be afraid to come forward and volunteer to serve on boards, except to be slashed by the opposition that it's somehow a patronage appointment.

I want to just read the appeal board appointments: candidates will be screened and interviewed based on their qualifications the applications received; successful candidates will be added to the appeal board roster maintained by the department that provides a list of impartial, qualified individuals willing to serve on appeal boards as required. You know, it doesn't say: good Tories only apply. It says: qualified applicants. I would hate to think that because you do belong to a party at some time that you're ineligible to do extra work for your province and for your community. That just makes no sense.

I have no question that the hon. members' intentions were good, but the way that they approached this is that all boards are patronage, all boards must need more accountability and openness. That is simply not the case, Mr. Speaker.

You're looking nervous.

The Deputy Speaker: You're on a point of order.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I'm not going to withdraw my statements.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order?

Well, I don't have the information before me at this particular point based on the alleged point of order, on what these allegations specifically were, but I can tell you from the gist of all the speeches from both sides of the House tonight, names were brought up from federal people and provincial people. I'm sure that all the federal people's names that were brought up that allegedly received a patronage appointment didn't use that position in a negative way or a way that would benefit themselves either. If I'm to rule this on a point of order, I'm going to have to rule everyone that spoke to it so far out of order as well.

Now, I've asked this Assembly several times tonight to stick to the motion that's before us and the merits of the motion rather than resort to making allegations against another member or saying things that would impute false or unavowed motives to another member or as 23(j) says in our Standing Orders, "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Now, based on the fact that it was likely to create disorder, I could pretty much call every speaker on 23(j) because every speaker created disorder so far tonight in my estimation. I could rule the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster out of order, but to do so, I would have to go back and rule every other speaker out of order because they've all done the same thing.

I'm going to ask one more time if we can move on from here and stick to debating the motion even if that means taking the notes in front of you, those who are left to speak here, and covering them up and picking the motion up out of our Order Paper and looking at it to see what's in there and making up your speech as you go. That is my ruling, that we're going to carry on, and from this point on I'll be calling everything on a point of order.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, as you can see, my speech is not very elaborately written, but it comes from my experience of being on boards.

One of the boards I was on was the Health Facilities Review Committee. That was probably one of the most dedicated groups of people I ever had the privilege to listen to and work with, and I haven't been too terribly involved in politics except for the last five or six years. Most of these people I didn't know. We certainly never approached it from a political point of view. We approached it from a point of view of people that cared very deeply about the health facilities they were in, and I can assure you that they never, ever felt that it was a patronage appointment. After several months of work there I think they probably felt that they'd been tricked into a very difficult position. They contribute tremendous time to this.

So to suggest that somehow our system doesn't work now or that we need to change it because there's something wrong, Mr. Speaker, I think is unfair.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, are you debating the motion, or are you debating what was previously said?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm debating the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I'm confused about that because it sounds like you're debating what was previously said, so please proceed on the motion.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall end the confusion immediately. I would just hope the hon. members of this Assembly choose to deal with the motion in the appropriate way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to stand and speak to this Motion 502. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing this motion forward. I think it's a very appropriate one to start this Second Session of the 26th Legislature.

I did not prepare any notes calling kettles black or throwing rocks at glass houses. It didn't even enter my mind. I'm very disappointed that we fell into that, and I was disappointed with the jubilation and the laughter shown by some members when it was brought up.

What I want to speak on tonight is the motion on openness, on accountability, on new principles and procedures. I, too, though, would like to thank the thousands of Albertans who have accepted positions on these boards for the enormous amount of work that they do. To me they're the ones that really are the backbone of our communities and really what make them work. For us to think that someone else does it, I think that we should consider it a little bit more. I've been associated and worked with many of those people that have spent many extra hours dedicated to serving on those boards.

What I wanted to talk on tonight is cleaning up the perception of patronage appointment. I very much know and realize that in the real world if I had to hire someone or was looking for someone to deal with rules and regulations concerning automobiles, I would go to those people who I know and understand.

The point that I want to talk about is that perhaps we should step back and look at some of those boards that we put in, especially provincial boards, and consider elections again, the ones like the health boards. They served us very well in the past, those that were elected, and it's a great benefit because there was no question who they were loyal to and who they were working for: those people they were elected by. Each member in the House here understands who they're elected by, and what should be first and foremost on our agenda at all times is representing those people.

Some of the other things to look at when we consider the fact of openness and accountability. Accountability is: where are we spending our tax dollars, and what are we doing for the size of government? It seems like we're often having more boards, more appointments, and that's not serving the best interests of Albertans. So I think that on this part of openness and accountability it would be of value to discuss whether or not we should be electing more boards and whether we need as many boards as we have.

The other part is the new principles and procedures. It's the principles and procedures that govern us and our values and our way of thinking. Certainly, the optics for those people that are watching, it's been very eloquently pointed out tonight, do not look good from a provincial or federal position, and I think that we owe the people that have accepted these things the responsibility of cleaning that up. The Auditor General has said in his reports that we should maybe be doing more due diligence when we bring these people onto the boards. What would help there immensely – at the municipal level when they want to do something, they have to advertise it in the papers, and there's an application and a procedure that they go through. It's been pointed out tonight many times that there are not procedures, and it seems that it's bad optics. That's why people become disjointed from government, saying: "Oh, it doesn't matter. I'm not going to become involved. It's going to happen, and there's nothing we can do about it."

So to bring that back, I say that we should change the procedures, that we should be advertising. We should make those positions known to the public. I like very much the idea of putting it on the web and letting people understand that it's there and that they can and should apply for that job feeling that it is a nonpartisan job and that they are serving the community as a whole. It's not about the individual. It's about the process. We've pointed out many times tonight about the different individuals that have been there, but it's the process of how the individuals got there that has tainted it. So I would hope that what we would be doing – and I would certainly support Motion 502 – is saying: how can we make Alberta better? It's not about who they are or what they know; it's about how we make it better.

To close on accountability, I think that one of the major problems that we suffer in this democracy of Canada and Alberta is that accountability in the private world means that you're held accountable and you'll be removed when you've been shown to not follow what you represented or said you were going to do. That is recall. We could really change things here in the province of Alberta if we were to bring in recall. Then we would be accountable. We could have the elections, and we could be recalled if, in fact, we changed our policies, our thinking, or our procedure.

With that, I'll sit down. I thank you for the opportunity to speak to this motion, and I hope everyone will vote in favour of it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion before us, Motion 502, I'm pleased to rise and speak to. The motion in essence is simply asking this House to take the two recommendations made by the Auditor General in his report of 2004-2005, recommendations 1 and 2, and implement those recommendations. That's the essence of Motion 502. I want to put on record what these recommendations are before I proceed to comment further in the debate.

Recommendation 1 says:

We recommend that the Deputy Minister of Executive Council update Alberta public sector governance principles and guidance so that they are consistent with current good practices for recruiting, evaluating and training directors.

Now, clearly this recommendation suggests that the guidelines and the principles in place now are out of date, to put it mildly, and that they need to be updated.

Recommendation 2, Mr. Speaker:

We recommend that the guidance include a statement that governing boards evaluate and report publicly their own performance against both Alberta public sector principles and their own board governance policies.

These recommendations to me are self-evidently attractive propositions, recommendations for action on the part of this Assembly and this government. If there's a disagreement with the substance of the recommendations, that's what I think we should focus our debate on. I'd like to hear hon. members on all sides of the House focus on the substance of these two recommendations and say what they see wrong with them.

There are over 100 corporations, such organizations, in the public sector. After examining the governance of these bodies and boards, the Auditor General, the principal officer of this Assembly, has made these recommendations. I haven't heard a word about whether we have reservations. I don't. I think that these are eminently sensible recommendations and that they must be implemented immediately.

I also believe that these are recommendations made in the context of the Auditor General coming to the conclusion that we do not have in place in this province good governance guidelines. All he can do as an officer of this House is make recommendations, draw our attention to where we are not doing our job well, and then hope that, rather than accusing each other of doing this or doing that, we pay attention to what this gentleman, that we have appointed and who reports to us and is obliged to report to us on an annual basis, tells us needs to be done, where we are falling short of the most current, democratic, accountable, transparent, ethical governance practices.

Now, if members of this House take issue with these recommendations, that should be what we should be spending our time on in this House, not on accusing each other of this. I think it's in the public interest. We are here to serve the public good, and the public good is served if we have ethical governance practices, if there's transparency about the way we make appointments, if those we appoint are accountable to us, accountable to the people of Alberta by reporting on their own decisions and functions on a yearly basis and making those evaluations public. That's what these recommendations are saying.

Now, surely we can point our fingers at Ottawa, at the Liberal government that was, and say: well, it was afflicted by all these unethical practices, a rotten government. But what has that finger pointing to do with us here making a statement that we do take, in fact, the recommendations of the Auditor General of this province seriously? That finger pointing, it seems to me, whether we intend it or not, is taking attention away from the task before us, which is to make the governance of these over 100 public agencies and bodies better than it has been, and in doing that, he suggests what we need to do.

I implore members of this House to take seriously the work that the Auditor General has done on our behalf and to take action on those. There are interesting parallels, Mr. Speaker, between what these recommendations contain – and I have looked quickly through the Auditor General's report – and what in response to the problems many of the speakers tonight have drawn attention to with respect to the way things have been done in Ottawa in the past and the lack of ethical standards there.

Ed Broadbent, a member of the last Parliament, prepared a report called Cleaning Up Politics: Demanding Changes in Ethics and Accountability. Now, if we don't hold ourselves to the highest standards of accountability, if we don't demand of ourselves ethical standards, that are crying for attention, who will? I think it's up to the electors, then, to make those decisions if we don't pay attention. The Auditor General has done his work, and I think it's an obligation that we pay attention to what he is suggesting we do.

The Broadbent report on ethics and accountability makes seven recommendations, Mr. Speaker. The first one is democratic accountability for MPs, the second is fixed election dates, the third is transparent leadership contests, the fourth is electoral reform, the fifth is about ending unregulated lobbying, and the sixth is about ethical appointments, and that's the one that I want to just read into the record, what he's recommending needs to be done. If we look at what he's recommending and then go back to the recommendation that the Auditor General of the province of Alberta, the officer of the Assembly, has made, we'll see great parallels, overlap. So if we pay attention to the substance, I think we might agree that certain things need to be done, and to be honest to our electors, we ought to act on those recommendations because they make sense.

This is what these recommendations are, Mr. Speaker, as proposed by Mr. Broadbent: that the government of Canada – and here you could substitute the government of our province because, after all, our primary concern at this moment with reference to the special debate on this motion is with the province of Alberta. This is what he was saying about the government of Canada:

That the government of Canada develop skills and competence-related criteria for all government appointments, (including Board Members and senior Officers of Crown Corporations and other government agencies) . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate on Motion 502.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will just draw the attention of the House to number 6 of the recommendations in the Broadbent report.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that bell is not someone ringing this Legislative Assembly looking for a government appointment.

Now, we heard a lot about this motion. It was certainly interesting to listen to the debate as it was, but the Auditor General made this recommendation, not the Official Opposition, and I would encourage all hon. government members to think about that. This is a recommendation – in fact, it's two recommendations, and they're key recommendations from the Auditor General.

There seems to be a problem here, and this motion would go a long way towards fixing that. Now, we can't ignore this. A top Tory, Mr. Rod Love, has said – and it was discussed earlier, Mr. Speaker. This was in the Edmonton Sun in February 2006.

Rev. Abbott: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Nonmember

Rev. Abbott: I thought you'd admonished us several times this evening to avoid naming names to try to stop what you'd call a rabble-rousing, that's mentioned in the Standing Orders.

The Deputy Speaker: I admonished everybody for making accusatory remarks and allegations against another member, imputing false or unavowed motives to another member, or using abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. That's the gist of it. Hon. member and for all hon. members, with the exception of two speeches tonight you're getting back into that area of infringing upon the Standing Orders. If you would like to continue, please complete your summation and stick to the motion.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, there was no point of order there because there was simply no citation.

Mr. Speaker, top government organizers admit that there is too much cronyism in this government. If we vote for this motion tonight, that will hopefully satisfy that individual, for one.

We heard a lot earlier about the previous federal Liberal government. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, this newly elected Conservative government in Ottawa, what is one of the first things that they want to do? It's to establish a public appointments commission to set merit-based requirements for appointments to government boards, commissions, and agencies to ensure that competitions for posts are widely publicized and fairly conducted. Now, that's what this motion is all about, and that was my idea earlier about having a website with all this information on it. That is the purpose of that website. If it's good enough for the Conservatives in Ottawa, I don't know why this government here would be so uncomfortable with that, particularly after the wording from the Auditor General.

The establishment of this public appointments commission certainly would prevent ministerial aides and other political appointees from receiving favoured treatment when applying for public service positions. That's something that I would encourage this government to look at. It's not long ago that one member from one department was chastised for getting money from the taxpayers for not doing any work. That wasn't a federal Liberal appointment. That, Mr. Speaker, was a Progressive Conservative appointment.

Ms Blakeman: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it certainly was.

The only reason why I can say, Mr. Speaker, that government members are upset with Motion 502 is that this government is obsessed with control. This government talks about democracy, but if any independent commission or board or agency actually operates independently enough to criticize the government, it's dissolved or it's changed or it's filled with Tory cronies. Whatever happened to the Alberta community lottery boards? These were a genuine grassroots community organization, but because Tory members, MLAs, weren't getting enough photo ops, they shut the whole program down. They cancelled the board.

Participating on public boards, agencies, and commissions is a really significant part of our democratic process. It should be something that every qualified citizen has an equal chance to be able to do, with appointments being based on merit, not on who you know over in the PC Party office.

This government has directives with impressive sounding principles, but the problem is that these are just window dressing. That's why the Auditor General made these recommendations in 2004-2005. Too often partisanship overrides performance, and the public and the taxpayers suffer. These bodies that we're talking about control hundreds of millions of dollars and deliver or oversee the most significant public services in our province, from health and education to finance, energy, and environmental management.

The government bragged about the publicity gained from the mention in the Gomery report about the process used to hire deputy ministers – that was recommendation 12 – but it stops there. These processes don't appear to have carried on into other agencies or commissions or public boards. I would like to see that happen. If we vote to support Motion 502, I think we will have a better province. Certainly, we will have a better government.

In conclusion, I urge all hon. members to support Motion 502. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost]

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Ms Blakeman]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by stating that I am extremely honoured to have this opportunity to rise today and speak in response to the Speech from the Throne, given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I would like to thank and congratulate His Honour on a fine speech and a very fitting speech given the historical significance of the upcoming session.

Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we were all extremely proud to celebrate the centennial of our province in 2005. A century of achievement and success is behind us now. The Speech from the Throne marked the beginning of a renewed commitment to excellence as we enter the first sitting of our second hundred years. The second century will prove to be one of promise and innovation. Recent resource discoveries, a booming economy, and sound fiscal management will assure Alberta's prominence well into the future. Innovation and prudent spending are contributing to a dramatic increase in the quality of life enjoyed by Albertans in the present.

Mr. Speaker, this prosperity has not been without its challenges. There are always obstacles and adversity that threaten to overcome even the best-laid plans. Alberta is a place of extreme diversity. We are a land of vast expanse and vastly different cultures, but despite this diversity we are united in the common goal of a better province for all.

Mr. Speaker, I am both honoured and fortunate to represent the good people of Calgary-East. This constituency is unique in both its location and its diversity. People of all backgrounds are proud to call it home. They face the challenges and adversity with typical Alberta spirit, and typically this government has once again risen to the occasion by addressing many of these important and pressing issues. In the Speech from the Throne we heard of a commitment to new innovations that will continue the momentum of our prosperity, innovations in technology and value-added products, but especially close to my heart was a proposed series of initiatives aimed at increasing the number of skilled immigrants coming to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned previously, Calgary-East is a constituency of great diversity. People from all over the world who came in search of a better life have found just that. Through their perseverance and hard work they have added a valuable piece to the economic fabric of Alberta. Through their varying cultures and ethnicities they have added a giant contribution to the cultural fabric as well.

Alberta is a place of opportunity. We are a place where a person's ultimate potential is limitless. In light of the government's fiscal policies, the economic climate that makes this potential a reality will continue for a long time to come. Calgary especially is facing a boom of unprecedented proportions, Mr. Speaker, and a proportionate lack of skilled labour. Our city is expanding at an astronomical rate. Our population is expanding by over 2 per cent each year. By 2008 we will have a population of 1 million people.

Mr. Speaker, infrastructure is springing up, and jobs are being created faster than they can be filled. There is insufficient domestic skilled labour to meet the demand. In Calgary we desperately need carpenters, plumbers, machinists, and all sorts of tradespeople to accommodate our growth. By making a further commitment to increasing the influx of skilled labour into our province, the government is not only showing great responsibility; it is also providing great opportunity while adding even more to the diversity that has come to make Alberta distinct.

Mr. Speaker, as an immigrant myself I know the challenges and opportunities that are associated with leaving everything you know to start a new life in a strange land. It is a scary and daunting proposition, full of equal parts of hope and uncertainty. Easing this transition and bridging cultural barriers is a vital first step in increasing our workforce. In the speech delivered by His Honour, we heard of a new strategy to streamline the immigration process and make Alberta a prime destination for skilled immigrants.

Many of my constituents found opportunities in Calgary that would have been unattainable in their home countries. My hope is that with new and innovative strategies they will be joined by countless others. This is more than a creative vision for the present. This is a long-term diversification strategy that will sustain and even increase our economic momentum far into the foreseeable future. Removing barriers to immigration is a key component, a necessary component of a sustainable Alberta, and I am extremely pleased to see the government's proactive stance on this pressing issue.

Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents will also be pleased that more hard-working people will have the same opportunities they had to make a new life in a foreign land. This policy is so natural for this province. We have come back to our roots. As a fledgling province we advertised far and wide for settlers willing to carve a society from a harsh wilderness with basically nothing but determination and hard work. We made it easy for them and offered incentives, and the rest, as they say, is history.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at what we have today, we do it with the recognition of the immigrants that made it possible. Their achievements were nothing short of amazing. In the span of a few short years they showed the world that hard work and co-operation could make a society that the world would envy, a society where all the prejudices and enmities were set aside for the common good and a good life could be attained by those willing to work hard for it.

Mr. Speaker, we have now come full circle in our thinking. The entire world contributed to the first century of our province. We took in the most adventurous. We attracted the best, the brightest, and the hardest working from every corner of the world, and they built for us a province of which we should all be extremely proud.

We no longer have wilderness to tame or farmland to homestead, but we face challenges in our second century nonetheless. Once again, Mr. Speaker, we need skilled labour, and once again the world has shown its eagerness to lend the minds and the hands of its many different peoples. We have once again made a commitment to invite them in, a policy which will be to the benefit of everyone in this province. Alberta has been blessed with an abundance of natural resources, but left untapped, these resources are worth nothing. Oil is a commodity. It can't build a house, fix a car, or perform surgery; skilled immigrants can. As our prosperity continues to grow, so will the demand for their unique abilities.

In conclusion, as we enter the first session of Alberta's second century, I am extremely pleased at the foresight and commitment of the people of this province shown by this government in His Honour's speech. Just as was the case a hundred years ago, Mr. Speaker, great things are in store for the next hundred years. The people of Calgary-East, like every other Albertan, are extremely enthusiastic about the potential this future holds. They are eager to add their input into the future and pleased that the issues so important to them in the present are being addressed in a clear, concise, and visionary fashion.

Mr. Speaker, by increasing the prevalence of those who would help to build our province with their skills while at the same time fighting those who would try to destroy it with drugs and criminal activities, this government has addressed issues important not only to myself and my constituents but to every citizen in this province. With sound policies such as these I have no doubt that Alberta's prominence will last into the next century. Just as I have held the ideas of those who preceded us as an example, it is my firm belief that the statements presented by His Honour will likewise stand as a long-lasting testament to wisdom and sound policy to our descendants. While the future is not absolute, I have great faith that Alberta is on the right track to sustainable and continuous growth.

It is and will always be a place of unlimited opportunities for everyone, just as it has proved to be for me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to table a quote related to her speech on Motion 502. You can do that at this time.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the previous motion, Motion 502, I did quote from a particular document. I had promised I would table that document, and I'm happy to do so at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise for the second time to give my response to the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne.

Before I get into that too far, I would like to apologize to the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford on behalf of all members of this Assembly for what I believe was a new low in debate that we sunk to tonight. I would particularly point to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, who, I believe, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Zwozdesky: I would simply remind the member of citations 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as 459 from Beauchesne, which the Speaker admonished members about earlier today. I'm not sure if the hon. member who just spoke was in earshot distance to have heard exactly what it is that you said, but perhaps you could remind everybody at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: On the point of order?

Mr. R. Miller: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was simply responding to an interjection from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j) have been quoted extensively tonight. I think in all cases it was probably quite fuzzy as to whether or not there were any motives imputed to an individual member, but clearly what we have just heard are motives imputed to an individual member. He has mentioned my constituency, and he is trying to speak on behalf of me. I would ask him not to do that. I would ask him to withdraw those comments. If he would like to apologize on behalf of himself and speak for himself, then he can certainly do that, but he cannot speak for this entire Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order?

Well, obviously, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, your comments did create disorder in this House. During the division I spoke to both House leaders and said that I would be enforcing the rules on the strictest basis to maintain decorum in this House. So I would rule that your comments were out of order because they did cause disruption. Would you wish to withdraw them?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to withdraw the comment, and I look forward to your continuing to enforce decorum in the House. That might mean that I would get through my speech without any interjections from the members opposite.

Debate Continued

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I apologize to the people of Edmonton-Rutherford because I really do believe that the level of debate reached a low in this House tonight. I would like to thank, in particular, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing it back up to the level at which I believe it belongs and which I believe Albertans have a right to expect.

Mr. Speaker, one year ago I congratulated then Prime Minister Martin for having made an absolutely excellent choice in choosing the new Lieutenant Governor. During the previous year, my first year as an MLA, those comments proved to be extremely profound, I think, because I can't imagine another Albertan who would have made a better choice. I was honoured to have had the opportunity to be present at several events where the Lieutenant Governor was involved and particularly honoured to have had him attend an event in my consistency of Edmonton-Rutherford when we honoured 39 wonderful citizens for their contributions to Alberta with the centennial medals. That was certainly a highlight of my first year as an MLA and a highlight of my first year representing the people of Edmonton-Rutherford – amongst many, I must say.

Having had the opportunity to be involved with the royal visit was certainly a highlight. Presenting centennial medallions to centenarians was a highlight. I had 13 centenarians living in Edmonton-Rutherford in the year 2005 and had the extreme pleasure to be able to present each of those with a gold medallion. I think I may have mentioned this previously in the House, but the only consternation I had was the fact that 12 of them were female. I suggested to them that perhaps they were holding out on us and had a secret that they weren't willing to share.

All of the celebrations around September 1 were special. It's unfortunate that the children didn't have the day off school. That's the one reservation that I had. I really think that, you know, given a once in a century opportunity, it's too bad that we didn't give the kids a day off school. Nevertheless, I know I took my children out of school to join in the celebration, and I know many other parents did as well.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the highlight for me, the number one memory that I take from my first year as an MLA, was having had the honour to represent the people of Edmonton-Rutherford at the RCMP memorial held at the ButteDome in recognition of the Fallen Four. Never have I been so proud to be a Canadian as I was that day, to see row after row, literally sea after sea of men and women in uniform there to honour the four fallen RCMP officers. It was a sight and an experience that I will never forget and, as I say, without question the apex of my year as an MLA.

In particular, to the speech delivered by the Lieutenant Governor, I found myself one evening last week – and sometimes I wonder if maybe I should get a real life. The Premier referred the other day to the people that reside in this Assembly as not real people. At the time I took some offence, but maybe he's right because I have to say that the other evening I found myself at home, while doing some research for an upcoming bill, listening to the proceedings of this Assembly. With thanks to the Speaker and the Legislative Assembly Office it's available online on the Internet, so I was able to listen to debate while I was doing my research.

I heard a speech given by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and another one, a very eloquent speech, I must say, by the Member for Calgary-Fort. If you were to just listen to those two speeches and not have heard anything else, you would have thought that Alberta was literally Utopia, that everything was as good as it could possibly be right here in Alberta, and that there was absolutely nothing that could be improved upon; it was the very best imaginable. There was another speech given by a colleague to the left, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and in his speech you would have thought that there was nothing good with what's happening in Alberta right now, that everything was in utter chaos, and that we were all doomed to destitution, that it was just as bad as could be imagined. Then, thankfully, somewhere in the middle there was a speech by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung which pointed out that things are very good in Alberta right now but, boy, there are a lot of things that cause us to be concerned. I must say that these are the sorts of things that I hear from the people of Edmonton-Rutherford as I'm travelling through the constituency or knocking on their doors.

There's no question that we live in a time of plenty in this province right now. There is more money than any of us can possibly imagine. There is tremendous opportunity for so many people, and yet, somehow, there's a total disconnect between the wealth and the opportunity and a large segment of our society who are suffering, can't find a job, can't seem to pick themselves up from the situation they find themselves in and share in the wealth and prosperity. I'm not sure why that is, but I think every member of this Assembly should be concerned about it because it sort of defies logic, yet it's a very real situation. We have more food banks in the province right now than we've ever had in communities that have never had a food bank before. I have constituents, even in the relatively well-off constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, who are desperately awaiting the arrival of their rebate cheques so that they can buy groceries to feed their kids.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that these two things, health care and the entire issue surrounding the wealth of the province, are going to be the focus of this sitting of the Legislature, and I'm going to spend a little bit of time talking about both of those. In my comments almost a year ago to the day in my maiden speech I compared the maiden speech of my predecessor, Percy Wickman, a former MLA from 1989 through to 2001, to the situation as it was a year ago in Edmonton-Rutherford. I was surprised, quite frankly, and somewhat taken aback at how similar things were from 1989 to 2004, how little things had changed, and in fact how similar the concerns that were being expressed to me as I had campaigned were to the concerns that Percy Wickman had raised in 1989 in his maiden speech. So you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, a year later not much has changed. If it didn't change much in 15 years, it hasn't likely changed in a year, and certainly my experience talking to the people of Rutherford is that it hasn't changed that much.

The two big issues, as I say, that have been identified to me really are health care and issues surrounding the surplus and all of the money that we find in the province right now, and I just want to go back to something that I said in my maiden speech last year because it's so relevant today. It's not an exact quote, but what I touched on was the fact that people were telling me on the campaign trail that what they really want is an ambulance when they need it. They need to know that there's a bed, not a gurney, waiting for them in hospital. They want the elimination of the health care premium tax. They don't want to pay $500 or $600 a month for health insurance. They'd like to see the establishment of a wellness fund. They believe in creating a public drug plan and desperately wanted to see improvement in long-term and seniors' care centres. Those words, when I look at them now, a year hence, are certainly prophetic because all of those things are things that we're hearing again today.

Now, the Premier has asked and the health minister has asked for ideas, Mr. Speaker, and I think we've been quite forthcoming with ideas. Unfortunately, they haven't always been received in the spirit in which they were delivered, but I do believe that a number of very good ideas are to be found in the Liberal health care document. In fact, the minister indicated in the House today that several of those are ideas that have been adopted and are currently in the process of being worked on. It would appear that perhaps there were some good ideas in that document after all, despite what the Premier said, so I'd like to congratulate the Liberal opposition caucus and those that worked on the document for having had some foresight when they drafted that document because, in fact, there were some good ideas in there, and there's now finally some acknowledgement from the government that that was the case.

The whole idea of consultation really, I think, needs to have some work on it. The minister has given a month for Albertans to respond to what could conceivably be some major changes – major changes – to the health care system as we know it. People are saying that a month isn't enough, and I would tend to agree. In fact, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that the minister said was that people could find a copy of the government's framework policy in their MLA's office, and to this date that is not the case. I've had several people come into my constituency office looking for a copy of this document, and we don't have one. I feel terrible having to tell them that I don't have one. We can certainly print one off the internet and have done so, but that's not the point. If the minister says, "There are copies in your MLA's office; we're sending copies to all MLAs' offices," and people arrive and it's not there, that's . . .

Ms Blakeman: The government looks bad.

Mr. R. Miller: The government does look bad, and in fact, unfortunately, sometimes the local MLA looks bad. It's important. People need to see that document if they're going to be providing . . .

Mr. Magnus: Respond to the Speech from the Throne.

Some Hon. Members: Relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the throne speech allows quite a bit of leeway in what a member can speak on. I'd like to cite for the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill Standing Order 13(4)(b). Were you rising on a point of order, or were you just interrupting?

Mr. Magnus: Just interrupting.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, 13(4)(b) states that no member shall interrupt a member that's speaking unless he's rising on a point of order.

Hon. member, please continue.

10:00

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important, if we're going to tell Albertans that we want their input and then we tell Albertans that a document is going to be available at their MLA's office, that in fact we make sure that that is the case. Now, I understand that today the minister made some representation that it will happen soon, and certainly those constituents of mine that have come looking for more information on exactly what the government's plans might be will be pleased to see that when it takes place.

Now, I know that I'm fast running out of time. I do want to talk a little bit about the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, in particular, Mr. Speaker. I know that I had a fair amount to say about this earlier, so I won't spend a lot of time on it. I think it's important to note that while we have made a commitment finally to invest a billion dollars into the heritage savings trust fund, there's been some discussion about the fact that we are still taking a billion dollars out before we put the billion dollars back in, so really all we're doing is maintaining the status quo. The fund in 1987 was worth $12.7 billion and as of the second-quarter update was down to $12.4 billion. So we can see that in 19 years, really, we've lost the value of that fund. In fact, had it at least been inflation-proofed, it would be nearly $20 billion today.

Under an Alberta Liberal plan, with the current surplus situation $3.5 billion would have gone into that plan this year alone. So I think it's important that people see that while it's a good first step, certainly this is a fund that in my mind has been misused and perhaps even abused over the years. It's good that we're finally giving it some recognition.

Now, Mr. Speaker . . . [Mr. Miller's speaking time expired] Mr. Speaker, could you please check the time?

The Deputy Speaker: Your time has elapsed. I checked with the Clerk. Your time has elapsed.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour and privilege to rise tonight in response to the Speech from the Throne. Two weeks ago His Honour the Lieutenant Governor opened a new chapter in Alberta's history as one century of achievement was left behind and another was ushered in. Last year was a banner year for our province. It was both a year of closure and a year of new hope. As Albertans wrapped up centennial celebrations across the province, they had many things to be thankful for: a booming energy market, an unprecedented expansion in prosperity and virtually all things, and a sense of the truly unlimited potential held by the future.

I am personally extremely thankful to have been given the chance to represent the constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar. Our constituency, like any other in the province, faces unique challenges and situations. Alberta is a place of great diversity, and the government must accordingly take great care in its plans and initiatives to ensure that no individual or region is left behind.

One of the biggest issues facing Drayton Valley-Calmar is that of crystal methamphetamine. This is not an issue specific to our constituency, but it is an especially relevant one. The criminals who make these poisons and distribute them to our friends and our children are not only operating in urban centres any more, Mr. Speaker. Drugs have become a rural problem as well, and new strategies must take into account the ever-changing nature of this threat. While meth is a problem that affects all Albertans, Drayton Valley has been hit especially hard as it has become a mecca for meth producers.

In conversations with government personnel in Saskatchewan I have recently learned to my dismay that up to 80 per cent of the meth distributed in that province is being produced in the Drayton Valley area. Now, my constituents are good, decent people, Mr. Speaker. They only want to live their lives and raise their families in peace. They did not ask for this cancer to invade their communities, and they are extremely pleased at the government's announcement of a renewed commitment to continuing and expanding the fight against meth.

In the throne speech we heard of the great steps being taken in the fight against meth and, by extension, the fight against crime in general. The newly established Crystal Meth Task Force, of which Drayton Valley's mayor, Her Worship Diana McQueen is a member, is up and running, and new initiatives will continue to emerge to find, prosecute, and punish those who manufacture and distribute drugs.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents and every citizen of this province need to be given the tools to fight the proliferation of drugs. They need help in the war on meth and the war on crime in general. They need to be empowered to take back their communities and their homes, and the messages by His Honour inspired great confidence that these goals are well on their way to becoming reality.

A further focus on rural policing was also seen as refreshing news. Crime is not an urban problem; it is an Alberta problem. Given the recent proliferation of drugs and the isolated nature of many rural areas, criminals are now moving their operations to the countryside, that we once considered a safe haven. The tragedy in Mayerthorpe is but one clear example, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely pleased at the awareness and foresight shown by this government in recognizing and addressing this growing problem. My constituents are extremely pleased as well as extremely hopeful that they will once again know the peace and security that they deserve.

By working with police and organizations such as AADAC in augmenting this co-operation with the streamlining of the justice system, criminals will no longer find profit in the manufacture and sale of illicit drugs. They will be made to pay for the pain they inflict on our communities and our loved ones. Mr. Speaker, crime contributes nothing to the betterment of this great province, and I am most pleased to see the exceptional efforts that are being made to exclude it in every way possible from the lives of Albertans.

Another matter of great significance to the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar and every rural constituency is the issue of access to health care. Albertans, rural and urban alike, enjoy one of the best health care systems in the world at the present time. The proposed changes we heard outlined in the throne speech by His Honour will only serve to reinforce and make better what is already an exemplary system. We have all heard that this government is dedicated to reducing wait times and increasing service. I in turn have heard many of my constituents agree wholeheartedly with these proposals. The system we enjoy today is good. Proposed reforms will serve to make it better and more accessible to each and every Albertan regardless of their standing or location.

I was especially pleased with the announcements regarding considered improvements to rural health care, Mr. Speaker. Rural residents often face challenges that are different from those of their urban counterparts. Perhaps the most challenging and difficult to overcome and the most dangerous to health and well-being is the remote nature of many rural constituencies. If a resident of Edmonton were to be involved in a car accident, he or she is never more than a few minutes or blocks away from a hospital. In a rural area an accident or emergency may occur a great distance away from the nearest hospital, meaning that emergency response is of key importance.

Over 200,000 ground ambulance trips occur each year in Alberta, supplied by 450 ambulances and 3,000 ambulance attendants. Many of these life-saving trips occur in remote and rural areas, and while their continued efficient operation is of great importance to the health and well-being of all Albertans, it is especially vital to the safety and continued prosperity of rural residents. I am encouraged with the announcements concerning collaboration between regional health authorities, stakeholders, and government to improve medical delivery. I am also enthusiastic about the principles of the health system being structured to reflect the values held by all Albertans. It is my sincere hope that these discussions will include in their scope ways of streamlining and improving ambulance service as an extension of general health care reform.

The people of my constituency not only rely on ambulance service for their emergent medical needs; they also share with other Albertans the belief that it is in the best interests of everyone to assist the efficient and effective delivery of this service in any way possible. Just recently, Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with the chief of staff from the Drayton Valley hospital. We had the ambulance service there, and municipal councillors were all there. We talked about ways that we could collaborate and intersperse the ambulance with maybe manning our special care unit and possibly being involved in helping each other with our health care system.

I'm eagerly anticipating the proposed improvements to our health care system that our government has recently put out for consultation. Myself, my colleagues, and the people of Alberta will not only benefit from these changes, but we will also feel secure in the knowledge that their introduction follows careful consideration, long planning, and extensive stakeholder consultation.

This government has long had a reputation for prudence and responsibility in matters concerning the welfare of Albertans, policies which have resulted in the financial and societal prosperity we all enjoy today. Regardless of whether they are applied to reinvestment of resource revenue, environmental protection, or health care improvement, these qualities are manifest in every measure that this government has taken to improve the lives of Albertans.

This was never more evident as 2005 turned into 2006. As His Honour mentioned in the throne speech, it was the first year in a very long, long time rung in by Albertans that was free from the burden of provincial debt. Mr. Speaker, this party has always believed in balanced budgets, but back in the recession times of the early '80s and due to the Liberals' national energy program we could not keep out of the red. We accumulated debt, as did all governments of all political stripes, but unlike other governments, we dealt with it. Through stakeholder consultation, sound policy, and deliberate action Alberta eliminated the provincial debt, a monumental achievement which gave the citizens of this province an unprecedented climate of financial freedom, one that is not enjoyed by any other jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Speaker, this is but one example of the way this government approaches every problem. His Honour's speech reaffirmed that this attitude of accountability and desire to improve Alberta will remain at the forefront of every issue considered or decided in this Chamber. Albertans were once again reminded that they not only live in the best place in the world. They were assured that they have working for them a government that is always striving to make it better in every way possible.

I am proud to be a part of this great, progressive momentum, Mr. Speaker, and I can say with enthusiasm that my constituents share wholeheartedly in my excitement. It is truly a great time to be an Albertan.

I thank you, and with that, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 19 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Finance, our Deputy Premier, to move second reading of Bill 19, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006, which provides some very necessary and important funds, as explained in the bill itself.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to respond to Bill 19, the supplementary estimates, in second reading. Again, I could probably go back to last year's debate because the arguments are similar. I'm not sure why it is that year after year we see supplementary estimates that are more and more and for more and more departments. In just November of last year we passed $1.77 billion in supplementary estimates, and here we are, not much more than three months later, with almost that much again, $1.354 billion. So in a period of only a few months well over $3 billion in supplementary estimates have been passed.

The Premier himself has acknowledged that most if not all of this year's incredibly big surplus has already been allocated. The whole idea of supplementary estimates of the size that we see and covering the number of departments that we see really does once again draw into question the entire budgeting process and the way that this government treats a budget with such disdain. I acknowledged last year the fact that, literally, within days of the budget being passed, we had ministers openly referring to off-budget spending. Sure enough, that is exactly what happened.

So here we are once again, within three months of having passed supplementary estimates, passing another $1.35 billion in further money for the government. In a lot of these cases when you look through the supplementary estimates and the money that's being allocated, you really have to wonder (a) why, if it was so important, it wasn't included in the original budget or (b) why it couldn't have waited just a few more weeks for a proper budget. What was the emergency that demanded that this money be expended between November and the end of March, when we would presumably have a new budget to be debated in this House? You know, I'm not going to list every single example, but there are many examples of that in these supplementary estimates, and I think it's a relevant question.

The other thing that certainly comes into play here is the very limited amount of time that the appropriation bill gets when we deal with it in committee. We have what is known as two days of debate, but unfortunately in this House that means an afternoon and an evening, both of which have time restrictions and neither of which allows for proper, detailed inspection of the supplementary estimates department by department. Again last week, when we were dealing with the appropriation supply in committee, probably the vast majority of departments that are requesting extra funds received no time at all, no debate at all, no detailed inspection line by line at all of the request that's being. I think that it is a real flaw in the way that this House does business, that we don't allow more time for the committee to look at these supplementary estimates line by line.

Mr. Elsalhy: No scrutiny.

Mr. R. Miller: My colleague from Edmonton-McClung says, "No scrutiny." I'm not going to say no scrutiny. Certainly we scrutinize, but we don't have the opportunity necessarily to ask the questions, and what that means is that the government doesn't have the opportunity to show openness and accountability, which Albertans deserve. Again, that really is the question when we're talking about only one taxpayer.

Specifically, there is one thing that I would like to point to. I gave a fairly detailed talk on the billion dollars for the heritage fund last week. One of the things that came out of that whole thing – I called it a shell game, and there was some defensive reaction to that on the part of the government. We've talked a number of times about the fact that we're putting a billion dollars in and taking a billion dollars out or taking out and putting in; I'm not even sure which happens first. But the minister defended that by saying that the legislation requires that return on investment be removed from the heritage savings trust fund and put into general revenue. Mr. Speaker, I checked the legislation, and the minister is absolutely right: that's what it says. Short of what's required as of last year's change in legislation to finally inflation-proof the fund, every penny outside of that and administration costs, every penny that's earned has to be transferred into general revenue.

So the very first question I have is: why haven't we brought forward legislation this spring that would mandate that the return on investment stay in the fund? Why do we have a law that not only allows us to rake the earnings out of the fund but actually tells us that we have to? There may have been a time when Alberta had a large debt when there was an argument for doing that, but certainly in today's fiscal reality I can't see any reason whatsoever why we still have on the books legislation that says that we must take the revenue that's earned by that fund and put it into general revenue. I think that that's a real disservice to the fund and ultimately a disservice to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to draw particular attention to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. Once again – and I hope I don't sound too much like a broken record, but I know I said the same thing last year – this is one ministry where I really don't have an awful lot of problem with the supplementary supply. This is what supplementary supply is supposed to be used for: $1.25 million for the east-central Alberta disaster recovery program resulting from overland flooding during the month of August last year. That's exactly what supplementary supply is for: an unforeseen expense. Nobody could have seen it coming when we did the original budget in March and April last year. It happens. We have a sustainability fund that's to deal with that sort of thing. That's where the money went. I have absolutely no problem with that, and I commend the minister for, by and large, sticking to his budget.

Another $6.5 million for the southern Alberta disaster recovery resulting from flooding in September and $25 million for the floods that happened in southern Alberta in June of last year. Again, if this is the sort of thing that we saw regularly in supplementary supply, Mr. Speaker, the debate would be an awful lot shorter because I wouldn't be able to stand here and complain about that. But when we see other program changes and additions that either (a) don't seem to me to have the urgency that they couldn't have waited for the new budget or (b) came so shortly after last year's budget was passed – in fact, that would indicate that there was some urgency to them in the first place – then why the heck wasn't that in the budget? Let's have some planning and some budgeting that means something to Albertans.

Now, I just want to talk for a minute about the surplus situation and the fact that right now this government has a law which mandates that it's not allowed to run a deficit. We've seen the government do a very good job of sticking to that even in what I've referred to previously as a difficult year, the year 2001-2002, following 9/11, when the government was required to make some rather drastic adjustments to its budget procedure, sticking to the budget to make sure that they didn't break their own law, and I commend them for that.

What I would like to see is something that would do the same on the other side of the ledger sheet; that is, something that would compel this government to stick to their budget, to not go and announce billions of dollars here and hundreds of millions of dollars over here after a budget has been passed but live with the document that has been passed by this Legislature until such time as we can deal with another budget document. You know what? Maybe it would be a minibudget, as has been done several times on the federal level. This idea of just ad hoc spending: again, I sincerely believe that that does a disservice to all Albertans.

Now, I know that the Member for Battle River-Wainwright has a motion coming up. Unfortunately, it's far enough down the list that I'm not sure that it'll get debated in this session. I'm hopeful that it does because I would love to hear the debate on that. This motion would call on the government to hold surplus funds in a reserve until such time as the Legislature could deal with them, and I think that's an excellent idea. I really believe that Albertans deserve to have decisions of that magnitude – we're talking billions and billions of dollars – not just debated in the Legislature but those ideas brought forward in the Legislature as opposed to being announced in mid-summer at a government retreat somewhere. That's not the way that Albertans expect their government to operate, and that's not the government that they deserve. I applaud the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for his initiative in bringing that motion forward. I know I'll be supporting it, and I'm quite hopeful that all of the members of this Assembly will because the idea has great merit.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I will cede the floor and allow some other members to take part in this debate. Certainly, as I say, the fact that we're dealing again with supplementary estimates only a short period after it was last done – and, you know, even the billion dollars. Okay. I'm going to back up and reiterate. With even the billion dollars for the heritage savings trust fund, which I'm certainly in favour of, once again I don't understand where the emergency was that that had to be done now and not as part of the budget process that we're going to be dealing with in a couple of weeks. I think that that's just the most glaring example of it.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will take my seat and allow others to participate in the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Education supplementary supply debate we're looking here at an $11 million grant to separate and opted-out school boards. I'm not sure exactly how this works. This could be referring to the fact that the province is placing a soft cap on the education property tax rate, and this supplementary supply is to top this off. It would be helpful if I could find out what opted-out school boards means. I'm not clear on that. Maybe the good minister would spend a few minutes educating me on that.

Could he explain what the money is for, in clarification, giving us specifics, and by what process or policy the separate boards receive supplementary supply when the public boards do not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: They do too.

Mr. Flaherty: They do too? Thank you, sir.

What assurance can you give us that these funds were distributed to the boards based on need and not on other matters? That's a question I'd like maybe explained. Why was it not included in the regular budget that was presented last spring?

Mr. Zwozdesky: It was. It was just a transfer.

Mr. Flaherty: It was just a transfer of dollars? Thank you for that.

I'd like to just maybe suggest that the minister could comment or maybe make a point on: if I could dream, if I had a crystal ball and was able to look ahead, I really would like some approach, in supplementary or brought in through the regular budget process, on the question of hot lunch programs in high-needs areas across the province. I think this would be a feather in the minister's cap. He's a good soul, so maybe he'll look at that. Dreaming again: full-day and junior kindergarten seem to be a concern for many people across the province, especially in Calgary.

Resolve the unfunded liability in teachers' pensions: that seems to be an issue that could be addressed, Mr. Minister, if we had some kind of plan. Even at the teachers' convention this week in Edmonton it was amazing how many teachers seemed to have this on their mind and are concerned about it. Also, I think that at the university on Friday night one of the people in the Faculty of Education was mentioning that, as you well pointed out to us, sir, it's now starting to be a mental thing. People are not looking at education because they don't want this extra burden of paying for a mortgage, that kind of thing, in dealing with their livelihood.

Those are just some very quick comments, and because of the hour and day I'll sit down. Maybe the minister will send me a note or give me some insight into some of the points I raised.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 19, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006. A lot has been said about the ineptness and incompetence that the government has shown year after year in preparing its budgets. Billions of dollars are asked for, sometimes once a year, sometimes more than once a year, to add to the budget approved by this Assembly during its spring session every year. It raises questions about the real value of debating a budget in April and May and then learning six months down the road that the debate we did have during the spring session really was meaningless and that the government didn't find itself bound by the vote that this Assembly itself conducted to approve the budgeted amounts.

With this huge amount – billions of dollars are involved here – we are simply asked to rubber-stamp unbudgeted expenditures. Unbudgeted expenditures are estimates that result from poor projections about what money is needed to deliver programs, to put money into infrastructure projects, or whatever. On the one hand, there is a clear record of incompetence in coming even close to what monies are needed on an annual basis to run the operations and programs that the government is responsible for. On the other hand, we find a very different picture. The revenues are always underestimated by billions of dollars. I guess that because revenues are underestimated, the government presents a budget which also looks sort of the result of disciplined thinking, tight budgeting procedures, saying that every dollar that's budgeted must be accounted for properly, yet within six months that accounting is simply forgotten.

The supplementary estimates, Bill 19, that we are debating now, is the second bill since November of last year that we are discussing in this House in order to address the failure of the government in the first place to present budget estimates that are close to what in fact is needed to run government programs and finance projects that it proposes to undertake. So the ability of this House, really, to hold government accountable in terms of both its revenue projections and budget estimates is frustrated year after year, as is indicated by the requests that come to us for supplementary estimates.

It's disappointing that a government that has been around for so many years hasn't learned to prepare budget estimates which would be at least more or less accurate, that would reflect the real needs of the government and the real capacity of the government to fund those needs. One wonders whether it's a question of incompetence or whether it's a matter of a deliberate decision to lowball revenues and then proceed from there, from lowballing of the revenues to presenting budget estimates in April and May that the government knows will be insufficient to meet the government's own obligations. Either way it shows a lack of integrity, a lack of willingness to be honest and transparent with the citizens of Alberta, the taxpayers of Alberta with respect to both the revenue picture and the budgetary estimates that are needed to meet the government's commitments.

The problem with this, in addition to the government's inability to be honest and transparent, is the ad hocery of it all. There can be huge mistakes made when the money is spent in an ad hoc way. Wastage of money often results from ad hoc decisions because ad hoc decisions are made without due deliberation. Not only are they made without due deliberation by the minister; they are made without due deliberation by this House. It is the right of this House to engage in appropriate deliberations with respect to the government's expenditure programs and then engage the government in debate, ask tough questions before voting for or against those estimates. That's why I say that when you have these supplementary estimates, related bills, coming before the House once or twice a year during the same fiscal year, you ask the question: what was the point of spending weeks and weeks and weeks during the budget debate on debating and approving estimates for each department if those approved estimates, those budgetary figures are not to be respected and not to be adhered to?

The question that I have in my mind as the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona is: what role do I have in holding the government to account on this? How do I go back to my constituents and say: "Well, look, I've done my job. The government has responded to it. Next time I've seen improvement, so my work has paid off. I was critical. I did spend some time looking closely at the budgets. The government got some direction from the debate, and the following year there was an improvement." There is no improvement, Mr. Speaker, in the way the government presents its estimates and then comes back for supplementaries.

For the last nine years, that I've been in this House, I've seen the same conduct, the same procedure, the same behaviour of the government: falling short of being able to appropriately estimate its own needs and therefore assign dollars to meet those needs and deliver the goods to Albertans. Very disappointing. It raises concerns about whether or not this government really has the discipline that it takes both to come up with an accurate estimate of the revenue picture and the expenditure picture and then to stick to the decisions made by this Assembly.

This Assembly's decisions ought to have some role in the way government behaves. The government finds that it can take liberties with the decisions made by this House any time it wants to because it can come back and come up with these ad hoc estimates and get them rubber-stamped in this House. I think that's not good enough. That's not, I think, in the best interests of the people of this province who are, after all, responsible for paying the bills and are the owners of the assets from which we draw the revenues to pay these bills.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would close my remarks on Bill 19. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the short amount of time we have left to debate Bill 19, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006. I'd like to add my comment also, I guess, that it's very disappointing to see the lack of discipline in budgeting shown by this government. It seems like there's more interest in: "Well, we'll not worry about getting things down to the nitty-gritty. Later on we'll just run a little supply, and the revenue that we need will come in to our different departments."

It seems like we need legislation not so much prohibiting us from running a deficit but perhaps prohibiting us from spending all of the surplus that comes in. We are in a unique situation once again. In the '80s we had that applicable bumper sticker on what we'd do if we had a second chance, yet it seems like we're going to repeat it.

I'd very much encourage this government in this coming budget to I guess sit down each of the ministers and say: look, let's have our budget come forward, and let's stick to it. In matters of emergency, such as the flooding, we understand, and those are the ones that are coming forward or, for example, the situation with the Solicitor General, realizing that they didn't understand the agreement they had with the Crowsnest Pass area and needing to make amends within a different area in the province.

The most important thing is that we take this opportunity to realize that we have a surplus coming in, that perhaps we need to put in some legislation because of a lack of discipline, that we'll be putting this into the heritage trust fund and, as the other member mentioned earlier, that perhaps we should be passing legislation that we can't take anything out of the heritage trust fund unless it is an emergency. We should be building that. It should be inflation-proof, and we should be looking to the future.

I personally agree with the C.D. Howe report, that we're past sustainability already, that we're in a precarious situation. Everybody can say, "oh, it's not going to happen this time," but if things were to turn around, how would we continue with the budget that we currently have and expanding at such a rapid rate when, in fact, the services are not keeping up with the needs of the people? Yet the bureaucracy and the paperwork seems to be expanding at a very out of control rate.

Basically, I would very much like to see the government – and I'll speak to it again – take a serious look at the upcoming budget and have the discipline to tell the ministers: "Look, this is it for the year. We don't want to be going back to supply." We need to take a closer look. We've been doing it for years. We understand the situations and don't have to wait for an Auditor General's report to say: "Gosh, the seniors are suffering. We need more workers there. We're not running a good ship, and we can do a lot better." I would encourage the ministers, as they're preparing their budgets, to do a good job here in the future.

Thank you.

10:40

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education on behalf of the hon. minister to close?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you. I will take a quick moment.

First of all, in response to a couple of comments made by Edmonton-Rutherford: no, this is not some sort of a soft cap. There are a number of points, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, which could answer some of the questions that you asked, that were debated last Wednesday afternoon and last Tuesday evening, so I would encourage you to look there.

It was kind of you to reference the kudos that you did for the Municipal Affairs ministry with respect to disasters, but there are also other good, positive things there that could have been referenced that weren't. I don't think anybody would argue that $20 million to libraries was important or that the transfer of $11 million from the opted-out portion to be shared equally amongst public and separate school boards was a bad thing either. There are a number of other needs areas expressed there.

For the sake of time right now I will respond to the questions that the Member for St. Albert asked because all that happened there, Mr. Speaker, is simply that back when we were doing the budgeting a year ago for the '05-06 government year, we targeted so many dollars for the opted-out school boards, which are typically your separate, your Catholic boards, and in fact the number of declared voters for that portion did not match. It was overestimated by $11 million. All that happens, hon. member, is that that $11 million goes back into the Alberta school foundation fund. Then it gets redistributed back out to all the supports to share. That's simply what that was.

The other points that you indicated about the unfunded pension liability we've debated here, and I'm sure we'll debate them again.

That basically answers all of that, Mr. Speaker. With that, I would again encourage a positive outcome to the vote on second reading for Bill 19 because these monies are important, they're available now, and we'd like to get them out to the places of need.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an interesting evening, with a few bumps and grinds along the way. Nonetheless, that is what democracy is all about. On that note, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:43 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 7, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a proud Albertan. He's been a proud Albertan since 1988. He did not arrive here for the Olympics, but if riding motorcycles and scuba diving were Olympic sports, he'd be right in there. I'm speaking, of course, of Dave Ryzebol. He is the VP of public affairs and government relations for Canada Safeway, a fine corporate citizen; one of the board of directors of the Canada Safeway Foundation; a huge fundraiser for tsunami relief, over a million dollars there, for Boys and Girls clubs, and for food banks, the biggest in western Canada; also, as I mentioned in last week's member's statement, a Mountain of Heroes foundation sponsor. His wife, Dorothy, his son Christopher, who's working here in high tech in Edmonton at Bioware, are very, very proud of him. I know he's proud to live in Calgary-West, and I know that Calgary-West is so well represented. I would like all members to join me in the traditional welcome for Dave Ryzebol. He's in the members' gallery. Please stand and be recognized, Dave.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting grade 6 class from Fulton Place elementary school. There are 16 visitors this afternoon, 14 students. They are accompanied by teachers Dr. Wade Pike and Miss Quinn Sloan. This group is visiting the Assembly today, and they are in the members' gallery. If they could now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly, I would appreciate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly some 28 bright and eager students from the Edmonton Christian school in the northeast part of the city. There are 28 students. With them is their teacher Mr. Greg Gurnett. I might point out that he's the brother of a former MLA from this Legislative Assembly and a colleague of mine. The parents here with them are Mrs. Carol Boonstra, Mrs. Donna Nyland, and Mrs. Annette Visser. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Tina Faiz. Tina has joined the NDP caucus staff as our communications director and as executive assistant to the leader. She has worked in several federal government departments and earned a woman of distinction award in 2003. Since then, Tina has run a very successful communications company with her partner and has been a freelance contributor to CBC radio and television. We're delighted to have her with us, and I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature a very young, great Alberta leader, Trevor Gladue. He holds many positions. First of all, as a VP of the Métis Nation of Alberta provincial council, Trevor was first elected in 1996 and is serving his second term. Of course, the next one that he does is as chair of Northern Lakes College. He's seated in the members' gallery. He resides in the minister of health's riding. Lucky woman. I'd ask that he stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all colleagues here in the Legislature a good friend of mine and a former mayor of the town of Whitecourt. Brady Whittaker, would you please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Aon Consulting Inc.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier admitted that he's getting his information on electricity deregulation from Enmax commercials. We also know that he's getting his information on private health insurance from Aon, a consulting arm of a private insurance company. No wonder this government will only conduct a superficial consultation process on their health care proposal when they clearly value the advice of insurance companies before the opinion of ordinary Albertans. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this government has paid Aon 1 and a half million dollars in taxpayer money to tell the government how to implement private insurance, will the Premier release the results of that study immediately so that its findings can be part of the consultation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I find the Leader of the Official Opposition's assertions to be somewhat confounding in that Aon has not yet submitted its report.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that a comprehensive study by the World Health Organization has said that supplementary private insurance actually increases inequalities in service and access, why is this government paying Aon for advice when we already know what the outcomes of this policy will be?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't know. Certainly, I'm sure the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness will take into account the findings of the world health association as we assess the overall public consultation phase of this exercise.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that Aon is designing the private health insurance system, will Aon be allowed to then participate in the very market that it's designing?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't really comment on what Aon is doing or not doing because they haven't submitted their report yet.

Relative to their ongoing involvement I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have not seen the report yet. The report is actually building actuarial models and studies to look at the impact. It has nothing to do with the current consultations on public health. It has everything to do with finding out if we were to change – if we were to change – any of the mix in funding, how it would impact Albertans, vulnerable Albertans, those people that are currently insured, those people that have pre-existing conditions, and to look at the full scope of it. We don't expect this report back until sometime later in the spring.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday when I referred to the government's third way as health care deregulation, the Premier told me to listen to an Enmax commercial which would advise on the benefits of electricity deregulation. Well, today I'm asking the Premier to listen to the words of Enmax CEO Gary Holden. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the CEO of Enmax stated just last month that "problems . . . with deregulation have discouraged innovation and the costs of regulation have actually increased since 1999," why is the Premier continuing down the same deregulation path with our health care system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've said before that if the Liberals have any better ideas other than those that have already been assessed, send them over.

Mr. Speaker, relative to Mr. Holden, the CEO of Enmax, I had the opportunity of meeting with him along with I believe it was the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, and he illustrated to me their very simple form to accommodate the regulated rate under so-called deregulation that offers consumers what he considers to be a better way. At no time did he indicate to me that deregulation of the generation portion of electricity undermined anything that they wanted to do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Holden actually explained at length his concerns publicly with deregulation. Again to the Premier: given that electricity deregulation led to soaring costs, worse service, and dismal choice, why should Albertans have any confidence in this government's health care policies, which amount to health care deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see where service is bad. Certainly, there were some problems that we ironed out through Government Services and through various departments relative to the retailing of electricity, but for the most part those matters have been sorted out. Enmax is doing a good job. ATCO is doing a good job, as I understand. TransAlta, although they're on the generation side, are doing a good job. So I really don't see what the problem is.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: does the Premier see a future in this province in which surgeries for knees and hips and eyes are advertised on TV like electricity products are advertised today? Is that where we're heading?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is entirely up to the physicians and the rules relative to advertising. I don't know what those rules are. I know that we're exposed to a lot of American advertising, and that's the system that we don't want. All we're trying to do is bring health care costs, which total nearly $9 billion right now, in line with the rate of inflation and to improve access. That is not sinful.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 21, 2005, a standing policy committee reviewed a draft copy of the Department of Energy's business plan for the years 2006 through 2009. This plan indicated that the percentage of total royalties collected by this government on behalf of the citizens, who own the resources, is going down significantly. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is the total percentage of royalties going down when the value of the resource in this province is going up?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, our royalties are based upon a number of factors. Production and price are the two predominant issues that form how the percentage is calculated. As prices go up, our rates go up. If prices went down, our rates would go down also. As production volumes go up, so would our rate go up. If a well's production volume goes down, so would our rate go down. What it's trying to do is ensure that we get all of the extraction of the resource possible. In any one year the average rate might be up or down, but the fact is that it's worked very effectively to ensure that we extract all the resource that we possibly can, the most of that resource we can, to get the best value for Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the Crown revenue share, the portion of the industry's annual net operating revenue that is paid to the Crown as royalty, has decreased by 4 per cent since 2001, how many billions of dollars have Albertans lost because the royalties have not been collected? And don't tell me that we can't afford public health care.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, like I said, we could go back through the mechanics of our structure, which has been very efficient and has provided tremendous value. Some years it will be a higher percentage because of price and production volumes. We have mature fields that you need to replace, and some of them are getting lower in production volumes, so they'll have lower associated rates. That said, we forget that what we're trying to do is receive fair value for Albertans, and that's done through royalties and also through bonus payments. If they would refer to the third quarter that just came out, 14 and a half billion dollars were collected through this industry; $3.4 billion came through land sales. That's a reflection of how we also receive the economic rent. It's not just the royalty percentage. It's the land sales: $3.4 billion reinvested to ensure that we do receive that in a substantial way.

Mr. MacDonald: To the same minister: we're not talking about land sales. We're talking about royalties.

Now, to the same minister: given that the Department of Energy has recently completed two studies, the first on a major oil and natural gas royalty rate review and the second a study of how Alberta royalties compare to the lower 48 states, will the minister release these studies and show Albertans how they've been ripped off by the current royalty structure?

Mr. Melchin: Actually, the facts don't show that at all. They show the converse. The various studies, Van Meurs being one of them, show that we have one of the more tough regimes around the world. That said, we have been comparing the specific information. Our royalty and fair-share questions are a combination of two facts, not just royalties, and that's why I brought in land sales. The economic rent, as it's built, that we're trying to receive so that Albertans get their fair share of the revenue, is based upon two factors: royalty and land sales. You can't separate the two because the structure is built to collect both, and in that sense Albertans have received a tremendous value this year from both.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the health consultation of the government is a sham. At yesterday's meeting of the Tory policy committee the SPC heard from pro-privatization individuals who have been appointed to public bodies by the government. These presentations were often made behind closed doors. To the Premier: how does the government intend to hear the views of ordinary Albertans with this closed-door, under-the-dome process that they have put in place?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond in detail, but I can tell you that it's not a closed-door, under-the-dome process.

Ms Evans: First of all, it was not a standing policy committee. It was registration from individuals and groups that came forward to speak with me. We asked them whether or not they would like to have it open to the public and open to the media. One out of the four selected that. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat disappointed that they didn't want to have it as open consultation.

We are posting on the web page the ones that will be registered for subsequent consultations. We are asking them if they will be prepared to speak in front of the media, to provide their statements for the media and, if possible, an advance notice of their statements. Currently we have 30 registered in places like Bonnyville and up in St. Paul later on Saturday. I know that there will be a slightly different process.

So it's not only under the dome; it will be in other centres. It's with people in a variety of ways. We are meeting with groups, Mr. Speaker, listening to what they have asked us to share with them.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if this minister is disappointed that people don't want to speak publicly, why is she accepting secret testimony behind closed doors from pro-privatization proponents? You set the rules.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I would have to speculate about is that some of them had presentations, in one case, where their president was out of town, and they made the presentation themselves. They felt that it was more appropriate for the media to speak to their president than themselves. So they didn't want to publicly make that comment. That was the statement from one. Another group indicated that they had some issues that perhaps weren't as close to the third way but related to the education of the workforce, and they talked about that. They were not prepared to make a public statement.

Mr. Speaker, rather than belittle people that come forward and try and provide this government advice, I think we should celebrate that they have come forward to give us their very best response to the health policy framework.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, back to the Premier, if we may: why doesn't the Premier get out from under the dome and go out and talk to Albertans and take some MLAs with him and have public hearings around the province on the government's proposals to gut our public health care system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I try to get out from under the dome as much as I possibly can. As a matter of fact, I missed cabinet this morning, unfortunately, because I was down in southern Alberta.

I think it's important for people to get out from under the dome, and that's exactly what the minister is doing as she consults with Albertans. There are numerous ways of consulting and receiving input: e-mails, telephone calls, town hall meetings, as the opposition suggests, although they want to do it via an all-party committee. So, Mr. Speaker, we're getting out from under the dome. We're consulting with Albertans, and we're receiving their input.

International Medical Graduate Program

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, being an MLA who represents a very diverse constituency, I meet several foreign-trained doctors, also referred to as international medical graduates. They often access my office to have their documents notarized for residency application purposes. Many of them come to my office year after year applying for residency positions, which, I might add, are few to begin with. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What role does Alberta's international medical graduate program play in improving Albertans' access to health care?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the most important areas where we can improve is to advance the case of the internationally medically trained graduate who comes to Canada and hopes to engage in practice. The ways that we can help them take their qualified licensed approaches from other universities and accredited institutions elsewhere is to provide them an opportunity to work in a residency program under the supervision of qualified and trained teachers in the academic halls of learning, particularly in the universities.

Mr. Speaker, it's a very strong program, and we have increased since 2003 from some 855 to over 900 foreign-trained physicians that have come forward. The announcement we've made today will further increase the number of foreign-trained physicians that are receiving extra support to get their licensure in Alberta in our universities.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, my first supplement is also to the same minister. What will be the overall impact of the $3 million announced today?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, depending upon the number and the type of residency program chosen, there should be about 14 that will be trained. They will be able to engage in various specialties with the residents. We have had very willing comments back from regional health authorities and from the academics, who have said that this is certainly welcome. We will move up from 28 physicians that are currently taking training to 42, and they will be in a variety of disciplines and will help build our workforce. It's one of the many measures that we are undertaking this year to improve the overall workforce and to make sure that internationally trained graduates have a place to practise here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplement is also to the same minister. What other approaches is the minister taking to allow more foreign-trained physicians to work in Alberta's health care industry?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're also funding 20 new flex-residency seats. These allow foreign-trained and other physicians to take partial residency training when they do not need the full residency program. We're working with mentorship programs and looking at and exploring other options available.

I want to give credit to the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall and other MLAs who have come forward over the past year and a half encouraging us to become more aggressive to engage foreign-trained physicians. Certainly, the Member for Calgary-McCall is an outstanding example of someone who has listened and heard and passed on that message.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta government representatives and even a cabinet minister have been in contact or visited with leaders of communist governments in Asia about sending temporary foreign workers to work in our Alberta oil sands. The communist bosses like Alberta's idea of binding these workers to work for only one employer. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, and this question is not before a court of law. Is the preferred length of time that this government is recommending to indenture foreign workers to sponsoring employers in Alberta two years, three years, five years, or some other length of time?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, the opposition would find this a problem. We have the hottest economy in Alberta. There are thousands of jobs. It's nice that Alberta is so attractive to everyone in the world to come and work here.

Specifically to this question, of course, our first priority in Alberta is, number one, to sustain the strong economy that we have: thousands of jobs. Our priority is, again, to employ Albertans first, Canadians, aboriginal people, persons with development disabilities, and youth. That is our number one priority in Alberta.

We do have an immigration policy in Alberta jointly done by four ministries, Mr. Speaker. Maybe one of the ministers would like to expand on that. The process: if an employer, for an example, in Fort McMurray wants to bring in temporary foreign workers, the member knows that that process is under the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's actually under an Alberta government program.

Another question to the minister of human resources. Will these tens of thousands of foreign workers be offered membership in traditional Alberta trades organizations and other unions, or will the larger sponsoring employers have that choice?

Mr. Cardinal: Again, Mr. Speaker, of course it's nice that Alberta is so attractive to the world that everybody wants to move to Alberta. We must have a darn good government to be able to do that.

Ms Calahasen: We've got the best. The best. The greatest leader.

Mr. Cardinal: We've got the best. We are the best, yeah.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the other issue, of course, again I stress to the person that if an employer wants to bring in temporary foreign workers, first of all they have to meet our conditions in Alberta. I mentioned those in my first question. Second, they have to apply to the federal government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of setting up a meeting with the new federal immigration minister to determine what direction their policies are going to go in relation to immigration and temporary foreign workers.

Mr. Backs: I haven't seen that with Fort McMurray, Mr. Speaker.

A supplementary question to the minister of health. With potentially tens of thousands of indentured temporary foreign labour flooding into Alberta, will they receive their health care through our public system, a new private system, or some other third way?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, they'll receive their health care, if qualified, after the appropriate waiting period, like anybody else. We would look at the basis of their qualifications. There's nothing further to say, I don't think.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Advanced Education Opportunities

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government committed to adding 60,000 new spaces to Alberta's postsecondary system by the year 2020, with 15,000 of those spaces created by '07-08. Reports say that so far only enough funding has been put in place to reach about 16 per cent of that target. While new university spaces are important, Albertans in rural areas and smaller centres also need better access to postsecondary education at rural colleges. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. How many new spaces have been created so far, and specifically how many of those are in rural Alberta?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I first would like to point out that as Minister of Advanced Education it's my job to ensure that we not only think of advancing education in the context of universities and colleges but also understand that it deals with all adult learning. So we're dealing with literacy issues; we're dealing with community learning opportunities as well as apprentices, ESL, and other forms of education. As someone who grew up in rural Alberta, I know that Albertans in rural and smaller centres need to have the same access to advancing their education as people in urban Alberta do.

In the recent Speech from the Throne we indicated that we'd reached 7,000 new learning opportunities, that those have been created in the province this year. Because of the nature of our economy today about 6,000 of them are new apprentice spaces, new learning opportunities for apprentices; 1,100 are new spaces at universities, colleges, and technical institutes. These opportunities have been created across the province. If we look at the rural areas, 271 of those specific spaces at colleges and technical institutes have been created in rural Alberta.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, very quickly, that the colleges that we have around this province have been working with universities to make sure that it's not just the traditional college opportunities that are available in rural Alberta but baccalaureate programs as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess on that note my first supplemental is to the same minister. Given the importance of graduate students and research to the future of our province, how many of these new spaces created so far have been on the graduate program side?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very important question.

Just to finish the thought on the last one, I'd like to indicate, in case people missed it, an example of how distributed learning opportunities are being created in this province. People might have noticed last week that Keyano College, for example, entered into an agreement with SAIT and with the University of Calgary that will involve the three institutions working together to offer environmental, energy, and social work programs to students in Fort McMurray at Keyano College.

Now, with respect to graduate students, under the access growth fund we've responded to the proposals that have been put forward by universities, colleges, and technical institutes, responded to their priorities for growth. Last year $10 million dollars was put in for nearly 1,100 spaces, as I indicated. We created very few graduate spaces last year, but in the upcoming year institutions have put forward a range of proposals. Those new graduate spaces will be part of Budget 2006, but I might say that over 1,000 new graduate spaces have been created since 1999. Increasing those graduate spaces is very important. It ties into our whole research and development proposal, and other initiatives such as those through the heritage medical research foundation and the ingenuity fund will help to deal with that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you. I guess on the research side, Mr. Speaker, my final question is going to go to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that innovation is a key pillar of the government's 20-year strategy, what is his department doing to support research and graduate students?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Advanced Education referenced a couple of entities already that provide support for research. Through additional research institutes and program expenditures targeted at life sciences, information and communication technology, and energy we've been able to actually increase the amount of sponsored research at universities from less than $200 million in '94-95 to well over $600 million last year. This money goes not only to help our researchers but also to support graduate students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Policing Services

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's cities are experiencing such a dramatic growth in population that providing services to communities is becoming a challenge. Perhaps the most serious problem we are facing is the disturbing trend of violence in our neighbourhoods. The tragic and senseless death of a man on an Edmonton Transit bus travelling through Mill Woods has left communities in fear and concern for their safety, and they are looking to government for answers. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given that police services desperately need to increase their numbers in response to population growth and to have more presence directly in our communities, will this minister commit to increase the level of police funding to major cities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The senseless and tragic murder that took place on Edmonton Transit over the weekend was horrific, obviously, an issue that the family has to deal with now, and our thoughts and prayers go with the family of the deceased.

Again, Mr. Speaker, as we go through these issues, we talk about that issue; we talk about the issue that has just happened in Hobbema as well. These are obviously issues that we have to look at in policing. It's not just about funding. It's about ensuring that the community is there to assist the police. In order to build a strong, safe community, the community has to be involved as well. So it's not all about funding.

But, yes, we have. This past year we've provided funding for not only rural Alberta but, as well, for our municipalities: $65 million of funding went out to municipalities. Our spring budget, that will be announced in a few weeks, will provide municipalities and, again, our rural municipalities with funding for our RCMP partners as well.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: will the minister along with the Minister of Education consider funding and implementing programs in our schools such as a provincial complement to the dare to resist drugs program, that also engage parents to help our children move away from violent lifestyles to healthy choices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, a very good question. What we have to look at – I'll give you one example, that of the Crystal Meth Task Force, that is being co-chaired by Mrs. Klein and Dr. Bob Westbury. Our ministry made a presentation to them. We have a responsibility in Solicitor General and Public Security regarding, obviously, education and prevention as well as intelligence and enforcement but, as well, healing on the corrections side. So we have a number of areas within our ministry that we have to look at regarding education programs.

I've met with the Minister of Education regarding the CALM program that's in our high schools, which is, again – and the minister may want to speak on this – a compulsory course that every grade 10, 11, and 12 student has to take and has to successfully complete before they can move on towards their high school diploma.

We do have programs in place. Obviously, we want to build on those to ensure that the issues related to conflict resolution can be taught to younger kids so that they have an opportunity to look at ways out of a situation versus using a gun or a knife.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: given that community-based initiatives such as outreach programs and Neighbourhood Watch provide many opportunities for our youth to engage in positive activities, will this minister make the commitment to properly fund these grassroots organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, another very good question. We do fund a number of community groups and community organizations, and I'll just give you one example. Two and a half months ago in Hobbema the community cadet program started with less than 40 kids. It's a program run by the RCMP in the community. As of last Wednesday they have almost 400 kids in Hobbema from the four reserves in this program. It's a tremendous program.

So we've seen results. We know that some education and prevention programs that can be in place will take these kids out of gangs, will take them out of being pressured into criminal activity by their peers by providing them with some structure. Now, the program we have in Hobbema we know can work in other areas, not just reserves but in other municipalities as well. In this next year when our budget comes out, we're going to be moving forward to try to get that program moved to other areas in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Economic Benefits of Movies Filmed in Alberta

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development, and it is about the movie Brokeback Mountain. I would like to know how Alberta's scenery replicating other places helps Alberta's tourism industry.

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the challenge, because we know that many people make their holiday plans based on films that they've watched. In fact, one isolated study that we have access to indicates that for as many as 8 out of 10 people that watch a movie, that will impact on their vacation plans and that 1 out of 5 will then actually visit the location. So Brokeback Mountain being filmed west of Calgary, we need to get that information out. It helps when the leading actor, Heath Ledger, for example, goes on Oprah Winfrey and talks openly about filming near Calgary. It's something like 9 million viewers.

In a spirit of keeping the tone nice here today, I just want to ignore the opposition for one moment and say that the fact that Brokeback Mountain won three Oscars is going to help. Certainly it raises awareness, and when you have awareness, we must make sure the information is there for the people.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. There is no doubt that a few big films have generated attention, but I would like to know how attention in entertainment magazines brings tourism to West Yellowhead.

Mr. Dunford: Well, it will be quite important for the West Yellowhead area, as indeed any other area in Alberta, to make sure that your regional economic development alliances and other consortia get in on the film business because, one, it's big and, of course, it has a tremendous attraction.

One of the objectives that we have here in this department is to increase the film industry even further. It's important that we provide information to travel magazines. You know, people read the information; they want to get more information. Our travel call centre, by the way, since Brokeback Mountain, to get back to that movie, has received a tremendous number of calls. We have presentation location packages covering all of Alberta that we send out to interested producers. I can tell you that the request for this information has actually doubled over this past year. It's a really good story for all Albertans, including members in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is for the same minister. Now that the Oscars have come and gone, what are you and your department going to do to keep up the momentum in increasing tourism in Alberta?

Mr. Dunford: Well, the film industry is going to help us. Something like 53 movies have been made in the past three years, but we've got three particularly big ones that are going to be released this year: Robert Duvall – everybody knows Robert Duvall, I think – and his movie Daughters of Joy; Robin Williams with RV. Sometime I'd like to tell you my little anecdote of my meeting with Robin Williams down in the Milk River area. Actually, you can't have a conversation with Robin Williams. All you do is hand him a line, and you get a skit. In any event, Brad Pitt's Assassination of Jesse James will be out. By the way, when Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie were here in Alberta, one visit to the Tyrrell centre created something like 153 international media press articles about the Tyrrell museum. So this is tremendous. It's big business, it can be big business, and we plan to make it a bigger business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Quality at Ellerslie Elementary School

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked about the water situation at Ellerslie school yesterday, the Minister of Education stated that he was surprised that I had waited so long to actually do something about it. Furthermore, the minister stated that the school was in my constituency and that I would be welcome to do something about it. My questions are for the Minister of Education. Given that I personally took that advice, spoke to the board, and continued to work with the affected parents, can the minister inform this House what the Minister of Education has done to fix this problem?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it's not my problem, and it's not necessarily his problem either, but I would like the hon. member to know that when he asked this question back on November 17, we acted within 24 hours. We were immediately in contact with the school board to try and find out what the situation there was: was there a problem, and why was this particular member inflaming an issue? Now, the fact is that there was a boundary issue . . . [interjections] I wonder if we could just ask the Liberals to shut up for a minute. Just for a minute because this is important. Okay. I'll ask them not to.

I will just conclude this way, Mr. Speaker. We acted within 24 hours at the member's request. We contacted the public school board. The public school board provided a briefing and indicated that as part of their infrastructure maintenance renewal planning this was on the radar screen.

The water system being provided to Ellerslie is not part of the city water system at the moment, so the water is trucked in there. It's safe water. It's certified by the Capital health authority. There's no reason to inflame the situation. Now, if he knows something other than that, then please tell us.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that you stated yesterday that you were under the impression the problem had been dealt with, can the minister please explain how exactly the situation has been dealt with so far?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, let me try this again with perhaps a different wording. Here's how the system works. We have people who run for elected office. They are called public trustees of the school system. They get elected. They have a certain responsibility. One of their responsibilities is – guess what? – schools. They get a capital list together of infrastructure needs for schools and all of the other needs that are pertinent to education in their area. Then they prioritize them. Then they do their best to address them with the funds that we provide to them. We work with them on many of these occasions.

But the bottom line here is that that particular school's water supply is safe. It's trucked in. It's fresh every day. It's certified by the Capital health authority for drinking. So the situation is on another list to be dealt with by the city and by the school board, and I understand it'll happen in either '06 or '07, and the member knows that.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given your invitation yesterday for me to do something about this problem, is it the position of the minister that the opposition should be giving direction to the school boards? Isn't it the job of the Education minister? It's your job, Minister, not mine.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I'll be happy to do your job as well.

Now, here's the thing. Mr. Speaker, what I was simply saying is that if the member hadn't heard anything or hadn't been apprised or he hadn't followed up and it took him four months to do that, I was just surprised by that. That's all that was said. I know that when an issue is important to me in my constituency, I follow up with it, and

I track it very carefully, and I try and ensure that the matter gets tended to. I'm sure that the member will learn how to do that in good time, and this is a good start for him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Environmental Royalty Tax

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday morning the Minister of Environment came up with the sensible idea of levying an environmental royalty tax of some sort to help fund research into new technologies and monitoring. However, all it seemed to take was a phone call from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and within hours the Environment minister was back-tracking on this proposal. My questions are, of course, to the Minister of Environment. Why was the minister so quick to cave in to the pressure from the oil and gas industry and abandon his sensible proposal to levy an environmental royalty to fund research and develop new energy technologies?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me reframe the facts of the situation. First of all, Albertans care deeply, as the hon. member does, about the environment. In terms of as we go forward, do we want science and research to be used in improving environmental standards? Unequivocally yes.

Let me give you an example. In 25 years through science and research, through AOSTRA, in actual fact oil sands development has reduced emissions by 50 per cent because of science and technology. Do I support as the Minister of Environment for the Crown environmental incentives in order to encourage this type of activity? Unequivocally yes, today, tomorrow, next year as well, and in many years to come because it's a long-term solution.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister. He hasn't explained why he caved in, so I'll ask him another question. Given that the polluter-pays principle should apply to all industry in this province, why is the minister, then, caving in to the pressure from the energy industry by allowing them to dictate environmental policy on research in this province?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, when I became Minister of Environment, I said that I would like to be somewhat like a marriage counsellor because, you know, an actual CEO of an oil company who has children and grandchildren wants to make sure that their children and grandchildren breathe the same clean air, drink the same clean water that I do. In fact, the CBC referred to me, as Minister of Environment coming from Fort McMurray, as the fox in the henhouse. I said: you think my family doesn't want to breathe clean air and drink clean water?

So do I support scientific initiative? Yes, I do. Do we want to incent to attract even more activity in this regard for long-term, sustainable results? Unequivocally yes.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I won't repeat the CBC's description of the minister, but here is the third question: why should the taxpayer continue to be on the hook for negative impacts of oil and gas development rather than having the industry pay through an environmental royalty that he proposes?

Mr. Boutilier: My vision and the gleam in my eye is that I would like to eventually have a long-term sustainability fund, which we do have today, for environmental purposes, for scientific research that will produce results and outcomes that provide long-term solutions for our children and for the hon. member's grandchildren now and well into the many centuries to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Access to Education by Nonresident Students

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked some questions about a 17-year-old from Lethbridge who recently moved to Calgary, where she very much wants to finish her high school. I remain concerned that this young student may not yet be registered at a Calgary high school. My question is again to the Minister of Education. Has this young student been welcomed into a Calgary high school or not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the 17-year-old in question has chosen to move away from her home, and as such she is a minor child not living with either parent at the moment. There are some extenuating circumstances here, and if I provide as much information as I think I know about this case, I may be violating some privacy issues. On the other hand, if I don't provide an answer, then of course other accusations will come. So let me just say that the Calgary board of education, I know and I am relieved to hear, have made every effort for the past several days to contact this student, and the student has unfortunately not yet responded to them. [interjections]

Mr. Magnus: Given that some of the opposition don't seem to think this is an important question, my second question: are there any barriers that still exist and are preventing this student from furthering her education?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it certainly is a very serious issue, and we will do everything that we can from our end to help any of these students or school boards when issues like this come forward. However, we do have locally elected trustees, and they have in turn administrators, who do their best to address awkward and sometimes difficult circumstances such as we're discussing.

To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there are no barriers here other than communication. We need the two parties to be able to first of all get in touch with each other. Efforts are being made in that regard, and after that, they'll simply need to assess the student's situation with respect to what courses she has taken, what courses she wishes to take, what sort of a program she wishes to be on: will she be on a legal guardianship type of agreement or classified as an independent student? So there are circumstances like that that aren't necessarily barriers, but they are issues that need to be addressed.

Mr. Magnus: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: who will provide the funding for this young person to attend a high school in Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, when students are in the K to 9 program, we fund on a per capita or a per student basis, as most people here would know. Once they arrive in high school, we fund on a credit enrolment unit basis specifically those particular courses where credits have been awarded because the course taken has been completed. There's a special formula that works in that respect.

Now, with regard to one particular student who has chosen to live away from her own domicile and has picked a school of choice elsewhere, quite obviously if that student is able to get in touch with the school board – I know the school board is trying to get in touch with her – then something might, I'm sure, be arranged.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that if an arrangement can be made between the family, the minor child, and the Calgary board of education, which I think is the board in this particular case, then she will be obviously taking some high school credit enrolment courses. [interjections] Once she completes those, we will do our very best to fund them. That's how the system of funding works, and we will certainly look at it. We're not immune to these problems, and we do try our best to alleviate them.

The Speaker: There were several interjections there about time. That whole exchange with the three questions and three answers took 3.5 minutes, which is considerably shorter than many others earlier today.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of an historical vignette today this may be of interest, considering that this is also International Women's Week, March 5 to March 11 of this year. In 1916 Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba granted women the right to vote in provincial elections. On June 17, 1917, in that particular provincial election, Mrs. Louise McKinney won election as an independent in the contested constituency of Claresholm.

In August of 1917 under the province at large category Miss Roberta McAdams was elected as a nonpartisan MLA from this province at large designation for soldiers and nurses.

Louise McKinney was the first woman elected to a Legislature in the British Empire. She earned this designation as Roberta McAdams was not elected until August 17, although both were sworn into the Alberta Legislative Assembly on the same day. These two women were the first women elected to any parliament, again, in the British Empire.

Mrs. McKinney ran under the United Farmers of Alberta banner in 1921 and failed to be re-elected. A number of newspaper articles of the day credited her defeat with her opposition to the use of alcohol and the use of tobacco. In 1925 she was the only woman to sign the Basis of Union, which created the United Church of Canada. In 1928 she was one of five women who petitioned Ottawa for a ruling on the question of women being qualified to sit in the Canadian Senate. She died in Claresholm on July 10, 1931.

On February 8, 1918, Roberta McAdams became the first woman in the British Empire to introduce a piece of legislation, the War Veterans' Next-of-Kin Association. She did not seek re-election in 1921, moved to the Peace River area with her husband and then to Calgary, where she lived until her death on December 16, 1959.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every March social workers throughout Canada celebrate National Social Work Week in recognition of the contributions social workers make to our society. We celebrate in recognition of the valuable role that social workers play in our society. Social workers are a valuable asset to our society in many ways and deserve our sincere appreciation. National Social Work Week celebrates a proud profession with a long history of commitment to improving the well-being of people in our society. Social workers provide professional assistance to people seeking to overcome personal and social problems in order to lead satisfying, full, and productive lives. They offer services to individuals, families, groups, and communities throughout Alberta.

I commend all social workers in Alberta for their selfless dedication. I would like to send a thank you to all social workers in Alberta. They don't hear it often enough, but the average Albertan, like myself, does realize the value of their work, and people do appreciate it. This year it's hoped that people will take a few moments to thank someone they might know and express a positive thought about the profession and its impact on the community. I hope all Albertans will join me during this week to recognize the important contributions that social workers make.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Alberta Youth Advisory Panel

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to thank a great group of Alberta's youth for the work that they do with the Youth Secretariat, Children's Services, and this government as a whole. These are the youth that sit on the Youth Advisory Panel. These individuals help to give ongoing youth perspective on all work done by the Youth Secretariat and this government. This dedicated group works hard to see that positive changes are made for youth in this province.

There are 17 young Albertans from throughout the province that sit on the Youth Advisory Panel. For example, at the last meeting these individuals discussed topics such as the youth justice system, employment opportunities, secondary education, and the barriers to and opportunities for postsecondary education. Previous meetings have covered topics such as community involvement, housing, community opportunities, and addictions. The panel has had the opportunity to meet with the Premier, the Chief Justice for Alberta, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education, presidents of colleges, and many other individuals to discuss issues and challenges related to addictions, justice, and postsecondary education and to offer solutions from the youth perspective.

Not only are these youth working towards providing our government with input on various issues; they are also helping with several other youth-related functions. This past Sunday, March 5, the Great Kids awards took place at Fantasyland Hotel here in Edmonton. Members of the Youth Advisory Panel were on hand all weekend helping with the activities, and I would like to thank them for their involvement. Many of the youth on the panel are, in fact, former winners of the Great Kids awards and are, indeed, outstanding individuals. Their input is very valuable, and I would like to thank these youths for their work.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Pharmacist Awareness Week

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Pharmacist Awareness Week, so today I rise to speak about pharmacists in Alberta. First of all, I want to thank all the professionals working in the pharmaceutical field in Alberta, be they researchers, technicians, or pharmacists.

I want to congratulate the Pharmacists Association of Alberta and their members on a job well done. They serve Albertans to the extent beyond the normal calls of professional duty. Alberta pharmacists have been internationally recognized with awards for their work to improve patient care. They continue to lead the way internationally to benefit patients through the expanded role of the multidisciplinary health care team.

Alberta pharmacists have pioneered in their professional scope of practice. With their training, qualifications, and knowledge of pharmaceutical science and chemistry, I have more confidence in their profession for drug and medication programs. I am pleased to know that pharmacists expand from the role of mere drug dispensers to the role of drug and medication prescribers. Indeed, our health care system relies on the medication system. Without this pharmaceutical system we have no health care.

I want to bring out an important point, Mr. Speaker, a hidden point really. Our health care system relies on the pharmaceutical system, which is entirely in the realm of private business and for-profit. It starts out with researchers and developers of drugs to cure our illnesses. We rely on manufacturers to produce the drugs for our use, and we rely on the distribution network of pharmacies for the medicine to reach us. Just imagine how this system would be if it were publicly run by the government.

Mr. Speaker, whenever we talk about our health care system, we tend to narrow our thinking only to the work of doctors, nurses, and the space in hospitals, but we need to realize that the manufacturing and supplying of drugs, equipment, and consumable items are a critical part of the health care, and all of these are in the realm of private businesses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Sporting Events in Grande Prairie

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you are no doubt aware, northwestern Albertans, particularly the ones in the Grande Prairie region, are no strangers to hosting international visitors for a variety of reasons. This past weekend was no exception.

The Natural Luge World Cup had two event stops at the Night-hawk ski area near Grande Prairie. In just 18 months Alberta volunteers, guided by track designers, built a world-class natural luge track that has met and surpassed all requirements for international competition. One European racer commented: it's like Formula One. The Grande Prairie region will now move up to host the 2007 natural luge world championships, which will draw competitors and spectators from 16 countries.

It doesn't end there, Mr. Speaker. The 2006 Ford World Women's Curling Championship is being held in Grande Prairie March 18 to 26. A showcase of the world's premier women curlers from Asia, Europe, and North America will compete in this event.

These successes, Mr. Speaker, are directly linked to Alberta's can-do attitude and our unbeatable spirit of volunteerism.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

National Child Care Program

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Five months ago the Minister of Children's Services announced a five-point early childhood development and child care plan made possible by an agreement reached with her federal counterpart. The plan provided for significant increases to child care subsidies, assistance for parents wishing to enrol their children in day programs, and improved professional development opportunities and increased wages for child care workers. Those modest gains are now under threat. The minister recently warned Albertans that if the agreement is cancelled, then the improvements that were made possible would also be in jeopardy. This could prove disastrous for many families.

The federal Conservative plan will not directly create new child care spaces. Their plan will not promote public, not-for-profit care, which we know is the best way to deliver quality child care and early learning services. The families who need it most will likely never see their full $100 monthly allowance. Families receiving income support through Alberta Works will likely see the $100 clawed back. The money will also be a taxable benefit, disqualifying many families from income-tested programs.

If this government is sincere about providing choices for women and families, then it should provide real choices, including the ability to choose high-quality, affordable child care. Sadly, at an average cost of over $500 per month such options are simply not available for many families. I'm urging the minister to do the right thing when she meets tomorrow, I understand, with her federal counterpart and defend and save the agreement reached last year. Alberta families deserve no less.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm submitting a petition on behalf of concerned Albertans from Okotoks, High River, Sunset House, and a few other communities petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to take measures that will require school boards and schools to eliminate all fees for instructional supplies and materials and general school services, including textbooks, musical instruments, physical education programs, locker rentals, lunch hour supervision and required field trips, and to ensure that schools are not deprived of the resources necessary to offer these programs and services without additional charges to parents or guardians.

Bill 20

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006.

The proposed amendments in this bill will protect Albertans' personal information from improper access by foreign governments and create fines of up to $500,000 for violating our laws governing disclosure of records. It will allow newly created government boards and committees to be brought under the FOIP Act more quickly and add circumstances where the act won't apply to public bodies. It will address how the act applies to specific categories of records, including library books and certain records of the internal auditor and ministers, and build in more time for the Information and Privacy Commissioner to consult with an applicant during the processing of a FOIP request.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 20 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling an e-mail from Karen Ockerman, an Edmonton-McClung constituent. She's against privatization of health care and feels that the third way is both short-sighted and poorly advised. She ties this into how the government treats our seniors and the way government looks at environmental issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a document that I'm tabling on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Official Opposition. This is an article in regard to the Enmax CEO stating: initial introduction of power deregulation a disaster.

The second tabling that I have is also from question period today. This is in regard to a question that I directed to the Minister of Energy. This is a copy of the draft confidential report for the standing policy committee review on October 21, 2005, indicating that in the year 2004 as a percentage the Crown revenue share for royalties was 19 per cent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon with three tablings, the first of which is a copy of an e-mail from a constituent by the name of Leslie Hall, who is writing about her concerns with the health policy framework. She says that she's "strongly opposed to creating a multi-tiered system that will only serve to augment the already large disparity in quality of life and access to social services in our province."

The second is another letter from a constituent, Janette Pole, again writing to indicate that she's unhappy with the proposal to allow more privatization of health care in Alberta. She says that she feels that as the Premier is "rushing through this before he leaves government, we should wait until the new Premier is in place and take a good hard look at this."

The third, on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, is from a constituent of his by the name of Martha Dobbin. It's another letter about health care. She's expressing grief based on the fact that "no Conservative MLA appears to be presenting the wishes of her/his constituency in speaking against the Third Way but is rather falling in line with a plan that is obviously against the wishes of most Albertans."

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings, the first from Reny Miklos on health care: retaining a publicly funded, accessible health care system, not violating the Canada Health Act, and concerns over the absence of a lobbyist registry, with private health interests lobbying the government.

The second tabling is from Roseline Bouchie with concerns about insurance companies' qualifications to decide how distribution of what is priority health and not priority health care and double-dipping for doctors.

The third tabling is from Paul Armstrong, director of Alberta Coalition of Concerned Citizens, again on health care, asking that someone explain the logic of taking doctors from the already overtaxed public system and making a couple of suggestions about foreign-qualification doctors and getting them into our system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is a letter from D.W. Irons, who is upset that the government is moving ahead with health care reforms that were not supported at the health summit and that they have contracted with Aon, whose parent company was forced to pay $190 million in fines for unethical behaviour.

I also have a brochure produced by the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team, which is strongly opposed to the privatization and two-tier health care being proposed with the so-called third way in health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two documents to table today. The first is an excerpt from the Alberta NDP platform calling for the creation of a green fund to support green transportation initiatives and cleanup of toxic sites.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is an op-ed piece written by my colleague from Edmonton-Calder. The piece calls for adjusting royalty rates to increase the resources we have available to fund important cleanup and sustainability initiatives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness: a letter dated March 6, 2006, from the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, to Dr. Taft, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, providing preliminary observations concerning the Alberta Liberal opposition report entitled Creating a Healthy Future.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I've received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2006-07 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government until May 31, 2006. It is anticipated that by that date spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $5.8 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $222 million for capital investment, $28 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and $328 million for lottery fund payments.

Interim supply estimate amounts are based on departments' needs to fund government programs and services until May 31, 2006. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of each quarter and at the beginning of the fiscal year. Some payments are seasonal.

head: 2:50 Government Motions

8. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2006-07 interim estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Government Motion 8. I'd just like to get on the record the fact that I'm a little disappointed that we are once again seeing an interim supply estimate. In my comments a year ago I had indicated that I was more than willing to come back to this Legislative Assembly in early February, and I had indicated then that I would hope that the government would be as willing to do so. If we were here in early February, there would be ample time to deal with the Speech from the Throne and those various responses, and we could be beginning budget deliberations by the end of February. That would allow us ample opportunity to debate a budget in full before the fiscal year-end and thereby eliminate the need for this document and further interim supply.

I indicated last year that the government of Saskatchewan last year for the very first time in the 100-year history of the government of Saskatchewan was asking for interim supply. I cited that because the Finance minister here said that this is normal procedure and, indeed, it is normal procedure. All I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that it wouldn't necessarily have to be normal procedure.

I have a great deal of problem approving $6 billion in funding to the government without anything more than a single line item for each department. I know that eventually we will see a budget and have an opportunity to debate it, but it causes me a great deal of concern to approve $6 billion in such a very short period of time without any real understanding of where that money is going or what it's going to be used for.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to anybody else who may wish to comment as well.

The Speaker: Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate?

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I think you'd have to come back to the Legislature in January, and I guess that's something we can discuss. It does require a certain number of days for budget debate, but this interim supply estimate, as I indicated, is two months of supply for the government. To suggest that a budget this size for the province would not be utilized over that time period would be kind of an interesting thought.

As I indicated in my opening comments – and I understand fully that the hon. member wants to put his concern on the record, and I appreciate that – we do have departments who have services and programs that are funded at the beginning of the fiscal year. I would anticipate a supply motion even if you anticipated that you might get your budget through because I don't think anyone in this Assembly wants to interrupt that good work that's done in our health facilities, in our schools, through Children's Services, and many other programs.

Many of our obligations are on the first of the year, some of them are quarterly, but it is important that that work continue and that the thousands of people who work in this province to provide educational opportunities, health care, and certainly all of the services that we enjoy in this province receive a paycheque at the end of the month. I think they deserve that. Mr. Speaker, this is only until the main government estimates are approved.

I look forward to all of the debate and discussion over the period of the budget debate. I think the hon. member knows that the interim supply estimates cannot reveal the government's spending plans until all budget documents are tabled. I know that he understands that and understands why we debate it in this way. There will be very comprehensive budget information in our fiscal and business plans, and I would be pleased to inform the hon. member that budget day will be March 22.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

9. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2006-07 interim estimates shall be two days.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 6: Rev. Abbott]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to be able to rise today and give my response to the Speech from the Throne. Eight days ago in question period – I want to set a little context for my remarks, first of all – the Premier indicated that he wished I had stayed in radio. Of course, the Premier mentioned a great many things of questionable validity that day, including his comment that the opposition, “would have even less reason for justifying their existence.” Now, I'm sure the Premier wishes that I had stayed in radio because for all of the media's influence, some of it real, much of it alleged, one thing journalists and talk show hosts cannot do is compel elected officials to appear on their programs to be held accountable. The Premier was able to avoid me for as long as I was just on the radio, and now that I sit nearly across from him in this House, he no longer can.

I don't know whether the Premier privately thinks that I'm a great guy or not, but that's not the point because this isn't about me. Although I submit that the Premier and his many fellow government members have forgotten this after all these years of being corrupted by power, it's not about them either. It's about the citizens of Alberta. It is about democracy. It is about accountability. That's why I was sent here by voters who know that this government is old and tired and out of ideas yet still as undemocratic as ever, unwilling to tolerate dissension, genetically incapable of accepting ideas and advice from outside.

So this government drifts, a victim of its own culture of entitlement: entitlement to make all the rules, entitlement to remain in power, entitlement not to be questioned or held to account, entitlement to do the autopilot thing because, well, they think they're entitled. Well, that drift, that culture of entitlement, that arrogance and complacency and squandered opportunity is not good enough for the people of Alberta. This is about the people. It is about what they want and what they need and what they treasure and what they hope for, and that is not in this Speech from the Throne.

Oh, the same old platitudes are there: warm, fuzzy, mom and apple pie, baseball, hotdogs, and Chevrolet-style bromides that read like they were crafted by some Toronto ad agency copywriter who's trying to sell RSPs or some other product or service that will, gentle reader or viewer, bring you a sense of security and peace of mind as soon as you hand over your money. I don't know. Maybe the guy who penned this masterpiece also does those commercials for life insurance designed to cover the cost of your funeral, you know, the ones where the earnest-looking pitchman reminds us how it only costs pennies a day, and everyone qualifies regardless of age, and you won't need a medical, which is undoubtedly reassuring news in the context of the third way.

Perhaps the guy used to – I don't know – write advertising for the federal Liberals back in the day when the feds spent quadrillions of our tax dollars every year attempting to convince us how good their ideas were. I know the Premier's throne speech eve infomercial only cost 170,000 of our tax dollars. But, yeah, there's been a changing of the guard in Ottawa, and hey, a guy's got to feed the family one way or another.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that this Speech from the Throne stretches credibility to the breaking point. There's a promise in every paragraph. If the Premier had stayed, well, not in radio but television, he'd remember that the stories you do for broadcast have to have more than a passing acquaintance with the facts. As the Globe and Mail said of itself in a recent editorial eviscerating a certain federal election ad, and I quote: we're not making this up; we're not allowed to make stuff up. As a reporter he'd know or should know that the more promises a government makes, the less likely it is to keep any of them. That's not because government is inherently dishonest – well, not just because, in any event – but because the more promises you make, the harder it is to figure out what your priorities are.

Although as someone who just fairly recently left the radio business and finds himself often still viewing this whole process through the jaundiced eye of an old newsy, I note the chicken-and-egg nature of the promise-them-everything school of politics, and I wonder which came first. Did the old federal government and does the current Alberta government lack a vision and a plan and a clear set of priorities because they both promised everyone everything under the sun? Or do they make all these promises in hopes that they won't notice that they have utterly lost their way?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the constellation of Albertans' hopes and dreams and concerns is undoubtedly contained in that Speech from the Throne, but although you can look up into the sky on a clear night in the country and see those constellations up there, they remain out of reach. However, we can get to the moon. We got there when we made it a priority and developed a plan. The people of Alberta know that the future is very bright indeed, but while the possibilities may be limitless, there are limits on the number of possibilities we can pursue at any one time. We have to set some priorities.

So let's talk about that, and while we're at it, let's talk about a couple of glaring contradictions in the throne speech too. For instance, the throne speech talks about a learning society and a prosperous society and promises that "work will begin or continue on about 60 new schools or major school modernizations, 47 major postsecondary capital projects, and 21 major health capital projects," yet Calgary alone has 40 communities packed with young children without a public elementary school. Less than a dozen schools are under construction. The Calgary Catholic board has been allocated only a fraction of the number of portable classrooms it requested. The Calgary board of education spends $27 million a year on school busing. Now, $27 million would pay for, oh, half a dozen elementary schools. Come to think of it, the prosperity bonus cheques would have paid for over 300 schools.

As for the 47 major postsecondary and 21 major health capital projects, well, anyone who would argue their need today in this province is just plain cheap. The Calgary health region, for example, will need something in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent more money in terms of operating funds over the next four years so that they'll be able to staff and run their new facilities. So far there's no operating cash to go with the capital fund for hospital construction and expansion. I know. I know: wait for the budget. That's the standard line.

Glaring contradiction number two: the government's Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I quote again from the throne speech: "Research indicates that half of all cancers are preventable," and "Bill 1 . . . will establish funding that the Alberta Cancer Board will use to move forward aggressively on cancer prevention." Well, the contradiction is that this is the very same government that last year at this time cut the legs out from under a private member's bill to uniformly ban smoking in all public places right across the province. Why? Did the government succumb to the tobacco lobby? Was it the lobbying from bar owners? Or did they succumb to the same cabal within government? They tried, until they could no longer stand the howls from an outraged public, to exempt the Legislature Building and cabinet ministers' offices from a smoking ban. Whichever, it doesn't matter to whom they caved. They caved – that's the point – on smoking. We know that 45,000 Canadians a year die from smoking-related illnesses, in many cases cancer.

About priorities: the issue here is the need to choose a few, which this throne speech clearly indicates this government has failed to do. I've had a lot of conversations with constituents lately about their priorities, and I'm going to use one conversation that I had a couple weeks ago. It's reasonably representative. I was talking with a guy who volunteers to maintain the outdoor ice rink at one of the community halls in Calgary-Currie. This is one of those salt-of-the-earth people that communities all over this province rely and depend on to do the basic stuff like provide the ice rink for the community kids – the outdoor rink, that is, in the face of an almost endless chinook this winter, and the ice surface, by the way, was gorgeous.

He told me: "You know, I grew up in this community. When I was a kid, my dad worked; mom stayed home. We were able to buy a bungalow here, close to downtown. We had one car. I walked to school, and I walked to the rink to play hockey, and I walked to the ball diamond in the summertime." He said, "You know, none of these new communities have any of these public facilities that help make communities work." Aha. There's a clue to a priority and, I think, an interesting comment. It spoke to one ordinary Albertan's understanding that this government is no longer delivering value for money, no longer delivering value for the tax dollars he sends from Calgary up here to Edmonton.

He's not asking for the sun or the moon or even a cure for cancer. He's asking why his government has neglected the basics: schools in the communities where kids live; parks and recreational facilities; by extension, enough hospital space to accommodate the sick; quality care for our aging parents and grandparents; space to educate and train the tens of thousands of young people who are turned away by our postsecondary institutions every year; enough money to create some opportunity for our disabled and our disadvantaged rather than barely enough to subsist on; our air; our water; and our nature. Mr. Speaker, those are the basics for which government has a responsibility.

Government's job, government's priority is to create the context in which every Albertan can aspire to his or her full potential: economic, social, and human potential. Good governments do this by providing excellent public services, public goods, and public works, which enable the private sector to be highly productive and globally competitive and enable citizens to be all that they can be. There is great power in communities. There is great power in people, and wise governments recognize this and nurture, encourage, and invest in this. But this government – oh, this government – has neglected too many people and too many communities for too long. Promising them everything under the sun at this juncture isn't going to fool them anymore. The people of Alberta look at our unprecedented wealth and opportunity. They see a government unprepared to lead, and they rightly conclude that we deserve better.

I will be delighted some day to go back to radio, once Alberta has a government that makes its citizens its priority. It's clear, though, Mr. Speaker, that that's going to take a change of government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by our hon. Lieutenant Governor. I would like to congratulate His Honour for an impressive first year of service as our province's 16th Lieutenant Governor, and I would like to extend my warmest wishes for his continued success.

I also want to recognize the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature and the 100 years of democracy in Alberta. As my article in the winter edition of the Canadian Parliamentary Review explains, we enjoy a very healthy democracy in this province, thanks to the work and dedication of many people who are in this Chamber today, including the Premier, the Speaker of the House, and many other parliamentarians throughout our province's history. We should be proud of our democratic traditions.

We should also take pride in the position our province has taken in this federation. Alberta has become the leader in Canada by such a wide variety of measures. Governments from across the country look to us for leadership and innovation in how we govern. It took a lot of hard work to get there. I feel confident that this hard work will pay dividends for Albertans for many years to come.

As I think of the many Albertans who have worked hard to get us here, I think of our brave soldiers in Afghanistan and their courageous families, and I realize that they are making sacrifices so that others may have the same kind of democracy that we have. I think of the families in Afghanistan that want all of their children, girls and boys, to go to school to get a good education. I think of the health care in Afghanistan and the little boy who had a cancerous tumour on his face and his grandfather who took him to a Canadian base and to Canadian doctors for help. I think of the people from Edmonton who quickly raised $10,000 through their church when asked by a soldier to help the little boy die a more comfortable death. I think of how comfortable our lives are, and I say a prayer of thanks for our soldiers, their families, our Canadian values, and our great democratic governments.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne highlighted many initiatives like health, education, infrastructure, and safe communities that benefit Albertans, and I would like to spend the next few minutes talking about how some of these will benefit my constituents in Red Deer-North. All Albertans, including my constituents, will benefit from major investments in infrastructure this year. Red Deer enjoys its geographic position in the middle of the Edmonton-Calgary corridor, which is one of the most productive geographic regions on the planet. To sustain this level of activity, we need more roads, more hospitals, and more schools. I enthusiastically encourage the government's commitment towards ensuring that the province's infrastructure keeps up to its impressive economic performance.

To continue with this economic performance, we also need a highly-educated and skilled workforce. One way the government plans to achieve a highly-educated workforce is by speaking to youth, parents, business leaders, and educators from across the province through a high school completion symposium to better understand why students leave school early. This is a very important initiative because we need our students to finish high school and to move on to a postsecondary education or into the workforce as soon as possible. Fifteen dollars to $20 an hour might look inviting to a student for a full-time job. However, this will not satisfy them for long, and returning to school will be difficult. I can still see my daughter's frustration when she realized that she had to upgrade and complete her grade 11 and grade 12 chemistry. As a young adult it was expensive in time and money for her to go back to college to complete courses that she could have completed while she was in high school.

Our workforce needs to grow substantially if Alberta is to keep its competitive advantage. Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, the government will respond this year by developing "a new strategy to increase awareness of Alberta as the [place] . . . for skilled immigrants." The development of this strategy along with the government's added focus on settlement services and language training will go a long way towards attracting the best people to our province to work in their specialized fields.

We have to remember that we also need to have homes for the immigrants who come to live and work in Alberta. The mayor of Red Deer has established the Mayor's Task Force to End Homelessness. I've been told that there are up to 12 people living in a two-bedroom apartment because they cannot find affordable housing. I congratulate our government and the minister of seniors and housing for working to support affordable housing in Alberta.

Thanks to affordable housing grants and Potter's Hands construction, we will add another 95 beautiful, affordable housing units this year to the 225 that have been completed over the last three years in Red Deer.

The Edmonton-Calgary corridor is also home to a substantial segment of Alberta's aboriginal population. These important Albertans need to be included in discussions on solving our labour shortages. We need to find ways for aboriginal populations to take a greater role in shaping this province's future. I am thankful to Olymel, one of our major corporations in Red Deer, for taking the initiative to train aboriginals and to bus them back and forth from Hobbema to their meat processing plant each day. I know that there are other organizations in Red Deer that are committed to good oil field training programs for all Albertans. I am encouraged by new partnerships that are being formed between aboriginal groups, industry, and government.

With increased training for aboriginals will come increased opportunities on Alberta's reserves, and more opportunities on reserves will help aboriginal populations to overcome problems like drug addiction and gang violence. I feel the horror of the mother who ran to her three children who just barely missed being hit by a bullet and had debris sprayed all over them when they were in the bathtub. It is suspected that this frightening incident with three small children was the result of an aboriginal gang shooting.

These problems are not exclusive to reserves. Mr. Speaker, we need to stimulate our youth through education and provide them with opportunities. Such an approach will help to curb the spread and use of crystal meth, which is a problem across this entire province. This is a topic that is very dear to my heart, as I have spoken to many parents in the past year whose children are addicted to this terrible substance. Crystal meth affects every Albertan, whether it's knowing somebody who suffers from addiction, being a victim of a meth-related crime, or paying higher insurance premiums due to sharp increases in property theft.

This is why I so passionately applaud the government for establishing the Crystal Meth Task Force, which will work with AADAC and with law enforcement to reduce the supply and decrease demand for this drug. Along with many parents whose children are abusing drugs, I anxiously await the proclamation of my private member's bill, Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. This will give parents the tools to help their addicted children through detox and treatment.

I am also very supportive of the government's decision to increase the number of rural and organized crime police in the province last year. In order to seriously tackle the difficult issues related to the spread of drugs, we need more police on our streets.

This year the government has committed to hiring more Crown prosecutors and courtroom staff as well as to appoint more judges. Mr. Speaker, this announcement will be very welcome in Red Deer, where our overcrowded and overworked courthouse is in need of expansion and a new judge.

Albertans will be relieved to see the effect of stronger legislation to protect people from family violence. Albertans deserve to live without fear, and the upcoming amendments to this legislation should make many Albertans feel safer. I am pleased to sponsor Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006, which clarifies the definition of family violence and the definition of victims, which includes seniors and people with disabilities who don't live under the same roof.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans also deserve to have a health care system that they can count on. In the throne speech the Lieutenant Governor indicated that the government will take steps to improve access, sustainability, choice, innovation, and efficiency in Alberta's health care system. We know that unless we make changes, health care will consume Alberta's entire budget in less than 25 years. This is the same in every province across Canada. I know that I want to leave a health care system that my five children and my five grandchildren will be able to count on too. Improving access, choice, and efficiency is welcome news to the people of Red Deer-North and to every other constituency in this province.

Primary care is an example of an innovative and efficient model of health care delivery that will be expanded this year. Recently the government was able to decrease wait times through the Alberta hip and knee replacement project. This was an innovation that worked and will therefore be expanded to other areas where wait times are just too long.

Mr. Speaker, the expansion of these various programs is an indicator that this government is serious about strengthening the public health care system. In fact, the government has been taking steps to strengthen the public system for several years. I believe they deserve more credit than they receive. It's very easy for the opposition to scare Albertans into thinking that this government intends to completely dissolve the public system in favour of a private system. It's easy for them to tell Albertans that their access to health care services will be based on their ability to pay. But this is extremely irresponsible. The opposition is simply misinforming the public, and they know that they can do so because they are playing on the public's fear.

I ask the public to overcome their fear and embrace some facts. Mr. Speaker, here in Edmonton hospitals are being expanded, at the Royal Alexandra and the University of Alberta. The Stollery children's hospital was built. The Mazankowski Heart Institute is currently under construction. Huge sums of money are being invested in prevention, early screening, and research of cancer. According to the throne speech there are 21 major capital health projects taking place around the entire province. Does it make any sense for a government that is accused of trying to eliminate public health care to be investing so heavily in the public system? It simply doesn't add up. I ask Albertans to consider this before they allow anyone or any group to play on their fears and scare them into thinking otherwise. Our public system is not perfect, but the government has clearly shown a commitment to improving it.

The environment is also a very important part of the government's agenda. We know that if we take care of the environment, the environment will take care of us.

Mr. Speaker, through the Speech from the Throne the government has shown that it is ready to start its second century with an ambitious and exciting agenda. I'm excited about the future that we are preparing for our people. I look forward to working with Albertans to ensure that this century is as successful as the last and that the comforts and values we share as Albertans will be there for another century.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne, which His Honour Mr. Norman Kwong delivered on February 22. Throne speeches, of course, as well as budgets are moral documents because they outline priorities which affect people's lives, their everyday lives. As usual, this throne speech reflects a traditional economic approach, favouring economic growth but overlooking especially the most vulnerable people in our society.

One of this government's favourite words is choice, regardless of the fact that so many low-income people in our communities are quite limited in the choices that they can make. We hear that mantra over and over again: it's all a question of choice.

Let's look for a moment at the word "choice." Classical economics has always assumed that human beings are logical, rational, and self-interested, weighing carefully costs against benefits in order to make smart choices which accrue as much profit as possible to themselves. This is the standard model of economic man. However, there's one fatal flaw with this view: this economic man does not exist.

When we look at actual, real human beings, we find all sorts of behaviour. Some behaviour is not in the interest of people. It's quite irrational, undermining their own self-interest. How else can you explain why people continue to vote Conservative year after year when it is clearly against their own self-interest? In real human beings we see everything from quite selfish behaviour, on the one hand, to self-sacrificial, altruistic behaviour, as demonstrated in the outpouring of help for victims of a tsunami or a hurricane.

Ordinary human beings are quite unpredictable, and there is emerging now a new subfield of economics called behavioural economics. I was helped in these remarks by a recent article in Harvard Magazine. This new field of behavioural economics, which seems to be getting more and more important in university economics departments across North America, studies how real people make choices. It's very important to understand what they're saying about this whole issue of choice because choice, as I mentioned, is the new mantra of Conservative ideology: choices in respect to daycare, choices in respect to health care.

Behavioural economists tell us that on this matter of choices there is a fundamental tension between the present and the future, between seizing available rewards in the present and being patient for rewards that come in the future. It is obvious that the temptation of the moment is strong. It is called instant gratification. If you ask someone, "Which do you want right now, doughnuts or fruit?" they will say: doughnuts. But if you ask which one a week from now, they will say: fruit. It is common for us to postpone decisions for the future on things that are really important, like quitting smoking or beginning an exercise program or saving money in RSPs. It's also quite common for people, when they get a lot of money, a huge gift, a huge boon of money, to spend it right away. There are so many stories of people who have won lotteries and then a few years later they are bankrupt.

This temptation to spend now, instant gratification, is what this government is leading us into. In Alberta we are blessed by a huge gift from Mother Earth in the form of fossil fuel resources. But what do we do? We spend it. Professor Roger Smith, a respected professor at the University of Alberta, commented in a letter recently published in the Edmonton Journal that from 1986 to 2005 Alberta's oil and gas revenues totalled $86 billion, but of this huge amount the province has saved only $6.4 billion and spent the rest, a billion here and a billion there, prompting the Canadian Taxpayers Federation in their newsletter to state that the Alberta government has increased spending by 113% not in the last 10 years but in the last couple of years, and "Premier Klein's spending binge makes even the most spendthrift Liberal government in Ottawa look fiscally responsible by comparison."

This government should learn from Odysseus. Odysseus was warned by the goddess Circe that his ship would pass the island of the sirens, whose irresistible singing can lure sailors and their ship onto the rocks. The sirens are a metaphor for the temptation of the moment. Odysseus made wax stoppers and placed them in the ears of his crew. He asked his crew to lash him to the mast, and even when he pleaded to be released, they were to lash him tighter until they passed beyond the danger. This government needs to lash itself to the mast and develop a long-term savings plan and invest in the welfare of our children and our grandchildren. Without a plan the Alberta ship is being steered by this government onto the rocks. Even in classical economics it has been the belief that during bad times governments should spend money on public works projects to increase employment, but in good times governments should save and save and save.

Last summer I read the fine biography of John Kenneth Galbraith written by Richard Parker. Actually, this book is in our library now. I saw it yesterday. It's a new book, a very fine biography of a great Canadian. John Kenneth Galbraith's career began at the Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph and has spanned most of the 20th century, from the depression era to his being an adviser to John F. Kennedy. Galbraith was a great fan of FDR's New Deal, and throughout his career as an economist he never wavered from arguing that during tough times when unemployment is high, public deficit spending on public projects is necessary. But when the economy is racing ahead, as it is now, when you have an overheated economy, what we need is more fiscal restraint.

It is a question of good stewardship. In my career of more than 40 years in the ministry I used that word repeatedly in my sermons: stewardship. It's an important value, that we should be good stewards of the gifts of creation. I noticed that the newsletter of the environmental research centre at the University of Alberta is titled Partners in Stewardship. This word has moved out of its religious background into the secular sphere, as it should. It's an extremely important value.

As we look at the huge, wonderful resources we have in this province, which we didn't put there, that are there and we are exploiting, we should remember that we have to be good stewards of that tremendous wealth. I take very seriously the challenge of the Canada West Foundation, which has reminded us of our intergenerational responsibility. The term they use is intergenerational equity. The revenue that flows from oil and gas and coal lying beneath the surface of Alberta is a trust, a gift which should benefit not just people today – that's the instant gratification I was talking about – but it should benefit future generations also, our children and our grandchildren. Again, this government has to lash itself to the mast and exercise wise and prudent stewardship of our nonrenewable resources.

Most people I think were quite surprised by all the attention to coal in both the throne speech and the Premier's infomercial. It may be the case that there are enough coal reserves to last a thousand years, about 33 billion tons, but talk about clean coal is misleading since clean-coal technologies are still in the developmental stage, and many of the most promising developments, such as the converting of coal to gas and liquid fuels . . .

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language Referring to a Member by Name

The Deputy Speaker: I'd just like to remind the hon. member of two things. We don't use the word "misleading"; it's been judged as unparliamentary. The other thing I'd like to remind the member is that we don't refer to members of this Assembly by their proper name, so it would be the Premier of the province of Alberta. Please carry on.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't recall making those points at all, but anyway. I didn't mention the Premier at all.

The Deputy Speaker: You referred to the Premier as Premier Klein in your speech earlier on. If you check your script, you'll probably see that. And we have decided long ago that we don't use the term "misleading." It's in the Speaker's handout that was given to all members at the beginning of the session, that that's an unparliamentary usage of language. So if you'd care to carry on without comment.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll check Hansard for those mistakes, and I apologize for those mistakes. I wasn't aware.

Dr. B. Miller: What I was saying about coal is that I think there are many research organizations, such as the Alberta Energy Research Institute and the Alberta Research Council, and also organizations of industry that are working on improving the technologies, so I'm not about to suggest that we shouldn't be moving ahead on that front. In fact, we should be putting more investment of our money into these technologies so that we can have a symbiosis of both respect for the environment and moving ahead in the use of our fossil fuel revenues. It's all a question of our responsibility in being good stewards. I'm afraid that with the government initiatives we're moving ahead too fast and we're moving ahead in such a way that we're showing a great deal of irresponsibility in respect to our environmental responsibility as stewards, and I think that needs to be attended to.

What I find missing in the throne speech also is investment in people. The throne speech has an optimism which is based only on one way of measuring economic growth. The throne speech boasts that Alberta has the highest average incomes in Canada, but it fails to mention that the gap between the rich and the poor is the widest gap in the country. If other measurements were used, such as the genuine progress indicators which you can find on the website of the Pembina Institute, you will see a very different picture of Alberta. Alberta leads the country in gambling addictions, alcoholism, substance abuse, use of food banks, and not surprisingly we have one of the highest divorce rates in the country.

3:30

Mr. Backs: A liquor store on every corner.

Dr. B. Miller: That's right.

The gap between the incomes of the richest 20 per cent and the poorest 20 per cent of Albertans has increased since 1994 by 62 per cent. In 1999 the top 20 per cent earned 14.5 times more than the lowest 20 per cent.

In respect to the way we use up our resources in terms of being consumers, there is something called the ecological footprint: the amount of land we use to meet our basic needs. Albertans have the fourth largest footprint on earth. Albertans on average consume 10.7 hectares of land to meet our needs, and the top 20 per cent of income earners have a footprint of 15.8 hectares.

In light of all those kinds of statistics about our human life and all of the problems that we face in human life in Alberta, it seems to me that this government is creating an immoral society with its out-of-control spending focused on the moment and irresponsible stewardship of our resources neglecting our responsibility for future generations. The throne speech is evidence once again that the Alberta ship is being steered onto the rocks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne on behalf of the people from my constituency of Stony Plain. I would like to begin my speech by thanking His Honour for the work he has done over the past year. His dedication to Alberta has helped to make our province the best place in the world to live, work, and play.

As His Honour mentioned in his speech, last year our province celebrated its 100th birthday. Throughout that special year there were many highlights, including Her Majesty's visit and the amazing fireworks display, which was a perfect ending to the province-wide party on September 1.

Mr. Speaker, the speech delivered last week by the Lieutenant Governor contained the highlights of the government's intentions for the next year. I am very excited about many of the aspects in the speech, including the removal of unnecessary red tape from government processes, the development of a new land-use framework, and the commitment to funding cancer research. In addition to those exciting initiatives for myself and the people in my riding there was another very exciting announcement. The government's initiative to promote and fund clean-coal technology research through the Alberta Energy Research Institute and other agencies is great news for the constituency of Stony Plain.

In the Wabamun area in my constituency there are at least 400 million tons of low sulphur coal lying under the ground. Over the years 150 million tons of this coal have been removed from the Whitewood and Highvale mines to fuel electrical generation. This is the largest coal-producing region in the province, with over 13 million tons of coal being mined annually.

Presently the three coal-fired power plants in the area, Wabamun, Sundance, and Keephills, generate approximately 35 per cent of the power needs of this province. They do so by meeting and exceeding some of the highest environmental standards in North America. These plants have been a big part of the Alberta advantage in regard to providing Albertans with low-cost electricity in an environmentally friendly manner. These operations have also provided employment for approximately 1,000 residents in the area.

The development of clean-coal technology will further reduce any environmental impacts and allow for further development of this valuable resource and provide additional benefits for all Albertans. The development of clean-coal technology is exciting for Alberta and for the residents of the Stony Plain constituency. This new, developing technology will allow Albertans to continue to benefit from our tremendous, abundant coal reserves while protecting our environment for future generations. With the Wabamun plant scheduled for retirement in 2010, that site may offer an excellent location for a demonstration plant to further develop this exciting new technology.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Speech from the Throne delivered a vision of Alberta's future that all Albertans can be proud of. We're living in a time of untold prosperity, and it's important that this prosperity is passed onto future generations of Albertans. That is why I was very pleased to see the government commit to a $1 billion investment in the heritage fund, the first such investment since 1987. Along with many endowments that the government has funded, the heritage fund will ensure that Alberta will remain strong for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to close by thanking His Honour for his Speech from the Throne. All Albertans are truly blessed to know that we have such a great individual leading our province forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with great pleasure to respond to the throne speech here this afternoon. It's my observation that the Speech from the Throne should set a tone for the Legislative session. It's a speech that should seek to inspire, as it might introduce concepts that will be later fleshed out into bills during the course of the session. A throne speech speaks more directly to the public than most other speeches and documents that are disseminated from this House; thus it must be equally inspiring and substantive so that the public might know that their interests in the pressing issues of the day are in fact being dealt with in an even-handed and judicious manner.

I'd like to thank His Honour Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong for his even-handed delivery of the speech and for the manner in which he addressed several areas of concern that all Albertans have a very vested interest in.

I'd like to reply to the throne speech on two fronts, both on what subject matter the speech did include and then what areas of concern the throne speech, in fact, did not address. It's my opinion that the subject material of what this throne speech did not address speaks much louder than the other words which it contains. For this I am deeply concerned and more than a little bit suspicious. So I'd like first to cast a critical eye onto the speech and then discuss what was not there.

In the first section, entitled A Learning Society, this government proposes a series of round-tables to help to understand why students are leaving school early. It is well known that early intervention in the earliest formative years of a student is critical to lifelong learning, so if it is the Learning Commission's recommendation to institute full-day kindergarten, and if we could pass that into law, we would be sure that the next generation of student graduates will be much more likely to in fact graduate. Each dollar that is spent in early education will multiply by six by the time a student reaches high school. This is not even accounting for the enriched and healthier lives that our citizens are more likely to have if they are educated to a high school level and beyond. I am glad the government is facing the embarrassing failure rates for high school students in this province. It is unacceptable, and we have to be honest and brave enough to look at what the reasons for our high failure rates here in this province are.

I was pleased to learn that several infrastructure projects are being fast-tracked for implementation during this next budget year. Twinning highway 63 is a long overdue project, and I'm very pleased to hear that this project will come to fruition soon. Highway 63, as it stands now, is indicative of the lack of planning that went into the development of the oil sands resource here in Alberta.

It's been obvious for at least a decade now that the oil sands were going to develop into one of the world's greatest strategic sources of hydrocarbons. So why didn't this government plan and build the infrastructure to help to nurture this golden egg for then, for now, and for 30 years into the future? Where are the roads, the housing, the infrastructure for the city of Fort McMurray? You have in your caucus a former mayor of this city. Surely he could tell you what is needed up there.

Let's look into the future and see that the oil sands development will carry on and expand into the Peace Country too. Let's be sure to build an infrastructure that will benefit the long-term needs of the north and not just sort of a boom town mentality that's only focused on short-term gain.

A mention of agriculture using biofuel is very laudable but only if there is an integrated plan to encourage this and other alternative fuels to be used by consumers. Our agriculture industry needs plenty of assistance, but as long as the planning for assistance is only of a short-term and of a reactive nature, we will be forever caught in this cycle of crisis in our agriculture sector. The root of this crisis in agriculture, in my mind, is that there is not enough support and value being placed on the family farm. If biofuel and other value-added enterprises can be directly made to benefit the family farm first and foremost, then perhaps we will see some long-term gain in this regard.

I'm very concerned about the focus on coal to become the next great energy source in this province. There are way more questions than answers in regard to this enterprise, and you can be sure that I will be casting a very critical eye on the government's intentions in this regard. We know that we have a very significant coal supply here in the province of Alberta, and certainly it supplied us with electricity for a long time. However, my concern is that in order for us to move beyond a hydrocarbon-based economy, we have to start moving in other directions. Certainly, coal is going to be with us for a long time, but do we need to make the lion's share of our investments in our energy future in that particular technology? I would suggest not.

If we're serious about diversification, then we have to make a serious stab at alternative fuel development. That is why I believe that with the riches we have now, which are not going to be around forever, it's imperative that we invest in a significant way into alternative fuels that do not include hydrocarbons. We are in the best and probably only position to do this. Other companies and private enterprise will certainly follow but only if we make our intentions known.

We can see and learn lessons from the United States, that if we're not serious about investing in alternative fuels, then the investment community will not follow suit. If we're going to mimic the national energy policy of the United States, then I think that we're all doomed to failure. Certainly, we know that in the United States there is a strong movement amongst municipalities and states to move past hydrocarbon fuels as the main driver for our energy economy, but there is just this resistance amongst the current federal government in the United States.

Why should we be sticking ourselves with something that is going to be left to the past? We know that we're making tremendous amounts of money off hydrocarbons, and we're all grateful for that, but let's try to invest more pointedly into the future.

When I speak to my constituents in Edmonton-Calder, most often their concerns rest on what the future of our health care system is going to be, the bills that they open each month and find difficult to pay, especially their utility bills, and issues of crime and of safety for their family, security, property crime, and violent crime.

We owe it to our municipalities and, indeed, everyone in this province to have a police force that is commensurate with the huge growth in our population that we've seen over the last 20 years. Our per capita police force presence is not keeping up with the rest of the country. I think it's incumbent upon us at this juncture to look at how we police our province and how we fund it as well. It is a proposal that I put forward – and I will continue to do so in this session – that we need at least 500 new FTE positions across this province to meet the needs of this growing province in terms of policing.

Particularly, I believe that we should be focusing on a community police model to achieve those policing goals. Community policing has had a stamp of confidence, I suppose, from our new municipal police chief here in Edmonton, and certainly it's recognized as a model that works not only in urban areas but also in rural areas. I would urge the government, please, if they could, to consider in this next budget an increase in actual FTEs, not just for replacement but for actual FTEs, to bring our police force up to the level that our population deserves.

Also, as I said before, when I'm speaking to people in Edmonton-Calder, this health care issue is first and foremost on their minds. You know, I really have to question the sincerity of this government in not being forthcoming as to what their intentions are. I know that there is a baseline of what is being planned for, and I know that it includes some sort of privatization of health care. But, you know, this consultation process that we're in now does not seem valid. I've been speaking to other people: physicians at the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Alberta Medical Association and the nurses. All of them are saying that now they're just being sort of in what feels to be a flippant fashion asked to consult on something that is going to come down in the next 20-some days.

So I think that we do need to reform our health care system; there's no two ways about it. [some applause] I was hoping for a little applause there. But it has to be in a context of a strong public system. There's just too much compelling evidence to suggest that a privatization of our system, even if it runs parallel to a public system, will only result in the reduced capacity of the public system to meet the needs of the public. I think that if we have the very best system possible, then everyone must have access to that in an equal way. It is the strength of the fabric of our society to be able to do so, to give the very best that we have to offer to people when they're in a time of need, and anything less than that I would consider to be not only illogical but, in fact, immoral.

We are in a unique position amongst western developed countries and really any country around the world, where we have a reasonably intact public system. There are many reforms that we can do to make it better, but I refuse to believe that putting a parallel private system or any form of that in place is going to strengthen anybody's access to health care, be you rich, moderately rich, poor, or whatever in between. Even people who are well off can easily be fooled and tricked out of their money by having private options to health care. People think that they, perhaps, can purchase their way into health and are easily a target of nefarious sort of plans when certain people who might lack scruples know that they can take advantage of people when they're ill or when they're sick.

How we look after people who are in need is a measure of what sort of society we are, and I believe that this Legislature has beyond all else a duty to set the tone for our society, that we are indeed a caring society and that we look after each other in an equal and reasonable sort of way.

So thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to the upcoming debates.

I would like to please adjourn the debate on this now.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Second Reading

Bill 9

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 9, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill intends to bring about the following two changes. The first and most important change in the amendment act will update the province's Alberta Works legislation to provide more flexibility in decision-making for grant-funded students. Alberta Works pays the costs of a person's postsecondary training if they cannot afford to pay for their own training and they are not eligible for student loans. Currently all students applying for grant-funded training have to be out of high school for one year before they are eligible for full-time training grants. The amendment act would make a change to the one year out of school rule so that more exceptions can be made for people applying in certain circumstances.

This rule is there to make an important distinction about who can apply for grant-funded training. Training grants are not intended for every student graduating from grade 12 and looking to begin a postsecondary education. The majority of graduates leaving high school apply to advanced education for loan assistance if they need it, but requiring everyone to be out of high school at least one year before they can get funding help through Alberta Works is not always reasonable for those who would otherwise qualify for assistance.

The proposed change would benefit, for example, a 20-year-old youth from a developing country who has not completed high school and cannot make any more progress due to his lack of English. As well, he cannot continue in the regular school system due to his age. Under the current rules this person would not get any funding for ESL training or upgrading through Alberta Works because he has not been out of high school for one year. The proposed change would also benefit, for example, a 17-year-old single parent who gets support through Alberta Works to stay in school and finish high school. Under the current rules this student cannot get support for training as a licensed practical nurse because the student has not been out of high school for one year. These are many of the people who may not have the skills to get a job immediately or the options to pursue other avenues while waiting a year to qualify for grant-funded training.

Under the proposed change the one year out of school requirement would be moved to regulation so that government has more flexibility to make exceptions in certain cases. It will help people such as single parents, immigrants, or refugees who need to get on with some training immediately to keep moving forward.

Under Alberta Works government is committed to helping people get the skills they need so that they can increase their income through working and fill the job vacancies in the province's workforce. To do this, we need the flexibility to take individual circumstances into account when deciding who qualifies for grant-funded training. Alberta Works also provides services that help single parents get child support in addition to the financial assistance they receive.

The only other change being proposed through the amendment act is a housekeeping amendment to clarify the minister's authority to establish forms pertaining to child support agreements.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to reply to Bill 9 and, you know, thank the mover for bringing forward this bill, which speaks in some way to some problems with the legislation. While these amendments may not seem to be contentious, the problem with the Income and Employment Supports Act remains. There is much too much reliance on regulations, and there is no way to measure exactly how much people living in poverty truly need. Without indexing rates to inflation and tying them to an accepted measure, such as the market-basket measure, there is no accurate determination of what people need to survive and to prosper and to do well in our Alberta. Apparently, the government believes it can determine this through regulations.

I think it's imperative that these amendments should have clearly addressed the issue of those who dropped out of school when they were under 18. These teenagers cannot wait for a year or two to get back on track. The purpose of this bill should be to ensure that these kids get the help they need to complete their education and find meaningful employment. However, this amendment is unclear as to whether this will be accomplished. It leaves this determination up to the minister's discretion through regulations. This leaves many questions unanswered and leaves those kids who need support wondering if they can qualify for help to get their lives back on track. Surely, we can do better than just leaving it to regulations.

Again, this amendment is a housekeeping change in some ways to make the regulation-making ability of the minister specific and not implied. However, while there is no problem with some specific changes in this bill in this area, the more global problem here is that almost everything in the Income and Employment Supports Act is subject to regulation and not detailed in the legislation. The main problem with the entire act is that it allows for the content and form of almost everything to be determined in the regulations. While this specific amendment is largely housekeeping, the overriding problem is that this entire act is subject to the minister's or the Lieutenant Governor in Council's ability to make regulations.

The Income and Employment Supports Act allows the minister to make regulations for virtually all areas that this act encompasses. This gives the minister far too much power behind closed doors to alter things like the content and form of support agreements as he likes, and this may not always be in the best interests of the recipients affected. Also, leaving the legislation open to this widespread regulation-making authority makes the legislation itself more like a general framework without forcing the government to comply with real requirements. Regulations allow the government the ability and flexibility to make changes without scrutiny. This is not always in the best interest of Albertans affected by the legislation.

In addition, there is a need for additional amendments to the Income and Employment Supports Act in order to address some of the problems with that act. Most importantly, increasing social assistance rates is a vital step in supporting independence. These rates must be indexed to inflation and tied to this accepted measurement tool, like I mentioned earlier: the market-basket measure. Only by incorporating this MBM, market-basket measure, can the government determine what income support and benefits are needed for individuals and households and what basic necessities actually are. The Income and Employment Supports Act does not define what basic necessities are, and this ambiguity can lead to inaccurate assessments of benefits.

While this specific act, Bill 9, does not address these issues, perhaps it is time that this government takes action that ensures that low-income Albertans have a decent standard of living. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened intently to the mover of the motion, and he gave some logical reasons why we're moving in this direction, but I don't think it answers all the questions. At first glance the proposed amendments appear to increase the number of people who are eligible for income support and acceptance into training programs, and it seems to increase the likelihood that people facing financial crisis may find more immediate relief for their unemployment issues. Now, I expect that the mover of the motion and the minister would say that that's the purpose, the reason for bringing this bill forward, and that certainly is an important reason.

But, again, it becomes vague when it moves into regulations. It's hard to know how many people would be impacted in this regard. The mover of the motion talked about certain people that it could benefit, and that would be desirable. I guess I worry about the flip side of this, Mr. Speaker. I think that it's possible that we've had this move towards labour shortages and bringing 12-year-old kids into the workforce, and I worry about this potential that, oh, well, if you get out there, if you move away, if you're 16 or 17 and for whatever reason you're out of school and perhaps not with your parents and the rest of it, it would be encouragement to get these sorts of low-entry jobs rather than trying to finish their education. You see, that's a problem when you deal with regulations. We don't know where it's going to take us.

The desirable things that the mover of the motion talked about, certainly, I could support. I think that we all could. It makes sense. But where does it go? Behind closed doors, then, how do we know that it's not being used in this particular regard? We'd say: well, the minister wouldn't do that. Maybe the minister wouldn't, but why do have that in regulations?

So I would say to the mover of the motion: it would be nice to be a little clearer because we do get conflicting things coming from the government. I point out the move towards more child labour out in the workforce. It's hard enough to keep kids in school, but let's say that you've got a 17-year-old that's out of school, and instead of them pushing to finish formal education, we get them into some sort of training for low-entry jobs. It seems that that could be possible here. In the long run are we doing the right thing for that student or not? Probably not in that case. Now, I would hope that that wouldn't be used in that regard, but how do we know? But how do we know? How do we know when we put it behind sort of closed doors on regulations? I wish that the mover of the motion or the minister could at least give us some clarity about what this does mean other than showing the broad strokes that the member talked about, which we all agree with.

Now, the other problem – and the Member for Edmonton-Manning alluded to it – is this, Mr. Speaker: in this rich province, remember, a lot of young people on Alberta Works, the bulk of them, are probably children of single parents and the rest of it. Income support: I didn't hear anything about this. I thought the minister had alluded that sometime there was going to be at least some increases. Maybe it's coming in the budget; we don't know.

Mr. Cardinal: Stay tuned.

Mr. Martin: Well, I've stayed tuned for a long time watching this government, and I'm getting tired of the tune.

Let's take a look at it. The income support that is currently offered through the program is a pittance, frankly. Here it is, Mr. Speaker: a family of five is expected to survive off $1,450 a month – $1,450 a month. Now, to be eligible for child support services, a two-person family cannot make more than $14,600 a year. That works out to $608 a month per person. The minister in a government press release related to this bill stated his commitment to "helping people develop their skills so they can increase their income through working . . . To do this, we need the flexibility to take individual circumstances into account." Well, we don't need flexibility to raise those rates. You can't expect anybody to live on that sort of money in this province at this time.

It's hard to know what to do, frankly, with a bill like this. When the mover so eloquently laid it out that we're talking about immigrants and refugees to continue with ESL, all those things are good. All those things, as I say, are good. I would have liked to have seen that there was a commitment, first of all, to increase the rates. Secondly, with all these things happening behind closed doors, there could be a downside to this bill. At some point, perhaps through the second reading or committee stage or the rest of it, if they can clarify that a little more because I think the potential for abuse is certainly there, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes flexibility is good, but sometimes it can go too far.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions, comments.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers on the bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to close debate.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to note that both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in principle agree to the amendments that are being proposed. I do understand that both of them have issues with the global employment and training matters. However, those are outside the scope of the proposed amendments that I'm bringing forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we would like to request from the Government House Leader to return to the Speech from the Throne for two more speakers, so we will do that at this time.

head:

Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to give my reply to the Speech from the Throne. First, I must congratulate His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on his fine delivery of the Speech from the Throne and, indeed, the many things he does daily for the people of our great province.

In representing the good people from Edmonton-Manning – and they are all good people, I daresay, for it is truly the best area of the best city of the best province of the best country in the world . . .

Mr. R. Miller: You missed the best universe.

Mr. Backs: The best universe.

Here in Alberta we have no earthquakes. We have no tsunamis. Our floods pale in comparison to other parts of the world, as do our droughts. Indeed, most of our problems would be considered small compared to the difficulties encountered by many others on our small planet.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

An Hon. Member: Thanks to the government.

Mr. Backs: We hardly have any winter anymore, and that's not thanks to the government. Well, maybe it is. We have, though, tremendous resource revenues. We are so lucky.

Here in Alberta we're not beset by religious strife. We do not have suicide bombers blowing themselves up next to peacemakers to make a point. We have not had war on our lands in living memory. We can congratulate and support our soldiers and all of our service members here and afar who are doing so much in the world for Canada and for Alberta.

We have people here who come from more cultural origins than almost any other place in the world has, yet we live in great harmony. We all have a convenient scapegoat in the form of populist eastern Canada, that will become even more fun for this side of the House now that this government's federal Conservative cousins are in power in evil Ottawa. We can yell at all the bad things they do to our Alberta, and I'm sure they will. But Alberta will survive and get better because Albertans will make it so.

This government should have worked harder on ideas for this throne speech. That lackadaisical, lacklustre, and almost lazy throne speech will ensure that we must continue to rely on the people of Alberta to do well despite their government. That throne speech might have been all right for the 20th century, but we're far past that now. The speech talks of a debt-free new year. Well, I remember that just a little over a year ago it was election time, and the government wailed on about how it had defeated a $23 billion debt. Mind you, this took over 11 years, and this government was a little silent on the fact that it did so with $63 billion in energy revenues, that no other province had.

During that same time this government managed to savage seniors and health benefits, scare away or anger a lot of our health care personnel, increase tuitions at a higher rate than anywhere else in Canada, not even come close to other provinces in training First Nations people or youth in any numbers, and get a reputation of not doing much of anything for anybody except for the friends of the government. Somebody should put lyrics to a new song: where has all the money gone? By the way, where did that original $23 billion debt go? Alberta is the place that should have a Gomery inquiry.

I'm glad that the government has decided that it had better start thinking about things. It says that it will start thinking about red tape and do a review. Good to think about it. The proper thing. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business made it clear that Alberta's small business suffers from some of the worst red tape in Canada. We have some of the largest paper burdens, some of the most disorganized regulations, and some of the worst gobbledygook in dealing with government that anyone might hope not to have in trying to start up or grow a business in our Alberta. Where is the money for the red-tape review, and when will we see it? Will we see it this year?

This government says that it is thinking about doing something for our agricultural industry. About time. Agriculture is in its worst price crisis in a generation or more. This government is going to press for something "substantial" at the World Trade Organization. It doesn't know what, doesn't say that it holds much hope, and doesn't know how it's going to get there, but it's thinking about it. "Yeah, we'll give them more farm welfare, or whatever we call that program, and hope they keep quiet," I guess is what the government is saying. And "Keep on voting for the government."

This Conservative government says that it is thinking about the environment. It will hold an environmental youth conference to see what they think. Thinking about it. Sounds good. Good politics. It shows that the government is thinking about the environment: yeah, that's a good one; put that in the throne speech.

This Conservative government wants to show that it's on top of the high school dropout program. It will think about it. It will hold a symposium and ask everyone, even kids: "Why is that? We can't really figure that out." Yeah, our government is on top of that one.

This Conservative government is even going to ask Albertans what we should do about skills shortages. That's a tough one. I hear some government folks say that they thought the market was supposed to take care of that. "Yeah, well, we'll ask around and see if someone knows what's going on." They're thinking about it.

I see that the government is going to tighten its secrecy law. Whoops. That's supposed to be called the freedom of information laws. The government will even think – think – about a tuition policy while it pays for tuition increases again this year while still letting them rise again. Thinking hard, though, thinking about it. I actually am happy that the government has responded to the Alberta Liberals' and the Auditor General's, for that matter, moves and calls for bringing improvement to long-term care.

I am pleased to see that there will finally be some response to our calls on this side of the House for increases in social support for those who cannot work. The present levels of support should be an acute embarrassment for anyone in a position of power in our Alberta. Maybe it will take minds off the lawsuit settlement a bit.

I am glad to see a land-use framework in development. I guess that the government has been looking at the land-use policy put forward by the Leader of the Alberta Liberal Official Opposition last fall and has realized that it is time to do something. I don't think the Premier will be throwing that red book at anybody and calling it crap.

I am truly happy that there will be help for cancer research. I am very encouraged that the concepts behind the Alberta hip and knee replacement project have finally been accepted by this Conservative government and will be extended to breast cancer care, coronary artery bypass surgery, MRIs, and CT scans, and prostate cancer care. We on this side of the House will be watching that promise closely. Don't be too slow at speeding those things up, or you will hear about it quickly.

I'm actually sort of happy, kind of wondering about what might happen but about something that will go on and that we will see highway 63 happen with other projects. Many of these have been mismanaged so many times that the jury will be out. We're actually waiting to see what is going to be there and how it is done. Albertans and this side of the House will be watching closely.

I'm displeased that your labour and training policy is still not much, still unacceptable. This government seems to want to do everything to steer kids away from the trades while it talks about attracting them. There is no vocational high school in this city, in Edmonton, anymore. Educational funding policy discourages administrators from funding vocational courses in schools and gives them no incentive to invest in up-to-date equipment or to help to attract fully qualified teacher tradesmen. There is no work in developing true evaluations of proper credit for different types of learning to allow greater mobility and use of learned skills as one moves into other fields.

If we could have a seamless web from a trade ticket to a PhD in terms of credit, as I heard President Sam Shaw of NAIT state at a recent conference, I think many of our skills problems would begin to evaporate. It would be great if parents would get the wise message and pass it on to their kids that to get both a trade and a degree would provide the best life experience and skills they could hope for. It would also pay for the degree.

The fact that we have an incredibly high dropout rate speaks to the lack of relevancy in our schools for many of our youth. The fact that our apprenticeship advancement rate is abysmal, especially in the first two years, speaks to a system in disarray. Why is nothing being done about that? Why do just a few over 5,000 a year graduate with a journeyman's ticket when we have 45,000 or more in apprenticeships? What's going on? Why does this government allow the practice of multi-skilling, which is actually deskilling, to continue when the real concept should be pursuing greater skills, full journeymanship, and the most important concept of the trades that has been in place for centuries, namely mobility: the high level of skills that allow one to move from job to job in constantly changing workplaces yet still be able to do a job with skill and authority. Why do you continue to kill the building trades? This Conservative government's support of CLAC is scandalous. I've heard people term this CLAC organization the new state union for Alberta, as if we were living in some sort of a Stalinist state, a Stalinist government. Certainly, this government and its compliant labour board have made CLAC happen, but it's really just an easy union of convenience.

Keeping wages and benefits down this way does not attract people to Alberta, and that's bad for business. Why not work with the trades to train people, get apprentices trained through their halls, use the interprovincial mobility programs that are already in place, and maybe cut the interprovincial red seal exam cost from $460 to $60, a figure that was mentioned in the House just the other day? Make it easier. Work with the trades. They'll respect the government for it. Discourage them further, and they'll fight you like you wouldn't believe. Any tradesman who has lasted a few of the winter nights in the Oil Can in Fort McMurray won't be much afraid of taking on a Tory government.

If this government persists in trying to load up the oil sands with indentured labour, with temporary foreign labour, it is certainly looking for trouble. Tens of thousands of temporary, indentured, cheap labourers from communist countries sending their money home will not make people happy in Alberta. Let them move here, let immigrants move here with their families, and you will get to one of the actual things that the government's policy looked for, which is retention, to retain them here and to grow our Alberta.

The actual immigration program that should be concentrated on is the provincial nominee program, and the sector that should be worked on is small and medium-sized businesses, especially in the restaurant and retail sectors. It is the conventional oil patch which is providing 80 per cent of the present growth, not the oil sands. That conventional oil patch is sucking workers from other occupations and small businesses and small towns like some huge vacuum truck.

Assistance in this area for small businesses in both our cities and towns has not come, and the need is for unskilled and semiskilled labour. Some of the members on the government side have spoken to this in their replies to the Speech from the Throne. The need is for unskilled and semiskilled labour as much or more than it is for skilled tradesmen, technologists, and engineers. Why not try to increase mobility with more programs, as has been successful with the engineers in APEGGA in creating its Pacific Northwest mobility program? Again, that word "mobility" comes to the fore. Learn transferrable skills: that should be the key.

In closing, there are more questions asked by this throne speech than I have time to get to and more questions asked than were actually answered. There is no real, imaginative sense of the future, no real framework for a better tomorrow. There are a few good programs, some spending that was long overdue but no real financial framework, little sense of the long term, lots of questions. I think we should enter the 21st century.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, like the others before me. On the surface the speech is a promise in every paragraph and on every page. All Albertans put their trust into a government to live up to these promises, to be accountable, and to be transparent. These words are right out of the Speech from the Throne.

The first promise is to address labour shortage. Why do we have such a backlog in apprenticeships? Because they can't get to school because of the limited number of spaces. Perhaps this can be addressed by the Minister of Advanced Education. Or, as well, a solution lies within our own labour force: Alberta unions. Why not allow unions to indenture the apprentices on-site, offer training and knowledge right there and now? They have the facilities, and they have the money and the capability. Why not allow this opportunity? Apprentices want assurances that the jobs that they train for today will be there for them tomorrow. Security is what they want, Mr. Speaker, not temporary foreign workers.

A prosperous society was also raised during the speech. This is something everyone can agree on. The promise of a future investment was encouraging news, a billion dollars for the heritage fund, only to find out that the government is taking a billion dollars out. They're putting it in the front door, removing it through the back door. So the question is: where is the investment? Where is the accountability to Albertans?

A promise of better roads came as welcome news to those in the oil patch, those who make the drive to Fort McMurray on a weekly basis. This is about time. There have been far too many accidents, and too many deaths have occurred. The main question is: why did this take so long in coming when the provincial debt has been paid off?

The throne speech touched on the need to focus on rural development. The government has almost half of its members from rural Alberta. They should already have plans in place. Rural areas this past year have seen food banks, unaffordable housing, coal-bed methane development that has ruined the landscape and rendered the land useless for agricultural development and in some cases the water useless for drinking. The list goes on. Given these events, don't you think it's a bit late for a rural strategy?

Moving down the list of promises, the new catchphrase for alternative energy is coal. I don't know what plans are in place, and I suspect that the government doesn't either. It's one of these on-the-fly policies that we make up as we go along or hope that something comes out of the blue or that technology comes along. How do we get to this coal? Most of it does lie beneath the soil, rich, prime soil on agricultural land. It spreads right through to the Rocky Mountains.

What about the landscape? Reclamation and return to natural state: these are two different concepts. When the coal is extracted, how useful will this land be later? This is the thinking of a tired government that after 35 years is clearly out of ideas. It's evident when the Premier asks the opposition for our ideas. We have to ask: is he serious, and will he listen? This government is of the opinion that if it does come from opposition, it has no merit, but some of the members that sit on the other side have to remember that they did come from opposition.

Constituents from Edmonton-Decore want guarantees that crime, both rural and urban, will be tackled. It appears that this government is soft on crime. It's grown as fast as the economy. Perhaps it's time that judges are given some direction in handing down sentences on drinking and driving, hit-and-runs, assaults, drug offences. Minimum sentences could be in place to protect the public. Perhaps it would speed up our judicial system and the backlogs that it has already.

Seniors are also on the list of those that need protection from the high price of gas and electricity that was in the form of deregulation. This was promised and would lead to competition and give lower rates. So far we have not seen this competition that deregulation has promised. It has led to higher profits and higher rates, that all Albertans are paying. Where are the lower rates that we expect from the benefits here? When will Albertans see the difference that was promised?

This leads also to deregulation or privatization of our health care system, that we are talking about. The Speech from the Throne talked about choice, a word my constituents have told me that they do not support as yet. Back off is the word. Full public consultation well in advance, not a month in advance, is what was promised. Privatization by this government would be irresponsible and reckless.

I'm reminded from this House that most of the popular vote did not lie with this government but was cast for opposition, an opposition that does have a land-use policy, one that the government says that it's willing to ask for input from the public on. This is a government that already should have one. After 35 years they're still looking for answers because they don't have any. You would think they would have some of the answers and that they would be in place because of the ongoing work with Martha and Henry, the average Albertans, those that were interviewed during the Premier's very expensive commercial on his views about prosperous Alberta.

People travel from around the world to see the vast open rangeland, the majestic mountains, and the lakes, but for how much longer can we boast about the natural riches? The environment, the boreal forest in the north are threatened by the energy, the oil and gas, and the need for expansion. How much longer can we boast about this? Who is going to be the real winner after this boom is gone? The balance needs to be in place for long-term benefits for the next generation, for my children and the grandchildren of this province, for the next hundred years.

The promise that will benefit the next generation and one that was a welcome sight was the fight against cancer. It looks like a promise. If it's properly and carefully administered, it can be a leader world-wide and a leader in Canada. Something like this I can support. It's a disease that, I have said before, has touched us all in some way, shape, or form. We need to get to the root cause of this disease. We need to look at the basics of where it starts. The government had an opportunity when the smoking bylaw was before it and didn't do it. Are they certain that with this $500 million investment they are going to be putting their money where their mouth is?

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker. I do look forward to the changes that lie before us with the innovation and prosperity that the next hundred years can achieve and that opposition can deliver and will deliver when given an opportunity and a chance. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 19

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise this afternoon in committee and ask a number of questions regarding the supplementary supply estimates for Community Development. The minister is asking for a total of $30,200,000, and I have some questions that I would like to ask relative to that.

The first question is regarding the $200,000 that is referenced for arts development. What I would be curious to know and I'm sure many Albertans would be curious to know – apparently this money is going to be used by the department to act as a liaison for the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, Mr. Chairman. I'm wondering how long the department has known that they would be featured at this festival and if, in fact, we couldn't have included this in last year's budget or, if it did for some reason come up on relatively short notice, why this allocation wasn't included in the November supplementary supply estimates, that were passed in this House in November. I'd be curious to know exactly, specifically how the department will be spending that money in Washington, and I do question whether or not it's even appropriate that that money be in the Community Development budget as opposed to International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Now, moving on, there is $20 million being allocated for a one-time grant to assist with cost pressures for libraries. Mr. Chairman, you will know that the Official Opposition Liberals are big fans of libraries. In fact, last year one of our members, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, introduced a motion that would have seen every Albertan eligible to receive a free library card to provide free access for all Albertans to all libraries. Unfortunately, the government chose not to support that motion, and I really do believe that that's too bad because the value of libraries and, in fact, the value of reading in particular cannot be underestimated. I know that at least one gentleman, who's a superintendent with the Edmonton Police Service, told me that he can walk into any house and tell you within seconds whether or not the children in that household are going to be in trouble with the law as they grow. When I asked him how he would be able to make that determination, he said that he looks for books. I thought that was quite profound.

Certainly, I'm not about to bemoan the fact that libraries are receiving $20 million. I think that's probably a very good initiative. But, again, the question is to be asked because this is actually more money than was allocated for libraries in the original budget. So why was the amount that would be required by libraries underestimated by such a vast amount that in a supplementary estimate we actually have to give them more than they were originally being given? Another question that I would have is whether or not the $20 million is going to be distributed evenly amongst all libraries in the province on some sort of a pro rata basis, or are there some particular libraries that need special attention and are going to be receiving the majority of that funding? Those would be questions that I would be interested in hearing the answers to.

As well, Mr. Chairman, the minister has asked for $1 million to be granted to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts again, related to the Smithsonian Institution this time and the festival that's going on there, and I'd be curious to know exactly how that money is going to be utilized at the Smithsonian festival. What benefit will Albertans realize from being involved with a festival in Washington, and how will that benefit be measured? What sort of performance measurements are there going to be so that Albertans can see that, in fact, $1 million being spent in Washington is returning some value on their hard-earned tax dollars? I need not remind this House that we have an agent in Washington right now, and a lot of people question whether or not we're actually getting value for the money that's spent there, and here we have an example of another million dollars that's being spent in Washington. I think that Albertans have a right to know that there is, in fact, good value being returned to them for that money that's being spent there.

Lastly, in reference to the supplementary supply estimates for Community Development, Mr. Chairman, I note that there's $9 million that has been granted to the Heritage Park in Calgary. I'm not sure why Fort Edmonton Park in Edmonton isn't getting $9 million as well. I have a great fondness in my heart for Fort Edmonton Park. It's on my A-list of attractions to point visitors to the city of Edmonton immediately after I send them to the Alberta Legislature, of course, which is at the top of my list. I find the Fort Edmonton attraction to be one of world class, and I'd like to see them receive a little more money too. I'm not sure why that's not happened here.

Again the question is: what is so urgent that we have to apply $9 million in supplementary estimates to the Calgary Heritage Park as opposed to waiting just only a matter of days now? The minister told us this afternoon that March 22 is the magic day, at which time Albertans will have their first glimpse at the budget for the coming fiscal year. So we're only days away from that, and I'm curious to know what is so urgent that we have to get $9 million to Calgary's Heritage Park now as opposed to waiting for the budget, which is soon to arrive.

Last year Community Development made 5 and a half million dollars available – 5 and a half million dollars – to one single individual who had a private meeting with the Premier and within minutes walked out with a cheque for 5 and a half million dollars. Here we are now: $9 million, as I say, may be going to a worthy cause, but I'm not sure whether or not it was made available after a 15-minute meeting.

Those are the questions that I have, Mr. Chairman, relative to Community Development in specific. I know that I have some colleagues with questions on other departments, so I'm going to allow them to ask those questions, and I may well be back in a few minutes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask a few questions about the supplementary supply with respect to the Department of Justice. I note that the supplementary estimate of $3,720,000 is divided into two parts: $2,720,000 for additional operating costs resulting from staff salary settlements in 2005-06 and then $1 million for the Public Trustee to assess and bring forward legal actions on behalf of children in care. In terms of the first amount, the staff salary settlements, I'm not sure how this works and why suddenly this is not covered by the usual budgeting of the department. Why suddenly is there a necessity for additional funds to cover salary increases?

It appears, when you look down through the lines on the supplementary supply budget, that all departments in the Ministry of Justice received a pay increase. Is it all people working in the department, or is it just senior members who received an increase and it's not spread over the whole department? It's not clear, of course, from what we have here.

I was wondering if the minister could explain. There's $39,000 allocated to the minister's office, line 1.0.1, and $51,000 allocated to the deputy minister's office. Is that a raise in salary for the minister and the deputy minister? I mean, we'd all like to have those kinds of raises in salary. I don't know what it is.

It's interesting, when we look down through the list, that there is a supplementary increase for every department except for legal aid. It seems to me that legal aid is one of the most important parts of the justice system. It constantly needs more funding because it's the responsibility of the province to ensure that low-income people who cannot afford a lawyer have access to the justice system. It's a very important principle. I know, in talking to clients and to lawyers, that the legal aid system constantly needs attention and needs more support, so it looks bad that there are increases everywhere except for legal aid.

The million dollars for the office of the Public Trustee: that's to bring forward legal actions on behalf of children in care. It'd be interesting to know what these legal actions are and what kind of lawsuits are being brought forward. I'm totally in the dark about that, and it would be nice if the minister would explain that.

Those are the questions I have, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't have a lot of questions. One big one. Again, the way we do supplementary estimates and the amount of money that we have pouring through here: in November billions of dollars, and here we are back in March with more supplementary estimates. I could say that we could call these people across the way the tax-and-spend Conservatives because our budgets don't mean anything.

Sure, we're going to debate a budget in March, but probably as soon as we go through the estimates, all of the various department heads will be spending more money on all sorts of things, Mr. Chairman. I think we really have to get a handle on this. Supplementary estimates, I mean, to me were meant, to begin with, to deal with what we'd call emergencies. It could be a flood or a forest fire, things that we can't predict in our budget. That's what it was set up for. Now we pass the budget, and the budget doesn't mean anything. We can do whatever we want. We'll just come back with more supplementary estimates.

As I say, we went through huge expenses in November, and here we are, Mr. Chairman, coming back with expenses again. Now, I thought it used to be that Conservatives were supposed to be very concerned about the fiscal bottom line, and they were supposed to really care about the budget, the bottom line. Well, that doesn't happen with this Conservative government in this province of Alberta.

I'd guess that some of these things that come through supplementary estimates are probably desirable. You know, I mentioned one about the libraries. Well, of course that's desirable, but wasn't that desirable back in March of last year? Shouldn't that have been part of the budget? It seems to me that when we go through all of the departments' budgets, they should have laid out their plan for the year. That's hardly an emergency that just popped up.

I guess I'm questioning, Mr. Chairman, how we're using these supplementary estimates. Surely, with billions coming through – this is a huge company – there has to be a better way to do things. I say to the members of the front bench over there: if you ran your own business this way, you'd be out of business; you wouldn't have the tar sands pouring the money in.

Well, I think there are all sorts of things that we have to do. We could make this Legislature more effective by having committees deal with the budget on a budget-by-budget basis, like they do in some other areas. I won't hold my breath waiting for it, but that's probably a way we could do it. The major question I would have of this government, to the front bench, is: when are we going to use supplementary estimates the way they were meant to be used and the way they were back when I was a Member of the Legislative Assembly during the Peter Lougheed days? They were meant for emergencies. We weren't passing billions of dollars and things that clearly are not emergencies at this particular time.

Mr. Chairman, it really irks me that the budget that we passed and the estimates that we're going to go through next month, at some point in April – it's going to probably be a waste of time because we'll come back in November and we'll be dealing with supplementary estimates. I hope that it's not billions of dollars, like it was last time. Here we are again, hundreds of millions of dollars a month or so before.

I want to really stress that this government has to get a handle on how they do the public business. I'd stress again that the question is: when are we going to treat supplementary estimates not as a slush fund for each department to spend whatever they want and come back and report after? When are we going to do it the proper way, and supplementary estimates again will be what they're meant to be? They are for emergencies and unexpected things that you could not predict. Surely, you could predict all of the things that we're talking about here in each one of these departments.

As a Legislative Assembly we should be embarrassed by the way we handle the public money in this regard, and certainly that government should be embarrassed, a Conservative government that says that they understand the bottom line. Well, Mr. Chairman, again, they don't understand the bottom line. This has become a slush fund, and as I said, I think that we can do much better for the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to pick up on what the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had to say because it's interesting and instructive to have the odd conversation with the member and get a little sense of a history lesson of what this place used to be like. He touched on that just a moment ago, of course, when he talked about how supplementary estimates were used for real emergencies back in the Lougheed era.

I'm going to go off on a bit of a personal tangent here for a second, if I can. It sort of reminds me of back in the day when the Taylor family was what we used to refer to as a sitcom family: single income, two children, outrageous mortgage. We had to watch every penny that came through the door because my wife was staying home with the kids, who were very small at the time, and we were trying to get by on one media person's salary. Despite the popular misconception, you know, those of us in the media make absolutely boring middle-class salaries, most of us. So those were a bit lean times, but they were good times, too, because one of the things that it does is bring some discipline to bear on what you do.

In the Taylor family budget we used to record virtually everything. We basically said that if it's a spending item that amounts to less than $2, like a pack of gum or an ice cream cone – well, actually we exempted ice cream cones. It isn't exactly a slush fund; it's a little harder than slush. That's the one exemption to the rule. We said basically that if it's less than $2, if it's a pack of gum, we're not going to track that, but if it's $2.01, yeah, we will, and anything above that. You know, we still try to do that in the Taylor family budget.

I can see how the members opposite collectively got to the state that we're at today. I can see it just by benefit of having been here as an elected MLA for 15 months. I can see it because in some ways, and still speaking personally here, it's a very different way of being compensated and rebated for your expenses and that sort of thing than out there in the real world, where, you know, you don't get a mileage allowance for your car plus a credit card from the government so that the taxpayers can pay your gas as well.

The one thing that I've noticed over the last 15 months is the incredible river of money, at least compared to that old lifestyle of having a boring, middle-class, media guy's salary, that flows through our lives as MLAs now. In addition to our own salaries, one-third of which is tax free, we get temporary residence allowances, we get mileage allowances, and we get various other opportunities to have our expenses reimbursed. It's a constant money-out, money-in thing. After a while you just start going, "Well, you know, I'm kind of busy; I don't really want to go to all the trouble of tracking all this," and the temptation is there to get sloppy. From the way you didn't used to record anything that cost less than $2, well, now it's sort of: you know, I could probably get away with not recording anything less than $40 or $50. Well, we don't do that in the Taylor family, but I think they do that on the other side of the House. Only they add millions and tens of millions and hundreds of millions and billions of dollars to the figures that they don't do a proper job of tracking.

I think the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is absolutely spot-on when he says that there is virtually nothing in supplementary estimates, in interim supply estimates, which we will debate later in the days to come, I think tomorrow as a matter of fact, that couldn't be predicted, that couldn't have been budgeted for.

I guess my first question would be to the Minister of Finance. Does she really believe that she cannot do a better job and that her ministry officials cannot do a better job of preparing the budget sooner than they do, in advance of when they start, of tracking the money, perhaps tying the hands of some of the big spenders? Or let them spend big. It's not so much the issue of how much they spend; it's how disciplined they are at spending it.

If they say at the beginning of the fiscal year that they're going to spend $9 billion or $6 billion or $1 billion or whatever the department's budget estimate is, then the Minister of Finance can say: "All right. There's your budget. Come see me as we get close to the end of the fiscal year and tell me whether $9 billion is going to be enough or $6 billion or whatever." I don't want to just pick on Health, but $9 billion is the number that we talked about earlier, obviously. Tell me whether that's going to be enough for the next fiscal year or whether you're going to need some more, and then we'll get it into the budget. But don't come to me partway through, whether it's almost at the end of the fiscal year or whether it's, you know, in the fall, and say: "Oh, my gosh. I need another billion dollars. I'm a billion short this week."

I guess I would ask the Minister of Finance: when you're confronted with something like that, when one of the kids comes to you and says, "I'm a billion short, Mom; can you give me a little extra to tide me through until the next time I ask you for more?" why doesn't she just say no? Why does she feel that she can say yes and then come back to this Legislature and say: by the way, I already gave the kids that extra billion dollars, and now I need you to approve it. Talk about a case of closing the barn door after the horse has bolted. Only this is an issue of, you know, willingly and with premeditation letting the horse out first and then coming to the Legislature and saying: "I let the horse out. The horse ran away. I hope that's okay with you. I can't get the horse back, and now I need you to pay the bill for the search party." I just don't get it.

That's the sort of general area that I wanted to talk about. Specifically, I want to look at Education, and I would like an explanation from the Minister of Education.

4:50

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the noise level is starting to rise. Could you please cool off? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor.

Proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like some answers from the Minister of Education, please, about the supplementary estimate of $11 million "requested to provide increased operating grants from the General Revenue Fund to offset a reduction in the opted-out separate school boards' share of school property tax revenue." Now, I consulted with a couple of my colleagues who have experience at the school board level and indirect experience dealing with school boards. I'm well aware that separate school boards have been allowed for a number of years now, in fact have the constitutional right, to collect their own school property taxes, something that the public boards, the public public as opposed to separate public, do not have the right to do.

I'm a little bit confused here, and I hope the minister will clear this up for me. I'm a little bit confused by: "to offset a reduction in the opted-out separate school boards' share of school property tax revenue." That sounds to me like – well, I'm not sure what it sounds like. It almost sounds like, you know, the boards opted out, but they're now not opting out to the same extent that they were, so we need more money because they're not taking as much. I'm sure it isn't meant to read like that. I would like an explanation of two things: first of all, what this means, and secondly, after all the years that separate school boards have been collecting their own school property taxes, why this kind of snuck up and surprised the Education minister and he went: oh, Mom, I need an extra $11 million; I'm a little short this week. I'd like an explanation for that.

I'd also like to know if this deals with all separate school boards across the province or whether this is one specific school board. Is this perhaps the Edmonton Catholic school board, which I believe has a deficit of $10 million? Since that leaves over a million dollars, is the Education minister going to spend that last million dollars hooking Ellerslie elementary school up to a reliable water supply?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That concludes my remarks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm sort of pleased to rise to speak to the emergency spending that has been brought forward by the government in the 2005-2006 supplementary estimates. I have some questions to the minister regarding the Human Resources and Employment department. I look at the reason the supplementary estimate was requested.

This Supplementary Estimate is requested to provide $6,100,000 towards the estimated $11,850,000 cost to the department of the settlement of the Income Supports Class Action. The department will reallocate the remaining $5,750,000 from lapses in the Skills Investments program.

Seeing that it is in our emergency estimates, I hope that the minister, because this matter was before the courts and now is settled, can speak to it.

One question: is the government expecting to make any payments on this claim before the fiscal year-end, and if not, why does this have to be in supplementary supply? Where is the emergency nature of this particular item? Indeed, why do we have to even have it here if it is not an emergency? Why do we continue to have so-called emergency funding put forward from time to time to deal with things that are not really pressing? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview put out some very good arguments on why we should be looking at how our budgetary process is breaking down. He was commended on that by the Member for Calgary-Currie, and I commend him as well for some very cogent arguments in that area.

In terms of where the money came from, part of the monies came from the department for the payment of the income supports class action, some was from the department of seniors, and the remaining $5,750,000 comes from the skills investments program. Now, these lapses in the skills investments continue to concern me. The same thing happened last year for many millions of dollars. Was this budget too high again this year, or is the government still falling down in skills investments administration? Is it really trying to expand the skill sets for individual Albertans and, indeed, for the economy in general? You know, these questions I think are important. Why are these monies being spent? Why are they being expended? Why is it that skills investments again does not use its budget, does not have its program developed in order to ensure that we're looking to have a properly trained and qualified workforce in Alberta when this seems to be an issue which is at the forefront of government action so often?

Those are some of the questions I have, Mr. Chair. I thank you for the opportunity to speak before this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've had opportunity a couple of times now to address supplementary supply at various stages. There is one thing that I thought I should mention, and that is the question of the unfunded liability for the teachers' pension, which doesn't appear anywhere in the supplementary supply estimates. I'm going to have to assume that that means that it's not considered an emergency by this government although many things in this document wouldn't necessarily be considered an emergency. I think it could be successfully argued that this is, if not an emergency, certainly an emergent issue for Albertans. That unfunded liability today sits at approximately $6.9 billion, of which two-thirds is the direct responsibility of the Alberta government and, hence, the Alberta taxpayer, so about $4.6 billion that the Alberta taxpayer is on the hook for today. It doesn't show as a debt on the government's books. It shows as an unfunded liability. Nevertheless, it really is a debt, and I think it should be treated as such.

I think you could also argue that the remaining one-third, the share that the teachers currently hold, is also the government's and the taxpayers' responsibility because ultimately it is the taxpayers of the province that pay the teachers. So really you could say that Alberta taxpayers are today on the hook for $6.9 billion.

The reason why I'm concerned about this and the fact that it doesn't appear anywhere in the supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman, is that under the current agreement, that was structured in 1992 and that both government and teachers agreed to, this plan will be paid out over the next 54 years at a total cost to Alberta taxpayers of about $45 billion. Mr. Chairman, under the current economic reality that we have, with literally billions and billions of dollars of surplus, perhaps as much as $10 billion or even more this year alone, the fact that we could be sitting down and negotiating with teachers and addressing this $7 billion debt today as opposed to leaving it sit on the books and eventually costing as much as $45 billion I think makes it an emergent enough issue that we should be discussing it today.

So not only, Mr. Chairman, is it relevant what's in the supplementary estimates that we are debating today, but I think it's also relevant to discuss some of what's not in the supplementary estimates. Certainly, I do believe that the magnitude of that unfunded liability and the fact that it will ultimately cost Alberta taxpayers $45 billion if we don't deal with it sooner rather than later is an omission that is worthy of note. I'm wondering why it was omitted. Last week, when the Finance minister gave the third quarter update for the province, one of the little red flags that jumped out at me is the fact that the total liabilities for the province of Alberta have not fallen to the levels that were forecast in the budget that was passed in this House last May, in spite of the fact that we paid $1.2 billion down on the remaining debt.

This is a fallacy that the people of Alberta need to know as well. The province of Alberta is not exactly debt free. We do still carry a debt load. We have set aside the money to pay that debt load as those instruments become due, but the fact of the matter is that the financial penalties for paying them off early were more than the savings that would have been recognized. So we do still carry debt, and as I say, this past year we paid off $1.2 billion in that debt. Having said that, our total liabilities have not come down as much as were forecast. So we're in this period of unprecedented economic wealth, more money coming in from the sale of oil and natural gas, particularly land sales, more money coming in than anybody probably ever dreamt, yet our liabilities are climbing versus the budget.

I'm wondering if maybe that's why the government wasn't able to find some money in the supplementary supply to address the teachers' unfunded liability. I don't know if that's the reason or not, but again I think it bears questioning because of the fact that, you know, we can literally either pay now or pay later. We can pay now, deal with the unfunded liability at $7 billion, or we can pay it out over the period of the agreement at $45 billion. I'm not a rocket scientist, Mr. Chairman, but I think it's pretty clear that if we have the money now, we should be addressing this issue now as opposed to living with the agreement as it currently sits and costing Alberta taxpayers an awful lot of money that we probably don't really have to be costing them.

So I'll look forward to some response from the Finance minister, hopefully before we vote the supplementary supply, in relation to those questions that I have about the unfunded liability. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a few comments regarding questions posed by Edmonton-Glenora. I'd like to start at the outset by congratulating him for having very good eyesight. I note that the Ministry of Justice has a total of $3.7 million in this supplemental estimate of $1.354 billion, so for him to pick up that relatively modest amount of money is certainly an indication that he's paying attention to the numbers.

The $3.7 million falls into two categories. The majority of it, $2.72 million, is required to pay for costs of staff salary settlements. Those are legal obligations of this government, and I'll provide a bit more detail with respect to that. The second is a $1 million transfer from Children's Services to the Public Trustee. There has been a change in the responsibility with respect to lawsuits involving actions on behalf of children in care. That has been transferred to the Public Trustee from Children's Services, and there is a million dollars that goes along with that. Basically, it's one of those things where mid-course a policy decision with respect to responsibility has been made. There has been a change in the ministry responsible. As I understand it, the way we do our books in government requires this particular change as part of supplementary estimates.

The specifics with respect to cost of staff settlements are as follows. There's $1.5 million for increases to management pension plan contribution rates. There's $910,000 for salary settlements for bargaining unit, management, and opted out and excluded staff at 3.9 per cent, .9 per cent above the originally funded 3 per cent. In other words, there was a settlement in the course of the year for .9 per cent higher than we had budgeted. There was this obligation that must be met. There was $220,000 for August 2005 increases to salaries of nonlegal managers, once again a mid-term settlement increase. Lastly, there was $90,000 for salary provision increases to aboriginal organizations providing court worker service.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora rightly noted that as you go down the line items within the ministry, many of the lines do in fact have an increase, but those are in relation for the most part to these salary adjustments. People who receive those are located in the various departments. I can assure the hon. member that the minister is not one of those who is benefiting as a result of this. It may well be that my deputy minister is, but certainly this minister is not. They relate to people within the ministry or who are employed by the Ministry of Justice. They are entitled to salary increases. We are obligated to pay those, and that is why it is there.

The hon. member referenced legal aid. I certainly agree that legal aid is a valuable component of Alberta Justice. The reason that they are not included in this is that we fund legal aid pursuant to a five-year contract, a certain amount of money per year. That money is in the budget. There is no salary increase associated with legal aid because it is operated as a result of the Legal Aid Society. They enter into contracts with people who are employees. We are in the last year of that five-year contract, and we will be entering into a new contract with the Legal Aid Society and the Law Society of Alberta, who is the other party to the contract.

Those are the explanations I have with respect to the Ministry of Justice supplementary estimate numbers.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I would move that we rise and report the progress on Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 19.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, do you concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We made some good progress this afternoon, and as such I would move that we call it 5:30 and reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:10 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 7, 2006 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 06/03/07
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before we start, could we revert immediately to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously the story of the fun we have here at night has gotten out quite quickly. To that effect, my brother Eric is here from Vermilion. I know that you're probably asking: "Will it never quit? Will they quit sending Snelgroves to Edmonton?" It's a great privilege to ask my brother to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very hard-working and dedicated individuals that work in the Solicitor General and Public Security office. Bill Meade and Sandra Klashinsky are here. They travelled the province and did a large amount of work on Bill 16, which we'll be hearing in second reading tonight. I'd like to ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 14 Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce second reading of Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

Health and Wellness is proposing minor amendments to the Health Professions Act. The proposed changes will strengthen the act and respond to issues raised by individual colleges and by the federation of regulated health professions. The Health Professions Act was proclaimed in force in part in December of 1999. There will be 28 regulatory colleges established under the act and governed by regulation when it is fully implemented. There are currently 16 regulations implemented under the act. Twelve are under development and moving forward quickly.

As regulations are developed and professions gain experience operating under the act, required amendments are being identified. These key amendments include clarification respecting complaints, the application of continuing competence programs, adding flexibility for the minister when considering applications from professions to be governed under the act, enabling councils to regulate the title of specialist with respect to their profession, the addition of several protected titles, and an amendment to the practice statement for opticians.

The practice statement for opticians under the Health Professions Act would be amended to ensure that it accurately describes the services currently being provided by opticians, including sight testing, known as refractions, and eye health assessment. Including sight testing in their practice statement will enable the Alberta Opticians Association to ensure that its members adhere to specific standards.

Mr. Speaker, current practices will be maintained and will be performed under the oversight of the college. Performing sight testing and assessing eye health are not restricted activities. Opticians currently perform sight testing under the remote supervision of health professionals authorized to prescribe corrective lenses. The refracting information is provided to the health professional to prescribe the lenses, and that professional is usually in another location.

Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 108 opticians throughout the province providing sight testing for another health professional. Opticians also currently perform sight testing when dispensing corrective lenses. The regulatory body should be given authority to regulate the health services provided by its members. Providing eye testing and eye health assessments are not restricted activities, so without the proposed change the Alberta Opticians Association will not have the jurisdiction to regulate members that are performing these activities, and they will go unregulated.

An amendment is also proposed for schedule 7.1 of the Government Organization Act with respect to restricted activities. Mr. Speaker, while this schedule has an offence provision, there is no specific time limit stated for prosecution, which means that by default the period is six months as per the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. Amending the schedule by adding an appropriate time limit of two years will avoid this default mechanism.

The ministry's target for full implementation of the Health Professions Act is this year. The department is working with a legislative subcommittee established by the federation of regulated health professions and with individual health professions to address policy issues. As a result, further amendments will be brought forward following full implementation of the act.

I move second reading of Bill 14.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, in second reading.

There are a number of issues that I would like to bring up as part of second reading. Second reading is essentially a debate on the principle of a bill, and we're always asked whether we support it in second reading. We're answering, then, that we support something in principle or don't support it in principle. I have to admit up front, Mr. Speaker, that I am going to have to withhold my decision because I have some uneasiness about some of the proposals that are being made in this act, and on the other hand I'm very supportive of some of the other sections.

Just a few notations that I'd like to make. The first is under the Government Organization Act, schedule 7.1, that the sponsoring member mentioned. I do note that this is actually increasing the timeline for reporting an offence from six months, which is the default position, to two years. I can also say that a number of people have contacted me – not a large number – with a concern about that two-year cut-off, that two years is often not enough time to be able to come to a realization or to reach the point where you have enough information or decide you want to go forward.

The other side of that, of course, is: how long are you supposed to have a defender of something hang on, waiting to see whether the shoe is going to drop, whether someone is going to try and bring forward a suit against them or some sort of a criminal charge? There has to be some point at which they know that that's not going to proceed. So I just wanted to mention it, that there was some concern raised about that two years. I certainly do not support that in some other cases, particularly around reporting of sexual assaults, for example, but I think that in this particular instance it's probably merited.

The next section, and the one that has been one of the most controversial for me, is the section in the bill which is amending section 25 of the originating act. Essentially what that's doing is changing the way the minister can choose which organization gets to be recognized as representing that particular profession. It used to be that the minister had to abide by the organization that represented the majority of persons that were carrying on that profession in Alberta. That section is being struck down, and now with different wording it's basically saying, you know, that if the minister is satisfied that this is the reasonable group to be chosen, so be it.

There are two sides to this. I've had a number of groups approach me. I'm sure that they're the same groups that have approached the minister and may well have approached the sponsoring member of the bill, all with their arguments about why they should be the one. In balance, I think this is probably an appropriate mechanism for the minister to have at their disposal to deal with these kinds of disputes.

Let me expand for those in the Assembly that may not have a close association with this. You may have two different organizations that are basically representing people that perform more or less the same function, and each organization is saying: "I'm the one. I'm the one, and the other group is not legitimate or should not be representing." I think politicians are always very reluctant to step in the middle of somebody else's internal dispute and pick because it's just not appropriate. We're not the experts in that area. We're not the ones to say: you're the ones.

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Ms Blakeman: Well, if the backbencher wants to get in the middle of this and be choosing which profession is more merited, fine. I'm not going to get into that, and I don't think we should be in those kinds of disputes. I think what's been worked out here is probably the most reasonable way to deal with things.

There's a choice, it seems, being made specific to the massage therapists and the group that has a higher qualification or a higher standard. I think they require – now, here we go. There are a number of organizations: the Alberta Registered Massage Therapists Society, the Massage Therapist Association of Alberta, the Alberta Remedial Massage Therapist Association. They are all getting regulated somehow.

The one that's getting left out is the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners. They do not meet the standard that's been set by others, and admittedly this is a very, very high standard. There are 2,200 hours of training required by some of these other massage therapist organizations, and that's very high. I mean, if you look throughout the States and the other provinces, you're dealing more in the range of 250 hours, 500 hours, 800 hours of training required. Twenty-two hundred hours is the standard here, so very very high. This one group, the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners, is going to get left out because they don't come anywhere near that, but they also perform services that are more related to stress reduction and relaxation massage: maybe that's a good way to put it.

I'm wondering why the minister doesn't consider in this case recognizing a lower level, a less trained level that doesn't presume to have higher aspirations. They will admit that they're trained at a lesser level, but they still want to be regulated and included. The repercussions from this are that if they are not included in this process, they lose the ability to take referrals from physicians, from other health professionals. I think that in some cases they'll lose their ability to literally charge for their services as a professional. So it has a large impact on them.

I would have said that if you regulated a sort of secondary level or a novice level, you're more likely to have those people continue on with their training and try to hit the higher level, as an inspiration to move up and get paid more per hour and all of those things. If we just say that we're not going to regulate them at all, that you're not a profession and we don't recognize you, then those people just leave completely and go onto something entirely different, having basically wasted their hours of training. So I think there's an argument here, that in this particular case a secondary level or different categories could be worked out to be accepted, or the minister could be asking one of the other groups to recognize the group with lesser time, to accept them as a different category. I will admit that this has caused me more meeting times than any other section that was in this proposed bill.

Another section that came out for me is around the complaints. There's an adjustment that's being made here, that essentially someone who makes a complaint to a complaint director regarding a regulated member of a profession has to do so in writing, and they have to sign it. That makes sense to most of us. We're familiar with it from a court of law. You know, if you're going to accuse somebody, then you've got to be willing to stand up in public and put your name to it. Of course, for everybody's reliability and documentation, it should be in a written form, perfectly acceptable.

That clarification is fine, but I find it very odd that it's juxtaposed against the next section, in which the ability to take a complaint orally is now being added. On the one hand, somebody complaining about a regulated member has to do it in writing and sign it. Then in the very next section the complaints director, who has reasonable grounds to believe that the conduct is unprofessional, can receive a referral or be given notice and can be given this information orally and will commence the whole process. I'm finding that very strange, and I'm looking for an explanation of it because I would say that if it's serious enough to start an investigation, as is clearly anticipated by this section, then it should be done in the same manner as all the other ones are, that is in writing and signed so that there's a clear person making a complaint.

Now, you may not want to publicize the complainant's name, but that documentation still needs to be there. It can't be done sort of in an anonymous way and orally. I think it just leaves far too much open for misinterpretation. It doesn't give the person who's been accused much opportunity to come back and say: "How did they write this? Where can I read this and see exactly what they said?" It was an oral statement. I have concerns around that.

There are a couple of sections that the sponsoring member mentioned where the scope of practice is either that they're registering a new scope or they're expanding the scope. We've got the provisional dental assistant, a provisional optician, and then the widening of the scope of the opticians to allow refractions, which are essentially eye tests. We did consult a fairly wide range of stakeholders as we looked at this bill: the Alberta Association of Optometrists, the Alberta College of Pharmacists, the Alberta Opticians Association, the Alberta Podiatry Association, Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners, College of Alberta Dental Assistants, and – I’m sorry; I didn’t write this one down, and I may not get the title exactly right – the acupuncturists. We’ve talked to all of them, and most of them are okay. I’m bringing up the points where they had some concerns. We were not able to find out what the optometrists didn’t like about the expanded scope. They didn’t respond to us.

The other issue I have and part of what’s causing me some hesitation here is that this bill is specifically mentioned in the Health Policy Framework that was recently released by the minister, known more colloquially as the third way. There is a great deal of uncertainty about this, and as I looked through the document, the framework that was actually handed out, it sounds innocuous enough. But there’s a lack of detail and certainty in a number of areas which starts to make me worry that there’s something in this bill that I’m not recognizing that could have a huge impact on the health professions that are regulated under this act. I don’t want to look back two years from now and go: oh, my goodness; that was the tiny golden key that opened the door that led to private health care that nobody wants. I’m having to be more cautious than I would have been debating this bill a couple of months ago because Bill 14 is specifically mentioned in a couple of places.

When I look at the section 2 in the Health Policy Framework, Promoting Flexibility in Scope of Practice of Health Professionals, I get some interesting phrases and descriptions happening. Under the Policy Intent section, which appears on page 10 of the document, they’re talking about the issue of overlapping roles, responsibilities, and scopes of practice, and that the government wants to look at taking away some of the restrictions that prevent “pharmacists, nurses and other professionals from making clinical care and treatment decisions appropriate to their training and knowledge.” As far as I can tell, none of that’s actually being discussed in Bill 14, but I’m not sure because we don’t get a lot of detail here.

There’s an attempt to focus on collaborative and team approaches. These are a part of the initiatives that have been very successful, called the primary care initiatives, where you’re bringing in a number of health professionals that work in one location and will have a team approach to working with patients. There’s an acknowledgement here that “physicians would continue to play a key role, but would be able to spend more time on complex cases where their knowledge and skills are essential.” Then it talks about some of these other professionals assuming “a greater role in the delivery of primary, preventive and chronic care.”

Now, this is something that the Liberal opposition has been very keen on, that team approach, but again we get no details about exactly how the minister anticipates this happening. What scope? How are the scopes going to be changed? The only scopes of practice we’re talking about in this bill are the opticians to do eye exams and adding the category of clinical pharmacist, also the new ones of provisional dental assistant and provisional optician. There’s something being anticipated here. There’s clearly some sort of list of jobs or scope of practice or credentials or expectations, but they’re not being spelled out, so very hard to react to.

Again, under the Direction and Implementation section here it talks about Alberta’s new legislation governing the health professions provides greater flexibility in terms of the scope of practice of the various professions as a means of promoting a greater innovation.” Which legislation is being talked about here? Is this some yet untabled legislation, or is it referring back again to Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act?

It’s talking about working with health professionals, taking full advantage of the opportunities that this legislation has made possible. There’s an anticipation that something’s happening here. It’s clearly talked about in the document. I don’t see it reflected in here. If it’s not in here, where is it? If it is in here, where is it? The other place that this shows up is in the response from the minister to the Liberal health policies. It appears on page 3 of that summary, position 10. The Liberal policy is:

Reshape the way we manage our health care workforce. This includes re-examining the roles of all of our medical professionals, evaluating alternative systems of payment for doctors, and gathering better data to plan for future needs.

We get the minister responding to this, saying: we’re currently doing this; the government is preparing provincial comprehensive health workforce planning. They have worked with a number of different areas. Then, “We are working to bring all health professionals together under the Health Professions Act (Bill 14 – Spring Session 2006).” Again, it’s referred to without any level of detail that allows us to actually understand what the government is intending. We have the government saying: oh, please come and consult with us; give us your ideas. But it’s like trying to talk to a cloud. There’s no substance to it. There’s no list of specificity. There are no details that we can react to. It’s just sort of this amorphous thing. I have concerns that things are not as they appear.

The one other thing that was of note to me in the member’s opening remarks was that he stated that 12 professions are under development to be added to the list. I think it’s a total of 28 that will be the final list. Right now there are 16 of them under there; 12 are under development. My question is: exactly which ones will be ready for April 1? That’s one of the drop-dead deadlines for some of the professions. They have to be in place by then, or they cannot continue to charge for their services. I would like to know how we’re doing. I’ve been in contact with the minister a couple of times over unexplained, inexplicable delays. For some professions they’ve been working away, and all of a sudden the ministry stops talking to them for four or five or six months. They don’t understand why. They are continuing to try and move forward, and then there seems to be this big sort of log-jam or blockage. I’m concerned that there are some groups that need to be through by the 1st of April that won’t be. So I’m looking for that.

Thanks very much for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pleasure to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 14 in second reading. My first impression of this bill is that, certainly, it seems to be mostly just housekeeping, but there are certain issues in regard to changing titles of professionals that I think deserve our more careful attention and, indeed, some constructive criticism as well.

When speaking with a number of the professionals that are directly affected by this Bill 14, specifically opticians and podiatrists, there is some mixed reaction to some of the specific language that is being employed in Bill 14. I would just like to point out some of our reservations in a general sense, and perhaps when we debate this bill further with my colleagues in the committee, in third reading we can look specifically at where some small changes could take place.

Specifically, if you have the bill in front of you, on the first page, section (2), the Government Organization Act is being amended to include a statute of limitations for prosecution for the illegal performance of a restricted activity, like setting bones and invasive surgical treatments and things like that. You know, I find it a little bit interesting that there is a statute of limitations here of two years.

We were looking at other provinces around the country, and they do in fact tackle this in different ways. Some legislation in different provinces, such as the Manitoba Limitation of Actions Act or the Saskatchewan Limitation Act, both fine NDP provinces, might I add, have the limitation period beginning once the claimant first becomes aware of the offence. This gives us some latitude for people to be able to seek justice if there are cases of fraud or impropriety or things like that. I know everyone has their magic markers out. They can just tab that section, and we'll come back to it perhaps later.

On the third page, section (4), again we're amending the Health Professions Act. You want to repeal the provision that the organization seeking to be a regulated profession must represent "the majority of persons carrying on that profession in Alberta." I think I need further clarification on that section because my initial reading of that is perhaps that in fact it seems to open the door for more ministerial discretion as to who's going to be considered as the profession. Indeed, you know, if we have private health service providers entering the market here with our brave new world that some people are suggesting – God help us. Then we might have an expansion of the recognition of a regulated profession, which I would find problematic, certainly.

As I had mentioned previously this afternoon in my reaction to the throne speech, when you privatize medical services, you open the door to all manner of quackery and flim-flammery. It's very difficult to regulate these things anyway, but when people are in desperate circumstances and they're looking for some relief and the door is open for privatization, then you just create a whole new set of regulatory problems, some of which, I would suggest, Bill 14 has built into it.

Moving down to page 4, section 10, this amendment proposes to give councils and colleges greater freedom to confer the title of specialist through bylaw rather than going through the amendments to this act. I find this to be definitely a problem because you're raising the concern of this proliferation of new specialities, let's say, without proper consideration. Again, in the sort of retail market of private health care you create these whole new specialities, that you can perhaps charge extra money or what have you. This is a problem because, of course, we're meant to be regulating these things for the best practices and benefits of the public, so if we're not using the term "specialist" in a judicious manner, then I would suggest that we're courting trouble.

Down on page 5, section 11: this amendment seems to want to give colleges and councils the power to enact bylaws respecting the disclosure of information about their members and some groups releasing information about their members. This, I would suggest, provides some problems in regard to privacy, so I would just like to highlight that.

The nut of the issue, I suppose, in regard to Bill 14 is to make these changes on an administrative level, but as I suggest here with these few examples – I'll actually leave some of the others to the other members to point out because, in fact, we do have these problems with it.

Again, I would have to reserve our support of Bill 14 as it stands, but it's young in the session, and we can certainly be convinced of its merits.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and comment on Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. In general the principle of amalgamating the professions under one act makes a lot of sense to me. In the public interest it's clear that we want to have a regime that governs all professions in a similar way, that provides consistency in terms of the practice of those professions and consistency in applying problems with those professions, whether they arise out of complaints or out of recognized problems within the profession itself. In that context the principle of accountability, then, is very much present in the professions act, and it's progress, indeed, to include under a consistent framework all the professions that we believe are serving people and helping them to achieve greater levels of health and healing. So in general I support this.

It obviously identifies some other key areas which have to do with scope of practice, and that needs to be well discussed and debated. I think we on this side have recognized that part of making the health system more efficient is to examine scope of practice and look at the ways in which some practices could be delegated to other professions. Indeed, some things that physicians are doing could be delegated to other practitioners and reduce the load on medical practice. The other issue has to do with standards, a clear ability to measure a standard and to ensure that that minimum standard is always achieved and that an ongoing education program is available for those practitioners to reach that level of competence.

If we are again in this bill trying to acknowledge the primacy of the public interest and the safe provision of services, I would be interested to know what level of consultation these amendments had. It's not clear to me whether or not this had input from all professions commenting on each other's practice as well as the consultation within a particular discipline itself. I think it would be very useful, if it hasn't been done, because clearly the public interest is served when we have measures of effectiveness in that particular profession and we have measures of maintenance of competence.

So given those provisos and those general principles I just have a couple of questions about a couple of sections. There was a repeal in section 4: requiring a majority support. This has been raised by a member opposite in the third party.

Ms Blakeman: And by me.

Dr. Swann: And by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre.

Why is that? Under what conditions does the minister seek other decision-making advice through the advisory board? That's not clear under section 5.

Again I refer to the principle of continuing competence. That was amended. It's not clear to me why you would amend the requirement for assessment of competence of all members of a particular discipline. This is one criteria for a profession. It is the issue that most of the public are concerned with, that there be a maintenance of competence and an ability to assess that in every case.

The extension of the complaint process to two years is progress. I mean, obviously, half a year is insufficient. I don't know that the two years is sufficient, but it's certainly progress in the principle of justice and fairness.

I was very pleased to see podiatry moved under the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta. Clearly, podiatry is doing surgical procedures. They should be adjudicated. They should be monitored. They should be evaluated under the College of Physicians and Surgeons, where a lot of the enforcement of standards is legitimately placed, in my view, where they have the highest level of training and competence.

Under sections 7 and 8 there appears to be a contradiction. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have to go to 7 and 8 to just refresh my memory. Yes, it has to do with the complaint process. Section 7 says that the complaint must be in writing, and section 8 says that it could be verbal. So it's not clear to me why that would be two separate sections. There may well be a good explanation for it, but it's not clear to me.

I guess the only other recommendation that I see missing here in terms of accountability is the need for every profession to have a separation between their licensing body and their professional interest body. In a number of cases that does not exist, and it would be one thing that I would think I might make an amendment to in the upcoming section on the nature of accountability.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments if there are any.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to second reading of Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act. The main object of this bill is that Alberta Health and Wellness is currently working with the health professionals to develop specific regulations and bring them under the jurisdiction of the Health Professions Act: the changes to the application procedure to become a regulated profession, clarification of complaint procedures, changes to the requirements for continuing competence programs, adding new protected titles for some professions, and amending the scope of practice for opticians.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Health Professions Act, which was passed in 1999, will bring all self-regulated health professions under a single act to ensure that rules that govern professions are consistent. It will oversee 28 regulated colleges, but only 16 are currently under the act. The government has requested that currently unregulated health professions submit applications for regulation. These applications must propose a structure under which the profession could be reregulated.

Each of the 28 professions have been drafting specific regulations under the act. The drafting is taking . . . Mr. Speaker, can you ask everybody to please be silent?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon members, the noise level is increasing. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you. The drafting is taking years, with numerous consultations with the members of other professions. Each regulation will list the restricted activities that a profession's members are trained to do.

There are two controversial sections in this act that are explored further in the sectional analysis. The first one is that the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners opposes the amendment that removed the requirement that an applicant wanting to become a regulated profession must represent a majority of people carrying on that profession. The second one is that the Alberta Association of Optometrists objects to the amendment that includes refractions under the scope of the practice of opticians.

Mr. Speaker, many of the changes are based on recommendations by health professions or are housekeeping changes required to ensure that the language used in drafting regulations for each regulated college is consistent with the Health Professions Act. It may be a necessity to voice concern or caution about the future implications of some of these changes, especially since this bill was identified as part of the government's third-way reforms.

Other potential implications of this amendment for the massage therapy profession include an immediate spike in fees charged by regulated massage therapists, based on increased demand. Many massage therapists with less training may migrate away from rural areas, reducing access for rural Albertans. Massage therapists may lose income since they would no longer be able to accept referrals from physicians or chiropractors. Does this minister have any plans to regulate massage therapists with varied levels of training?

For the last 22 years the province has required that an application for regulation by health professions "must be made by an organization that represents the majority of persons carrying on that profession." How does the minister justify such a significant policy change? Is the minister satisfied that all relevant organizations and stakeholders were consulted in the development of these changes? That's a big question. How did the minister go about identifying all potential stakeholders? It appears that the decision to regulate is being made in a closed environment. Where is the transparency in this process? How will the minister prevent the views of a minority of professionals being imposed on a majority?

These amendments may cause conflict among professional organizations since there may be strong divergent views on the most desirable form of regulation. What other requirements will the minister be using to determine whether to send an application to the Health Professions Advisory Board? What sort of data or statistical information identifying the number of members belonging to an organization are applicants required to provide?

Mr. Speaker, the long-term implications of this amendment, of these changes need to be carefully examined to ensure that they don't have a negative impact on both consumers and health professionals in the future. There is some uncertainty that the entire range of stakeholders was consulted in the development of revisions to the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act. It is essential that each interested group receive the opportunity to provide input into changes being made that may impact their profession. The Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners was not consulted about changes that have significant impact on their members.

I want to hear more argument and more details about this amendment act before I make up my mind to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, now I would like to adjourn second reading debate on Bill 14. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 16 Peace Officer Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand this evening to move second reading of Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act.

As I stated during the introduction of this legislation, this act will ensure better communication, co-operation, and collaboration between employers of peace officers and police services across the province, which will result in a strengthening of law enforcement services. It will also clarify the role, responsibility, and accountability of peace officers and strengthen provincial standards such as training, use of force, and qualifications.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed legislation is the result of Albertans contributing their ideas to improve law enforcement. It has also been developed following a review of best practices on a national and international scale. Bill 16 further enhances the important work peace officers do across Alberta and accurately reflects the wide range of roles they carry out.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments provide for increased accountability to ensure that both employers and peace officers are complying with the standards. Under this draft legislation the director of law enforcement within Solicitor General and Public Security would receive additional authority to complete inspections and investigations to make sure the rules are being followed.

The proposed act also establishes a process to manage complaints made against a peace officer. Employers will continue to deal with complaints against the peace officers they hire, but, Mr. Speaker, the director of law enforcement would have the power to review, oversee, or investigate a situation that may be more serious in nature or if the complainant isn't pleased with the outcome of a review at the local level. The director would also have the authority to appoint a third party, such as a police service, to investigate the concern.

These measures will strengthen the integrity of the program and reassure the public that peace officers are doing their job and following the letter of the law. If the peace officer is found not to be abiding by the rules, the current provision allows for the employer's authorization or the peace officer's appointment to be suspended or cancelled. Bill 16 expands these provisions so that it's very clear where a suspension or cancellation of an appointment would be appropriate.

Proposed amendments would also allow for terms and conditions to be imposed on the employer's authorization or a peace officer's designation to ensure that they are complying with the standards. This will help employers and peace officers alike to clearly understand what is expected of them within the program and the ramifications for not following the legislation.

The proposed Peace Officer Act will ensure a more effective delivery of law enforcement services that will help make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and respond in second reading to Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act. Of course, policing in Canada involves two levels of government. The Constitution Act of 1867 confers authority on the federal government to legislate on matters of criminal law and to create the country's national police service, the RCMP. Provincial Legislatures are empowered by the same act to make laws in relation to the administration of justice, and policing, of course, is understood to be a part of the criminal justice responsibility of provinces, so provinces can create a police force through legislation or require municipalities to provide adequate policing or negotiate with the federal government for the RCMP to provide policing.

Well, Bill 16 is rather unique, I think, in that it recognizes and authorizes something new, something kind of in-between; namely, special constables or, as they're now going to be called, peace officers. This bill reflects a growing trend in policing today, which is increasingly multidimensional and pluralistic given the tremendous demands that the public wants in terms of peace and security and safety. Since 9/11 there's so much demand for security, so that has meant a proliferation of all kinds of different types of policing, from the traditional role of public police to security guards protecting private property. Bill 16 is legislation which provides a framework for the authorization of special constables as peace officers, an identification that's somewhere between a public police officer and a private security guard.

But this in-between character of peace officers creates a set of problems, and there is the potential for a great deal of public confusion about what we are talking about. At a symbolic level the police and peace officers and private security guards all wear uniforms and in many cases will carry weapons. For example, a mall security guard engages in surveillance, makes arrests, conducts searches, all traditional functions of the public police, but they are private agents. In some places in Canada municipal police are hired by private business to restrict access, check IDs, remove troublemakers from private property, and they are public agents. So, in fact, there's a great deal of confusion about what is public and what is private. Historically the public police were authorized to protect public places, and private spaces were the responsibility of their owners, who could hire guards.

The problem is that now we have, as one commentator puts it, mass private property. In other words, we have huge shopping centres, and we have hospitals. We have many privately owned spaces to which the public is invited, so questions arise about who should police such spaces. Is that the role of the public police, or is it the role of special constables or peace officers or private guards? There's an obvious overlapping of the responsibility of the public police and special constables and private guards, so there's a great need for Legislatures to bring some clarity to this confusing situation.

The use of private security and special constables is of course increasing across Canada while at the same time the number of police personnel is decreasing. I think this is important to point out. Recent statistics provided by the Centre for Justice Statistics indicate that there are 56,000 police in Canada and 82,000 private security guards and special constables. Given this trend, it would not be surprising that there are different opinions, even conflicts caused by this trend. Of course, at the two extremes, the investigation of serious crimes by police on the one hand and private security guards just protecting property on behalf of the owners on the other hand, there is not much conflict, but in between there are so many functions of special constables and peace officers that carry out traditional police work such as traffic safety. So there's a potential for conflict and confusion. Roles overlap, and distinctions are blurred.

Mr. Speaker, when one looks at the variety of work performed by special constables in this province, it is quite impressive. There are about 3,000 special constables in Alberta, and they do a tremendous job. I made a comment that was quoted in the paper as being critical of the work of special constables, and I wasn't at all. I was only referring to the special project concerning highway 63.

Special constables have done a really good job and in a variety of ways. There is a tremendous mix of the kind of roles that they perform, from compliance officers who do fraud investigations for many different departments. There are special constables working in hospitals. There are liquor and gaming officers who inspect bars and casinos. There are conservation officers, provincial protection officers who provide courtroom security, campus security, Calgary transit security, and I guess Edmonton is considering the same kind of transit security as Calgary. There is municipal bylaw enforcement. All of these special constables, now peace officers, carry out the duty of enforcing provincial statutes, not the Criminal Code, although here is again a fuzzy area in terms of distinctions which needs to be dealt with.

The feedback from stakeholders, including the public police service, seems to be mixed about this new trend to include so many special constables and peace officers. The trend of an increase in private security and a decrease in traditional policing would of course be of concern for police associations. Some would argue that special constables can free police from routine and mundane tasks, enabling the police to focus on the more complex functions of dealing with serious crimes. I've heard that. In fact, I have a brother-in-law who's a member of the police force in Ottawa, and he reminds me that that's the case, that many peace officers are able to take a lot of the routine tasks from police officers, and that's a plus for them.

But many are concerned that special constables don't have the same level of accountability and training as the police, and this may cause problems. So my question concerning this bill and the preparation for this bill is: has there been adequate consultation with the police departments, including the RCMP? For example, will the RCMP be involved in the evaluation of the pilot project on highway 63? I'm wondering about that kind of dialogue and debate, whether that has taken place.

There are many questions about this bill, and in second reading I'm not going to look at specifics. I want to concentrate, as I have been, on general issues, not the particular wording of the bill. One of the most important issues is accountability or governance or oversight of peace officers, and there are two different aspects here. There's accountability in the field and accountability in terms of appointment and standards of training and the complaint process. The bill doesn't deal with the first point, accountability in the field, but surely that question is huge. I mean, who is in charge?

I talked with a special constable who does traffic work in the province, and he told me that on two occasions in the last year he was the first to arrive on a murder scene, before an RCMP officer arrived. Now, what is his role in that situation? How does he relate in terms of accountability to the police officer? What are his powers of arrest? If a special constable stops a car on highway 63 and discovers that there are drugs in the car, what can he do other than call in an RCMP officer who may be hundreds of kilometres away? Will this just mean, in effect, a lot more work for the RCMP in trying to keep track of these special constables since the special constables or peace officers are dependent on the RCMP to do their work? That is the issue of accountability in the field, and I think it's a serious question that has to be addressed.

The bill deals mainly with the lines of accountability between the peace officer and the public, on the one hand, and the police officer and the Solicitor General's department. There are lines of accountability for police officers in terms of their relationship to police commissions and the chief of police and the Solicitor General. We dealt with that when we were discussing the Police Act, when it was being amended, and we had all kinds of discussion about civilian oversight of the police. We expressed a lot of our dissatisfaction that we didn't have an adequate civilian oversight process in this province, and much of that discussion is relevant here. It appears from this bill that the only line of accountability is between a peace officer and the director, defined as "the Director of Law Enforcement appointed under the Police Act."

Well, there are a lot of unanswered questions about this. I mean, what is the relationship between the authorized employers and the peace officers? Is this line of accountability between just the peace officer and the director of law enforcement adequate? What kind of control over peace officers do municipalities have? There doesn't seem to be the equivalent of a police commission for peace officers.

I think there are lots of questions about that. In fact, I guess it comes down to the whole issue. I mean, many people argue that special constables and private security officers are much less accountable for their actions than the police because legislation does not establish independent oversight mechanisms. But they do much the same work as the police, so the argument is that there should be a greater integration of governance and accountability, and perhaps the same mechanisms, the same kinds of governance and accountability, should be present, whether you're talking about the police or whether we're talking about peace officers. I see a lot of potential for difficulty and conflict in the future because we haven't figured out a more integrative model.

Well, one of the most controversial aspects of the work of special constables is traffic safety work. I have received phone calls and e-mails about not just the issue of public safety but also the personal safety of special constables. A special constable who had called me told me that in stopping a vehicle, he does not know what he will encounter, whether it's a soccer mom or a drug dealer. Police admit that stopping vehicles is one of the most dangerous things that they do, so we have to really go slow here and consider what we're doing when we put young men and women with less training and less experience out there on dangerous highways like highway 63.

In fact, this is the key issue, I think, to debate with this bill: the issue of training. Unfortunately, issues like training are left to the regulations. Recently I had an introduction to some aspects of training by the RCMP when they discussed with me their model – it's called IMIM – incident management intervention model, where they take recruits through the whole process, beginning with verbal intervention, through the use of weapons, depending on the situation. It was very instructive to me to see how elaborate and how complex that training is. I would hope that the same kind of thorough training would be available for peace officers, especially because they need to have tremendous ability to converse and even to use nonviolent tactics to deal with people in the first stage, before they get into the use, of course, of weapons.

I think there's a difficulty here because the government MLA review of the special constable program, which released its recommendations on December 7, 2005, I thought made a good attempt to organize the whole area of special constables, peace officers into different categories and levels of authority and also levels of training in each of the categories, but unfortunately that is not in the legislation. That's left to the regulations, so the clarity we need on this very important issue of training and the status of peace officers is not in this bill.

Bill 16 is an overall framework, so this is similar, I suppose, to what may be coming with the third way, which is being put forward as an overall framework, and everything that's really important is left for regulations. I think minimum standards for training, what actions special constables can and cannot perform, accountability issues in the field are all left for the regulations, so it's very difficult for us to even talk about this topic when all we have before us is a framework, and the substantive issues are left for others to decide. I don't find that very adequate.

Well, Mr. Speaker, these are the issues I wanted to raise, and I look forward to hearing other speakers on this very important topic. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again in debate on Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act. The object of this bill is to bring all peace officers, previously known as special constables, under one piece of legislation that will clarify their roles and their responsibilities, increase accountability, and strengthen provincial standards for training, use of force, and qualifications.

The immediate result of this bill will be to increase the role of peace officers in the province of Alberta. It is the stated goal of the Solicitor General to find ways to deliver strategic and seamless law enforcement services across the province. It appears that the primary way to enhance delivery of law enforcement across the province will be through the utilization of peace officers to complement existing police services in Alberta. Bill 16 is the framework that the Solicitor General will use to deliver the enhanced role of peace officers.

Mr. Speaker, some of the key changes to the old special constable programs are changing the name of the special constable program to the public security peace officer program – this is designed to raise the profile of this specific area of law enforcement – establishing different levels of authority based on the peace officer's role and responsibilities. There will now be four different levels of peace officers, with varying levels of authority. It ranges from the ability to carry firearms for traffic enforcement and the transfer of prisoners to working in administrative roles, such as exhibit custodians for police services and animal control specialists, ensuring that peace officers have access to the best system of communications to ensure their safety and to better co-ordinate their activities with the other law enforcement agencies.

Mr. Speaker, what is obvious in this bill and in these new rules is that the new standard of peace officers is designed to increase their presence in law enforcement, and this Bill 16 is the vehicle through which this second level of law enforcement will increase in prominence and use in Alberta communities.

Mr. Speaker, the outcome of this bill is that the peace officers will assume a new level of authority not previously held under the old provision in the Police Act. There are many areas of concern around this new use of peace officers. Primary amongst these is: how will these officers be utilized? It is important to remember that they are not trained police officers but peace officers who have some training in specific areas and specific authority to enforce certain provincial statutes. They do not have the full range of police training and thus cannot and should not be put into roles that require the full set of skills that police officers have.

For instance, if they are utilized to do traffic stops on primary highways, as the recent pilot projects on highway 63 and highway 21 have them doing, do they have sufficient training to effectively enforce this? Traffic stops are one of the most dangerous aspects of policing and require a full range of abilities, including knowledge of tactical communications, the ability to defuse hostile situations through verbal techniques, knowledge of the legal aspects of moving violations, sound judgment, and finally and of utmost importance, the judgment to responsibly deploy weapons if the situation escalates.

Police officers are subject to an incredibly rigorous process before they get hired – interviews, polygraph, psychological examination, extensive background checks, et cetera – to ensure that those are the right people to be able to use weapons. Will peace officers go through a similar process before they are hired as a level 1 Alberta police officer to ensure that they have the ability and judgment required to carry a side arm? Will these level 1 peace officers endure the hours of scenario training for traffic stops that police go through? These are the questions that must be answered before support for this bill can be given.

Mr. Speaker, the peace officers will have weapons at their disposal. These range from collapsible ASP weapons to pepper spray to carrying side arms. The Solicitor General has stated that they will receive the best training in the use of these weapons, but they develop the training protocol for all peace officers in the use of weapons and the use-of-force model. What type of training will they receive, and how long will it take? Special constables under the old model received two weeks of training at the Alberta Justice college in Edmonton: one week of legal training and one week of human relations training. Then it was up to the employer to provide self-defence training, known as PPCT, or pressure point control tactics. PPCT training and training in the use of weapons for most special constables, such as those in hospitals, would last for 32 hours, or four days.

The problem with this new model is that we have no idea what level of training these officers will receive and for how long. Who will administer the training? Will they be trained by the police training section members, or will it be through private security agencies? What is the duration and the content of the training? How much time will be spent on tactical communications? The most important weapon an officer has is his or her verbal skills. Unfortunately, the Solicitor General cannot tell us the detail of any of this because they have not developed these training models yet. This will be done through regulations.

We cannot support this new, expanded role for peace officers until we know absolutely that these officers have received the appropriate amount of training to ensure the public's safety and the safety of the officers. Some of these officers will carry 9 mm handguns and shotguns. We absolutely need to know that they had the full training needed to be able to responsibly and safely deploy these weapons.

Another factor is: who is ultimately accountable for these officers? The municipality or institution that employs them or the Solicitor General through the director of law enforcement? There is a distinct level of accountability for police officers: the chief of police and internal affairs investigations, the Solicitor General. But who will these peace officers be accountable to? Will it be the employers who have authority to discipline the police service that they are working with, the municipality that employs them, or will the Solicitor General through the director of law enforcement be accountable?

The issue of accountability is crucial in this bill. Before I support this bill I need some more details, more information because I'm still not sure. I will listen to some other speakers; then I will decide. At this stage it's very hard for me to support this bill.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I enjoy the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act. I appreciate this being brought forward to our attention at this point in time because, you know, we have an interesting situation with our law enforcement direction in this province. It's something that I think a lot of people find troubling, and this is a tendency to use more private security and people with less training to execute the police needs of our province. So while, actually, we do find Bill 16 mostly favourable, I guess it speaks to a larger direction that we are seeing that is a problem in this province, and that is, as I said, the use of officers with less training or private security firms, in fact, carrying out law enforcement in the province.

So this proposed act seems to bring all peace officers under one piece of legislation to presumably ensure better communication and co-operation and collaboration between employers of peace officers and the police services across the province. I would like to perhaps plumb the depths of how, specifically, it does do that. I can see it in some ways, but there are some specific concerns I have to see if the proper lines of communication are, in fact, there. As far as I can tell as well, it seems to want to clarify the role, the responsibility, and the accountability of peace officers and to strengthen provincial standards such as training, the use of force, and the qualifications of the officers, which we can all, I guess, appreciate if Bill 16 comes to do that for these peace officers.

There are almost 3,000 peace officers in the province, and they're working for any number of different groups from the RCMP to colleges and whatnot across the province. They're meant to be enforcing provincial and municipal bylaws. Of course, we all know that these amendments seem to be stemming mostly from the Alberta special constable review from the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. I commend him for that work, certainly.

We applaud the effort to improve efficiency of peace officers as that will ease some of the police officers' workload undoubtedly. However, I have expressed on a number of occasions, and I think it's becoming glaringly apparent, that we need more police officers in our community, so I'm wondering how the police community, in fact, views this extension of the use of peace officers in their line of work.

You know, it's a very sensitive issue, Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about police enforcement of the law in any society. What's most important is the integrity of either the peace officers or the police officers to uphold the law but also to be able to manage situations in the most circumstantial sort of way. Certainly, I don't propose to suggest that peace officers might be any less able to manage circumstances as they come forward to their attention than police officers, but you do get what you pay for. If we are in fact placing people out to enforce the law with less training and less attention and paying them less money, which is a large part of this whole movement from police to peace officers, then you can expect that perhaps you won't get the same level of coverage that you might with a fully trained police officer.

I mentioned it this afternoon, and I will just briefly again, that our per capita police coverage in this province has been slipping considerably. I think that it's incumbent upon us to of course strengthen the laws around peace officers and private security firms, but also let's not forget our responsibility to have adequate police coverage in our province too.

There are a number of areas that I would like to discuss specifically in each section of Bill 16. I'm loath to do that at this time save to say that in general we intend to try to support this bill as it moves through, Mr. Speaker, perhaps with some amendments, particularly in the areas of being able to watch over these groups and be able to make judgment against officers if they are sort of having some problems with the public.

One of the issues that I would like to just telegraph here a bit is this whole idea of how we might supervise and discipline individuals who might be in contravention of any number of police officer rules and regulations. It's difficult to know because this is sort of a general framework, but it's the individual regulations that actually determine, I would suggest, the quality of policing. So I would hope that we would be able to look at those details as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to just get a few brief moments to speak to this Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act, in second reading. I remember the genesis of this because I believe that I was the Official Opposition critic for Justice and the Solicitor General when there were a couple of different reviews done but, specifically, an MLA review of the Police Act that was actually done in two parts. Both times there was consideration of this deputy constable, a sort of second level, a tiered level of police officer. I have the same concerns today that I had then, and a number of them have been reiterated. They are around training and whether we let someone out there with a gun that doesn't have the same kind of training that police officers have.

You know, what's really at the heart of this for me, Mr. Speaker, is a philosophical idea about: why can't we just pay the people that we have to do the job? Why does this government constantly push to find a cheaper way to do it, to find somebody else that will come in and do basically the same job for a lot less money and less protection and less benefits and maybe a bit more danger because they don't get the same kind of training? It's a Wal-Mart economy. Every time or every year there's got to be less cost.

I don't understand this philosophy. I don't understand why this government keeps doing this. I don't understand why we can't just say: "We've got good Albertans here that have worked hard. They've trained hard. They've reached a level of expertise. They deserve to be paid a certain salary to do what they do. Let's pay them to do it." But we don't do that. We say: "Okay. We've got this one level of people, and now we deem they're too expensive. We want a cheaper version so that we can make them do basically the same things but without the same amount of money." I don't understand that, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't make sense to me why you would constantly look to downgrade it, basically, and try and find someone to do basically the same job for less money. But they keep doing it.

I'm sure there have been other arguments made that, you know, this is unfair to those individuals. If they are qualified to be the top tier and to get into the police academies and be chosen, good, then they should be, and they should be paid as such. If they're not, then maybe it's not appropriate that they serve the public in that capacity. Maybe there's a good reason for that, and they shouldn't be given a gun and sent out there. I think those questions need to be asked. I know that's not a popular thing to say with this particular government, but I have to ask those questions. We've seen it happen in so many professions, and I continue to hear that kind of attitude and this government seeking other opportunities like that. In what other profession can we get people to do the same thing for less money and pay them less money with less benefits and all that goes with that?

I'm going on longer than I thought. Sorry. The second thing that's bugging me about this is the name of it because we do have a struggle here between whether we're talking about someone who is here for peace, order, and good government or someone who is here on sort of the military side. There are two sort of strains of police officers. Just let me give you a few definitions. I mean, on the military side you get people called law enforcement, and on more of the community-based you would talk about a police service, not a police force but a police service. At some point in there you get that peace officer. That's what I was raised with. I mean, police officers were peace officers. They were to uphold the peace. Over time we've seen that movement to more of a military style. It's about law enforcement. It's about police forces. Even the uniforms have changed towards a more military style where you're getting the belts. They start to look like commandos and the stuff that goes with them, the accoutrement I think it's called in here.

I find it really interesting, the choice to call this secondary level of officer. I don't want to be insulting, but I don't know how else to call this. The second tier, the entry level: what do you call it? It's not what we started out to look at, which is fully trained police officers. It's some other kind of level here. I find it very interesting that they've chosen to call it a peace officer. It's Orwellian because that's not what these people are doing. The essence of what is being set out in this act, the services, the tasks they will perform are not about keeping the peace. They're about security and ticketing. It's almost exactly the opposite of being a peace officer. So it's interesting choices that have been made on this one. I'm looking forward to the rest of the debate on it.

I know that there are other issues that we want to debate tonight, so at this point, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 16.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 19
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, you had adjourned debate.

Mr. Stevens: I'm good. Thank you.

The Chair: Okay.

Are there any other comments, questions, or amendments offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I look at Bill 19, the supplementary estimates, I feel that it's time for us to wake up to the revolving credit through which the government is going yet again and on which it is taking us as citizens yet again. Revolving credit is like the revolving doors in department stores. They're intended to keep the building inside warm, keep the cold outside, and make it easy for people to pass through the doors when they're carrying a load of parcels. That's how the system is supposed to work: for consumer credit, to keep the bills under control, food on the table, and get on with the business of people's lives.

That's how it works with grown-up people until some kids come along without anything better to do. They're not there to shop or buy or even look. They're just along for the ride. They go round and round through the doors, tying up traffic, forcing serious visitors to take the side doors, letting the warm air out and the cold air in in the process. Some people may think these kids are cute. Most serious shoppers just think they're a nuisance as they go round and round and round and round, like the Wanderer, the guy in the 1960s hit who admits that he can never settle down.

Mr. Chairman, this is the roundabout that's going on regularly with the financial resources of this province. Budgets are meaningless because we don't really need to work within limits. Thanks to the oil bonanza, we can always make another round through the revolving door, letting more of the heat out. Every few years we go through a round of D and D: debt and deficit reduction. We say that we're being mature because we have to live within our means and cut spending, but we're not being mature. We use manufactured crises to cut back on our responsibilities to the homeless, those on assistance, children, hospitals, and communities, all in the name of self-reliance, fiscal management, getting our house in order. The moment we've off-loaded these, we're back at it again, another round through the revolving doors, running up unbudgeted expenses.

We say that it's not really overspending because the carelessness is covered by resource revenues rather than from taxes. Would we use that reasoning as homemakers if we were selling off the trees, the pavement in the driveway and garden, the groundwater, and the topsoil to fund a spending spree? Would we say: I'm not really being irresponsible as I'm still living off my monthly paycheque? Would that justify stripping our houses down outside, selling off the siding, shingles, and eavestroughing to cover a trip to the casino?

I would like to consider the heritage savings trust fund. Of the $122.9 billion in natural resource revenue collected in Alberta from 1977-78 to 2004-05, 91.4 per cent went into a combination of current consumption and debt repayment while 8.6 per cent was saved in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. In 1987-88 the Alberta heritage savings trust fund was valued at $12.7 billion. In the 2005-06 second-quarter update the fund was valued at $12.5 billion. If the heritage trust fund was inflation-proofed in 1987-88, it would be worth over $19 billion today.

Mr. Chairman, the essence of parliamentary government is financial control by the Legislature. This oversight is not limited to direct or indirect or any particular kind of taxation. It includes the management of our entire portfolio, all the assets with which we've been blessed. The injection of $1 billion is a good step toward better management. It is long overdue.

[Mr. Rodney in the chair]

I would also like to look at continuing care, AISH, and PDD as I consider Bill 19. As I think about different kinds of care, I do not believe that people believe in care for its own sake. They may support care if it's good business or go along with it if there's a profit to be made. But if it's the simple matter of putting public dollars into care for the homeless, the unemployed, the aged, or the children of working parents, then we hear a different story. We hear about the need for self-reliance, for getting a job, for families standing together. In other words, they're saying: we don't care. There are public dollars available for new projects. There's far more interest in putting them into incentives for industry, exploration, development, research, and tourism. Care, like religion, is becoming a purely private affair. If the state or its supporters are to be involved, they want to be able to charge private fees for services or offer corresponding tax cuts to the private sector for it to take up the slack.

I'm going to step into the realm of religion for two quotes. Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these, you have done it unto me and the statement that the whole law can be summed up in this: you shall love your neighbour as yourself. It is not in our separation of people into taxpayers and consumers, into contributors and beneficiaries, into categories of age, health, gender, and specific competencies but in the recognition of our connectedness that society and communities hold together and individuals, families, and other groups become strong. The divide and rule, survival of the fittest approach has spawned many inhuman experiments, including the one last century that gave rise to this quotation.

First they came for the communists, and I did not speak out because I was not a communist. Then they came for the socialists, and I did not speak out because I was not a socialist. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I did not speak out because I was not a trade unionist. Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out because I was not a Jew. Then they came for me, and there was no one left to speak out for me.

Martin Niemoeller's words remind us that this state did not come about all at once. It took about a decade from the first steps to separate people until the conclusion, where some people came to be seen not as people but as a problem that required a final solution.

Mr. Chairman, it's been a little more than a decade since this government introduced a leaner, meaner approach to public support for those in need. Now it has been joined by a new federal government that says: caring for the unviable is not our concern; let them fend for themselves, or let them depend on private charity.

I'm going to paraphrase Niemoeller's words to show what is happening to care among us. The abandonment of the national child care agreement is simply another step on a slippery slope to a less human society. First they cut back welfare payments, and I said nothing because I was not on welfare. Then they cut seniors' benefits, and I did not complain because I was not a senior. Then they cancelled the child care agreement, and I let it pass because I did not support public child care. Then they began to privatize health care, and I did not object because I could pay my own way. Then I found myself homeless, unemployed, and ill, and I could do nothing as they had cut off me.

Let us resolve that we will go down this path no farther. It's time for government with a heart.

As I look at the continuing care $10 million injection, I'm wondering how this money will be allocated and monitored to ensure that it goes towards improving the quality of life of seniors. The current system is not meeting the public need and expectation for ensuring the safety and well-being of residents in continuing care. The Health Facilities Review Committee and protection for persons in care office do not have the power to inspect facilities or the enforcement mechanisms to ensure that facilities rectify any problem identified. When will the minister take action to solve the problems with enforcement and accountability?

The biggest dilemma that the facilities seem to be facing, both in seniors care and for people with developmental disabilities, is a huge turnover of staff and a shortage of staff and not being able to get them in there or entice them to that work. I commend you on the $10 million to increase the wages because that's certainly a major problem, but I'm wondering what we are doing to attract people into this profession and to make sure that they feel recognized and worthy.

When I look at the PDD funding, it seems that they're having to make a reduction in their costs, and there isn't enough funding for them to go forward. With PDD funding there's not been an overall cut, I understand that, but there's been only a 2 per cent increase. The point that the groups and the PDD are making when they talk to us is the reality that institutional inflation does mean a cutback in the services they're providing.

Those are the major concerns that I have in those two areas. Also, with AISH, we looked at that class-action lawsuit. I don't know how much money has been allocated so far or how many claims have been made, but I'm wondering what action has been taken to prevent future problems with Alberta's social programs.

I have questions about the PDD funding formula. I am concerned about the lack of staff to take care of our people in continuing care centres. I also am concerned that we have lost the vision of taking care of our people, of supporting our people, of taking care of the vulnerable because that really is the mark of a civil society.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Seeing no members from the government side, I'd now call upon the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand and discuss supplementary estimates for 2005-06. It has been well expressed before that we have limited opportunity to discuss financial issues. This is a case in point, where it's after-the-fact spending, outside of budget, a reminder, I guess, that credibility and accountability have to do with the ability to discuss and hold to account the government of the day on the basis of budgetary planning.

Just to itemize some of my specific comments, I'll begin with the Finance department and talk about the need to better balance the social spending, the environmental protection investment, and the economic focus that this government takes and the lack of balance between those, that we still look for and call for as the Official Opposition.

I note in relation to the Human Resources and Employment sector that a $6 million allocation was provided for the partial settlement of the class-action lawsuit, an unfortunate reflection of something that I hope the department is looking at very seriously and is going to prevent in the future. It relates, again, to what my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has been talking about, and that is the caring gap, as we see it, in relation to those disadvantaged and those who are most in need of public support.

In this context the AISH increase has been small and inadequate for people who have to live in a society where the cost of living is increasing and where, indeed, we have the highest standard of living in the world. It's unconscionable that we are still keeping our most vulnerable people so far below the poverty line. They have not yet seen fit to index their increases on an annual basis on the basis of the cost of living and inflation. How is it, Mr. Chairman, that we can give ourselves a 4 and a half per cent increase and somehow not find it legitimate to give those on AISH and some of the most vulnerable in our society at least equal and, indeed, index these income supports?

In relation to people with developmental disabilities – and I'm now shifting to the Seniors and Community Supports side – clearly there is a call, again, for fairness in our society, for balancing the economic interests with the social development and the illness prevention and health promotion issues that an adequate income entails for these people in the most vulnerable situations. How is it, again, that we can give a 2 per cent increase to persons with developmental disabilities and give ourselves a 4 and a half per cent increase in this Legislature? It's a serious legitimacy problem – illegitimacy problem, I would say – and I hope that the Legislature will come to grips with this. PDD should also be indexed to inflation and cost of living. There's no basis for being so stingy with the people who are the most vulnerable in our society and being so generous with ourselves, Mr. Chairman.

In relation to Municipal Affairs, the $39 million increase listed in the supplementary estimates, this had to do with the $7 million for the targeted investment program to assist urban and rural communities with weak assessment bases, and the rest, 32 and a half million or so dollars, for disaster assistance.

I wanted to raise the issue that has increasingly plagued our constituency; that is, market value assessment. How are we going to address this without increasing the wrath and the profound despair of some in our constituency who can no longer afford to stay in their homes because the market value assessment has increased their tax share to the point where many of these seniors and people on fixed incomes simply can't continue in their homes. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, it may surprise you that some couples have talked of – actually, I've heard of one instance where they formally separated as a couple in order to claim income less than the cut-off point at which they would receive health benefits and other benefits because of the increase in their tax on their housing.

We need to find another way to assess particularly inner city housing besides the market value assessment. There needs to be a ceiling beyond which we don't go or a percentage of the lowest tax rate in that area. We cannot continue to see the skyrocketing market value assessments and the taxation that goes along with that. Particularly irate are some young families who have a relatively modest house but whose land values reached the point where they, too, are being squeezed seriously.

In relation to Sustainable Resource Development, a $15 million supplementary for firefighting, primarily, and for the pine beetle, these are not items that can obviously be avoided in the real sense, but forward-thinking and prevention in terms of what we understand to be determinants of forest fires and getting early attention to the pine beetle issue is what all of us expect in this province.

I want to focus also on the lack of any investment that I can see in a serious commitment to integrated land-use planning. The committee has been struck, but I'm very much hoping that we will not be seeing a repeat of the last two attempts to have an integrated land-use framework and a land-use plan in this province that will simply not function and not be seriously . . .

An Hon. Member: What happened?

Dr. Swann: It was not seriously integrated into the various departments that need to be integrating it: Agriculture, Sustainable Resource Development, Environment, forestry. All of these sectors need to see the legislation. They need to operate under the auspices of the legislation in a very consistent manner. We cannot have regulatory bodies overriding them. The land-use planning framework has to be in stone. The minister should not be able to make these kinds of decisions, so everyone can operate, including the business community, in a framework under which they can have confidence. It can be clear, and everybody knows how it's going to work. So I'm really calling for some investment in both time and money to ensure that these plans for land use in the province are clear, they're integrated in all the various departments, they have good public involvement, and they are legislated.

Those are my comments around . . .

The Acting Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but speaking of ministers, I would invite the newly social Minister of Innovation and Science to take his seat as we allow the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to continue with his comments and give him the respect that is due. I appreciate your co-operation.

Dr. Swann: Those are my comments. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Seeing no members from the government side standing, we have the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to report.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure again to rise and speak to Bill 19, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006. Community Development has requested an additional $30.2 million. It's a huge amount, $21.2 million for community services: $20 million for a one-time grant to assist with cost pressures associated with the operations and maintenance of libraries and $1.2 million for featuring Alberta at the 2006 Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, DC, in July 2006. Wow. I like it. I'm not against that, but I want to ask the Minister of Community Development: how much do we pay to our local festivals like the Heritage Festival, Klondike, and the Stampede in Calgary?

I have some other questions. I'll start with this $200,000 that will be used by the department to act as liaison for the Smithsonian

Folklife Festival in Washington. How long has your department known that they would be featured at this festival? Why was this cost not foreseen? How specifically will the department be spending this money in Washington? Is it appropriate to have this cost within your department? Is this not an International and Intergovernmental Relations cost? These are a few questions.

Given that the additional money is more than was originally budgeted for, why did your department underestimate this cost so grossly? Obviously, library maintenance and operations are not costs that suddenly appear without warning. Why did you not account for this money in your budget? How will this money be distributed to the numerous libraries throughout the province? Are there a few libraries that need substantial funding, or is this money to be split amongst all the provincial libraries?

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

This one is very interesting, Mr. Chairman; $1 million will be granted by the Alberta Foundation for the Arts to the Smithsonian Institution to assist with the management of the festival. Why is your department helping to fund a festival that is taking place in the U.S.A.? How will this money be utilized by the Smithsonian festival? What benefit will Alberta see from helping to fund a festival in Washington? Again, is this not a cost that should fall under International and Intergovernmental Relations? Will this money that went to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts be considered arts funding? If so, why? Considering the fact that AFA has been grossly underfunded in the past, I hope that this is not considered arts funding as it appears to have no impact on Alberta artists. What input did the Alberta Foundation for the Arts have in deciding to grant this money to the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. Chairman, $9 million is being used to redevelop Calgary's Heritage Park. Given that many requests for centennial grants as small as $1,000 were denied because there was no grant money left over, where did this additional $9 million come from? I just want to remind the minister, that the one grant that I . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, the noise level is rising again, making it very difficult to hear the hon. member that's speaking.

Please continue.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm talking about that Mill Woods Presidents' Council grant. They were asking only for a few thousand dollars, and the grant was denied. They celebrated Canada Day and centennial day last year, and the money was short because HRDC denied a $5,000 grant. I requested of the Minister of Community Development only a few thousand dollars, and if you remember, you said that you don't have money. Now I don't know where the money is coming from, $10 million, $20 million, $30 million. My God, there's no limit.

Actually, that was a real celebration; 60,000 people on the south side celebrated Canada Day as well as the centennial day. They couldn't get even a couple of thousand dollars, and now we are giving the Smithsonian, I think – how much is it? – $1.2 million. We don't have money for our own people here in Edmonton and Calgary and $1.2 million? I'm not saying anything against the Smithsonian folk festival in the U.S.A., but it should be fair. The preference should be given to our own cities, especially to Albertans, who sacrificed a lot in the last 10, 12 years. Given that many requests, as I said, even small grants like the Mill Woods Presidents' Council's, were denied, I want to know why and what's happening. How do they assess the applications?

I remind you of another grant. Five million dollars was given to a film director, and that grant was decided, I think, within a day or two. How the deal was brokered nobody knows. I don't know what's happening. I mean, there are lots of questions, a huge amount of money. It's the taxpayers' money, and we're all sitting here. We're elected by the people, and we are answerable to our constituents. Think about it. When we give a huge amount of money to someone – you know, I don't want to say under somebody's pressure – how do you guys decide? How do you assess the system of this grant? Given that your department handed $5.5 million to a single Albertan after a private meeting with the Premier – this is the one I'm talking about – and now you are asking for an additional $9 million, why has your department mismanaged this grant money so badly?

This is another question for the Minister for Community Development: how specifically will this $9 million be spent? Why could this redevelopment not wait until the next fiscal budget? What is the urgency in redeveloping this park? Mr. Minister, you always answer my questions. I request you again to provide me with details in writing as soon as possible. You always do, and I commend you for that in advance.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the supply changes here just in as most general a way possible and quickly. You know, the biggest issue that I have – and I've spoken about this several times over the past year and a half – is this fundamental problem with underestimating and lowballing the original budget that we pass in the spring and then adding such large amounts to each department and ministry later on down the road. This stems from a number of, I would say, categorical problems with the way that this government is being run.

The first, that I would like to just speak on briefly, is the issue of revenues. Now, we knew where the royalty rates for oil and gas were going, and it was nowhere but up in this past 12 months. For this government to set the projected revenues from royalties at such a low number I think does a disservice to any ability of these various ministries to engage in long-term planning for the future. The royalty rates and the commodity prices of gas and oil are difficult to plumb. Certainly, if we knew for a fact that they would stay high or stay at any particular level, then we would all be able to plan better, but the deliberate lowballing of revenues can only harm the ability of the government to be responsible for the various departments they are in terms of being able to make long-term plans.

Just on that level alone, here we are looking at very large unbudgeted additions to each of the departments, and I find that to be irresponsible at best. You know, the people of Alberta deserve better than that. They deserve to have an honest projection of what their budgets are going to be. Each of these ministries represents a fundamental part of the social fabric in people's lives. When we're talking about education here in Edmonton, we're talking about the ability to retrofit and build schools or not build them. The shortage in the budget for infrastructure in terms of schools has resulted in Edmonton being shortchanged in regard to retrofitting buildings and building new schools, and that's a direct result of deliberately lowballing revenues from oil and gas. This is just one example, Mr. Chairman, that we could use.

Of each of these ministries I would suggest that health care is perhaps the mother of all lowball casualties. With that plus a deliberate underfunding of our public health care system we are in this perceived or otherwise manufactured crisis that the government now wants to somehow act on through privatization. Each action has an equal and opposite reaction, we learn in physics and perhaps in a larger sense in terms of karma. The basic mistake or deliberate misleading mistake of building a budget based on very low figures results in these supplementary pieces having to come in. Now, fortunately, we can do that because there's such a tremendous amount of revenue out there, but that's not something that lasts forever, Mr. Chairman. It's a problem that will only become worse if, in fact, we were dealing with tighter numbers.

You know, you get this illusion of conservatism by bringing in prudent and streamlined budgets in the spring, and then you get this great pitchforking of money around afterwards, sometimes approaching and even exceeding the original budget that we debated in the spring. I think that Albertans have caught on to this, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping that we can make some resolution to that in the spring budget that's coming up that we will be debating here, a more sort of honest and reasonable estimate of how much money we're actually going to spend in 2006 and 2007.

Making long-term plans for the future. As I said, Mr. Chairman, one place where we can go but we can't go unless we are making some honest projections about our revenues is building a green fund for the future. You know, I was so happy to hear the Minister of Environment speaking about building a billion-dollar endowment. At least it's something, a hundred million dollars for 10 years or something like that. I'm not sure what the Minister of Environment was detailing, but this is the sort of long-term step in the right direction that we could get our heads around. It's a very small amount, and perhaps we'd do it in a different way, but these things cannot be talked about if we continue to lowball our royalties.

The Minister of Environment specifically said that we could have a very modest increase in our royalty rates to accommodate for this, and this is becoming a buzz around in the public. You know, we used to talk about royalty rates, and maybe people's eyes would glaze over, but it's starting to become a public issue. I'm the last person that would ever give electoral advice to the hon. Conservative Party across the way there, but in terms of electoral politics the royalty rates issue is getting on the radar screen of people because people know that if there are billions of dollars of extra revenue coming in, there are billions of dollars being lost by having an inadequate royalty regime that pays the people of Alberta properly for the oil and gas revenues that are being extracted from this province each and every day.

So, again, we lowball the overall estimates during the year plus we have a royalty regime which gives away a lot of our energy at bargain-basement prices, and I think we have together, Mr. Chairman, a recipe for disaster down the road. Now, the only thing that keeps it afloat is the fact that there's lots of money floating around there to stop the gaps in between, but it's no way to run a railroad or a ministry or a government, and I think that the people of Alberta would like to see some resolution to this.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 19.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 17
Libraries Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to move Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again to speak in support of Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act. The bill makes four major changes to library administration. It allows for the creation of intermunicipal library boards. Number two, it defines a financial reporting process that clarifies financial accountability. Number three, it provides for the dissolution or amalgamation of the library board in the event of municipal dissolution, amalgamation, or annexation. Number four, it removes the right of municipalities to levy a public library rate or local property tax to fund the library.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 should improve library services by making it easier for municipalities to co-operatively provide library services. There is the risk that more municipalities will choose to provide one large intermunicipal library rather than smaller libraries in each community if the stakeholders in the affected regions feel that the option is an intermunicipal library or no library at all.

This bill will not help the significant problem with libraries in Alberta: underfunding. Libraries were funded at the same per capita rate funding for the last 14 years. Although $20 million was just announced, Alberta's libraries will continue to be one of two jurisdictions that charge fees to access library resources. Why won't this government take action in any of these areas?

Mr. Speaker, the groups I consulted are in favour of the changes and believe they are long-awaited improvements. We support local democracy, that is local library boards. We support literacy. Learning begins with reading; therefore, we encourage the library system to improve their services and make more books available. We believe in access to libraries in rural areas, and these changes will make that easier. We would like to see greater funding for the libraries and the removal of library user fees.

Mr. Speaker, the libraries are the basic services of all walks of life. It's an investment in the building of intellectual resources and also a cornerstone of democratic society. In Alberta's very first Public Libraries Act in the year 1907 the act stated very clearly that "all libraries and reading rooms established under this Act shall be open to the public free of all charges." Public libraries started out in the early years of this province's existence as open-door institutions, free to all Albertans. But in recent years, starting in the late '80s, public library after public library across this province has introduced annual membership fees in order to generate funds. As a consequence, today in Alberta every major public library with only two exceptions charges an annual membership fee that Albertans must pay if they want to borrow books. In this practice of charging residents a fee to belong to their local public library, Alberta is alone in North America with the sole exception of Quebec. Everywhere else in North America public libraries are free to the local residents, whose taxes support the libraries' existence.

Mr. Speaker, over the last two decades provincial funding for public libraries has been far from generous. From 1986 to 2002 the library operating grant funding formula was $4.04 per capita, and today it's only $4.29 per capita to determine the grants. This province should increase its share of the funding formula to increase the funding available to public libraries and compensate municipalities for the lost revenue. Recently the Alberta government announced $20 million, as I said, for public libraries' one-time infusion to purchase new materials or develop community-based programs that support literacy for all Albertans.

Under this amendment act the ability for municipalities to levy a special public library rate is being repealed. This change was not included in the government press release. Why was this change to the act not included in the press release? That's a big question. Did they complete a comprehensive survey of all municipalities to see if any were using the public library rate? What consultations were done with the municipalities? This omission is cause for concern. The municipalities I contacted don't use it, but one of the 300 municipalities with libraries could. So we should be concerned that this may impact the municipalities' ability to collect money for libraries and therefore to deliver services. Our position will depend on the answers to questions in this area. If no one is using the public library rate, then you could make the argument to remove it for housekeeping sake.

When I visit elementary schools, I tell students that if they want to be successful, they must read absolutely everything and everything they can. I support any policy that improves learning, literacy, and our future. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I consider Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, I have some thoughts about libraries, books, and literacy. In her latest book, Dark Days Ahead, Canadian author Jane Jacob warns of cultural amnesia, where we not only forget but forget what we've forgotten and what makes us what we are. Books and reading are a prescription to keep us from that kind of forgetting. In the movie Fahrenheit 451, long before Michael Moore's 9/11, there's a scene where a crew of firefighters torches a pile of books in the street. A small boy asks, "Daddy, is it true that firemen once used to put out fires?" That's the type of amnesia Jacob is warning against and that books, libraries, and literacy help to keep at bay. It's not accidental that totalitarian regimes censor books so their simplistic views can become total for their followers.

Here in the western so-called democracies we face a different challenge. We're so used to throwaway images and ideas that are on the screen, current at one moment and then passé, that we forget how to hold more than one idea at a time, how to juggle, wrestle, rework our thoughts: qualities that make for an informed and educated human being. It is possible to imagine a gigantic crash of the Internet that would force us back to earlier forms of communication. It would take longer to get information, and some live sources wouldn't be available, but it wouldn't cost us our long-term memory, our knowledge of who we are, where we've been, and a sense of where we're going.

It's possible to envisage a breakdown of the movie industry, bankruptcy in Hollywood, and even a shutdown of video stores with their DVDs. That would force us to do something else on Friday nights, perhaps to rediscover earlier forms of entertainment. We'd miss the visual memories and classic performances and would have to learn to make our own mental pictures again, but it wouldn't leave us without ideas.

I cannot imagine how we could lose our libraries, the books in them, and our ability to read them without a fundamental collapse of our civilization. Our capacity to talk to ourselves, time travel, nourish an inner love life, and ride the shoulders of the greats: all this depends on having the words and ideas in a form we can hold and carry. Someday we may perfect telepathy and be able to transmit pictures and movies to others. Until that happens and as long as we use language, we'll need books to encode, enlarge, and interpret our experience. They are the fundamental building blocks of the good life.

As I look at this Bill 17, I am in favour of the changes and believe that they are long-awaited improvements. I support local democracy; that is, local library boards. I support literacy. Learning begins with reading. Therefore, we must encourage the library systems to improve their services and make more books available. Finally, I believe in access to libraries in rural areas, and these changes will make that easier. And I would like to ask for greater funding for libraries. Why do we still have library user fees?

I do support Bill 17 as a positive step, but there is much work to do to really support libraries, books, and literacy. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there is a five-minute comment and question period. Anyone wish to participate?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will make some very brief comments in regard to Bill 17. We don't see a great deal of difficulty with the wording of this bill or its intention. I think it does in fact clarify reporting requirements and provide a mechanism for dissolution if a municipality somehow changes.

It seems straightforward, but my concern – and we will work with this in greater detail as the bill passes through, with my other members as well – is: is this a way by which municipalities, with the regionalization of municipalities in rural areas, can in fact dissolve and leave behind a library easier than they could before? We see with the regionalization that has been occurring that, potentially, libraries in smaller centres could be at risk. I just hope that this is not part of the way by which Bill 17 is designed for the closing of libraries around the province.

You know, we've seen some encouraging signs of commitment towards libraries. We've got the – what was it? – one-time $20 million investment in libraries around the province, but I think that the state of these institutions is such that we need sustained investment over time. I realize that municipal libraries and school libraries are under different funding mechanisms, but, you know, we saw over the last 10 or 15 years school libraries being in decline in regard to their funding and their staffing. This is indicative of a lack of commitment towards libraries and building that habit and interest in students while they're in school. Right? So what I'm hoping to see is an integrated approach towards the support of libraries through building and strengthening library services within the public schools, thus creating a population that values libraries in a broader way when they are, in fact, adult citizens and taxpayers and using the library.

It's a question of proximity and quality, and libraries have to change over time in order to meet the changing tastes of the population. That takes money. The benefits are probably not commensurate but, I should say, multiplied from the original investment to help to educate our society, for people to access new technologies, just a place to meet and to improve the quality of a community, Mr. Speaker.

The library system that we are fortunate to have here in Edmonton is just part of the way by which the quality of life of the city is enhanced. I know that my family has built a lifelong habit of using these facilities. In smaller centres I think that we should be looking at the public library as being a focal point to build community and to build a sense of belonging and education and all of the good things that we want for the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, is there anyone else wishing to speak on the bill?

Does the hon. Minister of Community Development wish to close debate?

Mr. Mar: Nothing further to add, sir, except that I will take into account the comments made by members opposite.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 8, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Let us be guided by our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four individuals who are contributing in a very significant way to municipalities in Alberta. These individuals are members of the newly established Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability. The sustainability of municipalities is a major priority for this government. To that end I look forward to continuing our work together.

I want to thank these representatives for coming to the Legislature today. Accompanying the individuals that I will be introducing are several of their key staff members who also are contributing in a significant way to the minister's council. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I will ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly after I've introduced them. From the city of Edmonton Mayor Stephen Mandel; former Member of the Legislative Assembly and president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, AUMA, Mr. Bob Hawkesworth; the president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Mr. Don Johnson. And please recognize the mayor of Calgary, Mr. Dave Bronconnier. I don't see him there, although he might be hiding around the podium. I know he's joining us for meetings later on this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure for me to introduce a person who is very familiar to most members of this Assembly. I'm sure you hold him in memory as well, Mr. Speaker. He has made many of our debates in this Chamber very colourful. He was my seatmate and officemate and sat in this Chamber from 2001 to 2004. That's Mr. Brent Rathgeber, former MLA for Edmonton-Caldor. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some of the very best and brightest students in all of Edmonton, 64 grade 6 students from Blessed Kateri elementary school, located in Edmonton-Mill Creek, who are accompanied by their teachers Ray Brooks, Robert Burghardt, and Darlene Payne. I'd ask them to please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, do you have another one?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. On behalf of our Minister of Advanced Education and MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 26 enthusiastic grade 6 students along with their teacher, Ms Colette Coumont, and parent helper Ms Renée Brown from Archbishop Joseph MacNeil school in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with interest about our government. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them all to rise and accept our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to everyone here in the Assembly today 20 special guests from my constituency. The ECHO Society, which stands for Empowering Citizens for Health and Opportunity, is a wonderful organization that provides rehabilitation services to Albertans in the communities of Whitecourt, Mayerthorpe, and Fox Creek that have developmental and physical disabilities as well as those caused by brain injury. Along with the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency I had the pleasure of joining this very vibrant group of Albertans for a photo earlier this afternoon. I'd ask my guests to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's a distinct pleasure and honour today to introduce some dignitaries from the Aga Khan University Hospital in Nairobi, a nondenominational institution. The education provided at this university hospital is second to none in recognizing men, women, and people of all different ethnic groups and persuasions. They are meeting today with three of our public organizations – Capital Health, the Alberta Cancer Board, the University of Alberta – to create a partnership and relationship to deliver health services in Nairobi, Kenya.

In the gallery are Dr. Mushtaq Ahmed, the chief physician at Aga Khan University Hospital and the associate dean of Aga Khan University; Galeb Gulam, a senior executive and the chief financial officer at Aga Khan University Hospital in Nairobi; Dr. Farrok Karsan, who is based at the Aga Khan University Hospital in Karachi, Pakistan, and is also assisting the Nairobi hospital. It's wonderful to go on the web and see what they are doing in Pakistan as well. From Capital Health in Edmonton very familiar faces: Allaudin Merali, the executive vice-president and chief financial officer; and one of my personal favourites, vice-president Brian Hlus. Would our guests please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce my guest, and I have to assume that he might be sitting behind me because I can't see him, so I'll go ahead. I'd like to introduce to you and through you an Albertan who has cared very deeply and has spent inordinate amounts of his personal time working on the plight of those in continuing care, and I'd ask for the traditional warm welcome of this home – House. I've been here too long. My guest is Robert Warden.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a group of concerned daycare owners. They are with us today in the gallery to show their support for the national daycare program. I would like to ask them to please rise as I introduce them: Suzanne Vokurka, Gillian Jobs, Edda Hunter, Connie Nye, Zsolt Maraitar, Tammy Adams, Ellie McEvoy, and Liz Barker. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a group of concerned daycare owners. They are with us today in the gallery to show their support for the national daycare program. I would like to ask them to rise as I introduce them: Janet Albury from Wee Care Family Day Homes in Fort Saskatchewan, Lovena Satdeo from Edmonton Family Day Homes, Debbie Pageé of the North Edmonton Family Day Home Agency, Natasha McCartney from the town of Beaumont, Natalie Wezler, also from the town of Beaumont, Charlene Ellison of Northalta Family Day Homes out of Edmonton, and another person from the family day homes, Barbara Raliszur. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Kelly Sloan. Kelly is the executive director of the YWCA. Along with other important work, the YWCA Edmonton supports the YWCA of Guyana with resources and expertise. Locally the YWCA Edmonton runs the nonpartisan one woman, one vote program, that encourages women to run for office, to vote, and to work on political campaigns. We are pleased to have Kelly join us today, on International Women's Day, and I commend the work that she and her organization do to empower and aid women in all facets of their lives. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as a footnote today with the presence of the mayor of the city of Edmonton, this canopy that surrounds the Speaker's podium was a gift from the people of Edmonton to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the province of Alberta on the 75th anniversary of the province of Alberta in 1980. We're now arriving at the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and I'm pleased to advise all members that His Worship is working with us on another project that will enhance the quality of this room and this Chamber as we go through 2006.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

International Women's Day

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past 28 years Canada has joined the world on March 8 to commemorate International Women's Day. As we all in this Assembly consider the impact that women have had on our lives, we should come to understand the immense significance of today. Expressing this importance is a quote often attributed to a great Chinese leader, who said, "Women hold up half the sky." It is a call for us to respect and value women here and around the globe.

In Alberta a number of events will honour this special occasion: a candle-lighting ceremony in Banff, a documentary film presentation in Calgary, an International Women's Day round-table at the University of Alberta women's centre, a celebration dinner hosted by the Edson and District Community Learning Society, and a discussion on international perspectives on women and leadership in Lethbridge. Mr. Speaker, there are many more events around the province and more going on than simple celebrations.

Canadians will mark the 25th anniversary of the United Nations convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. This international treaty pledges equal rights, opportunities, and responsibilities for men and women. Alberta will join other Canadian governments in New Brunswick this September for a national meeting to discuss women's issues, including the United Nations treaty. This will be the 25th anniversary of our national collaboration.

Mr. Speaker, on this International Women's Day I ask members of this House to join me and communities around the province in celebrating, acknowledging, and supporting the achievements of women in Alberta and around the world.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to respond to the ministerial statement on International Women's Day. I've reviewed some of the statements I've made in this House about March 8. I've talked about the status of aboriginal women, violence against women, child care, women in poverty, funding for women's shelters, operational funding for sexual assault centres. Today in the paper I read about the Two Steps Forward, One Step Back movement, in which women seem perennially locked. All that seems a bit grim.

I notice that in a newsletter from the peer program at the Women's Centre of Calgary in Bridgeland in their most recent article they talk about International Women's Day: people recognize the day to demonstrate their intention to keep fighting. And, I would add, to celebrate, which the minister did so nicely.

As the minister noted, the United Nations convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women was ratified by Canada 25 years ago. From this flowed legal and human rights foundations like the Canada Human Rights Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Both have been integral to improving the status of women in Canada and in Alberta. As we have learned, a gain in status for one group like a rising tide lifts all boats. So, for example, maternity provisions protecting job security for women evolve into parental leave, which benefits all of us. I believe these far-sighted legal tools have protected and empowered women. I'm delighted when a young woman looks blankly at me when I talk about a time before the maintenance enforcement program or having no protection from harassment in the workplace or losing one's job because a woman got married or was pregnant.

The Official Opposition continues to work on issues of economic equality and opportunity. I note that the recent StatsCan report talks about women continuing to be clustered in lower paying, pink ghetto jobs, making 71 per cent of what their male counterparts do even though – and this is a success story – women are exceeding men in literary skills and continuing to increase in achieving university degrees.

I look around this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and I note that the numbers of women here are going down, not up. What a comment that Rwanda, Mozambique, and Lesotho have a better percentage of elected women than we do.

Much to celebrate. Much to do. Happy International Women's Day.

The Speaker: Will hon. members allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate on behalf of the third party?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and I want to thank my colleagues for this opportunity for me to respond on behalf of my caucus and our leader to the minister's excellent statement today. For over 30 years we have been observing and celebrating International Women's Day. Over that time women have taken important steps forward. Yesterday Statistics Canada released a report showing that women are closing the gap in postsecondary education and workplace participation. Unfortunately, the report also points to a continuing pattern of women earning lower wages than men and having a high risk of living in poverty. This discrepancy is particularly clear for visible minority women. Yesterday the report found that minority women, although they have on the average better education, are earning somewhat less than their nonvisible counterparts.

Women face more immediate threats to their well-being, Mr. Speaker. Last year women's shelters in Alberta accommodated close to 6,000 women and close to 5,500 children who were escaping violent home lives. Sadly, shelters were unable to accommodate another 5,150 woman and their 3,710 children because they were full.

Like for too many Albertans, domestic violence is a particularly personal issue for me. This year marks the 20th anniversary of the murder of my youngest sister at the hands of her husband here in Edmonton. How many of us are trying to help loved ones, friends, families to escape abusive and terrifying family relationships? How many more women and children suffer violence anonymously? We would be remiss if we didn't also pause on this day to remember the Edmonton women who were murdered because their work in prostitution made them easy targets.

I'm also deeply troubled by the growing problem of early sexualization of young girls in our province and in our country. A culture that equates youth with beauty and pressures girls to act as women exposes those girls to serious psychological problems down the road. I applaud the courage and contribution of Léa Clermont Dion, a high school student in Quebec, for initiating a public debate on this issue.

I began my statement by praising the accomplishments women have made, and I want to emphasize the importance of these gains. But major challenges still lie ahead. Lower wages and violence against women and girls are symptoms of a larger problem, Mr. Speaker. As long as women are not full and equal participants in the workplace, in boardrooms, and in Legislative Assemblies, we will only be able to bandage over serious problems. Let's pledge to work together as members of this Assembly to remove the barriers that still exist to women's full and equal participation in social, economic, and political lives.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I invite all Albertans to join us in celebrating International Women's Day, celebrating past advances, and committing to fighting for justice and equality for all women.

Thank you very much.

1:50

The Speaker: For the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to participate, we'll need unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year citizens around the world commemorate International Women's Day. It is one day a year that we recognize the contribution of our women to our society as a whole.

As an Albertan I am proud that our province was one of the first in the British Commonwealth to give suffrage to women. But even before that women led the fight that men seemed to shy away from. Our women in the 1800s and early 1900s were leaders in the fight to clean up society across Canada. Their moral character and social conscience helped to define a generation.

During both World War I and II women went into the workforce to help contribute to the war effort in Canada. Without these great individuals sacrificing their time and talent, we would not have been able to rise up and continue the fight. After World War II their strength continued to grow in the face of societal changes. As women across the world began to evaluate their place in society, they once again made great changes to how our world works. Let me give you some examples of some amazing Alberta women.

Annie Gale first got politically active when she realized that people were forced to buy inferior vegetables from grocers who had contracted with B.C. and did not sell Alberta products. Her annoyance over this single issue grew into a life of service in public. Her activism in Calgary society would eventually lead to her running and winning a spot on the Calgary city council. Elected in 1917, Annie would be the first woman elected as a municipal councillor in the British Empire and the first woman to serve as an acting mayor.

Ethel Knight Wilson was one who changed Alberta. Ethel was the second woman named to the provincial cabinet. As a Social Credit MLA and minister of labour she did a great deal to help workers in our province. Ethel also brought forward the legislation which created the Women's Bureau of Culture and Information. She was certainly a great woman in Alberta.

Beyond the more public roles are women as the keystones to our families. Their contribution to creating and maintaining families is just as important as any other contribution they gave. In my own life women, especially my mother, have played a strong role in shaping and forming my life. My mother is one of my biggest fans, and her contribution to my success in politics and life is immeasurable.

In closing, I would like to thank our women. I know they'll continue to lead, shape, and help our society grow into one that brings respect and tolerance through their unique caring and loving nature.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform Public Consultation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 1990s this government pushed through electricity deregulation without proper consultation, and we all know the results of that. We know how the public feels. Now this same government is pushing through a policy on health care with only a 30-day consultation process, in which there are now just 23 days remaining. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier agree to an all-party televised debate focusing on his health care reforms? [some applause]

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I didn't know they were applauding for me. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: We will if you agree.

The Speaker: If everybody would speak through the chair, it would really work.

Mr. Klein: Well, I do agree. In fact, not only are we debating the situation before the television cameras during question period, if – if – the proposals are brought forward, there will be ample time to debate this situation in front of all the television cameras. I don't know if they'll be on or not. I think that they were for the Bill 11 debate. I stand to be corrected. I think I'm right, because it was of such public interest. I would hope that the Speaker would indulge the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and keep the television cameras on during debate, if it in fact takes place, of the appropriate legislation that will be brought forward. But right now we're debating in front of the television cameras.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier attend a town hall meeting organized by the Liberal opposition to fit his schedule – any time, any place – to hear what Albertans are saying about health care? Will he come out and meet the public?

Mr. Klein: As much as I wouldn't like to attend, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has laid out a public consultation process. It is a government process. We're responsible for fulfilling our duties in the best way we see fit. The process that has been tabled and outlined by the hon. minister is the process that we are going to follow. Now, there are a lot of suggestions relative to the process for public consultation. I'm sorry, and I apologize to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, but I'm going to stick with the process laid out by my minister.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the minister: will the minister herself or will she urge her colleagues to attend health care town hall meetings organized by the Liberal opposition – we'll organize just a few for you – and report back to her caucus what she or they hear? Will you attend a town hall meeting?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly report back to our caucus what we hear. We have actually booked a fairly full schedule right now. I know some MLAs have individually booked meetings in their particular constituencies. I have meetings this Saturday in St. Paul and in Bonnyville. I am arranging a meeting in Hinton. There are other centres that we're planning to go to in all corners of the province. So I could not make a definite commitment, looking at my own schedule and meetings we're arranging.

So, Mr. Speaker, although it's a kind and generous offer, I would urge the opposition to bring those views from those meetings forward, and they will constitute part of the material we're gathering from the public.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at town hall meetings in Camrose and Pigeon Lake several hundred rural Albertans spoke out about the impact on their lives of coal-bed methane, and the Official Opposition listened. These hardworking Albertans are experiencing water contamination and water shortage, and many are forced to choose between safe water and income from oil companies. Without adequate regulations oil companies and landowners are increasingly being pitted against each other. To the Premier: with some reputable hydrogeologists and industry expressing uncertainty about the impacts of shallow coal-bed methane fracturing on groundwater, is it not prudent to pause to consult with scientists, companies, and citizens until we know the extent of the damage to our vital groundwater?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it – and I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy elaborate – we just announced two initiatives critical to protecting the precious resource of water. The first is mandatory baseline testing of well water before drilling for coal-bed methane. This will help us monitor water quality accurately. The second is the mapping of Alberta's groundwater so that we know exactly where our groundwater is located. Thirdly – I would add a third – is that there is a complete review of any coal-bed methane extraction process or application by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The hon. member and any other citizen, of course, is invited to intervene if he or she feels that their water is being compromised.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have the letter, but I'd be glad to table it at some future date, from one of the companies, MGCV, I believe, very active in coal-bed methane extraction, saying that one of the individuals to whom the hon. member alluded has been spoken to by the company and seems to be satisfied. The letter also indicates that the situation relative to contamination of his water supply occurred a long time before coal-bed methane was extracted.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the coal-bed methane has been going on for five years, Mr. Premier, will you acknowledge the rural concerns and honour your commitment to halt new coal-bed methane development in the Horseshoe Canyon formation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have never given a commitment to halt coal-bed methane. I have given a commitment that if the Minister of Environment discovers that coal-bed methane is indeed contributing to contamination of water supplies, then that activity will be suspended pending a complete resolution of the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lacking any scientific investigation, it's going to be impossible to prove that now after five years.

To the Minister of Energy. Until now the EUB has been relying on industry to do baseline water testing before drilling. How can Albertans be satisfied that the EUB is protecting the public interest?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the Energy and Utilities Board is the one that's been setting a very rigorous standard for the industry for decades. I've got to still clarify that we try and typify coal-bed methane as if it's a new activity when it's not. This drilling activity in shallow wells occurs in thousands of wells if not hundreds of thousands of wells across the province, with decades of experience in managing water – saline, aquifers, fresh, potable water – fracturing techniques, all of those issues. The industry has a substantive amount of evidence, information, baseline information, and the like. It's not in the absence of a very solid foundation with which this activity is going forward. That is the first misrepresentation of what's happening with this coal-bed methane.

Secondly, each of these individual applications – and he mentions Horseshoe Canyon. That's in a seam where there's virtually no water. So even in that it isn't a matter that there is even a water extraction issue. As to whether it's affecting other zones or aquifers, the evidence thus far does not suggest anything of the like.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been tirelessly advocating for improvements in the long-term care system. Jean Warden died last year of malnutrition, dehydration, and infection in a for-profit facility. This highlights the current crisis in long-term care and the desperate need to legislate standards of care and ensure that enforcement mechanisms are in place. My questions would be to the Premier. Mr. Premier, why isn't this government legislating clear, enforceable provincial standards of care since the Auditor General and the MLA task force have submitted their reports?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is under review. I'll have the hon. minister responsible for seniors respond. I don't know if it's the minister of health or the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I think it's Seniors and Community Supports.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to respond to this question. You know that over the past year we have worked very hard on this issue of long-term care following the Auditor's report, and especially the member asking this question knows that because she was a part of the continuing care report along with two of my colleagues that reported just recently with 45 recommendations. The Minister of Health and Wellness and I responded very quickly through the third quarter, which we had here in the Assembly just this past week. In the third quarter there was an allocation of $36 million to meet the urgent needs that were identified in these 45 recommendations: $26 million to Health and Wellness, $10 million within my ministry.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you this. With the budget coming up in the next few weeks, we can look forward to a continuation in long-term care in meeting the needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that answer, but I would also like to suggest that this government take this issue so seriously that they would commit to establishing an independent office, like in my Bill 205, which is calling for a continuing care commissioner to solve the problems with enforcement and accountability. My question would be . . .

The Speaker: Well, I think you've had a question, hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: . . . when will that be considered?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had this discussion, the hon. member across the way and myself, as recently as two weeks ago. I was looking forward to the bill being here in the Assembly. I apologize; I've been very busy. I haven't had an opportunity to read the bill yet, but I am looking forward to that as well.

In our discussions the member knows that what she has put forward in regard to having a commissioner in the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, reporting through you for long-term care is one approach. We've had other approaches in that regard, and I'm going to evaluate all of them, and I would involve that member at that time even in making that type of decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I think that my point is: could we look at this as being actually legislated? Would that be looked at or just as a regulation?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward to that debate when the member's bill comes forward.

Health Care Reform Public Consultation

Mr. Mason: The Alberta Liberal leader thinks the Premier is a great man, a colossus even. We in the NDP opposition have a different view, Mr. Speaker. We see a Premier who wants to ram through the most far-reaching changes to our medicare system in 40 years without a mandate to do so and without properly consulting Albertans. My question is to the Premier. Why is the government acting in such a high-handed and undemocratic manner by denying Albertans the opportunity to present their views at a set of public hearings around the province, not just milk and cookies with the minister?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to first of all thank the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for his very kind words.

Mr. Speaker, there is a public consultation process laid out, as I mentioned. In fact, I understand that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness went out on the steps of the Legislature today when one of the ND members was about to speak and invited members in for a consultation, then went back out and invited another 15 back in. Now, that to me shows that the minister is willing to listen to all sides, even sides orchestrated by the NDs and the Liberals.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why does the Premier believe that the minister inviting some protesters in for milk and cookies is a substitute for a real consultation process that actually goes out to where people live in this province – in Mayerthorpe, in Medicine Hat, in St. Paul, and in Wainwright – and hold public, open, and transparent hearings? That's the point: no more closed-door meetings.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, I don't know specifically if the hon. minister is going to go to the locations indicated by the hon. member, but certainly she plans to go on the road and meet with constituencies throughout Alberta.

I'll have the hon. member respond.

The Speaker: Perhaps we'll get it in the third one.
The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that many Albertans, including a number of contenders for the Tory leadership, have told this government that they need to take the time to properly consult Albertans in open public hearings, why has the Premier decided to short-circuit the democratic process instead?

2:10

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the suggestion that we're short-circuiting the situation and the public hearing process. We promised that there would be public consultations. Those consultations are taking place. We don't want this, please forbid, to become a circus. We want the hearings and the public consultation process to be as impartial and nonpolitical as possible, notwithstanding the attempt by the Liberals and the NDs to make it very political, and we want to hear from Albertans as to what their ideas might be to, one, improve accessibility and choice in health care for Albertans, and two, bring health care costs in line with the rate of inflation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Energy and Utilities Board

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two of the most important things in our life are our health and our environment. Through recklessness both are easily compromised, and it is often difficult if not impossible to repair the damage. The fastest way to progress is through learning from the mistakes we and others make. Over the past years we have allowed the separation of mineral and surface rights to the detriment of landowners. To the Premier: in order to protect and treat landowners fairly, will you allow elected representation on the EUB board to make them more accountable to the citizens of this province?

Mr. Klein: On the AEUB that is a very interesting suggestion. I've often said publicly to the media: for every good suggestion there is a bad suggestion. In other words, for every action there is an equal and opposite and often negative reaction. If the hon. member will send over his suggestion, we'll consider it, but also we'll consider the cons. I don't know what they might be at this particular time, but I'm sure that as we discuss a policy change around the caucus table, there will be plenty of concerns raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: would you consider equal representation before the EUB board and review the compensation that landowners are entitled to when they go before the EUB board and who they can hire and pay to represent their interest?

Mr. Klein: I really don't know. I understand that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment is working on that particular situation, and maybe I'll have him respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did attend a number of meetings with that particular concern, and it's under discussion right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. To the Minister of Energy: will you protect Alberta groundwater and aquifers by extending the no-drilling or fracking zone to one mile within water aquifers until the baseline hydrogeological investigations and reports are in?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, you know, the Energy and Utilities Board has already looked at this issue. They came out with a directive to ensure the protection of the aquifers, as so mentioned. Yes, there is a great interest by industry, by the regulator, and by everybody to ensure that that happens. They have already put out directives that there are certain procedures that must occur if it's within the shallow – so it's 200 meters that is suggested. Those are the ones that have the right degree of expertise to measure and quantify those kinds of questions, and they've appropriately said.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Police and Peace Officer College

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In October Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security issued a request for proposal to build a centralized training centre for police and peace officers. I understand that 30 communities, including two from my constituency, submitted proposals to the department in December and now are anxiously awaiting word on the successful bid. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister provide us with an update on the status of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, our department is looking to develop a single-site facility in the province of Alberta as Alberta is one of the only provinces left in Canada without a facility of this nature. We're looking at a facility to try to improve the quality of training, ensuring that the standards are superior and, of course, that it would provide training for the roughly 8,000 police and peace officers in the province.

Our department did receive an overwhelming response to the RFP that was due in the middle of this past December. We received 30 tremendous proposals with 42 different land parcel considerations within them. Due to the high number of submissions, Mr. Speaker, we need the opportunity to analyze each one in great detail, and we'll not be able to shortlist in the time period that was specified in the RFP. We did send out a letter to those 30 municipalities requesting an extension on the proposal till May 15, and we're hoping that we should have the decision made before the middle of May.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister please tell us what the communities can expect to happen between this time and May 15?

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I want to thank those communities for their interest and their support in this project as we move forward. The review committee will continue to analyze and review all of the proposals to evaluate them against the criteria that were identified in the RFP. The short list will then be developed, and the review committee will begin interviewing and going out and actually doing physical site assessments in the communities. Again, as I mentioned, the expected deadline for the site to be selected is May 15, and obviously we hope to have that done prior to then. There still is a lot of work to be done. Each one has to be measured on its own merits, yet using the same measurement criteria to be fair to all of those 30 communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are just 23 days left in this government's proposed consultation period on the health policy framework, yet they are asking Albertans to react to a proposal with very little substance and around which the minister has admitted, and I quote: the detailed discussion is not there. End quote. The public needs solid information, and the government is not providing any detail or evidence. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister ever releasing the detailed discussion of the health plan so Albertans can react to something of substance?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, last July we put on the Alberta Health web page 13 initiatives that were health policy directives that we've been following through on, everything from looking at how we spend money on drugs to health policies and looking at enhancement of goods and services: a variety of strategies. We indicated and have received Albertans' responses to that. We also visited last summer all the health regions and gathered information about things that would constitute worthy policy directions to advance new health strategies. Putting patients first: there are several ways that that can be done. In the context of this framework we hope regional health authorities respond, and we're looking for Albertans' responses so that we know what their thoughts are about the broad principles that we've provided.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain how keeping public costs to the rate of inflation without taking into consideration the growth in population will result in anything other than reduced services?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member opposite has hit upon one of the very difficult problems that governments, I would say not only nationally but internationally, are wrestling with. We have been very fortunate in Alberta to have sufficient funds to advance our health policies and our health strategies beyond what we've seen in any other part of Canada, but we recognize that to keep health care sustainable, we have to look at other ways of controlling the costs that we have in place for health care, whether that is the kind of initiatives that we're looking at in consolidating drug purchases or whether we make choices that are different in terms of new technologies that come on board. These policies talk about a variety of principles where people could look at whether choice and access could be delivered in other ways and get Albertans' responses before we go into further work on some of them that just may not be acceptable. We're hoping, however, that they will be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the minister of health: can the minister explain how introducing private insurance for some surgical procedures will increase access for the average Albertan when those who have been on waiting lists of hip and knee surgeries for months or years will not even be able to purchase insurance for their procedure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:20

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we first talked about this health policy framework, we didn't talk about Alberta introducing private insurance. We talked, rather, about reducing or removing the prohibition on private insurance that exists here in Alberta and in four other provinces. We note that our neighbours to the east, Saskatchewan, do not have a prohibition against private insurance. Simply put, in this document we are not talking about instituting or changing the mix of any insurance program or any other kind of funding mechanism. We are talking about policies for delivery of care and looking at some options.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Highway 43

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 43 runs through my constituency, and traffic volumes, especially truck traffic, continue to increase. Some sections of highway 43 are yet to be twinned and are in a poor state of repair, and some sections are very dangerous. My questions are all for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When will these sections of this highway through my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne be finally completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The very quick, short answer is that we are looking at the fall of 2007. There have been 376 kilometres of this road twinned. We're moving ahead with this. Over the past five to six years there has been a huge amount twinned. We currently are expecting to have 19 kilometres more twinned this upcoming year, leaving 37 kilometres yet to be twinned in the year 2007, and we truly hope that it will be done in the fall of 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister. The year 2007 is two construction periods away, two complete seasons. Is there anything that could be done to speed up this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very interesting issue that we have here. Unfortunately or fortunately, depending on how you look at it, part of highway 43 goes through a First Nations reserve. We are having a very difficult time negotiating that particular amount of land so that we can have the twinned road through that part of the reserve. Normally what would occur in any other place in Alberta is that we would have the ability to use the Expropriation Act, but because it is on reserve lands, we do not have the ability to expropriate that land, and therefore we have to negotiate.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, what we're left with is the ability to either (a) come up with a negotiation or (b) plan a whole new route around the reserve. We would much sooner go with the existing route, which is through the reserve. It makes much more sense, would be much more beneficial for the people living on the reserve as well as for everyone else.

But through to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, it is a critically important issue, and we will do what is needed to ensure that highway 43 is completely twinned.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that soaring construction costs and lack of labour for contractors are causing many disruptions in projects throughout northern Alberta, what impact does this have on the completion of this route?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year we saw an unprecedented 25 per cent increase in the costs of our projects. That obviously has been taken into great consideration in what projects we do, what we're able to do.

In specific respect to highway 43 the biggest single issue we have is quite simply enabling us to receive the land from the negotiations. The price certainly is an issue, but that's not the biggest issue here. As I alluded to, it's obtaining the land that we need to build that road, and we will do it. There's a preferential way to do it, but there is another way that we could do it as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Workers' Compensation

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Workers' Compensation Board contracts for private health care services outside of medicare. This is a costly system, and it does not give injured workers choice of treatment or doctors. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. With planned health care reforms will the WCB maintain its expensive private contracts or will it return to the public health care system or will there be some new WCB third way allowing choice?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, there are about three questions in that question. To start with, I think we need some clarification because one of the things with workers' compensation is that we do have legislation that there is to be workers' compensation in Alberta, and that's good. The other part we need to know is that the workers' compensation program is funded 100 per cent by the employers and also administered 100 per cent by the employers. We do participate in one area of the appeals process, and even that particular process is funded by the workers' compensation with their private dollars. The workers' compensation legislation has been in place since 1918, way, way before the Canada Health Act was introduced; therefore, that process was always exempt for a number of reasons. One of them is to ensure that when an employee is injured, access to doctors' facilities is as quick as possible so they can go back to work.

Mr. Backs: The WCB does report to the minister.

A second question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. When will the minister direct the WCB to settle the tens of thousands of long-standing, contentious claims so that these injured workers do not continue to be a huge drain on our public health care?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that particular area, of course, has been dealt with in this House for a long, long period of time. Working with the workers' compensation, of course, we've tried to improve the existing appeals process that is in place and being used. The process that's in place will allow that for any applicant or any file that's in existence, any time you have new information, you can bring that file forward, and we'll deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the minister of health. Has the ministry of health estimated the cost to public health care caused by WCB not dealing with unsolved, unfunded, long-standing claims by these tens of thousands of injured workers, all of whom access the public system?

Ms Evans: No.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, did you want to respond?

Ms Evans: I did. I said no.

The Speaker: Oh, you did. Sorry. That was very quick. Brevity is good.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Land Expropriation

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of mine brought to my attention the following facts. The government of Alberta expropriated good farmland north of Calgary. The landowner was given $45,000 per acre, which included a sizable home, a dive pool, three garages, and a western wear business and barn. In comparison, the Calgary regional health authority purchased empty, raw land for the new hospital for $85,000 per acre. My question is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How does he explain the difference in price of those two parcels?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, what we do is do the fair market appraised value any time land expropriation is undertaken. There is a difference in what occurred for the south Calgary hospital. That land was not expropriated. It was involved in a deal with the old Bow Valley site. The city took over the Bow Valley site, and they subsequently turned over some of the land in south Calgary to us for the site of the hospital.

So, Mr. Speaker, quite simply, the land was not expropriated. We have a policy in my department that it is always fair market value that is what is being paid to the particular person when land is expropriated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question goes to the same minister. Why, my constituent asks, was the land for the hospital not expropriated based on the expropriated price of the land in the north?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, in whatever community we have in Alberta, there is a significant difference between where the land is situated. Land that is situated on the west of the city is not necessarily worth the same as what is located on the east of the city. Therefore, we undertake fair market value, which is an assessment through the estimators, through the real estate agents of what the value of that land actually is. We subsequently, then, expropriate it according to the value of the land.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, the value of the two parcels of land, where they sat and physical location, was significantly different, which accounted for the difference in price.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. What factual assurance can the minister provide that the owner of the land parcel in the north of Calgary was fairly treated and our public money was not overspent for the land in the south of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a very interesting tale that occurred in the land in north Calgary. We were trying to negotiate with the particular owner of the land for two years, and we could not come to a negotiated price. Subsequently, we went and expropriated the land, and a price was established. That price was roughly $45,000 an acre. What then occurred is that this particular case was taken to court. In the court case the judge actually stated that the value was a fair market value, but he then ordered us to pay above the fair market value for the movement of the houses and some of the inconvenience. In general, what that person actually received was very close to right around a million dollars for the land that was in northern Calgary. This was determined to be the fair actual price by a judge when it came to the expropriation.

I really must stress, Mr. Speaker, that we try to give fair market value. I think that when it comes to the beneficiary of that price, it's important that we have a transparent process to ensure that they get the proper price for their land. In this particular case I have no hesitation in saying that that is exactly what happened with your constituent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Northeast Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government recently announced that the northeast leg of Calgary's ring road would be built as a so-called P3. This government never learns. The southeast Edmonton ring road was first announced as a $300 million project; 16 months later the cost of building the road as a P3 had ballooned to almost half a billion dollars, the triumph of ideology over common sense. My question is, of course, to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How are Albertans supposed to know whether it makes good budgetary sense to build the northeast Calgary ring road as a P3 when the minister is refusing to disclose the comparative cost of using conventional public financing to build this section of the road?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really feel that I must address the hon. member's preamble. The difference between the $300 million and the $478 million public-sector comparator on the Anthony Henday was a change in scope. The public-sector comparator was $478 million, with the bid coming in at $493 million. I will also draw the Assembly's attention to my previous answer, when I stated that the cost of construction went up 25 per cent last year. By us doing the Anthony Henday as a P3, we saved the taxpayers of Alberta 25 per cent, or roughly $125 million.

In direct response to the hon. member's question, the reason that the public comparator is not being brought forward until one month before the bids are opened is so that no one can say that we have been gerrymandering the bids, that no one can say that we were gerrymandering the price. That bid on the public-sector comparator will be given to the Department of Justice, and they will all be opened at the same time. The three bids that will be from the private sector as well as our public-sector comparator will be opened at exactly the same time.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, to come back: won't the minister admit that the real reason for keeping secret – it is very unusual to do this – the comparative costs of public financing to build the northeast Calgary road is because the minister knows full well that this will be more expensive, just as the Henday was? That's why he's keeping quiet. He got burned last time.

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely false. That is not true. Quite simply, everyone in this Assembly knows that if we went out and said that a project is going to be worth $500 million, I will guarantee to you that we will not get a bid under $500 million. We are going to bring out that public-sector comparator, which is going to be our comparator on the work that is being done, a month before. We will have it sealed, and it will be opened at the same time. The other key component here is that if the private-sector bids are not competitive with the public-sector comparator, then they will not be accepted.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister, as we know from the Henday, was totally off base on his estimates on Anthony Henday. Won't he admit to this Assembly that that's the real reason we're not looking at the public-sector comparator right now? That's the real reason.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate. We were off base. If we would have done it by conventional financing, it would have been $125 million higher.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans demand a fair share for their resources through proper royalty rates. The Crown revenue share, the portion of industry's annual net operating revenue that is paid to the Crown as royalty, has decreased 4 per cent since 2001, meaning that millions of dollars have not been collected that should have been collected for the Alberta treasury. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. When oil and gas companies are posting millions of dollars in record profits, why is it necessary for this government to continue to provide more than $100 million annually in financial assistance through tax credits? Even the Auditor General reports this in his latest report.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, on the first issue, with respect to the percentage rate of return, that's a general, overall averaged rate given all the different royalty structures we have for oil sands, for conventional, and the like. That has been impacted by the substantive increase in the oil sands activity. As you know, our generic royalty regime is 1 per cent until payout, so because those projects are coming on in greater quantity and production, it's lowering the overall average rate today, but it's going to substantively help increase the royalties in the future. That rate was all designed to help us attract the investment so that we could have that long-term viability.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister – and this has got nothing to do with the oil sands royalty program – why is it necessary to continue to reduce royalties by over a half a billion dollars annually through 10 different oil and gas royalty reduction programs when these resources are being sold at record prices?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I might speak to one in particular; for example, the deep gas royalty holiday that was put in place to help us ensure that we get at the hard-to-find, difficult areas, very marginal, substantially high-cost exploration wells that haven't been found. Our royalty structures are put in place to help ensure that we get value and find and recover any and all of those resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Finance. How can this government continue to underfund long-term care when millions of dollars in royalty revenue are being left uncollected by this government?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would unequivocally disagree with this hon. member that we are leaving royalty revenue uncollected. The energy industry has a long and important history of contributing to the economic well-being of this province, and everybody in this Assembly knows that. However, there have been a number of programs that have been put in place over the years for a particular situation, one of which the minister just explained now. There are many different royalty structures. There are challenges in securing some pools of gas or oil, and some of these structures were put in place at that time. These are negotiated over a period of time in good faith to serve a purpose.

I would say to the hon. member that the amount of revenue that we collect from the oil and gas industry in this province speaks to the success of the programs that we have, unlike some provinces that have the same energy source that we do but have not contributed to it by reducing taxes, improving royalty programs, and encouraging economic activity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:40 Urban Aboriginal Strategy

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary has the fourth largest aboriginal population in Canada, and my constituency of Calgary-McCall has the second largest aboriginal population in Calgary. As I discuss quality-of-life matters with my constituents, I am appalled at a number of issues affecting the well-being of aboriginal people in Calgary. Furthermore, I'm surprised there isn't a clear understanding of the Calgary urban aboriginal strategy. My first question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. What is the Calgary urban aboriginal strategy, and how is the policy impacting aboriginal people of Calgary?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the urban aboriginal strategy is actually a federal government strategy. Alberta signed on just so that we can make sure that we would implement it with the municipalities as well as with aboriginal communities. There are a number of reasons to do that. We wanted to make sure we establish the process to effectively address the needs of the aboriginal people of Calgary, in this case, and other cities but also to make sure that we built on what was already there, what was needed, and why some of those programs were not working.

On the second issue, Mr. Speaker, there have been some real projects that have come out as a result of the urban aboriginal strategy. Just to give you an idea, I'll just list off some of the litany of programs that I do have, and I think it's really important to see this. First of all, I would say the Centre for Suicide Prevention, and that's to make sure the development and implementation of the aboriginal suicide prevention workshops in Calgary occurred; secondly, the Alexandra health centre, where lunch and learn, the aboriginal cultural awareness training for health professionals and other professionals in Calgary, is occurring; and of course the Awo Taan Native Women's Shelter, where we have the pediatric health initiative to support the shelter, of course, and their clinic in providing community liaison health services to residents of the shelter.

Mr. Shariff: My first supplemental is also to the same minister. Given that the urban aboriginal population is young, mobile, and growing in numbers in cities, what initiative is the minister working on to help these young people transition into city life?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is really important when we're talking about the aboriginal community. I just want to give a plug for the AUMA and the AAMD and C in wanting to build better relationships with the aboriginal community. They've done an excellent job, of course, through the AWPI, which we're now working on with the various municipalities. Thirdly, we have a number of programs that we've been working with, and I want to be able to talk about those.

First of all, the NAPI ambassador program connects aboriginal youth currently in junior and senior high school with aboriginal ambassadors to provide accurate information in accessing higher education. Of course, the Boys and Girls Club of Calgary also focuses on creating cultural development programs for aboriginal youth in the Bowness and Forest Lawn areas.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, not wanting to make this the puffball question, I would ask the minister if she wants to add any additional information to what she has already answered.

The Speaker: Go ahead. Thirty seconds.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is really important. First of all, we also have what we call the business etiquette and job finding skills. The Urban Society for Aboriginal Youth will conduct workshops on business etiquette, job finding, and of course résumé writing for aboriginal youth. The Chinook Lodge, through SAIT, provides academic learner services to aboriginal students. There are a whole litany of areas that we've been working on, and I'll file those at some point in time if you would like.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the election of 1921 Irene Parlyb was elected as a member of the United Farmers of Alberta in the constituency of Lacombe. She was to be re-elected in the elections of 1926 and 1930 and served to 1935. In 1921 Irene Parlyb was appointed minister without portfolio and served in that capacity until 1935. She was the first woman to be appointed to an Alberta cabinet position.

It was not until 1973 that the first woman cabinet minister was appointed with a full portfolio. Helen Hunley was elected as a Progressive Conservative in 1971 in the constituency of Rocky Mountain House and in 1973 was appointed Solicitor General. She won re-election in 1975 and served to 1979.

Irene Parlyb was to play a leading role in the Persons Case. Helen Hunley was appointed Alberta's 12th Lieutenant Governor in 1985, the first woman appointed to that position in Alberta, and served until 1991. Irene Parlyb died on July 12, 1965. Helen Hunley lives in semiretirement in Alberta.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of several members.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's a little bit unfortunate; I think my guests did have to leave, but for the record they're still in the building somewhere. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Visiting the Leg. today from Sylvan Lake was a bright group of 58 students in grade 6 from Fox Run school along with their teachers John Fielder and Karen Adair and teacher assistant Renee Deacon. Within that group I would also like to give a special welcome to parent helpers Lorie Johanson, Frank McLean, Tina Thiel, Karen McCartney, Deb Schultz, and Lynne Breton. Lynne is the daughter of Louise Kamuchik, Clerk Assistant here in the Legislature. Her grandson Dillon was here also. Well, I think they've left, Mr. Speaker, so thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Similarly, my visitors have already left, but I did recognize up in the gallery someone who I met quite a while back at Climate Change Central. It was Scott Fleming from Teletrips, and he was accompanied by Gord Olsen. It was just good to see them here. Thank you.

head: Members' Statements
Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, today until March 14 is Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. The theme this year, Farm Safety is My Business, reflects the attitude that farm safety is a personal responsibility and starts with each and every one of us on the farm.

Mr. Speaker, from 1985 to 2004 there was an average of 18 farm-related deaths on the farm in Alberta. On average four of those yearly deaths involved children under 18 years old, 87 per cent were male, and 70 per cent of the incidents involved farm machinery.

One of the most powerful teaching tools that exists is leading by example, Mr. Speaker, and that applies to ag and farm safety too. Management, not labour, shapes everyone's attitude towards safety. Proper training, identifying hazards, and managing risk are vital to today's agriculture industry. Remaining vigilant is an ongoing process and an important element in workplace and agricultural safety.

I'd like to congratulate the organizers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Farm Credit Corporation, for choosing Alberta for their western launch, held on March 6 in Olds at Olds College farm shop. I also want to congratulate the organizers and sponsors on their focus this year on 15- to 25-year-old individuals. Youth makes up a significant portion of new farm workers, and with the least experience they are most at risk, Mr. Speaker. It is farm safety for the sake of the future.

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, March 8 to 14: I hope everyone is aware and safe. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

First-aid Assistance at St. Benedict School

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize a group of heroes in my constituency. On February 24 of this year during a dance and silent auction at St. Benedict elementary school in the city of Leduc a parent attending the event suddenly collapsed. His breathing was laboured, and it was apparent that he was in need of medical attention.

Four people present – Audrey Hochhausen, Amanda Garneau, Susan Yacyna, and Karen Bibaud – came to his aid. All four are proud members of the nursing profession, and they immediately recognized the serious nature of his condition. Without hesitation they put their skills to use, providing first aid until emergency response staff arrived to transport this gentleman to the hospital. During this critical time the teaching staff at St. Ben's also performed admirably, maintaining control of the youth and parents present, keeping everyone calm, and giving these ladies the room they needed to work.

Mr. Speaker, without the intervention of everyone involved, this gentleman would not have survived. He remains in hospital but is expected to be discharged fairly soon. I would ask the members of the House to join me in recognizing and congratulating not only these four women for their quick action that saved the life of a stranger but also the staff of St. Benedict school who helped to control the situation and provide support. Together they averted what could have been a tragedy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Amanda Ammar

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a young lady from Onoway, Amanda Ammar, who represented our country at the 2006 Olympics in Italy. Amanda was born on February 6, 1986, in St. Albert and soon moved to Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. She was only three years old when she first took up cross-country skiing and was the youngest member ever to train with the Onoway Jackrabbits. Skiing distances of 15 and 55 kilometers as an 11-year-old, this “racing rabbit” showed great promise and joined the Edmonton nordic club.

Amanda made herself well known as a rising star with outstanding abilities during her next years, becoming an Alberta provincial champion and earning the honour of representing the Canadian junior national team. When Amanda’s positive attitude, hard work, and outstanding skills led to a magical call telling her she would be representing Canada on the cross-country Olympic ski team in Torino, Italy, a dream had truly been realized.

Back in grade 1 Amanda drew a picture of herself beside a mountain embedded with the five Olympic rings, and now, as a 20-year-old, she is the youngest person ever to represent the Canadian cross-country Olympic ski team. Of course, Amanda’s family has supported her every step of the way, and we can only imagine the pride they all felt when they watched her dream come true in Italy.

Amanda now trains at the world-class facilities of Canmore Nordic Centre, where she also receives world-class coaching and is aiming for the 2010 Olympics in Vancouver and beyond. This dedicated Albertan truly has a remarkable future ahead of her, and the town of Onoway, the constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne, the province of Alberta, and all of Canada should be very proud of her. On behalf of all my colleagues congratulations and best of luck, Amanda. We’ll be watching in four years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

National Child Care Program

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to once again speak to this House about the importance of a strong, well-supported child care sector in Alberta. Today child care workers and concerned parents have organized a rally in Calgary and one that will take place outside the House this evening. Some of them are our visitors here today.

Albertans recognize the threat that Prime Minister Harper’s new program represents to our own child care program in Alberta. That plan would have several negative impacts on these workers. Most obviously, it would result in an end to the provincial funding that helped raise child care workers’ wages to more respectable levels. Many families will no longer be able to afford child care. This will result in closure of some child care facilities and in some parents leaving the workforce. I, for one, am willing to voice my support for the child care sector in Alberta in demanding that this provincial government remain committed to the principles that guided the five-point plan.

The Premier has already stated that he is in support of Mr. Harper, in support of ending provincial supports to the child care sector. The hon. Minister of Children’s Services has not yet stated her position. I’m asking the hon. minister to respect the commitments that this government made to the child care sector in Alberta. There are thousands of Albertans, thousands of families in this province, that will be negatively impacted by the federal Conservative plan.

In closing, I encourage all of the members of this House to voice support for the child care sector in Alberta and in doing so show Ottawa that we value the wonderful work that they do in our province. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Youth Networks

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to discuss Alberta’s youth networks. As I have mentioned many times, youth are the future of this province, and their input is very valuable.

Mr. Speaker, a youth network is a committee of youth who have met often to identify social, health, community, and economic issues affecting youth. These networks provide our youth with a chance to work with local and provincial authorities in finding solutions to address different issues and challenges that youth face. They also allow Alberta’s young people to give feedback on the services provided to youth in their own communities.

These youth networks have been very successful to date. In region 1 the southern youth network advisory panel hosted a youth forum to aid their children and family services authority in its business planning process. This gave the authority a chance to hear directly from the youth in the region and to use their comments in any upcoming regional initiatives.

In region 6 the coalition of street youth have been working to come up with a magazine targeted at high-risk youth.

Another group, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta prevention of bullying youth committee, is working hard to address the challenging issue of bullying. They have taken action by working on an antibullying awareness campaign for youth.

These are just examples of the great work that these individuals in our youth network do for our communities. Through these youth networks our youth are becoming involved in their communities and are able to support their future growth and success.

Thank you so much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Health Care Reform Public Consultation

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government confuses the term “communication” with ‘con-munication.’ For a number of years this government has dabbled and doublespoken about the importance of preserving the Canada Health Act while undermining the public system. It has spoken about delisting services, reconsidering what is medically necessary for coverage, and, most recently, to what extent it can offload its public responsibility onto private insurance companies. To aid in its public health betrayal, it hired the private insurance company Aon at a cost of over 1 million taxpayer dollars to help the government disassemble their public system.

Six years ago this government, after two previous attempts, used closure to finally ram through Bill 11 legislation. On the Legislature grounds thousands of Albertans protested the government’s refusal to listen. Approximately 10,000 protestors gathered at the AgriCom in Edmonton while between 4,000 to 5,000 gathered at the Corral in Calgary.

This people’s parliament, the Legislature, was turned into a lock-down mode reminiscent of the storming of the Bastille. Perhaps this is why the Conservative king, who barely escaped with his life, confuses public consultation with confrontation. Three times this week he has crowed his reluctance to attend public forums as meetings with peasants and plebeians, Marthas and Henrys can be rather raucous affairs. If this government truly wanted to hear from Albertans on its proposed third-way plans, it would leave the security of its legislative castle and mix with the masses.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on a Standing Order 40 application.

Mr. Martin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move Standing Order 40 on the Order Paper for debate later on.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of six of the many letters we have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice serious concerns surrounding the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I am tabling today are from M. Golberg, George Bruseker, Christa Gilroy, Bill Gilroy, Lonnie Varze, Ella McEvoy.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of seven of the many letters I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice serious concerns surrounding the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I am tabling today are from Amanda Rintisch, Bozena Kurzatkowski, Michele Yankowski, C.P. Whyayazski,* Donna Alexander, Lana Sinclair, and Evelyn Blain.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods to table the appropriate number of copies of seven of the many letters that she received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice serious concerns surrounding Prime Minister Harper's rash decision to cancel the national daycare agreement. The letters are from Jody Matwichuk, Lori Engman, James Grant, Connie Bowie, Candace Diker,* Fiona McLellan, and Dr. Isabelle Chapados.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today. The first is on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Official Opposition, which is a copy of the letter sent to the Premier requesting a public, televised, all-party debate on the government's third-way plans.

The second tabling is from Marc Brisbourne, who is a constituent in my riding, with concerns around particularly item 9 in the government's health policy framework: paying for choice and access. He feels that this will lead to better care for higher incomes and that the ability to pay for treatment should not be a criteria, how much you can pay.

The final one is from Denis Arrowchaser, who believes that the "private section medical care will produce longer waits in the public section We should just continue to fix the current system."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, during question period on Monday, March 4, I undertook to provide a further response to the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Rutherford regarding consultant contracts. I am pleased to table today five copies of that additional information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of six of the many letters I've received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice serious concerns surrounding the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I am tabling today are from Aliya Ashraf, Stacie Nikoloyuk,* Gina Del Brocco, Cindy Stork, Monique Allen, and Terry Yahnke.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters we received concerning the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Rae-Anne Richard, Kayla Herman, Arash Riahi, Laura Fulmer, Gracy Cysouvic,* and Laurie Ethier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from the Warden family, a very disappointed response to the protection for persons in care report. I have the requisite five copies for the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Pastoor: I have another one. Sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My second one is a letter to the Premier from the Alberta Association of Rehabilitation Centres, in which their contention is that "community services to people with developmental disabilities are in crisis." I have the five requisite copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another tabling, from my constituent Mr. Jim Sexsmith, who is a veteran and retired, living on a very low income. He is concerned about affordable, low-income housing for veterans. He's urging the government to take action and help find an affordable place for retired veterans like himself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a document called The Daily, published every day by Stats Canada. This one is dated March 7. It's a summary of the findings of a report called Women in Canada, which finds that while women are closing the education gap with men, they still tend to earn less and be at higher risk of living in poverty. These disparities are especially predominant for women who come from visible minority groups.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

*These spellings could not be verified at the time of publication.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you gave notice of a motion that I gather wants to be introduced by the leader of the third party. Is that correct?

Mr. Martin: That's correct.

The Speaker: Okay. This is a Standing Order 40 application, so I would ask the hon. leader of the third party to read the motion into the record and explain briefly the condition. Then I intend on calling the question.

Health Reform Public Consultation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The motion is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately establish a committee for the purposes of holding public hearings in all regions of the province on the government's health policy framework, February 2006, and, further, that the committee should

- (a) include committee members from each of the parties represented in the Legislature,
 - (b) have the authority to hold public meetings and establish other parameters for an open and transparent public hearing process, and
 - (c) report on its findings at the fall 2006 session of the Legislative Assembly
- and, further, that no legislation implementing the government's so-called third way in health reform is introduced to the Legislative Assembly until the committee's work is completed.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the motion is extremely urgent. Albertans have consistently told us that health care is the issue that they care most about. It is the largest expenditure item in the annual budgets of the province, and people's lives depend on it. There is obviously a great deal at stake. Public opinion polls have shown repeatedly that the public wishes to retain the single-payer public health care system that we have in this province.

Mr. Speaker, the government's health care agenda seems to have a timeline of its own. There are very dramatic reforms, so-called reforms, being proposed which will undermine, in our view, the public health care system in this country that has served us very well for 40 years. Yet Albertans are entirely shut out of the process.

I'm asking that the Assembly debate this motion immediately because the consultation process introduced by the government will not provide opportunities for public input prior to the legislation being introduced. The government has indicated that they wish to introduce the legislation sometime early in April, Mr. Speaker. They've indicated that there is a four-week window for what they call consultation, of which three weeks are left, yet most Albertans are as yet unfamiliar with the government's proposals. So the timelines are very short before this legislation is going to be introduced.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is critical that before the government introduces this legislation for what they've indicated is going to be essentially a two-tier health care system, that the public has an opportunity, as the government has promised, to find out about the details of the government's proposals and to provide comment to the government. The process that has been set in place by the government does not allow this. In fact, it has been largely used as an opportunity or as an excuse to avoid answering detailed questions from Albertans and from the opposition on the question.

Given that the government had been unwilling to debate health care during the last election, promised consultations, those consultations have not occurred, the legislation is being drafted as we speak, and there is no meaningful public consultation process that allows

Albertans in their own communities to provide input with respect to this, I consider it a most urgent matter, that the Assembly should deal with this motion and establish an all-party committee of the Legislature to hold public hearings around the province and submit its report to this Assembly and to the government prior to legislation being introduced which will dramatically and radically transform our public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: 3:10 Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2006-07
General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Deputy Chair: We shall begin with the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to speak to the interim supply estimates for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. What we are asking for today is $832,400,000 for operating expenses as well as another $207 million, which end up being for capital expenses.

I won't take a lot of time today. Quite simply, the first number, the $835 million, is broken down as follows. There are $400 million for the municipal partnership grants. These are grants that will be going out in the first two months, prior to the budget being passed. There are $25 million more for capital and accommodation projects. These are for rent. These are for upgrading. The capital amount, in short, is for doing what the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation does each and every day. The rest of the $835 million is simply two-twelfths of my operating budget, which allows me to actually pay my staff and, again, to do the things that we need to do in Infrastructure and Transportation.

There are also $207.8 million in capital investment. This is for road projects that are presently being done. As the hon. member knows, under conventional financing we do have to pay for these as they are being done, and we do not want to nor wish to delay any road projects for two months in our very short construction season while the budget is being passed.

Mr. Chair, that's what the dollars are being used for. If there are any questions, I'd be more than happy to take them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in debate this afternoon on the interim supply estimates for 2006-07. Certainly, when we look at this and the hon. minister innocently states that this is one-sixth, or two-twelfths, of the annual budget, well, then you would think that there shouldn't be any problems.

However, one looks at the spending habits of this particular government now and what they used to be, what they were at one time. When the current Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was first a representative in this Legislative Assembly, this government had a very, very bad spending habit. Then they had a curious habit of reducing significant expenditures in core areas, which today we are still facing the consequences of. Because of this overspend-ing and this notion that we could have special warrants and the fact that perhaps money did grow on trees – everyone but the government seemed to know that this wasn't true – we had to have dramatic cuts in government expenditure. No one denied that that should occur, but how it should occur was a significant topic for debate.

Now, I said before that we've cut the health care budget. We cut the budget towards public education. Certainly, the infrastructure budget was reduced. We're still playing catch-up on that. How much catch-up? Well, even the hon. minister was just in the last fiscal year talking about borrowing money. Yes, borrowing money. I don't know if he had your permission or not, Minister of Finance, but he was talking about it. I don't know if the hon. Minister of Finance had been consulted on this borrowing that was anticipated or thought about by the minister, but the infrastructure deficit was first reported to be $3 billion, then it went to $4 billion, and then it went up past $7 billion. So that is yet another example of some of the previous planning that has occurred with this Progressive Conservative government.

Now, how concerned should we be about that, and how concerned should we be about this whenever we're discussing the interim supply amounts to be voted, Mr. Chairman? Well, we only have to have a look at the Order Paper from last week. This is the Order Paper from day 3, Monday, February 27. We can just review some of the motions here, but certainly Motion 514 has caught my eye and caught the eye of a lot of different Albertans. The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright has obviously some concerns about government spending and government spending habits. This motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the Government to introduce legislation to ensure that all budget surpluses or unbudgeted revenue from a given fiscal year be held in a holding account until its allocation is debated by the Legislative Assembly the following fiscal year.

Motion 514 indicates to me that there is concern on the government side of the House as to how this whole process of budgeting is working.

Now, when we discuss interim supply for Infrastructure and Transportation, how confident can we be that next fall, for instance, we're not going to be looking for more money for this department? Infrastructure repairs and infrastructure construction are certainly necessary. It is a vital, vital department. In light of the poor planning that's gone on, how much extra we are paying now for infrastructure is the question.

The hon. minister talked earlier about the allocations and also talked earlier in question period about the 25 per cent increase in construction costs. Well, I haven't got, in my view, an adequate answer yet from the minister in regard to the $40 million-plus cost overruns on the flyway intersecting the Queen Elizabeth II highway, the old highway 2, and the Anthony Henday Drive project. The hon. minister was certainly forthwith – and I appreciate this – with the information in regard to the inappropriate rumble strips that appeared below the overpass on highway 2, where it was considered by myself and many other motorists to be unsafe and unacceptable on a relatively new road. I appreciate the minister's clarification on that matter, but I'm still after the details on why that cost overrun was so significant. It could not all be attributed to the increases in the cost of cement.

Now, earlier today the minister talked in question period, as I said, about the 25 per cent increase in construction costs. I had an urge to go down – and I just haven't had an opportunity – to the library and get the Alberta Gazette and see what percentage increase there is in the private-sector contracts that have been approved by the Treasury

Board, some of the increases that would have occurred there and for what reasons, because the Alberta Gazette is really a snapshot into how this government operates and how this government spends money. I would not be surprised to see in the Alberta Gazette where some of the contract budget increases and extensions have been for less than that 25 per cent figure, and many would be over that 25 per cent figure.

Dr. Oberg: That's why 25 is an average.

Mr. MacDonald: A 25 per cent increase is now an average, Mr. Chairman.

The high cost of steel is used as an excuse. I was astonished when I was doing some research on this outfit called Shanghai Construction, that is being used to import temporary foreign workers to this province. This outfit, Shanghai Construction: not only are they busy doing construction projects, but they're also a manufacturer of steel and steel products. I was astonished to read on the Internet that their profit margin had changed because the price of steel had decreased. I keep hearing from many different sectors in this hot economy in Alberta that the price of steel is going very high, and I found that contradictory, that this outfit was complaining that their profit margins had to be readjusted because the price of steel was going down. So if there are any buyers out there of steel and steel products, I would urge them to perhaps contact this outfit and see what their prices are.

Now, that shouldn't be used as an excuse. Steel prices should not be used as an excuse for increased construction costs. I find it astonishing that it would be. Even if it's an average of 25 per cent, I think our construction companies and our construction managers are much more able and capable of making decisions on and off the site, and I don't think that is necessary.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at the interim supply budget under Infrastructure and Transportation, we think of the bridges. We think of the roads that need repair. Certainly, this hon. member is quite satisfied with the explanation from the hon. minister in regard to looking after his staff. That's one place where I think we need to ensure that people are well compensated.

Government employees: there are certainly significant pressures to attract them to the private sector. If we have design engineers and we have planners working in the department, I think we should make sure that they are well looked after financially, or the minister will be working there past midnight by himself. They'd all be gone to the oil and gas sector. These are competent, able people, and we have to make sure that their compensation is adequate. I have some questions about some of the deputy ministers and people like that, Mr. Chairman – don't get me wrong – about some of their bonuses and whatnot, but we have to make sure that Alberta government employees are well looked after financially and that they are satisfied with their workload and their employment conditions.

We talked earlier about the budget process and the fact that we are now looking at this interim supply, of course, until the budget is introduced. I assumed, like everyone else, that the whole budget process started in November, but much to my surprise when I received a leak – and I was grateful for receiving the leak – on the Department of Energy's budget, I saw that the budget documents were going before private, government-members-only standing policy committees in October. I thought this whole process started after Remembrance Day, but certainly I was wrong.

Dr. Oberg: We'll make sure you get your leaks.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate that.

If this process is starting in October, it's much sooner than I thought. There shouldn't be any reason at all why the budget could not come much sooner. It would not be necessary to have this debate this afternoon on interim supply.

That goes back, Mr. Chairman, to the concern that I had earlier about the long-term planning of this government and the worry that's reflected in Motion 514, the worry that government spending is out of control. I know that the size of the government has increased – and we've talked about this before – but we need to make sure that we're satisfying all interested parties: taxpayers, the Taxpayers Federation, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the opposition parties, everyone. If we had better long-term planning by this government, I think we would have better confidence in the entire process, and we would see that confidence expressed by the citizens.

Now, this money is simply to carry the government through until its budget. It's an allowance, if we could call it that. Whenever your children, Mr. Chairman, are quite free with their allowance, one has a tendency to watch it more closely. This is the same with this government. It has to be watched very, very closely to ensure that this money is being spent when and where it is needed.

We're having this debate on the sustainability of health care. Public health care, according to government cabinet ministers, is no longer sustainable. I would beg to differ. Certainly, we're going to see in this budget for this respective ministry some money being spent on public health care facilities for the public good. But when we look back at how some of this money has been spent in the past, one has to wonder.

I would like to have my copy of the public accounts before me to see if, for instance, IBM has been getting any money for supplies and services from the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. I certainly know they're getting money from the department of health. In fact, we looked at the third-quarter update, and there was a significant increase in the third-quarter update on the amount of money we're spending on the electronic health records. I wonder what part of that budget, if any, is going to be directed toward IBM. Maybe I will get the answer to that question through the course of debate. I would appreciate it.
