However, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of sites that have been identified through the first program that the contamination actually exceeded the $100,000, and additional funds were or will be needed to deal with the decontamination of those sites. The program that we'll be putting in place as a result of these new dollars that become available increases the amount from $100,000 to $150,000. The original $10,000 stays in place. So an individual may be able to now have up to $160,000 to deal with the decontamination of leaks that have been created by leaking underground tanks.

That necessitates two things, Mr. Speaker. It requires us to go back through our files and determine if there were sites that were not remediated because the landowner did not have the personal resources to go beyond the hundred thousand, didn't want to start on the hundred thousand knowing full well that it wasn't going to be enough. There are some other sites where the owner of the contaminated site did in fact pay personal finances or small-business finances to go beyond the hundred thousand. The bulk of the $13.4 million that we have before us today will go to deal with those two situations: to go back and have a look at sites that were not dealt with because there wasn't sufficient funds and also to retroactively compensate some of the individuals who, had the program been available to them, obviously would have been compensated up to $150,000.

The rest of the $50 million will come in the next two construction years. We anticipate that there will be as many as another 600 sites throughout the province that will be identified. Applications will come forward, and we'll deal with those on a first-come, first-served basis based on the applications that come in.

The $50 million, if you do the math, may or may not be sufficient, depending upon the severity of the contamination. I have made a commitment as minister responsible for this program that if at the end of the three years the $50 million still has not dealt with all of the contaminated sites in the province, I will again request an extension and additional funding, so that we can continue to deal with things.

The reason we're not doing it all at once, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a fairly sophisticated industry. There are constraints within the industry, and you can only do so much in a construction season. So we anticipate about $15 million a year over three years, and that's how you come up to the $50 million.

We also have included, Mr. Speaker, $3.5 million so that we can institute disaster recovery programs as a result of severe weather conditions that have occurred in Alberta in 2006. One occurred in southern Alberta that resulted in about $2.5 million in damages resulting from overland flooding. Part of that will be paid to municipalities to compensate them for the costs that they have incurred in dealing with the situation.

I know I can use as an example – the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat will be very familiar because it's in his constituency – the town of Bow Island. It had significant damages. This huge cloud just opened up over top of them and dumped a substantial amount of rain. It overwhelmed their storm sewer system. They had to bring vacuum trucks from all over the country to try and deal with the situation. Those are the kinds of things that a municipality can be compensated for. There also may well have been some incidental damage to the storm sewer system. As well as that, because the storm sewer system backs up, you end up having actual overland flooding, where water enters into homes over the top of the foundation, not through the bottom, which is a sewer backup. That sewer backup is a damage that can be recovered through a normal homeowner's insurance policy. Overland flooding, on the other hand, is not something that insurance companies are responsible for, and that's why we step in with a disaster recovery program.

There was also an incident in the city of Edmonton on June 15 that had similar results, and there's $1 million included to assist the city of Edmonton and the residents of Edmonton that incurred damages as a result of that incident as well.

Finally, there's $3.4 million in this request to deal with the ongoing administrative costs for the previous 2005 disaster recovery program. This is a cost-shared program. We actually lay out the money, and then we will in turn eventually recover it from the federal government. So we're essentially creating an accounts receivable in this $3.4 million either next year as this file is closed or perhaps even a subsequent year because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, some of the damages that resulted from last year's storms are going to take as many as two construction seasons to repair. We won't be able to close that file off until all of the damages have been calculated and repaired. Once we do, we will submit an accounting to the federal government. They'll reimburse us, and this $3.4 million will be returned.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an explanation of how Municipal Affairs came to request $20.4 million.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that there are so many of these – what are they called? – brownfield sites all throughout the province needing the tank sites remediation program and that if I heard you right, you're going to have to request more money after the $50 million is used up, I don't understand the relationship between asking for this extra money and the ongoing budgeting process. How is it included? Shouldn't it be included in the long-term budgeting process for the department?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, in the year 2000 the program was introduced that I referred to earlier, that had a total budget of $60 million. That $60 million has been expended in totality, so without introducing a new program, creating a new budget, we're unable to deal with anything that hasn't already been dealt with under the old program. This is a new program that will increase the grants to $150,000. Part of this initial budget will compensate individuals under the old program who paid more than the $100,000, up to the $150,000. Part of it will deal with sites that have already been identified. Much of the research has already been conducted, but it was obvious that the $100,000 under the old program was not going to do the job, so that's part of it. The balance will be used for other sites that either had not applied under the old program or applied after all of the available funds had already been allocated.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, anyone wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Briefly, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Justice is seeking approval for an additional $3.6 million to pay justices of the peace in anticipation that the 2003 to 2008 Justice of the Peace Compensation Commission will submit its recommendations to the government in this fiscal year, 2006-2007. The next JPCC was due in 2003, but what happened was that there was a delay because the justices of the peace challenged the provision of the government's response to the 1998 to 2003 JPCC, which, of course, is short for the Justice of the Peace Compensation Commission.

The Supreme Court of Canada ultimately rendered a decision in favour of the government, and we believe that we're now in a position to proceed with the 2003 compensation commission for the justices of the peace. The amount of $3.6 million is our best estimate as to what the outcome of that particular mandatory process will be, which we will be required to pay in this particular fiscal year. So it's a bit of housekeeping which we can now do as a result of a successful court case in favour of the government.

Those are the comments I have with respect to the matter. I put them on the record at this point in time because I had not had an opportunity, and I don't think it's a matter that the critics on the opposition bench will spend much time on.

In any event, at this time, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I'd like to call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Date: 06/08/29

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Second Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate August 29: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General still has 13 minutes if you wish.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I look forward to this opportunity to discuss the supplementary estimates. The over a billion dollars that we're talking about is such a large sum that for some people it's hard to get a grasp on it, so what I'd like to do is kind of personalize it, put some faces behind it, and ask questions as to whether these faces and these situations that I bring up with regard to my constituency and contacts ring true with other constituency representatives, MLAs, throughout the province.

First off, a bouquet. As you're very well aware, I don't throw too many bouquets, but here's one for the health ministry. I am very pleased that the health ministry finally recognized the importance of funding Herceptin. This is something that other provinces have recognized for some time. The federal government has recognized the value. It's gone through all sorts of drug tests and series of approvals. Thank you, ministry of health, for finally helping people with that $40,000 a year expense.

Another bouquet. This is a mixed floral bouquet that I would like to hand to the health department: the fact that lymphedema treatment will very soon be offered in Calgary. Prior to just basically last week's announcement women suffering from the after-effects, the swelling that occurs with chemotherapy, were forced to leave Calgary and basically anywhere else in the southern part of the province and come up to Edmonton to receive this treatment. Very shortly through the Calgary hospital connections it will be offered.

The reason I say a mixed bouquet is that the place where it will be offered is leasing space out of the Holy Cross hospital, and of course that is one of the hospitals that was unfortunately prematurely closed. The owners of that hospital are doing extremely well because, first off, as we're all aware, over $32 million went into upgrading that facility, and then it was sold for under $7 million. And over the years since that sale, I believe in 1996, we have been, through the Calgary health region, spending millions of dollars in leasing space that we once owned. So, as I say, a mixed bouquet.

As I continue with the cancer theme, I receive contact from constituents frequently who are suffering from various forms of cancer, and I want to relate the story of one constituent, whose name is Marlene. Marlene suffers from breast cancer, and adding to the suffering of the breast cancer is the fact that the chemo cocktail treatment that, again, has been approved in other provinces and is available in B.C. has not yet been approved for use in Calgary. The circumstance is that the exact combination of drugs that have been approved for the treatment of pancreatic cancer and are available at the Baker cancer clinic in Calgary are not available for breast cancer.

So Marlene has to make her way to B.C., leave behind her two children and her husband, who is a professor at the University of Calgary, and travel to B.C. to get this cocktail that's available in Calgary. But Alberta, again, won't recognize what other provinces and the federal government have recognized, that the combination of the two chemicals not only treats pancreatic cancer but has shown effective results on breast cancer as well.

Last year I talked extensively about the family of Jeanne Keith-Ferris. The two children, a teenage boy and girl, suffered the devastating effects of gastroparesis, which is a disease that causes a person to always feel on the edge of vomiting, if not actually vomiting. As I pointed out – and I will not go into great detail about last year – this family had to lay out $60,000 to go down to receive treatment from a Dr. Abell, who actually performs this surgery in Mississippi three times a week.

The federal government has recognized that gastroparesis can be managed – not cured but managed – through the Enterra Therapy device implantation. The province of Quebec publicly funds the operation but does not have a whole lot of spaces in its delivery system, setting aside operating space specifically to deal with gastroparesis.

Since I recounted the story of Jeanne Keith-Ferris and her two children, an individual doctor from the University of Calgary has gone down to Mississippi. He has received training on monitoring the Enterra Therapy device. He's come back to Calgary, and basically he is, along with a number of individuals, appealing to the government to run a clinical trial. At this point the government has said that they recognize that Enterra Therapy works, but they have yet to figure out how it works. They're calling it experimental despite, as I've pointed out, a number of cases through Mississippi and through the States in general.

Tonight I want to introduce you to a young lady who sent out 83 letters to all our constituencies. I would like to thank the few individuals who responded to her. That is a young lady who is by training a nurse, a registered nurse. Her name is Krysta Livingstone. This is what I'm talking about by trying to put faces in front of the dollars. Krysta is in her early 20s. As I said, she's a nurse. Her gastroparesis circumstance is worsening on a daily basis. She doesn't want to end up like other individuals, in the Calgary Foothills hospital or in her Medicine Hat facility with a feeding tube. She would like to realize the quality of life.

She travelled this past spring down to Mississippi, where Dr. Abell installed a temporary device. She immediately received the benefits of that device, and it was like a change in her life. The problem is that it's a $41,000 ticket to have the surgery done, the recovery, the cost of the device, and so on. But because the Alberta government at this point still refers to this treatment as experimental, this young lady and her parents are having to go through the hardship, as the Ferrises did, of putting a second mortgage on their house.

Now, Tenille Tellman, who is a reporter with the Medicine Hat News, has covered this young lady's story. I've been in contact with Tenille a number of times. Most recently I said that based on all the information I had received from the ministry of health, the best we can hope for in the near future is the clinical trial. There does not appear at this time to be any money, and we're talking, with these two individuals combined, approximately $100,000, contrasted with the billions that are being discussed tonight.

What I'm getting at is that I wish we could deal with the major crises in people's lives and have some sort of funding, a compassionate fund, and a speedier process in bringing into Alberta what other provinces and the federal government have taken into account. We have a committee that works with all of the other provinces in terms of drug approvals, we then have a secondary subcommittee here in the province of Alberta, and then we have a committee that reviews the findings of the subcommittee. What's happening is that people are getting lost in the bureaucracy.

Another individual who comes into my constituency, who I see fairly frequently because he shops at the Co-op and the Safeway just around from my house, is a senior. His name is Maurice. Maurice has to go to dialysis three times a week. He hasn't asked for much. All he's asked through Aids to Daily Living is for the government to cover the cost of under $100 for a cushion that would give him a degree of comfort as he sits for hours in dialysis three times a week. Now, under our Aids to Daily Living a small expenditure like this would improve the quality of life of those people who have to go in for dialysis. These are not major expenditures. We should have funding for it. It should be approved. It shouldn't be a matter of great debate and discussion.

Another bouquet. It's nice to intersperse the concerns with the bouquets. I have an individual who comes into my constituency office approximately once a week. He's a firefighter who's suffering from posttraumatic stress disorder. It's been diagnosed and supported and finally accepted by Workers' Compensation. After years and years and years of getting very little recognition of his difficulties, he talked with the ministry of health. He pointed out that if you are a veteran suffering from posttraumatic stress or if you're an RCMP individual suffering from posttraumatic stress, there is a federally funded program that basically offers counselling, and it's based in Calgary. He had a great discussion; he got right through to the deputy minister, and for that, again, I give the government credit. The ministry is considering providing some provincial funding to support the already existing federal program. They've got the infrastructure. They've got the building. They've got the psychologists. It's just a matter of having some provincial money to support one more group.

As I say, I know that there are a number of firefighters who have been putting their lives on the line. My colleague from Calgary-North Hill has been a champion of firefighters' causes, cancer most recently. He talked about the heart coverage within 24 hours if a person goes down. He proposed legislation. So I'm hoping this is something that the government will embrace, the idea of dealing with people who have put their lives on the line for us yet somehow have gotten lost and shuffled in the system.

I'll change channels now and go to education. We're very aware that the problem is not just limited to Calgary, but the Calgary infrastructure problem, the bill between the Calgary public and Calgary separate school for delayed, defrayed infrastructure maintenance is now over a half a billion dollars. Unfortunately, in the latest supplementary estimates and in the Minister of Education's announcements we're still getting money that does partial repairs. While both the Catholic and the public schools in Calgary are grateful for whatever funding they receive, they don't know from year to year how much money they're going to get. It's very difficult for them to plan. They submit every year their three- to five- year plan to the government, and basically it's a wing and a prayer and a whim as to whether that money is going to come forward. What I've witnessed first-hand with my colleagues when we've toured various schools, for example Western Canada, is piecemeal patching, and I wouldn't want to say that nothing would be better than the something, but what happens is when you have a large roof . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Ms Blakeman: I was interested in the topic that the member was talking on when his time ran out, and I'm wondering if he could just complete that section for me. Finish the statement, in other words. Statements are allowed under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member would accommodate the request very briefly.

Ms Blakeman: The question is: what is it that he's particularly interested in around the educational deficiencies that he's noticed?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for allowing me the opportunity to continue. When we went into Western Canada, we found that the roof had leaked in several places. Patch jobs had been done here, there, and in various places. It's almost like a mini-Katrina in the sense that the dike didn't break in just one spot; it broke in a series of spots. So what happened was that you if repair the spot in the northwest corner, there becomes a problem in the southeast corner. With every leak you end up redoing the work you've done. The gymnasium in Ernest Manning, a similar circumstance.

I went through Brentwood elementary school. The roof over the library leaked. They temporarily fixed it. In the next heavy rainstorm it was the whole west wing that went. What is happening is that every time it rains in Calgary, whether it's a devastating circumstance like the Marlborough elementary school, the partial fixes just become part of a more expensive repair. If you don't do it completely and right the first time, this happens. We know in terms of the infrastructure repairs that that's the half billion dollars. That doesn't even begin to address the $3 billion that the public schools have put out for the construction of 19 schools. Calgary isn't alone. Edmonton has indicated their difficulties with maintenance, their need for building schools.

When we talk about other areas, roads and infrastructure, we all know, those of us who drive the province to come up to Edmonton for our various meetings, how much in need of repair the highways are. With highway 63, for example, just whacking down a few trees towards the end of Fort McMurray is barely scratching the tip of the iceberg. What needs to be done, at least on a temporary basis, is to have pull-offs. So instead of just concentrating at the Fort McMurray end, throughout that whole highway 63 at least take out some trees, at least put in some temporary compacted gravel pullouts so that people can get off that road.

Schools, infrastructure. The government can find $11 million for new planes. They can find millions of dollars for waste treatments of a race track out in Balzac that neither the cities of Airdrie nor Calgary wants. There is money. It seems to be available for a whole wide variety of projects but not the ones that are the most necessary. I would suggest that the most necessary projects are the hospitals – the expansion, the staffed beds, the places in the university for the trained individuals to staff those beds – and education. After that, obviously, the third one is the infrastructure, the support the municipalities have been calling for.

I thank the Speaker and my colleague from Edmonton-Centre for allowing me the leeway of expressing my concerns. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). We are debating, actually, more than $1 billion, and this government has given $6.6 million per minute for debate, which is not enough. Okay? This government has totally failed to manage the budget plan. They keep on repeating the same mistakes again and again. They should have done it during the budget time, but this time again they are asking an additional amount of more than a billion dollars. I think this is not a good thing. They don't want to learn something from the mistakes they have done in the past.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is really a big spender. I think they are number two in Canada. They used to blame the federal Liberals all the time. You know, the federal Liberals are big spenders. But this time this House, this particular additional amount of money, and the budget in the past clearly show that this PC government is a big spender. If we compare it to the other province which is number one, compare it to their total population, this government is the number one spender in the country. They don't spend money according to the plan. They don't spend money wisely. They throw money at the problems. They don't have any long-term sustainable policies, and they don't want to even think. If the opposition members give good ideas, they think the opposition is inflaming the situation. Everything is fine. If you talk about health care, well, we're number one or number two. If you talk about long-term care centres, we are number one. They find out when the Auditor General finds lots and lots of, you know, deficiencies in that department, and they are still not learning.

Let me start with the education side. This government is asking for an additional $293 million. Any funding for education is welcome. But, still, it's a long way to go because by the time they locate some amount of money for education or health care, by the time the department receives the money, because of inflation and because of price increases, you know, by the time of completion, the prices go up.

I just want to ask the minister concerned to tell me if this additional amount of money is going towards new schools, playgrounds, recreational facilities, school libraries. The reason I'm asking is because my riding, Edmonton-Ellerslie, is growing very fast with lots of new development areas like Summerside and Ellerslie Crossing. There are thousands and thousands of new houses being built there. I mean, when you make a project, I think it is very important that they should have schools, playgrounds, libraries, everything planned before they submit the plan and show it to the public, but it's not happening.

Let me go through this list of my area alone. The funding pressure and priorities are eventually on the MLAs. I was door-knocking in the last, say, two, three weeks, and lots of people are asking me about the school and recreational facilities and libraries in that area, especially in the new development areas, but I don't have the answer.

I talked to the school board trustees, and they have an evaluation project for the year '99-2000. Catholic schools especially have higher maintenance needs. For example, Crawford Plains school is in my riding. The projection for '99-2000 is $303,000; Daly Grove, $115,000; Dan Knott, $741,350; Ekota, $766,000; Ellerslie school, $602,000; J. Percy Page, $285,000; Menisa elementary, $488,000; Meyokumin elementary, $354,500; Meyonohk elementary, $656,000; Pollard Meadows elementary, $610,000; Sakaw elementary, $620,800; Satoo, $381,850; T.D. Baker, $406,000; Holy Family school, which is a Catholic school, $818,950; Holy Trinity – that's a Catholic school as well, and they need $1,096,800. That is the evaluation project for 1999-2000.

What will happen in 2005, 2007? Some projects are due in 2009. I think the price will be more than double. I won't be surprised if the price is three times higher than the projection. The maintenance has increased since 1999 to 2000. Schools in good condition will deteriorate. Those schools might need some money as well.

This is not a good plan. I think this government doesn't believe in plans, but without a plan, if they run this province, we will be back in a deficit one more time. We are lucky that the money is coming from the royalties, but these royalties are not forever.

My next area is Health and Wellness. The additional amount of money that this government is asking for is $262 million. In this particular area the government didn't give us the breakdown once again. They give us only a few lines, no breakdown. They say: okay; we are going to buy medical equipment. Which medical equipment? Nobody knows, not in full details.

I just want to know because the Grey Nuns hospital is between the Edmonton-Mill Woods riding and the Edmonton-Ellerslie riding. We are the closest ridings in this area. The waiting time in that hospital is more than nine hours, especially on the weekends. When we had a protest in the 1990s, 50,000 people protested against the cuts, and even at that time the waiting time was four hours. Now it's nine hours. We had a complaint from a couple from Calgary. She had a miscarriage. I received a letter actually yesterday or the day before. I tabled that letter I think yesterday, and she had a very similar story. She was waiting in the Grey Nuns hospital for nine hours, and she had the same experience. I mean, if we don't look into these problems and we sit here and just keep on giving speeches and not taking any action, I think we are wasting our time. We should take it very seriously, especially health care and education. They are the top, major issues not only in my riding but all over Alberta.

Also, it's not clear in this $262 million. I just want to know whether they are hiring new doctors, nurses, staff in the hospitals, new beds. Well, it's not clear enough. How are you going to distribute among different regions all that amount of $262 million? It's not clear there which region will get how much, and nothing is mentioned in that report. This is all guess work. You know, guess work doesn't work, especially when we have an institute like this one. My suggestion is that money should go where the money is mostly needed. Okay?

Infrastructure-wise some hospitals need some money for the infrastructure, and it's not clear if the money is going for the infrastructure or not.

Human resources. With this money are they going to give some more wages to doctors, nurses, or any medical professionals? No. Nothing is clear.

Efforts to reduce visits to physicians is a good idea. I would suggest to them, I mean, that they should look at it.

Waiting time to visit the doctor. Some people are saying that there is abuse. I agree with that. If there is abuse, we should review the system very carefully and find out if some people are abusing. We should make sure. We should manage it properly and stop this mismanagement and stop this misuse of money. Especially, you know, we should make some efforts to reduce visits to physicians because when you go to the physician, there are long, long lines. You have to wait there sometimes two, three hours. This is very important.

I think that the main problem for waiting times in the surgeries in the hospital is three things: gambling, alcohol, drugs, tobacco, et cetera. We are making money out of these people. Nobody tries to stop this. Suppose I'm smoking. I have a bad lung. I have to go to the hospital again and again. The same thing with the other bad habits. I think we should teach Albertans, you know, educate them not to use these things, and we can save lots of money. We can save lots of time as well. All these addictions are the main cause of rush in the hospital, as well as in the doctor's clinic. If some people believe that in the medical system there is fraud or abuse, it must be stopped.

My next issue is the Solicitor General and Public Security. This government is asking for $4 million in addition to the budget. The budget was only three months ago, and now they want another $4 million. First, I just want to know where this money is going and where it should go.

Alberta is supposed to be one of the best provinces in the best country. What we see in the newspaper, television, every time we see family violence. I recently heard that family violence is 14 per cent higher. And gang-related crimes, terrorism policy programs, aboriginal crime, organized crimes . . . [Mr. Agnihotri's speaking time expired] Could you give me a little bit more time, sir?

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I recognize her first.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm wondering if the member can expand on his concerns around what the budgeted amount for Solicitor General is being used for. He seemed to have a number of suggestions on where he could go with that money. If he could expand.

The Deputy Speaker: I saw one other member wishing to participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a), so if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie could briefly answer Edmonton-Centre's question, I'm sure other members would appreciate it.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back on the same – crime, aboriginal crime has also increased. Organized crimes used to be in Edmonton, then some people say they moved to Calgary. Now I heard the news just a couple of days ago, and it's extending to the rural areas. I mean, some people came to this country to enjoy their safety, their real democracy, and welfare of their family, but they don't see that anymore. Of course, we can do that if we are serious on this.

In my particular riding I have seen three or four dead bodies outside their houses. They were shot dead. When we talk to the police, they show us the numbers: "Oh, the graph is going down. Okay? The crime is going down." But if you ask the mothers who lost a son, the wearer knows where the shoe pinches. Still, the police couldn't find the person who shot the young 19-year-old, 20-year-old son. One young guy was shot down at the Mac's store. He was working there.

I want to know how long we will wait and what steps this government is going to take. How can we stop the crime in this province? If we don't stop this crime – I mean, all the members sitting here, they might say: it's not happening to me. Maybe it's not happening to you and me today, but who knows? I go outside and somebody shoots me or somebody shoots somebody else. Then we will realize how serious this problem is. So crime should be the top priority.

Also, when I was door-knocking, the people were complaining about, you know, lots of people stealing their cars, the gang violence, throwing petrol bombs on their houses, shootings taking place, break-ins, thefts. Just two months ago in my own riding one of the young ladies suddenly disappeared. She parked her car outside the bank, and we still can't her. The police say that it's a homicide. There are many other people like this. So many other people like this. That's not the answer.

When we have a meeting in my riding, the people ask me these questions: "Can you answer this question? Why don't you guys do anything?" So I'm requesting everybody to take crime, this issue, very seriously, and do something about it.

Thank you very much. Thanks again.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, on Standing Order 29(2)(a) you've got 13 seconds to make your point.

Dr. Swann: This is supplementary supply, so clearly the question is budgets. How does the hon. member feel this budget in Solicitor General should be spent?

The Deputy Speaker: The time period for Standing Order 29(2)(a) has elapsed. Back onto the debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm always pleased to get a little bit of time to talk about budgets. I had done the calculations that we were talking about, $6.6 million a minute in Committee of Supply. I'm delighted that as we debate our way through Bill 44, the appropriation bill, and with some estimates of time, I'm hoping that we can bring that down to just debating $2 million a minute. I've got 15 minutes, and that's going to get me through about $30 million.

I'd like to focus on my own constituency first, and that's the constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I'd like to talk a little bit about the schools that are in my constituency and then maybe a little bit about some of the particular health issues of the capital. Then, if I get time, I'd like to talk about the situation in Grande Prairie.

When I look at the schools in my constituency, I've got a sort of interesting mix. Because I have what are considered inner city schools, we've already gone through a crisis, if I may call it that, in our infrastructure in the schools. This actually goes back to before I got elected. We were in pretty dire straights, and the community has worked very, very hard to rebuild itself and to develop structures to support a revitalization of the inner city. Coming along with that has been a revitalization of our schools.

We really value our schools as integral parts of our community. They are in many ways community schools. Even if they're not open extended hours, they do tend to be a focus for us. For example, St. Catherine, which is a very diverse elementary/junior high school in my riding, hosts several family fun days throughout the year in conjunction with the local community league and the community action coalition, which is a loose association of individuals and organizations working in the community. I note that along with the Boyle Street Co-op and the Edmonton Viets Association they also support a series of awards, and they co-sponsor the July 1 barbecue that happens, in fact, on the grounds of the school.

So our schools are really integrated, and therefore we need those buildings to keep standing. Now, what happened was that we went through a consolidation of schools and for much heartache – it was a real tragedy – one of our schools, Queen Mary Park, was in fact closed and the junior high school portion of John A. McDougall school was closed, so we lost those out of our community. The idea was that we were to sort of share resources more, and that's how the central inner-city schools were going to start to share things like art teachers and choral practice and bands and that kind of thing and actually move the kids around.

But on infrastructure we have Oliver elementary/junior high, and the junior high, of course, is the Nellie McClung program. That school has had an enormous investment in the building itself: new windows, better weatherproofing, some structural changes, a boiler and that kind of thing, so it's actually in pretty good shape. St. Catherine was also due for an upgrade, and of course once they started to get the walls open, they realized how much trouble they were in. I think what was supposed to be a six-month renovation program turned into almost a year and a half while they dealt with asbestos and a new boiler and then some problems with the flooring, and it just went on and on. That has now been totally revamped, and we're very grateful for it.

Of course, we had a major reno of St. Joseph's high school, which is one of the oldest high schools in the city and at one time was the major high school for Catholic boys in the city and has a very, very proud heritage. So those three schools have all had a fair amount of injection of funds, and as a result they can continue to serve the community very well.

What was supposed to be the showpiece and, in fact, was a major plank in the 2001 Conservative platform was the Victoria school for the performing arts, which continues to be more than a disappointment, Mr. Speaker. It is now becoming an eyesore. With a huge injection of I think it was $64 million that was talked about at one point, this was going to be the Juilliard of the north, and a number of highfalutin promises got one of the Tory backbenchers elected and then defeated. That school continues to not have anything. It just sits there. I mean, I don't know what the government plans on doing with it now. You know, when I look at any indicator that is offered to us that we've been able to glean, if we look at the raw scores from the '99-2000 evaluation, it ranks as very poor, with a score of 1,240 points. Well, the "poor" index starts at 800 points, so you're well into this category with how bad the situation was with this school in '99-2000. We're now six years on from that one.

When we look at the maintenance reaudit that was done as an upgrade in 2000, we were looking at $17,125,000 of necessary maintenance events that were required to happen in the next five years, so pretty expensive stuff. This school is in tough, tough shape. All they've managed to do is knock down one part of it now. That's the big improvement there: so much for the Juilliard of the north. This school is offering excellent programming and, frankly, unique programming. Some of the pre-eminent families in Edmonton have got their kids going to a school where you can't stand too close to the windows because they've been known to fall right out of the building and into the parking lot below, which is a pretty sad state for a school in our capital city in a province with as much money as we've got.

I don't know what the problem is over there or what happened to the great plans and all of the great promises. This is an absolute tragedy and a huge failure on the part of the government, and still we have no concrete plans and no real idea in the community of what is supposed to be forthcoming, when we will actually see improvements to the school or a new school entirely. I don't think there are enough words that we could come up with to describe what a complete miscalculation and boondoggle this has been for this government.

I note that one of my other schools, Grandin, is on a list to have some kind of improvements come up for it I think in '08-09 or '09-10. So it's coming, but again it's an old school. I mean, these are all these red brick schools with the lovely cornice pieces on them, but they're old. The boilers are old. The air exchange systems are old. The windows are old. They need major upgrades or they have to be redone, and at this point it's a better investment to upgrade them.

For Grandin, when I look at the difference between what was the estimated maintenance in '99-2000 and what was the new estimated maintenance in 2005, again for a five-year plan, it's almost doubled, more than doubled. It was $353,123 in '99-2000. In the 2005 reaudit, if you want to call it that, we're up to $736,695. It's ranking at 10.29 on the FCI scale, which is into the poor category. You've basically got under 5 per cent, 5 to 10 per cent, and over 10 per cent. This is in the very poor category. It's costing us more and more money to maintain it. It's considered in very poor condition. Something needs to happen there.

You know, these are very good schools. They've served us very well. They've certainly waited and bided their time on the list for a very long period of time. Some of them have been addressed, but there is one glaring, glaring problem and total lack of planning and follow-through from the government and another one that certainly needs to be on that list and get some attention to it quickly. I don't see any of that forthcoming in the budget that's been put forward to us although there's so little detail in the budget that perhaps I've missed something. I'd be happy to be corrected – and I'm sure that my schools would be delighted to hear me be corrected – that in fact there was actually going to be some action on either of those two schools in there.

I want to note that I have some schools that really don't have buildings that qualify on this Richter scale, and that is things like the Boyle Street charter school, which has been in the news recently for celebrating its 10th anniversary. That's a school that really came out of the community. It came out of a defined need. It's unique. It provides a really important service to the community that it is in. They have been wise enough to define success in a way that works for them, and more power to them. I'm very proud of the work they did, and my hat is off to Hope Hunter and her wisdom in launching this school out of the Boyle Street Co-op. It now operates in a different site entirely and I think is actually managed by a different board, so it's actually taken flight and is off on its own. That was a great community vision.

When I look at the health region needs for Capital health, there we're looking at a deficit of $65 million, so that's certainly not going to be covered by the money that's been offered up in this budget. My question, as always, is: what is it that the government was expecting that Capital health would not do? You know, the government has devolved and created these delegated administrative organizations of the health regions, like the children's regions and God knows what other regions. It was meant to devolve responsibility for things, but ultimately they can't get it done if they don't have the funding to do it.

I'm always curious when, you know, they ask the regions to come up with a budget of how much money they need and why and defend all of this, and the regions do. The region asks for – I'm sorry; I can't remember off the top of my head what Capital asked for. Let's say 10 per cent, and the government says: "Hmm. No. Six." Well, what are they supposed to do with the 4 per cent that they didn't get? What is it that the government envisioned that they wouldn't offer or they would cut back, or how many beds or services were they not supposed to do and in what area? It's a very bizarre way of budgeting, with very little communication going back and forth. So we've got a $65 million deficit with Capital, and obviously this budget is not going to cover anywhere near all of it. What does the government think the Capital region is supposed to do with the rest of that money or with the lack of the rest of that money?

We're certainly seeing pressure points. Edmonton is serving most of the north. We've already had some problems. I've asked questions in the House about the number of code burgundies, which have increased, the issues around the ambulance authorities, about the wait times in the emergency rooms. The Sturgeon hospital in St. Albert had to close its surgical unit over one of the August long weekends. We've got a growing and an aging population here. We serve a very high aboriginal population in this city. We've got issues with emergency room wait times, bed shortages, health professional workforce planning. Our health professionals' vacancy rate is 4.5 per cent.

Alberta Health did allocate in October of last year, basically 11 months ago, an additional $647 million. Now, that was out of last year's budget, and the goal was to add a number of new beds to help us reach a 1.9 per 1,000 acute-care bed ratio. I don't know how close we're going to get to that. There are a number of construction projects, but the earliest they'll be available – the earliest they'll be available, and this isn't all of them – is 2007, including an elective surgical centre at the Royal Alex, more beds and increased ICU at the Royal Alexandra, the Misericordia, the Grey Nuns, and the U of A hospitals. That's all of them. We need some work at the Eastwood primary care centre. We need the 38-bed replacement hospital still working its way through the system in Fort Saskatchewan and the one in Sherwood Park. All of this just from Capital, and I'm not even talking about the other health regions in the province.

Everybody flaps their hands and says, "Well, we're working on it" and "Give us some time" and "Gee, only the Liberals plan; we'll have to scramble to catch up." Well, get on it. This is not acceptable for a government that's been in power for as long as this government has to be this far behind the eight ball in planning and implementation.

What I would like to do is actually just go back and talk about my schools again and some of the unique strengths and programs. I started to talk about Boyle Street. One of the things that we found – and it's a small funding thing, but it matters when you don't have any money and you can't do it – with a number of the kids that we serve, for example, that a lot of them come with very high needs. We have . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'd be interested in knowing if Edmonton is experiencing a similar problem to Calgary. For example, our Tom Baker cancer centre at the Calgary Foothills hospital can no longer cope either with infrastructure or with individuals working within the centre. Is there any equivalent shortage for cancer treatment? Also, does the member know of any place in this budget or any other place where the Premier's promise to invest a half a billion dollars in cancer treatment has shown up? I haven't seen it show up in Calgary. I'm wondering if you've seen any evidence of that money or cancer program extensions in Edmonton?

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks for the questions. I'll try and answer them. In Edmonton the Cancer Board is ahead of Calgary in its implementation of a new centre. We know where it's going to be located. The land is secured; the drawings have been done; the plans have been done. For that kind of a facility it's a long planning horizon because those are complex structures to build, and the idea was that there would be research space incorporated into that. So that work is well on its way. They've now got the sign up, actually, that's sort of announcing what's going to go in the space. So we are progressing on that, and I have to say that I think that the Cancer Board is actually managing to look after itself better than some of the health regions have been able to. Their support is a bit more secured. The capital infrastructure money for the Cross was secured sometime back, and I know that it's a little less secure and that they're in a different part of the planning process for Tom Baker. So for those of you in Calgary it's harder to see because it's not as much in front of you.

The second part of the question was: where is the money? Yeah. Again, I think that we're early enough in the implementation of the various plans that the Cancer Board has for that endowment that you can't really see any of it now, but we do know that the two facilities are progressing. Edmonton is ahead of Calgary on that one.

So I hope that's actually answered your questions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: A quick question. I know that the hon. member is from the arts community. I'm wondering what her sense of investments in the arts is in relation to this budget.

Ms Blakeman: I can't possibly answer that question in the few seconds we have left. This government has consistently failed to invest in the arts considering the enormous return that's been proven in so many other locations across the world that you get for an investment in the arts. The arts funding has essentially been stagnant in this province. There was a $3 million increase in the budget that we saw in the spring onto a budget that had essentially been stagnant since the late '80s. I mean, there hasn't even been inflation-proofing in that money. It's really a shell game following that because there have been things added into that budget, different sections or branches added into it and then taken out like the film division, for example. So money appears to be added into it, but then it disappears when the program is taken out and moved somewhere else.

We must at least double the funding to the arts without fail. I would at this point argue that the funding to the arts should be tripled considering what kind of a payback we can get from that investment. It's definitely worth it. If we're really proud of our heritage in Alberta, we should be investing in our artists to tell our stories to ourselves, to create those stories and to tell them to us. So that's the creation of it and the development of it, the touring inside of the province but also the touring outside of the province.

If we really want to see our cultural industries flourish, we need to be supporting the conduits that get that out as well, and I'm talking about the publishing industry, the recording industry, the film industry, and fine crafts. Those are our cultural industries, and we've absolutely failed them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the debate.

Ms Pastoor: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm going to talk about the debt that remains after the attempt to eliminate this provincial government's debt. There remains a large infrastructure debt, school buildings being only one of many neglected areas.

When I was on the Lethbridge city council, the operations staff created and used a sort of template for the ongoing monitoring of every public building, a 25-year window based on the known data of how buildings and materials will deteriorate. There was proper planning and management. The most important component was that the money was budgeted forward, and there were no surprises, like a roof caving in on kids trying to learn.

In Lethbridge school boards 51 and Holy Spirit have made some progress in relation to this issue, but maintenance planning and managing remains unresolved because it is impossible without the proper funding. Dollars are needed to catch up, and a stable budgeting process for sustainable dollars to take Lethbridge schools into the future is imperative.

My riding is home to 18 schools. A reaudit from the year 2000 used the facility condition index, which is a tool that determines exactly how much maintenance is needed. It's calculated by dividing the dollar amount of total required maintenance by the replacement value of the building, and there is a sort of an evaluation based on: under 5 per cent is good, over 5 per cent is fair, and 10 per cent is poor. So with that information, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to discuss some of the schools in my riding of Lethbridge-East.

The Ecole Agnes Davidson school has an FCI of 11.14 per cent. Fleetwood Bawden is good; it's only 0.38 per cent. Galbraith elementary is 5.27. Lakeview elementary is 10.38. Some of these schools have not had their reaudits. Lethbridge Christian school has not had that reaudit. Senator Buchanan elementary is at 8.8.

Westminster elementary is at 10.31. Westminster elementary is an amazing small school. When you go into assembly – they are so fortunate there – it almost looks like the United Nations. It is a very multi-ethnic school, and they have some wonderful things going on there. So the fact that they need maintenance at 10.31, which is very, very poor, is sad when you realize how much they're giving the children that come from the lower socioeconomic area of our city.

Park Meadows elementary has not been reaudited. Gilbert Paterson middle school, 6.59; Wilson middle school, 6.71; Allan Watson, 5.97; Lethbridge Collegiate Institute, 1.80.

Winston Churchill and Catholic Central high schools have not been reaudited, and I would suspect the reason is that, yes, we are fortunate in Lethbridge, and we are getting two new high schools on the west side, a Catholic high school and a public high school which will be joined in the middle by a library. However, the school isn't built yet. It will be another two or three years. Already it's probably full to the rafters, and we haven't even got the ground turned over yet.

Ecole St. Mary school is at 10.63, very, very poor. Our Lady of Assumption, 16.8. St. Francis junior high and St. Paul schools were not done.

So out of a number of 12 we've got five at poor, five at fair, and only two at good, and then of course the other ones haven't been done. I don't think that's a very good record to be proud of when we've got kids trying to learn. They are our future.

In Medicine Hat is a different story for some reason. Out of 12 schools they have three poor, three fair, and six good. Interesting. I don't know the ages of these schools, so I hope that they are much older than the ones that I have in Lethbridge-East.

The McCoy high school is 2.9 per cent. That's good. Mother Teresa and St. Francis Xavier have not been done. St. Louis school is .03 per cent; to me it sort of sounds like it's brand new. St. Mary's junior high school, 3.61; St. Michael's, 7.76. St. Patrick's school is .60 per cent. St. Thomas Aquinas has not been done.

In the public schools the Alexandra junior high school is at 8.2 per cent. Central Park school was not done. Connaught school is 19.38 per cent; that is even higher than poor. Crestwood school is 14.42 per cent. Again, that is exceedingly high. Earl Kitchener school has not been done. Elm Street school is 0.93 per cent. Again, I'm just guessing, because it needs so little maintenance, that it's a brand new school. George Davison elementary has not been done. Georges Vanier has not been done. Herald school, 15.16 per cent. Medicine Hat high school, 7.9 per cent. River Heights elementary has not been done. Riverside school, 4.13 per cent. The ones that have not been reaudited are Ross Glen school, Southview community school, Vincent Massey school, and Webster Niblock school.

Now, these reaudits have been performed since 2001. I would suspect that that's not a very good record to have them all done when they've had over five years to get them done.

There is $232 million in this supplemental funding for school upgrades and renovations, and $232 million is something I can't even comprehend. It is so huge. However, I think that putting those dollar figures out is only a distraction. What I want to know is: for that $232 million what were the outcomes? I don't want to just know the amounts because you can throw out huge amounts of dollars and huge percentages. What did those dollars really deliver? Obviously, not fixing up many of the schools that I've just referred to. Who got the dollars, and which school was considered of the highest need in this province, and if it was evaluated throughout the province and not within regions, did it really get the dollars that it needed?

What are these dollars for? At this point it would appear that they're only for catch-up maintenance. But what's required? How many dollars are required to go forward in some sort of a planned fashion? When is this work going to be done? Is there any time frame that this work could be done in? Is there any time frame that would include the dollars that they need to actually have it done? Of course, in this labour market I understand, as everyone else does, that there are huge costs to try to actually get these jobs done, and the longer you let it go, the more expensive it will be because labour is diminishing, and obviously salaries are rising.

Where is the plan? Why do we really need these plans? I think it's because we need the information to be able to budget forward. It has to be in a sustainable fashion. It cannot just be for maintenance. There has to be dollars that will recognize that there is growth in these schools. I don't think there's a school in this province that isn't growing, and the fact that we close small community schools and make young children bus is a disgrace, a total disgrace.

Another thing that I believe is that our kids deserve much, much better than portables. Please. Portables. These are windowless ATCO trailers, so let's call them what they really are. Trailers are expensive to heat, and the air exchange at any time is certainly questionable at best. It's very hard to learn when you're sleepy because the air is not fresh.

The point is that there is no long-term plan. In fact, there isn't even a short-term plan, and I'm not even sure that there is any plan at all. So far the dollars are only for catch-up, and that is not good enough. So don't quote me dollars.

Tell me what your outcomes are. Are our schools really good enough for our students to learn in? Are our schools good enough, and are they really safe for all of our students that are going to be our future? After all, we need the labour force. We need these kids to be graduating. We need them to accept apprenticeships. We need these kids well educated. They have to be educated in an atmosphere that is conducive to learning.

Mr. Speaker, I'll leave these questions out there. Maybe this government will consider these as crucial issues and actually come up with a plan that includes outcomes, which would reflect that all the maintenance is finally caught up and that there actually is forward thinking.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29.

Mr. Chase: If I could under Standing Order 29 ask the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East if she has a sense from her constituents of being left out of the boom? When I was speaking to residents of Crownsnest Pass, they expressed great concerns about the lack of twinning of highway 3. There was a definite envy of the power corridor between Calgary and Edmonton. I'm just wondering, in talking with your constituents and talking in your outreach with people from Medicine Hat, if they're feeling that the southern part of the province is left out when it comes to highway infrastructure.

Ms Pastoor: When I was on city council, I sat on the twinning committee for that highway 3. I'm trying to think. It was probably eight, nine years ago when we first sat on that. Then it was a huge issue. Now it is a huge issue, and they're still sitting at the table talking about highway 3 being twinned. It isn't just a question of: gosh, it would be nice to get through. It's a question that it isn't safe anymore, but then highway 2 is not safe either. I have to drive here every now and again, and the last time I came up on a Sunday, I clocked in at 140, and I was with the traffic. I was not leading it; I was in the pack. I was bumper to bumper, and I had guys beside me. I could barely move in and out, and I was clocked at 140. [interjections] That's not the point. The point is that that highway has to be enlarged the same as highway 3. I'm following trailers with three pups, and I'm telling you that they're going 140. It's not safe. It's the same as highway 3. The highway is obsolete. There's too much traffic on it to accommodate the traffic. It's obsolete.

However, highway 3 has exactly the same problems. The trucks that are coming through from B.C. will obviously increase if and when we ever get the Canamex up and the highway running, which of course is another whole issue that I'd love to discuss at some point. I want everybody in this House to go to Germany and go on the autobahn. That's what a highway looks like. Highway 3 must be twinned. They're still talking about it. Where's the money? Show me the money for highway 3, and I'll be happy, and so will everybody else along that corridor. We'll feel, finally, that southern Alberta is a part of this province because we're outside of the magic corridor.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: To the hon. member. Water is a key issue in southern Alberta. What would you like to have seen in the supplementary budgets in relation to water and water protection?

Ms Pastoor: Where do you go with water in southern Alberta? We hope that we can go to our reservoirs. We hope that these dams that we've put up are going to be enough. It isn't. It's oversubscribed. The water is oversubscribed.

One of the things that I found interesting with the international committee was that the Americans actually came to us and asked us if we would help them with their water storage because they are wasting it. They know that we are lucky – and I give credit fully to the government for this. Actually, I think it was under the Lougheed government. Anyway, we are lucky that we have had enough dollars to put in to create storage and pipes that will save our water. The Americans are still using wooden storage if, in fact, it's not out in the open. Some of our irrigation ditches and all of those are now enclosed. So we are very fortunate. But the fact that the Americans realize that they're wasting the water which is part of our water basin I think is a very, very serious issue.

Water, as we all know, is the oil of tomorrow, and if we're not smart now, we are going to be in deep, deep trouble. The majority of people are not going to be able to buy bottled water, so what are they going to do? It's a huge, huge issue.

I'm proud to say that at the Lethbridge water treatment plant as much water as we take out of the river we can put back in, and it has been treated. However, all along that river we have many, many feedlots that are not contributing to clean water.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Lethbridge-East, I'm not sure if Hansard is a document that the local RCMP regularly review for confessions, but perhaps you can take that up with the Solicitor General.

Ms Pastoor: I'm not afraid of the RCMP. It's those new sheriffs that scare the hell out of me.

The Deputy Speaker: On the debate, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to speak to Bill 44, supplementary supply. It's about sharing the Alberta advantage, and I guess that the questions we have to address today have to do with the role of government in ensuring that we all share in a well-planned, well-invested future. I want to talk about several areas. One is my constituents. The second has to do with their social concerns, some aspects of the schools, how this supplementary budget fails to deal with some of those issues, and finally some closing comments on the environment, which is also very close to the hearts of many of my constituents.

How are we managing? How are we managing our capital, our financial, human, and natural capital? If we're not balancing those three – financial, human, and natural capital – we are not really managing for the future. How are we sustaining in our planning these vital resources for the future, and why are we continuing to focus on gross domestic product as the measure of our success? When a forest fire increases our gross domestic product and more ambulance services and more casualties increase our gross domestic product, this is a very false measure of how we're doing. If we're planning and spending on the basis of gross domestic product, we are planning to fail. In fact, as we've said repeatedly in the House, what we're doing here in supplementary supply is recognizing the failure of planning and continuing to overspend based on nonrenewable resources. This is a serious issue for all of us in Alberta, and more and more people are asking for leadership in this province on planned, sustained funding.

We need to look at a future without oil. Clearly, that's coming within the next few decades. More and more people are saying that we need to see people and the environment and the educational processes as investments, not as expenses in this province. In that context, then, we need to look at policies and investments that reduce demand, increase efficiency, and increase investment in renewables. So it's in that context that I want to raise questions from people in my constituency in relation to their school systems and the health care system and the environment.

In the context, then, of our ideological commitment in this province to business over public interest, what has resulted is a counterproductive cycle in which there is increased competition and focus on money. There's a lack of trust now and an erosion of community. There is uncontrolled growth as a result of what we've seen in the oil sands primarily, but it's a reflection of the overall philosophy of this government to grow at all costs. Well, in medicine growth at all costs is called cancer, and as I've mentioned, it causes an erosion of community, a decrease in the health status of people, and an increase in health care demands, which is exactly what we're seeing. This needs to be cut off through a serious commitment to larger thinking about what our future holds and what our budgeting has to do with where we invest our dollars and how we increase the capacity of communities to care for themselves and care for the future. Compounding these factors is the struggle of our disadvantaged in this province: growing frustration and despair in those who cannot cope with the existing status quo; persons with developmental disability and their caregivers, abominably paid in this province; AISH recipients stuck at a thousand dollars a month, half of the poverty line. How are they expected to live in quality and health? Those on social assistance and unemployable and homeless youth are increasing. How is this reflective of our commitment to Albertans and to the future? This is a social deficit that we have to begin to address. We have paid off some of our financial debt. We have only begun to address social and infrastructure and health deficits as well as environmental deficits in this province.

The national report on welfare was a scandalous, scathing indictment of the way we are managing our most disadvantaged in this society. Where is the supplemental supply for the most critical and disadvantaged in our society? We have essentially decided that they're only worth 50 per cent of the support we gave them in 1986. Well, we gave ourselves 5.5 per cent this year. What does this say about a government and their morality?

Students are also coming increasingly to say that the stresses they're under have to be alleviated in some way. We have to minimize and assist them in getting through to be more productive citizens without an obsession with money after they graduate, which is what we're creating with high debt loads. Medical students and residents have indicated this week that they graduate with over $100,000 debt in most cases. Like other postgraduate students they are not given the opportunity of waiting till after they graduate to start paying down their debt. This is adding a tremendous toll in terms of their mental stress, and it has to be addressed as well.

Infrastructure clearly has been an important part of what has to be addressed in the supplemental supply, and we have to acknowledge that many good investments have been made to patch up the neglected infrastructure over the past decade. Schools, for example, have identified some of the key challenges. Most dominant in my mind in my constituency is the Marlborough school, which had to be closed down because of significant risks from the roof. It was leaking and potentially going to fall in.

The Calgary board of education released statistics on many others in my area. Nine were generally fixed this past year, and I commend the government for making the appropriate investments there. However, six are still in serious disrepair.

Ms Blakeman: Which six?

Dr. Swann: The Chris Akkerman elementary school, a raw score of 470, with $700 million needed to be fixed; Albert Park elementary, at a score of 830, with over a million dollars in needed repairs; David Oughton elementary, also in Calgary-East, 570 the score, with over one and a half million dollars needed in repairs; Belfast elementary, Calgary-East, 560 the raw score, with $1.1 million in repairs needed; Sir John Franklin in Calgary-East, 440 score, with $1.2 million deficit spending; and Holy Redeemer in Calgary-East, at 740 raw score, with $1.4 million deficit.

In my own region of Calgary-Mountain View are another seven schools that clearly have been neglected: the Briar Hill elementary, with a raw score of 490, nearly a million dollars deficit maintenance budget; Queen Elizabeth elementary and Queen Elizabeth high, both in the 700s as a raw score with, respectively, $1.3 million and $3.2 million in maintenance deficits; the Hillhurst community school, a raw score of 480, with $900,000 in deficit maintenance; Rosedale school, one of the wealthiest neighbourhoods in the city, with serious neglect in their school at over $677,000 in deficit; Crescent Heights high school, a very well-recognized school in Calgary, significant underspending with a $3.08 million deficit; finally, the most needy school, Christine Meikle for the handicapped, in my constituency, with a raw score of 920, amounting to a $1.29 million deficit in spending. This reflects some of what still needs to be caught up in both my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-East.

In relation, then, to Environment, which is, I think, woefully underfunded and on which our very future depends, I'm very disappointed to see the minimal supplementary investments. This whole ministry needs to be reviewed and a significant expansion of their scope in monitoring, in inspection strategies, and enforcement of our environmental legislation.

Most critically, our water inventory, is still very much behind. We still have no idea what's going on in our groundwater around this province. We continue to make allocations and give out licences. We continue to fail to measure how much water is being used in our province in spite of knowing that with climate change and predictions both in terms of glacial loss and changes in precipitation we're going to be facing a serious water crisis in the next couple of decades. We need to get a serious handle on water, both surface and groundwater, in order to manage it in a sustainable way.

Watersheds need to be critically examined for their protection and for sustainable practices that will ensure that our major communities continue to get water into the future. A recent foothills study that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and I attended in Chain Lakes raised very stark predictions about continued development in the southern foothills of Alberta and the need to seriously look at legislation that protects these from both foresting and other resource activity if we're going to have water quality and water quantity in the future.

The Rosebud community continues to be troubled by ongoing gaseous and deficient water in spite of the reassurance of the Department of Environment. They have not been able to do the adequate testing. They have still not been able to conclusively say whether or not the water has been damaged by resource activity. This is unacceptable. The people in Rosebud continue to wonder about their water, and there's increasing evidence that government is not being up front about what they're finding in people's water.

I was today meeting with scientists at the University of Alberta who see significant evidence that gas migration continues to occur in our groundwater. There is a resistance to talking about this in the public. The government is continuing to be challenged on the basis that it is siding with industry in silence and not recognizing that this represents a serious threat to long-term water independence in this province.

We again need an independent committee to look at this. The level of trust, especially in the rural areas among landowners, is at its all-time low in terms of the investigation of these water bodies that appear to have been damaged, some by resource activity, some by age and decline in well quality, but these need to be sorted out by all means and quickly if we're going to get restored confidence in rural areas and get back in a constructive way to look at a balanced development in rural areas. So I would again acknowledge that the Environment department is working hard, but it is failing because it lacks the resources and the political will, I would argue, to actually call it what it is. We've had some resource damage to water in our province, and there's an unwillingness to identify and state that and move towards constructive solutions.

A number of rural communities around Calgary have raised concerns about water and other developments in the area. When it's acknowledged by the government that we have overallocated the South Saskatchewan River, there is obvious concern about how we are going to manage continued demands for business and development, confined feeding operations. Any industry is going to need is going to need some water, and we have no idea at this time how we are going to make these difficult decisions about who gets to develop a business and who doesn't.

So those represent my significant comments on supplemental supply, and I thank you for the opportunity to raise this.

Ms Blakeman: Interbasin water transfers.

Dr. Swann: Interbasin transfers of water have been raised as I've just been reminded. Obviously, taking water to people is not a long-term sustainable solution. It is never going to be supported on this side of the House. We must begin to live within the means that we've been given. We cannot at a huge expense transfer water and disrupt ecosystems and create the conditions that are not sustainable, where people continue to grow and develop businesses because new water has come and then the endless cycle of expecting water to come to people instead of asking people and their businesses to move to where the water is.

So that is not a solution. It's obviously being discussed because we are increasingly stretched in southern Alberta even as it is, not even considering the considerable losses we've had over the century and will continue to experience with climate change in this next 10 to 20 years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned landowners' concerns in Calgary. My constituency has a big issue of low-income homes and affordable houses especially, and I would really appreciate it if he could draw some attention in this House, please.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Very much a concern in Calgary, obviously. I have many people who are living in handicapped conditions in my constituency, many who are being squeezed out of their accommodation as a result of the massive increases in rent. It's a very serious issue for the municipal, provincial, and federal governments to get a handle on as quickly as possible. People are suffering. People are living with extreme anxiety. One family, a young couple, both working and three children, is going to be forced to be out on the street if they cannot – even though they have jobs, they are low-paying jobs. They simply can't afford $1,850 a month, which now the rental accommodations in central Calgary are demanding.

So we need to find creative solutions. We need to assist some of the granny flats to get established. I know that the government has been making some strides in that. I think that's important. I guess I would argue that we need to collaborate as much as possible with all three levels of government to try and get our own investments as governments and ensure that the development community steps up and makes their contribution of 5 to 10 per cent affordable housing in any new housing developments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View commented on our trip last Friday to Chain Lakes, where we talked to environmentalists, local ranchers about their concerns with regard to water and also maintenance of the natural grassland. My question to the hon. member is: when we travel together to places like Ponoka and Turner Valley, Nanton, Trochu, Drayton Valley, can you comment on the unanimous concern of the extent and the potential for pollution of underground aquifers that we are hearing at those meetings attended by hundreds of individuals?

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. I guess the overriding concern that we experienced in the rural areas is a lack of confidence that what they're hearing from government is the truth, a sense of being reassured, that we know what we're doing, that groundwater is understood, that casing of wells is going along properly, that there's not been any identified well contamination from resource activity. So the overriding concern is a real cynicism.

Again, that comes down to addressing it head-on instead of pretending it doesn't exist and that these farmers are really imagining things and setting up an independent committee to look at these issues, some independent science, and reporting back in a timely way to actually, explicitly say: "These wells have been damaged by resource activity. These have not. Back off. These are the lessons we've learned from those wells that have been damaged, and this is the way that we're going to legislate protection and monitoring and enforcement in the future." Learn from what we've done, and move ahead.

I think that everyone believes that our resources are wonderful and that they should be developed. The question is: at what rate and under what supervision, under what standards and conditions to minimize threats to our lifeblood? These rural people know where their lifeblood is, and it's not in oil and gas. They feel violated in many respects by this unwillingness to accept genuine concerns and in fact genuine science that's saying: "We have some damage done. What are we going to do about it?" When are we going to face up to it and address the oil and gas industry and the public in an honest way and say: "This is what we're doing about it. We're going to confront it. We're going to deal with it, and we're going to solve it"? It's going to be a win-win for industry, for the public, and for the government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I hope I've still got enough time. I notice that there is an additional subsidy of the horse-racing industry contemplated in this budget, with $4.8 million for infrastructure assistance for municipal waste water to support a project in the MD of Rocky View that includes a horse-racing track and equine centre. Could I get our water guy to comment on the anticipated effect of this?

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. The time for Standing Order 29(2)(a) has elapsed.

Are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:39 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special family that's visiting from Calgary today. It's my absolute pleasure to introduce my friends Al, Noelle, Kathleen, and Nicholas Mah. They've made a special trip to our Legislature so that they can tour the Legislature. I think we'll even be going to your office this afternoon, seeing where you are as well. The children are very interested in that. I'm very glad that you're all here today, and I ask that you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two aboriginal leaders who have been involved in aboriginal issues, working for the government. Tom Ghostkeeper and Clifford Supernault are both working towards retirement and will be leaving the government. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In response to the Turner Valley Gas Plant's environmental contamination of the Sheep River and its surrounding area a group of residents from Black Diamond and Turner Valley have come together to address their concerns over site cleanup, drinking water supply, and environmental integrity. Two of them are joining us today, and I would ask them to please rise as I call their names. Linda Abrams is the leader of the Sheep River foundation, which is a group of area residents that formed specifically to address the contamination of the Sheep River and the surrounding area by the gas plant, and Roxanne Walsh is a member of the Turner Valley Gas Plant Committee for a Safe Historic Site. This committee is attempting to get stakeholders and community members together to come up with a solution that not only contains the problems but reclaims the Turner Valley Gas Plant as a historic site that is safe for visitors and also for those who swim or recreate in the Sheep River. I am pleased to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, and I ask that you join in welcoming them to this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly today guests from the Good Samaritan care centre in Mill Woods. The guests today are Dwayne Danforth, Rowena Emmons, Harold Ferguson, Earline Kwasnycia, and Linda McClinton. I'd ask these guests to stand or wave as they receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Dr. Gene Kalita, a well-known psychologist in the Edmonton region. Would you please rise, doctor, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, over the past few months I've been meeting with a number of municipal leaders who comprise the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability. Again this afternoon, immediately following question period, that minister's council will be getting together to deal with important issues related to municipalities. It's my pleasure to introduce one of the members who has joined us today, who I will ask to rise very shortly. I would like to point out that the president of AUMA, Mr. Bob Hawkesworth, was planning to be with us and will be participating in the meeting, but I understand that he has the pleasure of changing a tire on QE II at the present time, so he'll be a little bit late. We do have Mr. Don Johnson, who is the president of the AAMDC, with us in the gallery.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's interesting to note that in preparation for this afternoon's meeting this morning I read a speech that was given by the Minister of Municipal Affairs in 1962, reporting on the work of his advisory council, that was structured very similarly to the one that we have ongoing now, so history does have a sense of repeating itself from time to time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Diane Martin. Diane is the current president of the Alberta Lymphedema Association. The Alberta Lymphedema Association is a not-for-profit charitable organization founded in 2003 by a team of people who recognized the need to help people living with or at risk of lymphedema. The ALA works to make a difference and to empower affected individuals and their families to help manage this condition and is committed to ongoing education of its stakeholders. Diane has been affected by lymphedema for the past four years and has worked tirelessly since her diagnosis to effect change in the community. She's also the co-founder, along with Kirsten Hausmann, of the lymphedema therapists association. She's in the public gallery. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services in Grande Prairie

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The conditions in Alberta's health regions due to acute staffing shortages continue to deteriorate. Physicians in Grande Prairie feel that they have no support from local MLAs, no input into medical affairs, and they fear someone will die before the provincial government addresses the crisis. In a letter from the president of the Peace Country region medical organization, which I will table, the president states that “the growing deficit of family physicians has reached a crisis where whole communities may soon be without any physician.” My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that these physicians express concern that “many existing services are only one physician or one nurse short of complete collapse,” will the minister finally admit that this government has failed the people of the Grande Prairie region?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary. I would acknowledge that there are pressures in Grande Prairie. There are pressures in Fort McMurray. There are pressures in Calgary, quite frankly. You don't add 92,000 people to a province within one year and not have pressures on workforce. We are not unique. We are part of a North American phenomenon where workforce issues are a problem. We are taking action.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Peace Country health was unable to retain its only child psychiatrist for the entire region, will the minister admit that this government has failed children needing mental health services in the Grande Prairie region?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. A very interesting comment from Senator Kirby in the time that he worked on the mental health commission was that in fact Alberta is doing more for mental health services than anywhere else in the country. Clearly, there have been issues in Grande Prairie retaining a child psychiatrist. I spoke to the psychiatrist that remains there. We have been networking with Capital health region to put a bridge over troubled waters, if you will, for the kinds of needs that are either for the acute system or the mental health care system, and we have been working as best we can to provide that support measure when urgent cases come to the attention.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the intensive care unit and the surgical departments in Grande Prairie were both forced to close for a week earlier this month and face the same situation again, will the minister admit that this government has failed the Grande Prairie region's most critically ill residents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Over the last several weeks we have done a considerable amount of work with the Grande Prairie region. My deputy was there yesterday listening to the doctors, getting some of their ideas about attracting more physicians. It's not unusual in the summertime to find that the pressures in health regions are increasing because of absenteeism of some of the physicians and nurses and other health care professionals who choose to take holidays. But I'd have to acknowledge that the most important thing we . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, thank you so much.

The thing that I find most impressive is that the Capital health region has been assisting that region where needs can be met, providing locum support, and our rural physician action plan continues to build on the amount of dollars and amount of resources that we're providing.

Mr. Speaker, the last point: we doubled the amount of money this year in the academic relationship plan for physicians, putting more physicians in place, and I would remind the Assembly that we had a greater per capita increase in physicians, with 800 physicians more over the last few years, than any other part of Canada.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Calgary Health Region CEO

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The crisis in Grande Prairie, which has been building for years, is just one example from across Alberta of how this government has failed to deliver the health care services Albertans deserve and need. Yet documents just released show that CEOs of regional health authorities are paid top dollars, especially if they're connected to top Tories. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the serious and chronic problems of the Calgary health region, how does the minister justify the head of the region, Jack Davis, getting a $57,000 raise this year alone for a grand total salary of $593,000 plus a car allowance? Justify that.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member opposite has not looked closely at the delegation of authority from the province to the regional health authorities to manage their affairs, their staffing, their management issues as they see fit. That management authority looked at the marketplace, looked at what was happening in Canada for payments to people that provide CEO services, looked at the risk and liability of the position. I can share with you that in one of the larger Toronto hospitals they recently advertised and got a CEO for the cool price of $1 million plus benefits. The reality is that top health officials to run a top system are paid at a market price higher than what many other professionals are paid.

Mr. Speaker, they are addressing the questions to the wrong person. They should address those questions to the chair of that board. I can assure you that the chair of that board, speaking to me, is well satisfied that they are receiving value for money with the challenges and the planning that goes in place to run and operate a situation like Calgary's health region.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Mr. Davis is widely known to be a good Tory with close connections to the Premier and to the former Provincial Treasurer and only one year of experience in health care management when he was hired, is this minister actually confident that there is no one else in Canada who could do the job better for less?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite misses the point. First of all, this minister does not appoint that individual. That individual is accountable to the board. It is not up to this Legislative Assembly to get involved in the health care recruitment for CEOs and evaluate whether they're doing a good job. But may I say this: I am very confident that not only in the Calgary health region but throughout the health regions of Alberta we are getting yeoman service from excellent professionals that don't deserve the strikes and accusations and malignment that they are getting from the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. She speaks of accountability. What action has the minister taken to hold Jack Davis accountable for the outrageous contracts that he had the Calgary health region channel to his friends Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order to come.

The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think it's regrettable that in this House we are maligning people and making references to contracts without giving quite specific examples about what is outrageous, what is unwarranted, and the references to this party, to this government are totally without call.

Mr. Speaker, on my way into the Assembly today it was referenced to me that an hon. member of the third party called us monkeys. Quite frankly, I don't think the reference points and this kind of name-calling are necessarily appropriate either in this Assembly or out, and words like "outrageous" and the kinds of deleterious comments are not fitting to respond to.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Another point of order. Okay. [interjections] The hon. member has the floor.

Electricity Generation from Gas over Bitumen

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Yesterday in this House the Premier said that the millions of dollars' worth of gas that was used to subsidize electricity production in the oil sands belongs to the generators, not Albertans. My first question is to the Premier. Can the Premier explain, please, why this government believes that the gas used to subsidize electricity generation in the oil sands belongs to the generators and not the fine citizens of this province, who own the natural resources?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement, but the hon. member is alluding to gas over bitumen – gas over bitumen – and whether they use that gas to generate electricity or sell it on the open market is entirely up to them. They lose money one way or another. First of all, gas on the open market is very expensive, and gas to burn to generate electricity is very expensive. Either way, it's six of one and half a dozen of the other, and I would hope that the hon. member will understand that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister briefly.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, once again, there's a response to the hon. member across the side to a letter back in July, which I understand he tabled also, about this question in particular and fails to recall that I also mentioned in the same letter that gas that's used to help produce an additional product out of the oil sands, be it in their processes to get bitumen to a product that can be sold on the market, much of which is upgraded and refined, has actually created $75 million more than anything else that he would have called a waiver or otherwise. He doesn't talk about that, that we do charge a royalty on a final product produced and sold. It's in that sense that we've created the extra value, the tremendous value that Albertans are receiving in this case in specific.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how long will this government continue to subsidize generators of electricity at the oil sands while forcing Alberta consumers to pay record prices for the electricity?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, Albertans are not paying record prices for electricity. Secondly, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, these are not subsidies. These are products in the oil sands. It's a net profit. It's a net profit regime, 25 per cent of net profits. Their costs are deducted from them to sell a product, which is either bitumen or synthetic crude, that's upgraded from oil sands. From that we charge a royalty on the final products that are sold. There is no subsidy in this kind of a question that he asserts or otherwise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Minister of Energy admitted in a letter dated August 2, 2006, that $162 million worth of gas for electricity generation was exempted from royalties in 2005 alone, will the Premier now admit that he was wrong yesterday and apologize to the true owners of the resource, Albertans?

Mr. Klein: No, I'm not going to apologize for anything, and I wasn't privy to the letter.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, once again, in processes that the oil sands go through, in bitumen, in their upgrading to get it to synthetic crude, they create off-gases, a product that is then used for them to help create this bitumen and synthetic crude to be sold. It's in that that all the costs are deducted. There's no forgoing. If we had charged a royalty on that one, then they would have deducted it as a cost wherein in the end all we're trying to do is a simple system so that they would charge the royalty on the final product that's sold to the market, of which we receive substantially more in royalties than if we were focused specifically on that question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Hospital Bed Capacity

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning the NDP opposition released figures from Alberta Health and Wellness which showed that Edmonton and Calgary each have fewer acute-care beds than they did in 1992. In fact, despite Edmonton's population growth of nearly 100,000 people, we have 15 per cent fewer beds than just over a decade ago. The region has clearly not recovered from the reckless cuts of the 1990s, and we are facing longer waiting times in our hospitals as a result. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister admit that the government has created a bed shortage crisis by allowing a persistent gap between population growth and investment in new acute-care beds?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, no, I will not admit that. I am disappointed, to say the least, that the NDP opposition release that I have in my hands quotes these figures, that we lost beds from 1992 to 2004, and fails to account for the beds that have been added up to March 2006. In that period we added 470 acute beds in the Capital region and we added 165 acute beds in the Calgary region, and many other health care providers, both for continuing care, assisted living, and other forms of care beds, provide additional support to the health system.

Mr. Speaker, one final point. Many years ago when I was a nurse, gall bladder surgery might take two weeks in the hospital. Today it may take two or three days. Many outpatient services that are provided in day surgery and by new technology have changed the complexion of health care. The delivery through primary care and community health centres, in fact, very much supports a health care model where recovery is best facilitated in the home. So to look at the beds as an indicator that Albertans maybe are being failed in their health care system is not only erroneous, but it is misleading.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister just told the House that new beds have been added since the period covered by this document and given that I have a release from her department, October 14, 2005, announcing those beds – and clearly those beds have not been built – will she stand up and apologize for misleading the House? Those beds do not yet exist.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the release from October 2005 is for yet more beds that will be built, $1.4 billion worth that will be added still. The statistics that were quoted in their release were up to the end of 2004. Since that period the figures that I've just quoted to the House are the beds that were added and were opened from 2004 to March 31, 2006. Calgary, by the opening of the new southeast hospital in 2011, will have at least 700 more beds. There are many more beds that are scheduled for opening in the Capital region.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's unfortunate that the acknowledgement is not current, is not up to date, and I have just sharpened that point by pointing out in the last two years the additions that have been made.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that Calgary has grown by nearly 240,000 people and given that the minister's document does not include bed cuts as a result of the blowing up of the Calgary General hospital and the privatization of other hospitals, how can the minister justify the fact that Calgary has fewer beds now than it had in 1992 even though it's grown by 240,000 people in the meantime?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me use the simple example and the recent example of the children's beds and the opening that I spoke about yesterday. We had 80 beds in the Children's hospital, but they weren't all effective. Sometimes the rooms accommodated three children. When a child came in with a communicable disease, two beds were sterilized because one child was being looked after in the third bed, so nobody else could go into that bed. We're looking at effective beds now, and effective being a term which says that we can use all of these beds, that we are not ever without a bed that can be used. So in the Children's hospital, for example, we expanded to 135 beds. Once again, we have made several changes in Alberta to improve the health care of Albertans.

I would point out that over 85 per cent satisfaction in the delivery of health care service is exactly where we were sitting at the time that the last report was released, with the acknowledgement that in some areas services could be improved, but to the largest extent Albertans are satisfied with the health care they're receiving. As I've said, beds are but one indicator, and we have been doing our best to rebuild and add beds. Going back to the '90s and trying to prove that those were poor decisions to remove beds is a total fallacy. The removal of those particular hospitals was done to protect the people from being exposed to asbestos, and other construction was necessary and has taken place.

Energy Innovation Fund

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Energy unveiled the government's integrated energy vision, and earlier today he announced the program details for the $200 million energy innovation fund. As my constituents in West Yellowhead have a vested interest in the future of our province's energy industry, especially as it relates to coal development and conventional oil and gas, my first question today is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister explain how the energy innovation fund will help the coal and conventional oil and gas industries that are so important to the citizens of West Yellowhead as well as Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I will table a document called Integrated Energy Vision, one part of the rollout of the things which we can do to help accomplish the tremendous opportunity that's before Alberta. We leave about 73 per cent of the oil in the ground. We leave half of the natural gas in the ground. Only 10 per cent of our oil sands are in a proven category. You add to that the huge and enormous potential of renewables, the coexistence of energy development and environmental practices: all of those things to which we can apply the science and innovation that ought to be at the forefront. That's what this energy innovation fund is to help do, so that when we think about coal and clean coal environment, there are tremendous potentials given. There's more resource and energy in coal than all the oil and gas combined.

It's in that thrust that we've put together a $200 million energy innovation fund, announced in the first-quarter budget and more detail announced today. There are five sponsoring ministries: Department of Energy; Agriculture, Food and Rural Development; Environment; Innovation and Science; and Sustainable Resource Development. Through those development priorities we have enormous opportunity to create this value, an opportunity for all Albertans for centuries to come.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Environment. How will this new fund assure my constituents, who rely on water and aquifer water for drinking, washing, growing crops, and feeding livestock, that their groundwater will be protected, especially during coal-bed methane development?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that this will create a permanent monitoring network in the Athabasca oil sands. What it will be able to do is keep a constant eye on ground-water quality and quantity. Even more importantly, what it's going to be able to do, the money in the West Yellowhead area, is safeguard, of course, the important groundwater supplies, that we have recognized as blue gold. Everyone in this Legislature, all parties, do agree that it's such an important resource. But criticism has come in the fact that there hasn't been money. This is living proof of that money and another example of the long-term vision of our Premier and this government, of our work and the money that's going towards this important work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Acting Minister of Innovation and Science. What research is being done to develop the province's vast reserve of coal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Energy Research Institute, otherwise known as AERI, co-chaired by the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky – and I thank him for the hard work that he and his crew do with AERI – is working with the departments of Energy and Environment, as we earlier heard, as well as industry and the research institutions in Alberta and all across Canada to advance cleaner coal production. You know, in the next few weeks we will be announcing specific projects that will result in more innovation and power generation with fewer emissions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Continuing Care Costs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in my constituency are becoming vocal about the lack of support and commitment from this government to continuing care facilities. We owe our seniors a friendly environment where care is based on their needs, comfort, and independence and provides security, but residents are expressing anxiety and fear with the pressure to take on increasing costs. My first question to the minister of health: given that quality of life can be significantly improved when residents of continuing care facilities have an opportunity to participate in activities and have access to recreational therapy, what is the minister doing to ensure that these services are readily available?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, may I convey a compliment to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who has done yeoman's service in working with her residents in a particular facility, the Good Samaritan Society, and worked on the conversion from assisted living to long-term care. She deserves to be applauded.

It's a delight to see residents from that particular care centre today and acknowledge that there has been a lot of work that has to be done and is being done. I believe it was on August 18 when the last meeting took place between Capital Care, the Good Samaritan Society, and I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods was in that company. Residents were concerned about the recreational therapy services, the response time for call bells, and were concerned about the change from assisted living to long-term care because they believed that not sufficient kinds of opportunities were being made available to them. So we have undertaken to work with Capital Health to ensure and monitor that the continuing care standards that this government released will be, in fact, fully in place by early next year. We will work quite specifically in support of this facility to make sure that these kinds of opportunities exist.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the hon. member has other questions, so I'll sit down and let her go forth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. My next question: given that retaining staff is a critical factor in enhancing quality, when will the minister implement competitive wages, permanent positions, and increase staffing levels?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, we hope to have all of our standards in place which address staffing needs as well as wages by early next year. There have been a number of strides made in that direction. Obviously, we have to work with the regional health authorities to make sure that this is accommodated. In some of the regions it has been more quickly accommodated than others, but we are working with a target of full implementation of the standards by early next year. At that time we'll be able to more fully respond to each of the issues surrounding each particular facility.

I should note that some of the facilities, because of their staffing mix, are up to the standards, are being paid wages at the standard that would be appropriate, but there's still more work to do on others, and we acknowledge that.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: how is the minister prepared to address the issue of the increasing cost burden on residents?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports to respond on accommodation challenges. We have a recognition that in some of our facilities and in this particular facility converting from assisted to long-term care has created a hardship, and work is being done with individual patients. But if I could ask the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports to respond on accommodation challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. The accommodation fees for both facilities, whether it's a designated assisted-living facility or a long-term care facility, are for room and board services. They are regulated in long-term care. Those rates have not increased in long-term care for three years. The rate for private accommodation, for a private room, is $48.30 per day, and the rate for a semiprivate room is $42 a day. As you know, when the budget came in in February, we did place further funding into the budget, as I indicated to you, to ensure that as the increases for fees take place, which will be coming soon because they haven't increased for three years, we assist our low-income and our moderate-income seniors with that. Having said that, we also like to ensure that our seniors still have $265 at the end of the month, and that is taken into context when they pay their fee. I'd be willing to look into that further with you, hon. member, as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Supply in Southern Alberta

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans, particularly in southern Alberta, are becoming increasingly alarmed about the shortage of water available to sustain their quality of life. To the Minister of Environment. I know that you call water Alberta's blue gold and that everyone places a high value on this resource. My question is: what action is being undertaken to assure the people of southern Alberta that they'll have a reliable water supply for the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I said in this Legislature to all members a while back that if you were in a desert and had a choice between a barrel of oil and a barrel of water, what would one choose? I think it's obvious to us all. That's why our government in cabinet just approved a comprehensive water management plan for the South Saskatchewan River basin, referred to as the SSRB, which includes residents from Red Deer all the way to the member's constituency down in Cypress-Medicine Hat. This is a monumental and significant decision that clearly demonstrates this government's commitment to protecting our watersheds.

The SSRB water management plan provides a long-term vision for water management in southern Alberta. We have wonderful examples during drought where Albertans help their neighbours side by side, on how we work together as neighbours, helping each other with this valuable resource.

This is really the first plan of its kind in North America under Alberta's Water Act, and it's a key deliverable under our Water for Life strategy. I thank the members from all parties who are joining us at this international forum where 20 countries are coming to this province because of our government's forward thinking in terms of the actions we're taking, such as this monumental announcement we made today relative to the South Saskatchewan River basin.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that a key action of this plan is to stop accepting applications for new allocations on the Bow, Old Man, and South Saskatchewan River subbasins, how will municipalities, industries, and other water users in these subbasins be assured that they'll be able to continue to get the water that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to first of all thank all Albertans and the multitude of stakeholders who have sat on the watershed councils that we have met with because this is a very important and valid point. In fact, at the appropriate time I will provide highlights. In fact, in this document, to summarize, this plan reflects a balance between protecting the aquatic environment and the amount of river water required for economic development in the SSRB.

I want to assure my colleagues in this House today, Mr. Speaker, that the plan for managing this basin ensures a sufficient and sustained water supply for southern Alberta's economic growth and, at the same time, protects the basin's aquatic environment. Ultimately, this is a goal of our Water for Life plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that this plan will have serious implications for the people of southern Alberta, can the minister tell this House what role Albertans have played in the process to develop this plan?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I want to thank the multitude of Albertans, the watershed council members, the consultations that took place in the early part of January. We are currently also in discussion with the First Nations residing in the river basin. Input from Albertans on this critical issue will continue because it is ultimately so important to us all and, I know, to the members across the way.

So Albertans have made their voices very clear and loud, and the government has taken action based on the input, the very good input, that they have given to us. We're acting on it because we have a vision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Water Quality in Turner Valley

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The chief medical officer of health for the Calgary health region and the Turner Valley gas plant committee are concerned about contamination from the site that is entering the Sheep River, a source of drinking water for nearby communities. The health impacts of this contamination have not been explored, and concerns from citizens are bounced between Community Development, Environment, and Health and Wellness. No ministry is taking responsibility for co-ordination and leadership of testing and measures to protect the health and safety of area residents. My first question is to the minister of health. Why hasn't the minister advised either Alberta Environment or the Calgary health region to sample the water wells that are across and downstream from the Turner Valley gas plant historic site?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm very confident that the Calgary health region has undertaken the necessary tests and has undertaken the necessary due diligence for the health of the region. In fact, earlier in the spring I had an extensive conversation with the chairman of the Calgary health region. They were not only pleased to undertake that; they were very forceful in their acknowledgement that there were issues that they wanted to explore.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, for more information on either environmental testing or on sustainable resource development that may go on in the area, one of my colleagues would like to add to the response about testing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The chief medical officer disagrees.

My second question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister commit to conducting a comprehensive health assessment of residents in the area? Comprehensive. Of everybody.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment is continuing to monitor the Sheep River and looking after the local residents, and I'm going to ask the Minister of Environment to respond so that we don't get any incomplete or misinformation about what is going on based on the questions.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, quite contrary to the preamble, this government and this ministry are working closely with its residents.

We want to do the right thing. We are doing the right thing. We are doing the appropriate testing and will continue to do so.

I also want to say that I thank the hon. member from the Bragg Creek area and also the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, who have been working really closely with us and working on solutions. That's what we're harnessing our energy to do rather than what we are not doing or accused of not doing. Quite the contrary could be true in terms of what you are suggesting.

Ms Blakeman: That's why there's a problem. Health assessments get referred to Environment.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's get on with the question.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister explain why, when Alberta Environment was digging at the site 10 days ago, the site was not secured, nor were there any signs posted to warn parents with children playing at the campsite downstream about the contaminants leaching into that very same water. Why?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what the preamble of this question was is simply not accurate. Number one, why are we testing? We are testing because residents want us to test, and we are doing what citizens in the area have asked us to do. What the hon. member is really saying is, "Don't listen to the citizens of Alberta," which could be so far from what we do. So it is clear to us that our testing and our proper order of what we do is getting to the right decisions so that we can protect Albertans, contrary to what the hon. member is suggesting.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to supplement.

Mr. Ducharme: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to advise the House that the House is very much aware that earlier this year there was an advisory committee that was formed specifically to deal with the issues of the Turner Valley gas plant, where there has been $5 million spent to date as far as containment. I'd like to advise that we're presently debating in this House, what we have been doing over the past number of days, supplementary estimates. In terms of being able to set up a containment and diversion system for that plant, I can advise the House that tenders have been received, and hopefully a contract will be awarded very shortly in terms of being able to address the issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Skilled Worker Immigration Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Economic Development. In August the Canadian Federation of Independent Business reported that the biggest concern facing Alberta business owners is employee shortages. I understand that your department runs the provincial nominee program. What is your department doing to bring more workers into Alberta today?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, the provincial nominee program is a response from the province of Alberta and, as a matter of fact, other provinces to work with the federal government in terms of bringing foreign workers into the province. Normally, the involvement with an employer that has a shortage of workers and wants to use immigration as the response to that deals with the federal government, but under this particular program we are able to respond, then, to those particular needs.

Members of the House will know from their review of the estimates that we have currently in front of the House a request for additional funding for the provincial nominee program. Under that particular program we bring about 400 to 600 people into the province depending on the year, but clearly, Mr. Speaker, we're finding that that's not enough. So we hope that the members will respond in supporting our ask. Under the estimates we want to increase the resources to this program and perhaps move those numbers up to something like 1,200 per year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would the minister consider changing Alberta's PNP program to be more like Manitoba's or Quebec's? They nominate hundreds more employees every year.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. That actually is one of the reasons for the estimate request. We have heretofore been focused almost entirely on the professional and higher skilled ranks, but clearly there's more of a demand, there's more of a need in Alberta than what this program has been able to respond to to this point. As I mentioned in the estimates when it was my turn to speak, we are looking at this program, going to open up the categories now into not only the skilled areas but into semiskilled and unskilled and, hopefully, then be in a better position to respond to what is clearly seen as an urgency amongst employers in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: No further questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Affordable Housing

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Human Resources and Employment has so clearly pointed out, the Alberta Liberals are well known for their ability to think and plan for the future. To ensure sustainable growth and build a prosperous, compassionate society, this government must take action because homelessness is skyrocketing and affordable housing is so difficult to find. My first question would be to the minister of seniors. What steps has the minister taken to secure the $20 million that was requested by the seven-city delegation for the national housing initiative to provide prevention and support services for the homeless and towards the affordable housing crisis in Alberta?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. I can tell you that I'm fully supportive of the request that was put forward just recently to our standing policy committee by seven municipalities as well as community agencies that serve the homeless, and I want to tell you why. It's because it's innovative. It's unique. The initiatives that they've brought forward are different solutions than have been brought forward in the past. It's not for building more shelter spaces as much as it is for three pilot projects that they know have worked, the outcomes which were that they have outreach teams that assist our homeless as they move through the transition of housing, from emergency shelter to transitional housing to rent supplement. These outreach teams will assist people staying in that shelter by accessing the services that are available. So I'm fully supportive. I am moving that forward through the proper process, which, of course, is including my colleagues that will be very much a part of the decision-making.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Thank you to the minister for that answer. That's certainly what I was looking for.

But I'm still looking for $20 million, so I'd like to address my next question to the Finance minister. Is the minister aware that funding for prevention and support programs require fewer resources than dealing with at-risk citizens in the justice or health system? When do you think you could make that funding available?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a very competent minister who brings these programs forward as they're ready to be developed. I will totally agree with the member opposite that prevention should be our first priority in all cases. In all cases. More emphasis on prevention in health, on early childhood problems, on drugs, any of those areas, alternatives for children: this government believes in that firmly. But, again, I'll repeat that we have a most competent minister who has been a stalwart minister in bringing forward those issues and having action taken on them.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My next question would be to the Minister of RAGE. Can the minister attempt . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I have no idea who the member is talking about. If the member would enlighten the House, that would really be helpful.

Ms Pastoor: Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I'm sorry. I do apologize.

Can the minister attempt to identify any inefficiencies or areas that could be restructured to find the $20 million requested for the long-term and affordable housing plan?

Mr. Ouellette: You know, Mr. Speaker, I do have to agree with the hon. Treasurer that this government has its priorities set on prevention, early prevention, of all the different categories that the Treasurer said. Actually, we're always looking for efficiencies. We're always looking for different cases where we can save some money, but when we save that money, it still goes through Treasury and the business planning to come up with money for the different necessities that this government needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr.

Early Education for At-risk Children

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely shameful that this government has failed to implement an important Learning Commission recommendation to provide funding for full-day and junior kindergarten for high-needs children. The Edmonton city centre project's junior kindergarten program is an award-winning success story of inner-city Edmonton schools helping vulnerable children and families overcome challenges of poverty and lack of opportunity. To add insult to injury, it is now clear that this important program will no longer be funded by this government. My question is to the Minister of Education. Why has the minister forgotten to budget for at-risk inner-city children when this program is such a success?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Education ministry has not forgotten its obligations. In fact this particular program that the hon. member is referring to, I think he knows full well was a program funded by Children's Services. It was funded I believe for a period of three consecutive years or thereabouts, and it was in fact in a couple of cases extended for yet another year because it was a Children's Services program. The program being offered was not one of the recognized ECS programs, which would have enabled Education to fund it.

The member should know that if that particular batch of schools – I think there are three there – want some of these students funded, they have to come under the qualifications and criteria of an ECS-recognized program, and those options have been outlined to those schools. All they would need to do is identify the students who come into the particular criteria, and then they would be considered for funding by the local school board, which in this case I think is the Edmonton public school board, where the hon. member sat and would know that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, frankly, it's gobbledygook. Yes, it was provided by Children's Services, but the reality is that this program is no longer going to be there as of the 15th of September. I remember that the minister told me in a letter dated June 14 that he would work with the inner-city school project co-ordinator and, I quote, maximize available educational funding for the program. That was the promise. Why is this program not going to be funded?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that particular statement and that particular promise remain in place. We have worked with them, and the co-ordinators have indicated to us, the best I can recall anyway, that they do not wish to approach the school board to whom they would otherwise report for possible qualification under a recognized ECS program.

Now, if they were to do that, they would simply have to turn to the renewed funding framework manual, and they would see where additional funding is available. In fact, it's been increased significantly this year, and we do fund ECS children who, for example, are under mild, moderate, or special needs or gifted or talented to the tune of about $2,241 through the locally elected school board. So there are remedies in place to see programs like that continued.

But in this particular case, Mr. Speaker, that project was told in a letter written in September of '05 that funding would be curtailed – although it had been extended, it would be curtailed – in June of '06. So there was ample time for that case to have been brought forward.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not anything to do with special needs. The reality is that this program is done and out.

How can the minister justify saying that he cares about these sorts of programs that work and then not fund them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we do not have a mandatory junior K program in this province, and that is an entirely separate issue. Here if you have children who you know need help, be they mild or moderately delayed or perhaps they might need other assistance such as is provided through our parent link centres, there are remedies available. I'm sure the hon. Minister of Children's Services would augment if time were to allow on what the benefits are of some of these – is it 30 or 40? – parent link centres that have been established. Some of them are not too far from that area.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, would you like to supplement?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Education has indicated that his department has been working with the Edmonton city centre education program and the Edmonton public school board. We have established over the time of the ministry 45 parent link centres. Parent link centres look at early intervention and try and deal with these particular individuals. So they can utilize the parent link centres. There are four in the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 37 years ago, in 1969, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity took a bride. Thirty-seven years later we congratulate him.

2:30 Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Now let me take you all back, let us all go back 35 years ago, to August 30, 1971, and let me quote exclusively the words of Calgary writer George Koch as found in the book The Sixties Revolution and the Fall of Social Credit, pages 298-299. My sole change to the text is the inclusion of the full names of the individuals mentioned.

Yet even on August 30, election day, most Socreds remained hopeful. The Calgary Albertan had endorsed the incumbents, calling their overall record “the convincing argument for their party’s re-election on Monday.” Even the blatantly pro-Lougheed Edmonton Journal still thought the Socreds would win. [Peter] Lougheed himself compared the election to a Grey Cup kickoff; once the ball was in play, anything could happen – but had booked a vacation to start immediately after the election. For most of the day, Lougheed and his top aides were convinced they had lost. “I don’t think we made it,” he said glumly around 4 p.m. But as final returns trickled in, they began showing the PCs picking off even strong Socred candidates like [Don] Hamilton, who was running in a very conservative Edmonton riding. [David] Wood had keyed on Stettler as a bellwether, a constituency with a mix of ranching, farming and petroleum, where the population lived on farms or in small towns and were reasonably prosperous but not rich. It too went Conservative.

One after another the Social Credit bastions fell and at 9:13 p.m. CBC television predicted a Tory majority. The party was elected or leading in 49 ridings, to the Socreds’ 25. It was a vastly better result than any PC had dared hope for; the boldest prediction by the wildest optimists had been for a bare majority of 39 seats. By now, Lougheed’s spirits had revived, and he changed into a clean shirt and tie. A “nearly hysterical” crowd began to gather outside PC campaign headquarters at Calgary’s Westgate Hotel, wrote [Alan] Hustak, and a carnival atmosphere prevailed as Lougheed arrived to deliver an acceptance speech. Thanking both his supporters, and Social Credit for its “remarkable contribution,” he ended up with “This is the best darn province in the world.”

The Socred gathering at the Jubilee Auditorium in Edmonton was a funeral scene, as first Edmonton fell to the PCs, then much of Calgary. The party was shut out of the North. Central Alberta split. Only the rural south held, and not overwhelmingly. Eight cabinet members were defeated, and only eight of the 38 newcomers elected. “White-faced men bravely tried to look optimistic and women sat crying as they surveyed the wreckage on a large chalkboard,” noted [John] Barr.

[Harry] Strom, who stayed in his Cypress riding long enough to be sure he had won his own seat, arrived at the Jubilee about 10 p.m. He mounted the stage, conceded defeat, congratulated Lougheed on his victory, thanked his party for their work, accepted responsibility for the outcome, and hinted he would soon resign. President Orvis Kennedy presented Strom with a statue of a horse. A planned victory party in Edmonton’s west end turned into a brief, sparsely attended wake which soon ended with the host roaming his house putting away unopened bottles.

There are two footnotes. Footnote 1, the results showed Conservatives with 49 seats and 46.4 per cent of the vote, Social Credit with 25 seats and 41.1 per cent of the vote, the NDP with 1 seat and 11.42 per cent of the vote, and the Liberals with zero seats and 1.01 per cent of the vote.

Footnote 2, Alberta nearly lost Peter Lougheed the night he became Premier. After celebrating his stunning upset in Calgary, Lougheed boarded a corporate jet and flew with his wife Jeanne and a few aides to Edmonton to greet supporters there. The plane was met on the tarmac by a boisterous crowd of 300 that had to be parted by a flying wedge of Lougheed aides. On the return flight the weather turned foul. The pilot had to try twice to land, the second time successfully, then noticed he had passed the control tower on the wrong side and nearly plowed into the ground.

Members' Statements

Beddington Heights Community Association

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a fine community located in my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill. Beddington Heights is one of Calgary’s largest communities, with a population of over 12 and a half thousand people.

Beddington Heights has a large and active community centre, which contains a large preschool, a banquet hall, a gym, and an after school centre. Outdoors the centre is adjacent to a large field and contains an ice rink which becomes a skateboard park in the summer.

The community centre offers a large number of courses and programs, including soccer, volleyball, martial arts, dance, darts, yoga, fencing programs, and the community Block Watch Association. To help finance these programs, the community centre hosts over 40 bingos a year.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to salute Danielle Leger, the president of the Beddington Heights Community Association, and all of the other members of the executive and board of directors, who give freely of their time to make the community centre run and to make Beddington Heights such a great part of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Centennial

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Have you ever wondered what’s in a name? A name can reveal history, meaning, and direction. Never has this been more evident than in the recent Wetaskiwin centennial celebrations under the chairmanship of Alderman Bill Elliott.

The festivities commenced with the rededication of the city’s peace cairn. This monument marks a significant facet of Wetaskiwin’s extensive heritage. The history of the cairn goes back to a legend that tells of an 1867 battle between the Blackfoot and the Cree. As legend has it, the Blackfoot tribes sent Buffalo Child to scout out the enemy’s position as did the Cree tribe when they sent Little Bear.

When the two men ended up on opposite sides of a hill, each man maneuvered his way through a bush to a crest of a hill, where they came face to face. They fought without weapons. Because they were so evenly matched, neither could gain the advantage, and finally, exhausted, they rested. Buffalo Child pulled out his pipe and tobacco. Little Bear did likewise but found that his pipe had been broken in several places. The two men shared one pipe, and from that act of amity, peace was made. Since that day the hills have been known as Weteskewin Spatinow, meaning the place where peace was made.

We see this legacy continue today. Since the honorary chair of the celebrations committee, Dr. Leavert Johnson, was present at the first dedication of the peace cairn in 1927, he can tell us that the cairn was erected at that time to commemorate 60 years of peace between Blackfoot and Cree.

Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong was a special guest at the rededication of the peace cairn along with many young Hobbema cadets. He and Chief Gerry Ermineskin of Hobbema had the honour of unveiling the plaque for the cairn signifying peace. Representing harmony and growth, the peace cairn is both physically and metaphorically the focal point in the heart of the city.

I would like to thank the 250 volunteers and Mayor Don Montgomery of Wetaskiwin for continuing Wetaskiwin's tradition of peace and friendship into the 21st century in the hills where the peace was made and where peace is embedded in the name Wetaskiwin.

Disadvantaged Albertans

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want today to talk about the Alberta disadvantage. The Bible quotes Jesus as saying: inasmuch as you have failed to do this to the least of my brothers, you have failed to do it to me. All religions, in fact, call on their members for genuine support of the poor.

The recent Welfare Incomes 2005 report in Canada singled out Alberta not for its pre-eminent economic status but for its profound failure to meet the basic needs of its most vulnerable citizens: the unemployed, persons with developmental disabilities, the impoverished, including single parents and homeless youth, a burgeoning part of our urban populations in Alberta.

In Alberta today a lone parent with one child receives $12,300 a year. In real dollars this is roughly 50 per cent of what they received in 1986. This is unconscionable and hypocrisy at its height given this government's decision this year to increase MLA salaries by 5.5 per cent. Is it, therefore, any wonder that politicians have the lowest level of trust in this society?

The blind adherence of this government to an ideology of competition and markets is a profound insult to our humanity as it deprives people of their basic human rights. Far from enabling dignity and opportunity, this punishes people, including children, undermining their humanity and ability to contribute meaningfully.

This government has created a class of worthy and unworthy citizens, shaming all Albertans. Having eliminated the unworthy over the last decade, the Tories extended their same blame and rigid thinking to those that cannot work. Growing food banks attest to the failure of planning and commitment to our most vulnerable by this government. The irony of this blaming of our victims in Alberta is that from an early age Albertans feel that life is about winners and losers and increasingly focus on their own success at the expense of others, weakening the sense of community. The health of people, both mental and physical, declines. The health system is witness to growing numbers of people who are unable to cope with this unhealthy climate: higher depression, anxiety, domestic violence, and suicide.

Most Albertans do not support abandoning our poor. They share a sense of shame at how this government treats our most vulnerable citizens.

Thank you.

Special Olympics Softball Tournament

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, last weekend I had the privilege of attending the 20th annual Special Olympics Softball Tournament in St. Paul. The goal of this year's tournament was to have 20 teams for the 20th year of the tournament, the largest such event in the province. I am pleased to say that the organizers reached this goal and were even able to host a team from as far away as Parsons, Kansas.

Thus the tournament was an opportunity for participants from all over North America to play the game of softball, and what was truly a great event was that while the winning teams in each skill division won a trophy, winning was not the focus of the tournament. Camaraderie and sportsmanship were the real highlights of the weekend.

Mr. Speaker, this event would not have been possible without the support from the St. Paul community and the many, many volunteers who helped to address the challenge of hosting and co-ordinating such a large group.

At this year's tournament a very special individual was honoured for his continuing support and extensive work in organizing the Special Olympics Softball Tournament. For 25 years this individual has been part of the Abilities Network. Over the years he has enhanced the lives of many players, helped to ensure that all participants had an enjoyable time, and worked hard to make sure that this year's tournament went off without a hitch. Because of his dedication to this tournament, spanning a great many years, in his honour this year's tournament was renamed the Conrad Jean Softball Tournament. There is no other individual who deserves such recognition more than Mr. Jean. His support for the tournament and the players is truly inspirational.

I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate all the players and coaches on a successful and fun weekend and thank all the volunteers who helped make certain that the tournament went forward. Without them this wonderful event would not be possible.

Finally, I'd like to give a special thanks to Conrad Jean for his continued good work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

GlobalFest 2006

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. GlobalFest burst onto the scene in 2003 with 10 cultural pavilions and three countries competing in Alberta's very own international fireworks competition. The festival had attendance of close to a hundred thousand in the first year, making GlobalFest one of Calgary's top draws for local citizens and tourists alike.

GlobalFest's mandate as a not-for-profit society is to produce an inclusive, world-class multicultural festival and international fireworks competition that will offer the viewing public an affordable and accessible, multifaceted cultural experience. This year South Africa, Germany, Canada, and Hong Kong vied for the trophy from August 18 to the 26th.

Although some of the fireworks launched from Elliston park can be seen from other parts of the city, there is no experience like that from within the park. The reflection of the fireworks off the water and aquatic fireworks that bounce off the water are components that cannot be experienced unless you actually come to the park. But most of all it's the synchronization with the music that makes this such an exquisite experience. The fireworks are not just timed to the music, but they actually become an expression of the music itself, an exciting and unique new art form. The audiences were awed. Hong Kong won the GlobalFest 2006 trophy.

Thank you to the many volunteers that made GlobalFest such a success. I along with hundreds of thousands of others look forward with anticipation to next year.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are confused over the resource royalty system used in this province. Yesterday the Premier added to this confusion by stating that gas used in electricity production in the oil sands belongs to the generator, not the citizens of this province. That is wrong. No wonder we are collecting less in royalties than we should be.

Albertans are demanding a full public review of our royalty structure, not a secret, internal review conducted by the minister with industry insiders. The owners of the resource, the citizens, demand a say. Progressive Conservative leadership hopefuls also question the process and rightly so. Albertans have witnessed their fair share of the royalty pie decrease over the last three years from 24 per cent in 2002 all the way down to 19 per cent in 2004. This decline in resource royalties has cost Albertans potentially billions of dollars in lost revenue.

The government only needs to look at a report published recently by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to realize that the royalty structure may need to be adjusted to reflect the new realities in the energy market. This report shows that marketable natural gas and natural gas liquids produced from Alberta in 2005 had a market value of $50 billion. Why is it that we are only getting 13 per cent on the take of the natural gas and its byproducts produced in our province when the government's own performance measure sets a target of 20 to 25 per cent?

The government must be up front with Albertans as to what their fair share of the resource revenues is. These resources belong to Albertans, who overwhelmingly support the Official Opposition's call for a full public review of the royalty structure in this province at this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 26 years ago on this day I had the distinct pleasure of attending the wedding of the very beautiful Rose and the then handsome Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development. So congratulations to both of you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition with 335 signatures calling on the government to include coverage for complex decongestive therapy. This therapy is absolutely essential for people with lymphedema, an incurable condition which many women develop when receiving radiation therapy for breast cancer.

Bill 214

Public Service Disclosure of Wrongdoing Act

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 214, the Public Service Disclosure of Wrongdoing Act.

This bill would offer whistle-blower protection to public service employees to enable them to bring matters that they consider to be instances of serious government wrongdoing to the direct attention of the provincial Ombudsman.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Acting Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, the first dealing with the Vital Statistics annual review. This review summarizes all births, marriages, deaths, and stillborns that occurred in Alberta during 2005. Any member wishing to receive a copy of this can obtain one from my office.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table in the Assembly today five copies of the '05-06 annual report of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, otherwise known as the Alberta ingenuity fund. A copy of this report has been forwarded to all MLAs directly from Alberta Ingenuity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the government's copies of Alberta's Integrated Energy Vision, that we released last week. This is a look towards where we could potentially go not just with hydrocarbon integration but the value-added opportunities, the renewable platforms, the perpetual energy opportunity, and furthermore an approach to integration of planning for those opportunities among various government departments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter to table that I sent to the hon. Minister of Energy on July 12, 2006, and this letter is asking questions regarding the natural gas royalty regulation, 2002, specifically section 12 and section 15.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Miloslav Bozdech, who is the president of the Peace Country health regional medical organization, directed to the hon. Minister of Gaming, the minister of aboriginal affairs, the MLA for Dunvegan-Central Peace, the MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky, and the MLA for Peace River. I believe it's also CCed to a number of other individuals, including the minister of health.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is a chart produced by the Canadian Institute for Health Information. It shows that between 1994-95 and 2004-05 there has been a 19 per cent increase in the length of in-patient hospital stays in this province.

The second is an open letter sent from the Alberta Association for Community Living to all MLAs. The AACL would like to remind us that funding for persons with developmental disabilities has not been sufficient to sustain existing supports and services and that support is needed to ensure that all Albertans are able to participate in community life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon, both copies of e-mails from constituents. The first is from constituent Maureen Slater, who is writing expressing her concern about out-of-control rent increases in Edmonton and, indeed, across Alberta, and particularly that landlords can increase those rents by whatever amount they choose once every six months, and obviously that is creating an awful lot of hardship for many residents in this province.

The second correspondence, Mr. Speaker, is from a constituent, Stephanie Ibach, who is writing requesting that the province change the provincial and federal tax laws – well, clearly, the provincial tax laws – “to allow a university student to transfer ALL of his [or her] tuition credit to [their] parents or other eligible persons.” Currently, legislation allows only a $5,000 transfer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment copies of the approved water management plan for the South Saskatchewan River basin. This plan itself provides long-term vision for the water management in southern Alberta, and it’s another tangible success under Alberta’s Water for Life strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Referring to Nonmembers

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with respect to Beauchesne 493(4), essentially, which reads on page 150-51 as follows under Protected Persons: “The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.” I have other citations I will refer to momentarily.

I think it was pretty clear this afternoon as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition started his second round of questions – I believe it was his second round of questions – that he did make some imputations that I felt were improper and violated this particular tradition of the House, where we do not cite names of individuals who are not here and able to speak for themselves and defend themselves. I don’t have the benefit of the Blues yet, Mr. Speaker, because they’re not available to me to quote you chapter and verse of what was said, but I’m hoping that members who were present did understand that that was what the hon. opposition leader was in fact doing.

In fact, he began this approach yesterday. Or maybe it wasn’t him; maybe it was another one of the members in the opposition. They were maligning another private individual. Today they tried to malign two additional private members during question period, and I find that that violates the traditions of the House.

In Erskine May on page 348 it clearly states the following: “Questions to Ministers must relate to matters for which those Ministers are officially responsible.” It goes on under sub (3) to say:

It is not in order in a question to ask for action to deal with matters under the control of local or other statutory authorities, or of bodies or persons not responsible to the government . . .

And it gives examples.

. . . (except where there is a government shareholding in such companies).

Clearly, the issue that was asked about today by the hon. Opposition House Leader dealt with a health authority, and questions about health authorities would likely be acceptable. At least, they have been in the past. But to name individuals who are employees of that health authority and not directly employees of the government, which the minister, therefore, is not responsible for, is clearly in violation there.

I would also mention that the tone and nature of the hon. opposition leader’s questions seemed to be of almost a threatening nature, and we would note under Beauchesne 487(1) and (2), where threatening language is referred to, it says the following:

- (1) Threatening language is unparliamentary.
- (2) Words may not be used hypothetically or conditionally, if they are plainly intended to convey a direct imputation.

I think that did happen, unfortunately.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would look at the citation under Beauchesne 409(1) and (7), wherein we again have the tradition of question period explained in part under (1). It says, with reference to question period: “It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.” Clearly, the hon. opposition leader was expressing an opinion, which went far beyond normal opinions that are allowed in this House, perhaps.

Under (7) it says: “A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.” In this case we have a person who is referred to that is not able to be in the House and is not an elected member.

So I would find it appropriate to bring this matter to the attention of the House, particularly with respect to the first citation I mentioned, Beauchesne 493(4), about the Speaker cautioning the members, and I look forward to your ruling in that regard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to answer the points that have been brought forward by the Government House Leader and, in fact, to rebut them all, for they’re well intentioned, I’m sure, but inaccurate.

Now, there seem to be two or three matters that the Government House Leader was most concerned about, and the first was naming the individuals. Well, what the Leader of the Official Opposition was doing was actually naming the contracts, and since the contracts were actually held by the individuals, the only way to refer to the contracts was by naming the individuals that had them. That’s the only way to make clear what the topic is that we’re talking about. Otherwise, it is so vague as to be meaningless and not very helpful to the minister. Had the contracts been held with Alberta numbered company 123456, I’m sure we would have been happy to refer to the contract so. But that is not the case. They were with two individuals, who were in fact named.

That is public knowledge. It has been discussed in the media a number of times. As a matter of fact, the two individuals that have been named were named repeatedly in an exchange on April 11, 2005, in Alberta Hansard, appearing on page 643. Certainly, there was no point of order called at that time and no caution coming from the Speaker about that, again around the same actions or contracts. So the naming of the individuals is connected to the contracts, and that’s how they’re identified.

There was also a reference to I think it was 493(4), in which the Government House Leader has acknowledged that referring by name to Mr. Davis, who holds a position that is directly accountable to the health region and to the Minister of Health and Wellness and, further, to this Assembly, is in order. So that was not the problem. There was no maligning of the individuals. It is definitely connected. The sentence is, “for the outrageous contracts he had with the Calgary health region channel to his friends Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois.” So it’s definitely referring to the contracts there. There was no maligning. “Outrageous” refers to the contracts, and I think that $8,000 for one speech is pretty outrageous. Certainly, I have media reports which comment on that as well as the contract that Mr. Love had for verbal advice at $42,000.

Finally, the Government House Leader seemed to be saying that the Leader of the Official Opposition was voicing an opinion. In rereading the question that I have in front of me – and I was sitting here and listening carefully, and I do not believe that the Leader of the Official Opposition extemporized at all, but we can certainly check Hansard – there is no opinion that is ventured here. It is factual on comments with the connections between the Premier and the former Treasurer and the CEO of the health region. That’s all well documented. His resumé is documented. None of that is an opinion or an invention. It all exists in fact. The Government House Leader did not give any detail on what opinion he thought was being voiced here, but what I’m looking at is all connected to fact, which I’ve been able to assemble.

Finally, the “threatening language” is a really interesting one because, again, as I look at this, I mean, nowhere in here did the Leader of the Official Opposition say, “Do this or else” or “I’m going to get you” or “Step outside” or any of those other sort of phrases that we traditionally associate with some sort of a threat of either physical harm or harm to a career choice or losing your vocation or something like that. There just is no threat here. The language is strong, but there’s a lot of strong language in this House. There’s absolutely no threat in here. There’s a question. There are some facts that are stated, and it’s directed specifically to: what action has the minister taken to hold this person accountable? I don’t see how that’s threatening, certainly not either to the individual or to the minister. So without the Government House Leader giving some indication or a quote of what he felt was the threatening language, I don’t see it in here, and I would maintain that there was no threatening language.

Again, no imputation against a member. Any actions that were quoted in here are verifiable actions. It was accepted that the given name of the CEO of the health region is appropriate to be used. The other two individuals named have been named in this House on a number of occasions, and I gave you an example of one time. Their names were used in direct connection with the contracts that were the focus of the question. There is no threatening language that has been used, and neither was there an opinion voiced on anything, unless it’s about being a friend, and I know that there’s a Speaker’s ruling in 1997 in which he admitted that it’s okay for Tories, even top Tories, to have friends. So that would be the only thing I could see being an opinion there.

So thank you very much for the opportunity to refute and to rebut what the Government House Leader has brought forward as a point of order. I maintain that there is no point of order available under any of the citations that he listed.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Would any other hon. member like to participate?

That having been the case, then we will now deal with this matter. All of the citations quoted today, by the way, were the appropriate citations, and hon. members can review those citations again at their own opportunity.

Just for a quick referral here Beauchesne 493 in particular says: (3) The Speaker has traditionally protected from attack a group of individuals commonly referred to as “those of high official station”. The extent of this group has never been defined. Over the years it has covered senior public servants, ranking officers of the armed services, diplomatic representatives in Canada, a Minister who was not a Member of either House, and the Prime Minister before he won a seat . . .

(4) The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.

There are other citations as well.

The chair listened very attentively to the text of the question and really has great difficulty finding this an appropriate point of order, and let me explain why. Number one, the name of the key individual cited in the particular question, who is a member from outside of the House, is public information as a result of legislation passed by this Assembly. It was this Assembly that passed legislation which caused full disclosure of the CEOs of all health regions and other senior officials to have their name, their benefit package, their salary, and everything else listed in an annual report. This annual report then is not made public by the health authority. It is tabled in the House by a minister of Executive Council. It is this House which approves the full 100 per cent expenditure of health budgets in the province of Alberta. There is a direct flow and a direct connection with respect to that. So we’re not seeing inappropriate-ness at all with respect to the naming of such individuals.

In terms of opinions all members have opinions on everything. If they want to say that somebody making $599,000 a year with a bonus of whatever it was – $54,000 a year – is outrageous, that is their right to make that statement. There’s nothing that prevents a member from saying that, the same way that for every one of us, when we go home on the weekend, our constituents look at us and ask us, “Well, how much money do you make as an MLA?” We tell them, “Sixty-seven thousand dollars a year.” They say, “That’s outrageous.” So opinions vary. We’ve heard already today in the Assembly another hon. member saying that the salary of an MLA was outrageous.

In terms of temperament, yes, there’s absolutely no doubt that when we get towards the dying days of a session, the temperature always seems to go up a bit, and people tend to be a little more aggressive in the questions. But that’s the give and take of a parliamentary democracy.

The chair would just like once again to ask for temperance with respect to everything, temperance in the question and temperance in response, but we’re going to move on from this particular matter.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you have a point of order?

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Martin: I’ll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. It’s more a point of clarification. The Minister of Health and Wellness said that I called the government monkeys or something like that. I want to clarify what I said so that the Assembly is well aware. I did not call government members monkeys or even compare them to monkeys. What I did say is that 82 monkeys could run this province better than this government. That’s my point of clarification.

Ms Evans: So, Mr. Speaker, if I can understand that clarification – and the comments were made by the media gallery to me outside about that reference, and I declined to get into the cesspool of name-calling – what I understand that the hon. member has just said is that our planning, our capacity as MLAs is less than that of monkeys.

The Speaker: Well, I think we should bring this whole matter to an end. First of all, this purported reflection was not made in the Assembly. The hon. minister said that she got it second-hand, if I recall it correctly. So we're dealing with a matter that wasn't made in this Assembly; it was made third-hand. Then we had a confession from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who was not named by the Minister of Health and Wellness. So I think transparency has come about in a way that this is totally clear for everybody now. We're all honourable members with a great deal of love and synergy.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 44
Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think we'll just proceed with the discussion of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2) during this time in committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to lead off debate in the Committee of the Whole on Bill 44, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). I think it's important to recognize the "No. 2" that's printed on the front page of this bill because what it tells Albertans is that this is the second time this year that the government has come back to this Assembly, asking for more money than they had budgeted. I think that's an important distinction.

Before I get into my comments, Mr. Chairman, I would like to acknowledge once again the Minister of Finance and the respect I have for her and the respect I have for the assistance that her staff provides myself and my researcher. As I've pointed out before, I actually have one-fifth of a researcher because the Official Opposition does not actually receive a whole lot in the way of financial support, so we don't have the same benefits that members on the other side have in terms of support. So myself and my 20 per cent of a researcher certainly do appreciate the help that we get from the minister. We do get a lot, and they're always very respectful of the job that we have to do. As I've pointed out before, I do believe that this results in better debate and, ultimately, better legislation.

I'd also just like to acknowledge that the Finance minister and myself, I think it would be fair to say, probably think more alike when it comes to matters of finance for this province than either one of us would ever admit publicly. Having said that, I have some serious problems with this bill and particularly with the process that leads us to debating this bill today.

I said before that I'm not going to necessarily complain about a lot of the money that's being asked for by the government in this bill, although there are some instances where I do question the money, but for the most part this is money that I think it would be fair to say could have been recognized three or four months ago that would have to be spent.

The real question is the validity of the budgeting process that the government undertakes, how much worth there is in it when we come here every spring to debate the budget, whether or not there is adequate planning and adequate recognition on the part of various departments as to how much money they will be needing for the coming year, and quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, whether or not there is adequate discipline on the part of the government in terms of sticking to a budget that this Assembly passes. I would certainly argue that, in fact, there is not adequate discipline, that there doesn't seem to be much willingness, if any at all, on the part of the government to pass a meaningful budget and then show the discipline to stay within the bounds of that budget.

It may have been mentioned previously but I think it's worth noting what happens to other entities if they, in fact, exceed their budget. A graphic example, for sure, is individual MLAs. When their constituencies go over budget, they're actually required to deduct the amount of overrun from their next year's budget. Now, I'm not suggesting that we would want to see that happen in the case of the Alberta government because the people of the province would then suffer for the mismanagement of the government, which it could probably be successfully argued they do anyhow.

You can look at school boards, for example. When they go over budget, they're subject to audit by this government. When health authorities go over budget, they have to come begging cap in hand to the government for more money. Sometimes they get it; sometimes they don't. In the case of the Calgary health region, which has been discussed a number of times in the Assembly today, they're getting a little more money but not enough to cover their budget overruns. So whether it be MLAs or party caucuses or school boards or health authorities, there are some relatively tight reins on their budgeting and, certainly, not just a matter of giving themselves more money if, in fact, they do go over budget.

This government, however, not only makes it a practice but, in fact, it's almost without saying, it's just an automatic, a given that we will find ourselves debating in this House at least once a year and quite often twice a year supplementary spending. They just come back and get more money. It's that simple. It really, as I said, leads to a lack of discipline in terms of sticking within a budget.

One of the biggest concerns that I have, Mr. Chairman – I mentioned this in the press conference last week when the minister gave her first-quarter update – is that this document, this Bill 44 that we're debating this afternoon, is asking for about $1.5 billion in extra spending, which not coincidentally, I would argue, is almost identical to the amount of extra money that the government took in in the first quarter of this year. At that press conference the minister announced an unbudgeted surplus, an even bigger surplus than what had been forecast in the budget and what we had approved in this Assembly, of $1.5 billion, and here we are today debating the expenditure of $1.5 billion. So quite clearly we are, as I've argued before, spending the money as fast as it comes in. We're spending the money as quickly as it can come out of the ground. There is no real effort whatsoever to save this legacy for our children or their children; rather, we just spend it as quickly as we make it.

Mr. Chairman, I've argued in the past that we should perhaps be looking at an idea where we would save up front some of that natural, nonrenewable revenue so that there would be something left over when this is all over. I've referenced the bumper sticker in the past, and I won't read it verbatim because I got into trouble with this House the last time I used the exact language. Certainly, the bumper sticker – and many of us had them on our bumpers in the mid-80s – talked about making sure that there was something left over the next time, and here we are spending the money as fast as it comes in.

I have a real problem with the fact that we continue to have on the books in this province legislation that demands that every single penny of net income from the heritage savings trust fund go into general revenue. I can't imagine that we have that legislation on the books at a time of unprecedented wealth and unprecedented revenue from nonrenewable resources, that we're still making ourselves, mandating ourselves, legislating ourselves to put every single penny of income from that fund into general revenue and thereby raping that fund. I've talked before about how that fund is worth only approximately half of what it would be worth had we at least inflation-proofed it since 1987, which we failed to do until only a year and a half ago. So the very minimum that I would ask of this government is a commitment to at least save the revenue that that fund generates. And it's not just me saying that. Everywhere across this province when people learn of the fact that that money gets dumped into general revenue and isn't saved in the fund, they can't believe it either.

Now, we talked about unbudgeted surpluses, and I mentioned that in the first quarter alone this year the unbudgeted surplus is $1.5 billion. In fact, Mr. Chairman, over the last 12 years the total amount of unbudgeted surpluses – now, this is money that is over and above what we said we would make extra. What we said we would earn beyond what we spent, over and above that. We're now in – I can't remember the exact number – something in the order of $35 billion in the last 12 years. The Finance minister said many times – and I agree with her – that it's better to have more money at the end of the year than you thought you were going to have. I don't disagree with that, and I don't think anybody does. Clearly, this happens year after year, 12 years in a row.

Last year it was $10 billion more than we had budgeted that we would have left over at the end of the year, and there's every indication that it could very well be that much again this year. We passed a budget only three months ago that showed a surplus of $4.3 billion. Already that number is up to $5.9 billion, nearly $6 billion, and that's after only the first quarter. So there is a very realistic expectation that if oil prices continue to hover around $70 and $6.50 or $7 for gas, we could once again be looking at a $10 billion surplus.

The Finance minister at that press conference last week stood and answered a question about unbudgeted surpluses and admitted to the people of this province that the government does not have a plan for how to use those unbudgeted surpluses. She said: we're sitting on it; we're watching it collect interest. That's the only plan, to sit on it and watch it collect interest.

We as the Official Opposition have been arguing since early 2004 that at the very least we should have a plan for unbudgeted surpluses, and we've outlined it: 35 per cent for the heritage savings trust fund, 35 per cent for a postsecondary endowment fund, 25 per cent to address the critical infrastructure debt, and 5 per cent to go to an endowment fund for arts and humanities. I've said before, Mr. Chairman, that you can argue the percentages, you can argue the allocations, you can argue the uses of those funds, but you can't argue that it is a plan that would deal with surplus dollars, which this government and the minister the other day flat out acknowledged that they don't have a plan for. It's just a terrible disservice to the people of this province and to future generations that will follow us to admit that.

Mr. Chairman, we were called back into this Assembly for this very rare, very short summer sitting ostensibly to approve added dollars for education. It's been argued by speakers before me both in second reading and during Committee of Supply that this was entirely predictable, and I'm certainly not going to stand here and suggest that we shouldn't approve extra money for education. In fact, I support it wholly. The truth is that there's probably not enough money here for education. In fact, I think the minister has acknowledged that there will be more money coming, that there's a need for more money.

The question is: why couldn't they have seen this coming? The Minister of Education has trotted out excuses like, "Well, you know, they don't do their budgeting until late in the year, and it doesn't mesh with our budgeting" and so forth. The reality is that there were indications from school boards long before the budget was ever introduced in this Assembly back in March that there would be needs above and beyond what the government was willing to give. I've got letters in my office from teachers, I've got letters in my office from various members of school boards indicating that they had asked the government for more money. The capital plans of these various boards across the province show that they need more money. So for the minister to suggest that they weren't aware of the need or that the exact dollars weren't there in advance I have trouble accepting because, clearly, it had been communicated time and again to the government, to the Finance minister, and to the Education minister that these needs were going to be there.

To come back now, quite frankly, at the end of August and finally approve that money almost does a disservice to the various boards because now they're left scrambling, trying to do what they should have been able to do back in May and June. It's questionable whether or not they're going to be able to get things in place in time for the start of the school year. In fact, Mr. Chairman, you're probably aware that some of the schools are already back in, so we've got kids in schools, and we don't have teachers. They might be there next month if we can find them. If those teachers that we laid off back in June haven't found other employment, if they're still available by some chance, perhaps we might get them back. We may be able to move towards reaching the goals of the Learning Commission in terms of class size, but there's absolutely no guarantee whatsoever that that's going to happen.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about school fees. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung has talked an awful lot about school fees in this House. He's presented petitions in this House from constituents of Edmonton-McClung regarding school fees. I just want to outline some of what's going on out there. I'm not going to name the high school. I don't necessarily think it would be fair to point them out in particular because, quite frankly, I don't think that they're all that different from anybody else. If I were to suggest that this one school is doing this in terms of fees and somehow leave the impression that they're different from others or that others aren't doing this, I think that would be unfair.

Here's an example from a registration handbook, some of the fees that this particular high school is charging this year's registrants. I think you'll agree with me that some of them are unusual, and many of them I'm sure that most people would have thought would be covered and certainly should be covered by the Education budget and wouldn't necessarily be expected from parents.

The first one that caught my eye, Mr. Chairman, is parking. This particular high school in Edmonton is charging students to park. Now, there aren't very many students that actually have the opportunity to drive to school. Most, I'm sure, take transit. But can you imagine? There's a $44 per year parking charge if a student is fortunate enough to have a vehicle to drive to school. I've never heard of that before. It took me by complete surprise. I don't know if they charge the teachers for parking as well or not. I'd be curious to know that.

Optional fees: bus passes. Thirty-eight dollars now for a bus pass for a student to attend school. We've talked about this before. We know that the minister has actually given a little more money to the schools for transportation, yet this same school charged $30 last year, and it's $38 this year. Now, we talked a little bit earlier today about MLA compensation. I don't think there's an MLA that can't afford to pay $38 for their child to buy a bus pass, but I can guarantee you, Mr. Chairman, that there are a lot of parents in this city who will find that increase very problematic. It concerns me a lot that some kids might end up now walking to school in a situation when they wouldn't normally have to, and perhaps it may cause safety concerns. I'm not sure. But I really do think that's quite telling, that we're now charging $38 for a bus pass.

Printing. Ten dollars each student has to pay for access to printers to print off homework that is assigned by the school. Now, I understand that when this was questioned at this school, they were told: "Well, you can print your work off at home. There's nothing that says you have to print it off at school." I'm not sure that all children have access to a printer at home. Most families, I'm sure, probably do have computers and, perhaps, printers at home, but not all do, and certainly the families that would least likely have printers and computers in their home would probably be the same families that could least likely afford to pay $10 to the school to have their homework printed off. I really question that.

A wellness fee. Now, we've talked an awful lot – and, in fact, the Minister of Finance acknowledged earlier today that prevention is the best medicine. Again, I don't think too many members would disagree with that. This particular high school – and it's not unusual; I know from experience with other high schools – is charging $40 in terms of a wellness fee to allow students access to their health and wellness centre. So for these kids to go and work out in the gym, use the treadmill or use the free weights, they have to pay $40. I think that absolutely flies in the face of government initiatives to get children more active. We've mandated physical activity in the schools now, yet we're turning around and charging them 40 bucks if they want to go work out in the gym.

Phys ed 10. Thirty-five dollars for transportation to the aquatics and arena units. Now, again, we've mandated that kids be physically active. We're encouraging them to do things like swim and play hockey or floor hockey or indoor soccer, yet we're charging $30 for them to have that opportunity. A $75 fee for phys ed 20 and an $85 fee for phys ed 30, and no indication as to what those fees are for.

Science. There's a $30 charge for introduction to engineering and a $15 charge for marine biology. I'm assuming those are for workbooks. I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman. But it causes me concern once again that parents of kids taking science are being hit by these extra charges.

Here's one that blows my mind. Math 14, 24, and math 10 applied: a $15 charge to cover the cost of student workbooks. To cover the cost of student workbooks. My colleague from Lethbridge-East is shaking her head, and you should all be shaking your heads. Student workbooks. Would it not be fair to assume that a student workbook in a math class should be covered by Alberta Education? We're asking parents to ante up separate for that?

I look forward to the opportunity to carry on, Mr. Chairman. I have a lot more.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). I want to start by making some observations on the peculiar nature of this session. I have spent nine years in this House and started on my 10th, a few months into it. First time in those years that a special session such as this one is being held. Supplementary estimates have been a yearly exercise, but usually this House has dealt with them a couple of times a year during the fall session and then again during the spring session, when monies have been spent as part of the appropriation and supplementary supply estimates.

This session I said is unique certainly in the last nine and a half years that I've been around. I would not be surprised if this kind of session is unique in the entire 100-year history of this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, who certainly has a flair for historical vignettes, probably can dig up this information and inform us one day if, in fact, this session stands out as the lone and only example of the kind of session that has been called, especially less than four months after the primary budget for 2006-07 has been passed, to deal with additional monies needed for that budget.

Why is this? Why do I make this point, Mr. Chairman? I think it is important to begin to grasp the significance of this happening. It seems to me that it certainly looks like a lack of any idea in terms of planning, in terms of forecasting costs, and in terms of ensuring that for the areas in which public services are to be provided by this government, there is adequate funding committed at the appropriate time in the year; that is, at the beginning of the fiscal year during the debate on the budget.

This is poor governance, Mr. Chairman, extremely poor governance. If one needed any evidence of this, it's right here. People have called it a band-aid budget, a remedial session. Others call it an emergency session. Why the emergency? No one has made it clear. But it certainly feels like sitting in an emergency room in a hospital, trying to have the problems arising from a stroke that may have occurred three months ago being addressed in the hospital emergency room. Just as going to an emergency room three months after a stroke is not very helpful, will not likely lead to much remediation in terms of returning to good health, similarly I think this kind of exercise in an emergency session, or a remedial session, as the leader of my caucus has called it, is no guarantee that the government is about to learn to return to appropriate budgeting practice and forecasting. It has all the tools. It has all the resources, all the experience, but it looks like there is an evident inability to learn from experience.

The two arguments that are given are, one, rapid population growth. Well, that's been happening in this province not for the last three months but for the last three to five years. So nothing new about that. The second is, of course, the cost escalation when it comes to capital costs, that those costs are rising very fast, and therefore there was no way possible to have estimated effectively, appropriately the budgetary requirements for the capital projects which were being funded under the budget.

I think both of these arguments are fallacious. They don't hold water because the cost escalation issue is something that has not happened just all of sudden over the last three months. We heard this reference to it during the debate on the budget in April and May. We have heard that argument for several years now. We have got the same news from various public institutions in the area of health, education, seniors, and others, who have been telling us that costs have been growing.

We on this side of the House have drawn attention to the pressures and the sources of cost escalation for years, including deregulation policies and the inability and failure of the government to bring in cost controls by way of establishing a pharmaceutical policy in place which would help reduce the ever-growing costs on the health care side. So it's not that there have not been ideas put forth as to how to deal with the cost escalation. It's not that this news has not been around for some time. It's just that this government has either not been listening or is unable to use the information available to factor into its estimates that it brings forward in the form of a budget. It's bad news for Albertans to have a government that's unable to really effectively deliver on one of the most key and core responsibilities that it has; that is, the budget and the public monies that it requests in order to meet its obligations by way of budget estimates.

The second argument that's given is in terms of increasing population due to rapid economic growth. Well, again, this government has been of course boasting about the rapidity of the economic growth, the high level of economic growth year after year in this province. So it's not something new. It's not news that the government didn't know anything about. In fact, it has been trying to stake its whole reputation on the fact that it has achieved this rapid level of growth regardless of warnings that it has been receiving from municipalities, particularly in the Fort McMurray area, regardless of advice they have been receiving from the likes of former Premier Peter Lougheed that there's a need, perhaps, to slow down, to take a look where we want to go, how fast we want to get there, and why it is that we want to go to that point rather than some other.

This government has been absolutely, totally not so much oblivious but determined not to listen to advice, regardless of where it comes from, whether it comes from the opposition benches here or whether it comes from people who in principle are philosophically in agreement with the government but say that something has gone awry.

We need to slow down. The government needs to take some action to make sure that they slow down so that they have a chance to look carefully and plan the activities for the next few years and bring onside the major economic players, including the corporations, the oil and gas industry, and others, who are the wheelers and dealers and the main actors on the economic side.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

The economy and the economic growth are not the only thing that governments need to pay attention to. They need to pay attention to the society at large and know the consequences of this rapid escalation of costs and growth in population. The rapid rate of economic growth, primarily due to the headlong rush to expand oil sands projects as quickly as possible, is disastrous for many segments of our society. Housing is one issue that has come up here in the last three to four days in question period again and again, yet the Premier says, and his cabinet colleagues seem to agree: we will not intervene; let the market take care of the chaos that's before us.

Mr. Chairman, that's not good enough. The market must always be a tool, not a sacred cow not to be touched. The market must submit to the needs of society rather than society being dragged along by the market. What is a market after all? You know, this abstract notion of the market doesn't really help us debate the issues, whether government intervention, government's ability to take autonomous action in spite of the market are desirable things, unless we know what the market is. Those who talk about free markets and free trade and all of that stuff need to, I think, take cognizance of the fact how markets fail and how market actor, some that act so badly, make not only decisions that are technically disastrous but make decisions that are deliberately planned to rob some others in the market of their assets, of their investments, and engage in acts of what can only be called piracy or plunder. The collapse of Enron, the case of dot-com, the litigation and civil and criminal investigations that Lord Black, the great hero of the free market in Canada, is implicated in: all of these are clear pieces of evidence which suggest that if we want to rely on markets, we better be careful what we mean by markets.

Especially in this House, Mr. Chairman, to continue to harp that markets will take care of everything is to ignore the historical experience of Albertans during the Great Depression and the following years. Albertans learned not to allow markets. At that time, of course, the question was the speculators from the east and the banks and how their decisions and policies and interests came into direct conflict with the interests of ordinary, hard-working folks living on the prairies, including this province, where we learned to in fact deal with markets with a grain of caution. Often Albertans urged their own elected governments year after year, election after election to in fact develop alternative strategies to reduce this reliance on the so-called markets or market players, which at that time, of course, seemed to be situated, you know, thousands of miles away in eastern Canada. Ottawa and Toronto became the targets because that's where this powerful concentration of wealth and corporate headquarters was, so Albertans became, I think, appropriately critical and suspicious of these big market players. So the market wasn't something so sacred, an icon that you never looked at with some degree of suspicion and tried to develop some ways of controlling the decisions that markets will make, nevertheless decisions which will negatively impact Albertans.

I've been hearing here and during the question period references to the market again as if markets are supreme, markets are sacred, markets can never do wrong, and therefore this government uses this terribly indefensible reason to fail to act, to justify its failure to take action, whether it has to do with housing, whether it has to do with infrastructure, whether it has to do with the lack of spaces in a postsecondary institution, or whatever have you.

So, Mr. Chairman, this supplementary budget is in a way I think the result of poor governance, poor governance which fundamentally is rooted in these flawed conceptions of the market, conceptions of the market which are out of date, conceptions of the market which Albertans have learned not to trust, not to rely on. I regret the fact and deplore the fact that this government is not willing to learn from the bitter experience of Albertans themselves over the years in how markets have failed them and, therefore, for this government to hitch its wagons to the market without question.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I'll use the few remaining minutes that I have to draw attention to the fact that the other evening when I was talking on the supplementary request for Advanced Education for $49.1 million or something, I asked some specific questions of the minister on where this money is going, whether the minister has asked the appropriate questions. What I didn't get were any answers from the minister. He said that he will reply in writing. I'm surprised when a special session is to be called for a minister not to be ready with the answers that are obvious and that will come up in the debate. We didn't debate all 15 departments. We had no time to do that. We debated only perhaps five or six departments altogether, and even those for which we had some time to ask questions, the House got no answers when the questions were asked. The questions are seen as legitimate but no answers.

We can't really sort of support the request that's before us simply because the questions that we asked, asked in all seriousness, have no answers given to them. This leaves the House in limbo, and the expectation that the House will simply rubber-stamp $1.39 billion or something in additional funds without addressing those questions is unfair. I think it's inappropriate. I think we need to take the House's input into budget making and budget approval seriously. If we are to do that, then I think we need to allow sufficient time for budgetary estimates, whether they are primary or supplementary, to be debated appropriately and given enough time for members of this House and the ministers responsible to engage each other in serious debate and address some of those questions.

So, Mr. Chairman, these are some of the questions that I asked the other day about this $49 million. The minister said that . . . [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired] I think that I will have to take my seat.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. My honoured colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford brought up the concern over school fees and questioned why students were having to pay for a whole variety of circumstance. In Calgary the school board has taken a different tack, and it's having a very direct effect on programs. The Calgary public school board for a large part has done away with school fees, and for a high school in my area, Sir Winston Churchill high school, that means a loss of $98,000. School fees should not be required when parents and taxpayers in general already pay income tax. They pay property tax; they pay health care tax. They should not have to be paying school fees for essentials. But now Calgary parents more so than ever before are going to have to be forced into heading out to the casinos, and of course that's an unfair circumstance because when you're working three jobs, you don't have time to give extra support for casinos. So, again, the parents who have the most time, the greatest degree of wealth will be able to go out to the casinos and raise funds for basic education that this province doesn't cover. Education obviously isn't a priority.

Last night in my comments with regard to the infrastructure deficit for Calgary schools I talked about the half billion dollar infrastructure defrayed costs that Calgary schools are facing. For whatever reason the constituency I represent of Calgary-Varsity was hit hardest in the entire city of all the constituencies when it came to either school or program closures. The school that I began my teaching career in 35 years ago, Jerry Potts elementary school, a relatively new school, only 35 years old, was unfortunately forced by this government's infrastructure and school size regulations and restrictions to close.

Another school very close by, Varsity Acres school, was required, because of burgeoning enrolment, to go French only and shut down its English program. Unfortunately, the board, I'm believing with pressure of lack of funding from the province, decided that instead of taking the hundred-plus kids from Varsity Acres school, that was approximately three or four blocks away from Jerry Potts, and the 35 regular kids living in the community – instead of putting those 135 kids into Jerry Potts school, which is a very small facility to begin with, the board, unfortunately, made the decision to require kids to hop on a bus to go to another neighbouring school across a 70-kilometre stretch of traffic. So what's happening is that these kids who went formerly to their local schools, Jerry Potts and Varsity Acres, are now joining the over 40,000 kids, when you combine the Catholic and public schools, that will spend over a hundred thousand kilometres each day on the bus. Of course, with the bus driver shortage in Calgary and the scrapping of routes in the Calgary board, that hundred thousand kilometre bus ride per day will increase.

At this moment I just want to give credit to Janet Ross. Janet Ross years ago was a former student of mine at Jerry Potts. She is now the very hard-working chair of the school council at Calgary Varsity. Janet along with her colleagues, both from Calgary Varsity and Jerry Potts, tried desperately to appeal to the province and appeal to the school board to keep Jerry Potts school open. Both schools were in agreement that the best solution for their kids, if the English program had to be closed at Varsity, was that they be moved over to Jerry Potts. Unfortunately, that decision got nowhere.

One of the ways of judging how badly a school is in need of repairs is called the facility condition index. The way that is calculated is by determining the amount of cost it would be to repair the school by the cost of replacement. Under 5 per cent is considered good, 5 per cent and over is considered fair, and anything over 10 per cent is considered poor. In the neighbouring community of Mountview, Terrace Road elementary is at a 10.24. Montgomery junior high is at 12.82.

Now, my wife taught at Montgomery junior high school for a number of years with electrical transformers dripping onto students' desks, with tiles missing on the floor and tiles missing in the ceiling. The fact that this school is rated at only a 12.82 amazes me. Branton junior high in my area is listed at a 6.03, slightly above satisfactory. St. Jean Brebeuf junior high is listed at an 8.99, so it's well into the poor category.

What I find most interesting is that the constituency that has the greatest collection of schools in the saddest condition just happens to be Calgary-Elbow. For those of you who aren't familiar with who represents Calgary-Elbow, it's our Premier. I would suggest that when the Premier takes his rubber boots off, finishing his fishing trip, and when they clean the think tank down in the States, he trade in his rubber boots for workboots. Maybe he could go over to Elbow Park elementary, which is FCI percentage of 19.15, or maybe he'd like to lend a hand at Elboya elementary/junior high school, 40.34. Rideau Park, at 13.3, would love to see him in work pants and with his hammer. Sir James Lougheed elementary could sure use his help: 43.39. Glamorgan elementary, 20.09; Chinook Park elementary, 10.95; St. James, 9.53. Those are just the worst ones.

In Calgary-Buffalo our Solicitor General might want to in his spare time lend his assistance to Sunalta elementary. This is the school he wanted to protect from the halfway house. It's got an FCI of 23.46. Alexander Ferguson elementary, 10.01; Connaught elementary, 25.94. If he's got some extra time he could go over to Sacred Heart and help out. They're at a 15.25.

Over to Calgary-Bow. This area is represented by one of our leadership contenders. She might want to provide some assistance at Westgate elementary, where the FCI is 21.33. She might want to help out at Vincent Massey, 21.07. I'm sure Bowcroft elementary, where a very good friend of mine, Ted Woynilowicz, recently retired, could use her help because it's at a 12.61. Keep in mind, above 5 per cent is considered poor.

Our Lady of the Assumption. That's a good name for a school. They're still assuming that this government is going to come to their rescue: 13.44.

In the Calgary-Glenmore constituency: Haysboro, 9.51; Bishop Kidd, 7.42.

I don't want to bore the House with details, but the point is that that's why Calgary is at a half billion dollar infrastructure deficit.

I would like to see the kids off the buses, and I would like to see them in the new schools. Forty communities without schools. The answer is not: put them on the yellow bus, short of bus drivers, fill up the tank with Alberta's nonrenewable resources, and send the kid off to school.

An Hon. Member: That's only for the rural kids.

Mr. Chase: No, it's not. For the rural communities there is a large, spread out area. There is a need for schools and so on, but the rural areas don't have the concentrated population and need to the same extent for large composite schools. The rural schools that I've travelled to – and I should have the statistics to share with you – are suffering as well. It's not an either/or. It's not urban schools versus country schools. All schools are suffering.

Among the 40 districts without new schools and where parents are looking for help is the Royal Oak school. Tuscany recently received a K to 3 school. They're grateful for anything, but the older children, the grades 4 through 6, still have to hop on the bus.

Last spring my colleagues from Calgary-Currie and Calgary-Mountain View and I participated in the homeless count. When the figures came through, it turned out that homelessness in Calgary had risen by 30 per cent. We have a problem, and unfortunately this government is not addressing it.

I recently toured the food bank in Calgary. They have the good fortune of receiving, thanks to the kindness of a company, an extended lease for a fantastic facility. It's a large warehouse with many bays and a large walk-in freezer. There is no problem in terms of the generosity of Calgarians contributing food to this facility. One of the greatest expenses that this facility has is having the goods transported to the facility and the waste products transported from. The Calgary Interfaith Food Bank would very much appreciate support from the government in taking over its lease, providing it with sustainable funding as a recognition of the job they do.

The lack of support for other outreach programs such as Meals on Wheels. Lou Winthers of Meals on Wheels together with the Ismaili community, who put forward a wonderful parade float, recognized the importance of Meals on Wheels. The facility that Meals on Wheels is currently in is completely inadequate given the demand. We think of Meals on Wheels as traditionally just dealing with shut-ins, helping people that cannot get out of the house. They do that, but they do much more. They provide school lunches for three schools; they've got 17 schools on a waiting list. Not only do they provide lunches for schools, but they provide bag lunches for working men and women at the Calgary Drop-in Centre. These people are without a home, but they do have jobs, and Meals on Wheels recognizes the fact that to do their daily work they need their daily bread, something the government has failed to recognize.

In terms of infrastructure shortcomings Mayor Bronconnier has said that up until last year the city of Calgary was holding its own. That's no longer the case when it comes to infrastructure. The mayor has called upon the province to give back the property tax portion that they currently collect in the name of education although it never makes it into education; it disappears into general revenue. He said: give us some flexibility. Municipalities have called for a $20 million relief fund over the next five years. Hopefully the government will consider this. The problem with the property tax is: if you give it back to the cities, will you then recognize the underfunded situation that the school boards face, or are you going to put the schools and the municipalities into warfare, tugging at those lost property tax dollars that should never have been taken away from the boards originally in 1994? What are you going to do? How are you going to fund it?

Other delays and 41st anniversaries: 41 years ago the city of Calgary, a much smaller city, began negotiating with the Tsuu T'ina for a ring road. Forty-one years later we are still waiting for those negotiations to come through. We have heard that an appraiser has been agreed to by the Tsuu T'ina, the province, and the federal government. I look forward to an answer as to when we can expect an environmentally sound and structurally appropriate six-lane bridge across the Elbow river. I know that the DFO, the federal government, is responsible for approving the structure. I hope they use a similar structure like the Stoney Trail bridge. It's high, it's got six lanes, it's effective, it doesn't interfere with either animals or humans, and it serves a great purpose. If we're looking for a style of bridge to go for, let's go for that one.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

In terms of infrastructure concerns I brought out the fact that in my community of University Heights the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation in its infinite wisdom built a sound barrier in a ditch. As a result, while you walk by the sound barrier and look up, way above the sound barrier you see the wheels of passing trucks. Then you look, as the Friendly Giant would say, "way, way up." You see the smokestacks, the exhaust pipes from which the noise comes, and, oh yes, all above the sound barrier; well thought out. Unbelievable.

When it comes to parks and protected areas, I would like to hand off a great big bouquet to the Harvie family, a family that has got a history of philanthropy. They come from ranching stock, the true Albertans, the first Albertans, a pioneer spirit. They had the fortitude, the wisdom to provide land, very valuable land, which they gave to the government considerably below the price so that we could have our Bow watershed protected, we could have some pristine land to recreate in, hopefully of the walking variety, and we could have our watershed protected. This is a major concern because the Bow River provides Calgary with half its water.

It is my hope that this similar type of protection will be afforded to the Bragg Creek area, the area through which the Elbow River flows and which is responsible for the other 50 per cent of the water that Calgary receives. The government has in its power the ability to thumb up or thumb down the forestry management plan, which, basically, if I were to summarize, means: in order to save the trees for future generations, we will cut them down now. I guess they'll save them in log piles.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to address the health issues that are in my region. I'll be talking about the debt that's been created by trying to eliminate the debt in this province. There are actually common themes that really run through the province in terms of the problems within health care, and the main thing, of course, as we all know, is the shortage of health care professionals. It is a huge, huge issue. It is something that came to the fore – it was the most prominent thing that was a problem – when we were talking about the MLA task force. It was staff, staff, staff. I think it's very, very important that we put an emphasis on the staff for health care because we are losing them to doughnut shops, and I think that's wrong.

Each region has the responsibility for coming up with plans and carrying out the projects designed to overcome their challenges. In my region the deficit is $2.4 million this year; however, it's $9.6 million total, including the accumulated deficit from the previous year. From the knowledge that I have, I believe that this is probably an honest deficit. They have done everything that they can to cut. I think part of it is that people are working overtime again because labour is such a huge, huge issue.

Three of the other top issues in my region are human resources recruitment of health professionals, that I've referred to, but we not only have to recruit them; we actually have to be able to increase the seats at the Lethbridge Community College and the U of L so that we can turn out RNs with baccalaureates. Certainly, in the year 2007 the Lethbridge Community College is anticipating having the enhanced licensed practical nurse program, the LPN program. That will help, but we must open up more seats.

We need to provide access to all health services, and that has to be increased in our region. We have to ensure that the funding formula continues to be based on population with adjustments for age and gender. Southern Alberta has a higher percentage of seniors, which increases the overall burden due to the increased need for chronic disease care management and long-term care diagnostic exams.

When I refer to long-term care, it is an entity unto itself. In the Chinook health region they have definitely made a concerted effort, one that I think I would debate. It is a concerted effort to decrease the number of actual long-term care beds, taking some people who don't belong in long-term care and creating other designations: designated assisted living, assisted living, lodges, enhanced lodges, et cetera.

Regardless of where these people are housed, they simply must have properly trained people to care for them that are trained to be able to assess when these people are in trouble or if things have changed. Good staff can recognize changes in the people that they care for almost instantly if they've been trained and if they are consistent. They can't work in three and four and five different places and be consistently aware and have the full knowledge of the people that they care for.

Another priority is the expansion of the Lethbridge regional hospital to include more space for outpatient programming, but one of the things that it has to include – and certainly the conversations have been held – is to include radiation therapy. There was an article in the December '05 journal of Current Oncology called Access to Radiation Therapy: Modelling the Geographic Distribution of Demand, by Michael Taylor, P.S. Craighead, and P.B. Dunscombe. It concluded that a move away from a centralized service delivery model would “be beneficial in some form for the 28% . . . of rural Albertans who currently live more than 100 km from existing radiation therapy services.” They estimate that about 400 Lethbridge area patients travel to Calgary for treatment every year, and this number is expected to increase as people age.

The Cancer Society in Lethbridge funds between 50 and 60 people a year that are low income and must travel. They pay only 10 cents a kilometre, but I must admit that this is under review. I hope that they will see their way clear to increase this, especially with the price of gas, that has gone through the roof following this 10-cent-a-kilometre designation. So it by no means covers all the costs, and it is limited to low-income people to a maximum of $500 a year per person. This really doesn't adequately cover some of the costs that they do incur.

Every Monday my fellow southern Albertans drive north on highway 2 to the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary in order to receive the radiation treatment. These cancer patients spend most of the week in Calgary getting treatment, and then they drive back to their homes on Friday afternoon. Those patients who are unable to make the gruelling trip back and forth must remain in Calgary, and it's often for weeks at a time. So many families have had to make this trip that the demand for radiation treatment in Lethbridge is overwhelming. In fact, last year 15,000 people signed a petition asking for radiation treatment in Lethbridge.

Given the devastating impact of cancer and radiation treatment, I would hope that the Minister of Health and Wellness would take a very serious look at this for southern Albertans and move forward on the Lethbridge project to be able to provide radiation treatment outside of the two urban centres. Alberta's growing population and the increase in the cancer rate is contributing to the mushrooming demand for radiation, and the Tom Baker cancer centre is feeling the upswing on that one. As a result, again, there is a demand for the satellite centre.

Residents in Lethbridge – and it isn't just the residents in Lethbridge; it truly is everyone probably south of Calgary – are demanding that we have this radiation treatment centre and have it established at the Lethbridge regional hospital. There has been knowledge that the Lethbridge satellite cancer centre is further advanced than the Calgary planning, and Calgary's planning is, I understand, five years off, with a possible $600 million price tag. However, as we all know, with this labour market and materials these costs I'm sure will go up over the next five years. Lethbridge's planning and Lethbridge's need is now, so what I would like to ask the minister is to take a very careful look at the Lethbridge centre and to please put it ahead, actually, of the Calgary one. I realize that Calgary has to be increased, but if a lot of the people from southern Alberta weren't going to Calgary, it would take some of that pressure off.

The region has an exceedingly high population of aboriginals. We have two of the largest reserves in the country. We have the Bloods and the Peigan very close to Lethbridge. Many, many, many of our aboriginal, First Nation people are moving into Lethbridge. We must be working with them to teach and prevent and manage obesity and diabetes, which is running rampant, unfortunately, through their populations. Not only do we have to help them prevent it, but when it does occur, there are huge complications that happen if these are not managed in a very professional manner and on a very regular basis. We have to focus on the risk factors for diabetes, and certainly there has to be early testing and diagnosis. To be able to actually have our aboriginal citizens recognize what's going on, we need to be able to go back to the reserves. It would have to be done in conjunction with the federal government because they are on the reserves, but we have to teach them at a very early age how to recognize the symptoms of early-onset diabetes and how to have the testing done because it can be done very simply.

We need to identify a need for the latest technology in operating room design and equipment to improve patient safety, shorten the length of stay. I believe that the Minister of Health and Wellness actually referred to the difference from when she was nursing, how long it took for a gallbladder operation. Because I nursed later than she did, I know that it can be done very simply: probably a day and a half, and you're out. So we need to shorten those lengths of stays.

We need to increase the surgical capacity certainly within the regional hospital and retain and recruit surgical specialists. It looks good on paper, but it is exceedingly difficult to be able to do. Again I would say – this would probably go to the Minister of Advanced Education – that we simply must open up more seats for health care professionals in this province. The cost of an i-Suite operating theatre is approximately $1.5 million.

The Chinook health region realizes that with the deficit they have, even if they got the money from the province, it's not helping them go forward. We have a very good hospital foundation, and I know that they're working very hard toward raising this money for our operating theatres; however, I don't believe that that should let the government off the hook because they can get other people to raise the money that truly they should be providing for the people in Lethbridge for our health region.

I would like to leave those thoughts with the Minister of Health and Wellness. Please really consider giving us the radiation centre that we need so badly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my privilege to stand and speak to the appropriations. As I've indicated in the House before, my key issues have to do with water and environmental investments, natural capital as well as human capital and financial capital. I guess I'm concerned, in the light of the tremendous surpluses and wealth of the province, that we do our diligence in relation to longer term planning. Specifically, how can we make some of the development decisions we're making without the benefit of a land-use plan?

We're continuing to make decisions on the basis of the assumptions we've made relatively safely until this last decade that we will have unlimited resources to draw from. But as things are unfolding, particularly in southern Alberta, as evidence mounts that climate change is going to have a significant impact on the various aspects of our natural capital and our ability to sustain some of our communities – and, certainly, the business climate will be affected – it's imperative that some of these investments be used in a smart and intelligent way that recognizes the need for long-term planning and a strategy based on land use over the next 50 years. We continue to wait for that, Mr. Chairman, and I think all of us on this side of the House and, I'm sure, on the other side are eagerly anticipating the investment that's needed and the invaluable assistance that our residents and our municipalities can contribute to a plan that will be both science based and value based in the communities around Alberta.

It's clear that water will be the issue limiting development in southern Alberta. We've already recognized overallocations in the Bow River, Elbow River, and South Saskatchewan basin, yet proposals continue to come forward and be approved, most recently in the area of Balzac for a racecourse, a huge mall infrastructure that has the potential for serious compromise to water supplies and water treatment programs if it's not adequately planned for and if the research isn't there to ensure that we will have water and land-use opportunities to do the development and to protect the people and the businesses that intend to locate there. Recent evidence has indicated that groundwater in the area has been dropping steadily for the last decade. We don't know why, and we need to know why. The kind of decisions that are being forced upon this government without the benefit of a land-use plan, without a real understanding of our water inventory, without science-based cumulative impact assessment, and without meaningful public consultation places us in a very untenable situation.

My strong sense, coming from the perspective of sustainable development, is that we need a clear plan and that we need to have indicators of when we're moving in a sustainable way and when we're not, when we're exceeding the carrying capacity of a particular bioregion. We simply don't have the research to make those decisions, and we haven't done the planning. So I would press the government very seriously to move forward as quickly as possible on those fronts so that we can have confidence that the kind of boom we're experiencing now will not compromise future generations, will not compromise specific bioregions and render them unsustainable, in fact permanently damaged in some cases. That means looking at all of the ways that we manage our water. It means looking at the ways in which we have continued to focus on supply as opposed to demand management in this province, and we continue to allow water to be used without measurement and without full-cost accounting. This leaves us, again, in a totally untenable situation, comparable to someone drawing on their bank account without ever having any feedback about what's left in the bank account. Albertans expect better, they deserve better, and we on the Liberal side commit to providing better when we form the next government.

The options that are open to us if we fail to do that are rather ominous. I think that across the province, across the country, across the globe people are saying that water is going to increasingly be a contentious issue. Already we're seeing conflicts between Calgary, for example, and the developers and communities around Calgary, where 19 communities will be involved in a public hearing next month in dispute, basically, with the city of Calgary, who refuses to give its share of allocated water to these communities to sustain their own growth. As a result, we are paying through the nose to the tune of $80 million for water supplies coming from far afield from these communities, from the Kneehill water system, when for a fraction of the cost the city of Calgary, if the planning were in place, could supply adequate water to the areas around Balzac, Irricana, and Acme. So that is a pressing issue that I'm hearing concerns expressed about in the immediate rural areas.

Within the city of Calgary and my own constituents there are concerns being raised about water quality changes, about the decline in our glaciers, and the diminishing flows in the Bow. We've already lost 85 per cent of the flow in the Bow River over this last century with the loss of our glaciers, and the prospects for the next 30 years are very significant. So water management is critical for some of the issues that I have to deal with on a daily basis.

The questions continue to be raised in the area of the Horseshoe Canyon formation in southeastern Alberta where coal-bed methane is being developed at a record-breaking rate despite the fact that we still do not have the information related to some of these damaged aquifers and damaged wells. There remain serious questions that scientists at the University of Alberta are saying are not being adequately presented to the public. The Alberta Environment department continues to block access to some of the isotope testing and continues to reassure people in the Rosebud area that all is well and that these water wells are the fault of poor maintenance by farmers. That gets to be a tired tune when science shows us that there is, indeed, significant gas migration.

In fact, in the Lloydminster area about 50 per cent of water wells have been shown to be contaminated to varying degrees by some of the SAGD developments up there. There's growing evidence in the Horseshoe Canyon formation, based on the science of some of these U of A researchers, that we are not acknowledging some of the changes in our groundwater, both volumes and quality, that relate to some of the activity that's been going on for a hundred years in this province. It may not all be related to coal-bed methane. It may be a cumulative impact from shot holes, from boreholes, from the seismic lines and clear-cutting that is occurring in some areas, from the conventional and the unconventional oil and gas activity.

So making plans, making decisions on developments in the areas of south and eastern Alberta in the absence of real understanding of what's happening to our groundwater is a shame. A very strong message that I'm getting from landowners and from environmentalists and scientists is that we need to do better in terms of our water use planning. It is the issue of the decade. It is the issue that must be addressed before some of these major decisions are made about land use. I would strongly encourage the government to get the best of science advice, move forward quickly on getting the results of some of these putatively damaged wells, establish which have been damaged by resource activity, which are a natural phenomenon or poor maintenance in some cases, and be very clear about what our resources are going to be over the next decade.

In the area of my constituency there's also a strong message that in the centre of the city housing is a critical issue. It is not only creating hardship, physical hardship, for people in my communities among those who are least able to deal with it: the handicapped, people impoverished, single mothers. It is also creating a tremendous mental stress and adding to the tremendous burden on our health care system as a result of not being able to provide the basic necessities of life in the context of safe, secure housing and the basic needs of adequate, balanced food and shelter and educational opportunities that we need to be able to do as a caring community. I note with interest that the government has made some important headway on the housing issue. I'm glad it's being a strong focus. I acknowledge that it needs to be and that this budget will go some distance in trying to alleviate some of the pressures. Clearly, it's the issue pressing most on our most disadvantaged in the communities, and I'm getting a lot of pressure on it.

In relation to the health care system, too, there is a need, again, to step back from the crisis that we're in and begin to look at the whole question of management of our health care and management of our resources and examine just the extent to which we're identifying outcomes from the burgeoning expenses and the growing stresses and strains on the health care system. My sense is that after regionalization we haven't necessarily looked carefully enough at what the impacts of regionalization are, on the bureaucracy. What kinds of decisions have had what kinds of outcomes? Are we, in fact, creating bottlenecks and inefficiencies and a failure to shift responsibility from various professional groups to where they can more sustainably be managed?

I spoke with a pharmacist today who feels that pharmacists could be doing a lot more than they're given at this time. Physicians need to be looking at the bigger picture and relinquishing some of their authority to both pharmacists and nurses, and nurses need to play a bigger role in the system. They clearly have a tremendous knowledge and experience with people and are underutilized to the detriment of the whole health care system and to the detriment of the long-term well-being of our residents because in some cases, indeed, nurses can address individuals' concerns more effectively than physicians.

So with that I would leave a few comments on the health care system: a need to review outcomes; review top-heavy administrative loads, which have not necessarily translated into better and more efficient delivery of health services in this province; a failure of delegation across the board in terms of our health professionals; and a profound failure nationally in bringing foreign medical graduates, foreign dental graduates, foreign professionals into the Canadian milieu and allowing them to practise and serve the community, reducing their own dependence on our support systems, improving their own mental health. It's a win-win situation to recognize that we have wasted, squandered, the resources of many of these foreign graduates by what I would call petty politics in our professions, putting up unnecessary barriers to some of these foreign-trained workers who are eminently qualified, eminently capable to step into some of these important positions of great need.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I think I'll take my seat. I appreciate the opportunity to address the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get this opportunity again to discuss supplementary supply, this time through the bill. I had the opportunity previously to ask questions regarding the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and I'll certainly read with interest the responses that, hopefully, I will receive from the minister in regard to questions. There's a significant amount of money here. There is certainly a need, and everyone recognizes the need for income support for farmers, particularly those in grain production at this time. As I said earlier, we discussed this whole issue in the Assembly last winter. Again, hopefully this money will reach the farmers that need it.

When we look at this entire budget or this entire request, and we see where it is certainly in excess of $1 billion . . . [A bell rang] That may be the answer to my questions right there. When one looks at this and one considers that we've just gone through the budget process and you look at the $1.366 billion estimates, you couldn't blame the taxpayers of this province if they were concerned about this government's inability to plan. I was so pleased to hear the Minister of Human Resources and Employment yesterday state that he admires how the Alberta Liberals have an ability to plan. I'm glad that is recognized by someone on that side of the House. Certainly our ideas are adopted by the government on occasion, many occasions. But when one looks at the plan of this government, there is cause for concern.

Now, we look at each department and we look at the size of government and we see the growth in government. One of the checks and balances that we used to have on this government as opposition members and as taxpayers was the fact that we could have a look at the annual reports of each and every ministry in a timely fashion. The government was always very proud of the fact that they would present a draft copy of the annual report. Each minister would go before the standing policy committees, and these are committees where opposition members are not allowed to participate. These are Progressive Conservative government-members-only committees. Each and every minister in the month of August – the occasional time it would be into September – would appear before that respective committee and present the draft annual report from their department for the fiscal year that ended the previous March.

This year – this year – all the ministries have to date not even approached the standing policy committees with their draft annual reports. It hasn't been done yet. No. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development looks up, and I know that he is thinking: was I there? No, he wasn't there yet. He was certainly there last year. I believe he was there on this date precisely last year. There were seven if not eight ministries that appeared a year ago today, August 30, before a respective standing policy committee.

So there are two questions here. Has this government completely lost direction, or have they scheduled the release of these draft annual reports after this mini summer session ends so that the bad news that's in there will not be used by the opposition members during question period? Is it mismanagement, or does the government have something to hide? Is there a waste of tax dollars in there that not only would the opposition parties discuss but that taxpayers would be outraged about? There are two things possibly here. It's never happened in my time in this Assembly that we haven't had these draft annual reports presented at this time of the year through the standing policy committees. But this year here we go. It hasn't happened. Hopefully, it'll happen here right after Labour Day, Mr. Chairman, but I don't know. I haven't seen any press releases to let me know when the minister of agriculture is going to make his presentation or when the Minister of Energy is going to make his presentation.

I used to enjoy so much going to the former Minister of Energy's presentation. Even the Conservative members on those standing policy committees would grill the Minister of Energy on the failures of electricity deregulation. In the summer a lot of them would go to their constituencies, talk to their constituents, and realize the folly of electricity deregulation. It was interesting, to say the least, to sit there and watch that minister try to dance around that particular flawed policy. It got so bad that some of the performance measures that used to be in that department's annual report, comparing electricity prices in various places, were removed because it was a total embarrassment to this government.

Now, that's only one example. But we've got to have a look at this, and we've got to consider: is it mismanagement, or is this government hiding something, hiding the misspending of funds? If we had sort of an open, transparent system with this government, if we had a public accounts system that was more open and more transparent – and I must say that I did some historical research this summer on the previous Progressive Conservative government. The Speaker today, Mr. Chairman, talked about the Peter Lougheed victory in 1971. If one looks at how the government at that time reported to the citizens on how they spent the tax dollars, it's totally different than what it is now. It's totally different. It was much better. It was much more open. It was much more transparent.

I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly, including the hon. Member for Drayton Valley–Calmar, to go to the library downstairs and have a look at some of the public accounts documents going back to the first years when the Progressive Conservative Party formed the government. I admire their open, transparent method of reporting to the citizens. I'm sorry; I can't admire the current Progressive Conservative Party's method because it is certainly not open and it's not transparent.

For instance, contracts, all contracts from each department, would be listed. There was no end to the valuable information for taxpayers in those public accounts documents. You don't see that now. You're just given this blue book. Each contract is in there, and each amount in a grant is listed in there alphabetically, not by department. You have to wonder why. When you go through the blue book and you see some of the amounts, some of them are quite extravagant. You wonder if perhaps we couldn't have spent a little less there so that we would have money to spend on education and on health care now. If we were spending all this money wisely, would the Minister of Education have had to go back and rightfully ask for more money for the schools of this province? I don't know the answer to that. The Conservative government certainly should be able to help out and answer that.

I don't know how much time I have left, Mr. Chairman, but I have some specific questions in regard to this that I would like to get on the record and, hopefully, get an answer. Now, with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development could I please have some details on this $715,000 that's requested here? What exactly is the government's position on these legal actions initiated by aboriginal groups? Who are these First Nations groups? Is this $715,000 to pay for legal fees or lawyers' advice? What is the nature of these disputes? I would appreciate a little bit more information on that if I could.

Certainly, with Infrastructure and Transportation I was interested to read in a recent edition of one of our newspapers – it may have been the Edmonton Journal; I'm not sure – that there has been an $11.2 million allocation here for the purchase of two new aircraft to replace the aging King Air 200s. Well, if something has been used in this province in the last few years, it's certainly been those King Airs, and if they're worn out, I can see why. This government has certainly been fond of using them.

Now, I would like to know what sort of cost-benefit analysis has been done on these new planes. I used to hear former members of this House on the government side complain about these King Airs. They were quite noisy, and whenever they were going across North America, they had to land in Duluth for fuel because the tanks weren't big enough to go from, I assume, Toronto to Edmonton. But what are the details on the purchase of these new planes? I'm certain that one of the features besides probably leather seats is long-range fuel tanks so that they don't have to land in Duluth anymore.

I would like the details on this because it perplexes me why a government that is so vigorous sometimes in promoting the private sector – and it's nothing that I think they should be worried about or ashamed of. I think a good private sector is excellent. A good, strong private sector that develops jobs and creates prosperity is excellent. But why, when you're so anxious to get involved in all these P3 projects with the private sector, would you buy your own airplanes? Why don't you let the private sector do this?

If you're not so confident that the private sector can do it in a cost-effective manner, why don't you just retire these King Airs and try the private sector? Give them a chance for maybe two years, maybe three years to see if they could provide flights in a timely, economical fashion and save the taxpayers a few dollars. Why don't we try this? If we have so much confidence and so much faith in the free-enterprise system, why don't we see if some of these charter outfits in the province can do just as good a job or maybe even a better job than our own fleet? See what happens over a two-year period and then explain to the taxpayers: well, this hasn't worked out, so we're going to go on the market and maybe buy an airplane or two somewhere else.

I heard that Enron had a couple of jets for sale. I don't know if this government is interested in second-hand airplanes, but certainly there are a couple of those jets. I can give them the tail numbers of those planes if they wish, if they want to check it out. But I don't know why the private sector wasn't given a chance in this case, why we're spending this kind of money on two airplanes.

That amount would build two complete new elementary schools. Whether they would be located in fast-growing communities in Calgary or Grande Prairie, it really wouldn't matter. I was up in Grande Prairie this spring, and the parents up there were really frustrated.

An Hon. Member: How much money, Hugh?

Mr. MacDonald: How much money? Eleven point two million dollars would build two good cinder-block construction elementary schools. It certainly would. I know that whenever I was in Grande Prairie, the parents that I met up there were quite frustrated, and they were concerned not only about class sizes but the condition of the schools.

So, you know, if we don't have any money for Grande Prairie for a new school, perhaps we could look at this as an alternative. I'm sure there's a opt-out clause on the purchase of these two new airplanes; I'm sure there would be.

But there's certainly not an opt-out clause for consumers whenever they get rooked into these high-priced energy contracts, whether they're electricity or natural gas. There should be. There should be an opt-out clause for consumers. I keep asking and hoping that the government would give consumers a chance, but, no, they will not. With all this deregulation, this market system that's been set up, the consumer has been forgotten about. The consumer has to dig deeper and deeper every month into their pocket to pay for heat and for lights, and that's not right either.

There are a lot of different line items in this request. Certainly, in conclusion, I would like to urge the hon. Minister of Finance to be very cautious in spending. I know that the majority of them at least are needed items, certainly in education and certainly in health, and I'm sure that there's a justification somewhere for each and every dollar that's being spent. But we're spending a lot of money here, and I don't think we're being open and transparent.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and cede the floor to another hon. colleague and hope that at some point in the future I can get some more time to express my concern about this government's expenditures. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for giving me an opportunity to rise again to deal with some issues that I haven't dealt with before, and that is some concerns around central Alberta.

Certainly, as Environment critic I've received some questions about and admonitions to press for better water protection in the area of Pigeon Lake, Big Island Lake, that has been under threat for a number of years. Actually, it's been proposed over the last 15 years that the Big Island Lake be reclaimed after being illegally drained and used for domesticated animals. So I've been passing that pressure along to Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Great concerns again about water, and I neglected to mention them in relation to human activity, animal activity, and confined feeding operations, which are increasing pressures in the centre of the province.

I notice in the budget that a lot of the increases have to do with waste management assistance, erosion control. I think that's appropriate, but it's, of course, inadequate given the tremendous strains attendant with the vast growth that's going on in the province.

So I think we need to look seriously at a longer term investment in infrastructure, which, by the way, should not be included under Environment. We have a false sense of investment in our environment when we continue to put budgetary items that are truly infrastructure – water supply, water treatment, water transport do not strictly belong under Alberta Environment. Again, it obscures the fact that this department is grossly underfunded and completely incapable of doing the jobs it's been tasked to do in terms of monitoring, enforcement, education, and research.

I note the $2.6 million within the supplementary estimates for the oil sands research on reclamation and groundwater assessment: again, vitally important but long overdue. Oil sands development is going ahead apace without any understanding yet about how well we're going to be able to reclaim the sites, how well we're going to be able to remediate the soil and return the land to equivalent land use, which is under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the ultimate goal of all reclamation and remediation. We do desperately need more research, and $2.6 million is important, but where is the long-term plan for establishing the criteria ensuring that we have the best possible protection for the environment before we allow the unfettered development, especially in the oil sands and, increasingly, I've mentioned, in southeastern Alberta in the Horseshoe Canyon formation, where there's evidence of negative impacts on some of the groundwater?

In relation to central Alberta a number of schools have raised concerns in the Red Deer area, in both Red Deer-North and Red Deer-South. I will simply here, Mr. Chairman, highlight the major liabilities that some of these school boards have, both the Red Deer Catholic regional division No. 39 and the Red Deer public school district No. 104. École Camille J. Lerouge school, a raw score of 980; over $1.5 million in maintenance expenses has been brought down to $207,000 in 2005. That deserves a credit to the Alberta government for investment in that important school, a big school in Red Deer. St. Patrick community school, however, is creeping up and has not been substantially addressed in the last five years, standing at a score of 420, with roughly $450,000 in deficit maintenance awaiting attention.

The Annie Gaetz school, with a score of 310, has $285,000 in maintenance deficits. Aspen Heights elementary school, with a score of 360 and a maintenance deficit of $1,052,000, clearly a very high priority in need for reconditioning. Fairview school, a score of 660 and a maintenance deficit of $1.15 million. George Wilbert Smith school in Red Deer, $769,000 in deficit maintenance and a raw score of 510. The Hunting Hills high school in Red Deer, a raw score of 330 and a deficit maintenance need of $843,000. Lindsay Thurber composite high school, the highest raw score on the page, 1,320, with $5 million in deficit maintenance expenditures. Finally, West Park middle school with a raw score of 510 and a deficit maintenance budget of $938,000, Mr. Chairman.

Well, just to return briefly to some of the Environment budget expenditures and needs, I was disappointed not to see some investment in climate change initiatives. There's no mention of any new money. There is, again, a tacit commitment to a fossil fuel addiction that continues in this province, and we continue to look for leadership on energy efficiency and managed growth in the area of fossil fuel development. From a budget of 2006 estimates briefing the government states that it will "initiate actions that make Alberta a leader in energy efficiency improvements, carbon management strategies and adapting to climate change." But what specific programs? We see nothing new despite the growing awareness that we have to reduce in Alberta.

We are the prime producer of greenhouse gases in this country. People are looking to us for leadership not only within this province but around the world. The scientific consensus around man-made activities, fossil fuels being the prime contributors to climate change, is staggering now. It's unavoidable. We have to make the changes. We have to move towards energy efficiency. We have to move towards renewables. To do that, government has to show leadership in providing incentives and setting the standards for building codes and level the playing field for some of the newer technologies in renewable energy development that will actually move us into the leadership role that we deserve and must aspire to and away from our unhealthy dependence on fossil fuels.

Given recent statements by Dr. David Schindler, the water expert out of the University of Alberta, he indicated that climate change as a major factor will threaten our long-term water sustainability. I've indicated earlier that without a better inventory of our water in relation to climate change and our serious commitment to reducing fossil fuel use in this province, we are not going to be credible, and we are not going to be showing the leadership for our children and our grandchildren that we all want to do.

I'd like to know from the Minister of Environment what he's doing to reduce CO₂ emissions in Alberta, especially from the large emitters. Will he commit to a real plan to decrease emissions and not simply focus on this intensity target that is relatively meaningless and simply talks about more and better technology as opposed to new ways of doing business in this province? What is the commitment to CO₂ injection and, again, to renewable fuel development?

The Water for Life strategy again continues to suffer under the lack of investment for some of these public advisory committees that are having huge expectations placed on them about water management in their areas and no resources to deal with a meaningful plan and sustainable management. This puts tremendous pressure on these people, very caring individuals in our communities that have stepped up to volunteer on these public advisory committees on the watersheds and find their hands tied by lack of resources and lack of technical support to make some of the decisions that they are.

Clearly, also, we're getting the message that full-cost accounting must be instituted in this province if we're actually going to be serious about conserving water, focusing on demand management as opposed to supply management. I would again strongly encourage the Minister of Environment to look at ways to more sensibly conserve through demand management, and full-cost accounting is one of the most effective ways worldwide that has been used to help people value appropriately the monies that we are needing to pay to discover the water, to develop the water, to transport the water, and to treat the water.

So I'll close with those remarks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. When I last had the opportunity to speak in this Assembly, I was talking about school fees and some of the surprising fees that showed up at a local Edmonton area high school on their 2006-07 registration forms. I'd just like to touch on one more that I didn't quite get to speak about earlier, and that was music. There is a hundred dollar fee for the rental of band instruments and guitars to take a music class in that high school. Again, this is not to pick on one particular high school because my understanding and recollection from other schools I've dealt with is that it's actually quite normal to have such fees. So that concludes the concerns I had about those particular school fees at that particular high school, but it's indicative of what's happening across the province, and I think that it's a sad comment on the budgeting that we provide to the school boards when we see schools having to charge for parking, as I indicated earlier, or the use of gym facilities or workbooks for math classes.

Now I'd like to talk about some of the schools in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, in particular some of the maintenance concerns that have been raised by those schools in their capital planning and where it leaves them. Louis St. Laurent is a combination junior high/senior high school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. It's a wonderful school with great teachers and an excellent reputation within the Edmonton Catholic system. In 1999-2000 the forecast for repairs at that school was $5.1 million. Some work has been done there, Mr. Chairman. The forecast now for the next five years in terms of maintenance at that school is $1.25 million.

Interestingly enough, several speakers have referred earlier to what is known as the FCI, or facility condition index. This is a rating that's calculated at a school indicating the amount of work that's required in terms of maintenance relative to the overall value of that building. In the case of Louis St. Laurent the score there is 5.75 on the facility condition index, which means 5.75 per cent of the value of the building is what's required in the next five years just to maintain it. That's not a particularly bad score, but indications are that anything over 5 per cent is high, so certainly that causes some concern.

Another Edmonton Catholic school, St. Stanislaus, which is again a wonderful school, very close to my constituency office, has great programming. Their score back in 1999-2000 was 450. Again, Mr. Chairman, anything over 400 points shows that the school was in fair condition, so this school was not in particularly bad shape. But the most recent estimate for maintenance over the next five years is $613,000, and it actually gives it an FCI, or facility condition index, of 14.45, which is quite alarming. Again, 14 per cent of the value of the building is what's required for the next five years just to maintain it at its current condition. So this is certainly a concern for the parents of the students that attend St. Stan's and something that we have to watch carefully.

Perhaps, the most alarming in terms of the Catholic schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford is St. Augustine, which is currently showing more than $1 million in required maintenance over the next five years. That gives it a facility condition index of 25.14, Mr. Chairman, which means that more than a quarter of the value of this school is what's required in maintenance over the next five years. This is the highest score of any school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford and certainly, again, a concern.

We're hoping that some of the dollars that have been provided in this supplementary supply bill will find their way into those three schools. Clearly, they need them.

Another school that I would like to highlight in terms of need is Duggan elementary. Mr. Chairman, Duggan is, again, a wonderful school with a very diverse mix of children, in fact one of the schools that was on the hit list, if I can put it that way, of Edmonton public in terms of its low utilization numbers. Duggan is now bringing in students from south of Ellerslie Road. Those kids in the newer parts of the riding of Edmonton-Whitemud don't have a school, so they're actually being bused all the way up to Duggan to enhance the enrolment of that school. This school is one that, unfortunately, is showing its age.

One of the fears that I have is that it hasn't been kept up as well as we would expect it to be, perhaps due in part to the fact that it is on the hit list, and its future is certainly in doubt. Yet the parents I've spoken to who have children there think that the educators in this school do a wonderful job and would certainly like to see it continue. We've talked a lot in this Assembly about the need for maintaining community schools, how valuable they are to a community, how they are, in fact, often the lifeblood of a community.

Certainly, you know, we're not talking about inner-city schools, where nobody lives anymore. We're talking about schools in very mainstream communities that have been rejuvenated. That particular community is at this point about 40 years old. There are still a few families living there who purchased there 40 years ago. I met a lot of those when I was door-knocking through the constituency. But there are also an awful lot of young families moving into that community, several of them with children that are perhaps not of school age yet but will be soon. The thought of closing their local community school and then perhaps at some point having to bus their kids down south of Ellerslie Road into a new school when they have a perfectly fine facility there if only we maintain it and keep it alive for a few more years until these kids reach school-going age and we can get that enrolment back up: it would be a real shame if they were to lose their community school.

Now, I want to just talk a little bit about Cold Lake and Bonnyville because, Mr. Chairman, I recently had the pleasure of visiting Cold Lake and Bonnyville. Myself and the hon. Member for St. Albert toured that area not more than three weeks ago. We were fortunate enough to go up and be a part of the local Seniors Mini Summer Games for the northeast Alberta region and just had a wonderful experience meeting not only people from that area of the province but throughout the northeast region of the province. Particularly fun were a group of seniors from Fort McMurray, who I became quite enamoured with and who I'd like to think enjoyed my company as well.

We spent two days in Cold Lake discussing various local issues with the residents and managed to learn quite a bit about the community. I have to say that I hadn't personally visited Cold Lake since I was a teenager. What a wonderful community it is, and what a wonderful resource that lake is. I had quite frankly forgotten just what a treasure we have there.

One of the interesting things, Mr. Chairman, is that we spent an absolutely engaging hour speaking to a local schoolteacher about some of her experiences, and I was quite surprised and taken aback at how fearful she was that somebody might actually see her speaking to the Education critic from the Official Opposition. Without a word of a lie, she literally looked over her shoulder several times as she was speaking to the Member for St. Albert and said: I can't let anybody see you talking to me. It speaks to a culture of fear that I have noticed across this province, where people are outright afraid to share their concerns with members of the Official Opposition for fear of retribution from either this government or agencies that depend directly on this government for funding. I think it's a sad comment that we live in a society where people are afraid to express their concerns about their government, but this was very clearly the case in Cold Lake. So, unlike some of the questions that were asked earlier today in question period, I'm not going to be mentioning her name, not because she can't be here to defend herself but because she was so fearful of the retribution she might face if it were known that she was actually sharing some of her concerns with us.

I'll just go through some of the schools in that particular constituency that are definitely in need of looking at. L'école Notre Dame, a high school in Bonnyville, over the next five years needs $406,000 in routine maintenance and has a facility condition index of 5.83, which again is not particularly bad, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, most schools in that constituency have somewhat less need than that, but again anything over 5 is a red flag or an alarm bell that we have to be watching carefully and making sure that these concerns are addressed.

We have H.E. Bourgoin middle school in Bonnyville, where $324,700 is required over the next five years. Now, that's not a particularly high number although it's about the same as what was identified five years ago. The concern is that we really haven't done anything to catch that school up to where it needs to be in terms of maintenance.

A couple of the Cold Lake schools appear to be in a little more need. Cold Lake elementary school is facing $459,726 in maintenance over the next five years, which gives it a facility condition index of 9.42 per cent. Nearly 10 per cent of the value of that particular building is going to be required in the next five years just in terms of routine maintenance to keep it at where it's at today. So these are certainly concerns for the residents of Cold Lake.

I see the R.A. Reynolds school, a school that's located on the base at Cold Lake and has a tremendous reputation for providing education to the students of our military families, has a requirement of nearly half a million dollars. Actually it's much more than that. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. It's $741,000, almost three-quarters of a million dollars in terms of upkeep. Now, they've received some money over the last five years, so it's not that we haven't paid attention to this school, but clearly it hasn't been adequate in terms of getting them back up to where they need to be. They still need nearly three-quarters of a million dollars over the next five years to bring them back up to snuff.

Now, I happened to look at another constituency here, and I hope I can find this information because I thought this was quite interesting. In the constituency, Mr. Chairman, of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, which happens to be the constituency in which our Speaker resides and represents, surprisingly it appears as if most of the schools are doing quite well. The only reason I reference that is because earlier this afternoon my colleague from Calgary-Varsity was highlighting some of the needs of the schools in the Premier's riding of Calgary-Elbow. There appears to be an awful lot of need in Calgary-Elbow, yet Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock seems to have done fairly well.

The Fort Assiniboine school, a community which I know quite well – I spent a fair amount of time in Fort Assiniboine as I was growing up – has a need of $448,330 in maintenance and upkeep over the next five years, which gives it a facility condition index rating of 10.05 per cent. That is the highest, as near as I can tell, of any schools in the Speaker's riding. It's a lot of money, but, as I've said, surprisingly Calgary-Elbow seems to have somewhat more need than Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Now, you can draw whatever conclusion out of that you wish, but I found it to be an interesting little tidbit.

I'm just going to look at some of the other departments, Mr. Chairman, in terms of this supplementary supply bill. The first one that attracted my attention – and I know the people in the horse-racing industry are going to be phoning tomorrow morning because the Official Opposition talks an awful lot about $66 million for horse racing this year and how that's gone up dramatically over the years.

Members opposite will argue that it's not really taxpayers' dollars, that this is only money that comes out of the slot machines that are in the horse-racing facilities. I understand that, but the bottom line is that if it's money that comes into the province, it is taxpayers' money. It belongs to all Albertans, so it's relevant in terms of the conversation. It really becomes a question of priorities as opposed to just picking on the horse-racing industry. However, they happen to be an obvious one. People do have a problem at times when you put this on the scale and you compare horse racing against education or horse racing against health care. Always it raises alarm bells. Again, perhaps the horse-racing industry is an easy mark, but it is one that jumps out at you.

I'm going to pick on them again, as it were, I guess. I note in the supplementary estimates for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development that there's $4.8 million for infrastructure assistance for municipal waste water to support a project in the municipal district of Rockyview that includes a horse-racing track and an equine centre. Now, anybody who's driven along highway 2 just north of Calgary recently will have seen this development taking place, a huge development which is now under way between Calgary and Airdrie just on the east side of the highway. And here we are: not only giving $66 million to the horse-racing industry but now a total, actually, of $8.3 million more to facilitate waste-water management for this particular project. There's $4.8 million that the minister is asking for today in supplementary supply and another $3.5 million which apparently will be paid from the approved program budget or reallocated from lapses in other programs, so a total of another $8.3 million for waste-water management for the horse-racing industry.

Again, that might not be a problem until you start balancing it off against other things. We know from reports that were made to the government's standing policy committee by the municipality of Wood Buffalo that they have huge problems up there. We hear daily about the concerns coming from Wood Buffalo, and Fort McMurray in particular. One of their problems, not surprisingly, is finding the money to either upgrade or replace their waste-water treatment plant. They're having trouble funding this project.

Now, I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I'm sure that the average taxpayer of this province, when they look at $8.3 million going to look after waste-water management for this complex that's being built between Calgary and Airdrie to accommodate the racing horses and then they look at Fort McMurray, who can't get the funding they need to either upgrade or build a new waste-water treatment plant, when you put those two on the scale, there's something wrong with the picture. Clearly, there's something wrong with the picture.

Another question I have when it comes to that particular request for money is why it appears in Agriculture in the first place because when I flip through the bill and I come to the Department of Environment, the Minister of Environment is asking for $3.7 million for the Alberta waste management assistance grant program to support waste management contracts and commitments. The obvious question is: why? Why are we asking for money here for waste water, money there for waste water? Why is it not together? I think it's an obvious question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate again this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's comments in regard to this amount of money that is being used to subsidize . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 8 p.m., at which time we will reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, August 30, 2006 8:00 p.m.
 head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. The committee had adjourned earlier on at 5:30 in Committee of the Whole, so we are reconvening.

Bill 44 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The other evening when I had a chance to speak about the education spending, I talked about the difficulty with the process and the timelines. I've given it some more thought, and I'd like to express some of those this evening.

When I look at the regular parade of this government begging for basics in education while living high on the hog in so many other ways, I'm reminded of Oliver!, the movie that was made from the musical that was made from the book by Dickens. Remember the scene in the workhouse where the boys had been fed their rations and Oliver Twist comes up to his boss, bowl in hand, and asks in a plaintive voice: please, sir, may I have some more? His boss retorts, "What?" and flies into a rage at his audacity.

Though the bleakness of the surroundings might suggest otherwise, Britain was at her summit then. She had an empire with suppliers in every part of the globe, a lucrative balance of payments, and bank vaults overflowing with gold. This was possible because of a workforce stretched to the limit, which included nursing mothers and small children. Yet with this huge surplus, wealth, and power she couldn't find it in her priorities to pay her workers adequately, and when they asked for more, they were intimidated.

Mr. Chairman, we may not have workhouses, but we are impoverishing our children with our current priorities. This province leads the continent in economic growth, and our assets are the envy of the world. This is not only a result of our natural resources but of a resourceful workforce, and that depends on our public education system. Yet too often this third vital ingredient is seen not as the contributor to our well-being that it is but as a drain on the public purse. We talk about our children as the leaders of the future, then we sell short their needs today. How long will our educators, parents, and children have to beg for the basics before we have a level of infrastructure that adds up to the Alberta advantage we advertise? How long will the government routinely underbudget the cost of education and force its representatives to show up, cup in hand, in this House with the sad and unnecessary refrain: please, sir, may I have some more?

We need predictable and stable funding. This will enable school jurisdiction planning that is consistent with the province's goals for the basic education system. This would also provide stability for school jurisdictions in dealing with changing circumstances and in periods of stability and growth as well as decline. I believe we need to provide school jurisdictions with the flexibility to allocate funds to programs as they choose in order to meet the educational needs of their students and address local priorities. Our province was established on the principle of local autonomy because those closest to the constituency and grassroots can better understand and meet and represent the constituents. School boards deserve the opportunity to make decisions based on the needs of their jurisdiction.

Education is important. For more than 30 years economists have been virtually unanimous in recognizing that it is not resources or technology that create wealth but people. If there is any one area that deserves our attention and support, it is the drawing out of our people into their fullness, which is what the word "education" means.

I have some concerns that I'd like to go over in particular with senior high schools. High schools have to set up completion target rates every year. The funds are then allocated based on projected credits as of September 30. If at the end of the school year the targets are not met due to dropouts, the school is hit with huge funds being taken out in August. As such, it is almost impossible for high schools to plan budget spending, and many high schools end up in deficit.

This practice is leaving the most needy high schools with the least funds. High schools in poor neighbourhoods or with significant immigrant population are the ones most affected. In irony, they are the ones that need the funds the most to provide these students with extra help, these students who are needy or are often coming from difficult home situations, and they get the least amount of money. In other words, poor schools are getting poorer, and rich are getting richer. I'm disappointed that the recent figures that were shown have no indication of any plans to change the allocations for high school funding.

Another concern is that the maintenance of physical plants to create safe and clean environments for students has been neglected for years. Schools, especially the aging ones, are not getting enough funds to meet the school maintenance needs. The maintenance allocations are based on the size of the building and enrolment and not on the school age or individual needs. I saw that there is some money, a great deal more, that's been added lately; it's a huge jump. But because of the fact that we were so determined to get rid of the debt, we have neglected these buildings for years, and the huge jump still isn't enough.

Another concern is school technology, keeping up with upgrades. There's nothing specific that indicates that we're going to put something in to help in this area. It's a constant challenge for schools to keep up with technology upgrades. To update one computer lab, which needs to be done every four to five years, is costing schools about $60,000. Most high schools have more than one computer lab, not to mention the technical support that's needed to maintain the program. The allocation that we get per student covers about 25 per cent of what is needed.

Another area that I've talked about in the past that still is not being addressed adequately is the programming for special-needs students. Amounts now allocated do not cover the cost of full-time aides that some need. They do not meet the school's cost to provide the programming ratios necessary to ensure that those with learning deficits can be brought up to speed. They do not allow for the collaboration time and the prep time necessary to ensure teachers' ability to provide the highest level of assessment practices or to prepare material that will challenge students on higher order thinking skills.

The special-needs area includes the most disadvantaged, and it is not adequately funded. Programs like Head Start and early childhood programs should be strongly encouraged for families who need support to ensure that the next generation has an equal starting place when they hit kindergarten. A six-year-old in grade 1 can be two or more years behind his peers before he even starts on his grade 1 year. This could be prevented through participation in quality programs that ultimately will result in saving enormous amounts of dollars that are required later on for remediation.

Another area of concern continues to be school counsellors, librarians, and speech therapists. There's no funding allowed to recognize this need. We lost many of these people because their jobs were cut in the last decade. University students chose other careers so they would have a greater chance of employment in the future, and now if we did have the funding, it would be difficult to find the people to fill these positions.

Ellul, who was a French communications expert, points out that technology means we are moving towards fewer workers in the area of manual labour. What we need for the information age is well-trained people. We have a drastic shortage of skilled blue-collar workers: mechanics who work with computer chips in vehicles these days, electricians, plumbers, chefs, beauty culture workers. The list goes on and on. We've been catering to the top 10 per cent of the population in our schools, and as a result we have taken out the repair shops and the building shops and the other labs that once were there for the vocational part of the programs.

The best legacy, I think, that we can leave behind is the best-trained workforce in the world, and that only happens with education. We need all kinds of education, and it costs money to tool up for the 21st century. We need to use the public school system to ensure that every student is fully employable and therefore a useful and participating member of society.

I talked earlier this week about kindergarten, especially the junior kindergarten program under the city centre education project. The positive effects of providing optimal junior and full-day kindergarten, for example getting children on the right path to success, far outweigh the costs. Many districts I know are already offering full-day kindergarten. These optional programs are at or near capacity, which indicates that there is a strong demand for these programs. The problem of drawing resources from other areas to pay for kindergarten still remains and is a concern. The junior kindergarten program I spoke of earlier has received enormous awards throughout its three years, indicating all kinds of success from many perspectives.

Another area I'd like to talk about is the joint use agreement. Specifically, it's a legal agreement between the city of Edmonton, Edmonton public schools, and Edmonton Catholic schools that describes how the partners work together to plan, develop, and share schools and park facilities. The agreement outlines how school gymnasiums and other parts of school buildings are made available to community groups during after-school hours and how swimming pools, arenas, tennis courts, and picnic sites are available to school children during school hours. Why isn't there a specific fund from the government to support joint use? This would take the burden of cost away from the schools and from the community groups – that is, custodial help, security, and so on – and assist our schools in really being part of the community and being the heart of the community.

Another thing that I feel I need to take a look at is the idea of capital projects and school boards listing their priorities. The province decided to provide the Edmonton public school board with $17.3 million for their top priority project, the construction of a new high school in the Riverbend/Terwillegar community in southwest Edmonton. The school is going to be built to accommodate 1,000 high school students. But when I looked at the priority listing from Edmonton public schools, this particular school that's going to be built is number 21 on the list, so I have to ask how it became number one in the minds of our government over 20 other projects that the district listed as more of a priority.

Another thing is that the $17.3 million given at that time was out of $207 million for the province. That's a percentage of 8.3 per cent, but Edmonton public schools, in getting the 8.3 per cent, must educate and accommodate 15 per cent of the province's students.

Another thing that I'll bring up again – and it's been brought up many times – is the unfunded liability of the Alberta teachers' retirement fund as a growing, inter-generational, unproductive debt. What plan does the ministry have to deal with the rising costs of its unfunded teachers' pension obligation? There's nothing indicated yet that this is even going to be addressed.

As I looked at the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon – that's the Black Gold regional division No. 18 and the St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic separate school division No. 38 – I was looking at the ranking of concerns, and École J.E. Lapointe school is listed at 29.61 per cent under the facility condition index. We note that 10 per cent is considered poor, so I have to ask what plans there are for this high school. That ranking would indicate that perhaps renovation or additional space might be more costly than replacing the school. I'm wondering what the minister has considered there.

The other question I have is Leduc composite high school. Again, a rating that's very high, and I'm not sure if there are any specific plans for that school that would involve looking at, of course, sustainability or addressing some specific needs to help it be at par and to sustain its programming.

I also looked at the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. Donnan school, which is a junior high, has a sustainability review in the next one to three years and also Avonmore in that area, but it's not till four to six years. I'm wondering what the communication process has been with the residents in these areas because I understand a sustainability review would mean that perhaps they would be looking at school closures. What is the actual process for determining sustainability? I notice that Kenilworth is ranked also, but it looks like it's at a 4.44 in terms of the facility condition index, which means that it's considered to be only average needs. I guess I'd like to have more explanation of how that sustainability factor is calculated and what is the process of letting people in these constituencies know what is being looked at for the years coming ahead.

I think at this point I'll leave it. I'd like to talk about Health, but I'll do that later on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The traditional opening for anyone speaking on second reading or committee is to say something like: I'm pleased to rise today to address bill whatever. I wish I could say that was true today, but it isn't. We've been called into session here in the dying days of what had been up until today a beautiful end of August to rubber-stamp, basically, $1.3 billion worth of supplementary spending. Now, this government's attitude towards spending is best described as cavalier. I was reminded when I was working on my notes for this today of a famous, or actually infamous, quote from C.D. Howe, who was called the Minister of Everything in the government of Louis St. Laurent. During a notorious debate in the House of Commons in 1945 Howe famously said: what's a million? You can up the ante on that quote to a billion dollars, and you've got this government's attitude today: what's a billion? So here we are, called into session in the summer to approve – and that's all it is because in reality there's no debate here – $1.3 billion in expenses.

Now, to be honest, the vast majority of this spending is actually essential. Dozens of schools in Alberta are in dire need of repair. The cost of building materials in Alberta is going through the roof, resulting in vastly increased costs for a variety of projects. Our health care system is experiencing severe strains as the population booms.

As much as this money is needed, and in some cases desperately needed, very little of it could be classed as unforeseen. Schools don't crumble overnight. There was no epidemic that caused health authorities to ring up deficits. The vast majority of the $1.3 billion that is being spent here today is due to this government's chronic aversion to long-term planning and its single-minded obsession with defeating the debt. But, Mr. Chairman, if you don't change the oil in your car so that you can put more money into paying it off, eventually it will cost you a whole heck of a lot more to repair the car than you saved by paying it off faster. It's like that old commercial – I think it was for FRAM air filters – where the mechanic says: you can pay me now, or you can pay me later. Well, welcome to later.

While most of the appropriation that we are debating tonight and over this past week is needed and long overdue, some of the supplementary spending looks to me like items that could and probably should have waited for a full hearing in the Legislature during a proper budget debate. For instance, we have Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, which has asked for $270,800,000. Now, $261 million of it is to respond to an economic disaster in the agriculture industry, but the rest of it appears to be for matters that could or should have waited for a full budget hearing, ideally with the minister present.

Most interesting is "$4,800,000 for Infrastructure Assistance for Municipal Wastewater to support a project in the Municipal District of Rockyview that includes a horseracing track and an equine centre." Now, with the very limited amount of time we have to debate over a billion dollars in spending, a relatively puny amount like $4.8 million practically goes unnoticed, but there are plenty of questions regarding this expenditure, most notably if it is yet another sweetheart deal for the horse-racing industry. It's a legitimate question that deserves to be addressed properly in this forum, but it doesn't look like that's going to happen.

We could also ask the same questions about the Economic Development ministry's expense of $2.2 million for the ministry's contribution to the strategies for something called "Building and Educating Tomorrow's Workforce" and "Supporting Immigrants and Immigration to Alberta." Now, it's an important topic, certainly, but an expense of $2.2 million deserves a full airing in the Legislature, and it certainly doesn't appear to be something that we have to be called into session for to pass.

How about the additional $20 million for Innovation and Science? Now, my friend, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, is supportive of this expenditure, so I will accept his opinion that this is a worthwhile use of public funds. He's nodding his head, so I guess that I got that one right. But it does not answer the questions. Is this expenditure so vital that it should be included in supplementary estimates so soon after the last budget was passed? The ink has hardly dried on the last budget we passed here, and here we are, at it again. These are questions that we're not going to get answers to.

I would like to switch gears briefly and talk about some places where the money should be spent, most notably education, and I'm going to make what amounts to a flagrant pitch that some of it be spent in the constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Now, Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency is a predominantly middle-class area with a large number of homes in the 25- to 40-year range.

The schools are roughly the same age, so they are at the stage where upkeep is vitally important.

Now, some good things have happened in the schools in Edmonton-Meadowlark. I am particularly impressed with the work done on Winterburn elementary, which has seen substantial improvements over the past few years, and it's now a very attractive and very well-attended school.

Unfortunately, due to a chronic lack of funding five schools in Edmonton-Meadowlark have what are called facility condition index ratings of over 10 per cent, which is considered poor. For instance, Hillcrest junior high has an FC index of 16.96. Now, in the 1999-2000 audit Hillcrest needed $264,000 worth of repairs and upgrades. Today Hillcrest needs about one and a half million dollars. So virtually nothing has been done at Hillcrest at all.

Also of concern in Edmonton-Meadowlark is H.E. Beriault school, which has a 19.69 FCI and needs $1.7 million in upgrades over the next few years.

St. Thomas More is in even worse shape. A few years ago, back in 1999-2000, it needed $749,000 to address its maintenance needs, but now it needs more than $3 million over the next five years.

No school in Edmonton-Meadowlark and perhaps no school in Edmonton needs an infusion of government cash more than St. Francis Xavier high school. St. Francis Xavier is the largest Catholic school in west Edmonton, with more than 1,100 students. St. FX is home to an advanced placement program, a modified French immersion program, a complete career and technology program, French, Spanish, Italian, and French immersion, and Spanish 105. It also has a hugely successful sports academy program, which includes the sports of hockey, soccer, lacrosse, baseball, and golf. St. FX is a thriving school in every aspect, but much of the building is in very poor condition.

The original school was built in 1958 and has had only one minor modernization done in roughly 1985 or 1986. The school is quite literally sinking. The roof needs replacing. There were at one time plants growing out of the joints in many locations of the roof. The mechanical systems are original to the year that the area was constructed, which means that some of the mechanicals are approaching 50 years of age. Imagine, Mr. Chairman, having a 50-year-old furnace in your home.

You know, Mr. Chairman, I spoke to a former St. FX student who told me that while she was attending school there, it was considered wise not to sit too close to some of the windows in case the pressure from the shifting building caused one of the windows to pop out. Now, maybe that's an apocryphal story or maybe it's just school talk, but that's the kind of concerns that students had about being in that school. A teacher told me that the evaluator told him that the best thing to do with much of St. Francis Xavier was to tear it down, but then, of course, where do you put 1,100 students? The best course of action for the 1958 section of the school is to tear it down and to build a new addition. This isn't the opinion of the Catholic school system only but also of the 2004 facility evaluation report. At that time, the cost was estimated at $4 million. Now we're looking at $6 million and counting.

Mr. Chairman, the longer we wait before we start doing necessary repairs to schools, the worse it gets. We are adding to the costs with each passing day that we neglect these schools, and we are just not serving the best interests of the students or the teachers or the city of Edmonton or the province of Alberta by not passing the proper legislation to get this job done. Now, I've made a pitch for my school and I admit it, for St. Francis Xavier.

An Hon. Member: Apply for lottery funds.

Mr. Tougas: Apply for lottery funds. Well, if we could only do that, we'd have things cleared up. We've got hundreds of millions of dollars in lottery funds. We've got lots of it all over the place.

An Hon. Member: Put up a little track.

Mr. Tougas: No more horse racing, please.

I've made my pitch for my school. I know that the money is there. I can't remember the exact total. Hundreds of millions of dollars are available for schools now. A number of schools in Edmonton-Meadowlark are in dire need of this money. I trust that the Education minister will read over Hansard in his spare time and make the appropriate decision.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate having the opportunity to speak on a number of I think crucial issues in regard to the supplementary budget. I have had the opportunity to speak on specifically Education and a couple of other departments. What I would like to perhaps lead off with here this evening is a more general commentary as to what sort of message we're being sent here with this budget and previous budgets that I have been able to review in the last couple of years.

It's clear from all indications here in the province, across the country, and indeed around the world that we're in the midst of an unprecedented economic boom in the province of Alberta. Certainly, the growth that we are enjoying and the prosperity that comes with that boom is welcomed by most people. However, I always look at the actions of people and of governments as much as I listen to what they say. It's curious at best, I think, to see the reaction to this economic boom from this Legislative Assembly, not from what is said because we have been inundated with platitudes about prosperity and the best this and the best that. Rather, let's take a look at the actions that are taking place because quite often they speak much more loudly than words.

What I see from a lack of commitment to long-term investments in certain key areas of infrastructure, of public institutions, of the things that this Legislative Assembly is responsible to provide for the people of Alberta is that I'm getting this feeling that we're here for a good time, not a long time. We're going to ride this boom out. We're going to ride the crest of it and slide on down again into the depths of whatever comes next, just like the last time. That's the sort of action that I'm seeing from this government and from this Legislative Assembly, and quite frankly I am not only disappointed, but I feel compelled to intervene in some way, whatever way possible.

Of course, for most of us of a certain age we have gone through the boom and bust cycle previously here in the province of Alberta, and we all know in our heart of hearts that without planning and without intervention, in fact, this boom and bust cycle is more destructive than it is constructive.

Let's just take it back to the last time we found our economy doing so well and then bottoming out, in the early 1980s, and what did we see? We saw unprecedented inflation, where people were buying very expensive homes and businesses were making very expensive investments, and suddenly the bottom fell out of the economy. What happened? People lost their homes. We had double-digit inflation and interest rates, and it was, certainly, relatively speaking, quite devastating for many thousands of families across the province.

Here we are in 2006, and we're seeing very similar economic indicators. People are buying and borrowing at a much higher rate than we've seen in the last 25 years, real estate prices are unrealistically high and continuing to move that way, and people are being stretched to the limit as a result of these and other inflationary pressures that affect the pocketbook, the bottom line of regular working people in this province.

What we saw back in the late '70s and early '80s that was different, though, at least, is that the government was making infrastructure and investments in public institutions to meet somehow the growth and the increase in population in the province. Now, 20-some years later, a similar situation, and we are simply not making that investment. So as I said before, what we're seeing here is actions speaking much louder than words.

How are we going to manage this boom? Well, come on by for a while, ride it out, and then perhaps you just have to go home or go back to where you came from afterwards because we're not going to build the infrastructure, the public institutions, the housing, the things that people need to survive the long term here in the province of Alberta, and I think that's very, very disappointing.

I think we have to look no further than in regard to housing. I've heard some very interesting arguments here in the last 48 hours or so in regard to building housing. I always like that right-wing sop that comes back and says: "Oh, well, these people aren't planning. They come to Alberta, and look at them. They're irresponsible. They're not planning to pay for that $1,500 rent a month or whatever. They're looking for a cheap deal. It's every person for themselves, thank you very much." Well, you know, that sort of attitude – right? – coupled with the severe labour shortage that we have here is just incomprehensible. It's like two ideas striking illogically against each other.

We're trying to bring people into the province presumably to not just work and build a house or drill a hole and then go back to wherever they came from but to build the population and to build the culture and to build the foundation of the new future for Alberta and have them stay here. So housing I would expect to be the very first place that we would send a welcoming signal and, in fact, at the very least help to alleviate our labour situation because people would feel welcome and willing to stay. When you solve a housing problem by building labour camps – right? – or you try to solve a labour problem by using temporary foreign workers, you're sending, again, the same very clear message that we're here for a good time, not a long time. We'll build your thing. Come here and we'll give you a few bucks, and then hit the road, thank you very much.

I have a constituent that had a complaint for me last week. A person with a temporary work permit had come to the province of Alberta to work and got injured, went to the Workers' Compensation Board, and lo and behold, before his hearing came forward, his work visa ran out. "So sorry. Too bad. So sad. You were here to work. You can't work. Hit the road. We'll see you later." You know, there is a myriad of new problems that we're creating by failing to deal with the economic boom that we're experiencing here in a logical and systematic sort of fashion, using the capacity that we have here in this legislative House to deal with it.

Perhaps I would like to start, then, just in terms of the various departments, by looking at what we can do to somehow moderate and to use intelligently the economic riches, particularly the energy resources, with which we are blessed and on which the foundation of this boom is based. Even the most conservative voices that we hear from outside of this government are saying very clearly that we have to moderate and control the rate of major projects that are being approved – the drilling projects, the heavy oil projects, the tar sands, the oil sands projects – moderate them in some basic way so that you're not approving everything all at once. It creates shortages of labour and materials. It distorts the economy. In fact, it is distorting to some extent the entire national economy of the country by simply having this rubber stamp that approves every single major oil project that passes over the desk at any given time.

You can see a perfect microcosm of that, of course, and perhaps the epicentre of that in Fort McMurray, where there are 22 large projects either approved or on the way all happening at the same time, and you have this meltdown situation, Mr. Chairman. You have a situation where the municipal district of Wood Buffalo, perhaps out of desperation, said: "Well, hey, maybe enough is enough. Maybe even we will stand up and say to Suncor" – one of the long-standing and certainly more responsible corporations up in Fort McMurray – "that we can't handle your Voyageur expansion. Enough is enough. Our roads, our water system, our hospital are all on the teetering edge of collapse."

I had an opportunity to be at that EUB hearing a couple of weeks ago, and it was just absolutely illuminating to see the social tension and, I dare say, the political tension that is being wrought on that area as a result of poor planning or, I should say, almost entirely the absence of planning in regard to tar sand expansion throughout the Wood Buffalo region. You know, this act of desperation was for attention, I would say. The good burghers of the MD of Wood Buffalo certainly are not opposed to tar sand development, and certainly the New Democrats aren't either. It provides tremendous job opportunities and revenue opportunities which all Albertans should share in, but it just brings to a head, I hope, in the minds of the members opposite that a little bit of planning probably isn't such a bad idea at this juncture in the history of this province.

Looking at the next group of energy projects that are coming up for review, let's try to use, perhaps, a little bit more of a clear-headed approach to it. Looking in a tempered way, do we have the capacity for another half a dozen upgraders, do we have the capacity for another major tar sand project or oil sand project, and have we done the planning to see what the implications of those projects are? I would suggest neither, in regard to both long-term planning and the economic implications, have been looked at properly. Really, that constitutes not just irresponsibility on the part of this Legislature, but I would say that it borders on gross negligence as well.

Looking at individual projects, I suppose, what is lacking in my mind in terms of planning is an integrated method by which different ministries can look at and contribute to the viability of any given project. I was in the Peace Country recently, and it struck me perhaps as a bit of an epiphany that, you know, the oil sand potential that they have in the eastern Peace area is certainly comparable or at least as significant in some way as the tar sands in the eastern part of Alberta. What a great opportunity for us to learn from our mistakes, from Fort McMurray, and not visit them on the good people of Peace River in the east, not just for the residents of the Peace River country but for the benefit of the whole province as well.

Part of the problem, Mr. Chairman, is that when we're developing all of these projects all at once, we're not collecting the revenues from royalties that all Albertans deserve. Part of the reason, I would hasten to suggest as well, is that all of these projects are being developed in sort of this headlong rush, all at once, in a bonanza sort of manner because the energy companies know that they're getting such a tremendous bargain on the royalty rates. They know it can't last, so everybody is trying to get in there before reality sets in and, in fact, the province of Alberta does charge a decent royalty rate for the energy that is being exported out of this province.

As I say, it's not just a question of the people who are affected in the immediate area around a major project, the workers that are going there, but really it's an issue for all Albertans to seriously consider at this juncture. What sort of infrastructure we build in regard to energy, in regard to all of our public institutions right now is the structure that we're going to be left with for the next 20 to 30 years. What sort of energy choices we make are systems that we're going to build now at tremendous expense that we're going to be either stuck with or happy that we had the foresight to put into place for, as I say, not just the short term but the long-term future as well.

As we have advocated for quite a while now, what we must do is use our hydrocarbon resources that we have available to us and use that wealth as a bridge to build a new sort of energy future for the province. Certainly, we're not going to simply walk away from hydrocarbons and neither is the world, but what we must do is learn to sip those resources more judiciously instead of gulping them down and to make sure that we're maximizing the money that we have from that to invest in green energy alternatives.

So the critical portfolio of the areas that I have been responsible for I would like to see working more in concert to create that dream energy future so that Economic Development, Sustainable Resource Development, Energy, Environment are all working together to create a mechanism by which we can make a serious commitment to solar energy, to geothermal energy, to wind power, to conservation, to cogeneration so that with any decision we're making and investment we're making, we are looking at a nonhydrocarbon alternative first and foremost. I will be introducing a private member's bill tomorrow that hopefully will I guess help to move this notion forward in some small way in regard to the capacity of people to net meter their electricity. I know, amongst many, many other good ideas, that this is a notion whose time has come for this province.

As I said, energy, certainly, is the key to the province. I guess there's no mystery there, but how we manage it is up for question and for debate. What we need to do is have an honest debate in this province over the next weeks and months and years to ensure that, in fact, we are investing in something that ultimately will be sustainable environmentally, economically, and socially as well.

I have quite a number of other issues that I want to speak on. Perhaps I'll just stick with the energy development concept.

One of the things that struck me in the Peace Country when I was there last week was, of course, the oil sand development there, which is slightly different from Fort McMurray – they're having to drill further down to reach the oil sand deposits in the Peace Country – is that once again the development is taking place in a very piecemeal and sort of fractured sort of way. Specifically, I visited the Seal Lake, Cadotte Lake, and Carmon Creek area just southeast of Peace River, and what I saw there I found very concerning because you have a much more populated and more sensitive situation than perhaps you have in Fort McMurray. In this area you have farming. In this area you have areas that already have been designated as green zones by SRD. You have forestry and a much higher population that has been there for a long time. Rather than having an integrated overall plan for this area, this green space, as I say, around the Seal Lake, Cadotte Lake area, instead of having an overall plan that involves both Environment and SRD, what's happening is that the municipal district is simply going ahead and piecemeal servicing the energy companies that wish to drill in this green area.

So you have roads being sort of built in a slightly haphazard or, you know, piecemeal fashion. You have green space being cut up into smaller and smaller pieces. You have an absence of planning around the green area so that people that live on the periphery of the drilling area are uncertain as to what sort of future they can expect for their farms and for their acreages, and you have a complete absence of an environmental impact assessment that works in concert with the SRD to ensure that the green zone that has been established there remains and keeps its integrity as a wild area.

So it certainly sparked my imagination to think that this is a small microcosm of a lack of planning that causes problems all across this province, where we say: "Okay. Industry first; business knows best. Away we go, and let's drill that new area." Well, certainly that is useful, and I won't stand in the way of that sort of economic progress. But it is, again, the responsibility of this Legislature to provide the regulation and the level playing field for all different industry players and for residents and for farmers to know what exactly to expect. I will say with some authority that energy companies like this same sort of clear-cut regulation and planning so that they can conduct their business in a reasonable and equitable way rather than this piecemeal approach, which might favour one or another operation.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this stage of debate on this Bill 44, the appropriation bill number 2, I wanted to talk some more about this extra money that we're asked to approve, with focus, of course, on both education and health not only because they represent the larger portions of this supplementary supply from a purely monetary or financial standpoint but also in appreciation for their importance and the emphasis that we Alberta Liberals place on these two files or departments. I have already spoken with respect to education in second reading and have put some of my general thoughts on the record, but today I wanted to cover some specifics.

Looking at my own schools in Edmonton-McClung, Mr. Chairman, we tend to be in relatively better shape than other areas because these schools are either younger in comparison or have been well kept. You know, I would think that it's probably a mix of both. The age is one thing, and the maintenance is another. The newest addition in my area is Archbishop Oscar Romero, which is a Catholic high school which came on board in 2004. Now, in terms of a needs assessment or the maintenance audits, which took place back in 1999-2000, it would seem that St. Martha and Rio Terrace were the two needing the most attention, in the amount of about $559,000 each, followed by Our Lady of the Prairies at $508,000, and Callingwood elementary at $452,000. Then you would include Centennial school at $395,000 and Patricia Heights at around $353,000.

Now, those were the six schools identified back then as needing the most attention and assistance in terms of the money needed to address all maintenance needs for each of those particular schools. This is not saying that the other schools did not need or deserve attention as well, but based on that audit back in '99-2000 these six schools sort of stood out. They were in need of a bit more attention. It was more critical or more urgent.

I'm also under the impression that a whole bunch of reaudits were started in 2005, but unfortunately there is no data yet for the schools in Edmonton-McClung, which means that we don't have a more current picture evaluating the situation today. Again, I might assume that this is because most of them were relatively new, so maybe the ministry did not feel the need to re-evaluate or reassess, or maybe their turn did not come yet.

I would also like to receive the up-to-date facility condition index, or FCI, figures for my schools, which is another useful tool to determine how much work is needed compared to the replacement value for those buildings. So if the hon. minister has access to this information or if it's in fact being looked at or in the process, I would like to receive it as soon as I can.

Now, if the FCI assessments were not done because my schools are in better shape than most, I would also need to be informed of this situation. Also, I would argue that the minister keeps telling us about how he continually monitors the situation with respect to infrastructure and so on, so if they're scheduled at some point in the future or planned, I should also be made aware of this. Actually, parents, to some extent, deserve to be told as well. The buildings age, and new problems manifest all the time, you know, regardless of how much work or how much maintenance is done on an annual basis. So every school year we fix some, but then new problems would manifest.

Another layer we can add is basically to rely on the principals and the custodians in those schools to submit, you know, progress reports or to submit concerns or issues that they're having to the attention of the minister. So if they're scheduled for a review, let's say, in six months, but something is happening today, they don't have to wait, and they're not told to wait. These guys are the front line and they're right there. You know, I have tremendous respect for custodial staff and for principals. They look at things everywhere, from a light bulb that needs replacing to actually ensuring the structural integrity of a school's roof, for example, and everything in between. They're the ones entrusted to make ends meet, and they're the ones that actually make those operational decisions right there. So, again, I would seize this opportunity to commend them on the work that they do and to also recognize the principals and the custodians for their resilience and creativity. Amazing men and women, Mr. Chairman.

Now, in terms of the raw score, which evaluates the amount of maintenance needed under that school facility evaluation project, back in 1999-2000 we were told that a score of zero to 399 lands you a "good." A score of 400 to 799 means a fair status, and then anything over 800 means poor. Luckily, none of my schools ranks as poor, and only two are in the fair category. Centennial was at 490, and Callingwood was at 410. St. Martha was at 380, and the other schools were less. So again I would highlight the need for more current estimates. I don't want to be led to believe that my schools are doing better than they are actually or in reality, and I think that continuous monitoring and reassessment is advised.

Mr. Chairman, almost all of us in this House enjoy a good working relationship with the people running the schools in our constituencies. I, for one, certainly do. One of those principals took me to the back of his school to show me a door which gets repeatedly vandalized. A simple stone is thrown and the glass window on that door is shattered; it happens every two or three months. What I saw was not a sheet of glass. I saw an ugly piece of dirty wood, or something that looked like wood and, of course, no light coming through. I asked the principal: why not install that sort of protective mesh wiring that goes on top of the glass to permanently address this problem and to prevent it from reoccurring even if it costs a little more?

The answer is that based on the pool of money for repairs, short-term fixes, even if they end up costing more in the long run, are fine and allowed, but longer term solutions, which make more sense – they might cost more today, but they would save a whole bunch of money later – are not allowed, or they have to be funded from a separate allocation of funds. It takes longer for the paperwork, and sometimes they're even denied altogether. I think that this is stupid, and it has to be addressed. I would urge the Minister of Education in one of his numerous meetings around the province to discuss with the school boards ways to transfer this minute piece of decision-making and management flexibility to the individual principals on site. I agree that most of our institutions and organizations should be managed or run like businesses. I don't think it's happening now, and I think it's a model to be further investigated.

I disagree, however, that we enforce the accountability pillar, as it is referred to in the yet-to-be-released 2006-07 funding manual for school authorities – I have a copy of it, and it's due to be released next week – while not affording full support and enough flexibility for them to perform and excel. That would be the flexibility pillar. That document, which is going to be released next week, Mr. Chairman, talks about the accountability pillar, and it also talks about the flexibility pillar. Speaking of this funding manual, the flexibility statement was one paragraph long, while the limitations listed to qualify it appeared in five paragraphs.

It's good to have limits and boundaries, dos and don'ts, to have structure, but I would argue equally for local decision-making with the right checks and balances in place. Furthermore, I would advocate fuller and stronger involvement by parent groups as stakeholders and partners, as equals. Our schools need regular maintenance and care, some more than others, and there should be a clear plan with clear timelines and frequent reassessments, as I mentioned, along the way.

I can digress here a bit and editorialize, Mr. Chairman, how I think it was poor planning, an example of government shortsightedness, to pay off the financial, or on paper, debt at the expense of school boards and local health authorities. That's also assuming that we believe or share this government's view that the unfunded teachers' liability in the neighbourhood of $4 billion for the government portion alone – and then the teachers are on the hook for about $2 billion on their own in today's dollars – is not a debt. So the question is: are we truly debt free? I don't think so.

What this government has done was eliminate the debt on paper while postponing or ignoring required and timely maintenance and upkeep projects and allowing the infrastructure in our schools, hospitals, and roads to deteriorate plus the fact that what we could have fixed up or kept up six or seven or, indeed, 14 years ago, when the so-called revolution began, at those years' dollars would have saved us enormously at today's dollars. But, again, these are symptoms of a government adrift on autopilot, only looking under its feet, with no worries about tomorrow. Mr. Chairman, that tomorrow is here now, today, and we cannot and will not wait any longer or forgive any more of this government's sins.

Applying the deep cuts back in 1992-93, which amounted in some instances to sabotage by this government and its former finance minister, who's now hoping to come back, was one thing. But this government abandoning its responsibility and mixing up its priorities, with no vision or sense of direction whatsoever, is another and more important thing. Penalizing school boards if they run deficits while denying them the adequate support that they need is wrong. As I said yesterday, boasting about giving them an average 3.2 per cent increase over last year compared to the inflation in Alberta, which is the highest in Canada at 4.3 per cent, is hardly something to be proud of. When the base instruction grant per student is $5,200 in 2006-07 compared to $6,800 back in 2000-01, something in this picture is not right. Not offering the required flexibility or even minimal autonomy to principals to manage their own school affairs and run their organizations is also wrong. But, as I said, Mr. Chairman, I digress.

Back to Edmonton-McClung. I'm not sure if you're aware, Mr.

Chairman, that my constituency is experiencing the highest rate of growth in Edmonton, tremendous growth west of the Anthony Henday Drive. There is a housing building frenzy, and the population is rapidly and constantly growing. I would bet you that at least 2,000 to 3,000 new people now make McClung their home compared to 2004 figures. Most of these newcomers to the west end. More importantly, south of the Whitemud in my constituency are young people with children or young couples who moved to Alberta to settle and start families. So in a year or two or three these families are also going to have children. We urgently need at least one elementary school in that area to serve the residents of the Grange, Glastonbury, and the Hamptons. That's the start.

We may also need to potentially look at a junior high school as well, perhaps, as time goes on, in three to five years' time. So I hope the hon. Minister of Education would take this into account. The people of Edmonton-McClung, especially, as I mentioned, west of the Anthony Henday, have a lot of difficulty actually busing their kids to other schools. I think that at least an elementary school to start plus potentially a junior high is advised. I know that the land and the infrastructure are there. All we have missing or lacking or maybe not yet is the will and the resources allocated by the hon. Minister of Education.

Moving on, another constituency which I particularly care about is Sherwood Park. Sherwood Park has about 20 to 22 schools, and some of them are in better shape than others. Now, looking at their facility index, some of them were at, you know, 24, 25. One was at 37 per cent, which means that it would cost 37 per cent to fix it or it would cost 100 per cent to replace it. So it's really in bad shape. This particular one is Madonna Catholic school, and they had a raw score of about 410 back in '99. In 2005, Mr. Chairman, this particular school, for example, needs about 2 and a quarter million dollars for all the upgrades and all the maintenance.

Take another one: Brentwood school. Brentwood school has an FCI of 25 per cent. Surprisingly, in 1999-2000 their estimated requirements were valued at about $626,000. In 2005, which is about five years later, it actually skyrocketed to $1.5 million, so that's like a big 150 per cent jump, a raw score of about 300.

Take another one: Campbelltown school, raw score of 510, and in '99 they needed $652,000. In 2005 they needed $1.16 million. Take Fultonvale elementary school at a raw score of 490: in '99 they needed $737,000. It rose by about a hundred thousand to $876,000 in 2005. Take Pine Street school: they needed $499,000 back in '99; in 2005, $744,000.

The list goes on. Take Wes Hosford school, raw score 450: in '99 they needed $475,000. Nothing got done or not enough, and in 2005 they needed $970,000. Madonna I mentioned needing $2.25 million.

Other ones for which we don't have the 2005 figures include Bev Facey composite. In '99 they needed $1.6 million. I'm not sure where they stand today, if in fact a reassessment has been done. Salisbury composite: back then $977,000. Again, we're not sure where they're at today.

Mr. Eggen: That's my high school.

Mr. Elsalhy: Oh, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder went to that school. Was it bad back then?

Mr. Eggen: Salisbury? Yeah, it was falling apart.

Mr. Elsalhy: It was falling apart back then, and we need to be made aware of improvements at least.

Sherwood Heights junior high: back then 1 and a quarter million, and again we're not sure what's happening today. Woodbridge Farms: $701,000; we're not sure what's happening today. Father Kenneth Kearns went down minimally. It required $1.1 million back in '99. It requires $1 million in 2005, so some progress, but their FCI is 24 per cent. Jean Vanier at a raw score of 520, again, slightly went down from $1.5 million to about $800,000. Our Lady of Perpetual Help, $837,000. St. Luke Catholic, $818,000 back in '99.

So tons of money needed for schools in Sherwood Park. I would hope that the ministry shares with us the updated estimates for the year 2005, also the FCI figures, to give us a better understanding of the maintenance picture in those schools in Sherwood Park.

Now, why would we worry? We worry, Mr. Chairman, because what we don't fix today would cost more tomorrow. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark mentioned the analogy with the car and changing the oil frequently. It would definitely cost less to keep your engine running at optimal performance than wait until it dies, and then you have to replace it altogether.

Schools should not be viewed as an expense on the debit side of the budget. They should be looked at as assets. They're jewels in the community. They should be preserved, maintained, looked after, and looked to to give us the skilled workforce that we're hoping for in the future, to give us the tax base that we're looking for in the future, and overall this is something that cannot be overlooked.

Now, in view of the time – I know that I'm approaching my 20-minute limit, and I also wanted to speak about health care – perhaps maybe after other speakers have had a chance, I would come back and talk some more about health care.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour to speak for a few minutes about education in the context of my riding of Edmonton-Glenora. I want to talk about the impact of the budget supplementary supply on teaching, also on class size, and also on infrastructure.

Now, education is extremely important for my riding. There are two outstanding high schools, Ross Sheppard high school and also Archbishop MacDonald high school. The headquarters of the Alberta Teachers' Association is located in my riding. There are many faculty people from the University of Alberta, many teachers residing in my riding, and I know that they would want me to speak strongly about the need for adequate funding for education by the provincial government.

I want to move back before the supplementary supply estimates came out and before the appropriations bill, which is suggesting some additional increases, came before us to a few months ago, when school boards and also local schools had to deal with their budget issues. The government had promised a 2.8 per cent increase over the previous year, so most schools had to go with that offer in terms of their budgeting. A 2.8 increase was just not very much at all, so it put a lot of schools under a tremendous pressure.

I approve of school-based budgeting. When principals have to develop their budgets to provide the information to the school board, they're faced with a tremendous challenge: 2.8 per cent increase. Now, that doesn't really cover very much if we take into consideration the rising teacher costs, because all teachers gain experience through the years and move up the grid; therefore, their salaries increase, so that has an impact on the local school and the school board. Of course, there's inflation to consider. So 2.8 per cent really doesn't cover the rising teacher costs or inflation.

So right away boards of education, including the Edmonton school board, were faced with difficult decisions, and the schools themselves: tremendous difficulty in making decisions about what they should do. Faced with this minimal increase, principals are faced with either teachers must be cut, as in the case of Archbishop MacDonald high school, where they had to reduce their staff by five teachers, and their class sizes are still quite high. Of course, reducing teachers leads to an increase in class sizes. That's what principals have to decide. If they're going to present a balanced budget, they might have to cut teachers. So it's either cut teachers or keep teachers and reduce spending on services, supplies, and equipment.

Now, I sat down with the principal at Glenora elementary school and went through some of the budgeting agonies that they go through every spring. One of the real problems is that given the high value on education that people have, most schools want to keep as many teachers as possible and have the full allotment of teachers. That sometimes forces them into a quite unacceptable situation, where the proportion of money directed to teaching goes up all the time. The optimum might be around 80 per cent or 85 per cent of their total budget, but it keeps going up under the pressures of the lack of funding from the province and the board of education. In Glenora school it went up from the low 80s to 86 per cent and then this year 89 per cent. Eighty-nine per cent of their budget is going to cover teachers and the cost of teaching.

Eleven per cent of their budget is then for services, supplies, and equipment, to cover the plant operations, maintenance, custodial work, utilities, supplies. There just isn't enough money, out of that 11 per cent, to cover all of those things, so that leads to putting pressure on parents. The parents are forced, then, to worry about the school not having enough supplies, enough textbooks for their children, so they begin to get into fundraising schemes, casinos, whatever, to raise money to cover the costs that are not covered by this 11 per cent.

That's what happens every year. The principal and the parents and the teachers go through this whole process of budgeting. Then the Minister of Education suggests that it's all speculative anyway because even though these budgets are presented, you have to wait for enrolments to come in in September to figure out exactly what the school is going to get. I resent that term "speculative" being used because if this process is to have real meaning, then it's got to have greater recognition by the provincial government and the Department of Education.

So all of these requests, these budgets, go in, and we wait for the enrolments. Well, through the summer I guess the Minister of Education got the message that the amount of money, the 2.8 per cent increase over the previous year, was just not going to do it, so there is additional money in the supplementary supply.

Now, when I look at the amount of money here, there is the $52 million for operating support to public and separate schools, and then there's the $240 million for infrastructure. Out of the operating money quite a bit of it is dedicated to specialized applications like students with severe disabilities – and I have no problems with that – or funding in the area of English as a Second Language and the class size initiative, which I'll comment on in a few minutes. But, really, the only addition to the general operating expenses of schools is the $16,500,000, for a 1 per cent base instruction grant increase.

Mr. Chairman, this is really a drop in the bucket. I mean, when you consider the huge, huge budget of education in this province, a 1 per cent increase in base instruction doesn't really amount to very much. In fact, there are some high schools in this province that have as large a budget as that amount. So, really, I think that the 2.8 per cent increase that was suggested by the Department of Education over last year – it was supposed to be a 2.8 per cent increase – with this 1 per cent increase in the base instruction grant brings it up to a 3.8 per cent, or almost 4 per cent, increase over last year. But given all of the expenses when we factor in transportation costs, fuel costs, utility costs, and the rising inflation and so on, I don't think that this amount really will make much difference in terms of the decisions that have had to be made by schools already in terms of letting teachers go. So I'm really quite dissatisfied with what the government has done. There's not very much help here at all.

Now, I just want to make a few comments about class size. I applaud the government for putting $28 million into the class-size initiative. I think this is a really important issue. The Learning Commission suggested that the average class sizes across the province should go down. They suggested guidelines such as junior kindergarten to grade 3, 17 students; grades 4 to 6, 23 students; grades 7 to 9, 25 students; and grades 10 to 12, 27 students. By and large, I think most of the schools in my riding are a little bit below those numbers although not by much, so I am really concerned about the effect that the money that's coming to the school board and then to the schools is going to have on class sizes. If the school is forced to let one teacher go, then the class sizes will go up.

I think there's a problem with the accounting for class size because the government always announces average class sizes across the whole province rather than looking at specific schools where there are special factors. Where you have a lot of schools with very small classes, that's averaged in with schools which have quite large classes. So the average looks good, but when you take a closer look at individual schools, then there are a lot of problems in terms of class size.

I notice that the Edmonton school board in a recent report was indicating that if the money coming in from the province was just the 2.8 per cent increase over last year, that would really affect class sizes. If there was no new money coming in, they expected that class sizes would really go up. I hope that this is enough money. This $28 million that's going to school boards throughout the province: I hope that's enough to make a real difference in class sizes. So we'll watch that one. We'll see reports and monitor how that's going to develop for schools this year, especially when we have a report on the enrolments in September.

Now, turning to the infrastructure issue. This is a serious problem in my riding of Edmonton-Glenora because it's an older district with older schools, and there are a number of schools in my riding that have been earmarked for examination, for auditing in the future. There's the so-called sustainability list that the Edmonton school board provides, and there are at least six schools in my riding that are on the one- to three-year list and one school on the four- to six-year list. On the one- to three-year list I have in my riding the elementary schools Britannia, High Park, Grovenor, Coronation, Woodcroft, and Westglen, and on the four- to six-year list I have Inglewood.

Now, when schools appear on these lists, there's tremendous consternation on the part of parents because they're very worried that their school might be closed even though the school board indicates that being on the list doesn't mean that the school is going to be closed. It means that there's going to be a process of examination of the needs of the school and the trends and so on. But it is a serious issue, and I just hope that the school boards don't rush too fast, that they take their time because there are lots of changes to the demographics, especially in a riding like Glenora.

Many members of this Assembly whose ridings are in areas where there is tremendous housing development see the need for many new schools to be built, but there's still obviously a trend of young families moving back into older neighbourhoods. I see that when I knock on doors. I was knocking on doors near Westglen school in the community of Westmount, and I came across many, many young families. Of course, they started talking to me immediately about their school. When I asked them what their concerns were and what they would like to tell me about the issues facing provincial politics, they invariably mentioned education.

Many of the young families moved into the neighbourhood because of the older homes that are there. There are homes that were built just after the First World War. Westglen school itself was I think built in the 1940s. Let's see. I had a date here. I think it was 1944. It's a wonderful old school. It was originally built for a high school, so it has a huge gymnasium, big wide halls, and large classrooms with high ceilings. There's a lot of concern that it's difficult to maintain an elementary school with about 200 students in a building which was built for some 400 students, so there's some pressure on the local community in terms of what's going to happen to this particular school. There's the infrastructure need in terms of repair and of changes to the school, but I am really encouraged by the fact that the parents have organized themselves to try to do something about the present situation of that school. One of the things that they have come up with is a proposal to have Westglen elementary school changed into a community school.

Now, this is a very interesting initiative. There was a community school program in this province, a program that was started in 1980 and ran until the mid-90s, until this government cut that program, which was quite premature and misguided. I know from experience that a number of these schools in Edmonton really have thrived as community schools; for example, Norwood community school, Steinhauer community school, and Thorncliffe community school.

It was shortsighted of the government to cut that program. It didn't cost them much more to maintain that program because the idea of a community school is to involve agencies, social agencies in the community, groups in the community who might utilize the school in off-hours and contribute to rent and so on. It's been proven that community schools can increase the utilization of their building almost to 100 per cent, yet the cost in terms of additional money to school budgets is quite minuscule because most of the money they can get through the renting of the building by organizations in the community.

Now, I'm very impressed by the prospectus, the suggestions that this parents' group has come up with to make Westglen school into a community school. I think it's a concept that we have to revisit. We have to rethink the role of a school in the community. Now, it used to be the case that the school was the hub of activity in a given community, and that's what parents want to see again. They want to see the school utilized all the time, not just 20 per cent of the year but throughout the year, that even on the weekends the school would be available for sports groups, for adult education. The local school used to be the centre of adult education. I've been committed, as a former teacher, to lifelong learning for adults. The local school in our communities can be a real focus of adult learning. So I'm really intrigued by this concept of community schools. That might be something that we can bring back in the future.

Mr. Chairman, one of the problems of many of our older schools and one of the problems of this particular school, because it's so large and was built as a high school, is that the current ways in which the utilization is determined in terms of so much space per student doesn't fit the older schools. It fits newer schools, but if you use that same formula for older schools, it doesn't fit. It puts the parents in a difficult situation when their kids are going to these older schools. So I'm looking for initiatives, new approaches to try to encourage people in the community to focus on their school so that they can continue to see the schools survive. [Dr. Miller's speaking time expired]

Well, I have much more, and I'll have to come back in a few minutes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am pleased, actually, to be able to speak here today because we have a democracy in this country, but we don't have very many days and very much time to speak of these budgets. I am angry, actually, that we had to . . . [interjection] Oh, I hear a groan there from my colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar that I should be angry at having to come back early to accommodate a fishing trip for our Premier and some fundraising buddies he has. I had to shorten a trip to west Africa. I was in Sierra Leone, and even though it was short, I had a tremendous trip.

I do convey the greetings from the Speaker of their Assembly. Actually, they invited me to tour their Parliament and speak in their Parliament, and I met with a number of their ministers on their invitation, which I was very surprised when I got there. One really sees, in contrast, some problems that some countries have, that being, according to the UN index, the poorest nation on this planet and the difficulties they had. I was there at the invitation of some now fairly large immigrant communities in our province from that area. I convey the thanks from their foreign minister for taking some of their people during times of difficult and brutal civil war.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

To the bill at hand here, to the estimates, this government can take no credit for the booming economy that we have right now. It can take no credit for the oil price and the present massive thrust to exploit our natural resources that the oil companies are doing, to try and exploit them and get as much as they can from our resources in the shortest possible time. But this government must take the blame for not looking beyond its nose to try and at least have some contingency plans in place to ensure a decent quality of life and protection for our environment as this massive thrust does take place. There is a responsibility for elected leaders to provide some leadership, and this group of elected leaders on the government side has been asleep at the switch. This government has abrogated, even forgotten, its responsibility to provide that leadership.

The real effect of much of what we've seen is just short-term solutions. Ad hoc solutions have become the norm. We see time and again the fact that we're back again to vote supplementary money: "Oops, didn't think about it. Oops, missed that. Oops, I guess we better put some dough into that." I think it's a crime that our Alberta children have to go through some disruption again this fall because the government couldn't get it right in its spring budget again. But it never gets it right in its spring budget because this government does not take that budget seriously. Time and again we're debating supplemental estimates. I've been here less than two years, and, gosh, it seems like every few months we're back for supplemental estimates. It just shows that this government doesn't really know what it's doing and generally gets it wrong. Short-term solutions are the norm. To use a farm term, this is a government that relies on haywire fixes and, indeed, is a haywire government. Where is the leadership?

You know, another haywire fix is clear in the push, in the proposals for temporary foreign workers, which really gets me how this will be of any tremendous benefit to Alberta or Albertans, especially in the sense that temporary foreign workers will not be able to bring their families, in the sense that they will not be able to live in a home other than some temporary camp environment, in the sense that they will not be able to stay in this country and will be sent home. I mean, we're hearing now about the problems in some of the packing plants who are having their temporary foreign workers sent home abruptly for reasons that sometimes they don't even know.

The Minister of Economic Development said today that they might be able to expand the provincial nominee program to 1,300 or so individuals from I think it's 800 or 900 now. I mean, it doesn't even come close to the needs of many of our small businesses, many of our restaurants, our packing plants, our industries that are hurting right now and that may be shrinking because of the nature of the short-term, ad hoc leadership that's been going on that doesn't take into account the needs of many of our economic sectors. Even the government identified that retention is somehow important. I don't know how a temporary foreign worker deals with retention in any way.

You know, what we seem to get from this government so often, so much is that there's no leadership to try and ensure the quality of life for Albertans. The housing market is out of reach for many individuals. Homelessness is getting out of hand. I'm getting calls. Last week I had one. A woman on AISH, a small apartment, somehow couldn't take her daughter in – she has been sleeping in a tent in the ravine – trying to get somebody to put some space in her backyard so she can at least put the tent up in their backyard in the summer while it's still nice.

The numbers of people I see, you know, living near the bottle depots, the number of people sleeping on the mattresses outside. I've got a Goodwill store not too far from my constituency office, and continually they're trying to put themselves up in the back alley behind the area there. I didn't even see that in Sierra Leone, the poorest nation on Earth.

The problems that we see in this particular budget – I mean, it's good to see some monies being put forward to our schools. Again, though, it's ad hoc. It's late. You know, we're seeing some tremendous pressures. I have a lot of new construction in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning, a lot of whole new subdivisions going up. We're seeing the temporary classrooms go up. I remember going just before the end of the school year, and you could hardly breathe in the one of them because it was so hot. I wonder why we put our children into that sort of thing. We are seeing that the new Christian high school is not able to put forward a full slate of classes, and kids are being forced to go right across the city in order to take advantage of their facilities. The slowness of getting some of the new schools in place, the problems with upkeep, and the problems with the fundraising are clear all across the board.

This morning I met with a number of community leaders during the social function after the opening of the new Northgate Lions seniors' expansion, addition. I thank the government for the monies that they've put into that. That's a wonderful project and a wonderful thing for seniors and a wonderful thing for the communities of northeast Edmonton, but the problem that we're seeing is a shortage of volunteers. The hours of work for so many people in the northeast part of our city and, indeed, much of Edmonton are becoming so long that they cannot be involved in coaching, in community activities, in a lot of the things, and much of it's falling on our seniors now, oddly enough. We have so, so many people – we're hearing stories of 24 and fours. That's the legal limit, if that's followed, 24 shifts on and four shifts off, as the minimum, for somebody to go to work.

People are going to Fort McMurray and to Lloydminster and to the diamond mines in the Territories and to largely the conventional oil industry, and it is really causing a great deal of distortion in our labour market. I mean, even the bank manager at one of the local banks, two blocks from my constituency office, quit two weeks ago to go work the rigs because he figured that if he works the rigs for a couple of weeks he could, you know, do better than working as a bank manager. We've obviously got a distorted labour market when we have things like that happening.

We have small businesses that can't get dishwashers. They can't get sous-chefs. I had two sous-chefs with one local restaurateur, who has a very nice restaurant – he's shut down his lunch trade because he wants to keep his quality. He wants to ensure that he can keep his business going in the way that he deems is best and that is a good quality product and doing things right as many Alberta businesses surely like to do. But he can't do that because he says his wife is going to leave him if he continues working the hours that he's been working. He shut down for a whole month in August, and he shut down much of his lunch trade.

You know, we're hurting our economic development. We're hurting our business development. We're hurting our business growth. Like the two chefs I talked to the one day, one told me he was going to go work in a rig camp, and one told me he was going to work on the rigs. That's what's been happening here for the last 18 months as we've had this high oil price and the need and the rush for exploitation.

It does affect the volunteers. It does affect minor hockey. It does affect the coaching. It does affect the soccer. It does affect all the other things that help to ensure that our communities and our children grow well, even outside of the schools. The schools are being forced to take up more of the baton, so to speak, more of the responsibility, as so often the parents are away and busy and working. The time that they have to spend in ensuring that the kids have some proper recreation and all of the rest of it and some of the teachers' times they give is more than what we would see in I think more normal times.

In some of the schools that have a lot of recent immigrant population, especially those of lower income, talking to the principals, talking to the teachers, the kids hardly see their parents. They're working two jobs with low incomes. The minimum wage is not enough to have a living wage even with two income earners in a family in this province, especially with the cost of housing, the rising cost of rental accommodation, and it has been rising very, very quickly. You know, people are afraid that they're going to be forced out of their rental accommodation if they don't continue with their jobs, and the people that are left behind are the kids. The people that are left behind are the children. I have teachers and principals telling me that some of these kids have been in this country for three and four and five years and have not even been to a park. The first time that they actually had an outing was just the school outings, coming to the Legislature. There's one grade 6 class that I spoke to just last spring. For some of the kids it was the first time they'd actually been anywhere in the city and done anything, and the teacher said that this is a common problem.

We don't have volunteers. People are out working huge, incredible hours. So many people out of town. The Edmonton Journal was surprised some months ago when they said: what's going on with 16,000 less jobs in Edmonton even though everybody's working and the place is booming? They're all working out of town. They're not here. That will change. There will be some huge, necessary, new requirements if we don't look at them fairly soon. I don't think we are really.

In the northeast portion of the city and actually in Sturgeon county and the areas where the new upgrader facilities and the other plants are going to be coming in, if we don't have the new bridge come in fairly quickly – and it will probably, I think, take three years to build the Anthony Henday east side – we're going to have some problems in trying to transport some of the modules, trying to transport a lot of the workers, trying to have a decent transportation system in place when we deal with that $30 billion worth of investment. If we don't deal with the railroad bridge at Gibbons to ensure that there's enough ability for the larger loads to be transported on that route, we're going to run into some major difficulties. If we don't deal with some of these issues fairly quickly, we're going to run into some greater logjams than what we saw a few years ago when the upgrader was being built for Shell, and that was only 12,000 workers.

The necessity to deal with some of those things, the necessity to look ahead, the necessity to plan, the necessity to have some forward-looking leadership is something that I think we have to have continual emphasis on, and I don't see that at all from this government. It's just all ad hoc. It's all laissez-faire. It doesn't matter what happens; we'll see what happens.

The nature of the quality of life concerns are something that I'm hearing so often from many, many Albertans. Many are saying: "What is this boom? Where am I seeing this boom? Why am I not getting something extra, and why am I actually paying more, a lot more? Why is it that this boom is leaving me behind?" You hear from the people on AISH. You hear from the people on fixed incomes, the seniors and such. They are afraid of the rising costs for their accommodation, the rising costs for services, the rising costs for so many things. They just want to say to me: "Well, gosh, can we get some relief? Can we get some ability to get some benefit from this boom?" They don't see that they are getting any benefit.

The schools in Edmonton-Manning do have some needs for some particular types of better maintenance. There are a number of needs in some of the areas. There are some very good schools and some tremendous teachers. I have had a number of schools like one that was cutting their numbers of teachers. When I talked to them before the closure in June, they were going to decrease their number of grade 6 classes and lose one teacher even though they were going to have about a 20 per cent increase in students. That would have brought them to something like 37 students per grade 6 class, which I think is far, far too many.

Smaller schools sometimes run into these conundrums, and they have to make these choices, and it's very difficult. Many of them run into the problems of having to lose part of their special needs and all the rest of it. There's some money here that will be able to be moved around a little bit by some of the schools, and that's a good thing, but special needs continues to be a tremendous problem for many parents and many schools. Trying to deal with that and trying to fund partial positions and trying to fund the . . . [Mr. Backs' speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I much appreciate the opportunity to speak here, as always, and appreciate the comments of everyone so far.

Mr. Mar: We're on the edges of our seats.

Dr. Taft: I'm sure. Yes. One members says that he's on the edge of his seat. Well, listen. For those quieter moments in the Legislature a few years ago I bought a little book called The Languid Goat is Always Thin: The World's Strangest Proverbs. See, everybody's already listening. It's full of very strange proverbs. I thought a couple of them since the Treasurer is here. There is no economy in going to bed early to save candles if the result be twins. A little lesson in false economy. Here's another one from the Chinese: govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish, which means, I think, take great care. Maybe it means don't overcook it. Anyway, we could go on and have some fun with that.

I'm actually rising tonight to address issues of economy and issues of careful governance, Mr. Chairman, and I am going to propose an amendment to the bill before us, an amendment that is intended to save a little bit of money for the taxpayer. I've got the appropriate number of copies here, including the original, and I shall wait a moment while it is distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that's being proposed is being circulated, and for the record we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The notice of amendment reads as follows: that Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2), be amended as follows. Under part A section 1 is amended by striking out "$1,366,053,000" and substituting "$1,361,253,000". Under part B the schedule is amended (a) on page 3 following "Agriculture, Food and Rural Development Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases" by striking out "$270,800,000" and substituting "$266,000,000"; (b) on page 4 following "Amount of Expense or Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases to be voted under section 1" by striking out "$1,366,053,000" and substituting "$1,361,253,000."

Now, I'm sure that every member is wondering why I am proposing this amendment. The intent of the amendment here, Mr. Chairman, is to trim $4.8 million from the proposed expenditures by the government. That $4.8 million is the amount equivalent to the proposed amount going to be used for a municipal waste-water project to support a project in Rocky View MD that includes a horse-racing track and an equine centre. This is on page 18 of the supplementary supply estimates, the complete document.

Given the number of ministers here today who may well be informed on this issue, maybe we can clarify some explanations here. The reasons for my concern are several. First of all, from what I know of this project, it is an immense project. There is the large racetrack that will replace the one that has been held at the Stampede grounds for so many, many years. There will be an equine centre with a training facility for people learning about equine care through Olds College. There will be an industrial park, and in addition there will be a mall to rival West Edmonton Mall, a large hotel, and goodness knows what else. This facility, if people aren't aware, is proposed on basically the north edge of Calgary between Calgary and Airdrie on the east side of highway 2. Indeed, the ground is already being prepared for this project.

Now the project itself involves, as I understand it – and I'm prepared to be corrected – a huge, in fact I think Canada's largest, shopping centre developer, a company that has billions of dollars in assets. Undoubtedly, within that shopping centre there are proposed to be a large number of huge retailers, some of the largest in the United States who have been moving into Alberta with this mall. In addition a major hotel and, as I mentioned, a large racetrack. There are all kinds of backers, enormous backers, to this project. So I have to ask myself why the taxpayers of Alberta are contributing millions of dollars in infrastructure funding to handle waste water from this project.

But my concerns go beyond that, Mr. Chairman. The water issue that Alberta faces is coming to a head with this particular project, and I think this is going to be the beginning of a whole wave of projects in which water becomes a constraint and an innate issue of debate. The city of Calgary has actually refused to provide water to this project, as I understand it. Again, with the people here today on the government side, I may well be corrected, but my understanding is that the city of Calgary has refused to provide water to this project because they disagree with the nature of the project. They aren't able to work out an agreement with the MD of Rocky View, and of course the water supply for the project is immense.

The Bow River is already heavily drawn on, so the water for this project as it is planned, I understand, is going to be taken from the Red Deer River and piped quite a long distance to the north edge of Calgary. I think we all need to consider and question the wisdom of that. The Red Deer River is not a large river, nor is the Bow River. To be draining further water from the Red Deer River to support a megaproject driven by largely retail and horse racing I think is of some dubious wisdom.

Now, I understand from people who live in the central Alberta region that this summer there were times when there was a regional water shortage, and people drawing on water in central Alberta were actually asked to curtail consumption. This was not a terribly dry summer. I have to ask myself, Mr. Chairman, what will happen in a dry summer or a series of dry summers, when the Red Deer River is not simply the source of drinking water and industrial water for now a major portion of central Alberta from north of Ponoka to – gosh, I don't know how far south – way south of Bowden, I think, and then on top of that has to provide water for this megaproject on the edge of Calgary. I think we may find some backlash from the residents of central Alberta who aren't able to consume the water they want while a vast amount is being shipped to a big development on the edge of Calgary. So I have questions, and I'd love to see some debate in this Assembly on the water allocations for this project.

Beyond that, I have to question the public's appetite for yet more subsidies or more allocation of public funds to horse racing. I know that the horse-racing industry employs lots of people. They've spent time with me and with other members of our caucus lobbying, and we listened carefully. We're not anti horse racing, but we do expect at some point the special deal that was cut for the horse-racing industry to be phased out, and we expect the horse-racing industry to ultimately stand on its own four legs, as it were, Mr. Chairman.

So $63 million, if memory serves me right, will be provided from lottery funds to the horse-racing industry this year. Do they really need – do they really need – another $4.8 million subsidy? I question that.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I have to question the wisdom of the uncontrolled development that this project represents and that is, I think, the reason the city of Calgary is not providing water to it, one of the key reasons. [interjection] I've spoken to them. The Treasurer is questioning me. That's my information from the city of Calgary. They are not supporting this kind of development. They are not particularly keen on contributing to the massive urban sprawl that I freely acknowledge the city of Calgary is already guilty of, but they seem not to want to exacerbate it further and are not keen on having a giant mall that rivals West Edmonton Mall and a giant horse-racing track and a huge resort on their northern edge, with all the traffic and water and power and all the other implications that provides. [interjections]

So, Mr. Chairman, those are the reasons why I move that we amend this bill by pulling the $4.8 million intended for the wastewater treatment project at this horse-racing track. With those comments – I’m getting some heckling from members on the other side – I would love to have a debate, a good-natured debate.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It’s a pleasure for me to rise to respond to this amendment and to encourage my colleagues to vote against this amendment. The premise upon which the argument has been made that we are supporting a particular project with $4.8 million is absolutely false. In fact, as it says in the supplementary estimates book, it suggests that this is going to the municipal district of Rocky View under a program which has been in existence for some time. This is augmenting that program because, quite frankly, we’ve had a great deal of success with our rural counties with populations less than 40,000.

That’s what this program was intended to do: to help these communities develop industries that are agricultural based, that provide employment for agriculture workers, that provide opportunities to grow our livestock sector, that provide opportunities for feed and supplements and veterinary care and, indeed, Mr. Chairman, probably even research and development and training, all related to the agricultural sector. Throw into that the aspect of rural development and ag tourism, and this becomes something of a very positive story.

When we talk about the municipal district of Rocky View’s approval process, not ours, for us to say to a municipal district, “Thou shalt not approve a particular project that has to go through all of the environmental approvals and all of those other things that are going to have to happen,” is somewhat, I would say, precious of us. I would think that the reeve of the municipal district of Rocky View might be somewhat concerned at the hon. member’s reasoning behind his amendment.

I would certainly suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that because of the success of this program that we have had in the beef slaughter industry, that we have had in ag tourism, that we have had in the agricultural industrial sector, including this project, that that’s why we have this supplementary estimate here, because these dollars need to move before our year end.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments I will cede the floor to some of my colleagues, who also, I believe, have some comments to make on this. I would encourage the hon. members to vote this amendment down because it was based on the wrong premise.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. You know, I find it a bit rich that the hon. member previous is suggesting that the municipal district is calling the shots on these and other issues. It’s always a convenient excuse that we find from the other side here when they’re trying to slip something behind the back of this Legislature, saying: “Oh, well, it’s the MD who really wants it, it’s the MD who has come up with it, and who are we to stand in the way of democracy? Blah, blah, blah.” In fact, we see on a regular basis these MDs being manipulated by this provincial government to do those sorts of thing, as we see happening here with this particular circumstance.

Now, I was not aware of this water treatment thing, but certainly it is in keeping with a problem that I’ve seen with MDs being pushed into building water treatment plants in small, piecemeal fashions around the province when a regional strategy could satisfy the water needs and, in fact, satisfy being able to build a regional strategy for water conservation in a much more efficient way financially and ecologically as well. I know for a fact that there are a number of smaller communities that were building water treatment plants that ended up having to walk away from them or otherwise not be able to maintain them in the first place. I think that Claresholm is an example of that and also the northern municipal district adjacent to the town of Peace River, where the provincial government is encouraging them to build small water treatment plants when a regional system is much more efficient and much more prudent as well.

I did know, however, about this large project and the city of Calgary’s opposition to it. I applaud them for trying to make some larger city plan for the area in defiance of this tendency to allow growth around the periphery of a city or growth just on the other side of even city limits in the areas around our province. You get this sort of doughnut effect where for taxation purposes or land purposes people are building just on the other side of the border of different jurisdictions to try to either get a better tax regime or what have you.

You end up with this suburbanization of our municipal areas, which is creating very serious land problems that we’re going to have to face up to in the very near future. You end up with this sort of Orange county urban planning thing, which is actually an absence of urban planning, where eventually, you know, the city is spread out in an unreasonable way. You have these industrial areas next to residential and big malls sucking the vitality out of the centre. Calgary has a very fine sort of traditional urban centre with shops and whatnot around the middle, which is the sort of city that we should be looking towards rather than with large malls on the edge.

I applaud the spirit of the whole thing in this amendment in that it is saying: let’s look and allow the city of Calgary to have their input, encouraging these very large projects in defiance of what they would like to have otherwise. This is new to me, but I would like to at least look more carefully before we approve something like this in terms of moving water from one area to another because it seems to me that if you are moving water from the Red Deer River over the hump to north of Calgary, then in fact you are moving water between basins as well unless you’re planning to pump the effluent back up to the Red Deer River afterwards.

So I find this a very interesting bit of an amendment, certainly on the side of prudence and good management, and I do support it forthwith. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just want to give the hon. members in the House a little bit of a history lesson from a municipalities perspective and why we find ourselves in this discussion tonight, some of the background that led up to this. The municipal district of Rocky View and most other municipal districts and counties throughout the province as of 1995, when the Municipal Government Act was changed, finally were recognized as equal to every other municipality in this province. Every municipality, be it cities, towns, villages, or rural municipalities, now has the natural person powers, has the ability to make their own decisions and is not dependent upon some kind of an oversight regional planning commission that views rural municipalities as nothing more than land banks for the orderly development of urban municipalities. That travesty that we had in this province is now long behind us.

That's not to say that there is not some friction from time to time between urban and rural municipalities. We're dealing with that. We deal with that on an ongoing basis, and we're making some significant progress in that area. In fact, I remind hon. members that today before question period I introduced Mr. Don Johnson, who was part of the meeting that I participated in for the entire afternoon, that included Bob Hawkesworth, the president of AUMA, who represents all of the cities, towns, and villages in the province; Mr. Johnson representing all of the rural municipalities; as well as Mr. Mandel, the mayor of Edmonton; and Mr. Bronconnier, the mayor of Calgary. Among many things the minister's council is dealing with is this issue of intermunicipal relationships, and we are making some significant progress.

I want to talk specifically about Calgary because I think Calgary is starting to set some examples that the rest of the province and perhaps even the rest of North America is going to watch very closely. The Calgary Regional Partnership is finally beginning to put some frames around its own existence, beginning to talk about a regional plan, not a plan that's imposed upon the region from upon high but a plan that's negotiated and planned by all of the partners within the region, some 22 different municipalities that lie within the Calgary Regional Partnership. So that is the context in which we talk about industrial expansion and expansion in a planned way, not an oversight kind of planning but a co-operative plan. From time to time, like any family, there are going to be disputes, there are going to be issues that need to be resolved, and we are dealing with those on an as-needed basis.

Now, that being said, the MD of Rocky View has for some time been putting into place the ability for them to accommodate development throughout that section of the MD so that they will be able to provide water and waste-water services not just for this one development but for a number of developments that they have planned, both industrial and residential. Frankly, I think the last thing that we want is to see piecemeal development without having the preplanning of having water and waste-water services because as density begins to grow and we begin to depend upon septic systems and wells and everything else that goes along with it, we find that that is not good, strong development.

This is, as the minister of agriculture mentioned, part of an ongoing program that the government has in place to assist rural municipalities to begin to develop water and waste-water systems. In some cases they go towards regional systems, and this could at some point in time be incorporated into a larger regional system. The MD of Rocky View also has long-term plans to extend a water and waste-water system in the west part of the MD to deal with some much-needed water and waste-water issues in the Bragg Creek and the Springbank areas as well. So all of this at some point in time has the ability to be tied together.

On behalf of the MD of Rocky View, who have spent many, many hours talking with me, talking with other members of our caucus to explain what their long-term plans are, how this will assist them in advancing what they already had in place to allow for their economic development, the well-being of their citizens, I urge all members of the House to vote against this poorly thought out and ill-conceived amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak strongly in favour of this amendment. I think it's wise. I think the minister of agriculture speaks with a forked tongue. And that's not unparliamentary; I checked it. [interjections] It's not on the list. The nature of saying that there are rural development issues involved with placing a huge development on the edge of the city of Calgary is facetious at best.

This particular project, $4.8 million, is not chump change when you really look at it. It may be in terms of how the government looks at it quite often and looks at many of these particular things, but it's not chump change. It's a lot of money. It could go to a lot of things in classrooms. It could go to a lot of things in many, many areas. It certainly could help some things that should be a higher priority than this to the government.

The Municipal Affairs minister said that, you know, regional planning for the cities should just be co-operative and should just be something that's not – it's almost a bad thing. I wonder about that. You know, the Member for Edmonton-Calder mentioned the Orange county problems, and many people who have been down in that particular part of the United States really see the problems of no planning. Some people term that the Lakeland model. What we see in some of those areas in terms of planning is that whole municipalities have been brought up and developed just for particular purposes. There are municipalities called "Dairy." There are municipalities called "Industry." There are municipalities that are single-purpose and single-taxation . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, there is a point of order being raised by the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I'm raising a point of order under sections 23(h), (i), and (j). "Speaking with a forked tongue" is a common English phrase that would imply that I have lied in some way, shape, or form; in other words, he is making the allegation that I am lying to this House. I take that extremely seriously, and I believe that it is also unparliamentary to be accusing a member, even if he believes it to be in jest. He is in this House, and he should understand the seriousness of such a charge.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the point of order.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't see that particular term being listed as unparliamentary language or being termed to be lying. Speaking with forked tongue could be seen to be speaking not necessarily as a lie but with some sense of ensuring that the statement is not exactly as it seems. If the minister did think it was something particularly derogatory to him and all the rest of it, I do withdraw that, Mr. Chair.

If I can continue then?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Hon. members, this is an Assembly of honourable people, honourable members, and when we play around with words, we hurt people's integrity in this Assembly. If there is a withdrawal to be done, then the withdrawal has to be done unconditionally. I'll give the Member for Edmonton-Manning an opportunity to withdraw unconditionally those words that he attributed to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. I withdraw without condition the words “forked tongue.”

The Deputy Chair: That’s accepted. Thank you. You may now proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Backs: Thank you. The nature of the particular development here is one that is not, I think, anything that should be determined or seen to be rural development. It is on the edge of the city. It is something that is huge. It is not just an agricultural development; it is meant to be a megamall. It will be of a size that will equal the West Edmonton Mall, and that’s a pretty large development – this one here actually took many phases and many years to develop – and the water resources are a huge issue. Are we going to carve out some new sort of municipality and call it “Water” now even though the water is not there?

I strongly urge this Assembly to vote for this amendment, Mr. Chair. I think it’s a wise move.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I’d like to speak just briefly, as we are debating the supplementary supply estimates, the appropriation bill that I moved in this Assembly. Mr. Chairman, I have been puzzled for some time and have tried hard to understand why both opposition benches are so opposed to an industry that actually contributes in not only a traditional and a historic way to this province but currently very strongly economically: a $385 million contribution estimated this year; 8,100 persons employed, particularly in this city, where we just on Saturday had 12,000 people attend the Canadian Derby, 12,000 people – men, women, children – people that came to this city for that race, that enjoyed the amenities of this city and contributed to it.

On Sunday the Nat Christie in Calgary: a similar experience. The hundreds and hundreds of people in this province, many of them right around this city, that make their living in this industry, whether it’s in raising horses or whether it’s in feed, training: I would invite the hon. members to go and visit the backstretch here and see the number of people that are happily and proudly employed, many of those who might not enjoy employment and a sense of pride as they do in their job.

I don’t understand this other than that it’s a good way to needle things in the $48 million, which the Minister of Gaming has explained more than once only occurs if they earn it. I mean, if you don’t produce, you don’t get the money.

To look at this project and say that because it has a racetrack attached to it, it shouldn’t go – and the specious arguments of the amount of water that it’s going to take. The Edmonton MLAs are sitting in this room saying: you can’t have a megamall on the perimeters of Calgary. We have West Edmonton Mall, which is a huge tourist attraction for this city, I believe a huge asset to this city. It probably uses a little bit of water here and there. I don’t see the members on this side of the House saying that that mall shouldn’t exist, although I’ve heard a few negatives over there on that one, too.

But the other part of it, Mr. Chairman, is the equine centre. It speaks to a lack of understanding of those caucuses of agriculture in this province and the importance of it. Alberta has the largest number of horses per capita per region of anywhere in Canada, whether it’s Spruce Meadows, which is the number one venue in the world today. It used to be on par with Aachen; now it’s considered number one. A huge number of people come there. There will be an event there this week that will attract thousands and thousands of people. That is a major part of our industry.

The western heritage, the films that are made here, that outfitters here provide all of the horses for, the tourist side of it, the working horse that still works in this province: if you were out in the grasslands, you would see where people ride horses because they will not put vehicles on grass.

The number of people that are involved in this industry is huge. Why it seems to be the target at almost every discussion – and to suggest that they’re not saying that they don’t like horse racing. Well, I can tell you that the racing industry doesn’t believe that one because of the many derogatory and negative comments that have been attributed to an industry that has a proud history and is making a very good contribution to us.

The equine centre: what an opportunity for us. With the horse population overall in this province, to have that equine centre attached with Olds College, with the new veterinary college that is in Calgary, we have an opportunity to be the horse-health centre of western Canada, if not all. Research: all of those opportunities are here.

What I don’t understand is why we can’t look at the larger picture in this Assembly. It isn’t all about one thing. Alberta is many things. The horse industry and racing – I was at Millarville, at their anniversary. What an amazing event. My hon. colleague who’s the MLA for there was there as well. Thousands of people visit Millarville, one of the oldest traditions in this province: 6,000 this year at that. Amazing. Amazing. These are people. These are the grassroots people of this province, and it’s really what built this province.

Hon. members, you might want to look around at your caucus benches and not find it surprising that you do not have one rural member, and until you understand rural Alberta – understand rural Alberta – understand the contribution that agriculture makes to this province, I don’t think those stats are going to change.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for bringing forward this amendment because it leads into exactly what I was speaking to this afternoon when I ran out of time, and that is a number of questions about this particular request for money. The question I was actually asking when I ran out of time earlier this afternoon was why this particular $4.8 million appears under the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development department.

When you flip through the book to Environment – I believe it was Environment.

Mr. Renner: Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: that’s the name of the department.

Mr. R. Miller: The Minister of Municipal Affairs is suggesting Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, but my point this afternoon was that when you flip to the supplementary estimates for Environment, there’s $3.7 million there “for the Alberta Waste Management Assistance grant program to support waste management contracts and commitments.” My question quite simply was: why do we find a similar expense in a different place? It doesn’t strike me as being terribly efficient in terms of governance. We have a RAGE department, the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, which is supposed to look after these sorts of things, and here we have two departments asking for supplemental spending for what, would appear to me at least, basically the same thing. I have yet to hear an explanation from anybody who's spoken on the other side as to why that occurs.

Now the other thing I was mentioning this afternoon – I'm not sure whether or not members opposite were listening; I'm going to guess probably not – was that despite the minister's protestations a minute ago, we're not necessarily against the horse-racing industry. Yes, they are an easy target, and, yes, we do isolate that particular instance and refer to it a lot. My explanation this afternoon – and I'm happy to make it again – was that when the people of this province look at priorities and when you look at, in this case, $8.3 million additional funding for the horse-racing industry on top of the $66 million . . .

Mrs. McClellan: It isn't.

Mr. R. Miller: Now the Minister of Finance is protesting that that's not what it's for, and the minister of agriculture stood up a few minutes ago and said: that's not what it's for; it's not for one particular project. Their very own document, Mr. Chairman, says: "to support a project in the Municipal District of Rockyview that includes a horseracing track and an equine centre." So it's very clearly for one particular project. It's right there in black and white from their own Public Affairs Bureau. For them to protest now that that's not what it's about, well, I'm sorry; I just don't believe it. It's very clearly in front of us. That's what it's about.

To make my point, we have Fort McMurray and the municipal district of Wood Buffalo crying for proper funding so that they can address their waste-water management needs. This is where we pick on the horse-racing industry, because when you put these two on a scale and you say: waste-water management for the municipality of Wood Buffalo, an area that has doubled in size in the last 10 years, an area where you have the local council appearing before the EUB, a minister of this government supposedly shutting off half of his brain so that he can appear in front of the EUB using the other half of his brain as the MLA for that constituency – these are his own words, Madam Minister. There's so much concern about what's happening up there.

The people of this province, quite frankly, look at a document like this and they say: $8.3 million for the horse-racing industry when we can't fund waste-water management in the municipality of Wood Buffalo. That's why we pick on the horse-racing industry. It's not because we don't like them; it's because they are an easy target when you look at those two situations. It's a question of priorities.

You know, I really get upset – and I've made this comment publicly before – when people talk about the tax-and-spend Liberals. We have been the voice of reason. We've been the voice of discipline. We've been the voice of fiscal conservatism in this House since the day that I and my colleagues were elected. If it wasn't for the members of the Official Opposition, there would be nobody in this House talking about fiscal conservatism because the people opposite – and I made this argument this afternoon – spend money as quickly as it comes in. Madam Minister, you know that that's a fact because you announced last week downstairs in the media room $1.5 billion in extra spending at the same time that you announced $1.5 billion in unbudgeted surplus. We're spending the money as fast as it comes in, and that is a problem as well.

Now, the other thing. And I'm glad that my colleague from Edmonton-Calder raised this because it's another really good question. If, in fact, the argument that the Minister of Finance and the minister of agriculture are making is that this isn't just one project but that this is part of a bigger picture, then my question is: why are we not talking about the bigger picture?

In this morning's media clippings there's a very interesting story published in the Carstairs Courier.

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. R. Miller: I'm happy to table it, and I would really hope that all members opposite would take the time to read it after I table it.

This story talks about the need for a regional strategy for waste-water management – guess where? – in communities throughout central Alberta, from Crossfield to Lacombe. Now, they're talking about $200 million. There's actually a quote in here from somebody who works for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation saying that this makes sense. But nowhere in here, nowhere in this story, nowhere does it reference anybody from Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation talking about tying in this project at the racetrack in the county of Rocky View to a central strategy for waste water in central Alberta. Why not? If, in fact, as the ministers are trying to tell us, this is part of a bigger picture, then why aren't we talking about it? It doesn't reference it in here. It doesn't reference it in the newspaper today, and it certainly doesn't reference it in your documents asking for the money. In fact, all you talk about here is to support a project in the municipal district of Rocky View that includes a horse-racing track and an equine centre.

So you know what? Here we are once again talking about the lack of a vision and the lack of a plan. I'm sorry, but I have yet to hear any explanation from the other side that would tell me that there really is a vision or a plan. Once again, as my colleague from Edmonton-Manning suggested, it's ad hoc spending, ad hoc thinking. It drives me crazy, quite frankly, and I know that it drives the people of this province crazy.

You know, I had a breakfast meeting this morning where I had the pleasure of . . .

Dr. Taft: Did they serve water at the meeting?

Mr. R. Miller: We had water. It was very fine water.

I was at a breakfast meeting this morning where I also had the pleasure of spending some time with the mayor of the city of Edmonton. The Minister of Municipal Affairs was talking about his afternoon meeting with Mayor Mandel and several other municipal leaders. Well, you know what the mayor's message was to my Rotary Club this morning? He talked about the need for planned growth. He talked about the need for a vision. He talked about the need to manage the incredible opportunity that we have right now, the same sorts of things that people on this side of the House have been talking about for two years, the same sorts of things that somebody, a minister, on the other side of the House yesterday said that only the opposition Liberals would think about. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment – you can check Hansard – said that only the opposition Liberals would think about what might happen in the future. You know what? Unfortunately, I'm starting to think that he was right.

You know, I started off speaking to this amendment. I think I probably wandered, but nobody called me on relevance, so I probably got away with it. So I'm going to take my place now and encourage all members of this House to vote in favour of this particular amendment. I would hope that if, in fact, it were to be fortunate enough to pass, we could look at that $4.8 million that we're talking about, and maybe we could apply it to something on the scale that really matters to Albertans, something that really matters to Albertans. I'm thinking more along the lines of, perhaps, affordable housing, which is becoming a bigger issue by the day.

As we debate $4.8 million for the horse-racing industry, we have people that are dying in the river valley because they're living in tents and are not protected properly. We have people in Fort McMurray that are living on the streets. In Fort McMurray of all places. So, you know, if we're going to talk about $4.8 million dollars in supplemental spending for something that we really, really need now, something that we couldn't have thought of three months ago, when we were in this House passing a $30 billion budget, let's talk about the emerging problems, not a horse-racing complex that has been in the planning stages for years and years and years. Let's talk about an emergent problem like the homelessness and the escalating rents.

We've got a leadership candidate who yesterday suggested that companies should provide housing for people coming in from out of province. I can only imagine the situation when multinational oil companies start buying up entire blocks of apartments or condominiums, forcing the residents out so that they can bring people in from out of province.

So we have problems, yes. We have emergent issues in this province, yes. We have all sorts of things that require supplemental spending on an emergency basis. A racetrack outside of Calgary that's been in the planning stages for years and years and years: I'm sorry; it's not one of them right now.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the opposition and, notably, several members have been trying to take what is a program that has been in Alberta Agriculture for some number of years now that is related to smaller municipalities with a smaller population base, who are not eligible for a lot of the grants that large municipalities get, that want to develop industrial areas or agricultural industries within their counties – we help them in Alberta Agriculture with waste-water and water planning strategies. We help them with capital cost. We don't pay the whole cost; the county has to pick up a good chunk of that as well. The county also gets developments within that industrial complex to also pay for that.

This is a long-standing program. If the opposition members, who have been so eloquent about their opposition to racetracks, who have been so eloquent about their opposition to smaller counties doing their own planning and approvals, who have been so eloquent about all the things that they're against had taken the time to educate themselves about the program when I brought my budget forward this spring, then this would probably not be so much a question of "Gee, why are you doing this, Doug?" as "Geez, the program has been so successful."

In order to complete the applications that are on the books right now, we need this supplementary estimate to ensure that these developments move forward on behalf of the counties, Mr. Chairman. We are not paying these dollars to the developments. We're paying them to the counties to help these smaller counties.

I see the Leader of the Official Opposition is laughing because, I guess, he believes in what his other member had to retract. What I'm saying is the truth.

The other thing that I might bring up, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that we don't go out and solicit these applications from the counties. They make the application to us because the AAMDC and all of these counties who are eligible are quite aware of these programs. Again, I would encourage the hon. members, much as my colleague the Minister of Finance did, to perhaps go out and talk to these rural municipalities before they lambaste them in this House for being inept. I think that the municipal district of Rocky View is going to be rather interested in some of these comments.

I would also say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has made me a little bit concerned because I represent two of the smaller cities. In fact, one of your members represents in partnership with me the city of St. Albert, which is part of the ring around the city of Edmonton. Based on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder's comments, I would have to surmise that he is advocating for central planning of the larger city over the smaller cities. I have to tell the hon. member that the residents of Spruce Grove and of St. Albert would be opposed to that at this point in time. I think that perhaps before making those types of comments, you might want to talk to the mayor of Spruce Grove, and you might want to talk to the mayor of St. Albert. For that matter, you might want to talk to the mayor of Fort Saskatchewan. I think you might find a little bit of a different view.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about two different departments of supplementary estimates. I can tell the hon. member: they are for two different things. As I said, this is a program which has been in Alberta Agriculture for some time. I would encourage the hon. member, if he has concerns about that program, to perhaps come over and chat with me about it. I've yet to have that discussion with the hon. member, and I think it might be worth his while.

Because of that, Mr. Chairman, and because of all of the erroneous comments that have been made about this amendment and why it should be here, I do again ask all members to vote against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the vote?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few brief comments. I think this amendment in many ways speaks to a bigger issue overall, and the issue is the lack of information we have to deal with as opposition MLAs. Now, we have a job to do here just as you have a job to do. We have been forced repeatedly to deal with one-line mentions in supplementary estimates, $4.8 million. Vote for it. Well, we don't know what it's all about, and we don't have time to debate what it's all about.

It's very interesting to me that the only real debate we've had here tonight is when we brought up this amendment, and that got the minister of agriculture involved, which is great. We got the Minister of Municipal Affairs involved. This is great. We got the Minister of Finance involved, which is always interesting. So we got things happening here. But if it weren't for the fact that we had this amendment, none of this would have happened, and none of this information would have come out. That's a problem that we have. There's just not enough to go on as legislators to make proper decisions about expenses of almost $5 million. It's still a lot of money, and it's a good thing for us to know, and it's easier for us to do our jobs as MLAs.

If I could address the Finance minister's comments about horse racing, she would probably be interested to know that we had a meeting with Dr. David Reid of Horse Racing Alberta. We had an excellent conversation with him. We had a very good conversation with him, and he invited us to come back to go around Northlands, and we're making arrangements for that. I believe a number of us are quite interested in doing that. So your assertions that we're all anti horse racing is entirely wrong. Nobody is anti horse racing. We're just concerned about the amount of money that's going into this industry, and it's got to learn to stand on its own two feet. He has admitted that to us, that this is a problem with them. So he's going to address it, and I hope the whole industry addresses it too. But this business of being, "Oh, you're anti horse racing; you hate the rural people," all that kind of stuff, is entirely untrue.

That's all I have to say.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have just another two or three minutes to deal with this amendment.

Did you want to speak, hon. member?

Dr. Taft: Sure. I'll just quickly wrap up, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the debate, actually, and I continue to have profound concerns about this expenditure. It seems pretty clearly itemized, although briefly so, on page 18 of the supplementary supply estimates, which clearly relates to an equine centre and a racetrack, a racetrack and a centre that I understand is going to draw water from the Red Deer River down to the northern edge of Calgary. That draw will be facilitated by having this waste-water infrastructure in place. It's a threat, I believe, to the water supplies of central Alberta, from Ponoka down maybe as far as Crossfield. I think there is a question here for farmers in that region, and I think farmers will be concerned that the water is going for what is by any stretch of the imagination a huge commercial industrial project.

I'd like to know: what is the water draw going to be? What is the impact of this development going to be on the Red Deer River? I will tell the members opposite that we're not opposed to horse racing; we're opposed to special deals. The horse-racing industry is getting a special deal. You could make exactly the same arguments for all kinds of industries. The only one that gets a special deal is horse racing.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will urge everybody to vote for this amendment, anybody with an interest in the future of water of Alberta.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it is 10:45 now, and I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 64(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. Does the committee approve the following appropriation bill: Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)?

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall immediately rise and report.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 44. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that in view of the hour I would like to move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:47 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, August 31, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/08/31
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special guests seated in the members' gallery. The first guest is Mr. Dan MacLennan, the very popular president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. With him today is the vice-president, Krista Koroluk, a dedicated health worker who has her roots in Lamont. You can see why she moved up the ladder very quickly with her nice, warm smile and, actually, as my second cousin. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Legislature two exceedingly bright and hard-working young women who are very important to me and, certainly, important to my constituents. I refer to my office staff, who are visiting from Lethbridge. Bridget Mearns, who coincidentally is my daughter, is the constituency manager and MLA assistant. She has experience in political administration at the federal and provincial levels, having served our MP in Ottawa. Bridget is bilingual and this fall will be studying to hone her mediation skills in order to better serve the constituents of Lethbridge-East. My office is very busy and very efficient thanks to her work, and she has lots of experience in keeping track of her mother.

Lisa Lambert was my STEP student this summer. I was very lucky to have Lisa because of her very great research skills. She did a great job for me. She is finishing her master's in political science, and she is the founder of an online newsletter, Martha's Monthly, an issue-based site with a focus for women. It encourages the public to express their views to their elected officials. I trust that the experience in my office will help Lisa to proceed towards her PhD.

I would ask them both now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to rise in this Assembly today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two fine women from the city of Edmonton, Catherine Obacz and her daughter Jessica. Catherine is the constituency manager for Edmonton-Manning. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Derrick Harrison from Akinsdale, Bernard Riley from Akinsdale, Ed and Joanne Kells from Akinsdale, Fran Preston from Akinsdale, Louise Perreux from Akinsdale, Helen Dempsey-Simmons from the Grandin area in St. Albert, and my trusted colleague and friend Pauline McCormick from St. Albert. Would they please rise – they're a real potent crew – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Samara Jones. Samara recently joined our caucus as our research director. Samara is a native of Edmonton although she has been working in Brussels with international nonprofit organizations on social justice, housing, and homelessness issues in the European Union. She worked on immigration issues and was an active volunteer with new immigrants in Belgium. Samara received her master of arts from the University of Leuven and a BA degree in history from the University of Alberta. She is fluent in both French and Dutch. We are delighted to have her as part of our team. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly John Schneider. John is a retired truck driver and has lived in Edmonton for 40 years. He is very concerned with the Alberta government's treatment of seniors. He was injured in a train accident at work 10 years ago and therefore lives on a fixed income of only $853 a month. He hopes that the government will improve access to affordable housing for seniors as well as improve accessibility issues for seniors, particularly for access to properly maintained mechanized scooters. I would ask that John now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and honour to introduce through you to the members of this Assembly four guests. Kazimierz and Barbara Toryfter as well as their daughter and son-in-law Anna and Mark Chandra are here in the gallery. Anna and Mark were married earlier this month, and her parents travelled here all the way from Poland for that occasion. As a side note, Mr. Toryfter used to work at the port of Gdansk as a crane operator. He was a member of the Solidarity movement in the 1980s during the now-historic strikes that eventually helped topple communism in that country and throughout Europe. They are seated over here in the members' gallery, and I would like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two ladies who do a tremendous job in my constituency office out in Stony Plain. They're here today to witness democracy in action. I'd like to introduce my constituency manager, Lorna Wolodko, and her STEP student, Paula Cornell. Paula's last day in the office is tomorrow. She is going to go finish high school, and tomorrow, she tells me, she is going to go challenge the Alberta road test so that she can get her driver's licence. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask these two ladies to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

[Premier Klein entered the Chamber to a standing ovation]

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It feels like déjà vu all over again, doesn't it?

Mr. Speaker, a huge project involving a mall to rival West Edmonton Mall, a giant horse-racing track, a resort hotel, and a large industrial park is currently under construction just outside the north edge of Calgary. The water demands for this project are absolutely immense, and the developers are planning to draw that water from the Red Deer River, many, many miles away. Very few people in Red Deer or elsewhere in central Alberta, including Drumheller, are actually aware of this. So my question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that the Red Deer River will come under increasing pressure in the next few years, does this minister support using water for a megamall and entertainment project on the edge of Calgary instead of for irrigation and communities in central Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the opportunity to table for all members a plan which reflected our Water for Life strategy regarding the recommendations that our government has acted on. It is very important in this way, our blue gold, and to summarize, it says that our plan that the vision of our Premier and our government has implemented reflects a balance between protecting the environment and sustaining it and our aquatic aquifers and also allowing economic development in terms of growing in the future. What we are doing, though, which is an important point of the question, is that we in this 21st century want to manage water better. We are doing groundwater mapping. We are actually taking the water and ensuring that in the future in the South Saskatchewan River basin, in the Oldman River, in the South Saskatchewan River, and in the Bow River there will be no further applications for water.

In the Red Deer River based on the information . . . [interjections] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on the information that we have received from, of course, our multistakeholder groups and our watershed councils, what they have said is simply this: there is capacity within the Red Deer River. We want to learn from that to ensure that what has happened over the last hundred years in the Bow, in the Oldman, and in the South Saskatchewan – we want to ensure for the future that our rivers and our aquatic systems and our aquifers and our basins are protected. That is exactly what we are doing and the action of this government is doing in terms of the recommendations this cabinet and government have adopted.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given his fabulous planning, apparently multistakeholder consultations and so on, can the minister explain why city councils in Red Deer, Innisfail, for example, many people in Drumheller have no idea – no idea – of this proposed use of the Red Deer River when those communities' very futures depend on allocations of that water?

Mr. Boutilier: Just as a way of geography of where the water is and where it's coming from and where it's going to, it's important to recognize that this water that we have been blessed with – and I might say that we've been blessed and are very fortunate in our province – as we go forward, we want the best use of water. Our goal under . . . [interjections] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is very important stuff. [interjections] You know what? When your mouth is open, your ears don't hear. So I would like to answer the hon. Leader of the Opposition's question. Maybe the leader can ask some of his members to close their mouths so that they can hear what I'm saying.

The Speaker: We'll move on to the third question, please.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will this minister guarantee . . . [interjections] Thank you. Will the minister guarantee that any proposed allocations for this project from the Red Deer River subbasin will be the subject of full public consultation in all the communities affected?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, this province and the Ministry of Environment have an absolutely outstanding record when it comes to the process that we use for water allocation and the permits that we grant. I also want to thank the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition when he suggested that our plan is fabulous because I agree with him: it is fabulous, and it really is the state-of-the-art public policy that we're doing for the 21st century.

I'll also ask, though, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who is dealing directly with municipalities on this issue because we consult with our stakeholders now, in the past, and well into the future.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Labour Market

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta growth summit recommendations, signed off nine years ago by this government, had many solid, strong ideas to deal with growth, but this government failed to act, failed to take leadership, and failed to implement the solid recommendations that would have helped immeasurably with our Alberta labour market today. In doing so, the government has failed in properly training and preparing opportunities for our young people, our young women, our aboriginals, our new immigrants, and our shrinking farm population. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. With dozens of recommendations for workforce training signed off by the Premier, co-chair of the growth summit, what happened, and where did they all go?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we do have in place as a government a 20-year plan that deals with a lot of these issues. We have one of the best diversified economic action plans in North America, that involves the oil and gas industry, agriculture, forestry, tourism, and science and technology. We are value-adding now in all those areas. That's the job creation side. We're spending hundreds of millions of dollars in training people to make sure that they fill as many of those jobs as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the opposition members, not only the Liberals but also the NDs, that if they have any quick answers, please send them to us.

Mr. Backs: Look at the growth summit, that's been sitting for nine years gathering dust, the recommendations there.

The Speaker: The next question is to look at that?

Mr. Backs: No.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry. There's no preamble.

Mr. Backs: Sorry.

The Speaker: So how are we going to get around this?

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Advanced Education: why did this government fail to act on the huge problem of the apprentice dropout rate identified nine years ago in the growth summit report?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I recall the growth summit. I was caucus liaison, so I remember it very well. But in about the same time frame, I would remind the member, we've gone from 23,000 apprentices to 53,000 apprentices. At that time we had about 200 aboriginal apprentices, and today we've got 1,400.

Mr. Backs: A supplemental to the minister of human resources, Mr. Speaker: given that action recommendation 50 states, "create a formula and process for the annual review of the minimum wage in Alberta," what happened, where did it go, and why is there not a formula today?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, the minimum wage was changed not too long ago in Alberta, raised up to $7. I've indicated in the House that I will review it again, and if it is necessary to increase it, then we'll definitely have a look at it. But one thing: because this government does so well in creating and developing jobs and developing a strong, diversified economy, there's only 1 per cent of the people who work close to the minimum wage. In fact, most of the people work at over $10 an hour.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Northwest Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Albert residents in the neighbourhoods of Heritage Lakes, Grandin, and Akinsdale are up in arms over the proposed northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive, which runs far too close to their homes. They're worried about the road being a dangerous goods route, noise and safety measures, clear-cutting, and most of all they feel that their government isn't listening to them. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: will the minister listen to the residents of St. Albert and move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive south of the current proposal?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the right-of-way for the ring road has been in place for a number of years, but what has happened is that the interchange that now has been engineered and designed makes it very difficult to centre the highway in the right-of-way. As a consequence, there has been a proposal that it would move farther north. I can tell you that with the lobbying that has been done by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development from that area in conjunction with the council from St. Albert, we have done some modelling, and we have determined that, yes, if the road were to be built where the proposal was, then there could be a problem with noise. The commitment is that we would be putting in noise abatement if, in fact, the road is built there. But I've got to stress that there has been no decision made at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the department approached Newman Theological College about the possibility of purchasing its property?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, yes, we have. As a matter of fact, we have advanced some money to the college to assist them in assessing any other location that they might feel is suitable for them.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Minister. To the same minister: given the close proximity of the current proposal to homes in St. Albert, how can the department be confident that the dangerous goods route won't put families in harm's way in St. Albert?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, those kinds of issues, along with noise abatement, are issues that we are currently dealing with. We've had a lot of consultation with the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and that will continue along with the input from the residents through the department. But I can assure you – and it's extremely important to recognize – that there has been no decision made. There are just proposals.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of Human Resources and Employment stood in this House in the presence of the widow of Kevan Chandler, a farm worker who was killed on June 18, and told this House that he would "monitor the situation" and "make the necessary changes" that are required "to improve the system." What he did not tell us, however, was that a review had already been completed by his own joint industry, labour, and government committee on workplace safety to the farm worker exemption from the occupational health and safety code. Worse than that, he did not tell us that he had rewritten the committee's report, dropping a recommendation that would have ended the exemption of farm workers from protection under the occupational health and safety code. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How does this minister justify standing in this House and promising to take all necessary steps to protect farm workers knowing full well that he had already rejected a recommendation of his own committee to do just that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a good and very important question, and it needs clarification. Of course, as you are aware, you know, we have a very strong economy, a lot of activity out there, and a lot of challenges in relation to safety. In our government safety in the workplace continues to be important.

I wish I could say that there are not going to be any fatalities and in the past have had no fatalities, but I can't say that.

One of the challenges we're faced with in relation to that particular issue is that the committee that was in place – it's a committee that's been around for quite a long time – did not have agriculture represented. What I indicated to the committee was that if there were any changes proposed in relation to agriculture, in relation to any impact it may have on farm families, which is very, very important, I would have to work in consultation with the minister of agriculture – and the minister of agriculture may want to supplement – that we would work together. Also, if it's going to impact the farm family in particular, we would have to consult the farm families out there and the farm industry to ensure that whatever is put in place does not impact the farm family negatively because the farm families right now, as you know, are challenged. There are a lot of bankruptcies out there. A lot of farm families are close to bankruptcy right now.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about protection for farm workers in agribusiness not on the family farm.

To the minister through the chair: given that this minister has now held this portfolio for nearly two years and given also that in the year 2005, 20 farm workers were killed on the job and 1,353 reported injuries took place on the farm, why has the minister not acted before now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course, like I said earlier, safety in the workplace, not only in agriculture but generally across the province, continues to be a top priority for our government. Again, I made a commitment. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and I have already sat down. I wanted to start talking about what steps may be taken next in relation to that specific issue.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister has not dealt with major issues brought before him and constantly talks about monitoring and taking action in the future and given that he almost never does, can he now give us a clear and firm answer about when this issue is going to be addressed by his department, and can he give that answer so that the farm workers and the families who have lost loved ones know that the government actually is going to do something for a change?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, agriculture continues to be a very, very important industry in Alberta. It is the backbone of rural Alberta, and many small towns across Alberta depend on the agriculture industry, the farm families. To make sure that we continue to have a strong, strong rural Alberta economy, you can be assured that any changes that are made by this government to deal with those specific issues will be done jointly with the ministry that's responsible for that area. It will involve the farm families. It will involve other farm leaders. It's an area that's so sensitive that any changes that are made have to be the right changes, and what this government will do is make the right changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

School Construction in Airdrie-Chestermere

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As everybody knows, Alberta is experiencing unprecedented growth, no less in my constituency than in many others, for example Fort McMurray. Airdrie right now is growing at an annual rate of 10 per cent. Chestermere and Langdon are growing at a rate of 20 per cent annually. In the spring I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of Education what he was going to do about getting schools for constituencies like mine and dealing with the infrastructure problems throughout the province when it comes to K to 12. I would like to know where he's at with his plan.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to report that we've made some tremendous progress in respect to the response to that question. In fact, today I have announced another $303.3 million for new school projects across the province, for new modernization projects, and for modulars. This will help deliver on what the school boards have identified as their top priority projects, that address specifically health and safety concerns and crowding capacity concerns in many areas of the province. About $44 million is heading into the Calgary boundary area, about $41 million is heading into Grande Prairie and area, about $40 million is heading into Airdrie-Chestermere and area, about $30 million is heading into Edmonton, and the list goes on. So we've taken some major steps toward advancing those causes today.

Ms Haley: On behalf of my constituents I'm delighted, Mr. Speaker.

However, my question to the minister is this: in the spring I identified the fact that we required five schools. His announcement will give us three of those five. Could he please tell us when the other two can be expected?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I should also have indicated that today I announced that I will have the schools for tomorrow plan completed later this fall, and that particular plan will be the most comprehensive plan for new schools and modernization projects in about seven years. It will include information about demographics and trends and patterns and so on across Alberta. It will also specify on a year-by-year basis where new schools are needed, including Airdrie, Chestermere, Langdon, and those other areas around Calgary and elsewhere around the province, and why they are needed. It'll do the same in year 2, year 3, year 4, right up to year 5. Where possible I will also allocate what our estimates are for the dollars required to deliver on that.

So that plan is forthcoming. It will be extremely comprehensive, and it will certainly include what the hon. member is asking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious that straight answers aren't forthcoming from this government. Residents of central Alberta are being kept in the dark about a proposed megamall/racetrack project that could negatively affect their future and livelihoods. We'll try for answers one more time. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister delay the approval of the water diversion from the Red Deer River until after this government finally comes up with this integrated land-use plan or until full public consultations are complete?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement. It's important to understand one principle in terms of aquatic protection and also the first in time, first in right.

Under our application process right now the city of Red Deer and all of the citizens in that area and in the county have the first in right. So the decision of any shopping mall or in a farm area will be based on: is there capacity? We have found from our multistakeholders that there is capacity. The application process will quite simply be: the first right will be to the citizens of the Red Deer area. Be it a shopping mall or farm or any other industry, we have a very strict consultation process that we use.

I'd ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Very briefly.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. Sometimes it's important to get a few facts on the line. The facts are in this case that the water in question is coming through the Kneehill water co-op, who in turn have a long-standing agreement in place with the city of Drumheller. So the city of Drumheller has a water treatment facility with excess capacity. They have been treating water for the Kneehill water co-op, which has a waterline that goes for miles. This will simply be an extension of that. The people of Drumheller know very well what's going on because they benefit by reducing their cost of water treatment.

Mr. Tougas: To the Deputy Premier: given that this PC government has refused to implement a lobbyist registry, will the Deputy Premier reveal how many times she or the cabinet have been lobbied by the developers of this project for their approval?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is a large project – there's no question about it – probably one of the largest projects outside of the oil sands in this province, about a billion dollars in total. I would not call it lobbying. I would call it good interaction between a variety of ministries in this government.

Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of work done on this project. It is a positive project. Contrary to what the hon. members allude to out there, it is actually at Balzac, which is not exactly on the edge of the city of Calgary. You might say closer to the edge of Airdrie. It is a large development that includes far more than a mall and a racetrack.

Mr. Tougas: To the Minister of Environment again: can the minister guarantee to the citizens of central Alberta that the Red Deer River can support both their growth needs and things like the proposed megamall/racetrack north of Calgary?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues have just indicated, let me repeat one more time but in a more eloquent way. It was said by Mark Twain that "Whiskey is for drinking; water is for fighting over." The comments are suggesting that we should fight over something. We use our energy in a more positive way. We are conserving water. We are ensuring that we can protect the aquatic environment in the basin and at the same time allow this province to grow with what we've been blessed with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bioenergy Industry

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bioenergy is a topic of growing interest given the rise in fuel costs and the world demand for renewable energy. Recently the government announced the energy innovation fund, and one of the areas eligible for funding is bioenergy. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I appreciate yesterday's announcement, but why isn't your ministry doing more to further the bioenergy sector here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very true that the biofuel sector – and I will say bioenergy sector – which includes not only things like biodiesel and bioethanol but also biogas from municipal waste or from manure or other waste that might be in the ag sector, is indeed a huge opportunity for us. We want to ensure that we get our programs correct, that we get it so that there'll be a sustainable industry for the future. We believe that there's tremendous potential in Alberta, certainly, with our large canola crop and other fibre sources, that the biodiesel sector is going to be an extremely great opportunity not only for the producers who sell canola but even, perhaps, for ownership in those particular operations.

So we're looking at ways and means that we can help develop that industry in the process and in conjunction with our alternative energy strategies as well as utilizing the environmental aspects of our water management plans, which the minister so eloquently has outlined already, which I won't go into. I believe that in the very near future we are going to be in a position to announce that strategy, and I think producers and the industry will be pleased.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess my only supplemental, then, is to the same minister. You're talking about possible further announcements. How will the agricultural industry be able to capitalize on this emerging sector?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the opportunity in bioenergy exists on a number of fronts for Alberta's agricultural sector. In the first instance it creates an alternative market for a lot of our products, whether that's in canola, whether that's in alternative fibres for ethanol production, as an example, but it also creates an opportunity for us to create an even more environmentally friendly livestock sector, that will help us deal with things like odour management, issues around water recycling, and even regional electricity generation, that will make it perhaps someday an area where municipalities will want to have these types of facilities and livestock feeding operations located nearer to them than they do now.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, there's also the opportunity for producers to diversify their income through ownership in these particular operations. By that, we give a more sustainable agricultural industry for now and far into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Policing Resources

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government has failed to protect our sons and daughters from crime. People are afraid for their safety and the safety of their children. This government throws big dollars into sheriffs and expensive computer programs but ignores the best solution: more police officers. My questions are all to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given that the mayors of major cities and the AUMA want an increase in the funding formula, why is this minister ignoring them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're not ignoring anyone. In fact, we've built a stronger relationship with our policing communities and our policing stakeholders over the last few years, where we have regular meetings with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. We really seriously take our direction from the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police in looking at the resource issues that we have and looking at the extremely difficult investigations that have to take place here in Alberta and those intense resources that are required for long-term investigations.

We've assisted stakeholders and policing agencies throughout the province by developing ALERT, the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams, which includes Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta. It includes IROC, the integrated response to organized crime. It includes our organized crime strategy as well as ICE, the integrated child exploitation team. These are provincially funded positions, Mr. Speaker, over 160 of them, to assist investigators in an integrated fashion from the RCMP in Calgary, Edmonton, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge. All work together in an integrated fashion, sharing information, sharing resources. We'll continue to do that in the future.

Mr. Agnihotri: But you ain't seen what's happening on the south side, Minister.

Given one of the lowest ratios of police officers per person in Canada, can the minister explain why and what he's doing about it?

2:10

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, all of our units, our police agencies, the RCMP in Calgary and Edmonton, have culturally diverse relations officers that work in the community. They work with ethnic organizations throughout their municipalities. They work with seniors, the disabled community, the gay and lesbian and transgendered communities. They have officers that are dedicated solely for the purpose of working with those communities. As well, they provide training to young recruits regarding those areas so that young recruits that are joining the police services have that understanding, that knowledge, and the ability to understand so that when they go into a situation where it may be an ethnic minority and the issues that deal with their community, he has a better understanding of that individual's ethnicity and background.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need more police officers. The minister knows this very well. Why is he being soft on crime?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, I think I'm the opposite. I think I'm one of the hardest individuals on crime. It's the hon. members across the way that want to release individuals back into the community with the lightest offences and the lightest punishments that are out there. We support the federal Conservative government in these tougher rules and regulations and legislation that's going to be coming before Parliament this fall.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing everything that we can. We are looking at the ratio of police officers in this province, but as this member does know because it passed in the Assembly, we have increased our front-line officers by 200, which is the most significant increase in the last 20 years, and for those officers that work in that investigative area we've added another 160 over the last two years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Tuition Fee Policy

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, next week classes will be starting again at universities, colleges, and technical institutes across the province, yet students still haven't seen the details of the government's new tuition fee policy. There have been lots of meetings, lots of discussions, and lots of ideas. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education. When will students know what the new tuition policy is?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member, I think the students do know what the new tuition policy is. They know that they haven't had an increase since 2004, and in June we did announce that the tuition rates for next year will be maintained at the 2004 levels and that any future increase will be limited to inflation. What we've been doing is dealing with the nuts and bolts of the details of this over the summer. We've consulted with student groups, institutions, and even asked our esteemed critics to take part, to calculate exactly how that would be done.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I met with representatives from every postsecondary institution, all the major student organizations, industry, aboriginal organizations, and community groups to outline what we've heard and what we're planning with respect to overall affordability. I'm very pleased to tell you that the feedback was very positive and that we're on track to seeking approval for the new affordability framework. I'm confident that this packet of changes will result in Alberta having the most affordable postsecondary education system, as our Premier said we would.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: given that affordable education will still have a price tag that students and parents will pay, what is the minister doing to help future students pay for their postsecondary education?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, we started, actually, a couple of years ago with the 2005 Alberta centennial education savings plan. This program provides a total of $800 towards a registered education savings plan for any child born in Alberta starting in 2005. Any parent, grandparent, or relative can apply for this program.

It's been quite interesting to see how popular the $400 rebate was but how little take-up there has been on twice as much money, $800, to be invested in our children's future. We're looking at the reasons why. We will promote this program again this fall, and we will make sure, Mr. Speaker, that if a new mother can leave the hospital with her bundle of joy along with samples of diapers and baby food, maybe they can take a package with them to apply for the grant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Fuel Pricing

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Drivers in my constituency and throughout the province are concerned about the price of gasoline in Alberta, especially when compared to other jurisdictions in Canada. While Alberta boasts some of the most abundant supplies in the world, consumers in this province are not feeling the benefits at the pump. To the Minister of Energy: notwithstanding the latest and, most likely, temporary decline in retail gasoline prices, can the minister explain why our prices in this province are often above the Canadian average and significantly higher than the average price in a province like Ontario, for example? Why do we have to pay more here in this province?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that he said: notwithstanding that the prices are coming down even in Alberta. It's a response to what has happened to oil prices world-wide. It's a commodity. But on average Albertans have the lowest price. [interjections] We do. Across the country, on average. Once in a while, periodically, some markets are lower than any other market. Ontario actually doesn't get all of its oil from Alberta. They import a lot of their oil from other places in the world. It's not all from Alberta that goes to Ontario. There are supply issues. There are refining issues with their own refineries in Ontario versus here. There are retail price wars that happen here in Edmonton, in Calgary, and throughout Alberta from time to time as well. We all experience that volatility sometimes.

The one thing that can be said is that the marketplace responds extremely well to getting that product to the consumer when they want it, when they need it, all the time. You can almost always rely on being able to get to that pump and get the fuel you need in a very competitively priced market.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the Minister of Energy again, Mr. Speaker: given that Alberta motorists feel that the gasoline prices in this province are usually unjustly high, why has this government failed to investigate potential price gouging at the pump and take measures to ensure fairness and restore confidence in the retail marketplace he's talking about?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, first off, you know, a lot of those assumptions and assertions are just that: they're assertions. These things have been studied and studied by all kinds of agencies. If he has the evidence of any wrongdoing, if he has anything to back up anything other than wild assertion, of course, there are agencies that can review any specific details.

The fact is that this marketplace responds to the commodity price of oil. It's a world price for a high demand because you and, I suspect, they are using a lot of the gasoline at the pump. It's because you're using it as a consumer substantially for your everyday needs that's driving up the demand for this around the world. This is what has driven to the higher prices. We are fortunate in Alberta that we continue to have some of the lowest priced gas and electricity, other than potentially hydro, of anywhere in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one is to the Minister of Finance. In light of the increased fuel costs here in Alberta, will this government increase the Alberta farm fuel benefit with respect to diesel and gasoline to better support struggling Alberta farmers?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do believe that the question on farm fuel should be more appropriately directed to the minister of agriculture. I would ask that he respond, and I'm sure that in that response he will reflect on the fact that we have the most generous subsidization to all producers.

Mr. Horner: It's interesting, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have the most generous . . . [laughter]

Mr. Speaker, we are one of the few jurisdictions in Canada that do rebate the farm fuel tax to our producers. We have been after our federal counterparts to do their part on the farm fuel tax exemption. Part of the reason why we recently announced our farm aid package of some $261 million to producers was also based on the fertilizer and fuel prices. We believe that that has been a sector of our industry that's been hit very hard. They can't pass that on to their marketplace as readily as others can. But we are going to continue to be there to help our farm families and our producers with whatever it takes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Provincial Sheriffs

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the ill-conceived firewall proposal is a theme that has not yet died among some members of this Tory caucus. One of the assertions of the firewall concept is that Alberta should form an independent provincial police force. These days currents of change are running from the office of the Solicitor General, so I think it's about time that the minister exercised the democratic practice of full disclosure in regard to this matter. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Can the minister reassure the public that his arming and deployment of large numbers of sheriffs throughout the province is not laying the groundwork to establish an independent provincial police force here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely not. We have a firm commitment and a contract with the RCMP that they will be providing our provincial police service until the year 2012. Actually, we're in negotiations right now and working towards those negotiations with the government of Canada regarding the next contract. As well, our provinces neighbouring us across the country will be negotiating that same contract.

I can tell you that the number of sheriffs in the province of Alberta has only increased slightly in the fact that we rebranded the provincial protection officers and a number of names that they had before that to sheriffs to give them the identity that they requested and the identity that they could have in a professional career with the government of Alberta. It also provided them with opportunities like the traffic safety program, which will have 42 officers when training is completed, to work on Alberta's most dangerous highways regarding traffic enforcement and traffic education to make Albertans safer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Well, considering that the force of sheriffs has been expanding and the minister is deploying and training these people throughout the province, could the minister perhaps reassure Albertans that he's not compromising the authority and the integrity of the RCMP throughout the province with this?

Mr. Cenaiko: No, Mr. Speaker, not at all. In fact, we're working in a complementary service with the RCMP. I'm meeting with Deputy Commissioner Sweeney tomorrow in Calgary. We're going to be announcing the southern aspect of the traffic safety program in southern Alberta tomorrow at McDougall Centre. If the hon. member would like to attend, it starts at 9:30.

Mr. Speaker, we're doing this to work with the RCMP, not against the RCMP. This is really a complementary service. This will provide the RCMP with the additional time and the additional focus on front-line policing, investigating criminal activity in their communities. This provides a complementary service where sheriffs that have almost three months' training will be out on the street, will be out investigating traffic collisions, enforcing the Traffic Safety Act, but as well ensuring that motorists have a safer roadway system in Alberta to drive on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Considering what the minister is asserting here, certainly he wouldn't be averse, then, please, to tabling documentation as to what his ministry's long-term plan is for the police college and his sheriffs program so that the public can know with certainty that the role of the RCMP in Alberta will be strengthened and not weakened.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be more than happy to provide a copy of our business plan to the hon. member, which has everything in there that we did this past year. Of course, the business plans are just coming out, so I'd be more than happy as soon as that's done. It has a full explanation of what we did this past year and where we want to move in the future. I'd be more than happy to give him an autographed copy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Spray Lake Sawmills

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is not about policing, but I congratulate the minister for his initiative on our new police college.

Mr. Speaker, my concern is about the Spray Lake Sawmills forestry management plan in Kananaskis Country. Many of my constituents and many people in the Calgary area are concerned that this forestry management plan does threaten Kananaskis Country. Could the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development please tell us how he responds to those concerns?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the direct question is that residents of Bragg Creek and further down into your constituency are not threatened by the logging that is going on or that is planned or proposed by Spray Lake. Spray Lake have been logging in the area for over 60 years, and that shows the company's commitment to sustainability of the natural resource. Kananaskis Country has had logging in it for the past 60 years, and it's on basically less than 1 per cent of the land base. It is important to note that there is absolutely no logging going on in parks or protected areas of Kananaskis Country, and it's absolutely necessary to let you and your constituents know that a detailed forest plan must be put together by Spray Lake Sawmills. It is absolutely important for you to also know that managing the forest – it's a mature forest. As a matter of fact, it's an overmature forest, and it's at great risk from mountain pine beetle and from fire as well. So the risks that are being put forward in the detailed management plan, which had public consultation, are there to address the public's concern.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Again, my constituents and people that live downstream on the Bow River and the Elbow River are concerned that this harvesting will have an adverse effect on water quality. Could you please respond to that concern?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, in 1986 the integrated resource plan that was put out for Kananaskis Country states that watershed protection, recreation development, and wildlife management are the properties that are valuable to that area while at the same time allowing for the extraction of our natural resources. There are zones set up to make sure that those particular areas and those uses are determined. So the government of Alberta is committed to watershed protection in Kananaskis Country. But more important than that, we are concerned about all the values in the forest in all of those areas right from wildlife aesthetics to soil retention, and it's really, really important for the sustainability of the forest industry to have soil retention.

Spray Lake and its contractors also work under a series of strict regulations to make sure that the ground rules are designated to prevent any negative impact.

Mr. Speaker, one more . . .

The Speaker: Almost sounds like a ministerial statement.

Dr. Morton: My final question is to the same minister. I know there are plans for a FireSmart program in the Bragg Creek area. Will the minister let the residents of Bragg Creek know when they can be expected to have some sort of public consultation or public meeting to discuss the FireSmart program?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, Spray Lake Sawmills in addition to FireSmart has also commissioned a scientific assessment on water quality and water quantity from the University of Alberta, so let your constituents know about that as well. In terms of FireSmarting, it is absolutely central and critical to FireSmart that the residential views are taken into consideration. The municipal district of Rocky View is the lead agency responsible for the FireSmart plan for that community. The municipal district sets up local advisory committees that have a plan that is put into place. They have technical advisors on them. From the point of view of FireSmart the fish and wildlife considerations – and the mountain pine beetle is certainly part of that as well. The local advisory committee must have on it councils, industry. [interjections] This is important to this hon. member.

The federal government and stakeholders of the municipal district have to be invited. The advisory committee in this case, in Bragg Creek, is in the process of being organized. The councillor, Bob Everett, and the fire chief, Trent West, are responsible for that, and your community can get a hold of them to organize a meeting post-haste because FireSmart is important.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will be calling on the first of six members to participate in Members' Statements shortly, but prior to that our vignette of the day.

Now, I'm going to chastise myself after I conclude this vignette for violating two rules of the House. One is that I am going to mention the name of a sitting member of this Assembly, and secondly, I am going to direct the pages to move and deliver something to all members while I'm speaking. But I will draw both of these standing orders to my attention when this is all over.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Tribute to the Hon. Ralph Klein
Premier of Alberta

The Speaker: Hon. members, 12 different men have had the great honour in serving as the Premier of the province of Alberta. Alberta's Premier, the Hon. Ralph Klein, has had the unique privilege of serving as Premier since 1992. On May 18, 2006, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta paid special tribute to this remarkable man who formed four governments and presided over the most dynamic growth period in the history of Alberta. He has received countless provincial, national, and international awards, is recognized throughout Canada and many parts of the world, and is the dean of Canadian governance and political leaders.

For 26 years the Premier has been a servant of the public: as mayor of the city of Calgary from 1980 to 1989, as an MLA since 1989, as a minister from 1989 to 1992, and as the leader of Alberta since December 14, 1992. Twenty-six years of unselfish public service is worthy of praise.

The chair listened attentively to the tributes given to the Premier on May 18 by the hon. Deputy Premier, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and the leader of the third party. The words spoken were eloquent, sincere, and noteworthy. All members of the Assembly were moved. The day was worthy of commemoration, and to remember it, we have created a special Hansard titled Special Edition: Tribute to the Hon. Ralph Klein. The pages will now provide a copy, first to the Premier and then to all members. I hope that all members will retain this special Hansard as a keepsake for many years to come. The Hansard is a fitting tribute for a most deserving leader.

Mr. Premier, you will leave this Assembly shortly, and when you do, you will leave a legacy of accomplishment. As the cowboys of old traversed the west with their horses, the leaders of today function daily with their loyal chair. The chair that you are currently occupying, the chair of the Premier of Alberta, will go with you, with the appreciation of the men and women of your caucus, who have personally and generously purchased it at full cost from the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. As you sit in it in the future, may you only remember the best of times.

Thank you for your service to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and to the people of Alberta. May you and Dr. Klein experience only smooth times ahead, and may good health be with you both always. Thank you and God bless. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if I could be allowed to respond briefly. You are so kind. That's what I said in my note to you.

To all of you, thank you for the honour and the privilege of serving this great province.

Thank you.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of six members to participate.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

35th Anniversary of PC Government Election

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the year 1971 was a very good year. On this weekend 35 years ago I married my knight in shining armour. On this day 35 years ago a new administration began for the government of Alberta. Yesterday our Speaker quoted George Koch, a Calgary writer who described those tense moments on election day as the Progressive Conservatives won 49 seats to become a new government.

Thirty-five years ago today Premier Peter Lougheed, who declared that Alberta "is the best darn province in the world," proceeded to implement his policies without resorting to negative attacks on the previous government. With wisdom and grace Premier Lougheed began to implement the changes that placed this province on the path of economic prosperity and success. The government led by Premier Lougheed will long be remembered for introducing a new royalty regime in 1974 and for the creation of the heritage savings trust fund. It was during the PC government of Peter Lougheed that Albertans first received the Human Rights Act and the assured income for the severely handicapped, known as AISH. The Progressive Conservatives were re-elected in '75, '79, and '82 under Premier Lougheed's leadership.

In '85 Don Getty was elected leader, and the introduction of Family Day on the third Monday in February, the accord establishing the Métis settlements council, and providing land for eight Métis self-governing settlements are hallmarks of his years as Premier. The Progressive Conservatives were re-elected in 1986 and 1989. It was during this time that the north was opened up for forestry development.

December 1992 marked another incredible milestone for the Progressive Conservative government. Our current, great Premier was elected leader and seven months later was returned by Albertans to govern in the first of four election victories. This Premier will go down in history as the man who slayed the deficit and retired the debt. He will also be remembered for establishing a Ministry of Children's Services, for Alberta's Promise, for making advanced education and cancer research a priority, for promoting partnerships with other provinces, and for being a Premier who gave back to the people.

Today is truly a time to reflect on the many opportunities that exist in this province because of 35 years of good, caring Progressive Conservative government. Mr. Speaker, no matter how loud and preposterous the rants of the opposition may be, Albertans on the street will declare, just as Premier Lougheed declared 35 years ago, that this is the best darn province in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

2:40 Role of Religion in Building World Peace

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Asked where he came from, the ancient Greek Cynic philosopher Diogenes replied, "I am a citizen of the world." He meant by this that although we are defined by our local identity – as legislators we represent local communities, and we are Albertans – yet with respect to the most basic moral values such as justice, we should regard all human beings as our fellow citizens and neighbours. The Stoics went further and declared that we should give our allegiance to no mere form of government, no temporal power, but to the moral community made up of the humanity of all human beings; indeed, we are citizens of the world.

I want to bring to your attention a very special event that will be happening here in Edmonton on October 20 to 22. I'm referring to a conference at the Shaw centre with the title Building World Peace: The Role of Religions and Human Rights, sponsored by the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. This is a timely and urgent topic for discussion, focusing on the role of religions in building world peace.

The 20th century was unquestionably the most violent century ever given the staggering statistics of the loss of lives during the many wars of that century. Now at the beginning of the 21st century the world is experiencing mass murders, suicide bombings, invasive wars, and the continuing buildup of nuclear weapons, with countries like Iran and North Korea trying to join the nuclear club. It is a great tragedy that so many acts of violence in our world are committed in the name of religion. Academic students of religion know from their study of sacred texts like the Quran and the Bible that all the major religions teach the way of nonviolence and peace.

Now it is time for religious people and faith communities to join together with educators and politicians to take the initiative and proclaim to the world that our various religious traditions are the key to the development of a culture of peace. This timely and important conference will remind us that the major world religions have helped to shape the movement of human rights in our world. We must be reminded that it was a Canadian, John Humphrey, who was the principal drafter of the universal declaration of human rights. So I invite all members of this House to check the website of the John Humphrey centre and register for this conference, which will help us as world citizens move toward a safer and more peaceful world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Centennial of Alberta Building Trades Council

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and recognize the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Building Trades Council, which will be celebrated here in Edmonton September 1.

This organization first originated in 1906 as the Edmonton Trades and Labour Council, then grew to become the Northern Alberta Building Trades Council until its present form. This organization currently has more than 40,000 members and is still growing. This group has a lot of history with the city of Edmonton as its members constructed the High Level Bridge. Also, while members of this Assembly may not know, we are all very familiar with the works of members of this organization, as they built this beautiful Legislature Building, of course where we have the honour of serving our constituents.

The Alberta Building Trades Council is not known only for the craftsmanship of its members but also for their support of charitable organizations in the province. Donating more than $2.4 million, they support a wide range of worthy groups, including STARS air ambulance, the Bissell Centre, Big Brothers Big Sisters, to just name a few.

I would ask that all members of this Assembly join me in congratulating the Alberta Building Trades Council on their 100th anniversary and wishing them well in their second century.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Opposition to Northwest Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the most dedicated and hardest working constituents in Alberta, the residents of St. Albert. As you know, the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation is proposing to run the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road dangerously close to St. Albert homes. The neighbourhoods of Heritage Lakes, Grandin, and Akinsdale are most at risk. Residents justifiably don't want a dangerous goods route so close to their homes, nor do they want the noise pollution, nor do they want their children to be in harm's way, nor do they want to see beautiful trees cut down, nor do they want their property values to decrease.

Instead of lying down and being defeated, the residents mobilized. They packed a government town hall meeting and strongly opposed the proposed alignment. They're writing letters to the editor and to a number of government officials, opposing the route and at the same time keeping their cool. In just four days residents organized and managed to collect nearly 2,000 signatures urging the government to move the proposed highway further south. They're wisely using this short session to bring their concerns to the Legislature. Mr. Speaker, these residents are remarkable.

As their MLA, along with St. Albert city council, I am joining their call and urging the government to please reconsider the proposed route. There are other alternatives. We're speaking in one voice to the government. We hope and pray that the government is listening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

U of A Partnership with Northern Colleges

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The opportunity for all Albertans to access higher learning through postsecondary schooling, should they seek it, is a priority for this government of Alberta, and it continues to take it very seriously. Enhancing postsecondary opportunities for individuals in northeastern Alberta, particularly those in rural and aboriginal communities, was a goal of two memorandums of understanding signed earlier this year.

The first MOU agreement was signed by Portage College in Lac La Biche and the University of Alberta. The signing allows for students to access the first two years of university studies before transferring to year 3 at the University of Alberta.

The U of A also signed a memorandum of understanding with Blue Quills First Nations College in St. Paul. Mr. Speaker, this particular signing serves to enhance the two institutions' current partnerships and increase the number of graduates of aboriginal heritage. For example, the Blue Quills aboriginal teacher education program offered as part of the Faculty of Education has been very successful. Over 30 students have received their bachelor of education degrees from the university college. Many more will follow in the future as well. This memorandum of understanding between the two schools will continue to build on this success in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the collaboration between these two colleges and the University of Alberta not only enhances the accessibility of postsecondary services in northern Alberta but also helps to maintain the traditions of quality education and ensure that Albertans continue to be among the best-educated people in the world.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta should take the lead in keeping big money out of politics. A leadership race is no different from other election activities. There's still a great deal at stake, and politicians have a responsibility to provide full transparency of funding resource sources. This is certainly true of the PC leadership race because the winner will automatically become our next Premier.

Alberta lacks a policy of full disclosure in leadership contests and legislation to limit donations to individuals. Clearly, the PCs and the Liberals prefer to keep their close connections with big business behind closed doors. In 2005 73 per cent of donations to the PCs came from the corporations. In the same year the Liberals took in 45 per cent of their donations from the corporations. In contrast, 99 per cent of Alberta NDP donations came from individuals.

While the PCs might talk about transparent and open government, Albertans know that corporations who donate to political parties expect that their issues and concerns will be taken more seriously. It's not difficult to trace a line between Tory policies and big-business interests. Let's take oil and gas royalties as an example. When the oil and gas companies provide 16 per cent of Tory party funding, it's no surprise that the PC government has refused to meaningfully review oil and gas royalties.

But the PCs are not the only ones. The Liberals also have friends in big business. A fine example is a fundraiser on September 27, 2005, in Toronto, when the Alberta Liberals charged $3,000 a plate from well-connected Bay Street CEOs. The Liberal support for corporate tax cuts is a clear indication of the value they put on these big corporate friends.

Albertans deserve better than this. Albertans deserve political parties and a government that are willing to set high standards of transparency. Albertans deserve political parties whose policies are based on the support of individual Albertans. The Alberta NDP is the only party working for full disclosure of political fundraising during elections and party leadership campaigns and is dedicated to getting big money out of politics.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five petitions today for a grand total of 1,921 this week urging the government to move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road south of the current proposal to reduce noise, increase safety measures, as well as minimize the environmental impact of the road.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of a letter.

The Speaker: We're just doing petitions now.

Mr. Flaherty: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm out of order?

The Speaker: No. You had a petition; you did that one first. We'll get you later.

head:

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, as everyone in the Chamber would know, normally at this time on Thursday I'd be giving notices of motions pertaining to written questions and those that would stand and retain their places or be dealt with or whatever, but since there are none on the Order Paper, I won't be making that statement.

Secondly, I should also normally be presenting notice for motions for returns on the Order Paper. However, given that Monday is a statutory holiday and given that the House may or may not rise later today – we'll have to wait and see – my best effort at giving notice today is that when and if the House should resume in the next several days, then at that time I would move to provide proper notice for the remaining motions for returns that are on the Order Paper.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Bill 219 Electric Utilities (Net Metering) Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 219, Electric Utilities (Net Metering) Amendment Act, 2006.

This act would amend the Electric Utilities Act to lay the framework for net metering in Alberta.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 219 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Mr. Bernard T. Reilly to the minister of infrastructure and highways.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate amount of copies of the results of two postcard campaigns that were sent to my constituency office. The first is directed to the chair of the Standing Policy Committee on Education and Employment from Vibrant Communities in Calgary. They're calling for affordable transportation for all low-income Albertans as proposed by Fair Fares' action team.

The second is a campaign undertaken by Public Interest Alberta. They are calling for better treatment of Alberta seniors, including establishing an independent seniors' advocate as an officer of the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During debate on the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations budget estimates I committed to provide some answers in writing, responses to specific questions that I could not fully answer at that time. It's my pleasure, sir, to table the requisite number of copies of those responses, the originals of which have sent to my respective critics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity I rise this afternoon to table five copies of a letter sent to him by his constituent Steve Hooker. Mr. Hooker spent several hours in the hall outside Calgary Foothills emergency trying to comfort his father as he awaited treatment, and he's calling for more money to be put into the medical system.

Also on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity I would like to table five copies of a petition signed by 92 Albertans from across the province urging this government to consider increasing funding in order that "all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

Then from constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Speaker, the first being a letter from Celeste Ibach, writing to give us a perspective of what it is like to work in the field of rehabilitation, and she's asking the government to consider giving out higher wages to front-line staff.

Secondly, a letter from a constituent, Baldwin Reichwein, writing with concerns about housing for people with disabilities. In particular, Mr. Speaker, he's writing about the Bader Tower, which was in the news recently, and a resident, Dorothy Heppler, who was, incidentally, one of the founding members, with a former member of this Assembly, Percy Wickman, of the Handicapped Housing Society of Alberta. Unfortunately, Ms Heppler passed away recently, and there is concern that it may have been as a result of some of the stress that was caused by the moves that were being made in that facility.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of a news release from the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board announcing that yesterday they won the Institute of Public Administration of Canada's prestigious award for innovative management. This institute recognizes the Energy and Utilities Board for its role in developing Synergy Alberta. This Synergy group allows members of the public, landowners, industry, and the regulator to come together in a co-operative manner to discuss energy development issues and to create local solutions, another very tremendous example of the great work that the Energy and Utilities Board is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a package of documents. The package includes the March 2006 draft of the Work Safe Alberta three-year strategic plan. The draft includes a recommendation to remove the exemption of farm workers from the occupational health and safety code. I'm also including the July 28, 2006, version of the strategy and a letter endorsing it from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment dated August 23, 2006. The July draft does not include the recommendation to remove the farm worker exemption.

The next document I'd like to table is a backgrounder from the Alberta Federation of Labour, and it clearly sets out the statutory and regulatory changes needed to protect farm workers.

Finally, I have a letter from Gordon Christie and the Calgary and District Labour Council dated August 24, 2006. The letter is written to the Premier and calls on him to end 80 years of discrimination against farm workers that results from their exemption from the occupational health and safety code and sections of the employment standards act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Then, hon. members, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 19th annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office for the calendar year ended December 31, 2005. This report represents the audited financial statements for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2005, and the ninth annual report of the Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon.

Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, pursuant to the Workers' Compensation Act the Workers' Compensation Board 2005 annual report, the Workers' Compensation Board 2005 Accountability Framework Report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Alberta Law Foundation annual report 2006 with attached audited financial statements and other financial information for the year ended March 31, 2006.

head: Projected Government Business

Ms Blakeman: Due to the slightly renumbered Standing Orders I think I'm under Standing Order 7(6) now asking if the Government House Leader could share with us whether there is any expected business for next week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member. I have scoured the pages, and I don't see any projected government business for the upcoming week.

Thank you.

head: Statements by the Speaker

Standing Order Revision

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, just two items for housekeeping. House leaders, will you take out your Standing Orders, please, and look at 62(1). We've discovered a minor error – I underline the words "minor error" – in the revised Standing Orders, and these standing orders took effect last Thursday, August 24, 2006. In Standing Order 62(1) the reference to Standing Order 61 should not be 61; it should be Standing Order 64. That I should be a 4, not a 1.

Members will note that this standing order concerns the consideration of appropriation bills, and of course that's what we'll be doing in the Assembly this afternoon. If members go back and examine the Standing Orders as they read prior to the revision, they will note that what is now Standing Order 64 was then Standing Order 61. While the number of that standing order changed, the cross-reference did not. So the intention was very clear. At the conclusion of this sitting we'll be making the required typing corrections and providing a corrected page to members and all users of Standing Orders for inclusion in their binders.

3:00 Chamber Chairs As Parting Gifts

The Speaker: Just one last housekeeping item so that I'm not inundated with lots of memos from members. The cost of the chair in this Assembly is $1,835. Number two, a cheque was provided to the Clerk yesterday for the full amount of $1,835. The cheque is made out to the provincial Minister of Finance to deal with this particular matter. Thirdly, the fund, as I was informed by the government caucus whip, came from personal contributions from members of the government caucus. That's how it was paid for.

Number four, the policy that I've instructed to the Clerk in the future and for myself in the future – not for me but to remind myself as the Speaker – is that should a member, a leader of any other party or caucus in the Assembly choose to leave and if the members of that particular caucus wish to buy such a chair for their leader, we will make it available to them for $1,835. I'm not aware that this is happening at the moment, but just so that there is absolute, total transparency with respect to this matter.

I do not need notes from members suggesting that there's an expectation that when I leave, this chair comes with me. No way, thank you very much.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 44

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2).

There has been very good debate and some, I think, constructive debate over the past several days on the supplementary estimates. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that we are recognizing $293 million to increase operating support to our schools, to school maintenance, renewal, new schools, and preservation projects, and cost escalations – unfortunate but a fact of life – of approved projects. I'm equally proud of $262 million for medical equipment, auxiliary nursing salary adjustments, and health authority operations, and $102 million for natural gas rebates to protect Albertans from high natural gas prices. I am especially pleased that this province is in the fiscal position to do these things.

Mr. Speaker, another area, of course, as a rural member of caucus, is to recognize that an industry that is such a part of this province, such an integral part of the growth of this province, that contributes so much to the value added in the small business part of this province is receiving some, I think, very important disaster funding through this.

I commend the minister of agriculture for bringing this forward. I commend him for his consultation with industry. I understand the difficulties in how to process these dollars, but I commend him on his decision to use the most current and expedient methods of getting these dollars to the industry at a very critical time. Most of us who do represent rural ridings know that these costs are weighing heavily on producers, and they affect the very viability of our people who supply fuel and who have outstanding fertilizer accounts. They affect, actually, every coffee shop, every dress shop, every machine agency, every farm supply and include the offshoot into the urban supply chain, to which agriculture is a huge contributor. We're all looking forward to November, when the Canadian Finals Rodeo comes to this town. We know what a huge contribution the agricultural people bring to this city, and that's just one example.

Mr. Speaker, these supplementary estimates were deliberated by our members with great scrutiny. I can say that every member of the government caucus spent an enormous amount of time looking at these estimates, ensuring that they are dollars that are needed, most importantly, that it was important that they come forward now, that in the areas of environment the most pressing needs are met. These are comprehensive. They have been well thought out, well deliberated.

As I said earlier, I thank all hon. members in this House for their comments on the estimates, many of them constructive, many of them useful. I know that every member comes to this House every day with the best intentions of representing their constituents, and I hope that every member comes to this House with the best interests of the entire province on their mind although each of us is elected to look after a number of people that we proudly call our constituents.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage all members to support the passing of this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Well, it's sounding like a good afternoon.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in third reading to Bill 44, the second appropriation bill of this year. The hon. Minister of Finance made a really nice comment about how we're here to represent the people who elected us but that we also have to keep in mind the people in the rest of the province and serve them as well.

There are two areas that have really come up on my radar screen that I want to talk about in conjunction with the appropriation bill that is before us today. Of course, in that appropriation bill we have two ministries that are featured fairly prominently for funding. One is health, and the second is Education. I'd like to focus my comments on that.

One of the areas that's very near and dear to my heart is the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. I have a number of friends there. Part of my family came from nearby, the Turner Valley-Black Diamond area, and I visit southern Alberta and those areas in particular at least once a year. So I was interested in what the school situation looked like in Fort Macleod in particular, and I'm going to focus on that and the other areas that are nearby; you know, schools like Granum and other schools like that. I wasn't able to get the statistics on all of them, but I did notice that there are a couple that are in really tough shape, and I'm hoping that this money that's being injected into the infrastructure is going to benefit them.

In particular, I'm noticing that the raw scores from the 1999 audit were quite high – in other words, indicating a very poor infrastructure situation – for A.J. Nowicki elementary and A.J. Nowicki high school. In the '99-2000 estimate, reaudit as they called it, of the maintenance that would be needed, they were as well quite high: the elementary at $617,000 and change and the high school at $837,700. So that's actually quite high. Canyon elementary at that time had a raw score of 540, which puts it just into the fair category, but their expected maintenance was $1,225,000 – I'm rounding up a bit there – which is also very high. So I'm hoping that those have already been looked after in the last six years.

One that is still coming up to my concern is F.P. Walshe, which is in Fort Macleod. Its maintenance amounts forecasted between 2000 and then the second one done in 2005: there is an increase there. It's not an astronomical increase, but it is an increase. So that's indicating that there's more difficulty, and it's more expensive to maintain those schools. But when I look at the facility condition index, the F.P. Walshe school was very high, at 14.75. Now, considering that that grid really goes under 5 per cent, 5 to 10 per cent, and above 10, this is almost five full points above that marker, so that's indicating a pretty grim condition. I'm sure hoping that this money is going to result in some improvement in their situation.

The other one that comes up as being in particularly dire straits is W.A. Day elementary. Again, it's had a significant increase, almost double, in the maintenance estimate, going from $284,000 to $593,000 and change, which is really indicating a bad decline in the situation there. Its facility condition index is coming out at 10.38 per cent, which is, again, putting it into that poor category. So on behalf of those schools in particular – I mean, there are some others that have either very high raw scores from six years ago or very high maintenance from five years ago. For example, Willow Creek comp had a maintenance of over $2 million, which, again, is very high, but there are no other scores that are given, so that either means that they're off the Richter scale or they've already been dealt with. I'm certainly hoping that we're going to see something positive there.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When I look at the second thing that's affecting Livingstone-Macleod, that's around the health regions and what's happening there. Livingstone-Macleod turns up in two different health regions. The northern part of the constituency is attached to the Chinook health region. No. I have that the other way around; it's the Calgary health region. The southern part is attached to the Chinook health region, which in and of itself is a bit of a strain because it does make for some administrative headaches, but that's what we're dealing with there. So the challenges that we're seeing in the Chinook health region that affect this constituency: it's showing an operating deficit of $2.4 million this year, with a total of $9.6 million, including the deficit accumulated from the previous year.

The top issues for the region are shared with a number of others, human resources and their recruitment of health professionals. They are struggling with providing access to all health services. They're concerned with ensuring that the funding formula continues to be based on population with adjustments for age and gender. Southern Alberta has a higher percentage of seniors, which increases the overall need for chronic disease management and care: long-term care, diagnostic exams, et cetera.

There is an additional priority of the expansion of the Lethbridge regional hospital to include more space for outpatient programming, and that's including radiation therapy. Of course, since Fort Macleod actually had its hospital closed by this particular administration, they now all have to drive to Lethbridge, so the condition of the Lethbridge wait-lists and infrastructure are of intense concern to those living in Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, and others.

There is a concern on behalf of the high proportion of aboriginals in that area around preventing and managing diabetes and obesity and all of their complications. It's a major challenge for anybody to try and deal with that, but they are particularly concerned about it. They'd also like to focus on education on the risk factors for diabetes and early testing and diagnosis.

They have identified a need for the latest technology in operating room design and equipment to improve patient safety, shorten the length of stay, and increase surgical capacity, and that helps them to retain and recruit surgical specialists. Thus far the Lethbridge Regional Hospital Foundation has been encouraged to raise its own money, so we'll see what happens to the condition of that hospital and their wait-lists there and for those that are affected in the Livingstone-Macleod constituency with having to work through the Chinook health region.

For those in the northern part of that constituency, which would be places like Claresholm, for example, they're working through the Calgary health region, which, as we know, has a deficit of $70 million. We've had a number of closures and crises there over the summer. That Calgary region is serving not only its own million but also people coming from over an hour's drive away and pouring in to use their facilities as well.

We had things like the Peter Lougheed Centre that had to leave operating rooms vacant due to a surgical nursing staff shortage. The Calgary health region closed 15 beds at the Foothills hospital renal unit from June until mid-September, the entire late spring and summer. They also cut back on diagnostic procedures. About a thousand exams were expected to not be able to be done because of the reduction in hours at the Peter Lougheed Centre, the Rockyview, and the South Calgary Health Centre.

At the Rockyview hospital five mental health spaces were closed from July 15 to August 13, and I remember that when the current minister of health took the portfolio, she said that she wanted to place a priority on improving mental health. Certainly, this is again pointing out that this continues to be a deficiency, especially when we're having to close mental health beds in hospitals, which is where the most urgent cases end up. So that's pretty dire.

Emergency room wait times increased the pressure on the whole health system. We've heard a number of stories of people being unable to get from emergency and get into surgical beds or get into the hospital because they just aren't there. So there's pressure everywhere.

The Calgary health region has been pretty clear. They need funding in order to increase capacity. In 1990 there were 2,600 hospital beds to serve a population of 700,000. There are now fewer than 2,000 beds for 1 million people. So on behalf of that particular region I sure hope that they're going to see some improvement. I'm happy to champion on their behalf, and I hope that their needs will be considered and looked after by this government.

The other area that's been of real intense concern for me – and I will be visiting this region shortly – is Grande Prairie. That's covering the constituencies of both Grande Prairie-Wapiti and Grande Prairie-Smoky. Again, when I look at their school situation, they have one school in the sort of poor ranking, two in the very poor ranking, and one school in the very, very, very poor school ranking. So I'm willing to stand up here and advocate on their behalf, and I'd like to see whether the government's plans for infrastructure in schools are going to address the concerns here.

The school with the poor ranking is Grande Prairie comp. It had a raw score back six or seven years ago that put it in the sort of fair ranking, but then the school maintenance money required was over $4 million, which is indicating some pretty dire circumstances there. The facility condition index at this point is over 11 per cent. Remember, I said before that you've got under 5 per cent, 5 to 9, and then 10 and over. So that's putting it in the poor ranking.

Then we've got Parkside elementary. Now, this is interesting. You see, when you can see the projected maintenance costs going up between the '99-2000 reaudit and the 2005, you know that there's a problem here. So here we're seeing that maintenance cost estimate going from $803,000, actually almost $804,000, to over a million dollars within five years. Again, that increasing cost is an indication of a serious problem. Their facility condition index: 19 per cent. Now, remember, the last marker they gave you was over 10 per cent. This is almost double the category of bad shape, so that's in very poor shape there.

The other one turning up in very poor shape is Alexander Forbes, and again we're seeing the maintenance costs increase substantially. From '99-2000 to 2005 it goes from – I'm rolling up here – $922,000 to well over $2 million, almost $3 million worth of estimated maintenance costs needed for that facility. Wait for it: the facility condition index is 29.51 per cent. That is triple the cut-off for being considered in bad shape. Triple. Remember, it's 10 per cent and over. This is almost 30 points on that scale.

Then we have St. Thomas More school in Fairview. It has a maintenance cost of over $3 million, again a very bad sign, and its facility condition index: 38.44, which of all the schools I've looked at has been the highest we've seen. That's almost four times the sort of cut-off mark to get into the poor category. It's four times as bad in the poor category.

So there's a lot of attention that needs to be paid to schools in the Grande Prairie constituencies of Wapiti and Smoky. I'm willing to stand up here and talk about it, and I hope that we're going to see some action as a result of this on that infrastructure.

I've also been working a lot on health concerns in the Grande Prairie region. Yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition thought it was important enough that I think his first question in the House was on the situation in health care in Grande Prairie. On his behalf I also tabled a letter that was from the president of the Peace Country health regional medical organization, Dr. Bozdech. He had addressed this to all of the surrounding MLAs that have any affiliation at all with the Peace Country health region. The letter is available as a sessional paper. It is an extremely damning and very pointed letter. People there are very, very frustrated. They just feel that they're not being listened to. They feel that they can't get any action, and they really feel that there's a crisis there. I've heard some of them actually say that they think somebody's going to die because their situation has reached such dire circumstances.

When I look at where we're at with Peace Country health region, we've got a deficit of somewhere in the $8 million to $10 million range. Well, that's pretty significant. They've got incredible staffing shortage pressures, and these are no question impacting service levels. They require 70 physicians and 250 nurses and other health profession staff there, which is really a very difficult number for them to be trying to recruit and retain. They are working on a recruitment and retention strategy, but recruitment efforts have been hampered by a lack of provincial capacity to assess and credential internationally trained physicians. They have requested new acute-care facilities in High Prairie and Grande Prairie, and that was requested officially from the infrastructure minister in April. We'd sure like to know where that is in the lineup.

The expansion of the QE II hospital emergency department is an immediate priority. The maintenance and facility-upgrading needs include replacing roofs, heating and cooling systems, and other building upgrades at facilities throughout the region. So needs for infrastructure maintenance program funding are close to $16 million. What they're telling me is that August was a very tough month for them. They had to close their ICU during the first week of August. Eleven patients were flown to Edmonton for treatment, and that increases the burden on the Edmonton region, of course. They're feeling that September is going to be even more problematic.

I hear an argument back from the minister that, well, this is just normal summertime problems with doctors going on holidays and leaving it short. But, you know, doctors go on holidays every summer, and we do not see Grande Prairie and other health regions in the province closing ICUs, closing mental health beds, closing surgery units, reducing diagnostics. That has just not happened as a regular item in our calendar year. So there is definitely a serious problem here.

I had wanted to particularly focus on Livingstone-Macleod and on Grande Prairie. I think my time is close to up, and I'm glad that I got the opportunity to raise those issues. The effect we're anticipating from this budget I think is not what these two areas were looking for. I certainly hope that they are going to benefit from the numbers that we see in this budget, but I am very much afraid that they are not going to and that those schools will continue to have very high maintenance costs. We will have children working in situations that are not optimal to learning, and I think that's the biggest tragedy of all. Health care: we want it to be there when we need it, and certainly we want it to look after our loved ones. But our future is in our children, and if we have them working in schools that are in shoddy repair, that really is a tragedy to me.

So thank you for that opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I will let one of my colleagues have an opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been listening carefully to and reading through comments made earlier during this particularly interesting debate, which in a general sense refers to the estimates that were approved on Thursday and Monday earlier and also to the bill itself, obviously, that we're debating today at third reading. I need to make a few comments. Some of them I hope will be explanatory and helpful in nature, and others might just present greater clarity on what this bill really contains and is all about.

For example, when it comes to the Department of Education serving kindergarten to grade 12 needs in the province of Alberta, we are clearly asking for $293.3 million through this appropriation supply bill. In listening to some of the speakers – and I'm not going to cite anyone in particular – you would think that perhaps they either didn't read the document thoroughly enough, or they have missed or misunderstood what the points were that were enunciated. So I'd like to just cover that territory briefly if I could.

First of all, we're asking for $52 million, additional dollars, that are going to go out to our 62 school boards to help them face some additional costs with respect to certain aspects of their budgets. I want to again put on the record that their budgets came to us the very last couple of days of June. However, the final, final budgets from our end, in other words our response to that, won't and can't occur until after September 30 enrolments are known, final enrolments. So we have to pick a cut-off date somewhere.

Specifically, today's bill, once it's approved, I hope, will help provide that $52 million of additional monies in the following way: $16.5 million will provide a 1 per cent base instruction grant increase. Now, that is over and above the $3 billion or $4 billion that's already being provided to them. I heard some members trivializing this $16.5 million addition, this 1 per cent base instruction increase, as if it didn't matter. I can tell you from the phone calls and letters and e-mails and so on that I've received directly from some board chairs or trustees, privately or otherwise, that they are very grateful for that because that one alone allows them maximum flexibility on how to utilize it.

I should remind members that we have a renewed funding framework, which is an extremely flexible funding framework that was brought in by my predecessor from Strathmore-Brooks. We worked very hard on allowing maximum flexibility for all of our school boards, and this is one demonstration of that.

Secondly, there's $5 million more for grants provided to students with severe disabilities, and, Mr. Speaker, this is over and above the tens of millions of dollars already provided there. This is an augmentation of that money. We all know that it's very much needed and very much appreciated by the school boards, and we're happy to provide it.

The third category is with respect to English as a Second Language. Here we are providing $2.5 million over and above the tens of millions already going into that area so that those students who are deemed to require or could benefit from an additional year or two years of ESL-type instruction will have it provided to them. To put it slightly differently, we are extending the current five-year cap up to seven years to specifically address those students. That's $2.5 million over and above what's already there to help in that regard.

Then there's $28 million more for the class size initiative. Mr. Speaker, you will know that these estimates contain and this bill in particular contains those augmentations so that with the class size initiative we will help school boards, who are the employers, to hire an additional approximately 800 – 800 – more brand new teachers and put them into the system to help educate our children. That's a tremendous injection of instructional expertise to keep our education system the best in Canada. This bill will help facilitate that.

The other part of this supplementary supply estimates and now the culminating bill that reflects the estimates is with respect to school facilities and operations. This bill, when approved, will help provide an additional $9 million for plant operations and maintenance, or what we call PO and M. That will bring our total PO and M budget up to over $404 million to ensure that the day-to-day operating costs are there for janitorial purposes, for custodian purposes, for routine maintenance, to pay for those types of staffing costs, materials and supplies. I know that the school boards are very pleased with that.

It will also provide $119 million more for the infrastructure and maintenance renewal program. I want to clarify again for the record what IMR stands for. Infrastructure maintenance renewal refers specifically to the replacement of major, big-ticket items such as boilers and mechanical systems, roofs and ceilings, windows, doors, walls, and so on. Floors are included in there as well. So that's the type of thing that IMR funding will look after as differentiated from school capital or school capital major construction projects. That is not to infer that IMR doesn't have some construction associated with it because clearly it does, as we all know.

But to differentiate, it takes us to the next part of our estimates and/or supplementary supply bill which is being debated today: $72.3 million has been allocated "for new schools and preservation projects, modular classrooms and the relocation of portables." I'll just comment briefly on this, Mr. Speaker, because out of that $72.3 million, as I announced today, we will immediately provide the seed funding, or what we call year 1 funding, for 21 additional new school projects across the province, including modernization and preservation projects. We will also help purchase 130 more new, steel-frame, modular classrooms, the state-of-the-art ones that are being built in Crossfield as we speak. Those modulars will be distributed to communities that are showing rapid changes in their student population numbers.

Finally, the $41 million written here will help us cope with capital cost escalations on previously announced projects so that we're not abandoning some of those projects. That's extremely important, and it's important for members here to understand that as well.

With these estimates, once they are approved, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to provide brand new schools, and I'm happy to have this moment to just indicate this to members here because it's directly tied to this supplementary supply appropriation act, this bill. There will be a brand new K to 6 elementary school going into Airdrie through the Roman Catholic separate school division in Calgary. There will be a brand new 5 to 12 school going into Anzac. There will be three new schools going into Calgary: K to 6 in Taradale, K to 4 in McKenzie Towne, and K to 4 in Panorama Hills through the Calgary public board. Those three, by the way, total $44.2 million.

There will be a new K to 6 school going into Chestermere. It'll be called Chestermere Lake elementary core school, and that's through the Roman Catholic school division in Calgary, as well as a new K to 6 school into Chestermere, courtesy of the Rocky View school division. The total monies going into Airdrie/Chestermere, those three projects, will be $41 million.

In Edmonton the Edmonton public school division will have two major – and I stress the word "major" – preservation and modernization projects: one for Balwin school, $11.4 million; one for Holyrood, which will be $8 million. Those are the two receiver schools. They were ranked as the number one priority for that school board in terms of this category. There's a third one for Edmonton Catholic. That's $10.9 million for St. Francis Xavier, a major modernization project.

In Fort McMurray we will provide $9.2 million for the major preservation/modernization project called Westwood community high school through the Fort McMurray public school, and we will provide Fort McMurray public with an additional, separate $1 million in funding to initiate a major study on planning and design of a new junior high school there. Once we have that, we'll know what the total costs will be, and then we'll address that. Similarly, $1 million additional funding is being provided to the Fort McMurray Roman Catholic division to do a similar study and design for a new high school that they require.

As well, this particular bill, once provided for, will help us kick-start several francophone school projects, also an important part of the Alberta advantage. We're very proud of our francophone school system here, and we'll be providing about $7.3 million for a number of their projects.

Very quickly, in Grande Prairie we'll be providing money for three projects that were identified as their number one request. Alexander Forbes through the public system will receive $9 million for major preservation and modernization purposes. There will be a new K to 9 school built in Grande Prairie, I suspect either in southeast or in northwest or whatever. We'll wait and see. That will be through the Grande Prairie Roman Catholic board. That will be $17.5 million. There will be a third one for the Grande Prairie public school board in this case. It will be $14.7 million to build a new K to 6 school in Crystal Lake. So Grande Prairie will benefit with about $41.2 million in total new monies.

Of course, we have one going into Chinook's Edge that will be of particular importance, I'm sure, to Mr. Speaker because I know how passionately and how hard this one was advocated for. This is going in as a new K to 4 school in Carstairs. That will be about $9.1 million.

In Olds we will provide $4 million to the Red Deer Catholic school board so that they can build a new starter school, and it will be up to that board to determine if it suits their purposes to be a K to 4 or a K to 6. They will determine that, working it out with my officials.

In Slave Lake Living Waters Roman Catholic school division with these monies provided for in this particular bill this afternoon will have the seed money to proceed with the new grade 7 to 12 school, St. Mary of the Lake, $13.7 million there.

The East Central francophone education region will receive $6.3 million for a major preservation/modernization project at Racette junior high school in St. Paul.

Stony Plain will receive funding for a new replacement high school, specifically Memorial composite high school, via the Parkland school division, and that one alone, Mr. Speaker, will cost approximately $42.7 million.

Finally, over and above that, with the passage of today's bill we will have about 130 brand new steel-frame modulars constructed. As you know, we must pay for all of those up front and get them out to the school systems and to the areas where replacements are needed urgently because of health and safety concerns or because of crowding or capacity concerns or aging infrastructure concerns or whatever it may be. We'll be doing all this as quickly as possible.

So those are just some of the highlights contained in this bill. We're very proud of that. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there are other projects that need attention as well. That's why in today's press release, which all members I think have now seen, I included a very clear indication of what the next step is going to be. All of what I've just read concludes phase 2 funding: $303.3 million new dollars that we are announcing today to facilitate the construction starts on all of those projects or the go-ahead for design, as the case may be. That's over and above the $207 million new dollars that I announced last September. So over one-half a billion dollars has now been announced within the last 12 months. I think it's a phenomenal commitment to the importance we place on new schools. The schools for tomorrow plan will take it to the next step and go further.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for the next five minutes for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister talked about the schools for tomorrow plan. I'm just wondering if he could elaborate on that somewhat.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to respond?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. I would elaborate on that very briefly to allow others to get their questions in if they wish. The schools for tomorrow plan, Mr. Speaker, will be the most comprehensive plan we've had in this province in seven years. It will reflect everything that we can possibly put into the plan and to the largest extent possible the issues that I've heard from all 62 school boards in the three, four, five different meetings I've had with some of them – at least two or three with every one of them, but some I've had five, six, seven, meetings with. This will reflect growth and development pressures. This will reflect growth management pressures, enrolment increases, enrolment decreases, urbanization issues, population changes, demographic changes, immigrant population growth areas, new subdivisions that are being planned. I know, in talking last night with the chair and superintendent from Chinook's Edge, for example, that some of the areas they are responsible for now are looking at where municipalities are allowing new subdivisions, and they're trying to tailor-make their needs there. So we have to get in front of that, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, and let these school boards know and see in the plan where we're going to reflect their needs.

So in a nutshell those are some of the things that will be coming forward. As I have indicated, the schools for tomorrow plan will be completed later this fall, and it will show on a year-by-year basis in all five years what types of new schools are needed, where they are needed, and why. It will show on a year-by-year basis what types of major modernization, preservation, expansion, rightsizing, and upgrade projects for schools are needed, where and why, and similarly with modulars.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, wherever possible we will do our best to provide the cost estimates to facilitate that so that government can carefully consider, with the school boards' plans, where and how best to apply the monies entrusted to us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister a question, but first off I would like to express my gratitude on behalf of the Holyrood community to the minister for making much-needed funding, $8 million in total, to the school. It'll virtually be rebuilt. It was one of the receiving schools when there were four school closures in the neighbourhood. I appreciate that. It shouldn't have come to that, but I would like to publicly thank the minister for that because we brought up here in this House on Monday night the fact that that school was in dire need of repair. The hon. minister had toured that school I believe in June. I can only say on behalf of the community thank you.

I would at this time like to ask a question regarding the spending announcement and commitment that was made by this same government in 2001 in regard to the Victoria school of the performing arts. It was supposed to have been the Juilliard school of the north. There was $60 million set aside to reconstruct that school. Where does that fit into the future plans of this government?

Thank you.

Mr. Zwodzesky: It's an excellent question, and I'm happy to comment on it because the Premier and I were chatting about it casually this afternoon here. I want the member to know that there is an official committee that's been struck with stakeholders from the groups necessary, and I think they have just about finished whatever their final recommendation is going to be. There is already about $36 million that has been earmarked and is sitting, waiting to be deployed. It's just a question right now, hon. member, of where and how the public school board, which has jurisdictional rule over this decision with us, sees the needs being met and in the best fashion that they want them to be met. Should it be a new school on one corner of the lot with improvements to the existing facility, or should more of it go into the existing facility and some to an add-on? That's the kind of discussions that are going on. Now, the latest I have, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm supposed to be receiving this plan. I'll then review it with the hon. minister of infrastructure and with our associate minister of infrastructure, and then we'll see exactly what the best course of moving forward will be.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you've got four seconds.

Mr. Martin: Four seconds?

The Deputy Speaker: Now you don't have any.

Mr. Martin: Best speech I've ever made.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize on the debate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to perhaps have a few moments to sum up some issues that are concerning my constituents in Edmonton-Calder but probably, on reflection, most Albertans as well because, of course, we still do have the benefit of some degree of equality amongst working people in the province, from Lethbridge right up to the top in Fort Chipewyan. For regular working people there is quite a lot to be had in terms of change with the recent economic boom that has passed over the province but then some serious concerns as well. If we are to try to serve the most people in the best and most equal way possible, then I think that this is a list of concerns that really do concern us all here in the Legislature.

The boom that we are currently enjoying for many people has the effect of creating inflationary pressures on people's budgets. While there might be more job opportunities, certainly people have to work hard or harder than ever to retain the standard of living which they were used to and, indeed, a standard of living that we would expect at least minimally for all of our citizens.

Looking specifically at what those inflationary pressures are and what we can do to alleviate them with the wealth that we have available to us, I would like to draw attention first to utility costs because, of course, our monthly utility bills – electricity, natural gas, water, telephone, and what have you – often together will exceed or be close to the mortgage payments or the rental payments that an individual or family has on their residence. So we've seen a dramatic increase in utility bills specific to electricity, for example, in the past decade or so in the province of Alberta. My main concern here is to try to provide some relief for people.

Of course, we are producing electricity using our own native energy sources: mostly coal, natural gas, hydro to a small extent, and other sources. So it is possible for us to in fact influence that electricity cost if we do put our minds to it, still using the principles of a market system to some degree but also recognizing that electricity is a necessary part of our modern society and modern life. We can't treat it as anything less than an absolute necessity and make sure that people have an accessible and a secure source of electricity that they can rely on that's not going to break their monthly bank account.

So looking specifically at electricity charges, one area that we need to regulate and look much more closely at besides the price is these line charges. People are bringing me their electricity bills – I'm sure other people have the same thing going on in their constituencies – and showing me that even if their electricity is not on – like, perhaps they've been away or at the cabin or they are using solar panels – they're still being charged quite a significant monthly bill for line charges.

I've been investigating this to some degree. Line charges do not fall under much purview or scrutiny. So energy companies are giving these bills, saying that we have these line charges, and it's going by pretty much unscrutinized. So, you know, this is a big problem because, of course, we're building these new line systems all across the province. To some degree we do need to upgrade our lines across the province, but at the same time are we getting the value for our money, and who's paying for those lines?

We had a promise, and I think a reasonable promise, from the previous Energy minister here in this House that, in fact, the utility companies would pay for new line systems being built, especially if those lines might involve sales of electricity outside of the province or even outside of the country. Yet to this date we end up having to foot those bills on our consumer bills every month, and this is creating an unreasonable extra amount of cost on people's monthly electric bills. So I would ask very seriously that during the interim – I know that we are closing down the House here today – we do continue to pursue this and make sure that people are having a fair price bill, that line charges are being examined much more scrupulously, and in fact that people have an affordable and secure access to electricity at all times.

Also, this whole deregulation thing is forcing people somehow into considering contracts. I had, myself, the contract people coming to my door on several occasions. You know, I feel sorry for them that they did. I wasn't mean, by any means, but I certainly was giving them a hard time with it. You know, a lot of my constituents are feeling as though they are compelled to sign these things because of the stories that are being told at the door. I know that everybody likes to say "Buyer beware," but it's the circumstances we created here in this Assembly with deregulation and high prices that are forcing people into considering these contracts when otherwise they wouldn't do so.

I have had to deal with a number of people who felt as though they were coerced into buying a contract and then, you know, going back and having the company come back and rescind that deal. I really feel as though Albertans are being held under the gun to sign long-term contracts when, in fact, that is not necessarily the best way to deliver electricity to individual customers.

There are other concerns in regard to utilities. I think, just briefly, we want to make sure that we have the capacity to maintain electricity and power and gas to people's homes even when they are under difficult financial circumstances. You know, I think that our own power company here servicing Edmonton has improved considerably, but I think that we have to have an independent advocacy group that allows people to submit their problems of being cut off from electricity and from gas. You know, it causes a great deal of hardship. You end up with these bills that are back-billed, and people end up with this debt in the high hundreds or even thousands of dollars owed to the power company. For a person on limited income that's just another hole which they have difficulty getting out of.

Another issue that I think concerns all Albertans in a significant way is education. I've spoken at length about education already, but I want to reiterate the importance for us to make sure that extra fees for students from K to 12 are kept at the absolute minimum. We've been looking at these fees increasing quite significantly, especially in the higher grades, and it's combined with other costs for people on limited incomes that just makes these fees overwhelming. Again, textbooks and things that were otherwise not charged for in years past are now nickelled and dimed onto the parents. If you have more than one child, this can be an onerous, difficult situation come September, this next week. So school fees I think are something that we need to look at closely here to make sure that we're only charging the minimum amount, certainly not charging for textbooks and necessities that people require in order to go to a public school.

The class-size issue I think is something that needs to be looked at. Again, I've spoken on this briefly, but I can see the same thing unfolding, at least anecdotally, at the schools that I had previously taught and at the schools that my children are going to as well. We say that we want to set the limit at 25, let's say, for junior high, but I saw in the junior high where my youngest daughter is going that every single class is over 30: 31, 32 students.

I know that this is not the best circumstance for educating students, and in fact if you can make one single adjustment to a classroom to improve learning for each individual, it's to reduce that class size in an actual level, not in a relative level by averaging out everything across the whole school board but each and every classroom. Certainly, it's not an easy thing to do, but it's the very best thing that you can do for public education and improving students' learning.

Another issue, just very briefly, that I did not speak on is this whole idea of expanding the role and the purview of a community school in any given area. We're talking at length about new schools and new building, and I appreciate the new monies for that, but what we see in more established areas is that the utilization rate makes it difficult for more established schools to maintain themselves on a year-to-year basis. You know, once a school closes in a neighbourhood, it has a ripple effect, which includes real estate values. It includes the capacity for that area to attract new families. It has sort of a hollowing-out effect on an established community.

So I really believe that the value in keeping those schools alive over perhaps some difficult years where there are less students far outweighs the financial gain that you might get on a balance sheet of saving a few dollars by closing the school down. Once you close a school down, dollars to doughnuts, it's never coming back.

So this idea of community schools and somehow accounting for all of the uses that a school is being used for in a community and not just students in seats from 9 o'clock in the morning till 3 o'clock in the afternoon I think is an idea whose time has come. To be able to use schools, the structures, for community events, for night classes, for perhaps a community police station, a health nurse station – there's just a wide range of things that we could use and be creative about and actually count that as utilization of that facility. The communities would appreciate it. We would be able to retain the family atmosphere of neighbourhoods that were built and have gone through one or two or three generations of children and attract families back to those places later on.

You know, at the very root of all of the public institutions and services that we provide here through the provincial government, that I think perhaps we need to look most closely at and with a greater deal of objectivity, is the whole larger issue of how poverty affects education, health care, neighbourhoods, and security through the Solicitor General and Justice, just the widest possible range of endeavours that we seek to influence here through the Legislature.

What I'm seeing through inflation from the boom is that more people are actually being left behind: people on fixed incomes, people working in service industries. The economic boom is not trickling down, as that famously confused theory sort of purports to allow, but rather people are just hitting and falling out of the bottom at a greater rate. So you have the most embarrassing situation of people working full-time and living well below the poverty line, according to a market-basket measurement of what's acceptable to live in any given place, say the city of Edmonton, working full-time with full-time jobs, unable to meet the basic human needs of housing, good food, and all sorts of basic expenses.

Certainly, I think this is where objectivity has to prevail. We can't just rely on the ideology of how people should behave, how people should be responsible for themselves, and how the state must pull back from providing these services, but instead look at it in a basic human way and in a way in which we buoy up and bring up the most members of our society in the most equal way possible because that indeed will pay dividends to all of us in ways that are sometimes unexpected.

Looking specifically at poverty, I think the number one issue has to be housing. If you don't have an adequate place to live, a clean sort of a warm place to live and to hang your hat every night, then all other things fall apart. That's the beginning, the foundation, of a decent civilized life. Here we are attracting and trying to entice thousands of new people to come here and work in the province, yet our housing situation is falling short of meeting the needs of these new residents arriving. You know, this is a big problem that we're only seeing the cusp of right now. It's just starting to become apparent.

I think it's absolutely necessary for us to invest in housing that's available at a reasonable price, for rent or for sale. It will pay dividends in every single other department, as I say, that we are responsible for here in the Legislature because once people are established in a reasonable place that is safe and is good to live in, then they can start to make plans for the future. All other things follow from reasonable housing for every single resident in the province of Alberta. It's not just an economic issue; it's a moral issue, and I hasten to see more coming in the future.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Mr. Zwodzesky: I just wanted to quickly ask the hon. member if he was aware of the comments I made in the House the other day regarding the school fees issue and the fact that that is being looked at thoroughly by the Alberta School Boards Association. They are expected to provide me with a report very soon. I can't remember the date, but I just wanted the hon. member to answer whether or not he's aware of that.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate what is being done. It's like when you're teaching something, you do it seven times and then it happens. Right? It's like teaching my children to eat new food. I appreciate and I did hear the minister's plan for that.

I guess that school fees are due in the next week or so, and that's what I'm looking at. It certainly is part of the annual family thing that you have going on. Nothing bothered me more than to be working in a high school and having the responsibility of adding everybody's school fees together and telling them the news. With some people you could just see their faces turn ashen in colour, and that really, really bothers me. I just want to see it rectified as soon as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the debate.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to third reading of Bill 44, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2) and to consider the effects of the health proposals. When we hear of such incidents as the mother who miscarried in a Calgary waiting room, some will deny that there is a crisis in health care. They will say that the evidence is anecdotal, that this is a necessary cost of living in a high-growth economy rather than one with a surplus of spaces in places that have a shrinking population. While we may not have the full-blown crisis of an epidemic or disaster, we do face a major challenge.

I am reminded that our word crisis comes from the Greek word for decision. We do have a decision on our hands, and we do have choices to make. We have to decide whether the future of our health care system will be based on the needs of people or on the need to make a profit by those who invest in it. We have to decide whether the investment capital we seek for new facilities will be allowed to determine the clientele who get to use the facilities.

When we faced the mad cow crisis, the greatest part of our province's investment went not to the farmers who were hurting but to the multinational processing plants. In health care we must decide whether to focus on the pharmaceutical and insurance companies or on the citizens. We have to choose whether to focus on illness, where the research dollars are, or on wellness, where the gains are less dramatic and more widely spread around. Are we going to continue to be mesmerized by MRIs and other high-tech equipment and research facilities, or are we prepared to invest more in home care, chiropractic, and other therapies that enhance the quality of life? Will our focus be on spectacular surgeries, transplants, ways of prolonging life and averting death temporarily in the name of science, or will we give equal attention to hospices, where those who are facing their end can do so with calm and dignity? We need to decide whether to continue charging our citizens health care insurance fees while advertising that we are tax-free and giving away energy royalties in cash. Fundamentally, we have to decide whether good health is a right all deserve, part of the Alberta advantage, like education, or a privilege to which some by their success and affluence are entitled.

So we have choices on our hands, decisions to make. If we do not face up to this crisis in the Greek sense of thinking and choosing, we will most certainly face a crisis of mass proportions arising out of our lack of thought in the next few years.

Health care is a unique service that does not respond the same as other goods and services bought and sold on the open market. We have grown up with the notion that all goods and services respond positively to being on the open market and assume that health care is the same. But health care is very complex and vastly more important than many other services because it is one that all of us will use at some time in our lives, and it can mean life and death if we don't get it at the right time. In today's world we have come to expect service immediately, and nobody likes to stand in line for anything, especially if we are willing and able to pay for better service. But one would hope that governments would want to care for all citizens according to their health needs: those that need it the most followed shortly by those who are nonemergent, because health care is everybody's business.

As I look at the supplementary supply funding proposals, I find it necessary to mention the effects of the budgeting process and the uncertainty that it creates. Health care spending was stable before 1993. Since then, it's been very confusing and uncertain. Massive layoffs in the mid-90s created today's staff shortages. Cutbacks led to a shortage of beds and equipment and to the deterioration of facilities and uncertainty for all medical staff and for our population. Health care professionals are demanding a well-planned, well-managed public health care system with stable, predictable long-term funding. We need predictable funding levels adjusted annually for population growth, inflation and, of course, the aging population.

I want to stress the real need to change the fiscal year of regional health authorities so that business plans are approved before the provincial health budget is set. Alberta's RHAs, particularly in the rural areas, face an annual financial conundrum. They must reconcile rapidly rising costs with the meagre increases in their budgets, and often those plans are not approved until several months after the fiscal year. The Auditor General has recommended repeatedly that RHA business plans be approved at the start of the fiscal year. The government's response was to replace business plans with three-year performance agreements, but the problem still remains. They never know what they're going to get until the year begins. Without this information RHAs have no way of coming up with a fiscal plan for the current fiscal year. So RHAs, like school boards, should follow a different fiscal year to eliminate the guesswork and to help create stability and certainty and confidence.

As I look at the supplementary funding that is proposed now and the present process that we do have, I ask: why wasn't this money included in the spring 2006 budget? The needs have been apparent. They have been discussed many times and at great length. Given that health region deficits are well over $165 million, how did the ministry decide to allocate only $81 million? What criteria or guidelines were used to determine how much each health region would receive?

I'd like to draw attention to the Palliser health region, with a deficit of $3 million to $4 million. The top three issues for the region are human resources, recruitment of health professionals; infrastructure, space capacity, expansion of diagnostic services, physio services, outpatient services; and improving access. Specifically, I'd like to consider Medicine Hat. Many of the concerns in Medicine Hat would be the same as we are hearing across the province in rural areas. The issues include recruitment of doctors, waiting times and, of course, lack of bed space. The one unique issue that Medicine Hat has is that the pain management clinic is closing in September. I don't know why, and I don't know the circumstances for the closure, but it's a serious decision that has been made.

In addition, there was an issue where a doctor left his practice suddenly, and patients had difficulty accessing records. Certainly, finding another physician was a problem. These particular patients appeared to be high-needs because they required triplicate prescriptions for pain management. Their records were apparently lost, and they had difficulty finding a doctor. That's a sad story, indeed.

Another issue there is the shortage of pharmacists at the regional hospital. I'm wondering how we are going to address that issue. Is it being considered at this time?

Now, as I look again at my own region, the Capital health region, with a deficit of $65 million, the challenges there are similar: the growing and aging population, the emergency room wait times, bed shortages, health professional recruitment and retention. I look at the fact that there are going to be some construction projects which will result in the earliest beds being available by mid-2007, and that is wonderful news. It is great. I'm looking specifically at more beds and the increased ICU capacity at the Grey Nuns. I'm also, though, aware of a shortage of mental health beds, and I don't see anything addressing this great need. But this is a good-news item for my community that fought to keep this hospital, the Grey Nuns, open, and I'm grateful for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mrs. McClellan: I just have a question for the hon. member, and I hope that I heard her correctly in her comments. It doesn't really totally relate to these estimates, but it was used as an example of hoping that the money went to the right places. I thought I heard her say that the majority of the assistance in BSE went to the multinational packers or something to that point. If I heard her correctly, I'd just like to ask her where she got her information. There was a list comprising every cheque that was written under the BSE programs tabled in this Legislature. Even when you take the feeder cattle that were owned by those packers or by a subsidiary of the same name, that comment would not be accurate.

The reason I raise it is because the industry themselves designed these programs. With the exception of the first program, which the federal government refused to take their advice on, on the extension of the 30 days to allow time for adjustment, we accepted their recommendations in all cases. I feel strongly that that industry did yeoman service. There may be a small group of people that think that too much money or that none of it should have gone, which none of it did in the last program. That was by agreement of the industry. I think the majority of people in this province today would tell you that without the support of this government and the quality of the programs that were put in place, we would not have a beef industry, let alone a packing industry, in this province.

So I wanted to make sure that I understood her correctly. I wanted to understand where she got her information. If I could be of any help to you in clarifying that information, I would be pleased to do that.

Mrs. Mather: I appreciate your clarification. I think that probably I was reacting to what I am hearing.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll get you the answers.

Mrs. Mather: I would like that because I will share it with the people that talk to me.

Mrs. McClellan: I'd be pleased to do that.

Mrs. Mather: It's farmers that have been talking to me.

Mrs. McClellan: I mean, I talk to these people myself. I actually live with one.

The Deputy Speaker: This conversation is very nice, but it would be nice if the comments were directed through the chair.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm sorry. I said that I would be pleased to get that information and through the assistance of the hon. minister of agriculture so that she does have this. She said that she was talking to farmers. I said: "Well, I do that too. I actually live with one, even though he doesn't have any cattle."

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. I appreciate that. The chair was feeling a little left out.

Mrs. McClellan: We apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any others on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, on the debate the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to third reading of Bill 44, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). I have been fairly quiet up until this point, although I have said a few comments off the record, I guess, about some of the things that have been going on during the debate of this bill. But I would like to get a few things on the record. It's a great opportunity for us to talk about what we think as government backbenchers about this spending and about what's happening here with Bill 44. So I'll take a few minutes to do that.

First of all, I'd like to say that it's great that we even have this opportunity to come back into session in the summer and have the, quote, unquote, problem of having a large surplus that we have to find some places for and some areas to spend it on. It's a, quote, unquote, problem that many provinces would love to have. We're very blessed and very thankful that we have this opportunity, which is what it really is, here in Alberta to be able to have such a large, unexpected surplus so that we can go back and reinvest in some of the things that are important to Albertans. That is why we're here, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

A few months back or several months back now we talked to Albertans, and we asked them what they wanted us to do with unexpected surpluses. They basically said three things. They said that they wanted us to save some, they wanted us to spend some on needed infrastructure and emergent programs, and then they wanted us to give some back. So, of course, we've done that. We've given some back through the form of the $400 resource rebate cheques. We've certainly put a lot of money away into the different endowments and the heritage savings trust fund. Now we're also spending some.

Let's just talk about that spending because that's the main issue of the bill that we're debating here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. Well, where are we spending? We're spending on education. We're spending on health care. We're spending on agriculture. We're spending on infrastructure. We're spending on the environment and many other important areas. I think it's almost a neat coincidence. If you look into Bill 44 and you look at the dollar figures, you see where we're spending the most money in this supplementary supply bill. We're spending the most on education. I really believe that's appropriate. I really believe that that is reflective of this government. We have made education our number one priority.

I know, Mr. Speaker, from my first three or so years sitting in the Legislature, that it was always health care, health care, health care. Certainly, health care is very important. But to be honest, I think that to build a good health care system, to build a better Alberta, to build the province that we want to build, education has to be number one. It really is reflective of the spending of this government. We spend more on education than any other province, as has been said.

One of the things that thrust me into politics was the need to see education get more funding and to be more emphasized by the government. I started out, as many people did, in municipal politics as a trustee. I was a school trustee for the Wild Rose school division. We would go do our annual, or actually biannual, pilgrimage to our MLAs and ask for more money for education. We would do that a couple of times a year.

I'm sure that the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House – I see him smiling there – remembers me coming to his office several times and asking for some dollars. We always put together a good plan to say exactly how we needed the money and why we needed the money and where we were going to spend the money. Thankfully, pretty much every year that we went to him, we did see some form of an increase in the education budget.

Then I remember that when my predecessor, Tom Thurber, was retiring, I thought: if I really want to help education, I've got to go where the money is. You know, show me the money; follow the money. So I stepped up and let my name stand for the nomination and got into politics, and here I am.

Mr. Speaker, it's an honour for me to be able to support this spending on education. It's an honour for me to be able to stand here and say: "We're investing more in our children. We're investing more in our future. We're investing more in schools, infrastructure, and programs. It's going to make an even greater Alberta." So that's exciting. I believe that if we spend on education, we're going to see less needed spending on health care. We're going to see less needed spending on some of the other social programs that we spend on. We're going to see less of a need for putting money into some of these other departments because it's no secret that a well-educated province is a province that is healthier and is more productive, harder working, and the list goes on and on. So I'm really happy to support that, and I think it's excellent.

We're going to see some new and renovated schools. We're going to see some modulars go into these rapid growth areas. Hearing the minister talk about the schools for tomorrow plan is even more exciting. I know that the school in Thorsby will one day be announced with that schools for tomorrow plan. We desperately need a new school in Thorsby. I've heard some of the other members talk about where they need new schools. I know that in every province in Canada, in every state, I'm sure, in the United States of America you could go around and say: this school needs to be improved, and this one needs to be replaced. Well, that's why we exist as a government, that's why we as taxpayers pay taxes: so those things can be done, so they get done in a systematic and an orderly fashion.

I'm glad to know that I do have a couple of schools coming. I'm very thankful for that. We have a new junior high school coming in Drayton Valley, and we're probably going to have to build it bigger than we originally planned because our community is growing so fast. We're also getting a new Catholic high school, which is much needed. I really love the choice that we have in education. It's so important that we fund all the different levels and all the different aspects of education. It really does make our education system the best in Canada. So that's education.

Health care. Of course, our RHAs are coming to us as MLAs, and they're constantly asking for more money. Why? Because they want to provide better care. They want to be able to do better for their patients, for their constituents, for their clients. Again, as an MLA I'm proud to support that. I know that our RHAs are very well managed. They do a really good job. I believe they're very fiscally responsible. Again, when they come to us with requests for money, they don't just say, you know, that they want to throw money into a black hole. They always have very, very specific places where they're going to put that money, where they're going to invest that money to see a healthier Alberta and a better Alberta.

So that's exciting, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very happy to support the investment in health and education.

If I look at the other priorities in this Bill 44, I see that sort of tied for third and fourth are agriculture and infrastructure. Again, I believe that's really reflective of Albertans. That is reflective of where Albertans want to see money spent by this government. They would like to see our agriculture industry supported because it is, as has been said many times in this Legislature, the backbone of Alberta, and it truly is. The very food we eat comes from our agriculture sector. So you know how important it is to make sure that our agriculture people are supported, that the department has enough money to function properly and to be able to do some of the support programs that they do to keep the agriculture industry not only alive but thriving and growing and adding jobs and doing value-added in our province.

Infrastructure and Transportation. Well, it goes without saying that this is a necessary area to be investing our dollars, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, there are a lot of people moving to Alberta. There are a lot of roads that are getting to that sort of 20-year-plus stage, where they need to be rehabilitated. There are a lot of new bridges that need to be built.

In Drayton Valley we need a bridge really badly. We have a nice bridge there that served us well for about 50 years or so, but it's time for that bridge to be replaced and, hopefully, twinned. We need a bridge. We have about 10,000 cars a day that go over that bridge. Certainly, when that bridge was first built, it wasn't 10,000 cars, I can assure you of that. It might have been 1,000 or 2,000. We've just done some recent traffic counts, and today we're between 8,000 and 10,000 vehicles a day crossing over that bridge into the busy little community of Drayton Valley in Brazeau county. So we do need a new bridge.

I know that we're not going to get it out of this $171 million or this $139 million that's mentioned here in Bill 44, but I'm hoping that as we tick off some of the smaller projects and as we complete some of the smaller and larger and even medium-sized projects in Alberta, my bridge will work its way up the list and will eventually get done. And I can be patient. I can wait for that, Mr. Speaker. I know that we can't do everything overnight. Rome wasn't built in a day. I can make sure that we're meeting priorities. I can make sure that we are doing the most needed areas first, and certainly I do believe that we're doing that. So I think the spending plan that has been outlined here is an excellent one.

I could mention several of the other departments. I think we're doing some great work in the SRD department. We're doing some great work in Solicitor General. We always need more officers. Again, probably the one word that we've maybe heard more than any other throughout this sitting of the Legislature, this summer session, is "more." I think it's pretty obvious that you can always spend more. You know, pretty much everybody can say: "Here's an area that's a need. Here's an area where we can spend more." I think we do try to do that in a fiscally responsible way as the government. We do try to invest more, and when I say more: as much as is possible in every single area.

The thing that is probably pretty obvious, though, is that there really is no right amount. There's no amount that you could say: "Well, this is the right amount. If we could just spend this much, it would be enough." I think of the education system again, and I know that however much money we can give them, they can find ways to better educate and better spend that money for maybe technology or maybe other things. They can make it a better system than it is. So there really is no magic number, but I think that, certainly, as a government we're working towards making sure that we can do the best possible based on our economy and our GDP and the amount that our taxpayers can support and the amount of dollars that we have. So it's good to be sitting here. It's good to be having these opportunities to reinvest some of this money.

Advanced Education. I should have talked about that. Almost $50 million going into there is very good.

You know, Mr. Speaker, what I see here as I look through this Bill 44 is solutions. I know that the Liberal and the ND opposition often point out problems. They often point out shortfalls. They point out some gaps. But they very, very, very rarely offer any solutions. I think that what we have here in Bill 44 is a bill of solutions. It's a bill that is paving the way and planning the way for a brighter future, a better Alberta, a better place for all our citizens, new and old alike, to live and to enjoy.

I'm excited, Mr. Speaker. I know that it's the 35th anniversary today of our party having the privilege of governing, and I believe it's only maybe the halfway point. I think we have many, many more years of governing. I know that today we have given accolades to our Premier. I believe he probably has been one of the best Premiers, if not the best, so far. I have to say so far because there are a lot more great things that we can do in the future. We have nine excellent leadership candidates that are going to work to make this province even better. I really do believe that the best is yet to come, and it's exciting to be in the Legislature, to be a part of it. I'm excited about some of the new visions and plans that will unfold and just really looking forward to being a part of that and helping to build the future of our great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. To the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Last night I had a look at the website of one of the Progressive Conservative leadership hopefuls, Mr. Jim Dinning. There is a list of 27 Members of the Legislative Assembly, of Alberta Progressive Conservative government members, who have publicly pledged their support to Mr. Dinning. I don't see the hon. member's name on that list. Also on this website was a story from the Edmonton Sun. It headlines, "I don't believe in oops budgeting." This is Mr. Dinning. Mr. Dinning appeared before the editorial board of the Edmonton Sun and said this: "I don't follow the adage that has occurred where . . . come November we said: 'Oops, we're off track.' We start by saying what is realistic budgeting." Mr. Dinning goes on to say: "In my view, you don't need a leadership race to fix leaky roofs or to prevent the laying off of teachers. That's governing." He has some concerns – Mr. Dinning – about this habit of this current Progressive Conservative government of what he calls oops budgeting. Does the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar think that Bill 44 is oops budgeting as described by Mr. Dinning in his comments to the Edmonton Sun editorial board earlier this summer? Does he consider Bill 44 oops budgeting?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond?

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I would respond to that question with a question back, and that is: does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar own a mirror? Because if you do own a mirror, my guess is that you look in that mirror from time to time, and when you look in that mirror, you're going to see certain things on your person that may need correcting. You're going to see certain things on your person that may need a little bit of fixing up or a little bit of sprucing up. Maybe you need to comb the hair every now and then or trim the mustache. In that mirror you will see things that you need to fix about yourself. That's called a self-criticism. That's called a self-evaluation.

I think one of the excellent things that's going to happen throughout this next few months in our leadership race is that we will have people from within our own party who will be taking a look at the mirror and saying: "Where can we improve? Where can we make ourselves look a little bit better? What can we do to fill in some of the gaps, comb the hair, trim the mustache so that we can go out there and face the public and be ready for the next four years?"

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar again, I would like to remind the members that under Standing Order 29(2)(a) you still have to direct your comments through the chair. The purpose is not for personal conversations between one another.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I have another question for the hon. member, and this is certainly also in regard to the visit by Mr. Dinning to the Sun editorial board when he stated that – and Mr. Dinning, we have to remember, served as the Provincial Treasurer during the 1993-1997 term – public health and education ministers have a responsibility to sit down with their respective officials and determine the true costs. Do you think there was a meeting and the true costs were determined when the last budget was discussed in this Assembly in the spring, three months ago?

The Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member wish to respond?

Rev. Abbott: Sure. I guess how I would respond to that, Mr. Speaker, is that I would say that, certainly, all of us had opportunity to sit down in the spring and to talk about the monies available at that time, to invest the most that we could into education, into health, et cetera, et cetera. As I mentioned in the beginning of my speech, we've had some extra monies come available, and we now have an opportunity to reinvest some of those, so we're trying to do that in a careful and in a balanced way.

I believe that all of us as MLAs hear from our constituents on a daily basis – certainly on a regular basis through phone calls, through letters, through meetings, when we go out to the public gatherings, et cetera, et cetera, when we talk to constituents one-on-one – and we hear constant feedback. That's why it's not unusual, the moment that you pass a budget, to start tweaking it and to start saying: "How could we make it better? If there are some additional dollars that come in, where should we invest?"

I believe that Bill 44 is a response to that. It's a response to the last several months of hearing our constituents asking us in a very thoughtful and a very educated way, saying: "Here's where we feel that we need to put more money. If you guys get that opportunity, we'd like you to do that." That's why we're here. We're here to represent our constituents. We're here to be responsive to their needs. You cannot predict the future and say that we think they're going to want all the money here, so you have to be doing this on a balanced and on a monthly and yearly basis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the debate.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tempted to say that there aren't enough mirrors around to fix the problem that we have here.

To begin, I want to just talk generally about the budgeting and the budgeting process, Mr. Speaker. I guess Mr. Dinning called it an oops budget, but I would say that part of the problem goes back to Mr. Dinning's time as the Treasurer. I, unfortunately, was here during that time when it became a battle between the massive and brutal cuts. What we forgot at that time, Mr. Speaker, is that clearly we were running deficits in the early 90s that you couldn't sustain over a period of time, but there should have been a balance between the revenues and the cuts because the cuts were severe. They were popular at the time. No doubt about it. The result was that we forgot, frankly, about our social infrastructure, and we forgot about our physical infrastructure, if you like, and we concentrated only on the economic deficit.

Well, for a while that seemed to work okay, Mr. Speaker, because the reality was that we were in a bit of a recession at the time, and people didn't notice it as much. But we were going to come out of the recession. That's why I'm saying it was shortsighted at that time not to find a balance because we're still playing catch-up. The reality is that for our physical infrastructure we need billions, it's been acknowledged, not only in schools – and the previous speaker talked about the infrastructure – but it's happened all over the province. We have a social infrastructure problem that we're still playing catch-up with in terms of health care, education, help for vulnerable people. What is now making it worse is that because of the economic policy of this government we are now in an overheated economy. We hadn't caught up with the physical and social infrastructure from the past, and now the pressures are immense, and this government, frankly, has no idea about what to do about it. That's why we're having this budget.

Now, the reason I haven't spoken before is that we need this money, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to vote against this budget because most of it makes some sense. It has to be there. That's absolutely the case. But I'm saying to you that this is the wrong way to budget. I'm sure I speak back in the past in terms of the way the Lougheed government and even the Getty government budgeted. The budgets meant something. So think about this: we brought in a budget in March, we passed it in May, and now we're coming back and asking for over a billion dollars in August. Now, if this was any other government, you would think – I can see these people screaming about that if it was an NDP or Liberal government, if it was the other way around. "Oh, what bad budgeting."

We can't continue to do this. The budgets we bring in in March don't mean anything. They don't mean anything at all. When I look at this budget that we're bringing through, the supplementary estimates now, in some of the smaller provinces this is probably more than their total yearly budget, Mr. Speaker. So what's the point of the debate in March about the budget, going through all this process, going through all the estimates, when we know that there's going to be another budget coming down in the summer? Maybe there will be another one in the fall.

What I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is out of control. I know that the Treasurer disagrees. She says she's being proactive and being conservative in the estimates. Well, look, if this was any other household budget – I say that either the people who are advising her are incompetent or they're deliberately underbudgeting. How can you be underestimating the price of crude oil by 42 per cent – and we're talking about the five years – and 80 per cent off the mark in terms of your revenues? Now, I recognize that it can't be an exact science, and I recognize that it's difficult to always predict the price of oil and gas, but you can't be 80 per cent off the mark and have realistic budgeting in this province. I look at natural gas prices, almost the same: 39 per cent off the average. This translates into being 65 per cent off the mark for natural gas revenues.

Now, I can understand if maybe one year something happened, but this is over a five-year basis. So I say to the Finance minister: is it deliberate? She says: "Well, we're being, you know, conservative in our estimates. It's better to be that way." I even accept that. But 80 per cent off and 65 per cent off? If that's the best that you can get from the officials, they should be sacked. Or is this a deliberate process that we underbudget, then come back to these and make all these fancy announcements as the Minister of Education did today. Is this a deliberate political policy, Mr. Speaker, to do this? That's the reality of what we're facing at this particular time.

I want to say again about Bill 44 that the money is needed. I've said that already, Mr. Speaker. But part of the problem is that this government does not know how to manage growth. Their economic policies are creating an overheated economy. That's the reality of it. If you're going to move – and now we know it's happening in the Peace River – and your whole economic policy is to get in the tar sands, rip it out as quickly as possible, and move ahead to get into the American market, an economy like that, that is going to overheat the economy dramatically. That's what's happening.

So now we're not providing the backup service. Now we're playing catch-up. Mr. Speaker, that's what's happening. Now we have problems in housing, problems in rents, problems in health care, problems in education, trying to keep up. We're not managing growth, because we're moving too fast. As I say, we cut too drastically in the early '90s, and we're still playing catch-up there. Now we've got an overheated economy.

Then we turn around in a budget, Mr. Speaker, in an overheated economy and say to the corporate elite, mainly in the oil industry: gee, we've got to give you more of a tax break. Tax break? For what? They're doing the best they've ever done. They can't do any better. So we lacked $360 million in revenues that could have gone to some of the same problems that we're talking about in our last budget.

I mean, the whole process is just out of whack. It's out of whack, Mr. Speaker. Again, we'll be having this budget. I guess we're not coming back for the fall because we're preoccupied with the leadership, so we're going to I suppose not deal with this again. Then we'll come back and theoretically bring in a budget in March or pass one, and it probably won't mean anything then either unless the new leader starts to change this around.

It's just a terrible, awful way to budget.

Dr. Morton: I agree with you.

Mr. Martin: You agree with me. The hon. member agrees with me. Well, I'm glad, Mr. Speaker. We might vote for you yet, you know.

The reality is, Mr. Speaker, that this is what's happening. You know, the problem is when we look at housing, this is the impact it's having in housing. We've talked about this. Twenty million dollars the mayor has come and asked for, and the minister of seniors says: yeah, it sounds like a good idea. Well, it was a good idea a while ago. It shouldn't have taken the mayor. It should have been self-evident that we've got these problems. The 2000 count of homeless persons found 3,436 people that they can identify as homeless in Calgary, a 30 per cent increase. There have been media reports of rental increases in Calgary as high as a thousand dollars per month. The average rent in Fort McMurray is $1,500 per month for a two-bedroom apartment.

In the city of Edmonton Boyle Street community service has begun a program. I see it because I live down in that direction. Two hundred to 600 people estimated to be living in the river valley. What's going to happen to them in the winter?

I've received heart-wrenching letters from constituents. I mentioned one before, and I've mentioned Reverend Keith Loewen, who works with the community health centre. We know the welfare rates. We've just had that discussion. It's a double whammy. People on the marginal incomes are getting hit, Mr. Speaker, by a higher cost of living because of the boom, yet we have the lowest rates. What are we doing about it?

The Minister of Education: yes, glad to see some money coming forward today, Mr. Minister, for the schools. But this is over a four-year period. It's desperately needed. Again, Balwin is in my area, and I know that it's definitely needed, but this is still not going to play catch-up.

I know from being a trustee in Edmonton – I'm only going to speak here for Edmonton – that half of our schools are 50 years of age or over. Many of them are crumbling apart. You used Vic comp as an example. Well, they had a plan for the $36 million. I was there. Remember, they were promised $62 million at one time. [interjection] Thank you, $63 million. Okay. We got that right. Now it was down to $36 million that the board had to make because there was $60 million altogether, and now that $36 million won't allow that plan to go ahead. So the $36 million – I know you're waiting for something – but it keeps shrinking, that amount of dollars, because of the overheated economy again. That's the point that we're making. I'm glad that the minister is taking a look. That's what we're talking about: planning over a longer period of time down the way. This should have been self-evident.

That's what my frustration is, Mr. Speaker. It's that we were raising these questions about needing more education money in the spring session, and we were told that we didn't need to do it. Now, the minister says that he didn't know all of the results until he got what was coming in from the school boards. Well, I understand that to some degree, but they were all telling all of us that it wasn't enough. The minister has now acknowledged that it wasn't enough. That's why we have this money here.

The same in health care. I mean, we could have a battle of figures like we did yesterday, but even though the Calgary health region says that there have been some increases in beds, there have been a few but not nearly enough to deal with their population growth. So we're going to keep playing catch-up here, Mr. Speaker – catch-up, catch-up, catch-up – because of what happened before and the fact that we haven't planned for growth.

I would just sort of conclude near the end with this: the problem with this government is their ideology. They now recognize that they have a problem. They're on the Holy Grail of the marketplace, Mr. Speaker. I watch across the way that when you say private, they almost salivate with excitement; when you say public, somehow that's bad.

The reality is that you have to provide for your social – the marketplace works well where it's supposed to work, and I've worked in the private sector much more than you did, my friend. I worked in the financial business. It works well where there's economic competition. It doesn't work well where there are monopoly situations, and it doesn't work well when you're dealing with human needs. That's the reality. But if you're going to push ahead with an economic strategy, Mr. Speaker, that's going to overheat the economy, the very minimum you can do is provide the proper public and social infrastructure. That's where this government has failed, absolutely failed.

Mr. Speaker, it's going to be difficult. I mean, even if we start doing the things that we need to right now in health care and housing to catch up, we can do some things quickly and have to do them quickly, but even if we do start now to change what we're doing to catch up, it's not going to be easy because of the growth that we're having. I see no evidence that the government is going to change their economic strategy, as some people have asked them to do. Even former Premier Lougheed said that you have to control the rate that you're moving ahead. It doesn't make sense. But even if we start to do that, we're still going to have these problems.

Mr. Speaker, I would just urge the government to take a more serious look at this. Let's make our budgeting realistic, and let's recognize that we have an overheated economy. What are we are going to do about it?

I have my timing here, and I realize that I have about 12 seconds left, so I've probably said enough. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions, Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and comment briefly on the issues raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in his remarks on third reading of Bill 44, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). The hon. member seemed to agree that the spending is required, and his criticism was mainly directed at the process of the budgeting. The Minister of Finance and the government in my view are to be commended for responding so expeditiously to a number of dynamic factors which have given rise to the necessity of further spending.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Is the hon. member participating under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the question-and-answer segment?

Dr. Brown: Yes.

The Speaker: So we will get to a question?

Dr. Brown: It's a comment.

The Speaker: You're supposed to sit down.

Dr. Brown: It's a comment.

The Speaker: You're supposed to sit down.
It's basically question and answer.

Dr. Brown: I'm commenting on his speech.

The Speaker: Yeah, but not for five minutes.
Proceed. Let's find a question in this, okay?

Dr. Brown: The factors, as I was saying, that arise and necessitate the fact that we need additional appropriation are the incredible influx of over 90,000 people into the province of Alberta creating new demands and the rising costs of some of the public projects which are under way. There are a number of emerging issues with respect to school capacity and maintenance, with the needs of the regional health authorities, and there's a critical need for the agricultural community, so I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that additional spending is needed.

The fact that we do have these additional, surplus monies now to meet some of these emerging issues with revenue of $1.2 billion higher than estimated in the spring budget means that this is an appropriate time to bring this bill before the House. I would say in particular that the bill is good news for the children of Alberta, with an additional $293 million being spent on important school improvements. It's good news for Albertans who rely on health care facilities, with an additional $262 million, and it's really good news for Albertans, especially the agricultural community, which is suffering in hard-pressed times.

I strongly support the additional appropriation, and I would encourage all members, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, to support this appropriation bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Martin: Is there a question?

The Speaker: Well, I guess it was under the comments side.

So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford under 29(2)(a).

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I promise you I have a question. I'm wondering whether or not the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview shares with me the concern that I have about escalating costs. Wholly $170.8 million of this supplementary supply bill is for escalating costs. At that rate I can imagine us coming back here in March, six months hence, and they're going to be asking for another nearly $400 million due to escalating costs. Can't we budget properly? I think that was your point in your speech, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member to respond.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's precisely the point. I agree with the member from Calgary that there is an influx of people. That's the point I was making. It's the economic strategy of this government to move ahead that fast. They're not providing the backup services, and because we're not, we're going to be playing this role again and again and again. All I'm saying is that we have to look at this realistically in the budget. We probably should be looking at the pace of development, but this is just going to keep going over and over and over again. We're out of control here, Mr. Speaker. That's the point I'm trying to make.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the hon. member, as I did a number of years ago when he was, I believe, the leader of the third party, and he waxed on eloquent at that time as well about the budgeting process and how terrible it was to run a deficit and how the budgeting was then when we were overestimating the revenue, so of course we want to correct that situation. He mentioned about the Lougheed government and the Getty government and how they seemed to be able to budget more accurately even though I remember huge deficits, but the way that things were covered off was with special warrants. I was wondering if the hon. member really prefers the special warrants to what we're doing today. We're coming back before the Legislature. We do not use special warrants like they did back in those days, so the whole Assembly has an opportunity to vote on the expenditure of the money, not just the cabinet.

Mr. Martin: That's a good question, actually, Mr. Speaker. The point I was trying to make . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must now call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to be given the opportunity to rise and join the debate on Bill 44. There have been a great deal of new situations requiring further expenditures since the last time this Legislature was sitting. I feel that this bill will help to deal with these new developments effectively and most appropriately. These new cash infusions will ensure that Albertans continue to enjoy the same quality of life as they had and help minimize the effects of the disasters and emergencies.

One area where this new cash infusion will be of great service is the agriculture industry. Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support the injection of the $261 million to the Canadian agricultural income stabilization, or CAIS, program. This has been a difficult summer for grain and oilseed producers, with the challenges of hot weather and low levels of moisture or moisture at the wrong time making up the growing environment for the majority of the province. This has resulted in the prospect of lower-than-expected crop yields for producers, a situation which is further challenged by high input costs and low commodity prices. The $261 million will be used to index the 2004 fuel and fertilizer costs by 25 per cent and, of course, to increase the 2004 CAIS reference margins by 15 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this addition to the CAIS program recognizes the difficulty that the agriculture industry faces and helps them deal with these hard times. While harvesting is already taking place in many parts of the province, the timing of this support for farmers could not have been better. Not only does this enhancement to the program help these grain producers, which have had less than a perfect growing season, but it serves to help all of those in the agriculture industry. It will also therefore be a benefit to all Albertans.

As we discussed during Monday night's debate on Motion 512, the effects of BSE and the closure of international borders to beef and beef products are still being felt by cattle ranchers and the entire industry. The cash influence into the CAIS program will help to assist producers who are still working to make the industry stronger than ever.

The Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has their finger square on the pulse of the agriculture industry and its needs. It is committed to continuing to monitor and review its programs. I applaud the department for all its good work. I also commend the government for the $261 million increase to assist the Alberta agriculture industry, a much-needed enhancement in reflection of this summer's difficulties.

The increase in spending on Alberta's infrastructure is yet another good example on how this bill will affect Albertans. With $303 million being allocated to increasing the operating support to schools for maintenance and renewal of new schools and to address the cost escalation of projects already approved, Alberta schools will be well prepared for starting the school year.

Mr. Griffiths: It's about the children.

Mr. Danyluk: It is about the children.

Bill 44 also allocates funding that will be used for our provincial highways. Thirty six million dollars has been allocated for provincial highway rehabilitation, $12 million for highway systems and safety, as well as $12 million for strategic economic corridor investment initiatives to deal with increases for highway construction projects.

5:00

As well, $308 million will be used to create a new Edmonton remand facility, replacing the old facility which is nearly 30 years old and much too small to house all the inmates that are held there now. With Alberta's growing population this new remand centre is greatly needed. It has been estimated that by the year 2010-11 there will be approximately 1,200 inmates to be housed. This new remand centre will have a capacity to hold 2,000 inmates. Money well spent, Mr. Speaker.

These are just some examples of how Albertans' money would be put to good use through the adoption of Bill 44.

Recently Statistics Canada reported that last year Alberta's population grew by more than 90,000 people – 90,000 people. This unprecedented growth presents a great deal of challenges for us as legislators. While the opposition feels that members on this side of the House have not predicted Alberta's needs, well, I have to disagree. How one predicts the future, as members across the way seem to think the government should be able to do, I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, this government does not have a crystal ball, yet it has done a commendable job of getting funding to areas that need it based on recent developments. Our mandate as elected officials, all of us on both sides of the House, is to sit and debate these new situations and respond to our constituents' issues as they arise. While we could not have predicted some of the situations that have arisen over the summer, it is our responsibility as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to deal with them. That is what this government and our Premier have done by calling this summer session.

I stand today in support of Bill 44, the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates, and urge all of the members of this Legislature to do the same. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I then recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak in third reading to Bill 44, the appropriation supply act, and I believe it's called number 2, if I remember right, because it's the second time this year that the government has come back to us asking for more money. There are actually some good things in here. Certainly, I talked yesterday and many members talked about education and how important it is that we are giving more money to education.

I lamented on and on about the lack of foresight and why three months ago we should have been able to predict this. In a question a minute ago to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I mentioned again that some $180 million, I think, of this supplementary supply bill is actually for cost escalations. You know, the cost escalations are not a surprise to anybody. We've all seen this for the last couple of years. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation knows about this. Some of the other departments that are facing cost escalations are all aware of this, yet for some reason we weren't able to predict this three months ago and include it in the main budget estimates. I have trouble with that. I am completely convinced that three or six months from now we're going to be back here again, and you're going to be asking for $400 million or $500 million further for cost escalations that for some reason you weren't able to predict today when we dealt with this bill. I find that very frustrating, and I know that most Albertans find that very frustrating. Most Albertans don't have the opportunity to just simply write themselves a cheque if they spend too much money, yet that's in effect what this government is able to do.

Now, I mentioned that there are some good things, and I do want to point out, aside from the money for education, a couple that I have no problem with, despite the fact that I have a problem with the process. In the area of Community Development I see that we're spending $15.537 million to fund site reclamation at various historic sites and provincial parks. I'm on the record many times, Mr. Speaker, as being in support of provincial parks. In fact, I don't think we do enough for provincial parks, and I believe that at both the federal and the provincial levels there is a distinct methodology at work that's actually trying to deter people from using the parks and keep them away from the parks. That bothers me. I think we should be doing everything within our power as a government to encourage people to get into the parks and use them more as opposed to trying to discourage use of the parks. So in this case we're spending some money on cleaning up parks and improving parks, and I am all for that.

Certainly, one of the ones that I wanted to applaud, and I recall doing this last year, is Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Mr. Speaker, $2.5 million dollars for the southern Alberta disaster recovery program relating to flooding June 14 to 16 of this year and a million dollars to the city of Edmonton relating to flooding on the 15th of June this year: now, this is what supplementary supply is for. This is unpredictable. You people across the way were telling us the other day, when we were talking to the Energy minister about the blackouts on July 24, that you can't predict lightening strikes. You can't predict lightening strikes, and certainly we know that you can't predict floods. So this is where I have complete understanding when you come to us and say: we need $3.5 million to look after some flooding that took place in June because of storms that, clearly, nobody could predict. That's what supplementary supply is for. Nobody in this House could reasonably expect that you would know that those storms would take place.

There are other examples in here. There's disaster assistance for farmers. Now, depending on how you define disaster, I suppose, certainly I know many small-business people that would argue that they're facing some of the same hardships caused by some of the same factors that were cited when the government declared a disaster for farmers. Specifically, I'm thinking of a higher Canadian dollar. There was another factor that was cited in the press release too, and I can't recall what it was. There are factors that contribute to the disaster in agriculture, in farming, that certainly are relevant and contribute to great hardship in other areas of the economy, particularly small business, home-operated business, and so forth. So others might want to question how a disaster is defined. Again, something like that constitutes a legitimate reason for the government to come back to this Assembly and ask for more money only three months after a budget has been passed.

I do want to follow up a little bit on some of the comments that my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar was making a few minutes ago when he was referencing Jim Dinning, the former Treasurer of the province of Alberta, and the number of members of this Assembly who have publicly declared their support for him. In reference to the oops budgeting that was discussed in an Edmonton newspaper article back on the 29th of June, I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, because when I go through this list of government members, some backbenchers and some who are currently sitting as ministers in this government, not one of them got up in the past five days to speak against this oops budgeting that we're dealing with here this week. Not one of them.

I see that the Member for Calgary-Shaw is one of those who has publicly declared her support for Mr. Dinning, and she certainly hasn't spoken out against the oops budgeting that the current government has saddled this province with. The Member for Calgary-East is another one. The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill: well, he did get up and speak a few minutes ago, but certainly he didn't speak out against the oops budgeting. In fact, he actually spoke in favour of the oops budgeting. Yet the gentleman who this member is supporting to be the next Premier of this province doesn't like oops budgeting, and he says he will not oops budget. So, Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, you might want to have a discussion with your preferred candidate and just find out whether we're going to oops budget next year or not if he happens to be the successful candidate.

The Minister for Human Resources and Employment is one who has publicly declared his support for Mr. Dinning, yet oops: guess who's asking for more money in Bill 44? The same minister who has publicly declared support for a fella who is portraying himself as being fiscally disciplined and doesn't believe in oops budgeting. Oh, would you look at this, Mr. Speaker? I'm not terribly surprised, but we also have the Solicitor General publicly declaring his support for the candidate who is considered to be the front-runner to be the next Premier of this province and who doesn't believe in oops budgeting. That same Solicitor General has asked in Bill 44 for a total of $13.6 million. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development happens to be on the list as well of those who have publicly declared their support for Mr. Dinning, who doesn't believe in oops budgeting, yet for some reason, oops, $251 million required for SRD.

Moving down the list I see, oh, Advanced Education, another minister of this government, another minister who has asked for some money because there was an oops, an oops to the tune of $49.2 million, yet he is publicly supporting the man who wants to be the Premier of this province and doesn't believe in oops budgeting. It's going to be a very interesting year in here next year, I'm going to suggest, given this . . .

Dr. Brown: Point of order.

The Speaker: We have a point of order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, please.

Point of Order

Third Reading Debate

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has digressed on a tangent to the contents of this bill, and I wish to point out page 533 of Marleau with respect to debate on third reading. It says as follows: "Debate on third reading is designed to review the legislative measure in its final form and is strictly confined to the contents of the bill." It is a stretch to say that the contents of this bill relate to who some members of the government side might be supporting in a potential leadership campaign that may be coming up. So in my view it's irrelevant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on this point of order, please.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that in probably every second sentence I'm referencing the bill and the amount of money that is being asked for in this bill. In several instances, in fact, I've cited what the money that's being asked for in supplementary supply is to be directed towards. So I think that I'm well within the confines of third reading in my comments.

The Speaker: So I take it, then, hon. member, just so I can be assured, that when I come up with my ruling with respect to this matter, we're not going to have just a listing of 25 members' names with comment, but we're going to just tie it all together in a final point that you're going to be making?

Mr. R. Miller: I'm working towards pulling it all together.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will attempt to work through the remaining names on the list a little more expeditiously so that I can tie it all together and then, hopefully, allow somebody else to speak.

There are two more ministers that I wanted to reference: the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, whose department is asking for $171 million in oops budgeting, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Well, actually, I'm not going to mention him because a good chunk of what he's asking for is, in fact, as I suggested, for legitimate disasters. However, several other members of this government have yet to speak against the oops budgeting that has taken place here today.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but with sincere regret I must now interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. In accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a lead-up to the motion that I will present very shortly, I want to briefly offer a sincere thank you to all members of the House for their participation in this important summer session, and a special thank you to you, Mr. Speaker, and to your Deputy Speaker and our table officers for the enormously great work that you all do.

Today, as it turns out, will be noted as an even more historic day than was May 18 since it will be recorded as our Premier's last sitting day inside this Chamber as our leader and our Premier. When the Assembly next convenes, Mr. Speaker, it will be with a new Premier, perhaps even a new cabinet and a new administration and so on. Therefore, on behalf of myself as Government House Leader and our Deputy Government House Leaders from Calgary-Glenmore and Medicine Hat and our entire caucus, we thank our current Premier once again for his enormous work on behalf of all Albertans. It's been a pleasure and an honour, Mr. Premier. Let me just end that by saying, "Thank you, Ralph."

Now, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Government Motion 26, agreed to on Monday, August 28, I move that the Assembly stand adjourned.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 26 the Assembly adjourned at 5:17 p.m.]
