Another aspect of this is applying those values and attitudes to modelling work ethic because when you talk to an employer and you ask him how come your kids lose their first jobs, it's not because they can't read, and it's not because they can't write, count, or communicate; it's because many generally don't have work ethic. They don't show up on time. They don't care about the quality of work that they do. They don't care how many tools they break, how much material they wreck. You know, things like work ethic are so important. Those are the kinds of things that I want to work together with my colleagues to move forward.

The business plan I'm presenting today outlines the decisive and clear actions that our government will take and is taking on the postsecondary front to achieve our vision. The business plan highlights several priorities for Advanced Education. The A Learning Alberta review we undertook last fall involved thousands of Albertans in designing a policy framework to guide the strategic direction of advanced learning for our province. It's my expectation that this policy framework will be released soon. I want to say to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that ever since he talked about the black holes yesterday, I've been looking for them. I can tell you that I haven't found any, and I don't think I will.

One specific outcome of the review will be a new tuition and affordability framework for postsecondary education. Yes, that framework will include a new tuition policy, but it will also include measures that address all of the costs that students face in going to school: the cost of books, the cost of living, the cost of relocating from rural areas and small centres. Tuition, of course, is only part of the cost that students face.

One thing that I'm convinced of: it shouldn't be cheaper for a student to go overseas than to study where they were born. That's something that we really need to look at. But at the same time there is a shared responsibility for education on kids and partnerships that involves all of our society: parents, students, government, and employers, who profit from a well-educated workforce. In the end I think that advanced education is probably the best bargain on the planet.

We will also continue with our implementation strategy for the Access to the Future Act, our government's flagship legislation last year. This legislation provided the framework for investing in endowment funds for postsecondary education as it outlined our government's commitment to affordable, accessible, and high-quality postsecondary education. Again, so much of that we owe to my predecessor.

This year emphasis will be placed on the needs of the diversity of communities, cultures, and traditions and their A Learning aspirations and abilities within the province. As an example, collaboration with stakeholders to improve First Nations, Métis, and Inuit learner success will be a priority. Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure that we really have done a very good job of listening to the voices from within of our First Nation and Métis and Inuit communities. Maybe we need to learn to listen closer to their aspirations and then fan the flame.

There will also be a focus on expanding regional and community access through the expansion of a degree-granting capacity within the system, and I can say that there's a lot happening on that front.

We will leverage technology to better meet the needs of learners. As an example, we will continue to work with our postsecondary institutions . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we only have about three seconds left. It would really help the committee if you would move the estimates that you're presenting.

Mr. Herard: I did move them in my very first statement, sir.

The Deputy Chair: You did?

Mr. Herard: Yes. But I'll do it again if you'd like.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. The table officers didn't hear that part. We will consider that you have moved.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

3:30

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. minister move the estimates at the beginning of his presentation, so I can vouch for that.

Much to talk about. Much to talk about. Hard to know where to begin. Of course, much of what we are talking about we were talking about here a year ago, so I'm presented with the situation of having a brand new minister and many of the same old problems that we were talking about here a year ago. Some progress has been made. Some progress has been made through the Learning Alberta framework, which I was honoured to take part in at the invitation of the previous minister, and I thank the previous minister for that. The progress, though, seems to have happened in fits and starts. I know that the Learning Alberta process was all-encompassing, and I wouldn't expect that everything would be solved overnight anymore than I would expect Rome to be built in a day, but we do have some problems that need to be addressed and need to be addressed in a timely – dare I say urgent? – fashion.

The postsecondary system that we have in the province of Alberta is not accessible enough, it is not affordable enough, and by so many standards of measurement it is not nearly excellent enough. Now, far be it from me to suggest that the system is bereft of excellence. The previous minister, I, and all people present in this House today know that there are many pockets of excellence in the system, driven by very, very committed men and women who strive for excellence, strive for greatness. Thank God for those people because if it weren't for them, I fear that this whole system would be mired in mediocrity. There's too much mediocrity in the system as it is.

The current minister referred a number of times in a number of ways to awakening the voice within, hearing the voice within. I think another way of expressing that is: creating the conditions to awaken the passion within each person for their calling, the thing that they were perhaps meant to do, destined to do, if you believe in that, and then to fan those flames to encourage that, starting at as young an age as possible so that the fire is burning strong by the time they get to the postsecondary level. But, you know, sometimes those fires can have water poured all over them by an unresponsive, inflexible system, and that problem, as the minister knows, exists in this province today.

The issues are these in a nutshell. The lack of a tuition policy. I heard that the new affordability policy and the new tuition policy which will be part of that are coming soon. I would urge the new minister to attach a date to that. I was after his predecessor for an entire year to try and get a date to that; I don't have one yet. My latest understanding is that it will be sometime next month. I'd like to know precisely when. You know, you've been working on this one long enough now, and you've got a whole army of helpers up there in the gallery. You've been working on this one long enough by now that I think you should be able to give me a date, and I would urge you to do that. That's one issue.

Another issue, which should be covered in the affordability policy as well, is the ever-increasing debt burden on students. The minister made reference to great education as still being the single factor that is best capable of lifting someone out of poverty. But if we're going to price it in such a way and assist those taking part in it in such a way that they're going to come out the other end with a debt equivalent to a small mortgage, that's one heck of an anchor to tie around their necks at the age of 21, 22, 25. That prevents them from fully participating in society as a fully productive member of the province of Alberta once they graduate. They hold off on buying houses, they hold off on starting families, they hold off on creating the next generation of Albertans, they hold off on reaching their full potential because they've got great big, fat student loan debt to pay off, payments to make every month.

Other issues. The lack of space, insufficient space to accommodate the students who want a postsecondary education in this province and the lack of a published plan for expanding the system. British Columbia has such a plan, and when you publish a plan, when you've got it in writing, it helps to stick to it. Now, the minister referred to spaces or learning opportunities, and he suggested that it doesn't matter what you call them, whether you call them spaces or seats or learning opportunities or Bill or Bob or whatever. Well, it does matter. A seat in a classroom is different, maybe not necessarily better, depending on the context, depending on the circumstance, but it is different from an online learning opportunity, from a distance learning opportunity. A seat in a classroom at a university or at a lab table at a university or at a classroom at a college or at a polytechnical institute is radically different from a literacy learning opportunity. That literacy learning opportunity, granted, is absolutely essential if the person needing that opportunity is ever going to have a shot at occupying a seat in a university or college classroom.

But we have to remember as we talk about expanding literacy programs and tackling that devil and doing all kinds of other things, that we still have a space crunch, an access crunch in our institutes of higher learning, an access crunch that is more acute in Calgary. You know, a recent report by the University of Calgary indicated that the ratio of spaces in Calgary is 461 for 10,000 residents. In Edmonton it's 574. Now, I'm not saying Edmonton has too many, Mr. Minister. We fully support Edmonton getting even more, but clearly Calgary needs to catch up, and I hope the minister will look into this.

One way in which the minister could look into this – and I would urge him to give me a response to this too – is to tell me and this House a little bit about what he sees for a new undergraduate-focused university in Calgary, such as Mount Royal university. When will the minister meet with the president of Mount Royal university – or Mount Royal College, I should say; I'm getting ahead of myself – and other members of the Mount Royal College board of governors to assess their proposal?

The Campus Calgary proposal brought forward by Calgary's public postsecondary institutions in coalition goes well beyond the Premier's promise for increased access. It calls for almost 20,000 spaces – not learning opportunities, spaces, seats to put bums in in front of a desk – by the year 2010. Are those institutions wrong in their assessment of the demand? I wonder if I could have an answer to that question because if the minister or the government thinks that they are, then that's a very key piece of information for all of us to know, for this House to know, for the opposition to know, for the institutions themselves.

A published plan for expanding the system with real targets and real detail as to what's a seat, what's a learning opportunity, what's the difference, where it's going to be, when it's going to be there: that would be extremely helpful to everybody in this province.

The rationing of space is another issue, the rationing of space through two main methods: high costs, which I've referred to already, and artificially high entrance requirements. Both in terms of the dollar amount that it costs to get into college or university in this province and the marks required coming out of grade 12, we have set those bars so high that that is how we are screening out people who absolutely, Mr. Minister, absolutely belong in postsecondary education. You know, the previous minister and I have had this conversation between ourselves and with others in various groups, and we've both heard and we've both said that the awful truth of the matter is that most of us in this House and most of the faculty members in our postsecondary institutions could not get in today with the marks that they had coming out of grade 12. That is an issue that must be addressed urgently. That needs a plan.

Widespread public perception that cost is a barrier – widespread public perception that cost is a barrier – and the government's steadfast, ongoing refusal to accept that that public perception is reality to the public and to address that by rolling back tuition. Look, it's as simple as this: if you were running a business – and I bring up this analogy because so much of the ideology behind this government's handling of postsecondary education in the province of Alberta over the course of the last 13 years comes across as a market-driven approach to a public good education. There. I'm going to use the market-driven example so you guys over there get it. Okay?

If you were running Wal-Mart and the public perception was that your prices were too high, you'd either cut your prices, or you'd go out of business. Now, the only sane response, in my opinion, to a market-driven approach to a public good like public postsecondary education is a market response. In other words, if these issues are not addressed and are not addressed quickly and are not addressed effectively, then the students and parents of this province should vote with their feet and go to college or university in another province.

Insufficient and inequitable base operating funding. We've been on about that now for months and years. There are inequities in the funding formulas, and there just simply isn't enough money in base operating funding for colleges, universities, polytechnical institutes to count on a reliable, sustainable, and sufficient amount of money to pay the staff, keep the roofs from falling in, keep the lights on, keep the furnaces going in the wintertime.

An aging faculty and worldwide competition for top faculty talent: that's a very, very real issue. We stand to lose an awfully high percentage of our faculty in this province over the next five to 10 years. Oh, by the way, so does everybody else. Where are we going to get the replacements from? We'd best start competing with the best in the world if we want the best in the world. That's going to take money, and that's going to take better infrastructure, and that's going to take a far deeper and more real commitment to public postsecondary education than we've seen thus far.

An underappreciation of the importance of support staff to the quality of education and research at postsecondary facilities.

A failure to capitalize on the potential of the access to the future fund by capitalizing the fund up to its maximum. I mean, the fund has a cap on it. As I've discussed in this House a number of times, I fundamentally believe that that was a wrong decision, to put a $3 billion cap on the fund to begin with. The whole purpose of an endowment fund is to be able to continue to put money into it on an ongoing basis and, hopefully, on a regular basis and let it grow and grow and grow because the more it grows, the more income it produces to reinvest in excellence in postsecondary education. So, for instance, if the Alberta Liberal plan had been followed, with the surplus that exists this year, that access to the future fund would already have more than the $3 billion cap in it.

Now, this government has made a promise, a commitment, an undertaking to have that fund topped up to the $3 billion mark within three years, but you know, you're a long way – a long way – from getting there. We're at the end of year one, going into year two, and there's not even a billion dollars in there; there's $750 million, and there's not a dime committed to it in this budget.

Oh, I know the rumours are going around, the buzz. The grapevine is buzzing like crazy: oh, we'll put more money in in the third quarter, off-budget spending. You know, that's like waiting for grandma to die and leave you her estate before you start saving for your kids' education. That's like counting on winning the lottery to do it.

Since the minister pointed out that in his ideological, philosophical world there absolutely is to continue to be a partnership here between the student and the state and private enterprise in the funding of that student's education – and I think parents are part of that mix, too, in the minister's world – then I would suggest that the minister and the Finance minister would set a very, very good example for parents in this province by setting up a regular, sustainable contribution just like you do for your RSP, where you have money coming directly out of your bank account and into your RSP every month on the 15th and the 31st. Right? Do that to the access to the future fund, and take the cap off, and let it grow because you're saving not for any one individual's particular education, although I would presume that as this fund grows, it's going to fund a lot of scholarships and bursaries.

It should, but it should do a lot of other things too. It has the potential to move mountains and make the postsecondary education system in this province the best in the world in all aspects, whether you're talking postgraduate, apprenticeship, literacy, whatever it is. The best in the world: not just a boast from the government benches but reality, truth. The best in the world if you take the cap off.

You know, the other problem that we have, the other ongoing issue that we have that we absolutely must address is the second lowest participation rate in the nation. Close to 80 per cent of jobs require some form of postsecondary education, yet only about 40 per cent nationally of high school students go on to university or college. Looking here on page 77 of the business plan under performance measure 2.c, "participation rate in post-secondary education – Albertans aged 18-34," I see that the actual for last year was 19 per cent. Let's round it up to 20. Eighty per cent of the jobs require postsecondary education, and 20 per cent of our students are getting it. Mr. Chairman, that's a huge problem. The projection is that by 2008-2009 we'll try to squeeze that up to 23 per cent. Well, you know, you haven't set the bar high enough. You need to do more.

This is important. This is very important. This is very important to a number of people who are already declared candidates in the race to replace your current leader. This is important to them because they know that it's important to the people of Alberta. They know that it's important to the mothers and fathers of Alberta. They know that it's important to the students of Alberta, students of any age. They know that it's important to the adult learners and the lifelong learners in this province and to future generations. This is our ticket out of dependence on a nonrenewable resource into a renewable resource economy, where that resource is knowledge. That knowledge can bring us unimaginable possibilities. For one example, we could lead the world in alternative energy technologies driven by the money that our nonrenewable resources produce and the knowledge that we can grow from an excellent postsecondary education system.

I mean, that's just one example off the top of my head. It could be any one of a number of things. Dream. Dream big. We live in a province, perhaps the only jurisdiction anywhere on this planet, that actually has the potential right here, right now to make it happen. But you've got to take the chains off. You've got to start thinking differently. You've got to start thinking imaginatively and innovatively and creatively. I'm not sure that I see it in here. I see some baby steps – and that's good – but we need to move quickly, more quickly than we have been.

There are a number of things that have become mired down. I don't know whether it's departmental bureaucracy or whether it's a cabinet and/or caucus that hasn't been all that open to some of the ideas that have been expressed over the last year or what it is, but things aren't moving along quickly enough. An innovative guy like Harvey Weingarten, the president of the University of Calgary, who wants to innovate, who sees, for instance, the digital library as a keystone, a cornerstone of that innovation, has plans to spend $710 million on innovative capital projects for the U of C and can't get but, I think, $156 million from us, something like that, so he's got to consider borrowing the rest. Dr. Weingarten is just one example.

I've been talking to a number of stakeholders. They see the possibility of some innovation with this new minister. I hope you're up for it.

Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much. I think that the Member for Calgary-Currie is a good example of how astute my constituents are.

Mr. Taylor: Why do you think I live around the corner from you?

Mr. Herard: Exactly.

I do agree with a lot of the things that the hon. member says. I would say that there's no question that we're going to do much better working together on this than working agin each other, for sure.

With respect to the debt burden, I agree that that needs to be looked at as well. Now, if I gave you a date of releasing that report, I'm sure that some people would say that I'm giving you an unfair advantage because you're my constituent. The truth of the matter is that I don't know what the date is. If I did, then I would consider, of course, giving it to you. The fact of the matter is that the reports are being compiled as we speak. I'm told it's weeks, not months – weeks – and that's about the best that I can do.

With respect to Mount Royal College, I have met, of course, with their president on a number of occasions, and we've talked about many, many different ways of achieving what they're trying to achieve. I think he's doing the right thing right now. You know, you can't just go poof, and you're a university. There are so many things that need to add up with respect to quality, with respect to the library, with respect to all of the infrastructure that's required, not only that but the credentials of the instructors, and so on and so forth. They are doing the right thing, and once they've sort of jumped that particular hurdle, then I think that we can look at this and be able to talk about this a lot more. But first let them jump that hurdle.

I agree with the hon. member that what is probably a really traumatic experience is if someone has worked their buns off through high school only to find themselves 2 percentage points below where they need to be to get in. I agree with the hon. member that that is a very destructive kind of experience for somebody. I think that we do need to look at giving them different kinds of access. If they can't get into this particular program, at least don't turn them away from postsecondary. Let's see if we can find ways of providing access in a different way.

You know, at the beginning of the year you've got all these students that are coming into our universities, colleges, and technical institutes. Some that are, in fact, in the system already, repeating courses, are essentially blocking access to some of these kids coming in. How much of that is there? I've asked the students' union that question, and they tell me that there's really no information system to provide that. I'd like to know how much. I know that both my kids had problems in their first year. That's why I was talking about independent, lifelong learners. They need to have the values and attitudes to in fact have the right mental and spiritual tools to get the job done. So there are many different kinds of access barriers, and certainly the high bar of the marks is one of them.

With respect to the perception of the high cost of postsecondary, the hon. member asked me what I would do if I was running Wal-Mart. If it's a perception problem, I would probably use the tools of his former profession. You know, I probably might use QR 77 and do a lot of advertising or something. If it's a perception, then you need to communicate. If it's a reality, then it's a different action.

Now, with respect to the access to the future fund, the member is quite correct with respect to the total that's in there now. Of course, this is the first year that we're going to have some income to disburse, about $45 million out of that particular fund. Our Premier has committed that the fund will be $3 billion within two years, and I think he's got a good record of keeping his promises.

We will be working collaboratively with Human Resources and Employment to address the critical skill shortages resulting from the strong economic growth in this province. In this regard we will be co-leading the initiative of building and educating tomorrow's workforce with Human Resources and Employment. This initiative has been designated a top provincial priority by our government. We intend to enhance Alberta's people capability by better informing, attracting, developing, and retaining skilled workers and also by providing Albertans access to affordable and high-quality educational opportunities. It's about both training and education.

So these are some of the key strategies in the next business plan cycle.

I would now like to outline for you the investments that our government has planned to make to allow us to realize our vision of Alberta becoming a true learning society. Inevitably we have to talk about dollars. I've met with my communications professionals to talk, first, about the benefits that the dollars are buying and not so much about the dollars initially because Albertans don't relate to whether or not we're spending $50 million here. You know: is that the right amount? Is it too much? Is it too little? That doesn't really tell them very much. So one thing that I will try and do is make sure that we communicate the benefits that the investments are producing rather than simply the investment because it really doesn't mean too much to them.

This year our government has once again made advanced education a top priority. The proposed 2006-07 budget for the Ministry of Advanced Education is a record 19 per cent increase over last year, the largest single-year increase in advanced education spending in Alberta. The total investment in advanced education will reach $2.2 billion in 2006-07. This increased funding shows that our government is committed to achieving our vision. Is advanced education a priority? You bet it is. Is it fast enough to satisfy my neighbour? I'm not so sure that it is. Our focus on increasing access to postsecondary programs, making postsecondary education affordable, and increasing the quality of the system will continue beyond 2006-07. Total spending on advanced education will grow to $2.5 billion by 2008-09.

Those are inputs, and they're investments, but that's only one aspect. We need to find ways to improve productivity as well. We can't keep stretching the rubber band. You know, we've got a pretty good track record of doing that to ourselves in this government when you talk about double-digit increases to doctors, nurses, teachers, and so on at the same time as you lose productivity on the other side. You've got a rubber band in the middle, and you can't keep stretching it because that leads to unsustainability.

One of the things we need to do is see if there are ways of being more efficient. Our budget for 2006-07 includes $1.4 billion to support the operations of postsecondary institutions. These operating grants will increase by 6 per cent each year for the next three years. Now, that should allow our institutions to make important strides in their plans to improve learning outcomes and to catch up on some things that maybe they've had difficulty doing over the last few years.

It also includes $273 million for capital grants to postsecondary institutions that will be used to support new and ongoing capital projects. Over the next three years over $1.1 billion will be spent on postsecondary facilities. We just heard from the hon. member that it looks like Calgary alone could use almost all of that. These funds will enable construction, expansion, and upgrades for various facilities, including the University of Alberta centennial centre for interdisciplinary sciences, phase 2 of the Calgary Bow Valley College expansion, the University of Calgary's digital library, which is part of the Alberta-wide Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library initiative, and capital projects at Grant MacEwan College, Red Deer College, the University of Lethbridge, Lakeland College, and others.

You know, right now the cost of construction is going up about 1 and a half per cent per month, and some people say even more than that. That's 18 per cent a year. Return on investment income is about 6 or 7 per cent. So what is the cost of waiting? We need to study that, and we need to make decisions with respect to that for all Albertans. As I said before, what better investment than investing in the people of Alberta?

Capital funding is crucial for improving postsecondary access, so is funding more spaces. In support of this, $183 million is budgeted under the enrolment-planning envelope in 2006-07. This represents an increase of $61 million, or 50 per cent, over the last year's funding. We had planned to spend around $30 million with respect to that, but we were able to double it to $60 million, which is nice. We announced last month that this additional funding will add 2,400 new spaces into the system plus 880 spaces for new degree programs at Grant MacEwan College. Of course, Mount Royal is moving down the road to getting into degree-granting as well. As the programs become fully enrolled in the years ahead, this number of new spaces will reach over 7,000 in total. These funds plus allocations made over the next three years will result in 11,800 new student spaces, which is what the hon. member across the way wants to call them, by 2008-09.

I said before that we need to look at the fact that Advanced Education deals from literacy to postdoctoral work. You know, access to learning opportunities encompasses the entire gamut of the services that are being provided by this department. This is a key part of our efforts, to add 15,000 new learning opportunities into the advanced learning system between 2005 and '08. Yes, most of these opportunities will be actual classroom seats within universities, colleges, and technical institutes, but they will also be in community programs like literacy, immigrant bridging, English as a Second Language, and so on.

Ensuring that postsecondary education is affordable continues to be a high priority in this budget, and this budget clearly signals our intent to make postsecondary education affordable for all Albertans. We recognize that the cost of postsecondary education is a shared responsibility among students, families, government, and the employment community.

The hon. member talked about, you know, conservative kinds of policies. Well, one of the things that conservatives like to do is say that we're out of the business of being in business. You look at that and say: who benefits the most from the subsidy that is provided to our kids to go to university? So I think that maybe the employment community needs to be more involved, and I think that they are getting more involved. There are a lot of great examples of partnerships where they're stepping up to the plate and participating.

Our government has committed to a second consecutive year to absorb tuition increases for the 2006-07 academic year. What does that do? That leaves more dollars in our students' jeans. This applies to public postsecondary institutions as well as approved programs offered by private, not-for-profit institutions. The tuition support will be built into institutions' ongoing funding so that students won't face a dramatic increase in tuition in September 2007, the so-called triple whammy. Institutions won't lose funding. In fact, this means that when our tuition policy is introduced, it will start from 2004 tuition rates. So we have heard our student unions and our student associations in this regard.

In addition to tuition support, we have budgeted for potential enhancements to our student finance program that are expected to come out of the A Learning Alberta review. The improvements will be the ones that students have told us are important to them, but I don't expect any dancing in the streets.

In terms of ensuring the quality of postsecondary education, one of the key initiatives is the new access to the future fund. This year, for the first time, as I said earlier, the budget includes $45 million to enhance the capability of the postsecondary system through matching grants and the support initiatives that broaden access and improve quality, enhance learning outcomes, attract and retain the best faculty available, and expand innovation capacity. Again, thank you to my predecessor and to the staff who have worked so hard to work out this great plan.

Since the fund was created as part of the Access to the Future Act, my ministry has received a tremendous response from individuals and organizations that have come forward to invest in our postsecondary system. These include the Schulich foundation, $25 million to the U of C to fund a chair and scholarships for engineering students; the MacPhail donation, $10 million to SAIT for a trades and technology complex; Bill and Mary Jo Robbins, $5 million to Grant MacEwan; and it goes on and on.

Keeping the momentum of the fund and demonstrating high donor interest is a key component to the long-term success of the fund. Of course, as I said before, I expect the endowment to be fully funded at $3 billion within two years. What better way to give back to society than to endow our universities, technical schools, and colleges? You know, I'm told that there's about $3 trillion that is going to change hands from one generation to another over the next 10 years. What better way to make a difference than to endow postsecondary education?

At this point I'd like to give you an overview of the amounts to be voted for Advanced Education and highlight the changes from our 2005-06 forecast. This information starts on page 33 of the 2006-07 government estimates book. As noted on page 33, the 2006-07 estimates for expense and equipment and inventory purchases is $2,068,035,000. Those are big numbers. The 2006 estimate for nonbudgetary disbursements is $103,900,000.

Page 35 provides the details behind the figures on page 33. Ministry support services shows a decrease from $20,479,000 in 2005-06 to $20,109,000 in 2006-07. The decrease of $370,000, or 2 per cent, results from projected reductions in supplies and services purchases.

Program delivery support shows an increase of $1,947,000, or 5.1 per cent, from the 2005-06 forecasts. This increase results primarily from a 6 per cent grant rate increase provided to the various organizations that provide community education programs such as literacy; English as a Second Language, ESL; and inmate education programs.

Assistance to postsecondary institutions shows an increase of $166,287,000 from the 2005-06 forecast. This increase is made up of $61 million for the 6 per cent grant increase to postsecondary institutions, a $60 million increase to expand enrolment spaces, and $44 million to cover the tuition fee increases for 2006-07, and there's 44 big ones in the jeans of our students.

Postsecondary facilities infrastructure shows an increase of $88,143,000 from the 2005-06 forecast.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make a few observations on the 2006-2007 budget for Advanced Education and perhaps raise a few questions that the minister I hope will be able to address either here on the floor of the House or in some other way.

Before I get to the budget itself, let me again extend my best wishes to the Minister of Advanced Education, newly appointed, because his task is quite formidable. It's one of the most important ministries with very long-term strategic significance. Decisions made today are likely to continue to reverberate for a long time to come, so he does need our best wishes. He also is new in the sense that the budget probably was prepared by his hard-working predecessor, who is in the House, and I'd like to thank him for his work not only on the budget but certainly for refocusing the attention of this government to this very important public program that we have, which certainly will have a great deal of significance for our unfolding future.

That said, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to say that the budget does show some fairly important commitments, increased commitments to the field of postsecondary education. It's a large system, a system which serves hundreds of thousands of students, probably close to 50,000 faculty and nonacademic staff, perhaps, if not more, a very large number. When you look at the impact of it purely in market and economic terms as an ongoing activity, operation, it perhaps affects the lives and the livelihoods of more than just those who either directly or indirectly work within the system. A very large number of Albertans provide the services and benefit from the economic activity generated by it. It's a very large and significant part of our society and economy.

I just want to say something about the sort of vision that is driving the budget, and that vision is articulated in the government budget documents. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I've taken a close look at the vision that's the driving force. It's on page 70 of the business plan. It's a fairly comprehensive vision, but it does have, I think, some limitations to it which will affect the way the monies budgeted here will be spent.

The main focus of it is on creating skills and opportunities to enhance the workforce in the province. It contributes primarily to the development of the workforce. That is certainly one very important core objective. The vision appropriately underlines the importance of the contribution that postsecondary education activities make to the development of the workforce for the health of the economy, for creating more wealth, for creating more opportunities for individuals. For Albertans to be able to take part, to have rewarding employment and all of that, is important.

There are other parts of the vision that I think need to also be included that are not in there, that should be added to it, and that is the nonmarket significance of postsecondary education, the role of humanities, for example. Whether it's in universities or colleges or technical institutes, everywhere, I think, exposure to humanities is very, very essential. The guarantor of good in a civilized society, a society which has the sort of civic capacities built into its citizens, does pay attention to investment on the nonmarket side of postsecondary education, which are called the humanities and social sciences.

So the vision I think needs to be broadened, needs to be rearticulated to include a focus of a society that's growing, that's prosperous, that's increasing its economic capacities and economic frontiers to invest deliberately in inculcating, in providing opportunities for Albertans who partake in our postsecondary institutions to have the opportunity to learn in the areas which we call humanities. I wanted to make this point to start out. I find that that's one thing that I do find somewhat missing in the vision.

I was looking at some literature on this, Mr. Minister, and I would just very briefly draw attention to some of the arguments in favour of this. Public investment in the humanities benefits society not in monetary terms – true – but in terms of cultivating people with a stronger sense of humanity and citizenship. The consequences of funding the humanities are instrumental in securing a stock of public good, human capital, in terms of people who carry in themselves the resources of a civilized society.

From this perspective, then, it is difficult to overestimate how valuable a resource this is, that is the humanities. Each generation of students needs to ask questions about what it is to be a citizen, to be benevolent, to be human. The humanities are the location of this engagement. To the extent that professional faculties and applied sciences are even considerably occupied by the need to answer such questions within their own curricula – and that's happening – they have in a sense just learned from the Oxford dictionary's meaning of the word "humanize." So there is a growing recognition within the postsecondary institutions about this, and we need to certainly include that recognition in the vision statement that drives the budget document.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'll turn to some specific issues. I think the questions have been raised, and I think the minister has seized the significance of some of these questions related to the second lowest nationally – that is, among the provinces and territories – participation rate for the postsecondary age-going population to in fact take part in our postsecondary institutions. That should be a matter of concern. I know that that's why your predecessor has included in the review among its four major emphases the accessibility issue. But the fact that a very small percentage of Albertans in relative terms take part in the postsecondary system is not merely because there are not enough spaces there. That may be one reason. Affordability may be another reason. We need to pay some attention to it, to ask: why is it that in a province with such a fine and strong history of public education at the postsecondary level we are failing in that we are the second last in the percentage of Canadians taking part in the postsecondary education system? So that's a huge issue. I think we need to pay attention to it and find remedies for it.

I hope the minister will carefully read the learning review that will be in his hands, the final report. He says in a couple of weeks. I know that it won't get lost in the black hole for him. When I was referring to this, I was talking about it reaching us. It would be important, Minister, if you would not only pay attention to what's in this report yourself but make the report available to get input and some reactions from other stakeholders, including members of this House. I include myself among those who would be interested in receiving the report, not just us but postsecondary stakeholders all over the province, you know, whether they're students, whether they're teachers, whether they're researchers, whether they're administrators, board of governor members. They would all like to have access to that report as quickly as possible. I wasn't being flippant yesterday when I talked of a black hole. I was trying to make a point.

In that, I hope that this question of relatively low participation rates will be somehow addressed. I'm looking forward to seeing if there are any answers there, potential answers to how we deal with that problem. I don't see in the budget statement papers any particular attention to that part. The accessibility matter is addressed, and I think the whole question of 20,000 new opportunities – no, it says that “15,000 new learning opportunities will have been provided by 2007-08,” and 20,000 such opportunities by 2008-2009. Then what's said here is that this “includes almost 12,000 full-load equivalent student spaces.” So I guess it translates into about 12,000 full-time student spaces.

My question to the minister on this is the following: how many of these spaces will be created at the university level, how many at the technical institutes and apprenticeship levels, and how many at the college level? Our system is quite complex and diverse, and I would like to have information on the distribution of this planned expansion on the accessibility side with respect to where these 12,000 full-time places will be found.

There is mentioned somewhere in the budget documents that the loan remission funds will be increased so that the student debt burden or loan burden can be reduced during their first and fourth years. I have a question for the minister on the amount of money that is available during 2005-2006 for this purpose, I think $34 million for loan remission purposes under one or another program. Only about $21 million of that, less than two-thirds of the money budgeted, was in fact used for remission purposes.

I'm trying to figure out why it is that in spite of the fact we hear from students that they're suffering from huge debt loads, we are underspending in the budgeted amount over that year. Are there some barriers? Is it because some changes have been made at the same time in the conditions for qualifying for remissions? Have they been made more difficult for students who qualify for the remissions, or what? Also, I would like to know how many students did apply during that last year for loan remissions and how many of them were successful in getting the remissions because that will give us some idea about why it is that we have fallen short of using the money available for such a dramatic need, a need that students really draw our attention to day in and day out.

I would ask the minister: if this information tells him that it is the tightening of the qualifying criteria for loan remissions, will he revisit those criteria to make it somewhat easier, in fact, for students to seek remission of their loans? I'm asking him to give me at least some indication that he will be inclined to revisit the changes that were made a couple of years ago, which may have made it more difficult for students who take advantage of this very important program. Total loan thresholds I think were increased from $20,000 to $24,000 or perhaps beyond, so maybe that's what excluded or eliminated lots of students from being able to apply for these remissions.

Another question that I have for the minister is with respect to the funds that he referred to as having been increased for student financial assistance. Now, we know that the loans are applicable to students who go either to public institutions or nonprofit public institutions. They are available to all Albertans, but my understanding is that these loans are also available for for-profit institutions that operate in this province. They operate, I guess, on the basis of some sort of licences that they receive from the minister's own department. These may be short-term computer-related programs or massage programs and some others.

I know that I've been visited by students who are unhappy with respect to their experience of going to the institutions, but my question specifically to the minister at this moment related to the budget is if he knows, based on either last year's data or information that we have, perhaps in terms of projected distribution of these funds, what kinds of monies will be going to fund students who seek opportunity to get some training in these for-profit institutions and whether or not this portion of the student financing is increasing from year to year so that this House has some idea about the growth within the largely public sector, the nonprofit postsecondary system, or the for-profit sector.

One of the problems with the for-profit sector that's been brought to my attention by students over the last two or three years is that the provisions that we have for student government for nonprofits and for public institutions are absent in the for-profit sector. So student government through elections is simply not possible. Student representation, therefore, and a forum through which these students can express their concerns to the institution are simply not available. They are not sanctioned. They're not by legislation. If that is in fact the case – and the minister will be able to get this advice from his staff – then my question to the minister is: would the minister be willing to allow this rather, I think, quite acceptable practice, encouraging, in fact, student self-government in all institutions that receive, either directly or indirectly, public funds?

These private, for-profit institutions obviously do not get any direct funds from the Ministry of Advanced Education, I think, but they do get students who get funded by the Students Finance Board, which is public monies. In fact, my suspicion is that in comparison to public institutions or nonprofit, public institutions, a far larger percentage of students who go to these for-profit institutions are in fact publicly funded through the loan programs. I would like to ask the minister to look into this and see if he can confirm my suspicion that that is in fact the case, that a much larger proportion of students going to for-profit postsecondary institutions seek loans from student loan programs than is the case for other institutions.

There is a third problem with respect to the private, for-profit sector. [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired] I will return to this another afternoon. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I do have a very long list of people who wish to participate in the debate, and I do understand that Standing Orders do allow you 20 minutes at a time to speak if you so choose. Brevity would really help in getting more people to participate in the debate.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try and be as brief as I normally am. First of all, I want to say to the hon. member opposite that as he knows – and I've said it many times over the years – I have a great deal of respect for that hon. member. He's had a long career before this one in postsecondary, and I certainly want to offer him the same offer I made to his counterpart in the Official Opposition with respect to my door being open. We will do much better working together than against each other.

I fully agree with what you're saying with regard to the nonmonetary values of postsecondary education and the vision of including the humanities and the arts. As you know – I think it was last year – I did manage to get a motion passed unanimously in this Chamber with respect to fine arts in our high schools. So I think you know that I'm on the same wavelength there. Of course, it deals with quality of life issues. If we want to attract the best people to this province, they need to see a humanities infrastructure. They need to see arts and so on because they can go and live anywhere. The best people can live anywhere, and they like to be able to use their leisure time in some of the finer sides of humanity. So you won't get any argument from me on that score.

The lowest participation rate in postsecondary . . .

Dr. Pannu: The second lowest.

Mr. Herard: The second lowest. Thank you. Don't want to go any further.

It's a real problem in a hot economy because there is so much attraction to those students who might be marginal in their drive to succeed in education. It sometimes looks so much easier to go out and get a job instead of the drudgery of going to school. We need to work with that. Part of what I was talking about before is that every one of our kids has a flame for something, and if we can learn to fan it earlier in life so that they become motivated through those difficult raging-hormone years, if they can focus and, in fact, be turned on to something and the parents support that, then I think we're going to lose a lot fewer of them out of our high schools, and we will have people who will want to go on to postsecondary, be it on the academic side or the vocational side. So I think that we need to work together with K to 12 to start that process so much earlier and get our kids motivated. We need to find ways to find that vocation.

I'm not sure if I got the right impression with respect to releasing the information that you were asking for coincidentally with the stakeholders and so on, but let me say this: I don't know what commitments may have been made, but whatever commitments have been made I will honour. If there was a commitment to provide the information simultaneously, whatever, I will honour those commitments. Let me check into that because I'm not sure.

Now, with respect to the spaces you asked some very specific, technical questions that the 150 hours since I was sworn in do not really prepare me for. Therefore, I'd be more than happy to let my professionals answer all of those questions in detail for you.

Also, loan remissions. I don't know why the entire amount was not used, but we will find out and let you know. And, yes, I will look at the remission system as you suggest, perhaps, really trying to understand it and how it works and why it works or why it doesn't work in some cases.

The same situation for profit education and how much funding goes into that side of it. My officials are here today, they heard your questions, we'll prepare a response, and then maybe we can sit down and talk about it.

It's an interesting notion with respect to student government not possible. You know, that's almost un-Canadian. There's got to be something in there somewhere that says that you have the right to assemble and complain. So it's an interesting thing, and we'll look into that as well.

I think those were all the questions, and I have very little more information to share, Mr. Chairman, so I won't take very much longer.

Support for postsecondary learners shows an increase of $27,500,000 from the 2005-06 forecast. The increase includes $8,100,000 for the newly introduced rural incentive bursary. This new program will be available for rural Albertans eligible for a minimum of $1,000 in loan assistance when attending accredited postsecondary programs in Canada.

Apprenticeship delivery shows an increase of $411,000 from 2005-06. The increase results primarily from a projected increase in apprenticeship marketing activities. Apprenticeship marketing includes qualification assessments, technical training for apprentices from the Territories, as well as consulting services provided to international governments. These services are provided on a cost-recovery basis, and there is a corresponding increase in revenue, so this is a cost-neutral initiative to government.

We get down to equipment and inventory/purchases. Program delivery support shows a decrease of $400,000 from '05-06, representing a reduction requirement for the student finance system renewal project. The system is used to process and administer provincial and federal student loans, grants, and scholarships. The renewal project will ensure that the system meets student needs for online self-service functionality. It would also increase the efficiency of the student assistance process.

Apprenticeship delivery also shows a decrease of $1,353,000 from the 2005-06 forecast. The reduction results from the completion of the design and development phase of the apprenticeship, trades, and occupations management system, or ATOMS for short.

In conclusion, this government is committed to enhancing our postsecondary system, and Budget 2006 demonstrates this commitment. It is great news for our institutions, our stakeholders and partners in postsecondary learning. It's really nice when you start seeing quotes from virtually all of the institutions saying how excited they are about seeing this kind of a budget. So onward and upward, and I will need everyone's help to get this right.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education, I want to basically give you some kudos on what is transpiring in West Yellowhead, especially with your travelling show, especially for the apprentice system for welding. As you realize, with the ballooning population that has transpired in the city of Edmonton and accommodations and that, to get the theory, it takes removal of a person from their rural area into the city. This is really helping, so I want to compliment your staff on that for sure because that's really filling a void in our region.

The other thing I wanted to talk about was some dollars and cents for programming. I know that we had worked with the previous minister in previous years on programs, and they've worked very well in our region. As you realize, we have a partnership with the Yellowhead region consortium and the Pembina region consortium. That one works in Drayton Valley-Calmar and Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, but we have the same director there, so it works out well.

I'm just wondering if we can work with your department on other programs such as this. What I'm talking about is the aspect of the RN system. We had the school curriculum in YREC in Hinton. Our people were able to travel from the other areas to Hinton to go to school in the YREC building, and they were able to get there. Their theory was there, and then they were able to work in our hospital.

The big thing that I find there: once they graduate, we know that they're going to stay in the region because that's where their homes are. We're seeing a lot of mothers now whose children have moved on to an age where they don't need the same amount of looking after as they used to in the younger ages. So we're filling that gap.

I'm just wondering if the minister can give me any idea if we come up with some more ideas like this to fill some other gaps that we have, especially in the health sciences, to help us move along so we can put in some program funding money. We don't need any bricks and mortar. Basically, all we need is program funding.

Then, like I'd stated earlier, with the aspect of the same director for the Yellowhead region consortium and the Pembina region consortium it works out very well. When you look at the scope of what we do, we even go into the constituency of Rocky Mountain House. So then you've got four MLAs that are being looked after from that perspective. The bottom line, I feel, is that you can entice a lot of people that cannot afford to leave their family to go into the city for the theory part of whatever course they're going to take.

We're also looking at another aspect. We're going to have to look at helping with the aspect of working with the oil companies. The oil companies now are having some trouble working with the aspect of not getting help. They have what they call PET, which is petroleum education training. What transpires is that they'll go out and try to get people to come and work for them. They'll have the theory portion done by Lakeland College, who will have the course at the YREC in Hinton, and in this way they can have the practicum in the field.

What we've done is we've worked with a lot of aboriginals in our area, and of course when they're in our area, we know that they're going to stay there, and they're going to have people to work. The positive thing that I find is that if they happen to be a Métis, one of the people from the Métis Association will co-sign them, or if they're from a different area, one of the chiefs will co-sign. So there's a commitment there. The last time we did that, there were 15 or 18 of them there, and it worked out very well because there was no discrimination on the aspect of whether they were male or female. They had both there. So I think that's a positive thing because then the oil companies are willing to put in some money to help this program.

So I'm just wondering what kind of partnership Advanced Education will do in looking at something like that. So if you can give me a background on program spending. We're not looking for any dollars and cents for bricks and mortars. We're just looking for program spending.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I appreciate, actually, some of the comments from the Member for West Yellowhead. Some of the initiatives that the department has made in terms of trading apprentices rurally have been good, and some of the ways to try and bring apprenticeship training closer to the person who is going to be the apprentice I think will only have great benefit in terms of the numbers of people who become apprentices. This is a critical area. As the government has identified, there are critical skills shortages, and I will concentrate my comments on apprenticeship.

In many ways, you know, we look at apprenticeship as having had a successful system over the past number of years, and a lot of the people that are involved in the provincial apprenticeship committees and the local apprenticeship committees and the board are very happy with the results that they see as the end results. Indeed, the satisfaction of recent apprenticeship graduates is 91 per cent, which is pretty good, and those are the people that are coming out of the last year of their apprenticeship. But then I look at our needs. I look at what we must have here in our labour market. I look at the stresses and the distortions in the labour market, and I look at where we're going in the next two to five years and longer and beyond that and the need to deal with this apprenticeship system in some way that will bring some much better results than what we've seen.

I think we have a record number, 47,000 apprentices in our apprenticeship system right now. We had actually almost a record number – I forget – 4,500 graduates, 4,500 journeymen coming out of the system. Now, those figures have kind of stayed more or less the same in percentage over the last 10 years, and I think those figures tell you something that is very, very distressing.

If we were to have 1 in 10 of our grade 10 students get out of grade 10, there would be headlines. There would be just tremendous furor. If we were to have this problem that we have in so few journeymen graduates with so many in the system, we would be having just a tremendous amount of anxiety about what this is doing. It actually is a huge problem for our economy because what we're going to need in the next number of years as our economy shifts from conventional oil and gas, which is the real pull, the huge vacuum truck that's pulling people from almost every sector of the economy right now – it's what's hurting small business. It's what's hurting, you know, caregivers, whatever. It's rippling throughout.

It's actually not the oil sands at this moment, but the oil sands will begin to move into labour shortages and labour demands as we begin the construction of the upgraders near Edmonton and as we look to increased construction of oil sands primary development in some of the plants in the actual Wood Buffalo and Lloydminster and Peace River regions. They will begin to pull increasing numbers of tradesmen, and this is all going to be made worse by the fact of the greying of the population; 2012, I think, is probably going to be the date when we're at the height of it and the worst of it, the time when the baby boomers are retiring.

A number of questions to the minister that I would just like to reiterate are: how many spaces are there, actually, in the apprenticeship system in terms of being planned over the next one, two, and three years, and how do these spaces relate to the actual numbers that are necessary for each trade? Can they be broken down by trade?

The north and south factors. I'm getting reports of thousands of tradespeople coming in that will not have a spot this year in both the SAIT and NAIT traditional facilities. How can the minister deal with these tremendous pressures? I'm getting reports of people looking to line up for two days, bringing sleeping bags like they're at some rock concert, in order to get a spot months later in an apprenticeship training area, just to get their schooling in so that they can get their ticket. I'm getting reports all over the place of people just not being able to get their books signed by employers, especially on commercial sites where these employers are just using them for a few months at a shot and then sending them home and bringing on new guys, using them as cheap labour and saying that they're providing these numbers. Maybe that's hurting some of our numbers and hurting some of the ways that we're actually dealing with our training, inflating numbers, and they're not actually being trained.

I'm getting reports of sites with 12 and 14 and 18 apprentices on the job site and not a single journeyman. We're not talking 1 to 1 here or even going to 1 to 3, and these can vary between trades. A lot of these are commercial sites, to be truthful, but some of them are public monies, schools and such. Others are apartment buildings and things. We're seeing things that could be a problem for public safety down the road in terms of how these things are being built because a lot of them aren't being fully inspected in the end.

You know, there's a lot of talk about the RAP program being such a success. As the minister just reported, we have 1,400 kids coming through RAP, and it is a major increase, but 1,400 is not a lot when we look at our population. It's not a lot when we look at our needs, and it's not a lot when we look at our planning down the road. We have over a million kids in Canada unemployed and between 18 and 25, and these figures have been fairly consistent. Yet our average apprenticeship entry range is – you know, you get different figures, but maybe 25 is about right; it's certainly not 18. What are those numbers telling us? What are those numbers saying about how we're not preparing our kids for these very, very rewarding types of jobs and very rewarding types of careers?

I go into the schools in my area, and I tell all the grade 6ers that I can to get a trade. Many of the business leaders, many of the community leaders, many of the people that become very successful in life and in our communities come out of the trades. If they want to go to university later on, at least they can pay for it.

Again, back to the problems with apprenticeship. You know, there's obviously a huge problem with our system when we can't even document, when we can't even put numbers to, when we can't even have statistics on how many leave in the first year. There are no statistics kept on first-year leavers. I'm told: oh, well, you know, people will try out different things and move around and do this and that. Well, that's a pretty lackadaisical attitude, if you ask me, on how we're going to be training our people in critical skills areas. We're going to have kids bouncing around from here to there. Like I said earlier, many of them are being used as cheap labour and are not even having their books signed so that they can use these numbers another time.

Union, non-union: it doesn't matter. Union tends to be a little bit more methodical in how they watch and train their apprentices, and many of them are actually far more successful in their numbers. It would be nice if in some ways in more than just a few of the trades they could be empowered to ensure that they could indenture and watch the schooling of their apprentices as they go along to ensure that they are actually fully trained in a comprehensive manner that falls into many of the different areas that would be necessary and useful in their trade.

So often with this so-called multiskilling movement that we have going on right now, it's a deskilling movement that is bringing out people with, say, an electrical journeyman's ticket, and they spend almost all of their four years as a wire-puller, or they've gone on and done other things. We're getting fewer skills coming out of our systems. Yes, you know, in some of the final outputs in the high end of some of our apprenticeship systems we have had a successful system, Mr. Chair, but the reality is that it's beginning to fail. I would very much like to see some tracking of the first-year leavers and something done in that area.

The problems of these irresponsible contractors and the lack of policing, the lack of at least watching or somehow determining whether or not they are taking the training: the nature of apprenticeship is that most of the training is on the job, and because most of that training is on the job and apprentices are accredited for that training, there should be some ability to ensure that the training is taking place. The reality is that we must have some look at how our apprenticeship system is really working. If we are to deal with critical skills shortages, we must look at these thousands of apprentices that don't have spots. We must look at the real necessity of bringing out tradesmen who have truly portable tickets so that they can bring to each job that they go to the skills and the versatility that can give them the ability to move on in their trade and in their jobs, become masters, whatever, and to give their careers and their clients, the people they do business with, the best product they can.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Hon. Member for West Yellowhead, I look forward to visiting your area and soon. In fact, I want to absolutely visit every single system that we have out there to make sure that I get a really good understanding of what's happening where the rubber meets the road. So you can invite your consortium. We'll make arrangements. We'll sit down, and I'll listen. We'll look for ways to look for opportunities in all of this. I know that your consortium is very much involved with the public school system there and the Catholic school system where they're all interconnected on SuperNet, and there may be some things there that we can look at in terms of applications. I know that West Yellowhead over the years has been a long way ahead of many other areas with respect to the use of technology. You know, there may be some solutions there.

Another idea. I don't know if this will work in your area. A friend of mine just retired a couple months ago, and he was tickled pink to have been asked by his employer to come back for a day or two a week. He was just so happy to do that for his employer, to come back and mentor his successor, to come back and talk to kids about the career that, in fact, he had. So that could be an idea of sort of celebrating our golden years and the ability to nurture and mentor kids.

Edmonton-Manning, it seems to me that you seem to have a fairly good understanding of apprenticeship. I know that my officials have taken good care to take good notes with respect to your concerns, you know, how many spaces over three years and all of those kinds of things. I'm sure that we'll get back to you in due course, and I thank you for those questions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. My remarks are going to be based on discussions from Public Accounts this morning, and they're centred around the large percentage of students who are not completing high school after five years or entering grade 10. We see 31 per cent in 1997-98, and while it has improved, it is still high, with 23 per cent still not completing school. Improving the high school completion rate is an issue for the Education minister, I realize, but I would like to talk about what happens to these adults after they leave the K to 12 system.

I just took some rough figures from this morning. Based on the 590,000 students we have in the K to 12 system in Alberta, we have approximately, according to this, 20 per cent, 118,000 students, dropping out of school. I think all of us want Albertans to be productive and fit into society, and I think the K to 12 and Advanced Education systems seem to have this, it seems to me, as their goal, sir. Statistics Canada shows that about 90 per cent of Alberta 25- to 34-year-olds have at least a high school diploma or have attended some postsecondary education institution. Once these students leave their school, their education becomes an issue for the Ministry of Advanced Education.

I really would pose a few questions for the Minister of Advanced Education. Will the minister consider giving incentives to adults to return and complete their grade 12 education? Again, if we look at those 118,000 people out there, it seems to me there's a requirement or a need to give them some incentive to return to school. Looking at the manpower situation that we have in Alberta, I think this would be worth looking at, sir.

Given that adults who do return to grade 12 may have to leave the workforce at least part-time and potentially give up their wages only to pay a tuition fee, would the minister consider funding the costs of education to grade 12 tuition in Alberta for those kinds of adults, sir? I believe that if we check on that, you'd see that B.C. is doing this, paying tuition fees for adults who come back to school and are successful.

The other thing I'd like to ask the minister: would he try to ensure that there is adequate access for adult learners to complete their high school level in the rural parts of the province? If I remember the 20-year plan that I looked at, I noticed that there was some incentive to school districts to look at the whole business of community schools. I think that in a lot of communities the school is the lifeblood of the community. I think there would be some way of advancing or helping people in the rural areas to get their upgrade. Of course, if you added the tuition factor in terms of an incentive to go back to school, I think we'd be looking after that population.

Maybe the last step the minister would consider: would the minister take steps to allow large groups of adults who have not completed their high school to return and complete an apprenticeship program or ensure that they have the prerequisites to enter other postsecondary programs? I would ask him if he would look at that.

Now, wandering away and looking at a thing I got from my researcher this morning – and I just throw this out to you. At the University of Toronto and the University of British Columbia they no longer collect tuition for the PhD level students. I guess the question to the minister: has the minister given any consideration to encouraging either the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary to do the same? My question is in terms of the vein of highly specialized people. I think of the question of the cancer bill, the need to get very, very highly qualified people. I think this could be a good incentive to attract those kinds of people to Alberta, and I think it would be worth having a look at, sir. I'll leave that with you.

Maybe I could wander to one more thing that you said in question period, and believe it or not, I was listening to you. You said that there are 1,400 students enrolled in the RAP program. That's commendable, but I'd like to know what percentage of that group will complete their apprenticeship program and complete it by exploring a trade and being successful in the trade.

So those are some questions, Mr. Minister. Again, I would like to congratulate you on your appointment. I hope you can keep Dave Taylor in line. It's very difficult. We've tried. I know you're the man that can do it.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Herard: If there are others who want to ask questions, maybe I can wait. I want to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert with respect to his comments because I know that he, too, has been involved in education a long time.

In terms of incentives for adults to return to school, a lot of that takes place I think in the Human Resources and Employment area. Typically, people will be in the much lower income area. They could be, you know, single-parent families and so on. So an awful lot of support is given to give people the skills they require. I will certainly ask my department to consider your ideas, and we'll get back to you on it.

One of the things that I'm wondering about is something that I've seen overseas – for example, in Belgium and France and so on – where what they look at is: here are a couple thousand jobs going unfilled and here are 2,000 or 3,000 people on welfare, on and off. What they do is talk to these people and find out: if you had the opportunity to have any job out there that is available, which one would it be? Then they look at how much skill deficiency there would be between being able to do that job. Then they enter into a contract with the employer that says: if this individual gets the skills they need in six months, will you give him the job? Yes, they get into a contract. For some of them it might take a year, but in the examples I saw there was one hundred per cent success when there was an agreement made and a contract made. These people are now buying their first homes and cars. So I think there are some things that could be done with respect to that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, there are about two minutes left. Would you like to use them?

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to do that. Perhaps in the very short time that's remaining, I can draw the attention of the minister to the business plan, page 77. He and I were speculating about why it is that the participation rate in the postsecondary system in Alberta is so low, as low as we know that it is.

There may be an answer, Mr. Minister, in that table on page 77. The very last item, 2.g, tells you of Albertans' perceptions about whether they see that the learning system is within the means of most Albertans. The percentage of people who think that it's within their means is steadily going down. It was 75 per cent five years ago. This year, regarding this number, it is 46 per cent, less than half of them. The cost of going to postsecondary institutions obviously is seen as a major factor by Albertans in general, so something needs to be done on the issue of affordability.

If you don't have this document, I'll certainly make it available to you. It was given to me by the Council of Alberta University Students just last week when they came to see me. I'm sure that they met with you or met with your staff. They have some proposals about how to cut down tuition costs. Those are the most visible ones. I'd like to get your reaction to their proposals.

One of the main suggestions that they're making is to delink the tuition revenues that an institution makes from the operational costs of the institution. They're suggesting some alternatives to it. What we have done – saying that 30 per cent of the operational costs of colleges and universities and institutes should come from tuition fees – is a great concern to students. I think that the tuition costs have been driven up because the overall operating costs of institutions move up very, very fast for a variety of reasons. Students are seeking a delinking of the tuition fee policy from the operating costs of the universities and colleges. I'd like to get your response to that. Students, I think, would very much appreciate you taking a close look at this document and its contents.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Advanced Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$2,068,035,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$103,900,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I move that the committee rise and report on the vote of the estimates of Advanced Education and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Advanced Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $2,068,035,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $103,900,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn and reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 12, 2006 8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/04/12

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders, as you know, the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, colleagues. It is a pleasure for me to rise tonight and to move my estimates for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and also to introduce to you some guests that we have with us that are truly working for the producers and the ag industry of Alberta and have been for many, many years in many cases and are indispensable in terms of us being able to carry out the policy direction that this government has and the service that we provide to our producers.

They're in our public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise as I say their names. I'd just like to introduce them if I may, Mr. Chairman, the first being Mr. Barry Mehr, who is our deputy minister; as well, Mr. Brad Klak, who is the president of Ag Financial Services Corp.; Faye Rault, who is the assistant deputy minister of rural development. I see John Donner, who is the assistant deputy minister of environment and food safety, as well as Bard Haddrell, the director of the ag info centre. I would certainly suggest to you that we have the best executive team in government, and they're well represented here tonight.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to characterize this year's budget as one of reconstruction and reinvigoration. After coming through several years of difficulty, we're certainly seeing an industry that's undeniably changed. Everyone, whether they're from a rural community that's dependent on agriculture or they live in the heart of our capital city, knows that farmers have had a rough ride over the past several years. We need to work with industry to increase returns from the market and better manage business risk. This has to change, and it's up to the industry working closely with government to make it happen. We've already got a very strong foundation. We just need to have the appropriate direction, and a year without any major disasters would be nice.

Part of my vision is to build on that foundation. There are a few cracks that we need to fix, in particular our trade issues: the World Trade Organization and the huge amount of subsidies world-wide that distort our prices. The Canadian agricultural income stabilization program needs to be fixed. It isn't working in its current format. Of course, we need to find better choices in how we market our grains. We have built a solid base, and if we focus on making that strong, we've got a house that will withstand any storm that tries to take it down. This budget is about confirming the government's commitment to the viability of agriculture in the province.

Before I go into this year's plans, I want to just quickly talk about what we've done in the past year to help position us to move forward this year. We made some changes within the ministry, refocused the work of some divisions and put more emphasis on rural development, research, and business development. Some of the financial program delivery has moved from the department to AFSC, or Ag Financial Services, and that's been a very good fit, Mr. Chairman, as that is a financial organization.

We also strengthened our food safety, environment, and strategic policy sectors. With these changes, we feel more capable than ever to help our ag industry take on the rest of the world. That's important because if things go the way we want them to at next month's World Trade Organization meetings, we'll have significantly improved access to the world's markets, and that will make more difference to the bottom lines of our producers than any farm income program could ever hope to achieve.

Back home we're putting forward a budget that will allow us to follow through in a few other areas. Last year we rolled out the government's rural development strategy. Now we're putting our money where our mouth is with $100 million to establish a rural development project fund. This fund will support communities, regional alliances, and not-for-profit organizations and help kick-start community focus projects that will contribute to the growth and prosperity of rural Alberta. This is a significant investment in rural Alberta and complements the hundreds of millions of dollars that are being invested through individual ministry budgets in areas such as health, housing, infrastructure, and policing, not to mention the other programs and projects that my ministry invests in on an ongoing basis, things like 4-H, irrigation projects, ag service boards, and numerous others.

We decided to go with this fund because it offered the best vehicle to get money out of the community ventures. We're still working out the details, but we know that a third party will administer the fund. An arm's-length board representing all corners of the province will oversee the fund. Projects that are strong on partnership and big on rural impact will take precedence, and the fund will produce an annual report card of results to ensure accountability.

Mr. Chairman, this fund is really just a small part of the government's commitment to rural development. All you need to do is look at every ministry's business plan to see the dollars going into rural communities. About $260 million in new spending is earmarked for rural communities in this year's budget. Of course, we need the investment and resources to be co-ordinated, to be looked at through a rural lens. That's what the rural development strategy strives to do. So that work will continue to be important to the ministry.

We're continuing to re-energize our livestock industry, and of course we're continuing to hear positive news on this front. The latest is the news that the Montana judge that stymied our recovery last year has thrown out R-CALF's case for a permanent injunction. We know that R-CALF isn't going away, but this turn of events is certainly welcome to our industry. It feels like for the first time in a long time the world is finally coming to its senses on the matter. It was apparent by the reaction of trading nations when we reported our fourth case of BSE in January and the U.S. reported its second homegrown case in March. The reaction of countries such as Japan was measured and reasonable. There were no significant knee-jerk trade interruptions, and except for a few reassurances the new cases garnered little concern.

It has taken a lot of hard work by the beef industry and by governments – Alberta, Canada, and the United States – to get to this point, but it doesn't mean we still don't have work to do. We're continuing to strengthen our livestock industry. The work on our six-point BSE recovery strategy continues. In this budget we've committed $20 million for specified risk material disposal research. SRMs, or specified risk materials, are the materials that are removed from cattle at slaughter. Soon SRMs will no longer be recycled into any feed, so what we're faced with is a large amount of excess material that ends up as waste. This funding is earmarked for research into alternative uses and disposal methods for this material.

Now, I know that there's a lot of hurt out there in the grains and oilseeds sector. There has been hurt for some time. In fact, this evening, Mr. Chairman, we were at a reception with the grains and oilseeds, pulses, and potato growers of Alberta. There's a lot of posturing about what to do to support this sector. Recently, my provincial and territorial counterparts called upon the federal government to work on transforming the CAIS program – not to replace it; transform it. We believe that the principles of the program are sound. It just needs to become simpler as well as more bankable, more responsive, and more predictable. We've advocated as well for a separation of the disaster component, which we're pleased to see the federal minister is looking at. We have to better address income risk and make sure we've got a disaster component that works.

We're not ready to throw it out, but we're certainly working to make it better. We know that our grains and oilseeds producers continue to suffer from high input costs and lower commodity prices, and we're going to do something about it. We have a three-point plan, similar to the six-point plan created around BSE, to help deal with the challenges facing the grains and oilseeds sector. As part of this plan we are consulting with grains and oilseeds industry representatives to find long-term solutions to the difficulties the entire industry is facing. We can no longer grow in some cases the same grains for the same export markets or for the same uses. Like we did with the beef industry, we've got to look at every opportunity to derive value from the crops we grow right here at home.

One area is bioenergy. There's great promise for our crop producers in this area, and we're committed to exploring it. I'm really pleased that this government is developing a bioenergy strategy, and our ministry will be a big part of this effort.

I've heard the calls for immediate ad hoc assistance, but this industry needs long-term solutions that reduce producer risk and help farmers out when disaster strikes. We want programs to sustain agriculture in this province, and we've done a great deal of work to make sure that what we bring forward are business risk management programs that create an environment where farmers get their income out of the marketplace while still protecting them in a disaster. That's why we injected $224 million through the CAIS reference margin pilot program for the 2003 through to 2005 claim years. It's why we reduced premiums for several crop insurance programs through this year's budget. Making programs more workable and accessible is the most sensible and sustainable approach. Ad hoc programs are not the solution, and they don't work.

There are many other initiatives we're working on and have addressed in this year's budget, but in the interests of time I'd like to sum up by going over the planned increases that we have for this year. The ministry's spending has actually decreased from the 2005-06 budget by approximately $53 million. This is as a result of budget decreases for the following areas: the Canada/Alberta fed cattle set-aside program, which has been discontinued – last year we budgeted $133 million for this program – and $43.7 million for production insurance expenses, which is budgeted based on 20-year historical averages. These decreases are partially offset by the following increases: the $100 million for the rural development project fund, $20 million for the specified risk material disposal research, as well as $2 million for irrigation infrastructure rehabilitation, bringing this annual funding to $24 million per year.

This budget is based on several assumptions, Mr. Chairman. The assumption that commodity prices will not decline further than they are. Interest rates will remain stable as will the Canadian dollar. We will not experience a disastrous year of claims under the income stabilization and crop insurance programs. Those are some of the assumptions that we have made in our planning.

These assumptions mean that achieving the plan is subject to some major risks. Widespread crop production losses due to poor weather conditions, including drought, would be some of the risk; major livestock disease outbreak such as foot and mouth, avian or swine flu; further declines in global commodity prices, particularly in crops. Changes in the economy, such as an increase in the interest rates or a stronger Canadian dollar, have an effect on our farm incomes. Those four items could affect farm income dramatically and, in turn, impact indemnities paid out under crop insurance and the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program. We've not built this plan to deal with another disastrous year of claims. We await the federal government's budget to see what they're going to do.

I want to assure all hon. members that the prosperity and sustainability of our agricultural industry remains a priority of this government. Rural Alberta is a priority of this government.

I would like to thank the hon. members for your support throughout this past year. The industry is growing and changing rapidly, and it's more than ready to take on the world. We have the best people producing top-notch product that's safe and nutritious. We cannot be beat given an open market. When the global playing field levels, our ag producers are going to set the standard for the world to follow. We're absolutely committed to working with them every step of the way to help them to do that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the time this evening. I look forward to the comments and questions. Also, I would ask members who are asking questions if you would identify the page and the area of the plan that you're referring to so that if I cannot get to the answer today, we will be able to give you a written response. The staff, of course, is up there writing away as we speak.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the comments and questions part.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate on the budget estimates for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development this evening. Certainly, I think all hon. members of this Assembly recognize the importance to rural Alberta of the department and the programs that are administered through that department.

Now, the ministry this year is requesting a total of over $1 billion for its three core business areas to facilitate sustainable industry growth, to enhance rural sustainability, and to strengthen business risk management. We see some of the highlights in this year's budget estimates: a $150 million increase for farm income stabilization. We see a $71 million increase for production insurance; $20 million to respond, if necessary, to BSE-related changes in federal regulations to safeguard the livestock feed industry; and this $100 million for the rural development strategy. I will be following that strategy, that $100 million strategy with interest. I think it will be money well spent if it's used properly and doesn't become a political fund. I certainly don't want this to be just given out on a constituency basis like some of the other programs in Gaming.

Now, we've all been hearing for some time about the CAIS program. I would agree with the hon. minister that CAIS is not working. It needs to be fixed. It's cumbersome. It's bureaucratic. I often thought during question period, Mr. Chairman, that I should give the hon. minister a CAIS test, to just go through, for instance, some of the editions of the Canadian Grain News and question the minister on how, exactly, some of these programs work under CAIS. Just give him a test. But I thought that at this time it may be inappropriate now that there are winds of change in the CAIS program. I would certainly agree that we need to make some changes to this.

There are many different opinions on the CAIS program. I was astonished to receive a news release from the county of Two Hills and MD of Bonnyville – this is dated last November – and the subject of this news release is that individuals in that part of the province took enough issue with the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties convention that they issued this press release. They state that

In a meeting with [the hon. Minister of] Municipal Affairs . . . on November 15, 2005, the Minister stated that

- The CAIS Program is very good
- That it will eliminate all the bad farmers
- If small farms cannot be successful, they “should smell the roses and find different careers.”

Now, I find that interesting. I don't know if the present minister of agriculture agrees with that or not, but it is usual for ministers to meet with representatives from the municipalities and counties. The county of Two Hills deputy reeve, Elroy Yakemchuk, apparently challenged the hon. minister about these remarks.

I would like to now ask the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development if his opinion on the family farm is different than that of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. You know, we all know that family farms are having a difficult time with the escalating costs of energy. Electricity deregulation hasn't worked out in urban areas and certainly hasn't worked out in rural areas. Of course, the hon. minister mentioned some of the weather patterns and also the low commodity prices that are forcing many farmers, particularly young farmers, off the land. Now, Mr. Yakemchuk asks: what would be the definition of a bad farmer? Under these circumstances I have no idea, but perhaps the minister could enlighten all members of the House.

Again, to the minister of agriculture, this is also in the press release: “What did you mean when you implied that if a small farmer cannot make it on 4-6 quarters of land, he should smell the roses and find a different career?” That was apparently the question. This is in their press release, not mine. I want clarification of this, and I want your opinion on this. Do you agree with that? Now, the farmers, as I understand it, were very offended with these comments, and many of them cannot look at finding another career. It's simply not an option.

In light of this, I would like to know, again, what specific programs this government is going to implement to protect and enhance the family farm and encourage young farmers to take up the business. I know that there are programs. I know that people automatically think of the BSE money and how the big packers got a large share of it. I know what the general public thinks, but in this case, I would certainly like to know what the minister thinks.

Now, specifically on page 86 of the business plan 2006-09 I was comparing the performance measures that are in this document to what's in the annual report for the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. I'm going to have to double check because there seems to be a difference in some of these performance measures that are present for us.

In performance measure 2.b, again, on page 86 we're talking about the percentage of Alberta production produced under on-farm food safety programs . . . [and] On-Farm Food Safety programs are industry led initiatives designed to provide an optimum level of safety for products produced on farms. These programs undergo national technical review and are implemented by producers with help from their provincial commodity groups. Implementation by producers may be voluntary or mandatory depending on the commodity.

We see under this performance measure, “production produced under on-farm food safety programs,” that for chicken farms it's mandatory, but for hog farms and beef feed lots it's voluntary. I'm wondering if the minister or the department has considered also making those on-farm food safety programs for hog farms and beef feed lots mandatory as well. Now, that is the first question I have.

The second question that I have is in regard to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the morphing of the Alberta Opportunity Company into this entity. Now, I think that it was last year I was asking about the commercial loans that were provided by this outfit, but I don't recall getting an answer that I was satisfied with. Certainly, in 2002, Mr. Chairman, legislation that we talked about in this Assembly provided for a merger between the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company.

Now, the AOC, as I said, was morphed into this outfit, and while I was spending some time late last fall and early this winter in the Legislature Library going through the Gazettes, I noticed that in the past the Alberta Opportunity Company used to list, I believe on a monthly basis, loan authorizations. If they made a loan of taxpayers' money or money from the Treasury, there was a list of who got the money, the purpose of the loan, and the amount authorized for.

For instance, when we look at a numbered company here, Mr. Chairman – why did I pick a numbered company? – the numbered company that I would be looking at from the Alberta Gazette, February 4, 1998, would be 738926 Alberta Ltd. in Lamont. It's a motel. The majority owner would be Steve Kumar. The loan authorized was $218,000, and the purpose of the loan was to purchase an existing business. There are a lot of them here for that month, and they're for amounts that range from $35,000, $16,000, and they go upwards to $885,000, so the Alberta Opportunity Company did post all its loans in the Gazette.

Now, I have checked the Agriculture Financial Services Act, and there's no requirement to post these loans in the Gazette. I would think that the same practice should follow from the Alberta Opportunity Company through to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. These are tax dollars. Everyone on the government side of the House is always talking about being open and accountable: oh, yes; we're transparent. But this is certainly not open, it's not accountable, and it's certainly not transparent. I would like the minister's assurance that this is going to be changed immediately and that all the loans that are made for whatever reason through the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation are posted in the Gazette in a timely fashion within, say, 60 days of the cheque being cut because I think it's only fair to the taxpayers. If it was done by this Progressive Conservative government at one time, I don't understand why it can't be done now.

Hopefully we're going to have time to get back, Mr. Chairman, to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. But when we look at the ministry of agriculture, it certainly is important. You know, not only do we have the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, we've got the office of the Farmers' Advocate, we've got the Irrigation Council, we've got the Agricultural Products Marketing Council, the Alberta Grain Commission. We look at the mission and the purpose of this department. It is “to enable the growth of a globally competitive, sustainable agriculture and food industry through essential policy, legislation, information and services in partnership with vibrant rural communities.”

Now, I have some general questions, and I think we'll start with this one at this time, Mr. Chairman. One controversial program that has been brought to our attention is this Choice Matters campaign. This is, again, in my opinion and in the opinion of people across the province in the rural communities, a taxpayer-funded campaign to lobby the federal government to abolish the Canadian Wheat Board and to convince Alberta farmers to support this position.

Now, in what line item can I find the funding for this campaign? Where is it located? Where is the money for this Choice Matters campaign located? What is the estimate for this program in this fiscal year? How does the minister justify spending money on this program when the Wheat Board is controlled by democratically elected members and is under the jurisdiction of the federal government? Will the minister re-evaluate spending in this area in light of the federal government's desire to maintain the Canadian Wheat Board for the time being? Certainly, we know that there is a motion on the Order Paper, Mr. Chairman, in this Assembly to dismantle the Wheat Board. I've heard the minister's comments even in Public Accounts on this issue. Where is the money to fund this campaign, and how much?

Clean-up costs for confined feeding operations that have gone bankrupt. Who is responsible for the costs of cleaning up confined feeding operations that have gone bankrupt? Again, this is sort of a related question: what incentives are provided to use the best practices on farm activities such as manure spreading and storage?

Now, again, the AFSC continues to provide loans to small businesses and farming operations. Have the chartered banks been consulted on this practice of providing these loans, particularly to small business? I know that a lot of farming operations are dependent on the AFSC, but if we're out of the business of being in business, we already have the Alberta Treasury Branches in operation. That's our state-owned bank here. What is exactly with this?

What programs are in place to encourage young people specifically to enter the agricultural industry? I support the minister fully on his initiatives and encourage him to continue to rebuild the agricultural industry.

Now, it would be our opinion that a progressive future for the agricultural industry should include producer-owned marketing co-operatives, organic production of meat and vegetables – and that's certainly been started, but I think we've got a long way to go there yet – agricultural tourism, including U-pick, farmers' markets, on-farm programs, direct selling to restaurants, specialty grocery stores, and also value-added specialty products sold to some of the high-end restaurants and grocery stores. What are the supports to these types of organizations, their products, and production methods? Has the minister or any of his departmental officials considered transition funding to cover the operating costs for the seven years that it takes to convert current land in agricultural production to organic farming? I find this budget is more of the same focus as it's focusing again on big agriculture and produces little vision for progressive, innovative activities.

There certainly are environmental issues with coal-bed methane that are being discussed in the Assembly. Questions are coming fast and furious to the Minister of Energy from all parties in the House, but there certainly are environmental issues in the agricultural industry as well.

What economic incentives do you offer or are you contemplating to offer to encourage farmers to steward their land? Do you provide any compensation for the ecological goods and services provided by woodlands, wetlands on private land? Given the greater social goods that wetland areas provide, especially in the agricultural zone, do you provide any economic incentives for woodlot owners to steward their private woodlands? What economic incentives are provided to encourage low-input agriculture or to consume less energy or less pesticides and fertilizer?

Now, fertilizer is very, very expensive. What are we looking at now? The minister probably has this price per tonne on the tip of his tongue, but I think it's about $440, maybe $460 a tonne for fertilizer. I don't know how many producers can afford that, but that's a big issue, and how are we going to deal with that?

Thank you.

Mr. Horner: I note that the hon. member didn't ask for unanimous consent to keep going, so I guess I'll have to respond to some of this.

Prior to doing that, Mr. Chairman, might I indulge to introduce to the Assembly some guests that I see who have entered the gallery who were part of a group that held a reception this evening, which a number of my colleagues and myself were honoured to attend, representing not only the industry which they represent but all of the grains and oil seeds, pulses, and potato growers. These gentlemen are all, I believe, from the Alberta canola commission, and if they would rise after I introduce them. Brian Tischler, Kevin Bender, Andy Haarsma, Stewart Gilroy, and Greg Porozni are in the gallery, and I ask the Assembly to give them a warm welcome. Thank you for that indulgence, Mr. Chairman.

The hon. member went through a lot of different things in his dissertation there, and I guess I'm going to try and knock off a few of them here. The first one was that he mentioned his hope was that the rural development fund would not be a political fund and that it would not be used on a constituency basis, I think is what he said. I would like to make it very clear that what we're talking about doing with this fund is to actually make it arm's length, Mr. Chairman. We want to make it arm's length because we want it accountable. We want it transparent. We want it to react to the desires of the rural communities that are out there that have good projects that need a hand up in terms of getting that project off the ground. We have a report out there called A Place to Grow, which a number of my colleagues in this House put a lot of work into over the last two years, that my predecessor was the impetus to get rolling, that had consultation across this province twice over those two years.

From that consultation came a report called A Place to Grow, which has been introduced in this House, that has 77 recommendations along with a group of principles that this third party or arm's-length group will use to judge every project that comes forward to it. At the same time, we are asking that this group, this third party, will come back to government at the end of each year with a report card, an accountability statement as to what they did with the funds which we have provided to them. They will be able to tell us what the project was and how it did affect and impact on rural development and the rural lifestyles in Alberta.

It is very important to us, Mr. Chairman, that these initiatives come from the ground up, that they're not driven top down, like some of our colleagues opposite might want to have done, but that they're driven from the community, that it's based on partnerships, that it's based on what the community knows as their strengths. They know their weaknesses. What they need is our expertise to help them in whatever way to facilitate that project and to get it off the ground.

So to my hon. colleague, no, it is not a political fund. No, it's not on a constituency basis, and, yes, the funds will be used properly, and it is accountable.

He waxed a bit about contemplating giving me a CAIS test on the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program. I would be more than willing to take up that challenge as long as he would be willing to do the same and to understand what every aspect of that program entails and how the changes that we make to that program may impact different farming operations in our province. I think I might have a better understanding of where that's going and would be perfectly willing to do that.

I believe that where we're going with the CAIS program is where we need to head. It's something that we've had a lot of consultation on in this province. In fact, prior to the reception, which we were at, our guests in the gallery, along with a number of other grains and oilseeds producers, were actually having a meeting with some of our people from the Ag Financial Services Corp., who are the experts in the CAIS program, to talk about where we need to go to listen to the producers about where we need to go with this program and how we make it better.

In fact, what we have found is that we are all on the same page when it comes to the changes that we need to make. We're all on the same page when it comes to the changes which we're planning and which we're proposing to the federal government. The industry has told us that they do not want to throw out the principles that CAIS was developed on and the targeted approach that helps.

The hon. member talks about: how is this going to help the family farm? Well, I would like the hon. member, first of all, to define for me what he considers a family farm and how that relates to the 53,000 farming operations that we have in the province and how many of them he thinks would not be family farms. I know that in my own farm background in our family the farm came under a corporation. It was called Westglen Farms Ltd., and we were very proud of that. A number of my brothers are shareholders still in an entity that is somewhat related to that. That was a family farm to me, hon. member, and while it may have seemed to be a corporation on the outside, it certainly was very much a family farm. Some family farms that I'm aware of are extremely large and considered to be fairly large corporations. It requires a certain level of expertise once you get to those dollar amounts.

There was a comment made – and I take a little bit of exception – about some quotes that may or may not have been attributed to one of my colleagues on the government side from the past year from a municipality. I know that at the meeting that we had, where this was brought up from the floor actually, this was addressed, and I think that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is one of our strongest supporters in cabinet, in Treasury Board, in our government, and in our caucus for rural Alberta and the rural development of Alberta because it includes municipalities, Mr. Chairman, and he is a very strong proponent of that. He's also a small businessman and understands business.

I think the hon. member attributed to me some sort of comment about: well, if your farm size is four to six quarters, maybe you should smell the roses or something like that. Hon. member, I never made those comments and never would because in my own riding I have a number of U-pick operations. I have a number of ag tourism operations. I have a number of, quite frankly, CFOs that are not on more than two or three quarters. The size of the farm – size does not matter, Mr. Chairman, in this particular case. You can have a very successful farming business on one quarter. In fact, you could probably have a successful business on 80 acres, dependent upon what it is you're going into.

We have specific programs to protect our farming operations because if all of the things that we're working on to make the environment, where producers and farm operations can generate their margin out of the marketplace – if we're successful on all fronts that we're working on, the programs that we have in place are backstops. They're not programs to protect. They're not programs to insulate. They're not programs to put fences up. They're programs to backstop our producers so that they can be the entrepreneurs that I know they can be so that they can compete in a fair market, in an open marketplace, and get legitimate and adequate returns for the product that they produce.

Things like the World Trade Organization. There's probably over – well, I've heard numbers as high as $300 billion in upside in commodity prices if we were to remove all of the export subsidies, domestic subsidies, and export supports around the world. That's why the developing countries are wanting to remove those subsidies. That's why countries that are even considered rather socialist are moving away from subsidies because they know that they can't afford to do that, and they know that it simply drives the commodity price down for their producers. It's counterproductive, and there's no reason why we should jump into that game.

Other things that we're doing to help market our product. The hon. member mentioned food safety and security. This is something that has been on Alberta's agenda for quite some time. As a past ag exporter I understand the value of being able to differentiate ourselves in the international marketplace. It is extremely important in today's climate that we play from our strengths, and our strengths, Mr. Chairman, revolve around the ability to have safe food and show the world how we are good stewards of our environment. We probably lead the nation in our environmental farm planned growth. In development under the ag policy framework, which is a national program, we are probably one of the leaders in getting our farmers to look to using this as a marketing tool as well as understanding that we are good stewards of the land because if we're not, we won't make money. We won't be able to create the type of economic growth on farms that we need to have to sustain our agriculture.

The best program that we can do to encourage young Albertans to get into the business of agriculture is to create an environment that makes agriculture profitable. It's no different than any other business that young people might be interested in getting involved in. If it's profitable, that will attract young entrants to the industry. That, Mr. Chairman, is the goal of this government, to make the ag industry a profitable industry, one that people want to be involved in and want to get into. Everything that we do in our department is geared in that direction.

The hon. member spoke a little bit about our business plan and food security on poultry operations and also was wondering why it wasn't on hog farms and a few other places. We have probably one of the best, as I said, food security systems in the world. We work with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency on a number of fronts, whether that's on a reportable disease basis or whether it's not. We have working relationships with all of our livestock sectors on contingency planning should there be a problem. Should there be something that may happen within one of our farms as it relates to the – I think this is where he was talking about the CFOs. No, that was later on, but anyway we'll talk about that now. We have probably some of the best legislation in Canada as it relates to confined feeding operations under our Ag Operation Practices Act and through the Natural Resources Conservation Board. We have made some changes there over the last year as well as a substantial amount of consultation with the industry and other NGO entities that are involved in environmental stewardship. We are certainly, I would suggest, leaders in that field and building upon the strengths that we have there.

The hon. member talked a little bit about AFSC and ag lending versus the Alberta Opportunity Company and also lending. We did bring in some legislation, and I believe that it was after this 1998 situation that the hon. member mentioned. Freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation may actually preclude us from letting everyone know who's got the loans with different entities. I think that there are a number of farmers and producers who might object to having their finances displayed for all to see. I think that it's important that we keep some confidentiality there so that producers are not concerned about getting a loan from AFSC. In fact, we are considered sometimes to be lenders of last resort. We do have the disaster farm loan program. We are viewed as being agricultural lenders in the community.

We're also viewed as being commercial lenders in rural Alberta and have a very good track record, hon. member, in terms of how well we do in comparison to the other banks. Speaking of the other banks, the hon. member wondered whether we had consulted with chartered banks. In fact, hon. member, AFSC is in many instances the lead bank on a syndication to help develop something in rural Alberta with other chartered banks. The chartered banks and the Farm Credit corporation, which is the federal entity which would be considered similar to our AFSC, in many cases work in conjunction with each other to try to help develop the commercial viability progress or business plan for a particular project. We have, as I said, probably one of the best records in the country in terms of our lending portfolio, and we're very proud of that, actually, because it means that we're developing commercial activity in rural Alberta, and at the same time we're doing it prudently, so taxpayers' dollars are not going to waste.

The hon. member talked about: are we developing things for the young people like developing the organic industry? Mr. Chairman, we do a lot of work through the Ag and Food Council through our business development branch in terms of helping with farmers' markets, in terms of helping with developing the ag tourism portfolio. In fact, the hon. member might be interested to know that that's a $700 million part of our agricultural economy that I spend a lot of time talking about and encouraging. When you talk about a small farm operation that might be only 80 acres, it might be specializing in exactly one of those areas. My brother-in-law does a lot of organic farming and has made quite a success out of actually turning his entire farm into an organic operation and has grown organic flaxseed as well as other crops that have turned out to be quite profitable for him.

I think I will go now, Mr. Chairman, to one of the favourite topics of this House, and that's the Canadian Wheat Board. The hon. member made the comment about our Choice Matters campaign being a taxpayer-funded campaign to abolish the Canadian Wheat Board, and I really need to correct the hon. member. It may sound good to say that in some of the circles that he travels in. It may make a headline, perhaps, but it's not the truth. The truth is that we don't want to abolish the Wheat Board.

The truth is that what we want to do is create an entity that producers could own that's transparent, that's accountable, that is actually creating some opportunity for our producers in value-added opportunities in this country, that is something that producers can look to and be proud of, and that the majority of Alberta producers might even want to participate in because currently they do not. Our Choice Matters campaign is in our business plan, and it is located in our budget estimates. I don't have the number right in front of me, but we'll get that for the hon. member. I'd also point out that the Canadian Wheat Board spends an awful lot of producer money protecting itself. I'm a little concerned about that. I think producers might want to look at that as well.

When he talks about democratically elected members, the hon. member should perhaps tell the rest of the story. In order for any change to be made on that board, you'd have to get an 80 per cent vote because there are five appointed members to that board who are not elected by producers. The hon. member was also very correct in suggesting that it's a federal entity, but it's not a national entity. It's not across this country; it is only in four provinces. All I'm asking, hon. member, is to let my people go because we don't want to be there.

I think, Mr. Chair, that there is another type of arrangement that we could make with the Canadian Wheat Board. It's an arrangement that would create the entity that I spoke of before that would be able to take advantage of opportunities coming out of the WTO. It's an entity that might be able to take advantage of new value-added, value chain type of initiatives in the barley sector. It's an entity that might be able to take advantage of new value-added entities in wheat milling in some of the other areas that we've been looking to grow in the value chain for years and years, that have not occurred in this country and should have. I think that what we are offering producers is the choice between staying raw commodity exporters in a commodity global marketplace, where you're doing nothing but chasing the price down, and a choice of having that market at home, where you might be able to generate some additional value out of what you produce and become better marketers in the process.

I think that with that, Mr. Chair, I'll let some other hon. members wax eloquent as well again.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think that we will probably agree to disagree on some very fundamental issues, but that's part of what this Legislature is about.

I want to say to the minister that I have not seen as much pessimism as I have especially in the grains and oil seeds sector. As the minister correctly pointed out, this has been a long-term problem. We went through the livestock industry, and I'll come to that. I was out, just to pass this on to the minister, at a very large funeral in the Andrew area, which was predominantly farmers. Besides wanting to talk about the third way, the other thing that they wanted to talk about was the desperation that they're facing in their livelihood. I'll come to CAIS, and I'm not going to pretend to be able to understand it all other than there's a great deal of dissatisfaction, as the minister is well aware. He's alluded to that. I talked to another big farmer, that the minister is alluding to, and he said that up in Peace River it probably will cost him money to put his crop in this year. It's that difficult. He's fortunate that he can do it this year and hope for a better year next year, but there are a lot of farmers that can't. I know that the minister is aware of this situation, and I know that he cares about it and wants to change that for people.

The minister said correctly that it has to be profitable. Therein lies the dilemma right now in that sector; it generally is not profitable. We can hope and wait. I know that the minister is working hard trying to influence through the federal government what we can do at the World Trade Organization. Well, with all due respect, I think that we've been trying to change them for 20 years. The problem that we face there: I'm not sure it can be changed. Good luck. If we can do it, great, because I agree with him. The subsidies from the United States and Europe are killing not only us here in Canada but, as the minister correctly pointed out, some of the poorer countries around the world.

I would suggest to him that we're naive in the extreme if we think that the Americans are going to change their policy. The U.S., as the minister is well aware, has a farm bill, and that farm bill is voted on in Washington, not in Geneva. I believe – and the minister can correct me if I'm wrong because he would know this – it's 1 per cent of their national budget. It's about a $15 billion subsidy. That subsidy is wrong, and we're right to fight it, but the problem is that the politics are in the United States. You're dealing with politics here. We know what it's like with the softwood lumber. We know what it's like when you get into the internal politics of the United States. To think that this is going to change: I sincerely say to the minister that I hope he's correct, that we can make those changes, but deep down . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has the floor. If any of you wish to participate in the debate, please identify yourself, and I will recognize you at that time. Currently the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has the floor.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. I know that the minister was listening, and he's the important one. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The point that I'm making is that this is part of their internal policies, and I don't think this is going to change in the foreseeable future. Along with that, then, the Americans are much more important to what we do, but Europe is not going to change what they're doing either. We know what happens in France and other places if you begin to mess around with certain things that they take for granted. The point I make about this, then, is that we have to look, I believe, internally here in Canada at what we can do to help our farmers. I just don't think the other things are going to happen.

I come, then, to the point where he and I may disagree, and I'm sure we will. It's about the Canadian Wheat Board. For the love of me, I can't see how you can compete. I have a graph here. Correct me if I'm wrong, but we are a trading nation, especially in wheat, and I think 80 per cent of our product goes outside of the country. Yes, we should try to do as the minister alluded to, some value-added, and perhaps there are ways that we can work that through. But because we're a trading nation, when I look at who we're competing with, the Canadian Wheat Board is relatively a very small organization. When you look at Cargill, $80 billion Canadian in annual revenue; ADM, $50 billion; Bunge, $40 billion; Dreyfus, around $30 billion; AWB, around $8 billion. The Canadian Wheat Board looks to be about $2 billion or $3 billion, somewhere in that range. So, for the love of me, how are we going to have farmers get into that market if we don't have a single selling desk? I don't know. That's the only way. That's why this was formed to begin with.

That's not to say that it's necessarily perfect. The minister and I have talked about this before, that the Wheat Board itself is trying to do some things differently than they've done in the past, and they've been successful – and I'm sure that the minister is aware; I think it was just last week – working with softwood lumber. How big a victory it is over the long run – we've had these before. They formed together against the North Dakota Wheat Commission because that was harassment. The Wheat Board was involved in that, so it played, I think, a positive role there.

And as a person says, maybe we have certain people that we talk to more than others. NFU President Stewart Wells said at a rally in Toronto of 10,000 farmers from across the country – and this is the point I was making – that there is nothing in the WTO for the farmers of Canada. He said that we've been hearing WTO promises for 20 years, and in those two decades an entire generation of farmers was born and grew up and has left the farm. And I think that's true.

I'll come to CAIS, if I may, in the remaining time.

It's my understanding that this internal fighting between ourselves all the time, you know, with the Wheat Board – those are for it, and those are not; we want dual boards, this, that, and everything – is a waste. The Wheat Board has served us very well over the period of time. Let's see if we can make some changes. The information that I'm getting says, I believe, that the Wheat Board is offering more market choices for farmers. It's offering farmers the choice of selling the crops based on future prices less a discount. There are options that allow farmers to lock in their crop prices, and there are options that allow a farmer to remain in the pool and still get payment up front.

So I believe that they are trying to change too. Perhaps there is some way we can work this out because I honestly say to you that if there's not some sort of single-desk selling, all those people who think that they can compete against Cargill out in open market are dreaming in technicolour. Let me tell you, that's the case. That's why we formed the Wheat Board in the past. The odd one, but how many farmers are going to be able to do that? I just don't believe that it's possible. That's why we need a single desk, and I think that that's something we can do in this country.

I'll move from there about the Wheat Board. I know that we'll probably agree to disagree about that, but I think it's important. Frankly, it's not your people, like the minister said. I think that was a bad choice of words: let my people go. I'm sure he didn't mean that, and I'll take that at its best. Remember that it's up to the farmers really. With the Wheat Board, the elections, the rest of it, it's going to be up to the farmers. There are less and less of them – I think 3 per cent of the population – but they're the ones that are going to make those choices. It won't be us. It won't be politicians in Ottawa or somewhere else. It's going to have to be the farmers.

Then I'll move to the second thing that perhaps he and I can agree somewhat on. I mean, I've looked at the CAIS, and I understand the frustration of farmers. I honestly haven't found anybody yet that says, "Yeah, it's working well." And, of course, I don't think the minister said that. But, again, that was some of the frustration that I was getting out at Andrew. People say: "It's too complicated. You need accountants to do it." I know there was an announcement, a press release – what? – two or three weeks ago, about some changes that were made. This thing has to work. I don't know if it's CAIS. The federal minister said they may have to start over again. I think that this minister disagrees with that. But we're really going to have to make the thing work, or we're going to lose a pile of farmers in a very short period of time. I'm not smart enough to know all the answers there, but I'm smart enough to know that nobody thinks it's working now. I think time is somewhat of the essence if we're going to keep some farmers in the business.

If we don't do some things internally – I mean, maybe we'll get a miracle at the WTO. I think it's in April or something, isn't it? April, May somewhere? Maybe we'll get a miracle there, and all these subsidies will dissipate, but I don't think that that's the case. I foresee that in the rural Alberta that I grew up in, if we don't begin to do some things here internally and work together, probably the only ones left will be bigger farms, whether they're family or not. The traditional family farm that we know will not be there. Many of them have disappeared now. I suppose collective farms, you know, will still operate, and big farms will be all that's left.

I say to the city people that if that happens, that's not going to be good for you because we've had a relatively cheap food policy in this country. You can bet that if that happens, the price of food is certainly going to go up. So I would just say to the minister – he knows much more about CAIS than I do. He’s had to. I wouldn’t even take the test. I do stress that I hope that we can solve that and do it quickly. I think time is of the essence.

I just want to move to the rural development fund a bit. The minister got a letter, I believe – all MLAs got a copy of it – from Alan Hyland, from the Palliser Economic Partnership. Of course, we all know that Alan, or at least some of us do, used to be a Conservative member here in the Legislature. He had a point. The drift of it is that he was talking about the rural development strategy. The letter is to request that the rural development strategy be amended to include specific reference to the current crisis in the grains and oilseeds industry. He goes on to say – and I think it’s an important point – that “economic development theory tells us that before we can attract new and diverse industries, we must look after the businesses we currently have and that those need to be healthy in order to provide the base upon which to build new industries.” He goes on to repeat the obvious thing that we’ve just been discussing, that primary grain and oilseeds “is a homegrown business that is not healthy at this time.”

His point, I think, is a valid one. We can talk all we want about economic diversification in rural Alberta, but the bulk of it is going to be centred around the value-added that the minister talked about, the grains and oilseeds. So that was his question to the minister. Maybe the minister hasn’t had time to talk about it, but if he gets a moment, I wonder if he could tell us in the Legislature how he feels about that.

You know, there’s a new message box coming from the government. We checked through, and eight or nine times we’ve heard “stay tuned.” The hon. Finance minister told us to stay tuned about the rural development fund in her Budget Address, and I’ve heard it a number of times from hon. members. I would just like to find out a little bit more about the rural development fund and where we’re going with it. The minister has mentioned that we’ve set aside $100 million, and we’re asked to stay tuned. I’d like to know when we’re going to begin to look at some of the details, and maybe that would answer the question that Mr. Hyland sent from Palliser. So I’m looking for that.

When can rural communities expect to see the plans for disbursement of monies? The minister explained that it’s at arm’s length from government, and that’s probably good, although I’m not sure exactly what that means. Might the minister, if he has some time, give us some update on possible projects that the fund might be applied to besides those listed in the news release of March 29? For example, will any funds be made available for private citizens rather than municipalities or services, what guidelines, that sort of thing? Will the fund’s administrators work with other ministries to push a rural agenda? Will Infrastructure, for example, partner with the fund to establish and support emergency services even if it’s just outfitting – and we had this discussion in the Legislature – volunteer fire services? Will the minister work to have other ministries match grants with the fund on projects that apply; for example, infrastructures, emergency services, environments, water programs, et cetera?

The minister did, I think, explain why his budget has gone down from the previous year. There’s a $205 million drop, I believe, in this year’s budget. We have the rural development fund, and I hope it’s not the case that we’re taking money away from the department.

The other few questions as I come near to the end. In view of the minister’s discussion about profitability and planning and competitiveness, its budget dropped there by a third, and I wonder why that would be the case, in view of the things the minister was talking about. Within that department the farm water program has had its budget slashed in half, from $4.5 million to $2 million, and especially with the discussion that we’ve had about water in this Legislature this session, I wonder why that’s the case. Again, with the planning and competitiveness department, the farm income support program has vanished. I don’t think it’s vanished, but we’re trying to figure out where it is now, which department that’s in.

I don’t have time to go through this. I just want to throw out some issues that have come forward to us. I don’t have time to go through it in great detail, but what’s happening with mobile butchers? I believe there are 111. I know that they’re not supposed to be resold off-farm and certainly not for commercial resale, but we’re told that, apparently, this is happening on a fairly regular basis. Of course, there’s a danger there if that is happening, because they don’t have the same standards as meat packing plants and abattoirs.

We’re told that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is starting to take some action, and I wonder if his department is aware of this and what they’re doing about it. He may not know right here, but perhaps he could get back to me on this because we wouldn’t want an accident to happen inadvertently, you know, with the BSE with the different standards. I’m not suggesting that this is going to happen, but I think it’s an important issue. It’s been brought to our attention, at least, and we’ve been told it’s been brought to the minister’s department’s attention and that they have not been very forthcoming about it. So I’m raising it here so that we can get that information back.

I’m coming to the end, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister’s attention. If he can’t answer all the questions here, he can perhaps get back to us at another time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks to the hon. member for some very good questions. First of all, the hon. member is very correct in talking about some of the pessimism that is out in the industry and in the sectors today. I think that any time you go through a year like we went through last year or, in fact, the last three to five years, there is going to be a certain amount of pessimism in an industry.

I think that what we’re trying to do is to create the atmosphere where we can pull ourselves out of what really is a crisis in agriculture today. That is around the global marketing that we do, around trying to make new markets for what are traditional markets because if we keep doing the same things that we’ve done, we’re going to continue to get the same results we got. We have to move forward from that, which is why, hon. member, very recently we have been doing some consultations with grains and oilseed producers in Alberta.

We recently, about a week ago, were in Airdrie with a group of about 20 to 25 grains and oilseed producers from various areas around southern Alberta. What we were talking about was not the crisis that we face, not the immediate, what do we have to do to save ourselves, but: how do we make this industry long-term sustainable? Where are the opportunities? Where is the optimism in this industry? How can we achieve what everybody believes is out there?”

I can tell the hon. member that while there is certainly some concern, and we would be naive to think that there is not concern out there in terms of where the grains and oilseed sector is going, there is also some optimism when one looks at what we’re trying to accomplish in the biofuels industry, when one looks at what we’re trying to accomplish at WTO – and I want to get to WTO in a minute – when one looks at what we’re trying to accomplish in the value chain and new generation co-ops.

Here’s an area, hon. member, where we’re probably going to agree, and you’re going to be surprised about it. I think a new gen co-op where producers own it is a good idea, and I think the marketing management is a good idea. I think that there are opportunities for our producers to diversify their income by having ownership down that value chain. That’s something that we’re going to push. That’s something that we’re going to work through our programming. By that, I mean that the producer might own a piece of that biodiesel production facility. The producer might own a piece of that slaughter facility, which is what’s going on today. The producer might even own a piece of that pasta manufacturing plant some day if we could ever attract somebody to invest in one, so that you didn’t have a single-source supplier, which is currently the problem. The producer might even be in ownership in a malt plant here in this province, a brand new malt plant, if we could ever attract someone to invest in our area when we can get rid of the fact that he would have to have a single source of supply. That’s an important factor, hon. member.

So these consultations – we did one in Airdrie, we did one just last night in Westlock, and I attended both of those. Unfortunately, I won’t be able to attend the one that’s coming up in Red Deer very shortly. What we’re doing is not turning these into big political things. You didn’t hear about me going out and meeting with a bunch of farmers. That’s not the intent here. The intent here is to come out with some ideas and some solutions and some road maps as to how we can help our industry move forward. When we get those three done, we’re going to bring those industry groups back together again at Government House.

The hon. member would know that I had about four consultations at Government House last year on various issues. Food safety was the first one. The next one was on the BSE issue. The next one was on the CAIS program, and it was the producers in that meeting, all 48 producer groups, that decided on the Alberta position for the CAIS program – and that was last May, June – because I wanted to know from our producer groups what they wanted me to take to my first fed/provincial/territorial meeting on CAIS.

The basis of where we’re going on CAIS today came from those producers that met with me at Government House and came out of there with a consensus on almost everything except inventory evaluations, which we couldn’t even get the accountants to agree on, which we’re still working on. But that’s the basis of where we’re going with our CAIS program. I’ll talk a little bit more about the CAIS program later, but the message I wanted to get back to the member is that the consultations are what’s driving our policy as to how we’re going to come out of this crisis.

The WTO. For 20 years the Doha round, all of these things we’ve been talking about – well, if the Americans don’t move, the Europeans won’t move, and if the Europeans won’t move, we don’t have a deal. We talk about in the past that Brazil, India, and some of these countries did not have the power they have today in agriculture, hon. member. The largest producer of beef products today is Brazil. The largest soybean grower today is Brazil. The largest markets around the world are no longer the United States and Europe. They’re in those other countries. So there is a substantial amount of influence being pressed into service, if you will, and remember that the WTO is not just agriculture. WTO is a whole raft of other things that have become in some country’s minds even more important than agriculture. The services sector in India, as an example, has become a huge business for India. There is a huge amount of contracting out under the technology industries that we have today that is going straight to India and coming back the next day. These types of service deliveries are becoming an important part of the WTO negotiation, and they are pressing all of these countries to sit down and make a deal.

I find it very, very interesting, hon. member, when you talk about the farm bill in the United States. I find it extremely interesting that there’s not a lot of talk of the replacement of the farm bill. There’s a lot of talk about a fuel bill, about how the United States’ ethanol production is going to double between now and 2012. Well, what makes ethanol? Corn. About how the development of the biofuels and biodiesel industry in the United States is growing at a tremendous rate – what makes biodiesel in the United States is soybeans. In Brazil they do not import a lot of oil. They are 85 per cent blend on ethanol. They create their ethanol out of sugar cane. Do you know what happened to the price of sugar cane? It went up.

The subsidy to farming is going to be in the draw off of the product taking it out of the supply, which will increase the price. They finally figured out that by ad hoc programs or per-acre programs all they did was capitalize it into the land base. We don’t want to go there. The rest of the world is going away from there. It’s the last thing that we want to do, but it’s a heck of an opportunity for us.

Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member, I think that if there has ever been a better opportunity to try to get a deal out of the WTO, it is now, and it is to help convince these countries that an aggressive WTO deal is of benefit to all of our global trading partners.

It’s interesting, too, that the hon. member stated that we are the third largest exporter. We are an exporting nation. There’s no doubt about it. Eighty per cent of our product, he mentioned, goes outside the country. The Canadian Wheat Board as an organization is a relatively small organization competing with some very large corporations. I’m sure the hon. member is aware that most of the marketing that is done for the Canadian Wheat Board is done by those corporations which he mentioned. It’s not done by the Canadian Wheat Board. There are 26 agents of the Canadian Wheat Board. Well, there used to be 26. It may have been constricted. Right now I have no idea what the actual number is today because we’ve had a few go out of being agents. The simple fact is that many of those companies are the ones that are doing the marketing of those products.

The other thing that I would throw out to the hon. member is that the Canadian Wheat Board handles wheat, and it handles barley. It doesn’t handle canola. We have some guests in the gallery from the canola industry. I’m sure that if you asked them, they would not want to have a single desk. I’m sure that you’d also find out if you were out in the country – and probably at Andrew you heard this too: canola was my Cinderella crop; canola was the thing that kept me in business.

Canola, hon. member, is not a Canadian Wheat Board single-desk sold item. It is a free market, and producers are very good at marketing that product. They’re very good at marketing fava beans. They’re very good at marketing oats, which, by the way, used to be under the Canadian Wheat Board. Up until the late ’80s, when it was removed from the Canadian Wheat Board, we did not have one human consumption oat-processing plant in this province, yet we grew most of the oats in Canada. Today we have two at least, and we have a thriving pony oat industry.

The organic growers, for the most part, will tell you that they resent the fact that they have to sell their product to the Canadian Wheat Board and then turn around and buy it back before they can actually send it somewhere else. Ridiculous. It is a throttle on value-added because the Canadian Wheat Board's sole purpose, hon. member, was set up in the late '30s to export into this global market, which you spoke of, a raw commodity. It was never intended to derive value-added industries in western Canada.

The Ontario farmers in the demonstration, which you mentioned, I would suggest to you are rather lucky because they don't have a Canadian Wheat Board. They do have an Ontario wheat board, but they can opt out of that.

Mr. Martin: They weren't very happy. That's why.

Mr. Horner: I understand what you're saying. Don't misinterpret what I'm saying. If the Canadian Wheat Board were to change itself in the way that the Alberta government is now contemplating that we change it, we would in fact be quite supportive of it. In fact, we'd help structure that so that the farmers have a good competitively owned operation.

The Canadian Wheat Board over the last few years, I will grant, has been offering more choice in some of their product categories, but I will also tell you that I had the chief executive officer of a major world-wide malt company tell me flat out that the reason they are now in a northern United States state is because they did not want to be caught with a single source of supply in the Canadian Wheat Board. By locating just outside of our boundary, they can buy from the board whenever they want. In fact, the board courts them to buy from them, but they don't have to. We lose the jobs, we lose the value added, we lose the opportunity, hon. member, and that is shameful.

An Hon. Member: How do you really feel?

Mr. Horner: Yeah. How do I really feel?

You mentioned that it's up to the farmers to vote, and I would suggest to the hon. member that we've had some very interesting recommendations on how that vote should take place. Certainly, we've had some consultations where a recommendation went forward that the vote should be weighted based on the amount of product perhaps that that producer is shipping to the Canadian Wheat Board. If he has got a bigger stake or risk, perhaps his vote should be weighted heavier. I'm sure the hon. member would agree that that may be a valid situation. It would be interesting to see how that vote would turn out.

I would also suggest to the hon. member that in Alberta – and I was talking about Alberta producers, and these are the producers I was talking about when I made the comment “let my people go,” and I apologize, probably a little bit of overexuberance on my part. In 2003 we did a survey of Alberta producers, and 6 in 10 in that survey would want choice for wheat. Seven in 10 would want choice in barley. I think that's a fairly significant factor, and we should be listening to that.

The hon. member also mentioned CAIS, and we'll talk a little bit more about CAIS. He also mentioned that the federal minister and I may be on a little bit of a different platform. I would suggest to you that after a little bit of confusion about wording, I think we're a lot closer than I thought. I answered the question in the House not too long ago by saying that I think we're a lot closer on where we're going.

Well, what Alberta wants, going back to our meetings at Government House last year, is a business risk management program that is relevant to my operation. If I'm a producer in the province of Alberta, I want a business risk management program that is relevant to my operation, perhaps even allowing me to have an individualized crop insurance program, perhaps even allowing me to have individualized savings programs that are tailored to an investment in agricultural initiatives, perhaps even having the ability to be bankable. Wouldn't that be fun? That's where we need to get it to. We need to have a program, as CAIS was originally designed to be, that's bankable.

I can tell the hon. member that I met with the Canadian Bankers' Association last week, and I put it to them that I was very disappointed that what I hear in the country is that the chartered banks are walking away from agriculture. They assured me that that's not the case, but they also assured me that they are sitting back and waiting before they can use our income stabilization programs as bankable until we're done fiddling with them. The last thing that we need to do is create more instability in our banking community as it relates to our agricultural community. When I told them the changes that we want to make and where we want to go with the CAIS program, they were very pleased with that. They could see where this would help them make better decisions for their producers and the producers to make better business decisions for their operations.

So we want it to be relevant. We want it to be bankable. We want it to be simpler to understand, not necessarily simpler but certainly simpler to understand because it also has to be targeted. It needs to be targeted to those individual operations where the hurt is most felt because if it's not targeted, then, hon. member, we're not being very prudent with Alberta taxpayers' dollars and we're not being very prudent with the industry as a whole.

In order for it to be targeted, it has to have a level of complexity. Therefore, it can be simple, but it still has to be targeted and has to be complex. It also has to be timely. It has to have a component in it that can be triggered quickly, like an advance component, so that I as a producer knowing what my entitlement is for the last year can go to the CAIS office and say: “Boy, I'm in trouble this spring. I need to get an advance on what my CAIS entitlement is going to be. I need it quick and I need it now.” Hon. member, we're there. We have the advance mechanism. There is a half billion dollars available to producers in the programs that we're offering today. We need the producers to take the steps to help us in a very difficult situation. I agree with CAIS, but it's there.

The other thing it needs to be is a tool. We lead the nation, I believe, in the software development of the CAIS program. I applaud the Ag Financial Services group and the president and the entire staff of my rural development and financial groups in the department because under very trying circumstances, as you may imagine – and as an MLA I know that you get these calls as well. Think of the calls that AFSC is getting. At the same time that they are trying to essentially create a program out of scratch, create software out of scratch, take old program information from FIDP and NISA and all these other things and try to make that the history for every producer in this province on 35,000 or 30,000 applications – and we've asked them to make all these other changes along the way – they have done yeoman's work to get us to where we are. When we make a presentation on where we're going, they have the credibility that we're going to get there, and I think they will. In fact, I'm banking on it, as many of us are.

So it needs to be a tool where the producer can go online. I don't know if the hon. member is familiar with a program called QuickTax from Intuit Canada. It's a very simple program. Plug it in. A nice little voice comes on and says: well, we're going to do your taxes today; you need these forms. Hon. member, I want to get to that point where the producer can use it, play with it, use it as a planning tool, and then print it off and take it to his bank. We'll be there I hope by the end of this year if not sooner.

I think I've talked enough about CAIS. I think I've given you an idea where we're – oh, the difference between us and the federal government. Alberta has advocated for some time – and this also comes out of our round-table discussion at Government House – that the disaster component should be separated from the income stabilization component. On that I could make this statement. I agree that the disaster component of CAIS needs to be replaced. The income stabilization component of CAIS needs to be transformed. There you have some semantics, but between ourselves and the federal minister we're basically on the same page.

As it relates to the grains and oilseeds industry, rural development is not just agriculture. Rural development is the rural way of life.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased today to rise to speak to the estimates on the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Some of the things that I've just heard echo why many farmers that I've talked to in Alberta are afraid of what's happening with this government and afraid of the upcoming WTO talks. The cheap food policy, as mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, can be reflected in the pricing of commodity goods and the pricing of commodities that we've seen for our foodstuffs and our farm production for many years.

The nature of farm income is such that right now if we didn't have an energy boom, if we didn't have $60 to $70 a barrel oil price, many, many, many farms would go under. I think the figure is something like three-quarters of farm family income right now is off-farm family income, and that is indicative of what has happened to agriculture in Alberta.

My family used to farm. Did pretty good actually. Got a good offer on the old homestead. I still kind of miss it in a way.

An Hon. Member: It was more than a dollar, was it?

Mr. Backs: It was more than a dollar.

I still kind of miss it, actually miss it quite a bit, especially in the spring.

Mr. Rogers: The smell of the manure?

Mr. Backs: The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon asked me: the smell of the manure? Certainly.

We would bring all the school kids out some years and herd cattle, get a few of the neighbours on horseback and bring them four or five miles, and it was a big show. But that's not there anymore, and that's not there for a lot of families. In fact, I think that on our old road probably three-quarters of the families have moved, and those farmsteads are no longer there. That's what's happened to Alberta agriculture. It's not there anymore.

We seem to see a move more and more and more to give up to the big foreign owners, the big foreign producers, the big guys that were there in the early days of agriculture in Alberta, the days when the co-ops were formed, when the Wheat Board was formed a little later. The reason why people wanted to have a single source of supply was so that they could control the price to some degree against people who were controlling the price against them, who were keeping the prices down as they're being kept down today.

The source of the lack of farm income right now is the fact that people cannot produce their commodities because they're not getting a decent price. If anybody's read the Western Producer, if anybody's read The Economist, if anybody's followed Doha, if anybody's followed any of the rounds of the World Trade Organization or any world trade talks that have anything to do with agriculture over the last generation, they would know that the farm bill never really changes in the U.S. They would find that the Europeans never really change in their price supports for farm goods, and there are some good reasons for that. Many people in Europe in the Second World War starved.

Food price policy is defence policy, and it's considered very differently from what we consider it here today. It seems that it's considered very differently, I guess, by our governments across Canada and in Alberta. I find that odd in terms of how we're going to deal with price supports. Many farmers are afraid of what's going to happen at the WTO if their livelihoods are dealt away even more than they've been dealt away in the past.

It's not only a cheap food policy; it's a high input policy. I mean, the problems – especially if you look at the harvest last fall, which coincided with a very high energy price. A high energy price affects many inputs, everything from fertilizing to grain drying, you know, the gas for grain dryers. People are just getting away from that because it doesn't work anymore. It's not cost-effective in many areas. Many of these things are very problematic, and the inputs are almost not worth it. I mean, to put anhydrous or something like that through, the cost of doing that is prohibitive for many producers now, yet those are the types of inputs that increase production and make an operation efficient.

I have a number of questions regarding page 90, the ministry statement of operations. Just looking at some of the aspects, I can see that there's $100 million increase between the 2005-06 forecast and the 2006-07 estimates. I think that many people look forward to seeing what that proves to be. But – and there are some big buts – we look that over time the '04-05 industry development of $132 million is down to $44 million. That's almost $90 million. I read $88 million or $90 million decrease from that time, just a couple years ago. I wonder about that $100 million. I mean, it doesn't look so good anymore.

I look at the farm income supports and how they drop from the 2004-05 actual to almost half in '08-09. I look at the program expenses dropping from $1.287 billion to $969 million. That's a fairly substantial drop over time, and it seems to be dropping almost every year in the forecast of program expense accounts. I would hope that some of the supports would go down as agriculture prospers and increases, but I see no real reason to expect that. I just see that as cuts, and I would ask the minister to explain those.

Some items seem hard to find in these figures. I just wonder: in terms of some of the alternative cropping, I can't exactly see from these where we're seeing the development of some of the specialty crops like borage and rhubarb and, you know, developing more market and cropping for seed potatoes. I think there are some other areas of Alberta that could do quite well with that. And fibre crops: you know, I was pleased to see the minister speak of some development in organic flaxseed.

I think fish farming is something that we really have not seen develop an awful lot. There is some for stocking of government fisheries and dugouts and such. But, for example, where is our market development for plate trout, for restaurant trout and things like this, which there is obviously a market for? There are many restaurants which put that forward as an Alberta delicacy.

Mr. Rogers: Rhubarb?

Mr. Backs: Actually, rhubarb is. You know, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon is speaking up an awful lot. Rhubarb is actually very, very well established, and if I remember correctly, I think that this is one of the best areas in the world to produce rhubarb if anybody is looking for different crops. It's a good area for things like borage. Some members probably don't even know what that is. There are many things like this that can diversify agriculture and can actually improve it. I would hope that the members on the government side would support the development of alternative crops. Actually, rhubarb, for example, is very traditional to the western Canadian diet, so to speak. I could take a little diet.

Back to the WTO, there's no doubt that subsidies are counterproductive on a national and international scale, but I don't think that we can honestly expect the American farm bill to be repealed next month or two months from now. I do not expect, with all the far more larger demonstrations that we see in France and other countries – Germany, Britain even – when any of those supports are decreased just a little bit, that we are going to see those go away.

Certainly, you know, we have some things in common in some ways with countries like Argentina and Australia, Brazil perhaps, in terms of beef production. I even worked for a while on a ranch in Argentina, come to think of it. You know, just remembering some of these things.

Mr. MacDonald: A gaucho, or what do you call that?

Mr. Backs: I wasn't really a gaucho. I mean, I rode a horse and did some things, herded some cattle around.

I would urge the minister to deal with caution when he goes to the WTO because many, many Alberta farmers are fearful of what might become of that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to get to the hon. member's comments, but I'm going to maybe finish off a little bit on the questions from the previous hon. member. He mentioned the budget drop. He thought that it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $200 million. I just want to perhaps go back over that fact. This somewhat answers some of the other hon. member's questions with regard to why the fluctuation in our support program payments and our estimate versus what our actual is.

One has to remember that a large, large portion of our budget is based on our estimate of what the support payments might be through crop insurance, through CAIS, and through some of the other programs that we run: revenue insurance coverage, those sorts of things. We try to estimate based on the best information we can. I mentioned the 20-year historical. We try to estimate where those numbers might land. It's a very difficult thing to do because we don't know and we don't have a great crystal ball as to where those crops and how those things are going to all pan out.

To be more specific, the actual ministry spending decrease from the '05-06 budget is approximately $53 million. That's a result of a combination of things, one being that the Canada/Alberta fed cattle set-aside program of $133 million, which was in previously, is gone because, thank God, our borders are open on under-30 month animals, as well as $43.7 million for production insurance expenses, which also were reduced and therefore reduced our budget. Then we add back in the hundred million for the RDI, for the rural development initiative, and we add back in $20 million for specified risk material disposal research, and we also add in $2 million additional money for the irrigation infrastructure rehabilitation. So that kind of balances us out to, net, roughly a $53 million drop. It's based on the assumptions that we have.

The planning and competitiveness. Both hon. members suggested that, well, gee, we must have cuts in those areas, and nothing's further from the truth. What we are doing, though, is that we have programs which are no longer available to us, either the fed cattle set-aside program or some of the other programs that were part of the APF. We're working to have what, I guess, would be called APF 2 come forward.

To give an example, the hon. member had asked about the farm water program. The farm water program is an important program, and we do value it. The farm water program budget actually has decreased from $7 million in '05-06 to $2 million in '06-07 due to a lack of continued funding from the federal government as per the APF agreement. We are currently working on our agreements with the federal government to restore some of that, and hopefully, hon. members, we'll be able to bring that forward in due course and in due time.

The other thing that the hon. member brought up were the mobile butchers. For many years in Alberta we've had what we call on-farm slaughter for personal use or family use, family being a broadly defined type of a situation. Mobile butchers are operating in the province, and they are for on-farm slaughter. We've had a lot of, you know, somewhat eloquent discussion of what farming was in the past. In many cases I'm glad that farming isn't the way it was in 1930, or we would have a problem. We'd have serious problems all the way through our industry. We want to ensure that mobile butchers are of quality because in large part farmers aren't doing the butchering themselves. They're getting somebody in, or they're taking the quarters to a facility. These mobile butchers have decided to utilize their equipment and their expertise to do on-farm slaughter. They can do that, and it is something that producers and families need to be aware of, that that meat is for their own consumption; it is not for resale. We do have people that are watching that very closely right now, hon. member.

I'm going to move on to, well, the rural development fund. How are we going to do this? I mentioned before that we wanted it to be at an arm's length because the rural development initiative is not based on supports to agriculture and farming. For the farm years of '03, '04, '05 our business risk management programs, our support programs have already put over a billion dollars into the farming community. As I mentioned earlier, there's a half a billion dollars that's still on the table.

The federal government is discussing. I understand that they are going to have some dollars in their budget when it comes forward. When their budget comes forward, we may, hon. member, have to make some decisions about whether or not we are going to participate in whatever they might do, whether or not it's something that we've already done. We might have to do something more. My colleagues are prepared for that discussion, and as and when it happens, we're going to move forward. That's for the short term, and that's to answer the questions as they related to the letter that the hon. member mentioned about the farm community being able to survive so that there is a rural development to have.

As I said before, rural development is not just agriculture; it is the rural community. It's the vibrancy of rural Alberta. It's the economic development of rural Alberta that isn't just the agriculture sector. It may indirectly be the value chain of agriculture, and I hope it is because that's really where it should be. It should be the expansion of our livestock sector. It should be the expansion of our value-added components that might even be indeed owned by a new generation co-op that's producer owned, or it may even be a partnership with one of those large companies which some members across the way seem to have a fear of. Well, in actual fact, for most production of agriculture a lot of those big companies are our customers, and we should be acknowledging that we do have those customers.

I'm going to switch now to the other hon. member. I'm not exactly sure or understand which big foreign owners have been buying up small farms in Alberta because I don't know of any, and perhaps the hon. member misspoke. We don't have a large preponderance of corporate farms in Alberta. Well over 90 per cent of the farms in Alberta are family owned, whether that's in a corporate sense, as I mentioned earlier, or whether they're owned as a partnership or whether they're owned in a co-operative venture. You know, we have a large contingent of the Hutterite Brethren in our province that owns a number of operations. I would hope that the hon. member is not referring to those in a negative way. It would be understandable if he misunderstood that, but I hope that's not where he was headed.

He mentioned, too, that he was concerned or fearful about what was going to happen at the WTO. I am hopeful that he also understands that 90 per cent of Canada's agriculture is trade dependent in one way, shape, or another. The WTO is the single biggest thing that is hampering those industries from growing and actually getting the value out of the product that he mentioned that they're not getting. On the one hand, you can't be saying: I don't want that to happen. I'm hoping that he's not suggesting that we would come in with a farm bill type of situation in Alberta. Certainly not only Alberta; not the rest of Canada. As I said before, what happens in those areas – and you did mention that the subsidy levels in both areas have not really changed all that much – is that it does distort those commodities that those subsidies are on, and it distorts the prices. That's why countries that don't get into subsidy game are very much adamant about getting an aggressive outcome in the WTO.

You mentioned Argentina, Brazil. All of these countries do not want to get into capitalizing the land values with subsidy. That's what's happened in Europe and the United States. I happened to have the blessing of being able to live in the United States for about three years and work for one of these large companies which I'm sure the hon. member would feel that he would have something to fear from and had a good deal of time to talk to producers in that area because it was an agricultural venture. I would suggest to you that agriculture and the farmers in the United States feel that their livelihood is just as endangered and that they don't get the return that they should get for the commodities that they produce even though they have this big farm bill. It's because those subsidies have been capitalized in their land values, and the only way they'll get them out is if they sell the land. As we generationalize our farming operations and you have per-acre subsidies that continue to be put into the value of the land when it's sold, you have to continue to raise that per-acre in order to have any additional benefit to it.

The other problem with the farm bill is that it's targeted at a commodity. It's not targeted at an operation; it's targeted at a commodity. I understand that the hon. member had some experience in some international trade and perhaps even some of those ventures where he would understand that a subsidy targeted at a commodity distorts the market for that commodity. That is what we're dealing with. That is where a substantial amount of our problems are being derived from. Subsidy distorts the commodity, distorts the market.

That's what we like about CAIS, by the way. That's why CAIS is considered green under the WTO. It's not targeted at a commodity; it's targeted at the operation. If that operation is in need from whatever disaster may have befallen it, then it should respond. As we've said a number of times in this House and a number of times in the public, it's not responding properly right now. We need to get it there, and we need to make it happen.

When we talk about the competitiveness issues or the drop in support payments, again, I'll go back to the fact that our support level is based on the risk management programs that we have. If there is a higher need, those numbers will go up. If there is a lower need at the end of the year – we see here in our estimates now that we had a reduction of $43 million on the crop insurance side because we did not pay out that much. We believe that we're going to have some fairly substantial payouts this year, and we understand that and we're prepared for that. But we have to make those estimates in our budgets, and we have to make the estimates on the best available information that we can find based on crop conditions, drought, you know, whether or not we're going to have a large production year, whether we're going to have producers taking up the crop insurance programs that we have out there.

At the beginning of this year and prior to this budget coming in, we did put $30 million, hon. member, into research and development. The majority of that, $18 million, went into crop development in the Alberta Crop Development Industry Fund, ACIDF. I probably got the acronym wrong, but pretty close. What that is intended to do is exactly what the hon. member is talking about doing. It's to help the cereals industry develop new products, new ways of working with the cereals that they have or the crops that they have.

We also are working in partnership with the applied research groups around the province. We made a commitment to a group called ARECA, which is really the umbrella of those applied research groups. We have a capital request out there for equipment. The applied research groups around the province are looking to replace what is some very specialized equipment, and I'm very glad that prior to coming into the House and out of last year's dollars we were able to provide over a million and a half dollars to that group for capital funds to be distributed amongst applied research groups across the province. I'm even more pleased with the fact that we were able to give that very large boost to the research and development that we need to do to move our industry to the next step, to move our industry and the value chains that we were talking about, to move our industry along the lines of where it needs to go.

Market development for lake trout. There may be a market for lake trout, hon. member. I really don't know. We do have a business development group that would be more than happy to look at that and perhaps even help you build the business plan around it because that's what we do. We help entrepreneurs in the agricultural sector every day. We look at their business plans, look at the research that's out there on various other ventures and feasibility studies, look at the library of other feasibility studies that might be done, and in fact in some cases help fund those feasibility studies on various new product developments. The member would also be interested to know that the Leduc food laboratory that we have is considered world class in helping entrepreneurs in the agricultural sector develop new products that they can take to market. In fact, we'll even help research the marketplace to find out whether or not there may be a market that they can use this new product in.

We also have a level-three laboratory that is going to be up and running very, very soon to help us with our food security systems to prove to the world that we have the safest food, bar none, of any country in the world. We're able to use that in our investments as a marketing tool. We've done, I think, a yeoman's job in terms of trying to help our beef industry open new markets around the world. At the same time that we've been doing that, we've been talking about other products that we might be able to deliver into those marketplaces.

Last year I was privileged to sign an agreement with the state of Heilongjiang in China, where they are going to mirror our food development laboratory. While it sounds like a little bit of a, you has been a great deal of attention, to say the least, to the AISH legislation in this province lately. The attention not only centres around the lawsuit from December of 2005, when the government of Alberta settled a class-action lawsuit allocating a hundred million dollars for the victims of decades of illegal debt collection procedures. The government was accused of arbitrarily interpreting its own policies and legislation in order to recover overpayments as far back as possible.

This is one example of this government's attitude in the past toward AISH clients. Certainly, there were comments made by the Premier, and I'm sure that a lot of hon. members of this Assembly on the government side have regrets in regard to those comments. There have been other cases where people have asked repeatedly for an increase in the AISH benefits. I was pleased to see a modest increase in AISH benefits, changes that were made in the last budget.

Specifically with this bill, Mr. Chairman, I think that it's time that we have a look at improving it. The bill, as I understand it, will replace the existing AISH Act and consolidate AISH-related legislation under the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. It is expected that changes in the act will increase flexibility in reporting income and result in fewer incidences of overpayments and underpayments. This act, as I understand it, will also allow for health benefits to be provided to disabled individuals who do not meet the income eligibility requirements but face financial hardships because of their high health costs.

Now, I think that what we need to do so that there is no doubt for citizens or clients of AISH or their families that they will see an increase in their benefits – it shouldn't be at the political whim of the governing party. Other government programs are indexed. Certainly, with the federal government some seniors' programs are indexed so that as the consumer price index, the cost of living, rises, there is at least a modest increase in their benefits. We as members of this Assembly have a similar program. In fact, it's just this month that I think we received over a 5 per cent increase in our compensation packages. We didn't ask for it, but certainly it was factored into not the cost of living but the productivity of the entire workforce of the province. So if it's good enough for us, it's good enough for other government programs.

I think we should at this time, while we're discussing Bill 21 in committee, consider an amendment. Mr. Chairman, if I could be allowed, please, to have this amendment circulated to all members of the Assembly, and at the direction of the chair I will continue with my remarks.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1. I'll just wait for a minute.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. For the record I would move that Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, be amended as follows. Section 1 is amended by renumbering clause (a) as clause (a.1) and by adding the following before clause (a.1):

- (a) "Average Weekly Earnings for Alberta" means the average weekly earnings for Alberta as reported by the Statistics Canada survey of employment, payrolls and hours for the immediately preceding year;

Section 3 is amended by adding the following after subsection (4):

- (5) On or before April 1 each year, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall review the amount of each type of benefit provided pursuant to this section and shall consider annual adjustments to these benefits equivalent to the Average Weekly Earnings for Alberta.

Now, this amendment would take the politics out of any further increases to AISH benefits. I think it's a good idea. It's about time, certainly, when you consider what has happened in the past here with this government and the AISH community. I don't think I need to review that at this time, Mr. Chairman. All hon. members are fully aware that our AISH clients have not been treated with dignity, have not been treated with respect, and it's time that we change that. Everyone has a right to live with dignity and with respect. The payments that have been made in AISH benefits in the past have not allowed a huge number of those clients any extras.

It's been very tough for many of those individuals to get by on the limited monthly income that has been provided. Again, this would certainly be comforting for the AISH clients and their families to know that every year, just like each and every individual hon. member of this Assembly, they may get a 2 or 3 or, who knows, maybe a 5 or 6 per cent increase in their monthly income. We are fortunate, many of us in this province, to be able to participate in the workforce. Many people who get AISH do not, and they have no chance of ever working because of their disability. Now, we need to think about that when we're voting on this amendment.

About 6.4 per cent of Alberta's population between the ages of 16 and 64, or over 200,000 people, have a disability. About 2.4 per cent have a severe disability. That's about 75,000 people, 1 per cent of Alberta's population. Thirty-three thousand people currently receive the AISH benefit, 32 per cent receive AISH because of mental illness, 23 per cent because of developmental disabilities, and 45 per cent because of a physical disability. The caseload has increased from over 16,000 in 1994-95 to 31,000 in 2004-05. In 2005-06 AISH funding was about $480 million. It is projected that funding will reach $606 million in the fiscal year 2007-08.

Now, the monthly allowance of $950 has gone up to $1,000. Again, for some people that's going to be very, very tight financially at the end of the month at that amount of money. Rents are going up. The cost of living is certainly going up.

I would, in conclusion, ask hon. members of this Assembly to consider this amendment and do the right thing. If it's good enough for us in this Assembly, surely it's good enough for the over 30,000 people who receive an AISH benefit in this province. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Speaking with respect to the increase of AISH payments this current year, I don't know the exact percentage, but the increase is around 5 point some per cent, somewhat equivalent to what, in fact, we saw in the increase in the average weekly earnings.

However, in doing the AISH review that went around the province and talking to many people and having input from across the province, the recommendation of the AISH review committee was that the amount of the AISH payment be reviewed every couple of years or so. That recommendation allows for the department and the people that can look at this and the people that are receiving AISH to have input into it to help the department determine what the correct value would be. To tie the AISH payment to some number, whatever it may be, this average weekly earnings, would assume that the number is perfect right now. We don't quite know that. We know that a lot of things are changing for AISH recipients, and we have to be sensitive to that. So I believe it's important to keep the flexibility of every couple of years reviewing the amount, making sure that it's the correct amount, and then setting it at that.

So, Mr. Chairman, although I appreciate the intent and the interest with which the member has put this amendment forward, I would have to ask that the members assembled defeat the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that this idea of flexibility that the member is talking about – why wouldn't that work here? That's what the member was saying. We do this with the weekly earnings. We don't go through this process. Why do they need flexibility for that and not flexibility for this? It's a simple, straightforward proposal.

I'm glad that there was some increase. It's up to a thousand dollars, but before we wear ourselves out patting ourselves on the back, when you take that into inflation, the most vulnerable people in this society are not even where they were with inflated dollars back in the early 90s before the cuts. So they're not living in luxury. It seems to me that this is something that we and others have advocated, that we need indexation for these most vulnerable people. The member says: well, the flexibility could be that two years from now they'll review it. Well, they've reviewed AISH a number of times before, and I will commend them for at least getting these increases. Correct me if I'm wrong, but it's around seven years before there was an increase before. As the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar correctly points out, if it's good enough for us, it should be good enough for the most vulnerable people. I just don't see the need for the flexibility.

I just remind you that we're up to a thousand dollars as of April 1. Imagine how many people here could live on a thousand dollars. But at least it's a start. It's an increase. It seems to me logical, Mr. Chairman, that we do the right thing and put in the indexation. Almost everybody in Alberta would think that was fair, that people have to live at a certain level. If you're only living at a thousand dollars, I mean, you're not living in the lap of luxury by any stretch of the imagination. At least if it was indexed – and I think this is a good measure that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has brought in – you're not going to fall behind. At least you're going to stay at that thousand dollar level. In another two years from now some of these people's income with inflation would be going down. The cost of living is going up. Why the government refuses to look at indexation for this group of people, frankly, I just don't understand, Mr. Chairman.

This amendment is a good amendment, and I think it gives the government one last opportunity in this session to do the right thing. Treat the most vulnerable in society with the respect that they deserve and bring in indexation. So I certainly say that we should support this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I very much appreciate the comments of my colleague the hon. Member for Strathcona, and I agree that the amendment should be defeated. I'll add one more reason to his considered reason, and that would be that the average weekly earnings for Alberta simply are that: the average weekly earnings for Alberta. The amendment contemplates that we "shall consider annual adjustments . . . equivalent to the Average Weekly Earnings for Alberta," which would be a considerable boost every year. It's a poorly worded and ill-thought-out amendment, and I would recommend that we defeat it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to this amendment and in favour of this amendment because I think it's clear what this amendment means and says. We're talking about increasing in the same way that MLAs were just increased. I think the increase was 5.23 per cent. It provided some certainty somewhat outside of the political realm, I guess, for MLA increases, and it would be only fair if there was that particular increase together with what AISH recipients get. The Member for Strathcona mentioned, you know, that this is something that has been brought about.

This last increase does not even catch up with the lack of an increase for so many years. I had the opportunity here just recently to give a few movie passes, some of these $10 movie passes, to some AISH recipients that I know. They're a dear couple and have become friends of mine since I was elected as an MLA, and I've come to understand some of the constraints in their budgeting and how things affect their life. They sometimes have had to trade off just the most minor of things. These movie tickets were kind of instructive because they went to a movie, and they bought popcorn, and they came back – there was a bunch of us sitting around a week or so later – and said that this was the first time that they were able to buy popcorn at a movie. In fact, they hadn't been to one for a long, long time, and it was a luxury for them.

It redefines, I guess, what many of us might think of as luxuries. It tells you how closely budgeted an AISH couple might be and what the constraints on this couple were. They don't have an ability to go out and earn more. They're both medically deemed incapable to work. They cannot work. There needs to be some certainty to AISH recipients that they will at least not have a declining income according to inflation and cost-of-living rises and rent increases. Very few actually do own a home, so they're paying rent increases or tax increases even if the rare one does.

There are many AISH recipients that should, perhaps, be getting WCB, but they're not because they have long-standing, contentious claims. Actually, they're being supported by the taxpayer because WCB is not willing – even with their $850 million surplus – to begin to deal with so many of these claims.

I would urge the Assembly to vote for this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to add a few comments about this amendment. I believe we as MLAs all received an increase of about 5.7 per cent or something in that neighbourhood. I don't know why we can't make the same offer to people on AISH. Now, people who are struggling on $1,000 or whatever it is a month are going to feel even a very minor increase in the cost of living. They're going to notice an increase of 25 cents, an increase of 50 cents in some sort of product, in some sort of service whereas we in this Assembly would not even notice it. I don't know why we can't give these people the same consideration that we've given ourselves.

Now, to review it every couple of years is a fine thing. It's good to hear. But the key is that there's no guarantee that they're going to get an increase after a couple of years. This would guarantee at least that they would be seeing enough money to cover the increase in inflation and the loss of income that they're going to see on a year-to-year, month-to-month basis.

So I would hope that the members of this Assembly would consider this amendment. It's not a huge amendment. It's not going to cost the government a massive amount of money. I think there's an element of fairness here. I certainly hope that they would reconsider your stand and vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Yes. Mr. Chair, I'd like to rise to present a second amendment, that has been recommended to me by the Member for Lethbridge-East. I'll just get that to you and wait until that is distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, you can proceed. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

Mr. Backs: Just to read this into the record, Mr. Chair, it's an amendment to Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. It reads that the following is added after section 12:

13 By June 1, 2011 and every 5 years after that, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. Chair, this is being recommended as a good way to open up this act on a basis after five years and to report within a timely period. I think that it is something that, at the very least, allows review of what goes on with this group in our society so that they will not be left for any longer time than that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Loughheed: Mr. Chairman, I've just received this amendment, and upon looking at it, I appreciate that the member recognizes that legislation needs to be reviewed and to be amended and changed. That's why this act, in fact, is before us as a rewritten act, and that's why there are 30 or 40 or 50 other acts in front of this Legislature. They have been deemed to be requiring change and looking at and amending. But to designate a five-year term upon which at the end of that five years we have a mandatory review I don't believe addresses the needs that may come forward as times change, as things in the act are found to be wanting. If the act is not as good as it could be now, we would have looked for changes earlier and sought to make those in the act we brought forward. We believe it's pretty good as it's been presented, and if it's found wanting, we'll certainly look at it before five years. If it's not, we'll wait some longer period of time.

So again, Mr. Chairman, I'd recommend that we defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this amendment A2. Whenever we look at some of the other statutes that the hon. Member for Strathcona mentioned, certainly there are obligations to review those acts, whether it's FOIP legislation, health information. There are any number of statutes where there is an obligation to strike an all-party special committee to review that respective legislation, hold public hearings after there is notice circulated throughout the province to the public. If it's good enough for those acts, why is it not happening with this?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was absolutely correct when he stated that there has not been a review of AISH benefits for so long that the modest increase that occurred at the first of this month doesn't even help them catch up. It's a help certainly, but whenever we look at the past 10 years of this program in this province administered by this government, I'm sorry, but it has not been good enough.

This amendment would help at least a little bit in ensuring that in the future people are going to have an opportunity and can count on having an opportunity to give their views to Members of this Legislative Assembly on what works in the program, what does not work in the program, what needs to be improved, what needs to be changed.

Now, I would urge all members to support this because certainly it's a step in the right direction towards this House and this government being more accountable to the citizens. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to this amendment. I don't believe that the Legislature is in the habit of tying the hands of the government with respect to individual pieces of legislation. When we suggest that this piece of legislation must be reviewed in five years, first of all it restricts us to a five-year period from this point forward or from whenever this would pass, if this amendment was successful and passed in conjunction with the legislation.

I have to agree with the Member for Strathcona that an effort that allows this Legislature the freedom to look at this legislation on an ongoing basis – and I agree with the members opposite that the people that are served by this act certainly do need our support on an ongoing basis to recognize that as times change, there may be a need for the Legislature to review the provisions of this legislation and other similar pieces of legislation. But I believe that we would be doing a disservice by specifying a five-year period by when we would review this. I think we need the flexibility as a Legislature to look at this legislation on an ongoing basis. If the need arises, we would have the ability to come forward, maybe within a year or sooner, to revise this legislation to the benefit of the people that it serves.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I would encourage that all members defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. I, too, would like to speak on this amendment. I think that if we approach it this way, we are approaching it backwards. The reason that the AISH review was so successful was that we looked at the whole picture of how AISH was affecting the AISH recipients and their whole environment, how Aids to Daily Living was affecting AISH, their housing situation, their living situation, how they were interacting with other people. We looked at the whole picture of how AISH recipients were working in the world or not working in the world. Out of that came the legislation. If you start by looking at the legislation and reviewing the legislation, I think you're starting in the wrong place.

I would very much be in favour of another AISH review in five, six years. I think it was a really valuable exercise that we went through, but I think that if we look at it as a way of just focusing in on this legislation and the possibility of changing this legislation, I think we're going at that the wrong way.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

Mr. Martin: I will just raise a couple of quick issues specifically on the bill, and if the member wants to reply to them in third reading, that's fine. It has to do with section 1(i), which states that a “severe handicap” means an impairment of mental or physical functioning or both that, in a director’s opinion after considering any relevant medical or psychological reports, causes substantial limitation to the person’s ability to earn a livelihood.

The issue here is twofold. Is the director in any way capable of making medically based decisions? In other words, is the director going to be a medical doctor or psychiatrist and, therefore, professionally bound to recognize these issues before being concerned with the bottom line? So I'd like the member to talk about that at some point. Along those lines, how is the director to determine what are relevant medical reports? I think that's also important, knowing what I do from that area.

Then 4(a), ministerial discretion regarding allowing persons whose financial resources – the minister and I talked about this. I think this is a positive thing. It leaves some flexibility.

But 10(2) is another one that I have some concerns about because I don't understand it. It says, “a person affected by a decision of a director, or a person on his or her behalf, may appeal that decision if it is not exempt from appeal under the regulations.” I guess that I'm asking: what could possibly exempt a decision from a client's basic right to appeal it? Perhaps when the member is talking about it, we could have an example of such a decision and what that process would look like.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. We will address that in third reading if that works.

The severe handicapped definition that you talked about there was part of the deliberations in the review. Utilizing people knowledgeable in the area of disability and impairment and being able to evaluate it beyond the medical definitions are important, and that's all part of it. We'll get that response to you one way or another in third reading.

With respect to the other ones I'd have to study that a little further from what you were saying to try and determine what you're talking about there and get back to you on that.

Thank you for those comments.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Mr. Lougheed: Ready for the question.

[The clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do rise and report bills 10 and 21.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 21. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly do adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:46 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 13, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/04/13

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 32 special guests from the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. With us today are 23 grade 7 students from Ardmore school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Jackie Wakaruk, parents Mrs. Darlene Loiselle, Mrs. Kami Bowers, Mrs. Becky Charlton, Mrs. Diane Adrian, Mrs. Becky Cudmore, Mrs. Cathleen Matthews, Mrs. Sharon Theroux, and bus driver Mr. Maurice Roux. My guests are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're looking good in the chair today, I might say.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me today to rise and to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 51 visitors from my constituency, the area of Calmar, which is a booming little community. These constituents of mine have the good pleasure of being in a brand new school, just recently opened. Today they're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Jeanette Wilson, Mrs. Kathleen Sikliski, and Mrs. Sue Biddell and her son Tom. The eight parent helpers with this group of 51 are Mrs. Tammy Hutman, Miss Sherene Sawyer, Mr. James Snider, Mrs. Crystal Fandrick, Mrs. Karen Stepanko, Mrs. Charmaine Robinson, Mrs. Lee-Anne Peel, and Mr. de Martines. They're in the members' gallery. I'd ask them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special group that is joining us in the public gallery today, and that is the ESL program from St. Joseph high school. This is a very keen group of people, and we appreciate them coming to visit us in the Assembly. I'd ask them to please rise. I'd also like to introduce their group leaders, Ms Gerry Dawson and Mrs. Cheryl Place. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my delight and indeed honour today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly three guests, who are seated in the public gallery. They are Erica Bullwinkle, Thomas Bullwinkle, and Erica's daughter, Rachel Weinfeld. Erica is a prominent community activist and currently serves as the first vice-president of the Alberta NDP. Thomas is here to watch the proceedings for the first time as he is visiting our great province from London, England, where he makes his home. Joining them, of course, is Rachel, who has been active on the steps of the Legislature for the medicare vigils, providing sound and technical support. I'd ask these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you a gentleman who I had a keen discussion with on politics in Alberta. I subsequently invited him to come to the Legislative Assembly. His name is Ryan Antonello. He's a grade 11 student from St. Francis Xavier school. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any others at this time? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a student at the University of Alberta who steals time away from his university studies so that he can work for me in our Glenora constituency office as a special researcher. Peter Marriott is seated in the public gallery with two of his friends, who won't tell me their names. I'd invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

head: Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Cleanup of Contaminated Sites

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Environment minister likes to say that the polluter pays. For a while there it looked as though he meant it. He indicated that he had a plan for a cleanup fund that would come entirely from industry to deal with contaminated downstream oil and gas sites where companies default on cleanup costs. Then he met with CAPP, reversed his decision, and said that the funds should come from royalties. In other words, the polluter doesn't pay; the people do. To the minister: what did CAPP say to make him do such a one-eighty?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what planet the hon. member is on, but what he just said is totally unfounded, untrue, and without any basis. The polluter continues to pay, following the law of protecting our air, land, and water in this province.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if the payment comes from royalties, that ain't the polluter paying.

Who does the minister think is responsible for contaminated orphaned downstream sites, the industry or the public?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the past and will say again in this House today and will say again in the future, the polluter pays because it is the expectation and it is the value that Albertans share with this government that the polluter pays, and we will enforce and ensure that they comply with paying.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister then assure Albertans and all who live on a planet where the sky is blue that this cleanup fund will be developed through new funding collected from the industry and not from the royalties that belong to the people of this province?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm so encouraged that the Minister of Finance likes the idea of the environmental endowment fund, that I know you have made reference to in the past as well. Let me make it so perfectly clear: in this province if there is an industry out there, if there is a citizen out there, they will pay because it's an Alberta law. They will continue to pay, and we'll ensure that they will continue to pay.

The Deputy Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Cleanup of Hazardous Spill at Wabamun Lake

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week in the House I asked the hon. Minister of Environment a question about the policies of his ministry regarding hazardous spills, specifically: is it the policy of this ministry to hold both the owner of the materials spilled and the transporter responsible for the cleanup? At Mitsue Lake Celanese is cleaning up the spill. Where is Imperial Oil at Wabamun? To the Minister of Environment: will the minister please tell us what the policy of his ministry is? Are both the transporter and the manufacturer responsible for cleaning up the spills or not? What is the policy?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, it's indeed my pleasure to share with the hon. member, as I have in the past and as I actually shared with many members relative to instances that have just taken place in the last couple of weeks as well as the last month or two, where, in fact, the polluter pays. If an industry is responsible, they will pay.

I think it's important to recognize the proactive approach that Alberta Environment took in terms of containing the actual area where, in fact, an unfortunate spill took place. But, clearly, without any question the polluter pays, not the people of Alberta.

Mr. Bonko: Can the minister explain, then, why Imperial Oil, with the money and expertise to clean up spills, was not held responsible at the Wabamun disaster along with CN? This is not a question of law; it's a matter of policy.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as you've mentioned a particular company, Imperial Oil, let me give you one example of how the enforcement orders that we had issued are coming to be because of the strong Alberta law that we have in this province, that certainly is supported by the people of Alberta and the citizens that give us this job. Let me give you an example: the refinery down in Lynnview Ridge. In fact, Imperial Oil originally, when it first came out, said that they were not responsible. Well, do you know what happened? Through the enforcement order Imperial Oil has in fact bought over 200 homes because of their responsibility that took place on the contaminated site.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that on that kind of strong, strict law that we are taking, we're working in partnership. We do not believe in this idea of nail and jail and fair and square. What we think is important is that there is a constructive dialogue to ensure that our environment continues to be in fact supported and protected. And that's exactly what this ministry – I'm so proud of the 800 people in this ministry that are doing and living that each and every day.

Mr. Bonko: Last question to the Minister of Environment. Given the absence of Imperial Oil at Wabamun will the minister come clean and admit that this policy was changed due to the failure of his ministry to respond to the Wabamun disaster? The Premier himself admitted that the government was lax.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, first of all, what the hon. member has just said is totally out of context. Again I say to him that in terms of the protection of our environment, sustaining our environment, we issued, in fact, enforcement orders within the first 48 hours. Let me ask members of this House: did you know that that was the quickest turnaround of enforcement orders ever in the history of this province? So I can say that not only are we talking; we are acting.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it's important to note – this is important to note to the planet that members are on – that vacuum trucks are out there as we speak, this very minute, in fact, taking and remediating with CN based on our enforcement order. So action is taking place right now, based on the very proactive work that Environment is taking and will continue to take today, tomorrow, and well into the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in the past five years the Premier's former chief of staff has billed various departments more than $400,000 while at the same time working as a lobbyist for big business. Unfortunately, the lack of a lobbyist registry in Alberta means that we have absolutely no idea who he was lobbying for. It sounds like double-dipping to me. To the Minister of Finance: can the minister prove to Alberta taxpayers that Rod Love was not lobbying for the insurance industry at exactly the same time that he was paid to provide verbal advice to the ministry on auto insurance reforms? Can you prove it?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, maybe it behooves the hon. member opposite to prove that he was rather than just casting aspersions.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, Rod Love doesn't want to give any comment in the public domain, and the ministers don't want to give any comment in this House.

To the Minister of Energy: can the minister prove to Alberta taxpayers that Rod Love was not lobbying for the gas and oil industry at exactly the same time that he was paid to give verbal advice to the ministry on royalty rates? Can you prove it? Yes or no.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, these contracts have come before. Many contracts or consultants are used, a very normal practice. Continuously they provide strategic advice on numerous topics. What is important to note, though, is that I don't think it does anybody good to besmirch the name of any individual, Rod Love or another. It's simple to come forth with allegations and impugn the reputation of individuals. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Energy has the floor.

Mr. Melchin: They're not interested in hearing the answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Miller: Every day this week I've asked the questions. No answers yet.

To the Minister of Finance. The first sponsorship article that appeared in the Globe and Mail stated, "The Chrétien government has paid a company with close Liberal ties a total of $550,000 to produce a report of which no trace can be found." That was the Globe and Mail talking about the federal government. Mr. Speaker, my question for the Finance minister: what is the difference? What is the difference between that scandal and Mr. Love's verbal contracts with this Conservative government? What is the difference?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the terms of the contract have been made public. As I've said before, I was not the minister who entered into the contract, but it is up to the minister to ascertain as to whether they are satisfied that the terms of the contract were met. What I have done – and I tabled this in the House yesterday. On December 13 – and I think that's probably about three weeks after I was appointed minister – I put a process in place on how contracts would be handled by the Ministry of Finance. That came into effect on January 1, 2005. If the hon. member wants to question me on any contracts that I have signed or entered into, I would be most pleased to do that.

In this House we have repeatedly – repeatedly – answered the questions on this contract. It states clearly in the contract that part of the contract was strategic advice. It does not state in the contract anywhere that it must be in written form. Mr. Speaker, we have answered those questions.

I understand the problem that this group has. We live in a province today that is wonderfully abounding with economic activity. We're debt free. We have the best fiscal framework in the country, the best fiscal environment in the country. Companies are moving here constantly. Our immigration of people here is constant. It's really difficult to find anything that this government has done wrong, so we centre on old news, whether it's an old contract there or a 20-year-old land contract. Get current.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, were you trying to indicate a point of order earlier? Apparently not.

First ND opposition question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Attendance at World Health Care Congress

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eleven thousand dollars are being spent to send the Minister of Health and Wellness on a taxpayer-funded junket to Washington, DC, early next week. The minister will be attending a conference that can only be described as a health care privatizer's wet dream. Sponsors include The Wall Street Journal, a who's who of HMOs like CIGNA health care, and Viagra maker Pfizer, the world's biggest drug company. Most exciting of all the minister gets to hear an inspirational video message from one of this government's best pals, President George W. Bush. To the Deputy Premier: given that we've been told time and time again that the government is not interested in pursuing American-style health care, why then is the Health and Wellness minister spending taxpayer dollars to attend an American health care conference focused exclusively on for-profit health care?

Mrs. McClellan: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would do well to look at the wording of his preamble with the students in the gallery here. I find it offensive and question whether it should be dignified with an answer. However, I'll assume that there are writers and it hasn't been read prior to.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I want to make clear is that this government is open – open – to all information to make decisions, not a closed mind like the opposition members here. It's their way or the highway.

Our health system is so precious to the people of this province and, indeed, the people of this country that the people of this province are willing to enter into a debate. To enter into a debate, you should go in armed with information and intelligence, and any way that we can gather that only moves this consultation forward in a positive way.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish that the minister was as open with Albertans as they are with the group that she's talking about.

Given that the U.S. spends 50 per cent more GDP on health care than Canada does, exactly what lessons about sustainability does the government expect its Health and Wellness minister to learn from the likes of George W. Bush and the American corporate elite?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, neither the Canadian system nor the American system, both of which are quite opposite, stand up very well in the world for health outcomes. That doesn't mean that we give up or quit or that we don't try to learn. As I said earlier, any information that we can gather from others' experience, whether it's to move forward in a certain direction or, in fact, to ensure that we don't, I think is important. We'll remain open to hearing from all, including Albertans.

I resent very much this member inferring that, for example, I have not been open with the people I talk to. If he can show any evidence of that or any speeches that I've made that he was either at, which is doubtful, or not at that he heard from, I'd like him to bring them forward because, Mr. Speaker, the one thing I've never been questioned on is my integrity or my honesty.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, they always pull the integrity card when they don't want to answer the questions.

Given that there's overwhelming opposition in this province to the government's privatized, two-tier health scheme, what message is being sent to Albertans when the minister in the midst of this controversy jets off to Washington to attend a conference with the well-heeled apostles of chequebook medicine?

Mrs. McClellan: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think that if Albertans understood that we are not advocating a two-tier, private health care system, the answer is quite different. But if I were to put out a questionnaire that said, "Do you want a two-tier, private health system?" I'd probably get the same results. But what I would do is actually put forward our plan and ask Albertans for their comments back on it, which is exactly what the health minister has done, which every MLA on this side of the House is doing, and we'll take all of that information. We will actually listen to Albertans. They have some very good suggestions. From that will come a health plan that we hope will be sustainable into the future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Agricultural Assistance

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Agricultural, Food and Rural Development. Mr. Minister, grain and oilseed producers are facing one of the worst financial situations in over 100 years this spring. This is not because of inefficiency, poor harvest, or a factor within their control, but rather it is a direct result of trade subsidies in other countries, including the U.S. Indeed, the current situation mirrors the economic hardship created by external international policies and treatment with respect to Canadian softwood lumber and the ban of Canadian cattle under the BSE crisis. Will the Alberta government and industry step up to these challenges? Alberta farmers are facing a crisis head-on right now, this spring. Considering the economic plight of these farmers, why won't the minister consider an acreage payment this year until trade issues can be straightened out and commodity prices rise to the realistic sustainable levels?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a little bit of difficulty hearing the last part of that question because some of the members on the other side, I guess, didn't want to hear what is actually quite a good question. The hon. member has rightfully pointed out that we do have a crisis in our agricultural sector today. He has rightfully pointed out that the grains and oilseeds sector is facing some very serious challenges not just in Alberta but across this country, across western Canada in particular.

As it relates to an acreage payment, or per-acre payments, we have done a lot of analyses on that. We've got a lot of history on acreage payments. The global economy and the global subsidies are a perfect example of acreage payments and why they don't work, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the federal government has recently had an acreage payment out there that I'm starting to get calls about: why am I not receiving any dollars? With acreage payments the first thing is: what's fair? Should forage be included in an acreage payment? Should we include all 52 million acres of farmland in this province? Should we be putting more dollars in the south versus more dollars in the north? Should we be doing things on the Wheat Board side or on the oilseed side? You know, these are the things that a per-acre payment does not address, and that's why it doesn't work.

We are working through the advance program under the CAIS program. We are trying to make sure that producers who have need are being addressed through that program, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, it is starting to work. We're also talking to the federal government about those issues.

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind all hon. members that there are classrooms in the galleries today, and this building is serving as a classroom of sorts for proper parliamentary conduct.

The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do apologize if the hon. member has already answered this question because I really had a tough time hearing it. Mr. Minister, I fully understand that the federal government is contemplating changing CAIS; however, farmers are now receiving bills demanding repayment of their 2004 CAIS advances. Therefore, would you consider writing off these bills or at least delaying payment until . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, there's no preamble on the second and third questions.

Mr. Horner: Again, a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. The equity loss payments that are out there are from previous years, and these interim payments were based on an estimate of the loss. The short answer to the hon. member's question is that we have a number of different opportunities and options for the producers, one of which is to simply allow these overpayments to be taken out of future entitlements of the CAIS program. Indeed, the producers could even extend it out over a number of years under a repayment program. But, again, we are looking and trying to make sure that we put as many options in front of the producers as we possibly can because we recognize the hurt.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, what else do you plan to do either with the federal government or without them to enable farmers and ensure that they are able to plant their crops this spring? It's a critical issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. member: I agree; it is a critical issue. For the past three weeks I've been out touring the province with producer meetings, talking about how we are best able to meet this need, how we are best able to meet the short term as well as the long term. We've had producer meetings in Airdrie and in Westlock and in Red Deer. We're going to be culminating in other meetings across the province. Ag Financial Services Corporation has held 32 meetings across the province in the last 30 days. We've actually had another 18 meetings with regard to the future of crop insurance and the future of the CAIS program.

To answer as well partly on the CAIS initiative, last night in this House, Mr. Speaker, I spoke about the actual convergence of our intent as it relates to the CAIS program with the federal government. To the current there's close to half a billion dollars' worth of program dollars available to producers right now through the programs that are out there today. We are also asking the federal government and pressuring the federal government for responses from some of the recommendations which we've made as it relates to getting dollars into producers' hands now because it is a national problem through a national program. We'll continue to push for those answers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Close to 5,000 apprentices could not find training school spots in southern Alberta in the last year. Close to 5,000 apprentices in northern Alberta had the same problem. The new spots at NAIT and SAIT and colleges do not come close to meeting the demand. Students plan to line up overnight for registration spots so that they can get into school months later. Young people are crying to work, and they're crying to learn their work, yet this government is allowing foreign contractors and their temporary foreign workers into our Alberta oil sands under Alberta's memorandum of understanding to temporary foreign workers in the oil sands. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. When will this government wake up and address the growing crisis of not enough school spots for new apprentices in Alberta?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I hate to ask this. Because there was so much noise, I didn't hear the hon. member, but I don't think I'll ask him to repeat. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, please proceed.

Mr. Herard: Thank you. It's an important question, so let's not deal with it that way. You know, we now have more than 47,000 apprentices.

Mr. Cenaiko: How many?

Mr. Herard: Forty-seven thousand apprentices, an increase of 98 per cent since 1995. This includes 18,000 new apprentices last year alone. So we're going in the right direction. We now have 1,100 aboriginal apprentices, which is an increase of 400 per cent, and I think that there is a lot more that can be done there with our aboriginal community. We now have 1,400 high school students enrolled in the registered apprenticeship program, and that is growing in leaps and bounds through Careers: the Next Generation, a foundation that deals with our schools, also staff from my department who are deployed throughout the province to find new apprenticeships. So, Mr. Speaker, I think we're doing a lot to increase the number of spaces.

Mr. Backs: They're lining up, and they're not getting in.

A second question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what will this government do to ensure that apprentices do not lose valuable work experience and employment by being displaced by thousands of temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware that there are thousands of temporary foreign workers out there. One thing for sure that I do know is that when we do get temporary foreign workers, we make sure that they have the necessary skills in one of our 20 certified apprenticeship programs to do the job.

Mr. Backs: What about our apprentices?

A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the minister of human resources: when Rod Love was advising the government on relaxing rules for apprentices and trainees to benefit merit shop contractors, was Rod Love acting as a paid lobbyist for merit shop or acting as a paid consultant to the government or both at the same time?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you can personally call Rod Love and talk to him about it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Fertilizers and Pesticides

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta farmers have enough challenges with BSE, poor weather, and erratic commodity prices. The last thing they need is more difficulty just basically running their operations. I'm hearing from my constituents that two products they depend heavily on for their operations are no longer available. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why isn't 34-0-0 ammonium nitrate fertilizer available to farmers anymore, and what's the government doing to make it available to farmers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason that 34-0-0 ammonium nitrate fertilizer is no longer available to farmers is because Agrium, who is the company that made this particular product, stopped manufacturing the product last year. They were the only manufacturer in Canada, and they ceased production in June of last year. They stopped making this product because it could be used as an explosive when combined with diesel fuel, and this was unfortunately found to be the explosive used in the 1995 bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City. Agrium has advised our department that the liability they faced by manufacturing this product was more than they were willing to accept.

They have, Mr. Speaker, developed a new polymer-coated urea product called environmentally smart nitrogen, or ESN, and the interest in moving this type of product, as it's proven in the U.S. to be up to 25 per cent more productive, is that it reduces the number of passes in the field; therefore, it actually reduces emissions and environmental impact, which is, of course, in Alberta the law.

We're also exploring manure management as a way of meeting some of these nutrient needs. In fact, we're supporting a number of areas of research in particular as part of our grains and oilseed strategy. We've put forward funding through the Alberta Crop Industry Development Fund for the development of slow-release fertilizers, and these will contribute to both greater productivity and reduced environmental impact.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental for the same minister is on the availability of another surefire product farmers rely on, which is strychnine for pest control. Will we have enough strychnine this year? Again, what's the minister doing to make sure that it's available to farmers who need it to control gophers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Agriculture continues to support the safe, proper, and appropriate use of fresh mix strychnine bait to control Richardson's ground squirrels, commonly known as gophers. The year 2006 is the third year that producers will have unimpeded access to a fresh strychnine-based bait product, which our research found is much more effective than dry strychnine bait. In past years both Alberta and Saskatchewan received emergency registrations for strychnine from the federal government, allowing it to be used in the province specifically for ground squirrel control. Last year the Pest Management Regulatory Agency of Health Canada allowed Canadian manufacturers to continue selling fresh bait products to farmers. So it is available for producers to use this year.

One more point, Mr. Speaker. The use of strychnine has some drawbacks, adequate supply being one of them, so we are looking at what else can be done to control these pests. We've involved a multistakeholder steering committee, Richardson's ground squirrel integrated pest management strategy. Our role on the steering committee is to evaluate current control measures and technologies and to seek out others.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 6 in this House the hon. minister of infrastructure replied to a question from the Official Opposition on the sale of 260 acres of prime residential land in southwest Edmonton for $3 by stating: "Incidentally, yes, there are four parcels. It's about 800 acres." My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Given that the minister tabled documents on Tuesday of this week indicating that four parcels of land totalling 504 acres were sold to the government by Mr. Joseph Shekter for $10.2 million, where are the remaining 300 acres of land located that he talked about?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there were four parcels. As it turns out, we retained one entire parcel. So the number of acres that we returned were all parts of those other three parcels.

Obviously, the member is not understanding the whole process, so I think maybe I'll try to break it down into something that's much more simple that maybe he can understand. Given that it's Easter time, as my example I'm going to use chocolate Easter eggs. Now, the member, the purchaser, wants to purchase 504 Easter eggs. He finds a vendor that has in a bag about 790 of them. So he pays to the vendor the price for the 500 then proceeds to pick out the ones that he wants, and he returns the others to the seller. Now, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what happened here. We took the land; we divided out what we needed and then returned the rest to the vendor.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. When you told this House that there were 800 acres of land involved in the transaction, we can account for 500 acres of land in the documents that you tabled in this Assembly on Tuesday. Again, where are the other 300 acres, and how much, if any, has been returned to Mr. Shekter for a dollar per parcel?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, if he wishes to have the details, I can tell him about the details. We had one parcel that contained some 534.29 acres. We bought 274.02 of those acres, leaving a total of 260.27 acres that belonged to Shekter, and there are two titles for those. Then we get into another parcel, and it had some 29.23 acres. On that one, there are 25.89 that were returned. Then we've got another parcel that has some 133.14 acres in it, and we didn't return any of those. We kept it all. Then we have another parcel where we bought 68 acres and returned 4.63. That's a total of 504.39 acres out of approximately 792 or 793 acres.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that you tabled these documents on Tuesday to account for 504 acres of land, can you please table the documents that are related to the other 300 acres, which you talked about last week in this Assembly? Table the documents.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, all he has to do is look on the documents and see the total acres in the parcel before they were subdivided. It's very simple, and I just gave him the numbers. Those are the numbers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta continues to grow at a phenomenal rate. Due to the prosperity of this province and job opportunities we are now seeing the city of Calgary grow by some 20,000 to 25,000 individuals a year. As the suburbs continue to grow, so does the need for new schools. This government is building many new schools across the city of Calgary, but we know that school boards are looking for some 40 new schools in the city of Calgary as well as ensuring that our older schools stay vital. My questions are to the Minister of Education. As the minister who has recently taken on responsibility for school infrastructure, can you tell this House what process you'll be using or initiating to plan for school infrastructure and ensure that these much-needed schools will come to these communities?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, hon. member. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to elaborate on that. The process has already in fact begun. It involves a number of meetings and consultations with our locally elected school board representatives, who are there for many purposes, this being one of them. That process also involves looking at the audit assessments, which our predecessor department had responsibility for. It also involves grouping the needs, if you will, for school infrastructure and capital-related infrastructure projects into a more strategic fashion that would allow us to move them ahead perhaps more quickly, and it involves a longer range plan, which we now have the ability to do.

I've written to the school boards, just a few days ago as I recall – I think it was Monday, Mr. Speaker – indicating what that new process would look like, and I'll be waiting to hear back from them very soon. We want to ensure that our future plan, which is to be ready by the end of June, takes all of these factors and numerous others into consideration so that we have something very solid to go ahead with by way of our schools for tomorrow action plan.

Mrs. Ady: To the same minister: will this plan take into consideration what to do with the reuse of sites perhaps that are surplus to school boards' needs now?

Mr. Zwodzesky: That's an excellent question as well. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you, having met on numerous occasions now with some of the larger boards in the metro areas in particular, that there are literally dozens of vacant schools sitting on prime space. There are also dozens of other sites that have been municipally reserved, shall we say, for potential future schools to be built. For whatever reasons some of the community needs may have changed, so we're not seeing those sites taken up as readily as was expected. There's a lot of valuable property there that seems to be tied up at the moment. We have a committee that is chaired by the hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and I'm on that committee with some others. We're looking at a number of strategic ways of improving the situation so that we can deliver on this new consultation process and the resulting plan that will come from it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Aon Consulting Inc.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On November 3, 2005, this government contracted with Aon Consulting to design a private insurance scheme for Alberta's health care system. According to the request for proposal the project was scheduled to take three months. As of April 5, six months later and three months late, the minister of health had still not received Aon's report. My questions are to the Deputy Premier. Given that Alberta Finance is on the steering committee for this project, will the minister tell us when the taxpayers get to see the report they paid for, even a draft report?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's a bit of a stretch to tie what the preamble of that question was into the actual contract that was awarded to Aon. This is a complex area, and that is why you look at a company with considerable experience to provide some modelling and information as to viability or what private insurance providers might be able to do. There is no reason that we would withhold or want this product not to be completed, so as soon as it is completed, we'll be prepared to discuss the results of it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: what explanation for the delay has Aon provided in their biweekly status reports?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I believe all of the time that it's taking to prepare this is simply the complexity of the issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will Aon, their parent company, or any wholly or partly owned subsidiaries be able to participate in the very market that Aon is designing?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I come back again: Aon was not contracted to design a market. I mean, you know, come on. We've got a question here in this province and across Canada that's very serious. I have said for over 10 years that health and the importance of a health system should cut above political lines. Everybody in this House should be working towards sustainability of this health system. All I ask of the hon. members opposite is just to interject some semblance of what we're actually contracting into what they say we are doing. You know, if you talk about Albertans and what they know or believe about the third way, all I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that any – any – comments that I've heard from across the way from both parties and the document that the hon. minister of health has filed bear very little resemblance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

EUB Hearings on Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a problem with the EUB decision to reconsider the west corridor for the proposed 500 kV transmission line west of highway 2. We should be debating much more than just the suitability of the west corridor in regard to this project. The honest choice would be to open up all aspects of this 500 kV line. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why doesn't the EUB stage a hearing to discuss whether consumers should be footing the bill for these new power lines with big hikes in their monthly power bills?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, he's introduced different issues in the preamble versus the question. First off, there was a needs application, and a lot of work has been done, looking at different corridors where the transmission line could be held. There was an initial hearing on the location some time ago. So it's already had that. With respect to the cost of transmission, transmission has always been borne – we've all paid for it all. You and I, to be able to turn that switch on in our homes, pay for all of it: the power, the transmission, everything that goes into getting that power from the generation through to the transmission and distribution to our homes.

The great thing that will happen: we need these transmission lines to ensure that we can reliably provide the electricity to the homes with the growth that we have, unless he wishes that we don't have the power when needed; and, secondly, it will help reduce line loss. By increasing our capacity, there's actually going to be quite a substantive savings on the lines that are there today given the quantity and level of power that's being pushed over those lines.

Mr. Eggen: Given that it is the Conservative government policy to expand power exports from Alberta, why are the thousands of central Alberta landowners impacted by this massive new transmission line not being allowed to question this policy at the upcoming EUB review and variance hearing?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the last I knew, this line comes from Genesee down through Langdon. I don't know, if you look on the map, that that's anything other than within Alberta. This line has nothing to do with exports despite the fact that exports can also add to the value of Alberta. This is to ensure the reliable delivery of electricity to Albertans so that they can depend upon it every day that they need it.

Mr. Eggen: How can the minister claim that key issues about whether this line is even needed in the first place have been properly dealt with when no landowner or environmental groups participated in the early EUB hearings, that were dominated by otherwise self-interested utility corporations?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, hearings have been available to all stakeholders. They've had a very open process. That's one of the very hallmarks of what the Energy and Utilities Board does very well. They have and intend to look at the interests. It is also in the interest of Albertans to have electricity to our homes. I suspect it's in the interest of us to see that we can turn the lights on in this building. Unless you're saying, "Let's turn them off," I guess that's a policy that we don't support.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Environmental spills are a popular topic today. The ice is started to come off Lake Wabamun, and oil is resurfacing on patches of open water. The ice is likely to be completely off the lake in two weeks. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister elaborate on what is being done to clean up these patches of open water now to prevent returning migratory birds and wildlife from becoming contaminated with oil?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, responsible for migratory birds, may want to supplement as well, but I want to say: as I speak here in this Assembly this afternoon, CN, Alberta Environment, and vacuum trucks are out there, in fact, taking the oil off of the shore that the hon. member mentions. I think this is proactive.

I want to say that August 4 was an example of an ecological disaster. But, first and foremost, CN is complying with each and every one of the enforcement orders that we have issued. Furthermore, I'm looking forward in the next two weeks to visiting the site with one of the experts that we hired, Dr. David Schindler, from the University of Alberta. Certainly, I appreciate his advice and counsel as we move forward with this proactive plan.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: will the magnitude of this spring's cleanup be large enough to prevent any resurfaced oil from contaminating previously cleaned or unaffected areas of the lake?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, of course, I would love to be able to say here – I pray and hope that will be the end result and the outcome of the action that we're taking. But as we know, Mother Nature also plays a role in that, over which we have no control. Certainly, that is the objective of the Ministry of Environment, working with the good citizens and all those involved in this cleanup.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the Minister of Environment's opinion on whether or not Lake Wabamun will be available for boating and fishing this summer?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, my family has a cottage on a lake, and I want to say this: the value that Albertans place on our recreation and things such as Lake Wabamun, I think, is priceless. So it is my hope and prayer that based on our proactive good work – and to the hon. member, who I thank and who has been right there with us all of the time that we've been there, my vision is that hopefully they'll be out there windsurfing, that they'll be out there boating, and that they'll be out there enjoying what we've been blessed with in Lake Wabamun.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Space in Remand Centres

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta judges are being forced to reduce times served by offenders by giving 2 to 1 or even 3 to 1 credit for detention in the remand centres. Recent judgments have listed the deplorable conditions of the remand centres; for example, overcrowding and double-bunking, violation of religious freedoms, excessive force applied in relation to strip searches, and on and on and on. All of this evidence has been presented in our courts. My question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister tell us if he's prepared to accept this evidence as factual and valid, and what is he going to do about it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the decisions that judges make are those decisions that the public or legislators don't have an opportunity to question. The issue that the hon. member is discussing regarding the space at the Edmonton Remand Centre is one that is the top priority in our ministry right now, but when we're dealing with all of Alberta, we're talking about remand populations throughout Alberta. In the Edmonton area we are moving them to the Fort Saskatchewan correctional facility. We're utilizing all of our facilities to the maximum amount that we can.

As I mentioned, the ERC is the number one priority for our capital planning for the future. Mr. Speaker, you should know, though, that the remand populations 20 years ago were 30 per cent compared to 70 per cent for corrections; 10 years ago it was at about 50-50. At this point of time, right now, we're at the opposite end of the scale right across Canada, where 70 per cent of offenders are in remand and only 30 per cent are in corrections.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the same minister. Will the Minister of Public Security tell us if he thinks that giving drug dealers easy sentences because of the conditions in remand centres, which is standard practice, as the Minister of Justice suggested yesterday, is protecting the safety of the public?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made a decision to work on this side of the law in my previous career as a police officer and not as a lawyer and work my way towards the bench, so my point of view and my personal thoughts regarding sentencing drug traffickers may differ from that of a judge or from a defence lawyer. So that's a difficult question for me to answer, but I can tell you what I would do with drug traffickers.

Dr. B. Miller: My last supplemental is for the Minister of Finance. Will this government finally get tough on crime and provide the funds for a new remand centre in Edmonton and an extension to the remand centre in Calgary?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General very properly has brought this forward to capital planning, and I'm sure that our associate minister responsible for capital planning will be working with the Solicitor General to ensure that it's included in our overall capital plan.

I would remind the hon. member that we spend triple in capital of any province in Canada, whether it's spent in our hospitals or our schools or our advanced education institutions or on our roads. So, Mr. Speaker, I don't apologize for our capital plan but do recognize that when you have a vibrant province like we do, when you have economic growth that's projected as ours is with no end in sight to that, it is important that we ensure that we have adequate capital.

One of the challenges, Mr. Speaker, was brought up by one of the hon. members earlier, and that is simply a workforce to accommodate that capital as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Highwood, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a portion of the 92 students who have come all the way from my constituency of Calgary-Varsity. With them are teachers Ms Smart, Ms Acorn, Mr. Marks, Ms Govier, Ms Sanden, Mrs. McFaul, and Mrs. Berg. If those teachers and their students could please stand, we'll celebrate their arrival.

Thank you.

2:30 Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the first member, I'd like to share the ever-popular historical vignette. This is quoted from the Edmonton Bulletin, August 27, 1936.

This is the people's forum. It is the debating chamber wherein proposed legislation must be studied, analysed and debated. The people have a right to know all sides of these discussions. If this province is to be properly governed the greatest freedom of debate must take place within this chamber before the public.

These words came from Samuel Augustus Gordon Barnes, who was first elected as a Social Credit member for Edmonton in the August 22, 1935, general election. Prior to becoming a member, he was an Edmonton school board trustee for 23 years and was president of the Labour Party of Edmonton in 1921. In 1940 he ran under the banner of the Independent Progressives and was not re-elected. He died on April 14, 1941.

National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize National Soil Conservation Week, which runs from April 16 to 22. This year marks the 21st anniversary for recognizing the importance of soil conservation in our country.

Mr. Speaker, our Alberta producers are leaders in soil conservation and beneficial management practices. They are dedicated to improving their practices to conserve our important soil resources. For example, nearly two-thirds of our province's cropland is now being direct seeded to improve water infiltration, increase seed bed moisture, enhance organic matter, and reduce the risk of soil erosion. Soil conservation also supports and sustains crop, rangeland, and woodlot production and is important to maintaining other resources such as water, air, and our wildlife habitat.

Mr. Speaker, to continue to assist our producers in soil conservation practices, Alberta has developed a new, free online soil survey of the whole agricultural area of Alberta. This was no small undertaking as Alberta has 30 per cent of the agricultural area of Canada. The soil information viewer consists of soil and air photo information on nearly 26 million hectares, or 64 million acres, so that our farmers and our agricultural and environmental consultants can better understand our natural capital. By conserving our soil, our stewards of the land can ensure that it functions properly to provide the food we eat and a healthy environment to live in, both for us and for future generations.

As we bring attention to National Soil Conservation Week from April 16 to April 22, it is important for us to acknowledge and thank our producers for being leaders in soil conservation and the sustainability of our agricultural industry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Vaisakhi 2006

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we celebrate the 307th anniversary of the founding of Khalsa day, or Vaisakhi. It is one of the most important events in the Sikh calendar. Khalsa day, or Vaisakhi, marks the birth of the Sikh nation, and it is celebrated by Sikhs in every part of the world.

Today we celebrate the festival of a nation whose gurdwaras, the place of worship, are open to all: rich and poor, male and female, old and young. We celebrate a religion that respects all other religions and a people who seek to lead a life of compassion, humanity, pity, justice, equality, and truth.

Mr. Speaker, the Sikh community is a vital part of Alberta in every walk of life – in business, culture, legal, medical profession, politics – and they are adding to the strength of Alberta. I want to pay tribute to all Sikhs in Alberta who have done so much to foster an appreciation of the Sikh way of life.

In Alberta it is my mission to create a modern civic society for today's world, to renew the bonds of community that bind us together. That society is based on shared values: rights and duties which go together, tolerance, and respect for diversity. We work hard to provide opportunity for our young, whether it is in enhancing education or in giving hope to the unemployed. In return we demand responsibility, proper conduct, law-abiding behaviour. We stand up for our social, racial, and cultural diversity. We value our differences and respect each other's background, ethnic and religious. As the Sikh teaching tells us: never refrain from righteous acts, whatever the cost.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Salute to Alberta Athletes

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I was privileged to join our Lieutenant Governor and Community Development minister in Calgary to honour some of Alberta's best athletes. Of the 61 Canadians who won a medal at the 2006 Winter Olympics, approximately one-third are Albertan. If you include athletes who are living here to train at our tremendous facilities, that number jumps to three-quarters. The same success holds true for our Paralympians. Albertans accounted for seven of the 13 medals won in Italy. There is a strong support network behind each of these athletes that lets them be their best. We also recognized the efforts of Alberta coaches, officials, and mission staff who were part of Team Canada.

Last night also honoured the Alberta athletes of the year for 2005: skier Sarah Renner, bobsled pilot Pierre Lueders, junior skier Gareth Sine, junior skater Jessica Gregg, and the Edmonton Huskies Football Club.

Mr. Speaker, for many Olympians and Paralympians their athletic journey began long before they booked a ticket to Italy. It began as young athletes in a system that nurtured their talent and gave them the right environment to become even better. Thanks to the efforts of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation Alberta's developing athletes continue to prosper. These athletes will certainly benefit from an additional $2.8 million going to the foundation as announced in Budget 2006. This is in addition to the $12.8 million the foundation already puts towards sport development. This government has also invested in our elite athletes by providing $23 million for the renewal of the Canmore Nordic Centre and $600,000 for upgrades at the ski jump facility in Canada Olympic Park.

Few Canadians will ever reach the Olympic or Paralympic Games, but we all share in the celebration. Our athletes inspire us to be proud of our country and to pursue our own dreams, knowing that success is possible.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all the members of the House to join me in one final congratulations to Alberta's athletes for their efforts in Italy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

National Child Care Program

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Alberta Federation of Labour and Public Interest Alberta released a highly informative poll, to which I hope the Minister of Children's Services will pay close attention. The poll explored Albertans' opinions about Prime Minister Harper's stated intention to tear up last year's agreements on child care and replace them with a hundred dollar monthly allowance.

The NDP has been strongly advocating against the Harper alternative and encouraging this minister to fight to protect the agreement and the underlying principles she signed with Ottawa and expand programs initiated following this agreement. Albertans unquestionably agree with our position: 50 per cent of Albertans are outrightly opposed to the Prime Minister's plan; 61 per cent feel the province should continue funding enhanced programs even if Ottawa reneges on the deal; significantly, 87 per cent agree that subsidies should be maintained for low- and middle-income parents so they can afford quality child care; and 85 per cent agree that the provincial government should continue to finance wage improvements and professional development for child care workers.

It should hardly be a surprise to members of this Assembly that a majority of Albertans do not support the federal government's child care plan. As the federal NDP's child care critic, Olivia Chow, pointed out yesterday, most families will only see a fraction of the promised amount. Through taxes and clawbacks many Ontario families will see only $200 per year. It isn't even enough to buy a year's supply of diapers, Mr. Speaker. Research I have already outlined in this Assembly paints a comparable picture for Alberta families.

So once again I'm calling on the Minister of Children's Services unequivocally to defend last year's child care agreements and the principles underlying them and urge Ottawa not to dismantle the program. Should that fail, I urge the minister to continue funding to enhance programs that most Albertans and Alberta families would like to stay in place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Criminal Sentencing Guidelines

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our justice system is based on fundamental principles of law: fairness, presumption of innocence, and independence of the judiciary from any political interference. These principles have withstood the test of time. However, there is yet another principle which at this time appears to be questioned; that is, public confidence in the justice system.

As you may recall, some two months ago residents of Edmonton reacted to a highly publicized criminal case by gathering some 5,000 signatures on a petition requesting a thorough review of the sentencing guidelines and rules for parole order dispensation. Again last week residents of Edmonton presented this Assembly with some 20,000 signatures petitioning and requesting the same.

Mr. Speaker, even though individual cases ought not be affected or decided based on petitions or lobby efforts, it is evident that our constituents demand that our justice system undergo a thorough examination. As one constituent pointed out to me, the system ought to be a justice system and not a legal system. Having said this, I urge our Justice minister to continue to collaborate with his provincial, territorial, and federal counterparts in his effort to review parole guidelines and sentencing trends. As elected politicians we must seriously consider entrenching minimum sentences in laws passed in this Assembly and in Ottawa.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Water Management

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government's Water for Life strategy outlines some important initiatives that I believe require the government's urgent attention. Water is a resource that is often taken for granted. Just like our abundant oil and gas resources the water which sustains all of our communities and our industries in Alberta simply cannot be relied upon without significant long-range planning and wise infrastructure investments.

Our efforts in Alberta to address the challenges associated with water fall into two categories. First and foremost, we must ensure the safety of our drinking water, which must be protected by ongoing monitoring and investments in technology and infrastructure for water treatment and waste-water management on a regional basis throughout the province. Secondly, we absolutely must be concerned in the long term about the quantity of the water that is available to us. This is not simply a southern Alberta regional issue but an issue involving all Albertans in all corners of Alberta.

On the first point, about the safety and quality of our water, it is important that Alberta build upon the Water for Life strategy by enhancing it with an integrated water-use management program similar to the integrated land-use program that the Alberta government is planning. This would entail mapping out all of our water resources, including aquifers, and on a regional basis, ensuring that the current and planned usage levels are consistent and sustainable not only for today but for 10 or 20 years down the road.

With respect to the quantity of water Alberta cannot afford to simply wait and see if the dire predictions about the decline of our glacial water sources are borne out 10 to 15 years from now. We must begin to plan and act now to preserve water today rather than wait for scarcity to prompt us into action tomorrow.

Despite the abundant oil and gas resources that Alberta possesses, water is, in fact, our most precious resource. We must take bold action today to ensure that we have safe and sustainable sources of water for our immediate needs and for the use and enjoyment of future generations.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table two petitions. The first petition is from 17 students and staff of Grasmere school in Alberta Beach. The second petition is from 72 students from Harry Collinge high school in Hinton. Both petitions call for concerted government action to address the rise in teen smoking in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare. This one has 1,007 signatures. It calls on the government to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance or that allows doctors to work both in the private and public systems and to oppose any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here signed by 23 students and teachers of the Tilley school. This calls for concerted government action to address the reported rise in teenage smoking in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 203 signatures on a petition urging the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement the third way health care reforms.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A further 202 signatures from communities such as Edmonton, Calgary, Sherwood Park, De Winton, Cowley, Lethbridge, St. Albert, and so on, urging the government not to proceed with the third-way health care reforms.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare. This one has 600 signatures. It calls on the government to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance or that allows doctors to work in both the private and public systems and to oppose any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate petitions. The first one is:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation allowing parents the authority to place their children into mandatory drug treatment and to fund urgently required youth drug treatment centres.

There are approximately 100 signatures on that one.

The other one is 200 signatures here where they urge the residents of Alberta to petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to abandon its implementation of the third-way health care reforms, oppose any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act as well as vote against plans that would force Albertans to pay for private health care insurance for services that should be covered by medicare.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to present a petition from many residents of northeast Edmonton, including the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. It calls upon this Legislature to prohibit two-tier medicare.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare. This one has 407 signatures on it. It calls on the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance or that would allow doctors to work in both the private and the public systems and to oppose any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday, April 24, when the House resumes, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 15 and 29.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday the 24th I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Motion for a Return 26.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:50 Bill Pr. 3
Edmonton Community Foundation
Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, that being the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill Pr. 4
Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption
Amendment Act, 2006

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 4, the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a list of the speakers at the upcoming World Health Care Congress, which the minister of health will be attending. At the congress she will have the dubious privilege of hearing from so-called thought leaders, including representatives Susan Chambers from Wal-Mart and Michele Schneider of the Avon cosmetics company. The privatization brain trust will be topped off by an inspirational message from President George Bush.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings again from concerned citizens. I'll start with a letter from Shannan Little, who believes the third way will increase waiting lists as doctors cherry-pick for the private practice.

From Joan Lewis, noting the conflict of interest and corruption she believes is being brought forward with this.

From Dennis Kaban, who notes that the government should "listen to the opposition members," they have some good ideas.

From Norma Farquharson, noting that Canada spends 9 per cent of its GDP on health, the U.S. spends 15 per cent, and millions of people aren't covered. Why would we emulate them?

From Clare and Tammy Irwin, who note "that positive results within the existing [public] system can be achieved and resources should be dedicated to the promotion of further similar programmes."

From the Very Reverend Fabian W. Hugh, who notes that in the province we have a great disparity between rich and poor, including the working poor, and is concerned that the third way would affect that.

From Harry Hoffman, believing that we are selling off our province and that profits from third-way privatization health care would leave the province.

From Shirley Harpham, noting that she and her husband have private health insurance through private providers, and they've had a great deal of difficulty with them and don't want to see that in the province.

From Horace Gopeesingh, believing the third way does not address the very crucial issues regarding shortages of personnel, expertise, and facilities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tablings today are handwritten comments shared with me by Mr. Charles Edward Murphy, who refers to the suggested health care reforms as the third unknown way and says that this government needs to offer "clear, concise, all-encompassing details of any plan" it is proposing before the government goes ahead with the usual Conservative way and jams it "down our throats."

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's the appropriate number of copies of the poll released by the Alberta Federation of Labour and Public Interest Alberta. This poll found that 50 per cent of Albertans opposed the Prime Minister's alternative plan to tear up agreements on child care and that 61 per cent of Albertans believe that even if the agreements are cancelled by the federal government, the Alberta government should nevertheless continue to fund those programs as they'll be enhanced this year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one letter to table this afternoon. It's from the Minister of Community Development to cross-country skier Beckie Scott on her retirement. Beckie hails from Vermilion, in my constituency, and has been an inspiration for skiers not only in Alberta but in Canada and throughout the world. The letter praises Beckie for her many achievements, for her being a tremendous ambassador for Alberta and Canada and wishes her the best in her future endeavours.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I would also note that I'd like to raise a point of order, but at this point, I will, following Standing Order 7(5), ask for the Government House Leader to share the projected government business for the week of April 24 to 27.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to do that. Our projected government House business would include the following. Starting on Monday, April 24, in the afternoon we'll deal with private members' business, that being some written questions and motions for returns. Under public bills and orders we will deal with second reading of bills 206, 207, and 208, time depending, of course.

On Monday evening, under private members' motions I anticipate that we'll deal with Motion 507. At 9 under Government Bills and Orders we will look at second reading of Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006; Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006; Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006; Bill 31, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006; Bill 32, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act; Bill 33, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006; and Bill 34, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006; and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 25, in the afternoon under Committee of Supply we'll deal with the Ministry of Education estimates and otherwise as per the Order Paper. Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Committee of Supply we will deal with the Ministry of Gaming and its estimates. Then in Committee of the Whole we anticipate dealing with bills 14, 15, 25, 26, 27, 28, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon in Committee of Supply we will deal with the estimates of the Ministry of Community Development and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. in Committee of Supply we will deal with the estimates of the Ministry of Innovation and Science and then Committee of the Whole for bills 24, 29, and 30 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Thursday afternoon in Committee of Supply we will deal with the estimates of the Ministry of Health and Wellness and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Tabling Cited Documents

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in the afternoon during question period in an exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation the minister quoted extensively from a document. I did wait until after tablings was complete to see if the minister had in fact tabled the documents from which he was citing, and I note that in Beauchesne 495(1), (2), (4), and (5), which I can go through in depth, but essentially:

495. (1) A Minister is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House without being prepared to lay it on the Table.

(2) It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table . . .

(4) Only the document cited need be tabled by a Minister . . .

(5) To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate.

As I noted, the minister did quote extensively from the document and held it in his hand through an entire exchange and, I think, perhaps two exchanges with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

I did notify the Speaker at the time that I expected the document to be tabled given the amount of time that had been spent on it. As I say, I waited until the end of tablings to see if that document was forthcoming, and it has not been, Mr. Speaker. So at this time I argue that 495, and the many clauses I've cited, has been breached and would ask that a point of order is found against the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and that the document is produced and tabled in the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I was just reviewing 495. I recall the incident that the hon. member is raising the point of order on; however, it's not clear to me whether or not the document that the minister was referring to and perhaps quoting from had already been tabled by him earlier. I think we need some clarity around that matter before this could be properly considered.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I anticipated this, so I looked into Beauchesne's as well and read from the same clauses that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out. I would like to point out specifically Beauchesne's 495(4), which says: "only the document cited need be tabled by a Minister. A complete file need not be tabled because one document in it has been cited." Not having the Blues before me, I don't recall him citing any specific document to begin with or referring to it by name. If I could get some clarification on that, it would be helpful.

Not having that, does the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung wish to respond to this?

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was reading at length from a document that he held up and he actually portrayed during question period. It's our submission that he needs to table this very document, and whether in fact it was tabled before or not is irrelevant. It was not tabled before in our opinion.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, just perhaps to provide a little clarity or perhaps even to add to this discussion, it would appear to me, as I recall, not having the benefit of the Blues either, that the minister was extrapolating the acreages from the documents that had been tabled previously. Simply stating that from those documents and those agreements that have been tabled in this House, if one did the math, one would find where the acres were. He did make reference to Easter eggs as well, but we're talking about what he pointed to as opposed to a particular document cited.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I do recall that when that interaction happened with the minister and on the question, there was an issue about the total number of acreages. The minister did indicate that if you look at that contract, the total acreage will be in that contract. My belief is that the document that he may have been referring to was the actual contract that was tabled on Tuesday.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I would not have raised this issue if I did not believe in all good faith that there was an additional document that was being read from and cited from and quoted from directly. It was a different shape. The offer to sale, the documents, contracts that were offered before are on a legal-size piece of paper. What the minister was holding in his hand and looking down at repeatedly and reading from extensively was not that same shape or size of paper, so I would ask that document that he was reading from please be tabled.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, not having a copy of the Blues in front of me, I will commit to the Assembly that I will undertake a review of the Blues, and if there was a specific document cited, then perhaps there's a reason to have it tabled. I don't have a recollection of that, so I will look at that and make a ruling on it when we come back.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Children's Services

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate in the debate.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to move the Ministry of Children's Services business plan for 2006-2009, and our budget estimates for 2006-07.

Before I get started, I want to introduce the ministry staff who have accompanied me here today and are sitting in our members' gallery: assistant deputy minister of ministry support services, Steve MacDonald; assistant deputy minister of community strategies and support division, Niki Wosnack; senior financial officer, Shehnaz Hutchinson; manager of budget strategies, Darren Baptista; budget officer Riyaz Mukhi; visiting us for the first time, CEO for the east central Alberta child and family service authority, David Wilson; my executive assistant, Maureen Geres; my special adviser, Debbie Malloy; and staff from my office, Jeri Romaniuk and Elizabeth Day.

This is a very small representation of the thousands of staff who work in my department, our regional authorities, and our contracted agencies across the province. I commend all of these very passionate people who dedicate their lives to improving those of Alberta's children and families. Mr. Chair, a minister is only as successful as the people she works with, and I can say with confidence that my staff do a fantastic job each and every day, working on behalf of the children and families in this province.

At Children's Services our focus has certainly shifted. The Alberta response has become our way of doing business. It recognizes a range, a continuum of services that are necessary to achieve better outcomes for children and youth. With two new leading-edge pieces of legislation we've transformed our approach to dealing with the problems our children, youth, and families face. I'm referring to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. Today more than ever we concentrate on building strong families and communities.

Trends have changed. Priorities have changed. To reflect those changes, we must also change the way we spend our money. We now focus on a comprehensive system of community supports that promote a variety of care options to give children and youth safe, nurturing, and permanent homes. Fewer children are coming into the direct care of our government. We're providing more services sooner to families, Mr. Chair, and our outcomes are better.

With this year's budget we'll be able to continue building on our successes. In 2006-07 this government is investing a total of $918.5 million towards children, youth, and families in Alberta. It has an increase of $99.9 million from last year. It is a budget that we know will give us the ability to continue promoting the development and well-being of children, youth, and families, keeping children, youth, families safe and protected and promoting healthy communities for children, youth, and families.

Today I'd like to share some of the highlights of this year's budget with you. We're investing $147 million in child care, $91.6 million towards caring for children with disabilities, $32.4 million towards the prevention of family violence, and $17.1 million in resources that support parents in giving their children a healthy start in life.

A significant increase in this year's budget is due to the federal child care funding, which will remain in place until March 31, 2007. Our spending target for this year includes federal transfers of $85.3 million for the early learning and child care initiative that the former federal government introduced last year. However, we have since been informed by the new federal government that this initiative will be cancelled after the '06-07 fiscal year. This decision by the federal government came too late in Alberta's budget process to determine the possible implications for Children's Services future spending plans. The figures for 2007-08 and 2008-09 each currently include $117 million for the original federal funding, learning, and child care initiative transfer, that will no longer be provided by the federal government.

It's important, Mr. Chair, to remember that this province had already invested $70 million into child care funding before any news of federal funding last year. The federal funding simply allowed us to enhance and expand our existing provincial child care programs and services, and it's exciting to see such strong support for Alberta's five-point plan.

As you know, I met with the federal minister to explain our five-point plan and to advocate for that plan on behalf of Albertans. While we know that it's important for the new federal government to implement its $1,200 a year program, we're working hard to find a win-win for our children and families. Mr. Chair, I will continue to advocate on behalf of children, family, and child care providers in this province to identify the funding that will ensure quality, choice, and flexibility in child care. We know that at times it's hard for parents and families to carry the responsibility of raising a child on their own. We're committed to helping parents give their children the best start in life. Through a continuum of supports that promote effective parenting skills, knowledge, and healthy child development, we want to connect parents to the community services and resources that will help them get the skills, knowledge, and confidence they need to build strong, healthy families.

This year we're spending $17 million on parenting resources. It's an increase of nearly $5 million to establish and operate nine new parenting centres, bringing our network of parenting centres to a total of 45 across the province. Here Alberta parents can access important services in early childhood development and care, parent education, family support, and information and referrals.

To help families meet the ongoing challenges of caring for a child with a disability, we'll invest an additional $8.8 million. More and more children and families are accessing our support under the new Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. We want to build our successes by increasing our resources and expanding our services for children with disabilities, particularly those in rural and isolated areas of our province. Within this year's additional funding we'll direct $1.3 million to enhance resources in the rural and isolated areas for respite resources, personal, behavioural, and developmental aide supports, and specialized services for children with severe disabilities. These services are important so we can keep supporting families who care for their children with disabilities at home and improve family functioning and child well-being.

The prevention of family violence and bullying is a priority not only for this ministry but the entire government. It's exciting to lead the cross-ministry strategy on the issue as we continue to move forward and take action. At Children's Services we can't forget that one of our core businesses is to keep families safe. In 2006-07 we'll invest $32.4 million to support and protect those experiencing or at risk of suffering family violence. We want to make sure that all families in every part of the province at risk of violence have a safe place to stay when they need one. Yes, Mr. Chair, there are times when shelters are full, but let me make it very clear when I say that no one is ever sent away without help. Keeping families safe from family violence is the number one priority for every shelter across this province.

With our stakeholders we're taking action to make sure that shelters can continue to provide needed services, including an additional $400,000 in funding to continue making emergency support and accommodations available. This additional funding means that Children's Services will provide $21.8 million to women's shelters this year and will fund a total of 489 beds across the province.

A province-wide review of the women's emergency shelter program is currently under way. We're talking to women's shelter staff and Albertans who receive their services to make sure that we have the right services in the right places and at the right time. We also provide $600,000 to support HomeFront in Calgary, a community agency dedicated to improving the way domestic violence cases are handled. It relies on a co-ordinated community approach to provide support and assistance to victims of domestic violence. HomeFront is truly working miracles, helping families to break the cycle of family violence.

With increasing advances in technology we face increased pressures to protect children and youth from sexual exploitation. You don't have to read very far in the newspaper to know what's happening. Just last month we heard about an international investigation into a child pornography website managed right here in Edmonton, trading images of child pornography and showing live webcasts of child rape.

Protecting children and youth from sexual exploitation continues to be a priority for our ministry. Spending in this important area has increased by $1.1 million, or 21 per cent, since 2004-05. This year our budget shows a slight decrease in this area because of a one-time administrative cost for the program last year. This decrease has no impact on program delivery. In fact, we show an increase in the number of children we're serving through PCHIP, and we will be expanding our awareness programs.

Some of the most rewarding moments of this ministry are when we hear the success stories about young adults who were previously in our care. For many this successful transition to adulthood comes as a result of further education, something we make possible for them through the advancing futures bursary program. We provide financial support to children who have been or continue to be in our care to help them attain a degree or learn a trade through postsecondary apprenticeship or other training programs. By providing the youth in our care with the resources and opportunities they need to succeed, we can help them realize their dreams and ambitions, things they may have otherwise never imagined possible.

Since the program began, we've awarded 529 bursaries, but we could be doing so much more. We want to increase our uptake in this program so that we're reaching as many youth as possible. That's why this year we're providing an additional $900,000, for a total of $4.1 million, to the advancing futures bursary program. With this increase we hope to award over 500 bursaries in 2006-07 alone.

Family and community support services play a big role in Alberta. We're really proud of FCSS and all of the great things their programs are doing for communities across the province. No other province has a similar working partnership between the provincial government, municipalities, and Métis settlements. Our program is the envy of provinces across Canada and internationally, and we're thrilled to see that our FCSS communities continue to grow. Right now a total of 303 municipalities and Métis settlements are organized into 199 local FCSS programs. People province-wide can access the wealth of services provided through FCSS.

We want to make sure that FCSS programs continue doing the great things they do for Albertans. They will receive a $3 million increase this year to provide for projected increases in the cost of delivering services and population growth across this province. Over the last five years FCSS grants have increased by 61.5 per cent. With this year's $3 million increase we'll support FCSS programs across Alberta with a total of $68 million in funding.

The key to accomplishing all of the great things I've told you about today is the work of our regional child and family services authorities. It's through our CFSA's that we are able to deliver quality service for children, youth, and families across Alberta. This year they will receive $650.9 million to do that: child intervention services, child and youth financial support, family support for children with disabilities, child care, early intervention, and other community-based services. This is almost $40 million more than last year and represents 70.9 per cent of the total ministry budget.

I'm pleased to have the opportunity to share with you some of the things we're doing this year at Children's Services. We're clearly committed to doing everything we can for Alberta's children, youth, and families. We've dedicated a total of $433.8 million to promote their development and well-being, $465.4 million to keep them safe and protected, and $19.3 million to promote healthy communities in which they can live.

I'd now like to ask the MLA for Calgary-Hays, who is the chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, to please provide an update. Afterwards I am happy to try and answer any questions you have related to the Children's Services '06-07 budget, and I'll be pleased to provide answers in writing to any outstanding questions that I can't answer today. Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the first hour is normally allocated between the minister and members of the opposition. However, there are six minutes left in the 20 minutes that is allocated to the minister. So, hon. member, Calgary-Hays, I'll recognize you for the next six minutes.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Minister. There are approximately 1,700 facilities under the jurisdiction of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. The committee is currently reviewing a cross-section of facilities including daycares, out-of-school facilities, foster homes, child and youth social care facilities, and women's emergency shelters. At these facilities we are the eyes and the ears for the hon. Minister of Children's Services. When we conduct reviews, we interview service recipients such as children in care, their families and guardians, and service providers. We hear about the services provided and whether or not clients are satisfied. If there are any concerns about the quality of care at these facilities, our members flag them for follow-up by the appropriate authorities. Upon request from the hon. minister we also conduct investigations at facilities and where necessary provide recommendations to improve service delivery.

The committee has a seven-year visit plan to ensure that they conduct reviews in all regions on a rotating basis. This year we will conduct 225 reviews. Our members will visit facilities in southwest Alberta, northwest Alberta, northeast Alberta, Calgary and area, Edmonton and area, and the Métis settlements.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's been 40 years since the creation of the first of the special sector ministries in Alberta. The Social Credit government of Ernest C. Manning created the ministry of youth at the same time it lowered the provincial voting age from 21 to 19. The first minister was the hon. Bob Clark, later Alberta's first Information and Privacy Commissioner.

About the same time, the federal government brought in a minister responsible for the status of women. Ottawa already had two special sector ministries responsible for veterans' affairs and for immigrants and immigration. Then some of the provinces added ministers responsible for seniors and finally for children's services. Women, children, youth, seniors, and veterans all represent sectors for which government has certain responsibilities for persons who are or were vulnerable and have particular needs not being addressed in the mainstream at the time.

Though there may be a tendency to want to group women, youth, and children together, there is one significant difference. Children are one group who are not only vulnerable but who have no vote or voice in our political system. The first children for whom the province was responsible, long before there was a children's ministry, were a particularly vulnerable lot, those who had no families of their own and lived in foster homes, orphanages, and other institutions. Our responsibility to do something for them came not only from necessity because they had nowhere else to turn; it was part of the social conscience pioneered by churches and religious institutions and enjoined by the biblical reminder to tend the widow, plead for the fatherless.

Those included in today's Children's Services are still vulnerable and represent an even larger cross-section of society. We have not only the vital and emergent services for children who are wards of the Crown but issues and programs such as child care, and these are not frills but collective responsibilities, a result of the choices we have made and the economy we have built that requires most families to have more than one parent in the workforce in order to meet the costs of adequate food, clothing, and shelter. The phrase "you shall love your neighbour as yourself" is especially applicable to children, not only our own children but all children in our society.

Children bring us face to face with our own humanity. Our neglect of them in time and attention as well as in material needs reflects our neglect of human values. Giving due attention to children's needs, growth, and vulnerability involves far more than specific programs and institutions administered by the Ministry of Children's Services; it involves most ministries and practically all the major aspects of public policy, including environment, education, health, justice, recreation, and culture.

I would like to thank the hon. minister and her staff for the work they do in protecting our children. It is a challenge and a wonderful opportunity to seek to provide the best options and choices for Alberta families. I appreciate the opportunity I've had to participate in support of this ministry. I'm also grateful for the good working relationship we have established. It is an honour to speak about the budget and priorities for Children's Services, and I commend the ministry for many good initiatives and recognizing needs, new ones as well as old.

I want to talk first about an issue that is of primary importance in this province especially at this time, and that is child care. It is disappointing that the new federal government lacks long-term commitment to quality child care for children and families. The Speech from the Throne did not even mention quality care. There was no sense of direction for the country in terms of developing and nurturing the potential of young children and supporting their families. The new federal government plan for a direct payment to parents is shortsighted when the research so strongly supports investment in quality programs in the all-important early years. A small taxable allowance to parents guarantees nothing but a bit of extra cash to buy a service that may not be available in their community and has no guarantee of quality.

Our federal government is rushing to keep an election promise at the expense of dishonouring the important commitments already made to the provinces. So much work has already been done in communities across the country. Governments, early learning and child care organizations and leaders, parents and practitioners have been working together for years to finally come up with a concrete action plan based on signed bilateral agreements to build quality child care across the country. Dismantling these child care deals is having serious consequences for the thousands of children on waiting lists.

The Canadian Child Care Federation is Canada's largest early learning and child care organization, a vibrant partnership of 21 provincial/territorial child care organizations representing over 11,500 members, including child care practitioners working in centres and family child care academics, parents, and policy-makers. CCCF is committed to excellence in early learning and child care through best and promising practices, capacity building and collaborations, networks and partnerships. It is their view that it is more urgent than ever that all government parties work together toward a vision that reflects the reality of today's family and the early learning needs of Canada's youngest citizens. What is needed is a deepened, lengthened, and permanent investment in early learning and child care in the coming budget.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest learning takes place in the earliest years of life. Here a child not only learns how to orient him or herself in the world but faces the basic question of value, whether he or she is loved and nurtured for what she is or what she does to satisfy others, whether she is central in other's attention and affection or somewhere on the periphery. On the basis of this, early education curriculum is structured and systems are put in place. Is it better spending to provide the initial supports in having a parent on-site at home or quality and qualified support if required than possibly spending huge amounts for remediation and therapy down the road?

There was a hope last year when the provincial governments and the federal government signed an agreement with the new commitments that the federal government was making with respect to children's services, daycare services in particular. The provinces would receive new funds, which they would then use in co-operation with each other to provide high-quality daycare services, quality that would be measured, and the services would be provided in daycare centres that are primarily there to provide quality services and not there to operate in order to primarily maximize their returns on their investment. In other words, these services will be funded adequately by two levels of government, federal and provincial. Secondly, these services would be universally available. Any expert that you talk to who has done work on child care or on early child development tells you that any money spent on quality child care and early childhood development and education is a return later on, so it's an investment worth making.

If we were to look at it purely from the point of view of economic returns – and I'm sure that all of us agree that there's more to it than just economic returns when you think about children – children's welfare is far more important than merely the economic returns. We know that 70 to 75 per cent of parents with very young children are participating in the labour force, and they have children that need care when they themselves are at work, and 70 to 75 per cent of the parents who are working want to have their children in daycares which are appropriately funded, are appropriately staffed, are safe places, and where children not only can be babysat but can in fact learn and engage in early childhood development programs, daycares that are not only properly funded but are staffed with people who are appropriately educated and trained.

A lack of funding has been the greatest problem faced by the child care sector in Alberta. The five-point plan established by Alberta addressed the concern by raising wages and accreditation funding for daycare centres. The maximum income for families to receive full subsidy was increased by 25 per cent. More funding was given to provide opportunities for children with disabilities, and stay-at-home parents were provided a new subsidy, up to a hundred dollars per month for each preschool-aged child to participate in early childhood development programs. Along with this, supports for parents and the early intervention programs and services, including development and screening, have been improved.

I have some questions for the minister regarding child care. Has the minister made any progress in her discussion with her federal counterparts regarding Alberta's early learning and child care agreement that was signed with the previous federal government? I know that you told me there are some meetings coming up, but I'm wondering if you've had any further discussions since we talked. What plan does the minister have for the future of child care in Alberta if the previous agreement is really and truly eliminated in 2007? Given that the federal funding helped to increase child care wages in Alberta, will the minister commit to ensuring that these wages are not rolled back? Let's not go backwards. Let's go forward and keep the gains that we have made with the national daycare agreement.

In the business plan, page 97, strategies 1.3 and 1.4: can the minister commit today to ensuring that these enhancements to the child care accreditation program and training standards for child care professionals will proceed despite the change in Ottawa? I'm wondering: has the minister met with the provincial child care workers recently to hear their concerns? Child care workers need to be valued in this province. They need to be valued anywhere. There is no more important work than child care. Can the minister assure the child care sector that all of the gains that were realized in 2005 will not be lost? The results of a poll conducted by Public Interest Alberta were released today, indicating what we know, that the majority of Albertans oppose Prime Minister Harper's new child care plan and favour the previous federal agreement. Is the minister committed to protecting the interest of Albertans in this regard? Is she or will she be fighting to maintain the previous agreement with Ottawa?

As I continue talking about child care, I'd like to have you all look at out of school care because it is important too. This is an area that needs provincial support and subsidies and standards that match the expectations of daycare centres. Families need the support of the state, industry, and the rest of society. That's us. We need to provide the infrastructure, the money, and the moral and emotional support that can help young families do the work from which we will all benefit. The problem with after school care is that subsidies are needed for many families so that school-aged children will not have to be latchkey kids.

In Edmonton the city's program works well; however, parents in Sherwood Park cannot access subsidies for their school-aged children. Calgary has made it a priority, but it's a problem in many other areas. The only fair way to do it would be to have a province-wide program or have the municipalities all mandated to provide it. They get the money but choose to spend it in other ways.

In municipalities where out of school care is provided, it is done so through FCSS funding based on local decisions to allocate resources to out of school care. These municipalities, however, cannot meet the increasing demand for out of school care, and other municipalities simply cannot afford to offer the much-needed program. The patchwork provision of out of school care is ineffective and not nearly meeting increasing needs. Since Children's Services already monitors and licenses out of school care, why doesn't the ministry take over the program and provide adequate resources and supports to make it an effective program that truly meets the needs of children and families in Alberta? As I understand it, out of school care is provided by the municipalities through their FCSS funding. I know that right now there's a really big advocacy effort to have this pushed into provincial responsibilities thereby freeing up some of the FCSS dollars for other initiatives. Can the minister tell us if this will be happening?

Another area of concern for me is related to youth shelters. Youth shelters have no source of stable funding other than grants that they get from year to year, and that is not enough. The province has announced a review of this, but why do we have to wait for a review when all the agencies have been asking for the same thing that horse racing gets, which is steady, sustainable funding from year to year? My understanding is that the funding is very piecemeal and their administrators end up spending a lot of time trying to figure out which different grant program to apply to this year and trying to get them up to the level of funding they need to operate. I know that many, many hours are spent with fundraising.

Does this government have a plan for youth shelters and how they are funded? What programs are going to be introduced to ensure that the workers and agencies that care for these children are going to have the stable funding required to provide that environment? I hear that there's a need to provide some funds, either through the Wild Rose Foundation or the Muttart Foundation, to bring the youth shelter managers together in meetings to talk about best practices and allow them to learn from each other. I think that this will be timely when the youth shelter review committee releases its report and recommendations, and I don't know when that's going to be. If shelter managers have a chance to come together once or twice a year, such as groups do that deal with safe communities or agriculture, it would go a long way in helping them to learn from each other about effectively using resources.

Another concern I have when I talk to shelter staff is that they express a concern about the lack of service providers and the lack of support the government shows for the marginalized people of this province. Yet again they mention the horse-racing industry getting the 40 per cent increase. This just doesn't make sense. Service provision industry workers such as youth workers, personal care workers are paid less than any other industry. The people that work in some shelters make the same amount now as those working at Tim Hortons. I don't think that's right. Our children are a precious resource, and they deserve the best we can give them. The lack of stable and predictable funding places a heavy toll on shelter staff to fund raise.

I know that we have youth in transition programs, services, and resources that Alberta's Children's Services provides or offers to youth between the ages of 18 and 22 who have intervention status or an agreement with the director. The goal is to ensure that these youth have a transition to independence plan. The plan addresses such things as their educational and career plans and life skills development. The plan must address the youth's living arrangements and identify family and community connections necessary to support the youth as he or she transitions into adulthood.

However, some shelters tell me that their fundraising provides some funds that allow them to assist work with teens that do not have child welfare status. This is another issue: youth without status who are homeless. Youth homelessness has been identified as a growing national issue by individual researchers, by the federal government's national homeless initiative, and on and on by countless service agencies who work with street-involved youth.

Identifying the complete, accurate number of kids on the street at any one time in Canada is a difficult thing, but the count right now coming from our national government is approximately one-third of the total homeless population, or about 60,000 per year. On any given night data from the national homeless initiative states that approximately 11,000 youth are homeless. A report providing recommendations for the Calgary nonstatus homeless youth study tells us that a total of 186 youth were surveyed during the period of the study recently, and of those 102 fit within the parameters of their research focus. The conclusion was that it allowed them to produce a verifiable count of 354 individuals in Calgary under the age of 18 who do not have child welfare status and who have identified themselves as homeless.

Homeless youth are a heterogeneous population. They come from all quadrants of the city and the province. We need a provincial response to the issue of child and youth homelessness which would begin with the commitment of funding to resource community-based transitional housing programs and supports for children who do not have child welfare status. There's a pressing need to expand the number of available beds and the continuum of services available to this population. Addressing child and youth homelessness is a central prevention strategy in efforts to eradicate homelessness.

Looking again at youth shelters, besides predictable and sustainable funding, another issue is the need for qualified staff in our shelters. I am told that we need more on-call workers that can help with assessment and referral of youth. Staff at the shelters are generous and are good enough to know when they are not able to help, but there's often no one to call to give some help and guidance in casework. There's also no one to ask for help on behalf of youth. I can talk about cases I've heard of where there are kids in shelters who have lost a parent in a car crash or who are remembering sexual abuse from earlier years. The staff do not feel qualified to deal with this. That's just wrong. We must provide agencies with enough money to be able to provide services to youth that don't fit into the nuclear family unit. Can the minister tell us what level of funding will be dedicated specifically for youth emergency shelters in the province?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought the minister was going to respond first. Was the minister not going to respond?

The Chair: Oh, I'm sorry. The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I truly do appreciate your support. I would like to touch on some of the areas that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods brought forward. Of course, her first issue is child care, and like she indicated in her speaking notes, we've had several discussions on that particular area.

She asked about the discussion with my federal counterparts. I believe the last time she was in my office I explained to her that when the minister was appointed to her cabinet position, I think it was less than 48 hours after that that we placed a call in to her in regard to the urgency of having some discussion on the child care initiative. From that we set up an appointment, and we flew to Ottawa and met with her and talked to her about the issue of child care, specifically on issues that we felt needed to be addressed. First of all, Alberta's five-point plan, which has been resoundingly successful and accepted by Albertans: we wanted to talk to her about the future funding of that particular initiative.

Besides that we had many, many other questions to talk to her about in regards to the creation of the child care spaces that they were talking about and the money that was involved in that particular initiative. We had asked her about the fact that: who was going to do the monitoring? Who was going to do the licensing? All of those questions we felt needed to be answered. We came back from Ottawa and within a couple of days sent a letter back to her asking what I consider several pointed questions about the issue of child care, the issue of the creation of spaces that they talked about. I believe it was about 125,000. I can tell the hon. member that at this particular time, on the date of the 13th of April, we have not had a response from her. We are continually discussing the initiative of our child care program.

She asked the question about wages, if the wages were going to be rolled back on the enhancement that we have already provided to the daycare providers in this province, that do an unbelievable, remarkable job and are what I consider second parents to us when we drop our children off. The answer is no. We have no intention of rolling back their wages.

She asked me if I had met with the child care association. The answer is yes. I met with them a couple of weeks ago. I don't have the date in front of me, but there were several from all over the province. Since then we had a very long discussion. They indicated that they were going to go to a meeting, the national meeting, and discuss their views about how they felt about the initiative of the agreement from the federal government. We have since sent them a letter of support. They wanted to have something in writing because of all the questions that they're getting from parents, from child care providers, so we have sent a letter of support and indicated that they would then be posting that particular letter at daycares so that the parents could see that Alberta is supportive of our five-point plan.

The new polls. That's just what I talked about. I have not personally seen the polls other than what was shared just before I came into question period. I believe the poll results were incredibly high at 87 per cent support or something for the child care plan that we're doing here. When I was scrummed by the press, they asked me if I was surprised. I said no, because that plan was derived from Albertans. We consulted heavily, and we will continue to push our plan. I can recall when I met with the federal minister. She said that Alberta was leading the pack across this country because it was so innovative.

The hon. member then talked about out of school care. We have had this discussion in the past, and I indicated to her that we're reviewing. The FCSS program is now being reviewed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. When I was in the meeting with the child care association, they brought that up about the after school program, and I indicated to them that we're well aware of it. We're well aware of the discussions on the after school program, but we're still at this point in time lobbying to just continue to keep our own child care program. That's one of our priorities. I said that it's not a dead issue, but it's not something that's on the front burner for us at this particular time; it's on the back burner, by which I mean, you know, if you've got two on the front and two on the back. We're going to continue looking at that particular initiative.

The social care facility act the hon. member referred to is currently being reviewed by Calgary-Fort. I expect to have that in my office within the next couple of months, and we'll go over that.

She talked at length – and I know this is dear to her heart – about the youth shelters and the review. The question she asked is: why are we doing the review? Well, I can tell the member that when I travelled the province last summer, I crossed the province as far south as you can go and as far north as you can go and made it a point to try and drop in on every kind of sector within the jurisdiction that I had been visiting, so that would be child care, women's shelters, youth shelters. I listened to them quite intently, and it was interesting to me about the different issues in different areas of the province that they're particularly dealing with.

I felt it was important to review the youth shelters on how they are conducting business because some of the things in the discussions when we were visiting the youth shelters struck me as good issues; some of them alarmed me in some way. I thought it was important for me that we do a review. We support the concept of the youth shelters. We support children and youth in this province. We realize that there is a category of youth if you can label them – and I don't like to label people as high risk. We have youth that are in transition. We have youth that are travelling across the country and may access a youth shelter. We have some youth in there that are going through a crisis with their parent. We have some youth in there that prefer not to live at home. We have some youth that have some issues whether it's a death of a parent, that you alluded to, or some social problems. So for me it's a bigger picture on how we're going to deal with the youth emergency shelters.

Listening to the staff about some of the issues, for example, they feel that the kids should be out of the shelter from 8 to 5, and at that particular time they're looking for work, they're in school, or they may be at AADAC: one of those things. Some of the comments that I heard: on one particular day there may be a youth that may be in some sort of a crisis, maybe showing some suicidal tendencies, and things like that. Should they be out of the shelter because that's the shelter rule at that particular time? You may find a youth wanting to access a shelter at 3 o'clock in the morning because of some sort of crisis situation. I can tell the member that from some of the things that cross my desk on a daily basis there are a lot of not very good or happy kind of homes, where there are some horrific things happening.

I really think that it's important to have that review, see what happens in that review, listen to the people who are working in the youth shelters and hear what they have to say on some of the ideas on how we can move forward, some of the recommendations. I find the greatest way to get good ideas is listening to the people that are working on the front line. So that's why it was important for me to have a youth shelter review, talk to the people who are working in the shelters, talk to the kids and hear what they have to say.

You referred to wages. I can tell the hon. member that I believe it was a year ago – and I don't want to be quoted on exact dates – I gave $12 million to the agencies because I was well aware of that particular level in regard to trying to keep their wages comparable to some of the government. That was met with applause, and they were very, very pleased about that. The agencies felt that it was a good start because the wages have been a problem, trying to keep their staff because of competition.

But the sad thing in reality at this particular time is the fact that when you have a very vibrant economy – we've got daycare workers in Fort McMurray, for example, that you could be paying $15 an hour, and they can walk across the street and make $30 an hour working in the kitchen. It's not just a problem within the Department of Children's Services. It's a problem everywhere across this province because you have a hot economy. I don't think there is a street that you can walk down in either Edmonton or Calgary where you don't see help wanted ads. The restaurant businesses are having problems. The retail businesses are having problems. One of the things that has kept the daycare kind of steady is the fact that we increased their wages in the five-point plan.

You brought up the youth in transition. I can't tell you how proud I am about that particular program. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, who is the chair of the Youth Secretariat, has done an unbelievable job in regard to moving forward some of the issues of youth across this province. Under his leadership, under the secretariat and the work that he's been doing about consulting right across the province, we have put together the Youth Advisory Panel. I believe there are 15 members on there, and they're from all walks of life, from right across the province. I can tell the hon. member that they don't waste any words. They're frank. They're honest. They feel that they are being listened to. That's one of the concerns we've heard in the past, that the youth in this province don't feel that they're being listened to.

We're extremely pleased. We've heard what you've talked about, in fact, about our success with the youth in transition and our bursary program and about the youth who don't have child welfare status. It's something that we've heard and we're looking at. But I'm extremely proud of our youth bursaries and what's been happening with our students that are graduating. I never would've thought they would end up where they are. One thing that the member did ask is that she mentioned, under that program, living arrangements. Under our bursary we do provide living arrangements for those particular youth.

The last thing she talked about was the youth homelessness. I can tell the hon. member that I saw the review. I believe it was done in 2005. I met with a homelessness foundation out of Calgary. We talked at length about how you reach those youth, how you identify those youth. When the hon. member and I met, I said that I think one of the things that we need to improve in our department is education so that youth in the province know what is available to them not only from the department but other sectors across government as far as my hon. colleague that sits next to me, what's available in his portfolio, or what's available through Health.

I can tell the member that we've got two high-risk projects going on, and I spoke to you about that when we met. I'm looking forward to seeing how that's going because it's a pilot project. But we have sent the homeless foundation all of the information we think is pertinent in regard to accessing what we offer and getting the word out on the street more.

I think that's just about all of the questions she asked, Chair. If not, like I said at the beginning when I spoke, anything that I've missed, as we did last year, we'll provide back in writing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start with thanking the minister for her introductory remarks and for her continued expression of concern for the interests of children in this province. She indeed does have responsibility for a portfolio which I think provides the most critical services for the children of this province, so I take her words very seriously and take the policies of the department very seriously. They require our close scrutiny and, after that, support so long as we think that those policies are the right ones to provide the services that our children need.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has already asked several of the questions, and the minister has tried to answer some of those, so I'll try to not repeat. I was looking at the business plan – is it? – of the government. Let me see if I can get there very quickly so that I get the exact title here. The fiscal plan is what I'm talking about. Under Children's Services on page 24 there is a reference to what the minister has already in a sense talked about briefly, that Alberta must "actively participate in negotiations with the new federal government regarding future federal funding" for child care and early learning and child development services.

I'm curious about this. I ask the minister – she says that she will actively participate in negotiations – is it the bilateral negotiations that the minister is referring to here between this province and the federal government, or is it all provinces together engaging the federal government in some negotiations? If it's simply a bilateral matter, then it's not a question of just participating. I urge the minister to in fact say that she will engage the federal government in coming to some sort of conclusion on these negotiations that she has already started.

We can't lose time on this. We know that services for children not only in Alberta but all over Canada, particularly child care services, are one of the most undeveloped parts of our social and economic policy. Child care is deficient in supply, in the number of places available. It certainly raises very serious concerns about affordability of what is available, and certainly there are concerns about quality control. I think the minister's own five-point plan, that she released in October of last year, October 18, I think, if I'm right, acknowledges that action needs to be taken, that the government needs to come up with a concrete action plan to address some of these concerns and some of these deficiencies.

I applaud the minister for having developed that five-point plan, which certainly indicates an attempt to seriously address the question of quality, wages for people who work in the field, and their professional development as well as accrediting more and more of the child care facilities so that they meet standards. I notice that the minister acknowledges that these are problems, and she has by way of a five-point plan indicated that she's willing to take action.

That five-year plan related action, Mr. Chairman, was facilitated by the signing of the agreement by this minister with the federal government prior to the last federal election, which resulted in the province of Alberta getting a large amount of money. The minister will tell me exactly: $117 million a year, I think the minister noted, from federal transfers in this regard. As part of that plan I think it's certainly more than $70 million. Those new additional funds made it possible for the minister to take some initiatives that have received the support of, well, the vast majority of Albertans.

Today's poll that was released by Public Interest Alberta and the Alberta Federation of Labour shows both support for the federal/provincial agreement that our minister signed on behalf of us and the children of Alberta with the federal government last year and also support for the actions that the minister proposes to take in order beef up the quality of the child care services in this province and move them in the direction of more than just babysitting to beginning to focus on early childhood development, which is, by any measure – whether you look at the work of experts on child care, whether you look at the work of educational experts, all say that those early years are extremely critical and significant for the later developmental success of our children through school on to the labour market and society in general.

What I'm trying to do is to on the one hand compliment the minister for using the additional funds to do exactly what needed to be done. Now that those funds are in jeopardy, the minister cannot assure this House that those additional funds from the federal government for this purpose will be available. It looks like they won't be. So then my question to the minister is: what are the plans that she has in place to replace the loss of those dollars that would have come to us from the federal government had the agreement that she signed been honoured by the government that succeeded the previous government?

If the minister is – and I know she's serious about this. She says that she's negotiating with the federal minister, but the federal minister told her, it seems to me, and the minister has just said, that those funds are not likely to be forthcoming after this fiscal year. Then will the minister join with other provincial governments and with Albertans in this province to send a clear message to the federal government that the federal government must not cancel the agreement over the next five years as was planned, that the minister signed, I guess, for the first two years? I would like to get the minister to address this issue as clearly as she can. Would she join publicly with other provincial governments to say to the federal government that she is advising the federal government not to cancel those programs and that that program was very, very valuable and they must be kept in place?

Secondly, will the minister, in fact, if she needs help from this House, bring forward a motion in this Assembly seeking the support of all parties represented in this House for her support for that agreement and for her ability to urge the federal government to respect and honour the agreement that Ottawa had signed with the provinces? I would certainly be willing to work with the minister in this House to get such a motion passed. If she would rather have this motion come from this side of the House, I'd be more than willing to take that initiative. I need the minister to address this issue head-on, say yes or no that she will in fact stand up for the children of Alberta on this issue regardless of who is in power in Ottawa.

What's really at issue is not the politics of this whole thing; what's at issue are the fundamental interests of our children. Those children, as the minister herself acknowledged by way of the five-point plan that she developed, are served best if that federal/provincial agreement that she was signatory to is honoured and respected and kept in place. That agreement is in danger. It will be gone if we don't speak out on this. So there's a need for us as a House, as a government, as a province to speak out on it and join our voice with the voices of those who want this agreement to be saved and properly funded.

The alternative Harper plan is simply not designed to address the issue of affordability, the issue of quality control, and the issue of availability of enough spaces. Supply side must be addressed. We need to create spaces in affordable, quality daycare places, where our very, very young children can get the services which will help to begin to learn the skills and engage in cognitive and social and personal development, which is critical to their education later on and to their success in life following that. So that's the question that I have for the minister.

The other questions: some of them are somewhat more specific. I notice that in the minister's budget there's a parenting resources initiative. If she would give us some information on that. There's quite a large increase, about 40 per cent, in that particular line item in the budget. I just want the minister to give us some information about where this money is going. I'm not opposed to it. It's a parenting resources initiative from $12 million to $17 million, so about a 40 per cent increase.

In the same vein there's a reduction in some protection of children from prostitution. There's a reduction in the budget, and I wonder if the minister would explain how she justifies that reduction. Is the exploitation of children through prostitution going down? Is it less of a problem today? What is it that explains the 6 per cent reduction in the monies available for this?

Mrs. Forsyth: I mentioned that in the speech, Raj.

Dr. Pannu: We need an explanation of it.

The second is the Child and Youth Advocate. There's, again, an 8 per cent cutback there, and we need to know why that is happening and what's the justification for the drawing of funds from advocacy. If anything, we have more children needing more and stronger advocacy. Why the reduction there?

The Children's Services 2003-2004 annual report, the department's own report, says that only about 55 per cent of assessed child care facilities are found to be providing developmentally appropriate environments for children in their care. This is from page 42 of the department's own annual report. Now, with the possibility that the federal funds will disappear within a year, how will it impact the ability of the minister's department to improve this situation? Not all were assessed. Of child care facilities that were assessed, only 55 per cent were found to be providing developmentally appropriate environments. With the focus that the five-point plan of the minister shifts over to the developmental side of child care, are these deficiencies likely to stay in place or is the minister going to find funds elsewhere if her federal counterparts, in fact, withdraw from the agreement which would have provided a substantial amount of money to address these already existing deficiencies in the facilities that we have?

The issue of the caseloads of child care workers who intervene in difficult family situations or take care of children in government custody has been a major one. We know that caseloads have been increasing. As a result, the ability of social workers who do this very, very difficult work to provide the services on time, appropriately, and quality services has declined. Social workers have in fact been accused of failing in their duty to provide the most necessary and critical services. Would the minister please inform the House about how this budget addresses the issue of excessive and intolerable caseloads by social workers who provide these very critically important services to the minister? I was trying to find in the budget where I could see some attention paid to this specific problem, but it's very difficult in those numbers to really figure that out. The minister, I'm sure, knows the answers and would be in a position to provide some answers.

The last question that I have has to do with the Edmonton region child and family services authority and comparing it with Calgary. Calgary has a larger population, we have a smaller population, yet the budget for the Edmonton area child and family services authority is perhaps 50 per cent more. I'm just curious about what explains this. I have no specific questions, but it did pique my curiosity about why this huge difference in spite of the fact that the Calgary region has a larger population to look after than Edmonton area. Maybe it's the demographics of the two cities. Maybe it's the composition of the population, diversity of it, whether it's the income levels. I don't know what it is, but maybe the minister can respond to those.

An Hon. Member: It's a combination.

Dr. Pannu: Well, let's see what the minister knows and what she's willing to share with us on this.

So with these questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down, and I'll look forward to the minister addressing some of these questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate having the time to respond to the hon. member. Again, we're going to go back to the child care issue. I guess that, if I may, I'm going to take the hon. member back in time to when the previous minister, who is the minister of health, started the negotiation with the federal government. At that particular time when she was negotiating, they were negotiating on what they call a quad principle. They had an agreement from all the provinces at that time, accepting a quad principle right across the country.

Following that, we had an election. We also had a change in cabinet. I ended up becoming the Minister of Children's Services so was honoured enough to go to my first federal/provincial/territorial meeting. Now I believe we're going back to about January of '05. The minister at that particular time, Minister Dryden, came into the meeting where all the provinces and territories were sitting and more or less said: this is the agreement that we're all going to sign. I guess it was a national agreement if you can say that. It was an agreement that was supposed to fit all provinces.

If the member recalls, I was painted at that particular time – and I believe it was the minister from Quebec – the black sheep for taking the national child care program off the rails and not getting an agreement right across the provinces and territories on that. I made it very clear to the minister at that time that what Alberta wanted was what was best for Albertans and that the agreement that we would be signing would be in consultation with Albertans on how Albertans wanted us to come up with a plan. Thus far, you see the five-point plan.

What I must remind the hon. member is that even prior to that agreement being signed, we've always had regulated, quality child care in this province. It didn't just come up a year ago that we all of a sudden have regulated, quality child care. It's always been a priority of the government to have regulated, quality child care in this province. In the accreditation program that we have since brought forward over the last, I believe, 18 months, 97 per cent of the child care or daycare providers in this province have been signed up to become accredited. That takes child care one step further, and it provides additional training and gives them incentives in regard to accreditation.

I don't know how much more clear I have to make it to this member. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods knows our support for the child care agreement and what we signed on the five-point plan. I told the hon. member that I had met with – and the name eludes me at this point in time. I believe it's the Alberta child care association. There were probably 15 or 20 of their members from across the province at the meeting I had with them. We talked about several issues, strategies to move Alberta's five-point plan forward. I wrote them a letter of support. I said: pass this on, that Alberta is supportive of the five-point plan. They went to a national meeting. So Alberta's support on the child care is something that is even at their national level.

I would encourage the hon. member, as I did the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, as a child care critic to write the federal government with your support. They need to understand. We have also said to our critics and to every letter that crosses our desk, which are many, in regard to the cancellation of our child care agreement: you need to let the federal government know. It is they that are cancelling the program. We had $70 million last year. We have $66 million this year. They then planned to stop our agreement. The third year would have brought us, I believe, about $117 million and then four and five.

So it's important that if this is an issue not only for the government but for the opposition, they need to make that known to the federal government. We will continue to advocate on behalf of the children, families, and providers in this province. You know, I have to say that – all bragging aside, because this was not a plan that the minister made; it was a plan that was based on what Albertans want, and it's a good plan – it's probably the most innovative plan across this country dealing with the issue of child care.

I think the other thing that's important to discuss when we talk about child care is the platform that the Harper government brought forward on child care. It was $1,200 per year for every child under the age of six, I think it was. A hundred dollars a month, which, times 12, works out to $1,200. They also alluded to the fact of dealing with, I think, somewhere between 125,000 and 145,000 daycare spaces. They were going to collaborate with businesses. Small businesses, big businesses: they were going to provide an incentive of $10,000 to that business to create daycare spaces. Well, you have a lot of questions to ask about that particular. Is that $10,000 a year? For every business that starts opening up a daycare, there are operating dollars that to need to be followed after that. Who's going to monitor them? Who's going to pay for the monitoring? Who's going to pay for the licensing? Who's going to pay for the accreditation?

Now, do you really think, if you've got a small town in Alberta, that you're going to be able to open up a daycare? I think that's a nice thing about the Alberta plan. We have the kin child care program, where if you're in a rural area or a remote area and you don't have access to a daycare, we will pay grandma or grandpa money if mom and dad have to go to work.

So there are many, many questions on the discussion of daycare spaces. There are more questions, I think, in regard to the pinch other provinces are feeling across this country in regard to daycare. For example, Ontario's deal was the fact that all the money they got, they directly handed down to the municipalities for the municipalities to make the decisions on daycare. Every province across this country that has taken their money has decided what they're going to do with it, so it's a problem.

I want to just say one thing. I have to remind members of the House that the Harper government won every seat in this province. They won every seat in this province on their five points, where they talked about accountability; they talked about child care. Some of the other things they had in their platform escape me right now, but that was accepted by Albertans. What I think the problem is on that, in talking to Albertans, is that they thought they were going to get both. So I think that's a message that we have said to the hon. federal minister, and we'll continue talking to them.

You asked about the increase in budget on – I believe it was a line item, but it escapes me.

Dr. Pannu: It's the parenting resources.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you. That increase is going to nine more parent link centres this year. Some money is to go for training tools, resources, and other supports to the parent link centres, accreditation to the parent link centres, and home visitation, et cetera.

You talked about – and I did speak about this, hon. member, in regard to the reduction on sexual exploitation. I talked about $500,000 of that being for one time to update their computer systems, as is the child advocate IT development. Neither of those dollars will have any effect on the delivery of services. We wanted to get their computer systems and all of that up to snuff. So the decrease has no impact on funding to the Child and Youth Advocate's day-to-day operations. What the new system does – that was the one time – is allow the advocate to meet the requirements for his information collecting and case management requirements, the ability to manage the program.

You talked about caseworkers and the caseloads. I can tell the hon. member that we're developing a new casework practice model. It's actually quite exciting. It's a model that is being developed with staff, with the regions, and of course through work with the ministry, but a great deal of it is in consultation with the staff, on how to deliver services better. Paperwork is a problem with caseworkers, the enormous amount of paperwork. We heard that when we were travelling the province since we brought in the new act, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. We're looking forward to seeing that model come up to my desk and looking at that.

The Edmonton region. I can tell the hon. member that we have had unbelievable co-operation from all the regions in this province in regard to what's working in their area, what isn't working in their area, how to make things work better, sharing their successes. Their budgets were developed from the regions. So the regions were the ones that developed their budgets in consultation with the people that are working in the field. It was very exciting to see the regions get together and, you know, look at their budgets and develop their particular budgets on the needs of the people that they're trying to serve.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to just take a few minutes again on child care, daycare although there are so many other important areas under your ministry that we need to discuss. I, too, will support any action that we can take as a government in Alberta to let Ottawa know that Albertans want and expect continuation of the national daycare agreement. I do have a plan to write a letter and a plan to send the hundreds of letters I have received to Prime Minister Harper, who needs to remember that he has a minority government and that he is accountable to all Canadians. So I support what you were saying, Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and, of course, our hon. minister.

Going on to other areas. We know that the welfare of children is strongly linked to the nonoffending parent's safety and emotional well-being. We need to pay some attention, I guess, to the need for secure shelters for women who are abused. These places must be safe. Often women believe from experience that they are not safe anywhere because they will be found. I reviewed the Alberta shelter statistics from 2002, information from the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters, and it's just appalling. I won't go through all the numbers, but one number that bothered me so much was the number of children turned away that year: 9,017. This is a tragedy. What part of the Children's Services budget addresses this tremendous need? What do we need to do to ensure safety and security for women such as these and their families?

Another area I'm concerned about is the need for detoxification help and rehabilitation for children who have been abusing drugs and who are addicted. Many times we have youth in the shelters that need to detox and need to talk to an addictions counsellor, but the counsellors are booked up for weeks, and often there's no room at the detox beds for these youth. I've talked with lots of parents who've expressed frustration, a sense of hopelessness because of the valuable time they lose trying to get their children into the system to get help. Bill 202, that was passed last year, was a step in the right direction, but there are real concerns about accessing treatment and then the transition period after treatment. What do we have in place to evaluate the results of what we stated in Bill 202 and to assess the effectiveness of detaining youth with addiction problems?

I'm aware of three addiction treatment programs in the Edmonton region. AADAC has four voluntary detox beds and eight treatment beds at the Yellowhead Youth Centre in Edmonton, and those beds, of course, are accessible through AADAC. Chimo Youth Retreat Centre is a not-for-profit agency and has a six-bed voluntary addictions treatment program in Edmonton, operated under a funding arrangement with Children's Services and AADAC. Bosco Homes operates a 12-bed drug addictions program in Parkland county on a fee-for-services basis accessed by various Alberta child welfare authorities and other health and social services authorities from outside of Alberta.

Every community in the greater Edmonton area has community initiatives advocating for more comprehensive youth addictions treatment services. My own constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods has had a number of town halls on this issue. Community newspapers and letters from schools and parents are irrefutable evidence as communities such as Leduc, Beaumont, Strathcona county, Fort Saskatchewan, Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, Parkland county, Devon, St. Albert, Drayton Valley, and Edson, and as I say, even my own constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods organize public information meetings in order to address the ever-growing drug menace stalking our kids.

Municipal and community leaders are concerned, and the demand for more and better addiction services across Alberta continues unabated. The meagre response of 24 voluntary treatment beds between Calgary and Edmonton cannot possibly address the obvious problems we are facing in combating addictions among our children and youth. A much broader coalition to combat this modern-day plague is needed.

AADAC does not have the experience of operating child and youth treatment programs. Many NGOs have operated treatment programs in Alberta for years, including drug and alcohol addiction services, yet they've been excluded in favour of the government-run AADAC monopoly. Is it not wise to get all possible stakeholders together to work on the addictions scourge? Many of the not-for-profit and charitable agencies have not only the expertise, the psychiatrists, the medical doctors, and staff trained in addiction treatment but also facilities, which the taxpayers do not have to pay to duplicate.

Addictions affect our communities, our families, our schools, our justice system, and our medical system. It might be useful to have a variety of addictions treatment providers if for no other reason than to discover best practices and cost efficiencies. These agencies are at a disadvantage because they cannot offer the same salaries and benefits as AADAC.

Agencies could operate programs and serve many more children, yet these agencies who have a range of strategies to deal with addictions, including teaching harm reduction and how to take care of oneself, are not getting the referrals. They have had good results, and they are accredited agencies. Why are we not involving them in our efforts to work with families coping with addiction?

Another important agency that promotes well-being for Albertans is FCSS, family and community support services. These are amazing people who have a terrifically challenging mandate. Under the FCSS Act and regulations, FCSS does not focus solely on children and families at risk. It is a universal program for all community residents. I know that we have three centres in Edmonton-Mill Woods, and I am very proud of the work they do. As such, FCSS collaborates at the local, regional, and provincial level with a wide range of government and nongovernment service providers to address the needs of the entire community. I'm very happy to see that Children's Services has increased the funding for this particular initiative. I wonder if the minister could provide us with some details of how this increase in funding will be used.

In the budget press release it states that this additional money will be used to "expand services, particularly for . . . rural and isolated areas of our province." Can the minister tell us which communities specifically are being targeted? Can the minister tell us exactly how this money will be used to expand services? Estimates page 70, line 2.0.3, the family and community support services estimate is $68.2 million, an increase of approximately 4 per cent from the 2005-06 budget. I know that FCSS is very happy with this increase in their funding; however, I was disappointed to see that this year's increase was less than 5 per cent.

Among the programs that are funded by FCSS are those that support homeless families moving into stable housing and prevention programs that assist families in staying housed. This is a tremendous challenge because of the number of homeless in this province. FCSS is a crucial organization that helps to improve Alberta's social infrastructure. I think a more significant financial commitment from this government would help to improve the already incredible preventive social service network that FCSS supports throughout the province. Can the minister tell us what the future holds for this important program?

In regard to the current FCSS program review, does the ministry intend to consider the additional comments section that is included in the review, and if so, will there be more money for projects to address them? We understand that the FCSS program review is not touching on the financial growth of FCSS. While funding increases about 2.7 per cent a year on average, what is the minister's commitment to significantly increasing the FCSS program budget to better support and improve, I would say, this program, which is much loved?

I also have a few questions about Alberta's promise. This initiative was established in April 2003 through an act of this Legislature. It is designed to encourage all sectors of the community to direct more resources to benefit our children and youth. I quote from the Alberta's Promise Partners' Report 2003.

Alberta's Promise's role is to facilitate partnerships between communities, businesses, foundations, service clubs and not-for-profit agencies, who together share the vision of making Alberta the best place in the world to raise children.

I have some questions about this initiative and its funding. Many communities already have well-established and effective networks for communication and partnerships with each other and with the private sector. It seems that the accountability of the Alberta's promise initiative may result in increased demand on human and financial resources with very little benefit over what is already happening in the communities. I'm wondering if the provincial funds dedicated to the promotion of this initiative could otherwise have been redirected to community agencies that are already there for direct service. Given that Alberta's promise is not involved in fund development nor does Alberta's promise deliver programs to children and youth, why has the minister chosen to increase funding for this initiative at the expense of others?

I also want to talk about the wonderful work of foster parents in this province. These people are a precious resource that must be regarded with respect and support. I'm concerned that the move to place many of these homes under agencies is at the expense of the foster families. Can you explain the apparent difference in funds given to foster families for children that they have that are in the same categories of needs as compared to the funds that are given to agencies for those children?

One other question that I have goes back to that controversial quota system for the adoption of children in the ministry's care. You stated that it was in fact a performance measure. I'm wondering if you can explain why this performance measure is not included in the business plan?

You know, as I talk with constituents and stakeholders throughout the province, I am disturbed by a common theme of fear. People are afraid to talk because of their concern about action that may be taken against them individually or against the agency they represent. They are concerned about repercussions. I know this because they tell me this. This is Alberta, the richest province, probably the richest land on Earth in terms of resources and material wealth, yet we have many who live in poverty, many who are dependent on the government for supports through no fault of their own. When they or their advocates ask for help, they should be treated with respect and dignity.

I have visited a number of facilities and talked with many individuals who are reluctant to stand up for what is right because they are afraid. Constituents have told me that they have been warned not to complain. One said that they had difficulty with an appeal and were given a few reasons. One reason was that they had spoken to an MLA about concerns. I'm not sure which MLA. These are people who are doing their best to live a quality life, some who are helping others meet their potential, and people who contribute to our province, to their province, in ways other than the material, yet they do not feel supported. They do not have confidence that they are appreciated or that they matter. I know that this is not your intention, but it is a sad commentary and an indicator that we must do better.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Chairman, thank you. The questions from the opposition critic from Edmonton-Mill Woods are always very pointed, and I appreciate having the opportunity to answer some of them. Of course, I won't be able to answer all of them. I have staff, like I indicated at the beginning of the deliberation, that would get back to you.

The hon. member started talking about family violence. I can tell her that the issue of family violence and bullying, because I think they go together, is probably one of the number one priorities, that started with this government from a horrific murder/suicide in Red Deer and even before that very, very tragic case. At that particular time the Premier put together a round-table on family violence, and without a doubt it's probably one of the most successful cross-government ministries in government. We have so many departments involved on that initiative from Aboriginal Affairs, us, Community Development, Education, Health, Human Resources, Justice, Seniors, the Solicitor General, and more and more as you keep widening it. We keep trying to keep ahead of it.

This year we are giving $32.4 million to the issue of family violence, which is an increase from last year's budget. You mentioned some stats that you referred to in regard to the turnaways. That's one of the things I thought that it was important to do a review of in women's shelters because turnaways for one shelter can be different from another shelter. I'd like to give you an example of how loosely or how difficult the term turnaways can be used. You could have a woman that is leaving an abusive situation, and she might hit shelter 1 in Calgary, and it's full. Then they will place a call, and they may try shelter 2, and it's full. Then they finally find a home for her in shelter 3. Well, each one of those is considered a turnaway when what we should be counting is if some person is completely turned away with no shelter facilities at all. I think numbers have to be done properly. I don't think double counting is something that should be considered as a turnaway. We know that there's a problem, but as I indicated in my speaking notes, no woman, or man, for that matter, is ever turned away if they're leaving a situation that is serious. If it happens that a shelter is full, we will find them other accommodation. This is very, very simple.

Then you talked about the safety issues. I visited many, many shelters over my visits last summer, and it's amazing the jobs that these people do in these shelters under very difficult situations. In fact, one of the shelters we visited last summer was in a red alert, which means there was not only a threat to the woman who was in that particular shelter, there was a threat to the people who were working in the shelter. Obviously, the shelter went into a red alert. Very, very secure. The chances of somebody getting in are – nothing in life is impossible – nearly impossible.

What was amazing to me was how the shelter continued doing their business. The police were there just like that, ready to respond. They were well aware of the situation, and in seconds they were at the shelter making sure that the people within the shelter were safe. The abuser at that particular time – they were aware of the licence plate, all of those things – would be obviously taken away as soon as he entered the shelter.

One of the things that was innovative under our new child care program was to be able to provide some daycare resources within the shelter for when the children were visiting because three weeks – sometimes the women are in the shelter 21 days – can be a very, very difficult time. They were very, very excited about that.

Justice has initiated a new program, and we'll get more information about it. I'm not sure, but I think it's called ARTAMI, an Alberta response team in regard to high-risk people – I've got to stay away from the women and men scenario because we're seeing some numbers going up in regard to men who are being abused – so that they have a response when they know that an abuser is at a high risk and could cause some serious damage. It was very, very innovative.

The world family violence conference that we held last October was an unbelievable experience for me, over 1,100 participants from 31 countries. We had people from Dubai. They wanted to see our shelters. After they spent time touring some of the shelters, they went home, back to their country, and announced 30-plus shelters that they were opening in the country of Dubai, which is amazing. We gathered a lot of knowledge, learned a lot of things from that world family violence conference because you've got people from all over the world. I'm looking forward to reading the final report and then, obviously, sending it to the people that participated at the world family violence conference.

It was important for us at that particular time to encourage another country to hold it because it was an unbelievable learning experience. We thought about how you can continue the process. It's not just a community or provincial responsibility. It's an issue that's affected world-wide. We learned some amazing things at the world family violence conference, whether it's same-sex abuse; child abuse, obviously; family violence abuse. It goes on to some of the countries that are dealing with some horrific things in regard to abuse. So I'm looking forward to that report.

You spent a lot of time talking about addictions. The addictions portfolio obviously comes under the minister of health. I can tell you that we have worked together on a cross-government ministry. The Member for Red Deer-North has been very innovative, and you alluded to her piece of legislation in regard to treatment centres. I don't want to speak on behalf of the minister of health, but I believe they opened up 12 beds at Enviro's base camp and 12 beds in Edmonton to deal with addiction. I can tell you that under our Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act we're having incredible success at an early intervention level, getting to the families early instead of when they come to us at a protective state, where all of a sudden we're apprehending. Our caseworkers, who again I have to say do an incredible job in this province, will work with them, try and get the families into addictions counselling. If we have a child – and we do have children that are addicted to drugs and alcohol – we try and get them counselling. I mean, it's no different than what we do when a child has a mental illness.

The Premier's wife obviously has got her meth task force. We brought forth the Drug-endangered Children Act, that you were very, very supportive of, where we're apprehending children out of drug-endangered houses. I can tell the hon. member that at least once a week we're apprehending children out of homes where there is drug involvement and under some horrific, horrific conditions.

You talked about the FCSS funding and the future. I know that you're bright enough to see that there's been an increase within the budget of FCSS, and they were pleased. The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, as I explained to you earlier, is doing a review. We support the FCSS. It's the only one in Canada. It's recognized not only right across this country but internationally, and we'll continue to support that. What's important for me is for the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to look at where we are on that particular initiative, where we are now, and where we're going to go.

I want to have it on record at this particular time because we've had calls from people that are concerned that they're going to lose the FCSS funding because of the review. I'm going to have it on record. We have written letters, and I met this week with Joe Ceci, the alderman, and he said: Minister, I know that we've got this letter, but there's still that uneasiness. We are going to be continuing the FCSS. So it's on record. The review has nothing to do with cancelling FCSS. It's how we can improve it and how we're going to deal with it in the future.

You talked about Alberta's Promise. Alberta's Promise was founded on the belief that it takes an entire community to raise a child, not only the government or the charitable sector or the private sector, to have a role in children's development. It is a wonderful organization that several years ago was Bill 1. We're getting rave reviews.

The increase in Alberta Promise's budget was for a media blitz so that every person in Alberta knows about Alberta's Promise and makes a commitment on behalf of the children and youth in this province. So companies, municipalities, agencies commit themselves to providing the children and youth in this province a better life, and they're having wonderful success. I've challenged them to a big challenge, and sometimes when you're setting goals, they have to be realistic, and I don't know if this is a realistic goal: at the end of this year to have every Albertan in this province know about Alberta's Promise and what they do and their commitment to the children and youth in this province.

A foster parent question, and I apologize, I wasn't quite sure about where you were going with that particular question, and it's difficult for me to answer when I really am not understanding. It's going to be in Hansard, obviously. We will certainly give you an answer to your question. I can tell you that we value all the foster parents in this province. They do a remarkable job with the children in their care, and we appreciate everything they do and continue to dialogue with the Foster Parent Association in regard to the issues that they seem to be facing. We negotiated a raise for them last year, and we'll continue with those negotiations.

Two more things. You talked about: why were the adoption quotas, I think it was, not in our business plan? Because we keep it in our annual report as a performance measure. While there has been some criticism on performance measures in this government, especially on the issue of adoption, that's a performance measure only. It is a priority for this government to get children who are in care into safe and caring and loving homes. Every caseworker in this province knows – and it's a priority not only for them – to get children out of foster care and into an adoptive home.

A few years ago there was so much criticism about the adoption website and that we were advertising children. I can only tell you the incredible success that we have had on that website in regard to parents who are looking to adopt a child. The hits on that site and the adoptions that have been done just from that adoption site are probably more than anybody every dreamed was possible. So while we have it in our measures, there was never any financial – no one was penalized.

Managers within the regions get bonuses on their performance measures, but it's not just based on adoption; it's based on a whole bunch of performance measures. Just because they didn't happen to meet their adoption performance doesn't mean that they get slapped on the hand and they're not rewarded. Their performance measures are done like many, many managers within government and many managers in the private sector. They have performance measures that go through a wide perspective on making those agreements. I believe I answered that question in the House, so that will be in Hansard.

The last thing the hon. member talked about was repercussions. I was listening intently, but I wasn't quite sure if she was talking about staff feeling that there would be repercussions to them if they came forward with an issue or if it was agencies. I can only tell you that under this ministry no staff or agency will face any repercussions if they have a problem and they feel that they need to be heard. I can tell you that the CEOs and the co-chairs in the regions across this province are dedicated to the issue of children, youth, and families in this province, and they want to hear if there is an issue. They want to hear from both sides, whether it's the family that's being served or the person that's trying to serve that particular family. I can tell you on record that no agency or staff will face any repercussions if they bring an issue forward either to our staff or the regions.

I think I've covered just about everything. Again, if I haven't, I'd be more than pleased to answer more.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to be able to speak specifically to the important Ministry of Children's Services. Under the business plan on page 94 there are a number of initiatives – intervening early, family violence and protection of children, impacts of substance abuse, child sexual exploitation, the importance of the early years, aboriginal children, and the impact of prosperity, but I'll hone in on the child sexual exploitation.

Under the heading it states that sexual exploitation of children is a global issue that impacts a vulnerable sector of society. Incidents of child pornography, internet luring and the involvement of youth in prostitution are increasing as communications technology has made access to children and youth by perpetrators much easier.

This is really quite disturbing.

We have loose laws that allow people – maybe their intent wasn't quite there – to get off on a technicality. We have lax laws that need to be tightened up. I'd like to see this minister actually challenge and take the lead on that. Specifically, when we're talking about youth being involved in drugs, drug houses, or being used as mules just for the point of being able to get into the schools as well as being able to use them later on in prostitution because they are now dependent on it as well, and I mentioned the fact about internet luring. There must be minimum standards, minimum sentences that should be implemented within the courts. It's got to be initiated by this ministry working in collaboration with Justice. That would be one specific benchmark that I would measure which would be a huge success. Absolutely.

Is the prevention of sexual exploitation of children still a priority for this government, and if so, why are you reducing some of the funds for this initiative? [interjection] Okay. Well, I'm just getting it on the record, then, for you. Has the initiative taken a back seat to other new initiatives? If so, can the minister tell us what initiatives will benefit from this reduction of funds? On one hand, you recognize the increasing threat of sexual exploitation of children. On the other hand, you reduce the government funding to prevent such occurrences. I'm not sure where the ministry is going with that. Can you tell me the logic behind the reduction? Can the minister also tell me, in fact, who she consults with when they decide to do reductions in the budget for the important initiatives?

Going on to page 70 here, line item 1.0.4, corporate administration. It says that the estimates here are about $13.7 million. Now, this looks like an increase of about 15 per cent from the 2005-2006 budget. This looks like it's an increase of nearly $2 million. When we talk about the big scheme of things, $2 million isn't a lot of money, but $2 million in reality is a large amount of money. How exactly is this money being utilized under this initiative with the increase? Can the minister tell us why this increase was in fact necessary?

Going on to another page, page 75, the line item titled Other Revenue. The Ministry of Children's Services estimates that there is about $9.2 million in other revenue. Can the minister tell us where other revenues will be generated?

In your business plan on page 95: "Aboriginal children have a higher representation in the Ministry child protection caseload than non-Aboriginal children. The result is higher costs and use of services for this population." I'm sure that the minister would, but I would like to hear it. Has she worked with other ministers such as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development? Clearly, there would be good cross-ministry involvement there.

There's a higher incidence of deaths on the reserves, and that also is alarming. I think that just last year there might have been 30. I don't know exactly. That's really quite sad when you think about it. You know, haven't even reached teenage years and there are already deaths.

The gangs out there are also a concern, but there is a new initiative to be able to bring the kids in and involve them in a group – it's not a gang – that the police are working with. I think that's great to be able to give them some identity instead of having their identity associated with gangs. So I would approve and applaud other initiatives like that working on the reserves.

Again, what initiatives is the minister pursuing to target the aboriginal needs? Given that aboriginal children have a higher representation in the ministry for child protection and caseload, why has the ministry not created a specific aboriginal program, created and directed specifically to address those aboriginal needs and issues?

I'll move a little bit towards some of the Auditor General's report. On page 129 the Auditor General's report of 2004-2005 recommended that Children's Services "sign contracts (whether new or renewal) before contractors supply goods or services." Before the services are even implemented, they need to have that contract. There are now concerns and issues about verbal contracts. I'd hope that these weren't the kind that we talk about on an ongoing basis, with some of the loosely worded and loose contracts just for advice, that these would be, in fact, a little bit more specific and a little bit more concrete. Has the ministry accepted this recommendation, and if so, what has the ministry done to address that specific concern of the Auditor General?

The Auditor General also mentions in the annual report, on page 130: "We again recommend that the Ministry of Children's Services improve its systems to recover expenses for providing services to children and families ordinarily resident-on-reserve." The question is: has the ministry accepted this recommendation given that the Auditor General notes unsatisfactory progress so far within that recommendation? This is a repeated call for the recommendation. What would the minister be doing to address those specifics?

These are just a couple of issues. I know that there have been a lot that have been addressed, and I appreciate your being able to try to address them as you can. These are some of the specifics that I would like to have, that I've raised here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thanks again, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure how much time we have left, so I'm going to kind of go very quickly. Again, I'll give our word that we will get back to you through the critic, Edmonton-Mill Woods, with some of the questions that you've asked specifically.

You started off with sexual exploitation. I did mention before that the small decrease has to do with system development enhancements, so the total budget that was reduced has nothing to do with the program. I can tell you that we've got some very exciting things happening on the issue of sexual exploitation. Unfortunately, until we have all our i's dotted and t's crossed, I can't go into it a great deal, but we will probably be announcing very shortly something that is very, very exciting on the issue of sexual exploitation, which includes Internet luring, et cetera.

I will tell the member that under the PCHIP, since the program was proclaimed, we've had approximately 900 apprehensions and 1,300 referrals. The success of that program is amazing. When I started working on it – I use this term loosely, because my staff always go crazy when I say: when I was working on the streets. But when I started on this initiative many years ago, in 1990, before I became elected, I didn't think we'd see the success in the PCHIP that I'm seeing today. When it became Bill 1, it was just something that I don't think I ever dreamt about.

I can tell you that all of the older girls and guys that were working on the street – older: 24, 25 – when I was doing my research said that if that piece of legislation would have been there when they were first on the street, they wouldn't be where they are now, still on the street. I have the opportunity on many occasions when I'm working with children from the Youth Secretariat, the youth forum, children that we've formerly apprehended from the issue of prostitution, how much they appreciate it.

We had a sexual exploitation conference last November, I believe it was. It's the first time that we've brought the players back since 1999. Again, we wanted to look where we were, where we are now, where we are going. It's unbelievable how the streets have changed. Before you used to see the young kids on the street, and you could visibly tell what they were doing. Now we're dealing with cells. We're dealing with sex bracelets, rainbow parties. We're dealing with survival sex, where a child will think it's a good idea, because they want concert tickets, to just come out at lunchtime and turn a trick and they've got the money for their concert tickets. Internet luring, child pornography: all of those things are horrific, that we're dealing with on a weekly basis within the department. One just needs to read in the paper about all the child pornography and issues.

I will tell the hon. member and give my word that we will continue to push the issue with the federal government about tightening the laws. I made a presentation to all of my counterparts across the country at the last federal/provincial/territorial meeting that I attended. As horrific and as straightforward as it was, I'll tell you that it sunk in with them. We didn't mince any words with it. We did a video presentation. I got unanimous support from all of the provinces and territories to support the issue of sexual exploitation across the country.

I then brought that to the attention of the federal minister when I met with her. We're in an early game at the federal government. We've got new ministers that are still learning their portfolios. Then you're starting to hit them with issues on sexual exploitation, child pornography, some issues of family violence. It's way too much. So we're going to let that sit for a bit. I know what it's like to be a new minister, just a little bit overwhelming with everything that's thrown at you, trying to get ready for a question period, et cetera. I can tell you that we've got some really very exciting initiatives coming forward on the issue of sexual exploitation. So be patient, but stay tuned because it's very exciting.

You talked about corporate. That increase is about $1.84 million: $1.24 million for salary provisions in order to address management and nonmanagement salaries, increases including the grid adjustments, a half a million in human resource management for training, and $0.1 million for increased insurance premiums that have to be paid to risk management.

Aboriginal initiatives. Very, very exciting. Sad but true: the high percentage of aboriginals that we have not only within the Children's Services portfolio but, as the former Solicitor General, the high population of aboriginals within our correctional facilities. Sad but true. We're working on some very exciting initiatives on aboriginal issues with not only the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs. I think that it's more of a cross-government, so you'll have Health, you'll have Education, you'll have Human Resources, some of those things. We're very excited about what we're doing.

We originally had a plan – I believe it was last October before the election was called. It was the first time in the history of the Alberta government and in Canada. I had agreement with representatives from treaties 6, 7, and 8 to go with me to Ottawa, meet with the minister of aboriginal affairs – at that point in time it was Andy Scott – to talk about aboriginal issues on reserve and off reserve. Of course, the election was called. New government, new minister. We have just sent a letter to the minister of aboriginal affairs, Jim Prentice, telling him that we want to talk about aboriginal issues. Once we have our initial talks and then, obviously, listen to what he has to say and his ideas, we still would like to continue with the meeting with treaties 6, 7, and 8. I know that my colleague from aboriginal affairs has also written to Minister Prentice of aboriginal affairs.

We have also got some exciting initiatives happening in regard to aboriginal affairs. My staff is watching me up there and saying, "How much is she going to give out now?" We've got some really exciting things happening on the issue of aboriginal adoptions. I'm very excited about what we're going to be doing after some very hard work within the department and consultation with the regions, the FNAs, and, of course, Métis settlements on how you can move the issue of aboriginal adoptions forward, keeping in mind that when adoptions are handled outside of the aboriginal community, the aboriginal people want to keep a sense of the values and cultures on the aboriginal initiative.

It's always a challenge trying to look at the numbers. It saddens me when I look at the number of aboriginal children I have.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Children's Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $916,770,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Children's Services: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $916,770,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur,

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Speaker's Ruling

Tabling Cited Documents

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, earlier this afternoon in response to a point of order raised by the Official Opposition House Leader, the chair undertook to review the Blues, as promised, regarding the exchange during question period between the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. The Official Opposition House Leader argued that the document should be tabled on the basis that the minister had quoted extensively from it.

The chair has carefully reviewed the Blues and can advise the House as follows. The only reference the minister made to documents was during the last exchange, and it was clear that the minister was making reference to documents that have already been tabled in the Assembly. To summarize the relevant parliamentary authorities, there is no requirement to table a document that has not been cited. The chair once again would refer members to Beauchesne's, paragraph 495(4), for this point. Finally, the chair would like to remind all members that once a document has been tabled, there is no need for that document to be tabled again.

The chair will now recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed been another absolutely excellent day of progress. With Children's Services estimates: a lot of inspiring, motivational debate.

Just before I propose the motion, I would like to take this moment to briefly wish a very Happy Easter to everyone who is celebrating and a wonderful break to those who are celebrating the birthday of Khalsa in our Sikh community. May they enjoy an equally fine weekend. To those on the Ukrainian side, Khrystos voskres!

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 13 the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 24, 2006 1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/04/24

[The sound system was not operational from 1:30 p.m. to 1:59 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: I would ask members to remain standing after prayers so that we may pay tribute to our former colleagues who have passed away since we were last in the House.

As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, we ask for divine guidance so that our words and deeds may bring to all people of this great province hope, prosperity, and a vision for the future. Amen. [as submitted]

September 24, 1933, to April 14, 2006

The Speaker: On Friday, April 14, 2006, Edward William Ewasiuk passed away. Mr. Ewasiuk represented the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly for the New Democratic Party. Mr. Ewasiuk was first elected in the election held on May 8, 1986, and served until June 15, 1993. During his years of service in the Legislature Mr. Ewasiuk served on the select standing committees on Private Bills, Public Accounts, Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, Law and Regulations, and Public Affairs. [as submitted]

Mr. Frederick Colborne
November 14, 1916, to April 19, 2006

The Speaker: On Wednesday, April 19, 2006, Frederick Charles Colborne passed away. Mr. Colborne was first elected in the 10th Legislature by the servicemen's vote as the representative of the air force, August 8, 1944, to August 17, 1948. Mr. Colborne sat with the two other representatives as a group – navy, army, and air force – on the opposition side of the Assembly. He was elected in the 11th election, held August 17, 1948, and served until July 22, 1971. During his years of service he represented the air force servicemen and the constituencies of Calgary and Calgary Centre for the governing Social Credit Party. During his term of office Mr. Colborne served as minister without portfolio from August 2, 1955, to November 29, 1962, as Minister of Public Works from November 30, 1962, to May 26, 1969, and Minister of Municipal Affairs from May 27, 1969, to September 9, 1971.

Mr. Colborne also served on the select standing committees on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; Municipal Law; Municipal Law and Law Amendments; Private Bills; Privileges and Elections; Public Accounts; Public Affairs; Agriculture and Education; and Railways, Telephones and Irrigation. Mr. Colborne served on the special committees on Education Assistance for Dependents of Deceased and Disabled Ex-Service Men; Electoral Boundaries; Hutterite Colonies; Redistribution/Redistribution Procedure; Rules, Orders and Forms of Procedure; and Workers' Compensation.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families who shared the burdens of public office. Family members of Mr. Ewasiuk and Mr. Colborne are with us today in the Speaker's gallery. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. member Edward Ewasiuk and hon. member Fred Colborne as you have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen. [as submitted]

Deaths of Canadian Soldiers in Afghanistan

The Speaker: I would also ask all members to remember four brave Canadian soldiers who died on duty in Afghanistan this past weekend: Lieutenant William Turner, a reservist and Canada Post employee in Edmonton; Corporal Randy Payne of CFB Wainwright; Corporal Matthew Dinning, a member of 2 Mechanized Brigade Group in Petawawa, Ontario; Myles Mansell, a member of the Victoria's 5th Field Regiment. [as submitted]

Hon. Jobie Nutarak

The Speaker: Please also remember the Hon. Jobie Nutarak, Speaker of Nunavut, who passed away yesterday near Pond Inlet, Nunavut. [as submitted]

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Eduardo Tejera, the Dominican Republic's ambassador in Canada. Travelling with him is embassy counsellor Jamie Reed.

Alberta exported $11 million worth of goods last year to the Dominican Republic, mainly in beans, oats, and tech equipment. Perhaps our greatest export to their country, though, is tourists. Canada is the second largest source of tourists in the Dominican Republic. Many Albertans have enjoyed the warmth of their climate and of their people.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that our honoured visitors, who are seated in your gallery, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [as submitted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is an honour for me to rise today to introduce you to guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These guests are family members of our former colleagues.

Mrs. Wynne Ewasiuk, widow of Mr. Edward Ewasiuk, former MLA for the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly, is here with members of their family: sons Chris and Randall Ewasiuk with Terri Grant and daughters Tina Bourcier and Debbie Lavallee with grandchildren Siobhan and Shivan Lavallee. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome from the House.

Former MLA Fred Colborne, who represented the air force servicemen, Calgary and Calgary Centre constituencies, is represented by sons Tim, Steve, and Dan Colborne and Joe Abbey-Colborne, daughters Susan Thain and Anne Turnbull, and grandson Greg Colborne. If they would rise, please, and receive the warm welcome from the House. [as submitted]

[Mr. Cardinal, Mr. VanderBurg, Mr. Lukaszuk, Mr. Stelmach, Mrs. Jablonski, Dr. Taft, Ms Evans, Mr. Renner, Mr. Coutts, Mr. R. Miller, Mr. Eggen, and Dr. Pannu introduced guests]

Ministerial Statements

Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize national organ donation awareness week, which is April 23 to 29.

Capital health is commemorating National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week to increase public awareness about donation and celebrate Capital health's continuing excellence in transplantation. At this time I would like to introduce three guests seated in the public gallery who all play a key role in our province's organ and tissue program. They are Margaret Lidstone, organ donor co-ordinator with Capital health's human organ procurement exchange program, HOPE; Karen Elgert, organ donor co-ordinator, also with the HOPE program; and Jared Zsombor, tissue specialist with Capital health's Comprehensive Tissue Centre. If you could all please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

In 2005 Capital health transplant teams performed 300 organ transplants. In addition, the Comprehensive Tissue Centre distributed more than 1,700 tissues across Canada for transplantation. If families express interest in donating their loved ones' organs or tissues, Capital health's HOPE co-ordinators arrange for organ donation while tissue specialists with the Comprehensive Tissue Centre, CTC, co-ordinate tissue donation. The Comprehensive Tissue Centre, CTC, is one of only four fully accredited tissue banks in Canada. Working together, these skilled professionals help the donor family carry out their loved one's decision to donate and ensure final wishes are respectfully met.

The Alberta Legislative Assembly is currently considering changes to the Human Tissue Gift Act to strengthen Alberta's donation program. The Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act, Bill 32, clarifies how minors can be living donors, how consent must be obtained for donations, and how the wishes of the deceased will be respected in organ donations. The act will also ensure that every person who dies will be considered for organ and tissue donation with appropriate consent. The objective is to increase the number of donations.

More than 200 people are currently on Capital health's organ transplant waiting lists. More than 20 people are currently awaiting islet cells, and almost 140 people are awaiting corneas. Becoming an organ and tissue donor requires three steps: make your decision to become a donor, sign your Alberta health card, and discuss your wishes with your family because they provide final consent to medical staff.

This week you will see MLAs and many other supporters wearing green ribbon lapel pins to raise awareness for organ and tissue donations. My hope is that more Albertans will make a conscious decision to become a donor and provide the gift of lasting life and health to others. [as submitted]

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the minister in recognizing National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week.

I am very proud of the Canadian tradition of giving freely of ourselves to assist those in need. Donations of blood, tissues, and organs are very much a part of our culture of giving, perhaps the most important part of all for these gifts bestow life itself upon the recipients. For no reward other than the knowledge that their actions will help others, countless Canadians have literally given of themselves that others might live on.

The minister's call for Albertans to become organ and tissue donors is worth repeating. Make the decision to become a donor, sign your Alberta health card, and most importantly of all discuss your desire to donate your organs with your family. Often, grieving families find it hard to allow tissues and organs to be taken from their recently departed loved ones, but we must ask ourselves this: what better way to pay tribute to the memory of a loved one than to respect their desire to extend life even in the face of death? Donated organs and tissues can add years to the lives of others, and every extra day of life gained is a walking, breathing testimony to the generosity and compassion of the departed donor.

This is a week to celebrate the precious gifts of our province's organ donors and the health care professionals who make those gifts possible, and it is the perfect time for all of us to recommit ourselves to the culture of life that is one of Canada's most cherished values. If it is within your cultural or religious tradition to do so, please sign that card and tell your family why.

Thank you. [as submitted]

The Speaker: [not recorded] If you would make sure that you direct your comments through the chair, then they'll at least be able to read your lips to make sure that we can translate back to other members in the Assembly.

If we would recognize that, we'll now call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was quite a set-up.

head: 2:00

Oral Question Period

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: This Conservative government has repeatedly confused necessary reforms to the public health care system with dismantling it through misguided privatization schemes. All the evidence shows that these schemes don't work in practice and that Albertans don't want them in principle. The third way is the latest health privatization fiasco, but I fear it will not be the last. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that Albertans have so soundly rejected the Conservative government's two-tier proposal, will she rule out the delisting of services currently covered by Alberta Health?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the health policy framework that went out for discussion never recommended delisting for any service. It looked to the future. It looked to opportunities for full, evidence-based assessments before proceeding with any drug, any technology, or any new procedure.

The health care budget rose by $30 for every man, woman, and child in Alberta – rose by $30 – rose by $91 million in this year's budget. Why? Because of an almost 20 per cent increase for the cost of pharmacare and for drugs. Mr. Speaker, for all new things that come on board it is responsible, with or without reform, with or without renewal, for anybody looking at that budget to determine what is responsible, what is necessary, and what we perhaps could live without. But the health care policy framework never once discussed delisting.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Thirty bucks is a cheap price to pay for a secure public health care system.

To the same minister: what assurances can the minister provide that the proposed process for, quote, determining essential services won't be used to expand a number of services open to private health insurance? Is that what Aon is recommending?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be pleased to know that our Premier has asked me quite specifically to arrange an orientation, a briefing collectively for all Members of this Legislative Assembly on the Aon report, and we will do that as soon as we can make sure that our Aon representatives will be able to be there to fully answer. It should be, hopefully, this week.

In looking to what we do in terms of the health care or the provision of services in the future, looking to the definition of essential services, Mr. Speaker, when the legislation is introduced in the House, the members here will have an opportunity to view that and will have an opportunity, as well, to understand the full extent of the consultation we intend to initiate in order to be able to give thoughtful review to the legislative piece.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that services proposed in the future may not be deemed essential enough to qualify for public coverage, can the minister explain how she plans to prevent this turning into two-tier medicine?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's very speculative. At best it's hypothetical; it reaches into the future. To the extent that I'm here, I will continue to do my utmost to make sure that we raise with Albertans not only the policies and legislation that we intend to initiate but keep them mindful of the elephant in the room, and that is the rising cost of health care, which will cripple us if we don't act soon to improve how we deliver health in this province.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Future Plans of the Premier

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, when the Premier announced this month that he would be stepping down from government at the end of this year, he acknowledged that he has received numerous offers to sit on the boards of different companies in Alberta. While these offers may be viewed as generous to the Premier, they also raise concerns over conflicts of interest and government accountability. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier feel that it is appropriate to be fielding job offers from private companies while he is still leading the Alberta government?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I can't stop people from offering me jobs. I have accepted none. I have accepted no positions. I haven't made up my mind what I am going to do other than to say that I want to keep reasonably busy, but I want to have time to do the things that I want to do, like golf and fish. I will be consulting with the Ethics Commissioner to find out what I can or cannot do. I will inform the House at that time if I'm asked the question, but I plan to do what is legally required of me.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: the Premier can't stop people from offering him positions, but he can stop himself from discussing them. Will the Premier enforce a personal policy of saying, "No discussion on job offers until I'm no longer Premier"?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you see those people sitting up there? If they don't ask me, I won't answer. Don't ask me any questions, and then I won't answer. You know, if I'm asked a question, I will provide an answer. I'm to say no to those people up there? They're the people who are asking the questions.

Mr. Speaker, basically, my answer to them is the same as my answer will be to you; that is that I want to keep reasonably busy. I will consult the Ethics Commissioner as to what I can or cannot do, but I do want to have time to do the things I want to do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does the Premier at least acknowledge a potential conflict of interest when he is both running the government and considering job offers from the private sector?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am not – I am not, not, not, not, not – considering any job offers at this time.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has failed in its responsibility to protect vulnerable Albertans. The track record with long-term care and the $100 million AISH settlement proves that seniors and people with disabilities are not given the attention or respect they deserve. Most recently the government failed to secure adequate funding for the persons with developmental disabilities program. My question is to the minister of seniors. Given that members of the disabilities community requested a $20 million to $30 million budget increase in order to continue providing safe and adequate service, can the minister explain why this community has been ignored?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I take issue with that preamble. I'm surprised that it's coming from this member. I can tell you this. I've been a very strong advocate for persons with developmental disabilities. The disabilities program, as I've indicated in the Assembly before, is now under one ministry. It's a program that has $1.1 billion in funding. Persons with developmental disabilities receive funding through two streams. One is over $500 million, and another is over $500 million, so that's $1.1 billion.

Mr. Speaker, also, I think it's really irresponsible and wrong to suggest to people that are vulnerable that they're going to have a funding cut or that they are having a reduction in services that would affect their health and safety. That has not happened. It will not happen, and it will not happen under this minister's watch.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister then guarantee that people with developmental disabilities will not have reduced care because of inadequate funding?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee that there will not be a reduction in funding and that there will not be a reduction in services. There has not been a reduction. In fact, the community had asked for a 4 per cent increase in the persons with developmental disabilities funding, and there was a 4.6 per cent increase in that area and an 18 per cent increase on the AISH side of the funding. So I can guarantee that it will not happen.

2:10 Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Okay. The sound system is not working very well here today. Mostly what I heard was the minister in the background with a whole bunch of stuff going on on the other side saying: it isn't so; it isn't so. Let's not do that. I'll recognize somebody to ask a question, in this case the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Everybody will listen. Then she'll direct the question to somebody, and I'll recognize that person. Everybody will listen then, too, okay? Let's try it and see how it works.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that insufficient funding will result in fewer caregivers and longer wait-lists to receive support, will the minister explain why quality of life for people with developmental disabilities is a low priority for this government?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, this is a very high priority, actually, for our government. There has been a significant funding increase, as I indicated to you, for persons with developmental disabilities. In fact, we are working very hard with the community. Our staff is working with the community. We're working cross ministry with Health and Wellness, for example, for the care for disabilities. As well, we're working with Advanced Education for the inclusion of people in postsecondary education with developmental disabilities.

The way I look at this – I wanted to tell you this, too, Mr. Speaker – is that this is a new beginning for people with developmental disabilities. By having come together under one ministry with a program for disabilities that is funded, as I said, with very significant funding, this is a new beginning for people with developmental disabilities. I can tell you that we are going to listen to people's voices, people from the community, as to what they would like to see within their communities and set the tone for what is right for this program for people overall. The funding is significant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Aon Consulting Inc.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The NDP opposition submitted a freedom of information request for a limited number of records concerning the $1.5 million Aon Consulting study of private health insurance options way back on November 15, 2005. After months of stonewalling, in early February the Information and Privacy Commissioner imposed a final deadline of April 15, 2006, to complete this FOIP request. Health and Wellness's reply to this FOIP request is now nine days overdue. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the minister trying to hide?

Ms Evans: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised, and I would apologize to the hon. member for the fact that it's overdue. My understanding is that it was released, that it was a separate document because of whatever you had asked for at the time.

We will be releasing the entire report. We will in fact be doing more than that because the Premier has asked for a briefing of every Member of this Legislative Assembly, full access to the report, full access to all the information, full access to the officials that did the report and anybody else. We are being as open and accountable as we possibly can. That request last November would not have certainly been able to capture the essence of what the results of the report have been, so I'm sure that the hon. member will be pleased when either later this week or early next week we're able to give you an absolute, thorough report and accounting of that report.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the request also included a request for information with respect to the terms of reference for the RFP and arrangements of which particular firms were bidding and what their bids were and so on. Will that be included as well?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why we wouldn't include all of those issues. Remember, though, that when we first had these contracts, there were some requests that were honoured of the people that put in bids for confidentiality. So to the extent that I can provide absolutely everything, I will do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the requested records included also the names, positions, and terms of reference of an industry panel advising Aon Consulting, will the minister also include that information in the release?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I didn't see the particulars of that request. I will review that request and see whether or not there's any reason that we couldn't release, with permission of those people that have been cited, their names. I see no reason why not, but I will review that in the context of my remarks earlier that we are doing our best to be very open and transparent on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. There has been a lot of talk about labour shortages in Alberta, particularly the need for workers in the oil sands. We've heard concerns in this House that foreign workers are taking away jobs from Albertans. Can the minister remind this House what this government is doing to ensure that jobs go to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question because, you know, when you talk about Alberta, we probably have the hottest economy in North America. We have thousands of jobs for everybody. I think most jurisdictions in North America would love to have those challenges.

In relation to that question specifically, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to explain first of all because there's some misunderstanding in relation to the temporary foreign workers. The temporary foreign workers' program, of course, is under federal jurisdiction. The hiring of temporary foreign workers for companies is a last resort. Once they've exhausted the process of recruiting locally here in Alberta and across Canada and training local people, then of course, you know, you have to look at other options. But our priority, of course, again is Albertans, the First Nations, persons with developmental disabilities, maybe the older workers that are displaced.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the government is in the process of developing a long-range, actually a 10-year labour force strategy for Alberta to ensure that we do have the workers we need.

The Speaker: We'll go on. The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the hon. minister tell the House how many assessments of temporary foreign workers his ministry has completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Advanced Education's role I think, as the hon. member knows, is really one of assessment of credentials if they work in any of the 20 trades that require journeyman certificates. Essentially, we do this prior to their arrival in Alberta to ensure that they have the prerequisite experience.

To the specific number, Advanced Education has received 941 individual applications for assessment through the group application process. Of these applications, 836 have been approved, and 267 are working in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third and final question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that recently the Minister of Energy announced that in the 2005-2006 fiscal year land sales set records for revenues for mineral rights, the average price per hectare, and the amount of hectares identified for oil sands, which means even more development, can the minister tell us if the current shortage of skilled labour is due in part to the scope and timing of oil sands construction projects, and what are the ministry and the energy industry doing to manage this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first say that our land tenure system is one of the most open and transparent systems in the world in respect to . . .

An Hon. Member: In the whole universe.

Mr. Melchin: As I say, Mr. Speaker, it's one of the best, most open, transparent systems anywhere in the universe.

Mr. Boutilier: Or in the mother ship.

Mr. Melchin: I'm glad that they've been visiting beyond this planet. Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

One of the great challenges that came this last year: we raised just under 3 and a half billion dollars from land sales. With that, really, is going to come the start of planning of these projects. This only initiates industry to be able to go out and start their long-term projects. These oil sands projects are multidecade projects. They have to go through all of the permitting through Environment, the Energy and Utilities Board, Sustainable Resource Development, all of the regulatory environment, as well as raising their capital. Then industry likewise has to ensure that they have the labour and skilled workforce to deliver on those for their own shareholders. They are doing many innovative things to help reduce that labour, both through technology, through co-operation, and in many of their structures to help time these projects so that they can address the labour questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This isn't about the universe; this is about Alberta. A year ago this government promised Albertans that they will take action to improve the state of continuing care, but we need concrete action. Small amounts of money for interim improvements are only a band-aid solution, and it diverts attention away from the fact that there are no enforceable, province-wide standards for care and housing. My questions would be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Where are the standards that Albertans have been promised, and how much longer are we going to have to wait?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The accommodation standards, of course, are within this ministry, and the care standards are with the Minister of Health and Wellness. We are working together, hon. member, and our staff is working hard in putting everything together with the standards to bring them forward to the Assembly. The standards will cover all that there is in continuing care, the whole range of services that are provided. As I indicated to you in the Assembly before, hon. member, the area of accommodation for the room and board side of these standards, will have monitoring and enforcement and a concerns resolution process along with that.

When can you expect that? I'm hoping in the not too distant future, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are working closely together, and the standards should be here fairly soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Unfortunately, I missed some of the answer, but thank you. I'll check it again in Hansard.

Given that the government refused to support Bill 205 for an independent office with the power to inspect facilities and enforce compliance with standards, when will the minister be legislating standards and compliance mechanisms of her own? I have a feeling that that was partially answered, but I didn't hear it. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health and Wellness and I worked together on the process, and, yes, that may include legislation in the future, which I would anticipate would be here most likely in the spring of 2007. There is a large area of the standards, a number of areas that we can certainly put into place without legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My last question would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that retraining staff is a critical factor in enhancing quality in continuing care, when will the minister implement appropriate staff mixes and increase staffing levels to four hours of care a day?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there's quite a bit in that question because it talks about the appropriateness of moving to four hours and talks about training. In the first instance, one of the announcements made last week was that the health policy framework will be amended to add an aggressive workforce strategy, that I'll be working on with the minister of advanced learning. Some of the issues that we will hopefully bring forward in an MR this spring will address all aspects of the health workforce and will be inclusive of that work that we are doing to improve the numbers and the potential for care that will be able to be provided by the LPNs and the personal care aides and others.

On moving to the four hours, as the hon. member knows, in this year's budget we are moving to 3.6 hours. Mr. Speaker, the good news is that in places like Palliser they have just recently, since January, hired an additional 30 staff for long-term care. So we are making some strides in both retention and recruitment of more staff for long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Walleye Fishery

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most cherished pastimes in Alberta is fishing – I'd say that it's good for health care – and one of the most sought-after fish is the magnificent walleye. This government has closed many walleye lakes over time, and as a result we're starting to see the population numbers inch back up. It is also very good to see that they are trying new initiatives this year for stocking walleye. It can only help our fisheries in years to come. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. When are we going to open up these lakes and give Albertans a chance to fish for the prized walleye?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we are seeing some recovery of the walleye populations after many years of hard work and conservation in this province, and we have opened up some lakes over the past few years. But the member is right: walleye is a much sought after fish, so to prevent overfishing, what we're hoping to try is an innovative fish tag solution approach to give people the opportunity to harvest walleye in a controlled way. We are proposing this, and we're going to test it on four lakes: Lac Ste. Anne, Wolf Lake, Pigeon Lake, and Lake Newell. It's a balance that we're trying to achieve between conservation and allowing Albertans to fish and to keep at least some of their catch.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: given that there's another fish conservation effort potentially being introduced this year, which involves licensing fish derbies, could the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tell me: would even the small fishing derbies be charged for a licence under this new policy?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very good question because none of us want to see the fish resource depleted. We do recognize that there are some fishing events that are small social functions, where the people may not be involved in big prizes or big crowds, while other organizations could actually have greater impact on the resource. I believe that the requirements for a big fishing derby should be different than those for a small derby, and that only makes sense. Our goal is to make sure that we have good, sound practices for all events and to promote low harvests and at the same time give people the ability to catch and release fish. The licensing would only be to Alberta residents as well.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: could the minister tell me if there is broad public support for these proposals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We've had overwhelming support from licensing competitive fishing as well as the opportunity for a fish tag. We've done this through numerous consultations over the years, and both of these ideas that I have just mentioned have been endorsed by the provincial round-table on fisheries, which is a group of stakeholders. What they've said is that they've taken and shared these ideas with us, and we then have implemented them. We've also shared these ideas with the members and the executive of the Alberta Fish and Game Association.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many years there was a special discriminatory tax placed on Chinese immigrants wanting to work in Canada. This tax was called the head tax. It was designed to ensure that Chinese workers on projects here would not bring their families to Canada and become Canadians. The special temporary foreign worker program for the oil sands negotiated and signed by the Alberta government has the same effect. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why will Chinese temporary foreign workers contracted to work in the oil sands for, potentially, years, to live in work camps here for years not be allowed to have their wives and children immigrate to Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you know, first of all, I'd just like to clarify one thing. I don't think it's really fair for anyone to bring up these different nationalities in this House. That is not fair. We have a multicultural society here. We all live together and work together very, very well.

I mentioned earlier in the House today, Mr. Speaker, to a former question in fact, that the temporary foreign workers' program is under the federal government.

Mr. Backs: Signed by the provincial government.

A supplementary question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why would Chinese temporary foreign workers be indentured to their sponsoring employers for years if they want to stay in Alberta and not have the freedom to seek work elsewhere in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I've mentioned in this House over and over again that this is a free country. We have the hottest economy in North America. We have thousands of jobs. We have the best education system. We have good health care, good policing, low taxes. This is a wonderful place to live. Alberta attracts people from all over the country, and we're so lucky.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why are meat cutters working as temporary foreign workers from countries like Sudan being denied places in the Alberta provincial nominee program for full immigration status because those places are being allotted to employers friendly to this government?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that program is under another ministry, and I can't comment on that.

Postsecondary Opportunities in Calgary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the city of Calgary, with almost a million people, is growing at almost twice the rate of Edmonton. It's also creating half of all the new jobs in the province, yet access to postsecondary education in Calgary lags far behind that available in the capital region. In the latest round of access announcements Edmonton received funding for almost twice as many new postsecondary spaces as Calgary. This means that by Advanced Education's own figures there are now 9,000 more opportunities for postsecondary students in Edmonton than there are in Calgary. My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education. What will the minister's department do to address the growing disparity in access to postsecondary education that currently exists between Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure I heard all of that, but I think I get the gist. Decisions about funding for new spaces are made based on the priorities put forth by the postsecondary institutions as well as student demand and Alberta's economy and the need for the province's postsecondary system as a whole. This year Calgary's postsecondary institutions are receiving 938 new spaces, worth $11.3 million. Edmonton institutions are receiving 829 spaces, worth $10.2 million. Since 1999 Calgary's postsecondary institutions have received funding for 5,812 new spaces compared with 5,804. So, you know, we could argue back and forth about this for years. I think we need to put that behind us and move forward and deal with the future.

Dr. Brown: My supplementary question is to the same minister. Will the minister commit to a capital plan to allow Calgary's postsecondary institutions to bring greater equity and opportunity to young Albertans in southern Alberta?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think my job is to bring opportunities to all Albertans in all areas of the province, but we are working very, very diligently with the Calgary postsecondary institutions. In fact, I've already met with several Calgary postsecondary institutions, including the University of Calgary and the arts college as well as Bow Valley College. I was busy last week meeting with all these people. As a government we're already funding a number of postsecondary capital projects in Calgary, that will benefit thousands of students in the city and throughout Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Investment in Science and Technology

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is essential that we actively pursue ways to diversify the economy by expanding our economic base. Alberta's reliance on oil and gas royalties is negatively impacting the technology sector. Investment in the oil industry is taking away from investment in the high tech sector, and the recent Alberta Technology Report survey suggested that almost half of Alberta's tech companies would consider leaving Alberta to go to provinces offering better incentives. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. When is the minister going to put incentives in place to make Alberta competitive with other jurisdictions?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member references a very important report which is actually sponsored by the Department of Innovation and Science. Surveys were sent out to over a thousand different companies, of which only about 100 responded. Quite clearly in the report the authors have indicated that you can't make a hard and fast decision based on such a small reply to that survey. I just mention that for background.

What is important in that report, because it does highlight a trend that we have been following over a number of years, is that companies in emerging businesses, particularly in the preprofit stage, have indicated a need for access to capital. Mr. Speaker, that is an issue that we have tackled. We announced earlier this year a $30 million grant under AVAC that will actually go to assist emerging companies in the information technology, the biotech areas, to have access to that capital and mentorship to help them get established in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that this government offers royalty tax credits to oil companies, will the minister implement a similar 30 per cent provincial tax credit for investment in early stage Alberta-based technology companies?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, another important question, a question that we have asked repeatedly of members of our community. Quite frankly, on that question of tax incentives we get a very mixed response. We get half of the individuals saying, "Stay out of that area; continue to apply a low, broad-based tax regime to make sure that all of our businesses are on an equal playing field," and another half – and I'm generalizing – say: provide some specific incentives. It is a question we grapple with. The Minister of Finance may choose to respond. Her officials have examined this question on several occasions. At this point we have not moved in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Given that the new spaces announced on March 28 in relation to the 2006 provincial budget focused heavily on energy-related fields, what is the minister doing to increase the number of science and technology graduates?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the things we have to be very proud of in Alberta is some of the initiatives that have been taken by this government to bring technology and science to the forefront: iCORE, for example, has brought in 23 new chairs serving, as a matter of fact, three universities in this province and a couple of hundred graduate students who, in fact, follow these people around the world to learn under them because they are so renowned in terms of their knowledge and their expertise. So I think we have a lot to be thankful for and a lot to be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Continuing Care Standards

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been almost a year since the Auditor General issued his scathing report on long-term care. At the time the Premier promised to take immediate action to implement all of the report's recommendations. But here we are one year later, and there has been little or no progress on the Auditor General's key recommendations. Many vulnerable seniors are still suffering under intolerable conditions. The horror stories continue. To the Minister of Seniors: why has this government failed to legislate binding, enforceable service standards in all long-term care and assisted-living facilities as recommended by the Auditor General?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I addressed in my earlier answer to the Member for Lethbridge-East, we do take the safety, care, and well-being of our seniors in continuing care with the utmost importance. I can tell you that the Auditor General's report, the recommendations that were made, the MLA task force on long-term care, the area that applies to this ministry – as far as standards are concerned, the accommodation side of the standards, those will address the room and board issues. That will include, for example, nutrition, the setting of accommodation rates, and whatnot. As indicated earlier, we are working toward making that possible very soon, that you will have the standards, and it will include monitoring, enforcement, concern resolutions, and other important elements. You will see that when it comes forward.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we care so much about these seniors – we do – then why wasn't legislation brought forward in this legislative session, almost a year later?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, it takes time when you go to the community as a whole, when you go out in the province. We went out in the province with a task force that had representatives not only from our side of the House but from the opposition. That task force listened to what people said. We actually took that back out into the community, which involves all residents in Alberta, including the stakeholders, including the caregivers, including the people in the whole long-term care system, whether it's lodges right through to designated assisted-living and on to the long-term care component, and that does take time. When we received that back, our staff rolled up their sleeves. They're getting the job done. Our Ministry of Health and Wellness is working with this department. We are working hard to ensure that we have the best standards possible in place, and you will see that soon.

Mr. Martin: Given that many of these seniors don't have a lot of time – that is, they're vulnerable – and given that the government is still busy changing designations from long-term care to assisted living, which have no minimum standards, how does this help vulnerable people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did put the funding in place in this budget through the Minister of Health and Wellness budget as well as my budget. I know that this budget was $2.2 million to ensure that standards are put in place, and that will be coming forward soon, as I indicated to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Special-needs Education

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some school boards in my constituency are having difficulty meeting the education needs of students with special needs within current funding profiles as determined by Alberta Education. My first question is to the Minister of Education. How does Alberta Education determine special-needs profiles of the individual school boards?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that it's done on historic incidence of severe disability rates, which is charted throughout the province. This began a few years ago. In fact, we're only in the second year of the new renewed funding framework, which actually is where you'll find the funding specifications.

I should probably indicate to the hon. member and to others here that I think it was prior to 2001-2002, hon. member, that school boards were taxed with having to code and identify and submit claims on an individual, per-student basis. Now, that created quite a bit of an administrative burden and didn't allow them the total flexibility that they wanted. The renewed funding framework that was brought in a couple years ago does that now. So there's a combination of factors that goes into determining what the incidence rate was, but essentially it's based on birth populations that are expected to give rise to these kind of circumstances.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. Given that some boards have to actually subsidize special ed funding from their regular instruction dollars, is the department considering a review of this methodology?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact we are considering a review of not only the special needs aspect of education funding but everything that is contained within the renewed funding framework document. I would encourage members to pick up the latest copy, either through their MLA offices or wherever they wish. They can contact a number of sources in Education as well for that same information. We are proceeding with that review. I appointed a ministerial advisory committee to undertake it. We'll have those results soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again for the same minister: is there a specific sunset clause on the current profiles so that a board can be audited to establish a new profile that may better reflect today's realities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, to answer the member's question, there's no specific sunset clause that I'm aware of. However, I should make it clear that if a school board wishes to have an audit done because they feel there is some discrepancy between the total number of special-needs students, be that mild, moderate, or severe, that they have enrolled versus the amount of funding they're getting on the profile jurisdiction basis, they could certainly approach us and ask for that audit to be conducted. We will do it, and then we'll both live with the results, so to speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Sale of Surplus Crown Lands

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department of infrastructure is responsible for the sale of provincial Crown lands that are surplus to the requirements of the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads and for ensuring that fair market value is realized from the sale of these lands. We all know that this government sold surplus land in 1988 for as little as a dollar per parcel, and there has yet to be an adequate explanation from this government. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Given that during the last five years this government has sold surplus lands in the city of Edmonton for anywhere between $2,000 and $75,000 per acre, who is doing the real estate appraisals on these surplus lands before they are put on the market to be sold or given away?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where to start on this. We've gone around and around. Trying to demonstrate with the Easter eggs apparently didn't work. I will go through this once again for the benefit of this individual. The fact is that we knew from the plans we had worked through that we needed some 504.39 acres. We knew exactly where we needed the land. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, with all the chirping over there they obviously don't want to hear the answer. That's probably the problem, why they have never figured this out. They absolutely refuse to hear the answer.

The Speaker: Okay. Another question.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: are these surplus lands, the lands that have been sold off in the last five years, those lands which are to be sold, are they available to all investors, or is it the policy of this government to allow only a select few insiders to bid on these lands?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to go back to the first one. Of course, I'm going to try a different tack. I think this time I'll talk in the form of pies. We will see that, in fact, there are eight pies. He doesn't seem to be able to understand from the Easter egg one because that was too simple: you count them. Well, you're going to have to cut the pies. So that's the land that you're cutting now. We as the purchaser know that we want 504.39 ounces of pie. We know that there are eight locations where we're going to find these pies. We know that there's an individual that is offering to sell these pies to us, and there are some 795.18 ounces in all of these pies.

Now, we're going to take the pies, and we're going to cut out some 504.39 ounces of pie because that's what we need, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we give back to the seller, to the person that owned them at one time, the remaining amount so that, in fact, we end up with our 504.39 ounces of pie. Now, if they can't understand that, I don't know what other explanation we could give them.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister would make a better Santa Claus than an Easter Bunny because he wants to give the taxpayers' land away for nothing.

My next question: where does the government advertise these surplus lands for sale so that Albertans can place an offer if they are interested?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this will take a little bit of time because there's a lot of explanation to do with how we handle public land. First of all, we look at the parcel that is for sale. If, in fact, it is something that would be used for a public-type facility in a municipality, we may offer it to the municipality for $1. Then there are cases where the land will be appraised. If it can't be used for a public service, then it will be appraised, and we take two appraisals. Then, if the municipality that it's housed in is interested in purchasing this property for the appraised value from the two independent appraisals, we will offer it for that price. If they don't want to buy it for that, then we put it on the market through a real estate agency, and we take bids.

That is the standard practice, Mr. Speaker. It's open to the public if, in fact, the municipality didn't take us up on the first right of refusal. That's the process, and it's always followed. Always.

The Speaker: I think that, unfortunately, the time has expired for question period. My apologies.

2:50 Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the first of several to participate in Members' Statements, our historical vignette of the day.

By 1935 William Aberhart's Back to the Bible Hour had a weekly radio audience of over 350,000 people. In 1935 Alberta had a population of about 750,000 people.

On August 22, 1935, 81.8 per cent of Alberta's eligible voters, the largest ever, reviewed the platforms of 240 different candidates and gave the Social Credit Party 54.25 per cent of the vote and 56 out of 63 seats. William Aberhart had personally hand-picked Social Credit candidates in every constituency, but he himself was not a candidate. He became the Premier of Alberta but not a Member of the Alberta Legislative Assembly. William Morrison, the Social Credit member for Okotoks-High River, resigned, and William Aberhart was elected an MLA by acclamation on November 4, 1935.

Alberta was to enter a very stormy period. Premier Aberhart led the Social Credit Party into the March 21, 1940, election and emerged with 42.9 per cent of the vote and 36 out of 57 seats. He himself was elected in Calgary.

The political storms, however, were to continue. The press constantly ridiculed Aberhart. The Lieutenant Governor considered removing him from office. Major opposition came from ministers within his own cabinet who felt that he was not determined enough in advancing the Social Credit theories of Major C.H. Douglas.

On a trip to Vancouver on May 23, 1943, he died a painful death from cirrhosis of the liver at age 64. So embittered was his family for the years of criticism that he endured that they cancelled plans for a state funeral in Alberta and buried him in Vancouver.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of six members.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka just indicated to me that the signature of the Premier that I just mentioned, William Aberhart, is found within the desk of the hon. Member for Calgary-West. As, of course, is customary for hon. members who spend their time in here to etch—I shouldn't say this publicly. I hope the mike's not on. But as we're all school children at heart, you know, we always autograph. That's part of the history of this: the internal of these desks.

Deaths of Canadian Soldiers in Afghanistan

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You and I enjoy the privilege of serving in this Chamber because we live in a democratic state. Our past Prime Minister the Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker best described our freedoms by saying, "I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country."

Mr. Speaker, these freedoms do not come without a price. So that Canadians may enjoy these freedoms, some of our finest young men and women willingly sacrifice their lives in the protection and promotion of democracy. This past weekend we lost four such outstanding Canadians in Afghanistan. Corporal Matthew Dinning, Bombardier Myles Mansell, Corporal Randy Payne, and Lieutenant William Turner lost their young lives doing what they believed in: protecting us.

Mr. Speaker, during such times of sorrow our nation must bow its collective head, lower its flags, and offer its prayers so that our soldiers know that we believe in them, honour them, and appreciate them. Also, we must never forget the families of these soldiers, who must carry on without their husbands, sons, and brothers. We owe our collective gratitude to them as well.

Mr. Speaker, to those remaining soldiers deployed throughout the globe, we wish them safe return.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

National Volunteer Week

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The voluntary sector is one of the most vital components of our society. This week we pay tribute to that sector through volunteer week. This is a nationally proclaimed week held to identify the beneficial and crucial contribution that volunteers make to our lives.

On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Community Development, who is responsible for the Wild Rose Foundation, I would like to ask this Assembly for its unanimous support in recognizing April 23 to 29, 2006, as volunteer week in Alberta.

All across this great province many events and activities are taking place to recognize and thank the volunteers, who play such essential roles in our communities. The Wild Rose Foundation in collaboration with Volunteer Alberta facilitates the provincial focus during volunteer week. This year 146 Alberta communities are participating in this week-long series of events.

According to the 2003 National Survey of Nonprofit and Voluntary Organizations there are about 19,000 nonprofit and voluntary organizations in Alberta, which accounts for 12 per cent of the 161,000 nonprofit and voluntary organizations in Canada. It is estimated that the voluntary sector in our province collectively contributes approximately 449 million hours of volunteer time. This is equivalent to approximately 234,000 full-time jobs. Alberta leads the way in the voluntary sector, and we can all take pride in this great accomplishment. Through the Wild Rose Foundation this government supports the voluntary sector of this province in many valuable ways.

I encourage this Assembly to continue its support and dedication to volunteerism in our province. Throughout Alberta our volunteer spirit is contributing directly to the health and well-being of our citizens and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

National Victims of Crime Awareness Week

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Victims of crime deserve compassion and respect. April 23 to 29 marks Canada's inaugural National Victims of Crime Awareness Week. The theme is People, Services, and Laws.

As part of this week communities across Canada have been encouraged to promote awareness of victims' issues and the services and laws that help victims and their families impacted by crime. We are also taking this time to recognize the contributions of those who support victims. In our province alone over 1,600 volunteers work with professional staff to serve victims of crime.

Here in Alberta we are working to improve awareness about victims' programs and services through a campaign launched in March by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. The campaign includes a series of radio, transit, and other indoor media advertisements. Posters have also been distributed across the province to be displayed throughout communities, including courthouses, police stations, and probation offices.

After becoming a victim of crime, a person's life can be turned upside down and thrown into the confusing and intimidating world of the criminal justice system. Once they report the crime to police, we want victims to ask the police officer about services available to them or to pick up the phone and call their local victim services unit. Community and police-based victim services units in Alberta can provide information about the justice system, assistance through the court process, and referrals for legal, financial, or emotional support.

Victims deserve to be heard, and these awareness campaigns are an important step to show that we are listening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Alberta's Promise

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How do we make a promise a reality? I'm speaking of Alberta's Promise, a hope that is yet to be realized by many of Alberta's children. It is now three years since the government launched this initiative. Some critics may say that we should not be putting out in words what we're not prepared to put into policy. I do not agree. We need words to articulate a vision, but words are not enough.

C.S. Lewis once commented on the expression "a good egg." There are two things that can happen to a good egg: either it becomes something else, or it goes rotten. Mr. Speaker, I believe we're at this point in determining whether Alberta's Promise lives up to its intention. Children's well-being is more than the concern of one ministry. It involves all aspects of public policy. If we are to truly benefit Alberta's children, we must face the challenge of poverty for many children live in families under this shadow. If we are to have healthy children, we must provide health care for all. If we want wholesome children, we must have a healthy environment. If we want children free of intimidation, we must eliminate bullying in public life and in the marketplace. If we want our children nurtured, we must be prepared to support child care in whatever form it is needed.

I urge the government and those who aspire to lead it to review their priorities so that the worthy intention of Alberta's Promise can be a hope achieved and a promise kept.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sale of Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Documents uncovered by the Official Opposition show that this Progressive Conservative government has failed atrociously in protecting the public interest when it comes to land development, a failure that this government would like to ignore. There are questions that this government cannot or, perhaps more accurately, will not answer. Why are certain land developers able to secure special conditions when purchasing Crown lands? The answer may stem back to a government memo from 20 years ago which clearly states this government's policies for land purchases, a policy that favoured special-interest names at the expense of Alberta taxpayers. Are these policies still in effect? Only an independent investigation will determine this as this government has demonstrated that it has no interest in telling Albertans what went on.

Instead of pursuing justice on behalf of Albertans, this government chooses to protect its friends and predecessors. Instead of providing meaningful and relevant answers to the questions surrounding this issue, this government mocks the very notion of accountability by criticizing the opposition for raising such concerns. Instead of taking responsibility for their actions, the minister of infrastructure points the finger at his predecessors. Ironically, the same minister introduced Bill 20 this spring, which aims to hide government documents from the public for up to 15 years.

On the one hand we are asked to ignore the past, and on the other we are told that we should not have access to current information. This government's clear disdain for accountability and responsible leadership is becoming quite alarming. Will this government do the responsible thing and initiate an independent judicial inquiry into the land purchase and subsequent sale of surplus Crown lands for both the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads? Doing so would accomplish a number of things. First, it would determine if this government has mismanaged its responsibilities at the expense of taxpayers. Second, it would identify who is responsible for such failures and ensure that those are not repeated. Third, it would determine if such mismanagement continues today and if so who is benefiting and who is suffering. In short, it would ensure accountability for the future even if it was lacking in the past.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition from 60 residents of central Alberta from the Mirror, Bashaw, and Alix areas that says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta as reported by Health Canada, that include but are not limited to; (1) a tobacco tax increase, (2) legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, and (3) legislation to make all workplaces completely smoke-free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition that I received from 18 staff and students from Rosary school in Manning, Alberta, which is in my constituency. The petitioners are proposing some initiatives that they believe could be used to curb an increase in teen smoking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to submit a petition from 111 Albertans calling on the government of Alberta to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare that has 938 signatures on it. It calls for the government to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health reforms and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance or allow doctors to work in both the private and the public systems. The NDP opposition has now tabled 3,300 signatures on this petition.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present two petitions, the first signed by 482 Albertans and the second signed by 98 Albertans. Both petitions urge the government of Alberta to introduce legislation allowing parents the authority to place their children into mandatory drug treatment and to fund urgently required youth drug treatment centres.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Bill 35 Fuel Tax Act

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I request leave to introduce Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 35 would replace the existing Fuel Tax Act, which is outdated and no longer reflects how the tax is charged and collected. The tax framework used in the new act has been discussed with industry stakeholders, and they are in agreement with the framework proposed.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Bill 36 Securities Transfer Act

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, provides a single, uniform source of rules for the transfer and holding of all corporate and noncorporate securities traded in Canada. Most other provinces and territories have either adopted or plan to adopt practically uniform legislation. Providing a single set of rules in Canada will enhance our market competitiveness with the United States and global markets.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 37
Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer)
Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I request leave to introduce Bill 37, the Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 37 is a housekeeping act that will allow changes in legislation with references to "Provincial Treasurer" to be replaced with "Minister of Finance."

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Safety.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the proper number of copies of a response letter to Written Question 2, regarding provincial protection officers' traffic safety enforcement, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. The use of sheriffs to supplement traffic enforcement in a pilot project came during follow-up work on the Alberta traffic safety plan. These individuals were identified as a potentially prudent use of resources. This concept is not new. Municipal special constables have been used in traffic enforcement on local roads for the last three decades. I have the appropriate number of copies to be handed out.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table with the Assembly the appropriate number of copies of my response to Motion for a Return 49 from last session, which simply requires me to provide information pertaining to equating diploma examinations as referenced in the ministry of learning's annual report for '03-04.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a handwritten letter that I have been given a copy of. It's from Mr. Roland Poulin on 94th Avenue in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it's to our hon. Premier. It is in regard to the third way and Mr. Poulin's reservations about the third way.

My second tabling this afternoon is the appropriate number of copies of a magazine put out by the Historical Society of Alberta, of which our hon. Lieutenant Governor is a patron. The Historical Society of Alberta has put out this magazine called A Century of Alberta Premiers. It is excellent reading. In fact, there are many researchers involved with this, including Una Maclean Evans, and she was photographed on page 21 doing an interview with Richard Gavin Reid, the UFA Premier from 1934 to 1935. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you get an opportunity to read this. You certainly are encouraging me to read Standing Orders. You must have been an excellent history teacher prior to your arrival here in 1979, from the historical vignettes you give us. Hopefully, this will provide more information for your most interesting vignettes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, I do want to thank the hon. member for his generosity in providing me with a copy of the historical document on the leaders of the province of Alberta. The hon. member should know that there is a reason why I encourage him to read Standing Orders.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to table yesterday's program for the 11th annual Chrysalis achievement awards, which recognize the thousands of volunteer hours developmentally delayed individuals contribute to their Calgary community with the support of their families, enlightened local businesses, and the Chrysalis organization.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling today is from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Miss Grace Wheatley, who wanted to relocate to a more affordable apartment to free up some money for health expenses because she's now working less and earning less but was told by Capital Region Housing that there was a one and a half to two-year wait period for funding to be released from this provincial government. She confirms that there are many people in her situation, and she wants us in this Assembly to promptly act on this ongoing concern.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today 31 letters, all of which are on continuing care standards and their enforcement, and they are signed by people who live and work within the system.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, pursuant to the Workers' Compensation Act a report dated March 2006 entitled the Status of Research on Occupational Causation of Selected Primary Site Cancers in Part-time Firefighters.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Boutilier, Minister of Environment, a response to Written Question 4, asked for by Mr. Taylor on behalf of Mr. MacDonald on March 20, 2006, and return to order of the Assembly MR 5, asked for by Mr. Eggen on March 20, 2006.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, just a reminder that tomorrow Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program will have 83 young people attend. We'll do a special session with them tomorrow morning here in the Assembly, so I'd ask that as you leave today, tonight, you would make sure that whatever papers you have, you just lock them up and put them away because these young people should have no access to any information you have on your desks.

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been served on Thursday, April 13, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 15 and 29.

[Motion carried]

Resource Rebate Program

Q15. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. R. Miller that the following question be accepted.
What is the total cost incurred to administer the $400 Alberta 2005 resource rebate program?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I wish to make a few remarks. First of all, I would encourage the members to reject the question. The reasons for that are as follows. Under the rules of the Legislative Assembly once a written question is accepted, response has to be tabled within 30 sitting days of the date of acceptance. The terms of the Alberta resource rebate 2005 stipulate that eligible Albertans have until December 31, 2006, to file their 2004 income tax returns in order to receive their $400 cheques. For this reason the final cost of administering the program will not be tallied until approximately this time next year. Once the final amounts are known, the Department of Finance is quite prepared to provide this information to the opposition parties and to table it in the House at the first opportunity.

As a point of interest, in the Alberta Finance news release dated October 11, 2005, it states that administrative costs will be "less than one per cent of the program cost."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Question.

[Written Question 15 lost]

Human Rights in China

Q29. Dr. Swann moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.
What measures has the government taken to work collectively with the federal government and the Alberta China office to address human rights concerns in China, specifically in regard to Falun Gong supporters?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government accepts Written Question 29.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close the debate.

Dr. Swann: I call the question.

[Written Question 29 carried]

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 13, I would now like to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Motion for a Return 26.

[Motion carried]

Income Trusts and Income Trust Conversions

M26. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including legal opinions, briefing notes, backgrounders, or memoranda, that analyze the impact of income trusts and income trust conversions on Alberta government revenues from January 1, 2002, to April 1, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I would urge members of the Assembly to reject. The reasons for this are that the current policy review of income trusts is at a very preliminary stage and, of course, that it is a very sensitive matter. We will not be providing the requested documents but will consider the release after completion of the policy review and the consideration of its findings by the hon. Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude the debate.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's somewhat disappointing because we're dealing with a significant amount of money. I think the relevance should be that page 139 of the Budget 2006 fiscal plan provides a rationale. As stated in the budget, Alberta Finance has recently estimated the "net revenue loss at about $400 million per year" from the shift to income trusts and further states that this issue is being examined. Well, would the minister mention this? How long will this take? This is significant cash, a lot of money, $400 million. I point out that a $400 million loss of public revenue from income trust conversions when added to the further loss of $372 million of public revenue from the corporate tax reduction from 11.5 to 10 per cent represents an unacceptable loss of public revenues. This represents a loss to the public treasury of over three-quarters of a billion dollars per year. This is about the same amount as average Albertans pay in the form of health care insurance premiums.

Mr. Speaker, we talk about health care costs skyrocketing and not having the money and all the rest of it, and here is $750 million going down the tubes to the wealthiest Albertans, the corporate sector. If we're going to say in the budget – and it's in there on page 139 – that there's $400 million lost, surely it's our responsibility in this Legislature to know what we can about it at this particular time. It's not good enough to say that the government is reviewing it. How long is that reviewing going to take? How long are we going to bleed from losing this amount of money? As I say, $400 million is a lot of taxpayers' money. The Legislature is supposed to control the purse strings, and the minister is saying: well, we're reviewing it behind closed doors. Surely it's the responsibility of this Legislature to be reviewing that amount of money and to know what's going on.

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, not surprised again but disappointed, that the government has taken it upon themselves to do this behind closed doors. I'm not holding my breath waiting for, you know, a miracle that they're going to vote for us, but I think all Members of the Legislative Assembly should say: this is pretty serious stuff, and we should have the responsibility to take a look at this. So I would certainly urge acceptance of Motion for a Return 26.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 26 lost]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 206
Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act

[Adjourned debate April 10: Mr. Stevens]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to continue debate on Bill 206 this afternoon. I think the debate that we have had so far has been very interesting, and the points made have been very good. What really strikes me about this bill is that we as legislators have to discuss this issue. I think it's very unfortunate that we are discussing the sad situation that has arisen in Alberta and Canada over the past 30 years. Bill 206 gives divorced or separated parents the opportunity to use a designated centre as a neutral site to drop children off so that the other parent can pick them up without conflict or contact with each other.

There are many situations out there, and there are statistics available that show that some parents are denied access to their children. The department has provided some statistics that show just how significant a problem this is becoming. It is estimated that as many as 48 per cent of all children of separated or divorced parents have little or no visitation with their fathers. There are approximately 166,000 children in Alberta with nonresidential fathers. If you take the 48 per cent I just mentioned and assume that these children have little or no visitation, one can estimate that 79,000 children have little or no visitation with their fathers. Research also shows that up to 24 per cent of nonresidential Canadian fathers do not get to see their children. If this percentage is applied to the estimated 126,000 nonresidential fathers in Alberta, somewhere between 25,000 and 30,000 fathers may not be seeing their children.

The reasons for fathers not seeing their children are varied, and exchange is only a small part of this, but it is a part. I think we have to look at Bill 206 as one designed to help the majority of families who are having difficulty exchanging children, the difficulty as a result of one parent not being able to access their children because of the exchange situation. This is a bill that would work for that sort of situation. It would give parents the opportunity to voluntarily or by court order work together to ensure that their children have access to both parents. It is a bill that will work for those noncustodial parents who have difficulty gaining access to their children because of the situation that presents itself. I think this bill will work for the majority of families in Alberta that do have access/exchange issues. These are issues that we cannot overlook or brush under the carpet. There are parents that have issues, and I think the idea this bill presents is a very progressive step.

During debate there were many concerns raised, many of which were valid, and I think they have to be addressed. One concern raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw was the question of whether or not having access exchange centres would create a place where conflict could occur between parents in front of their children. The point of this legislation is that a parent could drop a child off at a certified centre, like a day care for instance, and then that parent could leave. That way, the other parent who is picking up the child does not have to run into their ex. That is the main intent of Bill 206, to have a place where there won't be any conflict between parents, where there is minimal contact between divorced parents.

I think this would lead to much more civil relations. This is a solution that will help those parents who are having difficulty with access exchange.

A number of members brought up the issue of what to do with violent parents, but this bill is not intended for those situations. In fact, I would argue that the number of children with violent divorced parents is very low, and we have other ways of dealing with that situation. Further, it could be argued that if you do have violence in a relationship, the person perpetrating this violence should not have any access to children. I realize that there is a need for a multitude of solutions to deal with the different situations that will arise when dealing with family law, but even though this is the case, we have to clearly look at a solution for the majority of children who need access to both of their nonviolent parents. We must not focus on only the high-profile violent cases. We have programs and laws that deal with that. This is for everybody else.

Now, even though I am in support of the intent of this bill, I think we have to come to the realization that there are some difficulties with it. Both the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Children's Services spoke about how projects in place are trying to address the problem that Bill 206 tries to solve. I think we have to recognize that this is being done, maybe not quite in the same way that this bill does it, but there is work being done. One of the things that the Minister of Children's Services rightly raised is the issue of rural communities and how this might work for those areas. I know that the intent of the Member for Calgary-Bow was to have this be as low cost as possible, but what happens when, for instance, a town does not have a facility to be designated? For example, just northeast of Red Deer are the towns of Joffre and Haynes. What happens if there is no facility willing to be designated as an exchange centre? Does this mean the parents are out of luck? I think that part of this idea needs to be thought out a bit more before we go too far with this bill.

As the Minister of Children's Services pointed out, there are many avenues that need to be explored before we delve into the solution that Bill 206 puts forward. The rural issue is only one aspect. I think the work that is being done through the cross-ministry initiative may result in some solutions being discovered that will be of benefit to the entire province. I think the hon. minister was completely on target when she stated that one single approach cannot work in circumstances that vary widely from family to family. The family unit has changed, and the government must evolve along with this change.

Further to this, the hon. Minister of Justice made some points as well that I think we need to consider. He stated that there are many reasons that parents are not able to access their children which make the situation very complex. Again, this ties in with what the Minister of Children's Services said, that a single approach just will not work. The Minister of Justice gave some examples of what his ministry and department are doing to ensure safe visitation and exchange with children. He mentioned that the cross-ministry initiative between Children's Services and Justice should be completed before we pass a bill such as 206. If we pass something before the cross-ministry initiative is completed, we may derail some of the solutions that may be found. I agree with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Children's Services that we should allow the cross-ministry initiative group to complete its work before passing any legislation in this area. We need to have consultation, and we need to do more work on this issue and whatever solution we find. It must be for the majority of families and be a low-cost solution.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 206 – do we hand these out now, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: The Speaker doesn't know what you're trying to move, so maybe you can explain.

Mrs. Jablonski: I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, in essence, this is a hoist amendment. Does anybody wish to speak on the hoist amendment?

[Motion carried]

The Acting Speaker: In essence, this drops from the Order Paper.

Bill 207
Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences)
Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise and open the second reading debate on Bill 207, Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising from Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. I do not believe that anyone inside or outside this Chamber will argue that illegal drugs are a problem affecting every culture around the world. The drug trade spans nations and even continents with drugs and precursory materials being shipped to North America from as far away as the South American and Asian continents. Of course, there is a rampant production and distribution business here at home as well.

Having said that, the issue of drugs has long been on the social radar of North Americans. During the 1980s the Americans began their well-publicized war on drugs, and two decades later the battle of this war rages on. The drug culture seems to come in waves, with different drugs being popular at different times. Over the past 20 years the media has portrayed the rise of a variety of drugs, including heroine, cocaine, marijuana, ecstasy, and most recently methamphetamines. During this time many different tactics have been tried and utilized to stop the use of drugs in our society. However, I believe the most important lesson which has been learned from the past is that the drug problem is large, it's complex, and there's no single action or course of actions which will eliminate narcotics. It is necessary for people, communities, and governments to work together to address the problem of drugs on our streets.

On the whole, I believe that between our municipal, provincial, and federal governments as well as the involvement of nongovernmental organizations we have developed a multifaceted approach to tackling drugs at the street level. Through the federal government we see the criminal legislation which is designed to deter individuals from engaging in the drug trade. The Controlled Drugs and Substances Act is a very comprehensive piece of legislation which addresses almost every controlled-drug-related issue as it relates to criminal activity. As what is sometimes a joint effort, the federal and provincial governments both engage in educational initiatives.

Knowledge is a powerful tool, and television is a powerful medium. Combining the two has led to some spectacular results in this province. The recent advertisements produced by AADAC, which graphically illustrate the effects of crystal meth on your body and your mind, are excellent examples. The feedback from these ads was so positive that it was decided to air them for a longer period of time than originally intended.

Also, at a provincial level the government has addressed and is currently addressing through the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs legislation the issue of children who are in contact with drugs. There is no doubt that we have an obligation to protect children from the dangers which are posed by illegal drugs.

In addition to the protection of children, there exist treatment programs to help those who are addicted to drugs. The list of initiatives to address illegal drugs is long, but my point is that our society is focused on the big-picture issues associated with drugs: prevention through information, treatment of addicts, and criminal prosecution of those who are involved in the drug trade. Because the drug issue is so large and varied, it is understandable that we are focused on the big picture, and some of the peripheral issues may not be as important. It is one of these peripheral issues which I would address with Bill 207.

Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell this bill, if passed, will amend the Traffic Safety Act to accomplish two things. First, it will give peace officers the option – and I do stress option – to seize a vehicle if the driver of the vehicle is charged under section 5 of the federally regulated Controlled Drugs and Substances Act. Just to make sure that there are no misunderstandings, section 5 of this act addresses the issue of trafficking in illegal drugs and possession of illegal drugs with the intent to traffic. It does not apply to a charge of possession of an illegal drug. The bill is worded to ensure that the registered owner of a vehicle is able to appeal for the release of their vehicle if they were not involved with or were unaware of what was being done with their vehicle. Additionally, the bill allows for a registered owner to post a security against their vehicle so that they are able to access it even if the registered owner was involved with the alleged crime.

The second outcome which Bill 207 would effect is disqualifying the accused from holding a driver's licence for one year from the date of their conviction.

The reason I have brought this bill forward is because I believe that when drug dealers are driving around dealing drugs, they pose a safety risk to other drivers on the road. There are those who would argue that the connection between these two is tenuous, but I disagree. In discussions with a police officer I was told about an incident involving a drug dealer travelling between Edmonton and Red Deer. According to phone records during less than a one-hour time span of being on the highway, this individual placed 60 calls from his cellphone. That's 60 calls. I would argue that this level of inattention to the road directly because of the drug dealers' business makes them a safety hazard.

Other sections of the Traffic Safety Act allow for the seizure of a vehicle or the disqualification of an individual for holding a licence based on the fact that they are unsafe on the roads. When someone is stopped for drunk driving, police seize the vehicle because this person poses a hazard to others on the road. For the same reason their licence is disqualified. These individuals have been determined to be a danger on our roads, so they need to be removed from them. Why are they a danger? Because their judgment is clouded. I argue that the individuals who are using vehicles to traffic drugs pose a danger to other motorists as well. These dealers are cruising, looking for customers, not being mindful of the road in front of them. They not only pose a danger to other motorists, but they pose a danger to members of society in general.

Mr. Speaker, drugs have a pervasive and negative effect on our province. What was once an issue solely for the big cities has become just as prominent in small communities throughout Alberta. Dealers are heading out from urban areas to rural Alberta to peddle their destructive wares. By removing the means of transportation from these dealers who are spreading drug addiction across the province, we can begin to address the safety risks which they pose.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's important that we as legislators send a strong message to drug dealers in our province that this type of activity will not be tolerated in Alberta. I have spoken with police officers about this legislation and have received strong support for it, in particular from Superintendent Jim Steele and Staff Sergeant Keith Janes, both with the Red Deer RCMP detachment. They believe that would be a valuable tool for them to use.

I believe that Bill 207 takes a step in the right direction to increasing safety for Albertans. I would ask the support of all hon. members in this Chamber for this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond in second reading of Bill 207, Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. I think this bill is directed in the right direction, so I don't question the intention of the bill. I think that in all the discussion that I've read about the war on drugs, one has to be clear in distinguishing the demand side from the supply side, and this bill is clearly directed to the supply side and not the demand side. I think it's quite a terrible thing that through the years we have focused so much attention on the demand side, so we've criminalized the possession of drugs, and the prohibition of drugs has simply not worked in terms of being successful through the years and simply led to putting all kinds of people in prison.

Interestingly enough, in The Economist magazine some years ago there was a whole section of the magazine devoted to drugs, and they put the issue in terms of what they called the heart of the issue and raised the moral question: what duty does the state have to protect individual citizens from harming themselves? Now, that's the question directed to the demand side, and of course we have to be careful in passing laws that protect individual citizens from harming themselves. John Stuart Mill said: "The only purpose for which power can be rightfully exercised over any member of a civilized community, against his will, is to prevent harm to others." So this bill is directing itself to the right side of things, namely the supply side, because it's drug dealers whom we have to go after, not the addicts in terms of the demand side. I think the question of addiction is a health issue, and too much of our Criminal Code is directed to accusing people of possession of drugs. But it should be dealt with as a health issue. There should be all kinds of programs in place to deal with that, and there are programs available for people who have drug addiction problems.

Of course, one of the issues is the connection between drug addiction and crime, and that is a serious issue if we take a statistic, for example, that 50 per cent of crime is caused by 5 per cent of habitual criminals who are addicts. Of course, in that respect they need lots of programs. We need diversionary programs up front. People committing crimes because of drug addictions need the opportunity to choose between going to jail and going into a rehab program, and we have those kinds of programs here in Alberta. Also, we need rehab programs in our prisons so that people getting out can get integrated back into ordinary, everyday society, having dealt with their addiction issues.

But on the supply side we need to take, of course, a zero tolerance approach to drug dealers. The user is sick; the dealer is evil. I have no quibble with that kind of statement. Dealers, whether they are part of organized crime or part of biker gangs, are maliciously destabilizing society by exploiting human weakness and addiction, so there must be a variety of approaches in dealing with drug suppliers. So this bill is one approach. I mentioned a variety of approaches, the speaker who introduced this bill mentioned a variety of approaches, and this is only one aspect of the approaches that perhaps should be taken.

My only problem with this bill, even though its intention seems to be legitimate, focusing on the supply side of drugs and going after drug dealers – I mean, the Criminal Code already covers much of what this bill seems to direct itself to. If you look at section 5 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, already in place there is this statement: "No person shall traffic in a substance included in [various schedules]" in respect of various drugs. If a person contravenes this section, then of course they are guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment, and there are a number of different terms, depending on what drugs we are talking about. Section 16 of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act deals with the forfeiture of property. So if an individual is arrested and his car is towed away because their drugs were found in the car and it turns out that he is a drug dealer and he is charged and found guilty, then all the property is forfeited to the Crown. So I'm not sure what this bill adds to the Criminal Code.

Then there's section 462 of the Criminal Code, which covers forfeiture of property in all kinds of different situations, including the possession of illegal substances and the act of dealing in illegal substances.

I think the Criminal Code is there and should be used in the way it was intended to be used. I think what we need is to have courts that will actually carry through with the charges on the basis of the Criminal Code. For example, it would be good to have specialized Crown prosecutors for drug offences so that the Criminal Code can actually be effective in dealing with drug dealers.

I'm asking myself what, practically, this bill would do, making it possible for a person to lose their licence for one year if they're found guilty of possession and dealing in drugs, the seizing of their automobile. I think that if it's directed at dial-a-dopers, which is an expression that I've come to learn – namely, the transporting of drugs, a go-between, someone who is bringing the drugs from a dealer to the recipient – I'm not sure that this bill is really needed because if police stop a car and find that there are drugs in the car, they can have the car towed away. I'm not sure what this bill really adds.

Many of those who transport drugs on behalf of dealers to recipients actually don't use their own cars. They use rental cars, or they use stolen cars. So I don't know what this bill would really accomplish. Maybe it would only accomplish the fact that it would in effect lead to a greater number of people not having licences, having suspended licences, and maybe continuing to drive on the roads at great risk to the public. I'm not sure what, practically speaking, this bill really does.

The hon. member, in introducing the bill, mentioned that she had some advice from police in Red Deer. I've sought the same kind of advice from members of the Edmonton Police Service, and I'm not encouraged to think that this bill really does anything. If we're really serious about going after drug dealers, we have to have something that's a lot tougher than this.

I would ask: what is the research behind this bill? What is it really going to accomplish? Is this bill just a front, just a facade, just window dressing, giving the appearance that we are taking a tough approach to dealing with drugs and drug dealers when, in actual fact, practically it doesn't have very much effect at all? It has very little effect and will certainly not lead us to really deal in a tough way with the illicit drug industry, which indeed is a huge, huge problem, destabilizing society throughout our world.

Mr. Speaker, those are my questions and the problems that I have with this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to make a few remarks with respect to Bill 207, the traffic safety, licence suspension for controlled substances violation, amendment act, 2006. The drug trade in our province should be a matter of concern to all Albertans. While I suspect that not all Albertans are in fact concerned about this matter, I can tell you in my experience as Justice Minister and Attorney General that a great number are. In fact, I would say that the majority of Albertans do care deeply about this matter.

Typically it comes up in my world in the context of the apparent inability of the justice system taken as a whole to appropriately address the plague that, as has been pointed out, is now not just part of the cities but also part of the rural environment in our province and, indeed, across Canada and North America. It involves marijuana. It involves cocaine. It involves manufactured drugs such as crystal meth.

When people ask the question, "What are you doing about it?" ultimately they talk in terms of additional resources for the system, in terms of additional police and prosecutors. In terms of prosecution, this is a matter which is handled by the federal government rather than the provincial government, and I point that out. But they still say, you know, that there should be additional resources. So much of what we're talking about in terms of addressing crime has something to do with attacking organized crime, which is big business. There's not always enough money. In fact, there is not enough money to appropriately address organized crime. Then, of course, you have to be able to prosecute these things.

The fact is that on the street so much of what happens does happen in and out of vehicles. Reference has been made to the dial-a-doper. It's in that context, when those folks are caught, that people complain because the sentences that typically go along with a conviction like that will involve in many instances conditional sentences. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about a sentence where individuals are told to go home and watch television with certain conditions which ensure that they don't have the same freedoms they had before but which fall far short of incarceration. Many people do not see that as an appropriate penalty.

The federal government has indicated that they're prepared to address that. In fact, I think it's currently in the press, that the conditional sentencing provisions will be changed. Sometime in the next few weeks, perhaps, we will see some legislation from them that addresses a reduction in conditional sentencing availability for serious crimes and, hopefully, serious crimes involving the drug trade.

Mr. Speaker, it's that background that ensures that we're always interested in finding new ways to keep our communities safer. Much of the discussion regarding this falls into the field of the federal government because of the comments I've made: the legislation, the Criminal Code, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act. The resources relative to detection and prosecution are with them.

I appreciate very much the efforts of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North in coming forward with what is a provincial solution to this particular matter. I think it's worthy of discussion because it allows us to appreciate the issue. It allows us to appreciate the restrictions that we have here in the province in doing some of the things which appear, to common sense, to make so much sense. Why is it that we wouldn't take away a driver's licence and a vehicle from someone who is using that driver's licence and that vehicle to profit through trafficking of drugs, to damage our society? After all, a driver's licence is nothing but a privilege. If you are using a vehicle as your business centre, if you are driving the roads and using drugs and selling drugs out of that vehicle, as has been commented on, then why wouldn't we, as a matter of common sense, disrupt the drug trade by taking away the privilege of driving and by taking away by way of confiscation the vehicle that is owned by that person who is central to it?

Bill 207 would amend the Traffic Safety Act to give the province the authority to suspend the driver's licence of any individual who is convicted of drug possession or drug trafficking while in a vehicle. It would also give the province authority to seize that vehicle in those same circumstances. The drug possession and trafficking charges relevant to this bill are violations under section 5 of the federal Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

Mr. Speaker, because these are offences under federal legislation, licence suspensions and vehicle seizures of this sort are complicated by the question of jurisdiction. We must be aware that the province is not completely free to enact provincial penalties for federal legislation. However, while it is not always the case, there are situations where we have authority to do so. For example, at this time the Traffic Safety Act provides for provincial driving disqualifications where there have been driving convictions under either the federal Criminal Code or the National Defence Act. Provincial driving suspensions for driving convictions under this legislation have been challenged at the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court found these convictions to be valid because the provincial driving disqualification relates to a federal driving conviction. This is an important point. For the province to have the authority to suspend a licence on a federal charge, there must be a driving-related conviction.

In the current proposal we would add provincial driving disqualifications for convictions under the federal Controlled Drugs and Substances Act when the person is in a vehicle. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, although the convicted person may have been in the vehicle with drugs, the federal conviction is not for a driving-related offence. This means that we do not have the connection between a federal driving-related offence and the provincial penalty. The current case law from the Supreme Court of Canada has said that this particular connection is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion relating to legislation that exists in other provinces and how we might do something similar with this bill. Legislation in Saskatchewan and Manitoba allows the police to seize vehicles that belong to individuals who have been arrested for solicitation of a prostitute. Alberta enacted the same legislation in 2003, but that legislation has not yet been proclaimed.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation in Saskatchewan and Manitoba has not been challenged in the courts, but the same basic concern exists. The concern is that the underlying offence is a criminal matter and not under provincial jurisdiction. This may be perceived as an attempt to legislate in the area of criminal law a matter that is exclusively federal.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify one thing. The province does have authority to restrict drivers' licences for violations of provincial legislation. For example, in the Traffic Safety Act there are provisions for a driving disqualification where a person is not making their court-ordered maintenance payments. Maintenance arrears are, of course, not driving-related matters, but they are clearly within provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, the province has the authority to link them to driving disqualifications. Possession and trafficking in drugs are not provincial matters, and it is, in all likelihood, a real question as to whether or not we can say that there is jurisdiction to try and link driving and drug possession as Bill 207 purports to do.

I'm not concluding that there is a clear answer to this, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is that there is a body of law that gives some very clear guidance in the matter, and what I have outlined for you and other members of the Assembly is what that law is as of this time.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there is a significant need . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your time allocation has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think all of us here can agree that we need to get drug traffickers off the streets, but we have to figure out the best way to do it. I was glad that the Minister of Justice explained some of the problems with jurisdiction between the federal and the provincial because I was sort of curious about the fact that we did pass some legislation here, that the minister alluded to, having to do with johns and prostitution. It was our understanding, as the minister said, that they have passed the same laws in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They are working. That was part of our concern. We can pass what we want here, but if we can't proclaim it after we pass it, there's not much point.

I was going back to the bill that the hon. Justice minister talked about. In going through that, beyond sort of the federal and provincial jurisdictions and who does what, before I would commit to offer our support to the bill – and I throw this out – the first major issue we have is the fact that in order to have a driver's licence suspended under this amendment, the drug trafficker in question must be the driver of the vehicle when committing an offence. I think the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and others have said that this is sort of problematic. The issue here is that being found guilty of an offence carries not only a fine but a potential jail sentence. Now, depending on the drug being trafficked, if it's not a conditional sentence, jail terms could range from a minimum of eight months to a maximum, I suppose, of life imprisonment.

I guess the first question then, if that's the case, is: what good, therefore, is a driver's licence suspension of a year if the person is in jail for two or five? It seems to us that the problem is partly solved there, and the bill doesn't allude to that. Does the amendment mean to apply a driver's licence suspension from the time of release from jail or from the seizure of the vehicle used? Section 3 of the proposed amendment seems to indicate immediate seizure. Is that, in fact, what it's doing? If the suspension does not apply as of the arrest and assumed near-immediate charge of drug trafficking, how are we stopping drug traffickers from simply going out and getting another car? As the Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned, we know that they borrow, they steal, they rent cars, whatever. We're wondering how that would stop them from doing that.

There is the obvious thing about the civil liberties too. The American Civil Liberties Union found that immediate seizure of vehicles was contrary to law as it occurs before the individual is found guilty of the crime with which they are charged. Therefore, we must ask: if seizure is immediate but suspension is not, what message is being sent? It's still clear in the courts that you're presumed innocent until guilty. What if the individual charged is granted bail, and the trial takes a year to conclude? We know that in some of these cases that's, in fact, what happens. They are technically allowed to drive, albeit a different vehicle, until they are found guilty. So what is this amendment doing? In other words, you can suspend their car, it takes a year for this to come to court, and they can still drive another vehicle. Fairly easy to do. So what purpose is this suspension meant to serve? You see it around the inner city, that drug traffickers can just as easily walk to their sales or take other transportation. It's happening all the time.

Also, the stipulation that you must be the driver of the vehicle when you are caught in the act means that if your friend or acquaintance or spouse or sibling is the driver, their licence is not suspended, nor is yours. Again, you have to be the driver. If that's not the case, I'd certainly like the member to elucidate. What purpose is the suspension meant to serve?

Let me just conclude by saying that I understand the reason that the Member for Red Deer-North wants to come forward with a bill like this. It is a serious problem. We all recognize this. For instance, in the city of Edmonton the police in a northern part were telling me that they can recognize 23 different gangs – 23 different gangs – by names in the city. A lot of them have to do with drugs. No doubt about that. So we do have a very serious problem.

I suppose the advantage of bringing a bill like this forward is that at least there's some debate about the seriousness of the problem, but with due respect I say that I'm not sure that this bill accomplishes what we want it to accomplish. The fact that people are on drugs: I can point out that we'd better do a better job in our schools in such high risk areas. Full-day kindergarten, kindergarten, high school graduation: all those in the long run will probably have a bigger impact. The Minister of Justice talked about the justice system. There's obviously work to do there, but it's going to be a multifaceted approach if we're going to seriously deal with this particular problem.

Again I come back to the point that we said that if we're passing legislation, we can pass what we want here. If all of a sudden the Minister of Justice and the lawyers say, "Hey, we've got a problem; we can't get this through," and we don't proclaim it, then what's the point? The message I got from the Minister of Justice was that we'd be facing the same sorts of problems here if we pass this particular bill as the one that we passed dealing with the johns and cars back in 2003. We passed it. It passed in the Legislature here with all good intentions, but we haven't proclaimed it. So I would suggest that until we deal with that particular bill, because I think there's a similarity here – one that has already passed the House, and we can't proclaim it – there is not much point going through here, passing it through three readings, and then having it sit there for four years. I think we should probably go back to the drawing board on that particular bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to speak on the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006, Bill 207, before the Assembly this afternoon. I think the amendment to the Traffic Safety Act is very important, very critical, and where we want to move forward in the future regarding a number of areas in protecting society: protecting those most vulnerable, including young boys and girls, young teenagers, from the effects of drugs and alcohol but, as well, as the Minister of Justice and Attorney General mentioned earlier in his comments, those involved in the prostitution, or sex trade, industry.

Mr. Speaker, as we go through the amendments to the Traffic Safety Act, or Bill 207, we talk about dealing with controlled drugs and substances, the CDSA as it's commonly referred to. The drugs involved in these types of cases are obviously drugs that are illegal in all parts of Canada but, as well, have created devastation for many families, for many children and adults. In attempting to look at new ways of service delivery or new ways of being able to investigate or looking at new tools for police officers or those in law enforcement, I think the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has come forward with a tremendous bill that will have that effect in the community, that will have that effect on those that want to continue to traffic illegally in those types of drugs or narcotics and who are really traffickers in sending kids through hell.

When I say that, Mr. Speaker, it's because I worked, in fact, undercover for a number of years. I saw the devastating effects of what cocaine, what crack cocaine can do, what heroin does to an individual. Now, with the scourge of crystal meth in our community, this is a tremendous bill that we can use and look forward to in the future.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, years ago, when I was giving evidence on a drug trafficking charge in Calgary, the justice in the Court of Queen's Bench at that time sentenced a cocaine dealer to three years in a federal institution for selling me one gram of cocaine. Obviously, those sentences have changed in the last 20 years. That's how devastating it was 20 years ago. Today it seems that a lot of drugs are allowed more in the community than others.

So when I see this bill coming forward, I think this is tremendous. It provides for the deterrent that will be out in the community for drug dealers, whether it be organized crime members, whether it be, you know, the eastern European gang members that are throughout this province, whether it's the bikers or the Hells Angels throughout this province, or whether it's any of the other aboriginal or Jamaican-based organized crime groups that Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta has reported yearly in their annual report, that's made public.

I want to assure, Mr. Speaker, that I fully support the fact that this law will provide all Albertans with the ability to ensure that this is another tool. This is another opportunity that there is a deterrent. If those who want to traffic in illegal drugs are going to be using a vehicle, if they're going to be transporting those drugs from Calgary or from Edmonton to Fort McMurray, and if they get stopped on the highway, that vehicle will be seized.

Mr. Speaker, just recently – and you're probably aware of the article that was reported by the Edmonton Police Service through IROC, integrated response to organized crime, two weeks ago, roughly – two individuals, one from Calgary and one from Lethbridge, were arrested here in Edmonton with, I believe, $114,000 in cash and 20 kilograms of cocaine in their vehicle. Now, I don't know the details of the case, and I'm not going to speculate on what the details are, but obviously they were doing some travelling throughout the province. As good as Travel Alberta is – and that theme is great – they're trafficking in narcotics throughout our province, whether it be up in Grande Prairie or whether it be in Fort McMurray. I'm very proud of the officers that worked on that case and, obviously, the seizure of those drugs, taking them off the street and placing them in a lock-up but, as well, destroying the drugs, which will occur later as their court case goes through.

Again, Mr. Speaker, these are issues and these are cases that are at the forefront. We've seen more of this type of activity as this province grows and as the economy grows. We aren't just getting, you know, the individuals that will want to come to Alberta to work hard to earn a good salary and a good living and to raise their kids in the best environment that they can. Many of them come from economic areas throughout Canada that don't have the financial capability that can provide them with the necessities of life, so they are moving to Alberta. Yes, there are various problems that come with that, and one of those is the drug trade.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, where an individual has his vehicle seized, I think it's going to be a tremendous deterrent to those that want to be in that field. We know for a fact that in some of the drive-by shootings that have occurred throughout the province and from the description of vehicles that have been laid out, many of them have been newer, fancy cars: some BMWs, some Hondas, and some other fast and fancy and all decked-out cars. This, again, ties in with the drug industry, ties in with that gang activity. Obviously, if they're going to be using that motor vehicle for trafficking in these types of substances, I am all for the Member for Red Deer-North's bill to move forward.

The hon. Minister of Justice spoke regarding the effects of a conviction. He spoke regarding the procedures regarding laws, regarding court cases, regarding appeals. I'm not going to speak about that, but I do want to just mention that we've seen a societal breakdown in our inner-city communities, whether it's in Edmonton or Calgary or whether it's Fort McMurray or even Grande Prairie now, and including Lethbridge and Medicine Hat and our larger centres, where we can see a degree of population within those inner cities that are succumbing to the social ills of our society today, whether that be drugs, whether it be alcohol related, whether it be prostitution related. All of these tie in with each other. The drug trade is tied in with the prostitution, or the sex trade, and it is tied in with alcohol abuse.

It also provides, Mr. Speaker, some of the worst things, that we don't want our children to see. Those are the condoms and the needles, the used needles in the front yards and on the front streets and the driveways and back alleys of our communities. The only way is for us to come up with laws that are going to create a deterrence for individuals to continue this practice.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think Bill 207 is a driving force of where we want to go. I think this will provide police officers with a tremendous tool in the surveillance that's done regarding major investigations. As well, a police officer that's checking a vehicle on the side of the road for speeding and/or if they found that there were drugs in the vehicle could in fact seize the vehicle because of the fact it was being used to transport illegal drugs. Obviously, those illegal drugs would be listed as they are now under the CDSA, Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I'd just like to say that I support this bill a hundred per cent. There are a number of areas that as government we have a responsibility for. As I mentioned earlier in my comments, these are opportunities for us as a government to look forward to and move toward changes to make our communities safer, to make our communities more secure as well as to ensure that those who want to traffic in these types of illegal substances are apprehended and that their net worth can be investigated by Revenue Canada and that their vehicle can be seized and provided to the government.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak on Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. First off, the motivation behind this bill – and I very much agree with it and agree with the push to try and do something to deal with the great problem we have with drug dealers in our society and the problems that the Member for Red Deer-North has so aptly described and the difficulties that we have in this area to provide our police officers with a tool, as the Solicitor General so aptly described. You know, to provide something different, something new I think is very important. I don't know if this exactly provides something new, but it is good to have something here that we can begin to bring greater public pressure, bring a greater sense of the feeling of Alberta and Albertans to those, perhaps, who have some of this jurisdiction federally to limit the use of drugs through whatever means – the crystal meth, the heroine, the cocaine, the crack, whatever, you know, the always very, very debilitating substances that drug dealers prey upon the ignorance, I suppose, of many young people and the problems that arise from the use of these drugs. It is very, very important to try and come up with some ways to deal with that.

I've had a number of complaints in my constituency, which has a large rural component even though it's a constituency in the city of Edmonton. There are farms, there are acreages along Manning Drive and along Fort Road and through that whole area who have had regular complaints because it is an area where some of the drug dealers drive out to meet their customers, I suppose, and to make deals, and it's up the driveways of some very, you know, responsible members of the community, community league leaders and such. They've been coming through with complaints. They're a little too far from north division to see a quick response. There's usually not a ready and regular police presence. Like in almost any rural area you're not going to have a regular police presence down a country road, and this is what we have in some big sections of northeast Edmonton. This is where we seem to be having a number of these drug deals coming down and people going to buy and dial-a-dopers picking out certain driveways and dealing with this problem where some of the individuals that own these homes have resorted to having scare-away devices, lights that'll flash on them and all the rest of it, just to keep the drug dealers away from their area.

If we were to have some sort of legislation and to speak here about it to ensure that our federal counterparts will be pushing, those that enforce the laws and those that deal with them in the courts will understand that the Legislature is very concerned about this and that we want to see some action and some use of those federal provisions that are already there. As the Member for Edmonton-Glenora aptly put forward, there is already some power on the part of the federal government to go forward on this problem, and sometimes we just have to see some of these powers used.

The problem that may arise with this bill, though, is that it seems like it is ultra vires. The BNA Act or the division of powers between the federal and provincial governments may bring about a number of problems in that way, and it may never see the light of day. There may be charges where it is to some degree grandstanding, but in many ways I don't mind that this type of an issue is brought forward so that, as I said earlier, the Legislature lets it be known that it is very important for the people of Alberta to see some action on this issue and to see some moving forward to try and control the devastating aspects, the devastating effects that the drug trade in many of these substances has had on our communities.

When I was in Fort McMurray a few years ago – and I've heard similar things in other parts of Alberta – there were even drug dealers hanging outside the playgrounds of elementary schools. This was related to us by the RCMP there, that they were selling – the term that was used was the dragon, which is heroin, selling that in elementary schools. It's just almost beyond belief for me that such drugs would be marketed to elementary students in our schools. I can think of worse things to do than seize the car of those people that are trying to prey upon our young people by doing such things.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora certainly spoke about the difference between going after supply and demand, and certainly some of the other members did speak to trying to reduce the demand through I think education, trying to ensure support of families of those kids that are at risk, trying perhaps to have some extra kindergarten time, to just having some recreation.

Although my riding's actually outer city and much of it would be deemed suburb, it has some inner-city aspects in certain of the neighbourhoods. I was at a school here just last week speaking to a couple of grade 6 classes, and then I had a chat with the principal afterwards. Many of these students are new to Canada, and they're new to Edmonton, new to Alberta. What happens with many of these families is that they are low income, sometimes almost no income. These kids don't get anywhere, and they're preyed upon somewhat. You know, you hear about their visit to the Legislature being such a special visit to the kids from the school because many of the families don't even visit a park. They've never been to the zoo. They've never been out to our lovely Legislature Grounds. It's a far ways away, and for some of them even a few dollars for the family to make such a visit is a lot, or the time, if their parents have been working long hours, is very, very difficult.

The need to deal with, you know, greater recreation, greater things for the kids to do I think is key, is important, is something that we have to be looking at to ensure that we take away the demand, that we take away the ability to influence these kids from some of these drug dealers, that we take away the influence of a number of the gangs. The Solicitor General mentioned many of them. There are many, many, many gangs active in Alberta, active in Edmonton, and those gangs will prey upon kids. They'll prey upon some of their runners. This will perhaps . . . [Mr. Backs' speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and address the Assembly on Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. I've been very pleased – and I'm sure the people of this province will join me in saying so – with the recent efforts made by this government in an attempt to curb the manufacture and sale of illegal drugs.

It's this last point that I'm glad we're addressing: the sale of illegal drugs. I think that when we discuss strategies to stamp out the drug trade, we often don't give enough consideration to the mechanics of how these poisons are actually distributed or purchased within our communities. When criminals go out to push drugs or score drugs, they often do so with the help of an automobile. We've all heard of the infamous dial-a-dope networks where a quick phone call gets drugs delivered to your door in the space of a few short minutes.

The implications of this practice are very disturbing. Think about it. We have individuals driving around in our communities with thousands of dollars in drugs and drug money, peddling their poison door to door. To a drug dealer a car is a business tool that makes business easier and more profitable.

Mr. Speaker, we also have the opposite situation where people looking to score drugs drive around streets and alleyways looking for drug dealers. Once again, this presents the obviously dangerous situation of drugs and money changing hands, an activity which we all know can and often does lead to violence and gunplay.

Aside from this and aside from the obvious evil of drug trafficking in general, we must also consider the implications of automobile use by those engaged in these illegal transactions. It's a case of people who are flagrantly disregarding the law. They're already thumbing their noses at social responsibility. They have no regard for themselves or those around them, and when they climb behind the wheel of a two-tonne automobile, there's a recipe for disaster close at hand.

Criminals and cars are a bad mix. Throw in narcotics and they have the potential to become deadly. Driving while high, fleeing the police or a deal gone bad, hurrying to get to the next transaction, or any combination of the three makes the combination of these people and their automobiles a ticking time bomb.

Mr. Speaker, we already have laws in place that place prohibitions on impaired driving and trafficking or buying narcotics. I've already mentioned that these people have no regard for the law. They obviously don't care about the consequences that are currently in place. As a result, they pose a distinct safety risk to honest, hard-working Albertans. This is why I believe that Bill 207 presents us with a unique opportunity, an opportunity that will enhance public safety and get those caught drug-trafficking off the road by proposing two unique and effective measures.

Mr. Speaker, the first provision of Bill 207 that I wish to address is the one that would allow a peace officer to seize the vehicle of anyone who is charged with drug trafficking or possession with the intent to traffic. This is a good idea, an idea that will serve two important functions in making our streets and our neighbourhoods safer. By seizing the vehicles of those charged with these drug offences, we would effectively be cutting off their livelihoods at the knees. Without a car it becomes difficult, if not impossible, to continue dealing drugs or, at least, to continue dealing in the same quantity with the same efficiency.

The best feature of this bill seems to be its application to those who have been charged. Mr. Speaker, if the offender is out on bail in the period of time between being charged and convicted, they wouldn't have a car unless they put up a substantial security deposit. If they are convicted and don't do jail time, they still wouldn't have a car. The loss of the car would be permanent upon conviction, which represents a significant financial setback for the drug dealer. In order to recommence illegal activity, a new vehicle would have to be purchased, a measure which could prevent further illegal activity.

Mr. Speaker, the deterrent factor would also be extremely high. I'm sure that many aspiring drug pushers would change their plans if they knew that they faced the potential loss of a multi-thousand dollar investment. This might present even more of a deterrent than the threat of jail time. I think that we've all seen examples of drug dealers whose vehicles aren't transportation; they're ego extensions. The profits that they make off the pain of the innocent often find their way into big engines, loud stereos, and custom rims. While they can already be seized as proceeds of crime, the provisions of Bill 207 would add to and reinforce existing laws. For people such as these a loss of status might be even more frightening than the loss of freedom, not for all but maybe for some, and if we can make even one drug dealer choose his car over his profession, then we've succeeded.

Mr. Speaker, realistically, there are no easy solutions to winning the war on drugs. We can't fight on one front. We have to engage in small battles that address the multilevel nature of the drug trade. Drugs are everywhere in our society. They're being manufactured and grown in our neighbourhoods. They're being sold on our streets and taken into our schools.

The people who sell them are innovative, so we, too, must be innovative in stopping them. Bill 207 represents such innovation, and it serves to challenge our traditional notions about fighting crime and improving the safety of our society. We must build on what is already in place. We must continually find new ways to discourage criminal activity.

Mr. Speaker, the second action proposed by the bill is the disqualification of a drug dealer's driving licence for one year following conviction. This takes the seizure measure one step further and serves as another vital means to decrease the threat that these people pose to the citizens of Alberta. Such a disqualification is only fitting. I think that I've made it quite clear that drug dealers present a huge danger to the public on our streets and highways. Seizing their vehicles will get them off the road. Taking their driver's licence away is a logical extension to this. It presents an extra measure of insurance.

Driving is something that we all take for granted. Most of us do it every day and don't give it a second thought. We share the roads with thousands of other people on a regular basis, and we depend on their responsibility. We drive to work. We drive our kids to school. We frankly don't pay much attention to the person in the next car. We take it as a matter of course that they are like us, that maybe they're taking their kids to soccer practice or taking a briefcase full of papers to the office. Maybe they're taking a bag of cocaine and a loaded handgun to a drug deal. If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, then I think that the safety risk they pose on the road is fairly self-evident, and they shouldn't be on it.

Driving is not a right; it's a privilege. A vehicle is not just a means of transportation. It can be a weapon in the wrong circumstances. If a criminal is caught with a gun, the gun is taken away, and it's not given back because it's a public safety risk. In narcotics-related cases a car should be treated the same way. I don't want drug dealers in our society at all. I especially don't want them on the same roads used by my family and my friends. If they insist on using their vehicles to spread their poison, then we should prevent them from doing so by any means necessary.

Bill 207 provides us with those means. It provides a way to severely cut into the livelihood of drug traffickers by taking away their transportation. It will discourage them from continuing or, hopefully, even starting to sell drugs by threatening their means of transportation. It will help make Alberta's roads safer for the thousands of innocent people who use them every day.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I believe that Bill 207 will be another valuable weapon in the fight on drugs and an excellent means of enhancing public safety. I wish to offer it my full support, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also privileged to be able to rise in this Assembly today and join the debate on Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

For far too long those who use motor vehicles in the commission of a crime have endangered the lives of Albertans. Numerous criminology studies have demonstrated a direct correlation between crime and motor vehicle collisions and fatalities. For example, a 1975 study demonstrated that those who were involved in criminal activity were also more likely to cause a fatality with a motor vehicle. Additional studies have shown that the antisocial behavioural traits displayed by criminals tend to manifest into aggressive and dangerous behaviour behind the wheel. We simply must put a stop to this. More Albertans are dying every year due to the callous and reckless actions of criminals who turn an automobile into a murder weapon.

Of particular concern is the use and distribution of narcotics and other illegal drugs and their ability to detract from traffic safety. There is overwhelming evidence to suggest that narcotic consumption impairs cognitive faculties and awareness and is a major contributor to motor vehicle collisions and fatalities. Moreover, illegal drug activity creates a culture of violence that, when combined with an automobile, can be lethal. The distribution and consumption of illegal drugs is unacceptable under any circumstances but is particularly damaging when combined with the operation of a vehicle.

We already have existing laws that provide for the disqualification of those who drive while under the influence of narcotics or alcohol. Further to this, it is essential that we do everything possible to ensure that those who are involved with illegal drugs in other ways are kept off our roads and prevented from harming innocent Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill 207 is to give law enforcement and traffic safety officials a tool that will allow them to remove from the road those who disregard our society's laws against the trafficking of drugs. Specifically, Bill 207 provides for the seizure of any motor vehicle that is used for the purpose of trafficking drugs. Additionally, this bill would amend the Traffic Safety Act so that an individual convicted of drug distribution would automatically be disqualified from holding a driver's licence for one year from the date of conviction. By removing drug traffickers from our roadways, we will undoubtedly increase overall traffic safety and prevent senseless motor vehicle collisions that end and destroy the lives of many Albertans every year. The greatest strength of Bill 207 is that it allows us to make our streets safer while at the same time fitting into a comprehensive strategy for preventing the distribution of drugs in Alberta.

The use of illegal drugs, especially among youth, is having numerous detrimental effects on Alberta's communities. Drug manufacturing, the use of drugs, and trafficking contribute to violence, health problems, environmental degradation, and other long-term social problems. All across this province there are examples of lives ruined and communities threatened by problems that are caused by the distribution and use of drugs.

Currently we are working on a strategy to stop the distribution of illegal drugs in Alberta. This strategy includes new mechanisms to educate citizens about drugs and treatment programs to rehabilitate those who have become users. It also includes enforcement mechanisms to encourage respect for the law and impede the manufacture and distribution of illegal drugs and narcotics. Bill 207 fits into this strategy because it aims to stop the spread of drugs by putting an additional weapon in the arsenal of law enforcement and removing a tool from the hands of criminals.

Motor vehicles are an important tool of the trade for drug traffickers. Dial-a-doper networks use vehicles to deliver drugs to the homes of users at a moment's notice. Moreover, vehicles are an important link between the manufacturers, buyers, and sellers of these drugs. By removing this link, Mr. Speaker, we will help to staunch the flow of illegal drugs in our province and ultimately make our communities safer and better places to live.

Some have expressed concerns that this bill could lead to administrative delays and put additional demands on the time of our peace officers and the resources of our law enforcement agencies. May I remind this House, however, that enforcing existing drug laws and dealing with all the safety concerns and social problems that drug activity creates already puts a considerable demand on the resources of this government.

The most important job of our peace officers is to ensure the safety of Albertans. Making it more difficult for drug dealers to do business will ultimately lead to a safer Alberta and, therefore, will make the jobs of our peace officers less challenging. In the long term this could make it easier for our peace officers to perform their jobs, which will increase efficiency and save the taxpayers of Alberta a considerable amount of money. Moreover, drug use puts increased pressures on other government programs, such as health and social services. Reducing the proliferation of drugs in Alberta and increasing overall traffic safety will help to take the pressure off these programs, thereby saving resources.

Mr. Speaker, licence disqualification has proven to be an effective deterrent against various forms of crime and other harmful and illegal behaviour. It has been an integral part of programs that have successfully reduced the incidence of impaired driving, thereby saving lives. Vehicle seizure has also proven to be an effective deterrent against certain types of illegal activity. Several provinces have already put in place laws that provide for the seizure of a motor vehicle that is used in the commission of various types of offences, most notably prostitution. I think that it is very encouraging that society is recognizing that motor vehicles play a very important role in criminal activity and, therefore, that this criminal activity has many negative ramifications for traffic safety.

Mr. Speaker, society and, particularly, we as politicians and lawmakers are just sick and tired of drug activity and all the negative impacts of the drug trade and drug use. We need every tool that we can get to help fight this scourge. This is one more tool that we can use to slow down or stop the drug trade and protect our children. So I applaud the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for introducing Bill 207 because this bill takes into account the effect of drug trafficking on traffic safety and provides a workable solution that will help to protect Alberta motorists while at the same time tackling the problem of drug distribution, a problem that negatively impacts our communities.

I urge all members of this Assembly to take action to promote safety on Alberta roads and empower law enforcement officials to protect Albertans by preventing those who traffic drugs from operating any kind of motor vehicle. Supporting Bill 207 will help to achieve these goals, so I would encourage everyone to support this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. I rise in this House to join the debate, as I often do, with a sense of bemusement. I mean, this bill and the logic behind it as expressed by a number of people who have participated in the debate so far, a number of the hon. members, has so many holes in it that you could drive a fleet of tractor-trailers through it.

You know, if you want to do something positive about traffic safety in the province of Alberta, something that will make a real difference, wear your seat belt. If you want to do something positive about the war on drugs, something that will make a real difference, do something about tobacco. In fact, this House about a year ago had a chance to do just that with private member's Bill 201, and government members so watered it down as to cut the legs out from under it, and I don't know why they did. I honestly don't know why they did. I honestly don't know what the threat to peace, order, good government, individual liberty, civil rights, and public safety is by having a uniform, province-wide ban on smoking in all public places. It makes sense to me. It makes a good deal more sense to this hon. member, Mr. Speaker, than it does trying to take away the cars of drug dealers.

Government members opposite, when they're unshackled from the party line and actually able to speak out and speak their mind, like to say that one of the reasons why they belong to the party opposite is because they don't believe in passing laws if the laws are going to be inherently bad laws. Well, this is inherently a bad law. It's based on a number of fallacies, one of which is a stereotype expressed just a few minutes ago about the drug dealer being the sole proprietor in the province of Alberta of a souped-up car, you know, one of those lowered-down, tricked-out usually Hondas or Acuras, in my experience, that if you see somebody driving one of those cars anywhere in the province of Alberta, he must by extension be a drug trafficker. Well, where is that written, Mr. Speaker? Where's the evidence for that?

I remember back in 1975 when I was living in Toronto and working an evening shift, which brought me home usually at somewhere between 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, being pulled over regularly by metro Toronto's finest because at the time I was driving a blue, four-door, nondescript, mid-size Chevy with no chrome on it and black-wall tires and because I was in my early 20s and, I was going to say, had hair down to my shoulders. But what the heck? I had hair back then. To metro's finest I looked like a suspect. You know what? I wasn't. [interjections] I know. To the government members opposite I still look like a suspect, but that's my point exactly: they are the victims of stereotypical thinking.

You know, if you want to talk about a class of vehicle, perhaps, that we ought to be talking about seizing on a regular basis – because we all know that this ties in directly to drug trafficking; at least I thought we did – why don't we just seize every Harley-Davidson on the roads of Alberta? That's the vehicle of choice of motorcycle gang members, and they deal drugs. I haven't heard a word about Harleys. Now, I'm not recommending that we seize every Harley-Davidson in the province of Alberta because that would capture in that net I think a lot of innocent people who don't deal drugs. But, I mean, a stereotype is a stereotype.

If you want to talk about taking away an important tool of the drug trafficker's trade – and I refer back now to the opening of debate on this bill – why not take away their cellphone? You know, the driver that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North referred to, the drug trafficker who made 60 cellphone calls in the space of – what was it? – an hour, 28 minutes, however long it was, certainly didn't do that by pushing the buttons on the AM/FM stereo in the tricked-out Acura. He did it by dialing the keypad of the cellphone. Let's take away the tool that is responsible here. I don't know, by the way, I have no more idea how you would enforce a law banning cellphones or seizing cellphones from drug traffickers than I have any idea how you're going to enforce this ridiculous law. If you could do it, that would more severely hamper a drug dealer's ability to ply his trade, to sell his wares, to deal drugs to people than taking away his car.

You know, if you take away his car, he's only going to steal another if he's really doing well at the drug trade because it will be worth his while. He already knows how the system works. He already knows that he's not going to get much time for stealing a car. First of all, as any drug dealer will probably tell you, it ain't illegal if you don't get caught. He's banking on not getting caught. As long as he doesn't get caught, it's worth the risk to steal another car when you take his tricked-out, souped-up Acura away, so he can continue doing his dealing.

There's an awful lot of money to be made in the trafficking of drugs. I think it's about time we stopped and asked ourselves the question: why is that? Why is there so much money to be made in the trafficking of drugs? It's because there's demand, hon. members. There's demand for illicit drugs. If I had a dime, even a penny, for every dollar that the governments of the western world have spent fighting the war on drugs, I'd be a very, very, very unimaginably wealthy individual. Yet as the hon. Member for Red Deer-North herself alluded to, the war on drugs has been going on for 30-plus years now led by the White House, which is doing just about as well in that war as it is in Iraq. I think it's time to revisit the strategy, folks. I really do. I think it's time that we stopped trying to fight this war on the supply side and started getting really serious about the demand side, about what we're going to do to drug-proof our kids, to begin with.

Now, I don't have the time to debate that here today, but I would invite you all, before you just put up your hand and say, "Yes, motherhood, hot dog, apple pie, and tricked-out Acuras; let's pass Bill 207 because it's an easy thing to do to make us look like we're doing something about a problem when we're not doing a thing about it," to think about that. I would invite you to think about really getting serious about the war on drugs and attacking it from the side where the problem exists, and that's the demand side.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and join the debate in support of Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. I would also like to recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forth this initiative because I believe that this debate will go a long way in helping the fight against drug crime in our province.

The illegal drug trade is an ever-increasing problem in our society, and Alberta is no different. In our province alone there are thousands of cases each year involving the possession or the sale of narcotics. The sobering reality is that illegal drug activity in this province has the potential to affect all Albertans from schoolchildren to our senior citizens.

Whether it is happening on their neighbourhood street corner in broad daylight or whether it is concealed from the public after dark, drug activity affects us all. The people who choose this sort of lifestyle pose a legitimate threat to everyone, Mr. Speaker. Their actions involve personally consuming or distributing harmful chemicals and substances, usually with little concern for anyone else around them. Additionally, the means by which drugs are being sold and distributed is also worrisome. Any method of distribution that helps dealers to circulate their product, including motor vehicles and operating licences, should also be considered a threat to our public security.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, not all citizens within our province have or will directly experience the negative effects of illegal drug activity, but preventative actions taken now could guard against the possibility of that happening in the future. The very fact that some individuals choose to bring these harmful and dangerous substances into our communities, jeopardizing our comfort and security, creates the need for the government to do all that it can to protect the citizens of Alberta in any way possible. I feel that Bill 207 is simply another weapon. It's another tool that authorities could utilize in the fight against drug activity.

This proposed piece of legislation and its underlying concept is not a complex idea. Nor is it a new idea. Precedent has already been set in the form of the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, which is currently awaiting royal proclamation. Under this act authorities have the ability to seize a vehicle from an individual in the event that prostitution-related charges are laid. There are obviously other means which aim to discourage prostitution-related activity. However, the act awaiting proclamation is yet another method to fight this sort of crime in our province. Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 could have a similar effect on drug-related crime in Alberta by removing from our roads vehicles and drivers that are unsafe due to drug-related activity.

There may be debate regarding the possibility that Bill 207 could infringe on the constitutional rights of the individuals who have been apprehended by police. Nevertheless, I believe that it is important to first protect the rights of innocent Albertans who could experience the negative effects of this type of criminal activity. This bill could be added to the growing collection of deterrents that intend to help rid our communities of hazardous drugs and the people who control them.

A vehicle seizure could really hit home for these individuals, proving it to be quite difficult for them to continue functioning the way they once did. A dial-a-doper operation provides a good example in this case. This venture is very similar to a common food delivery service. Typically a client will contact the restaurant to place an order to be delivered directly to their home, where the client will pay for the food, usually with an extra delivery service charge. The dial-a-doper business works in a similar fashion although here drugs are the product of choice. Users need only to make a simple phone call to have hard drugs delivered right to their front door. The ability for a distributor to use a vehicle to transport the drugs directly to the buyer's home allows for the entire activity to be conducted discreetly, making it very difficult to detect.

Mr. Speaker, this type of activity is becoming more prevalent in our province because it offers drug dealers the opportunity to go about their business with relative freedom and continue to endanger the safety and well-being of others on the road in the process. By using their vehicles as means to deliver these dangerous goods, the vehicles themselves become threatening to our communities. We should be doing something to remove them from our roads. Bill 207 will help to do that.

Our government should constantly be looking for new and innovative ways to serve the citizens of Alberta. Our legal system should be a reliable structure, an intricate collection of laws that complement each other and come together to provide Albertans with an extremely effective and efficient system of governance. It is a foundation that must be continuously built upon to ensure that our laws are always becoming better and stronger.

In the case of illegal drug activity, Mr. Speaker, we should arm ourselves with as many tools as possible to get traffickers and their vehicles off the streets. I feel that it is important to build a strong, united front when taking a stand against the drug trade. We should let it be known that drug trafficking will be handled without leniency in our province, and Bill 207 is another step in that direction.

This piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, will give peace officers another instrument to combat the drug trade while maintaining the efficiency of the system as the foreseeable costs of the process will not be the responsibility of the government. An individual who has been charged with a drug-related offence will be held fiscally accountable in that they would have to pay for towing charges, storage, and any related insurance costs and any fees relating to returning the vehicle to the owner when appropriate. Giving authorities the power to seize their vehicles provides an opportunity to cripple the ability for individuals to complete their drug transactions.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would give the province the authority to deliver an even more serious blow to the drug trade by disqualifying individuals who have been convicted of a drug-related crime from holding a driver's licence for up to one year. Not only would this provision get offenders off the road; it would serve to keep them off the road for a sustained period of time. Denying access to vehicles while potentially eliminating the ability to drive any other vehicle gives the authorities a very powerful method to aid in the fight against drug crime in our province. It is important that we use any means necessary to take a stand against the illegal drug trade in Alberta, and Bill 207 would significantly limit the ability of individuals involved in drug activity to conduct their business.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this proposed legislation as I feel that it will help to develop even stronger laws that intend to send the message that drug activity will not be tolerated here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important issue, and I'm glad to be given the opportunity to stand today to join the debate on Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006. This is an interesting and important bill and one that I'm hoping all Members of the Legislative Assembly will consider and support.

Anything that distracts you from driving potentially poses a danger when an individual is operating a motor vehicle. People who are using their vehicles for the purposes of facilitating the trafficking of illegal substances are no doubt distracted by a variety of factors. Such individuals could potentially be distracted by talking on their cellphones to conduct their dealings, possibly trying to find a location. They could even be working directly with their product; bagging pills, for example. In the worst-case scenario they might even be sampling their product while they're driving. My point is that these individuals will be distracted while driving and not giving the needed attention and care they should be giving to their driving, endangering the public and themselves.

Individuals who traffic and possess illegal drugs obviously have little respect for our laws, Mr. Speaker. Thus, it is feasible that this would include our traffic laws. These laws, namely the Traffic Safety Act, ensure the safety of Albertans. Bill 207 provides our province with the ability to make certain that these traffic safety issues are not taken lightly and that Albertans remain safe while travelling our province's roads and highways.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 provides a system for addressing this problem. Firstly, if an individual is charged with trafficking drugs or possessing drugs with the intention of trafficking them while operating a motor vehicle, a law enforcement agent will be able to seize their vehicle under the Traffic Safety Act. If people are using vehicles in such a way, why should we not find a way to prevent this from occurring in the future? By seizing their vehicle, we will be seriously restricting their ability to traffic drugs in the future. Drugs are a serious issue in this province and across the entire country. With the increase we have seen in methamphetamine production in every passing year, we need to do everything in our power to protect Albertans against the scourge of drugs in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing a great deal as a province to fight drugs, such as investing $14 million in increasing addiction services for youth through AADAC. This is a great way to help Alberta's youth battle drugs and to discourage Albertans from using drugs in the first place. We need to do everything we can to ensure that the spread of drugs within our province is discouraged. We must – we must – frustrate and disrupt the business of drug distribution. Let's be clear: this is a big business.

Another positive aspect of Bill 207 is that if the individual is charged and the vehicle is seized, then it is the responsibility of the registered owner of the vehicle to pay for the towing and storage. Thus, individual municipalities will not be responsible for the costs associated with storage of these vehicles. This is a very important distinction, Mr. Speaker. Those who are charged should foot the bill and not the taxpayers. We want to make it much more expensive to conduct this nasty business.

Of course, Bill 207 makes provisions for the registered owner. Were they not involved in the trafficking of drugs or the possession of drugs for the purpose of trafficking, these individuals would have the option of appealing the seizure of their vehicles with the Alberta Transportation Safety Board.

After granting the ability to seize vehicles, the second major aspect of this bill is the ability to disqualify individuals who are charged with drug trafficking or possession of drugs with the intent of trafficking from holding a driver's licence for one year after the date they are convicted. Mr. Speaker, this aspect of the bill will do a great deal to ensure that those individuals who choose to traffic drugs within our province do not pose a threat on our roads. While taking away their vehicle may slow some drug dealers down, taking away their licence for a year will make certain that if they're able to get their hands on another vehicle, they will not have the legal right to operate it. This also ensures that those individuals who borrow someone else's car or who use a rental car to traffic drugs will have a good deal of difficulty continuing with such practices.

Mr. Speaker, driving is a privilege; it is not a right. This is definitely true, and in circumstances such as this, I do not feel that it is something that can be expressed enough. Rights are things that cannot be taken away. However, privileges must be exercised with great responsibility. People who are caught trafficking drugs within our province certainly should lose the privilege to operate a motor vehicle. It is a responsibility that should not be taken lightly, and it is hard to imagine that individuals who are out polluting the minds and bodies of Alberta's youth with drugs or endangering them on our roads should hold such rights. Individuals need to learn that abusing the privilege to operate a motor vehicle has a very real negative consequence.

We have done this already, Mr. Speaker, with the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, which gives the power to seize vehicles when prostitution charges are laid. As a Legislature we passed this bill on November 24, 2003, and by all accounts it is set to be proclaimed in the very near future. If we can seize vehicles in prostitution-related offences, we should have the same power when vehicles are being used for the purpose of trafficking drugs. Both are abuses of the privilege to drive and therefore should result in serious consequences for using a motor vehicle in making illegal activities possible.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will serve not only to address some of the traffic safety issues that can potentially arise from using a motor vehicle for the purposes of trafficking drugs, but it will also be another tool for our law enforcement agents in their work to prevent crime from taking place and in protecting Albertans generally.

Mr. Speaker, drug trafficking is a major part of criminal activity in our province, and the numbers speak volumes. For example, in 2003-04 there were 2,201 cases of drug trafficking in our courts, 881 of which resulted in guilty verdicts. Of these, only 365 resulted in jail time, 412 resulted in conditional sentences, 117 resulted in probation, 92 received a fine, three received restitution, 21 received absolute or conditional discharges, and 678 are cases for which there are no statistics or information on the outcome of the case. This data is already approximately two years old, and it is quite likely that there are many more individuals involved in the drug trade in our province than there were two years ago.

Bill 207 would help ensure that officers had some flexibility in seizing the vehicles of those charged with trafficking drugs. This would be another beneficial tool for law enforcement agents in the fight against drugs and crime in Alberta. We have the opportunity today, Mr. Speaker, to act proactively in the efforts to rid our province of drugs and the negative consequences that result from the drug trade. We have the opportunity to ensure that our roads and highways are safe. With this bill we can give our law enforcers another resource to protect our streets and the citizens of this province. We have the capacity to take away the privilege to drive from those who choose to abuse it by using their vehicles as an instrument in the trafficking of drugs. Essentially, Bill 207 gives us the ability to strengthen traffic safety within this great province.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this piece of legislation forward. This is a practical bill, and I hope all members of this Legislature will join me in supporting it today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to speak on Bill 207. First, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for the thought and hard work she put into this legislation. It is important to find new ways to address the fact of illicit drugs in our province. Drug use and distribution is a growing problem in our province, and it is important that we take the necessary steps to reduce and eliminate the harm they cause to individuals, families, and communities.

To begin, Mr. Speaker, I must say that fighting the war on illicit drugs has to be multifaceted. It's obvious and common sense that like many other activities, it's demand and supply. We should do all we can to fight on these two sides. Indeed, the bottom line on drug dealing is money, so we need to fight it on the financial side, tracking the financial transactions from drug money and personal wealth generated from it. We need to fight it by tracking the substances and equipment used to make the drugs too.

Mr. Speaker, I can continue to be politically rhetorical on the ways to fight the war on drugs. I can keep debating on the ways of fighting this and other social ills, but as a responsible legislator like many of you here I want to speak on a concrete step taken to fight this nasty social war. The primary purpose of Bill 207 is to improve the safety of Alberta's roads by removing from our roads vehicles and drivers involved in the drug trade that endanger the safety of other motorists. This would be accomplished in two measures: number one, giving peace officers the authority to seize the vehicle of a driver charged with drug trafficking or possession with the intent of trafficking while operating a motor vehicle, and number two, giving the province the authority to disqualify individuals convicted of the offences previously mentioned from holding a driver's licence for one year.

While there are several examples of vehicle seizure and licence disqualification laws similar to those proposed by Bill 207 both in our province and in other jurisdictions, I would like to focus the majority of my remarks this afternoon on these measures. In Alberta peace officers and the registrar of Alberta currently have the ability to suspend the driving privilege of individuals for a variety of reasons. The rationales for the licence suspensions range from impaired driving offences to accumulation of too many demerit points to one's licence to certain convictions under the federal Criminal Code and National Defence Act. Criminal Code convictions resulting in the disqualification of one's operator's licence include impaired driving, dangerous driving, and hit-and-run offences. Additionally, individuals may also be disqualified from holding an operator's licence for failure to meet maintenance enforcement obligations.

Now, this list is certainly not exhaustive but shows that our province already has similar legislation on the books regarding driver disqualification to deal with issues relating to safety and Criminal Code convictions. A peace officer in Alberta also has the authority to seize a vehicle under certain circumstances, and the Traffic Safety Act also provides for seizure of vehicles in prostitution-related offences.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we also look at other jurisdictions. For example, in Nova Scotia they include a provision in its Motor Vehicle Act to allow the seizure of a motor vehicle for contravening the section of the province's Motor Vehicle Act or of the federal Criminal Code relating to motor vehicle suspension. Manitoba and Saskatchewan also have similar legislation in place. In addition, Nova Scotia recently passed legislation that amended the Motor Vehicle Act to enlarge the list of offences for which an individual's driver's licence can be revoked if convicted. Bill 250 from the Minister of Justice is an interesting part of the legislation. When it was first introduced in second reading, it became, as Bill 250, An Act to Further Discourage the Theft of Gasoline and Diesel Oil. The bill was designed to punish individuals convicted of theft of gasoline and diesel. Essentially, if someone was convicted of the crime of gassing and dashing, he could have his or her licence revoked for six months for the first offence and two years in the event of subsequent offences.

California is another jurisdiction that offers a good case for study of legislation similar to Bill 207. In 1998 the state of California passed legislation that provided a revocation of driving privileges for persons convicted in specified drug offences. Mr. Speaker, the legislation authorized the Department of Motor Vehicles to suspend immediately and delay the issuance of a driver's licence to any individual convicted of possessing, selling, or manufacturing illicit drugs. Driving privileges are suspended or revoked for six months on the receipt by the DMV of a court abstract noting conviction.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would provide one more tool for our enforcement officials to protect and enhance the safety of Albertans and solidification of legislation based on sound public policy. Drug dealers who use their vehicles in the commission of these crimes pose a danger to other motorists and pedestrians. These traffic safety concerns are often overlooked when discussing the larger drug problems in our province.

I want to suggest and encourage our Legislative Assembly to support this bill and urge all members to see it through second reading. With this, I want to thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly on this bill. I appreciate what the hon. members have said about how every little bit against the drug trade helps. Quite frankly, from my point of view, if we are serious about this, if we find a vehicle with crystal meth or crack cocaine in it – I don't care if it's in minuscule amounts – seize the car, put it in a pound, and when we're done going to court with these kids, then we'll talk about getting it back.

The hon. member talked about how we could have had a province-wide smoking ban. Well, then, let's support a province-wide ban on crack and crystal meth in any amount. Not just pushers. Who are the pushers pushing it to? Our kids. If kids realize that when they're out with a friend who uses this crystal meth or crack cocaine and they pick him up in mummy's or daddy's Excursion and they get caught, they're going to have a hard time explaining to them why they don't get the vehicle back for six or seven months or as long as this character can have a lawyer to keep it out of court. If we're serious about it, let's forget all of this crap about human rights and personal rights and freedoms. You know, let's start to put real pressure on dope dealers.

It's astounding, Mr. Speaker, that we have people say that there's a dial-a-doper thing that works, that people can actually phone and get drugs delivered to their home. The RCMP can't figure that out? I mean, where do they get the numbers? Bathroom walls; from their other friends. You would think they would phone and have the drugs delivered and put the guy in jail. But nearly a decade – and I shouldn't use the term, but I just can't help myself – of liberal judges telling us that we have to be more worried about the rights of the criminal than protecting our kids have made a system that puts provincial bodies like this in a difficult spot. We don't make criminal law, and the RCMP have their hands tied in many ways. What they'd like to do is probably get most of these pushers off the continent, put them on the planet that we were going to visit before.

If you're asking Albertans or Canadians, "Do you think we're going to be tough on people by seizing the vehicle of a pusher?" they would say: take them all. If you're around crack, around crystal meth, take the car, take the truck, put somebody in jail, do some real time. Treat the seriousness of this epidemic with some real penalties, and you might start to make – people don't go from goody two-shoes to hard-core drugs overnight. They start with a little bit. They ride around with their friend. They have a little dope. The friend might do some crystal meth. They might do some crack. It's not worth the police time to bring them in, give them two weeks of phys ed. Can't even give them a spanking. I would say: take the car; let's talk about it down the road.

Mr. Speaker, these laws don't satisfy some of us, but they're the best that we can do in this Chamber.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, making our roads safer and interrupt ing the flow of drugs on our streets is a good thing. One of the members spoke about having a new or a different tool to help deal with interrupting the flow and keeping the roads safer by giving police officers an effective tool to use. I find it disturbing that the member opposite thinks that the attempt to help keep our communities free of cruising cars selling drugs is amusing. Drugs, organized crime, addictions, and death are not amusing. Quite the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, it is a defeatist who says: "Oh, they'll just get another car. They'll just lease another car, or they'll drive while suspended anyways." Does this mean that it's better to do nothing? This bill will not be a panacea, a great cure for a big problem. What it will do is interrupt the flow of drug trafficking on our streets for a moment, maybe for an hour, maybe for a day. I would suggest that the more we interrupt the flow of drugs on our streets and the more we try to tackle the safe driving issues, the more we make dealers and traffickers understand that we won't roll over while they take over our streets.

Mr. Speaker, I now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a very interesting debate this afternoon. Given that good progress and the fact of the hour I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 24, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/04/24

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

School Nutrition Programs

507. Dr. Taft moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to support improved health, educational, and social outcomes for children by providing increased, dedicated funding for school nutrition programs for at-risk children in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a motion that we've been considering in our caucus for many, many months. Indeed, as the Leader of the Opposition I first began speaking about my concerns with school hunger almost a year ago in a number of speeches. I was struck at the time at how audiences responded. When I raised that point, there would be spontaneous applause from audiences whether they were audiences of families and parents or of teachers or of wealthy professionals and business leaders. Everybody across Alberta understands that in a province with this kind of wealth it is completely – completely – unacceptable that there are children going to school hungry. To add insult to that injury, we have a government that refuses to take any direct action to address this problem.

So we have been working on this issue and this motion for many, many months. We think that it is an obvious step forward for a government to take. The motion urges the government to consider action to address school hunger. It is a manageable problem. It's an identifiable, measurable response. It's affordable. Indeed, what's not affordable is inaction.

The trends in Alberta are troubling on these kinds of issues, Mr. Speaker. We have a trend, clearly, of increasing personal wealth for many of us, a tremendous amount of money in government coffers, a government that, in fact, has so much money that it's starting to just mail it out to people willy-nilly. It has no coherent policy for what to do with that wealth and seems to have precious little interest in the long-term building that could be undertaken with that wealth. When I say building, I don't mean particularly roads or schools or hospitals. I mean people, and especially I mean children.

We have a trend in Alberta where the wealth is getting concentrated in fewer and fewer hands, and poverty is getting concentrated in more and more hands. In fact, various studies now indicate, for example, that Calgary not only has the highest percentage of high-income residents of any major city in Canada but has the highest percentage of low-income residents as well. I think that's shocking. Those low-income residents count among them tens and tens of thousands of children. These children, ages three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10, go hungry in this province. Many of them go to school hungry in this province, and they have to depend on charity to be fed. They have to depend on groups like the Edmonton Real Estate Board to do fundraisers so that there can be lunch programs. They have to depend on companies like EPCOR to do Christmas programs to raise money so that there can be food for hungry children in Alberta schools.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this government need to open their hearts to these children. They need to understand that this is a real problem. Too often – and I can see it and hear it in the government members here this evening – they shrug this issue off as if childhood hunger is something found only in Third World countries. It's found here in Edmonton. It's found in Red Deer. It's found in Medicine Hat. Mr. Speaker, it's found in your own constituency, where there's a food bank, a food bank in your constituency. We have a government that has sat on its hands while 75 or more food banks have arisen in Alberta. School nutrition programs are a way to get at the root of this problem.

This is not an issue of intruding into the responsibilities of families. It is not the child's fault that they're born into a family that for whatever reason doesn't feed them. It's not the fault of a child going to kindergarten hungry that his mom is working at a minimum wage job and can't afford food at the end of the month. It's not the fault of a child going into grade 2 hungry every day that her parents divorced and that she's living with a dad who is on shift work and doesn't get up in the morning to make a lunch. I don't care whose fault it is. What we care about, Mr. Speaker, is that there are hungry kids who need to be fed, and this government has the means and the resources to do it, to feed those kids, and it will not do so. It is a complete moral failure of this government.

The benefits of addressing this problem are immense. Setting the moral issues aside, we know that well-fed children are going to learn better. We know that children going to school hungry are not going to learn well. We know that children going to school hungry and sitting in a classroom and falling behind are at higher risk of failing the achievement tests, for example, that this government supports. They are at higher risk of dropping out. They're at higher risk of health problems. They're at higher risk of justice issues and law problems. They're at higher risk of all kinds of problems which spill over back onto society. We could address so much of this now. We could cut these problems off at an early stage by supporting school nutrition programs.

Mr. Speaker, I know that a number of my colleagues want to speak to the issue. I know that they have matters they want to raise. We've looked into the costs of this program. We've looked into the extent of the problem. We believe that there are tens of thousands of children going to school hungry in Alberta every day, and we believe that for substantially less than the subsidy this government gives to racehorses, we could feed all those hungry children in Alberta. The sad truth is that this government seems to give a higher priority to thoroughbred horses than it does to hungry children. I think that's appalling, and I think that every one of the government members here should be embarrassed. Frankly, I think that they probably are.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will listen carefully to the debate. I will see if any of the government members rise to engage in this debate. I will listen carefully to what they say. What I will listen to most carefully is the silence if there is a silence from the government on this issue, because we will not rest until this problem is addressed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to just speak briefly. I think that while the hon. member was giving his speech, I found myself growing angry at his comments rather than the issue that he had raised, an issue that I think deserves to be raised and discussed appropriately in this House. The things that he said, that we don't care or that we're not interested or that we have all of this wealth and don't use it appropriately – I think that I would like to just remind everybody of a couple of things.

Children's Services is a program designed to help children in this province. This year's budget is $916,770,000. K to 12 schooling is over $5.3 billion this year alone. Those are just two areas where we are trying, I think, as a province, as a society to deal with those very fragile and important elements of our society called children.

I raised two children. I'm one of those divorced, single mothers that the member talks about in a way that insults me. I cared very much about . . .

Dr. Taft: I was raised by a divorced mother.

Ms Haley: You had your say, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Ms Haley: I'm one of those single moms that got up every morning and made lunch for my children and tried to make breakfast for them and worked very hard to try and ensure that they had food, clothing, and shelter. So I don't appreciate that whole idea that children who are in trouble or in despair are automatically in a single-parent family. It's simply not true.

To bring in the horse-racing industry as another example of government largesse to our favourite people—a lot of the people that work at the track and have jobs because that program exists are the very people that he's talking about. They're lower income jobs. He's not talking about a handful of people that might win a purse at a horse race. We're talking about the people who groom those horses, clean the barns, prepare the track, run the kiosks in the service areas. These are not $60,000-a-year jobs, Mr. Speaker; they're the lower income jobs. We've been trying to make sure that that industry could even survive. That money that comes into the lottery fund would not come into the lottery fund to be disbursed to other parts of our community if it wasn't for the slot machines at the race tracks. So like it or not, it serves the purpose of supporting that industry, but it also supports a great many families, most of them here in Edmonton. You might want to think about that one.

So while I agree that I don't want any child going to school hungry in this province ever, I know that in my constituency, where I have a great many students, I think close to 18,000 or 19,000 students, we have one school in a socioeconomic area of my city that is a lower income area, and the school division made a decision, in fact, to bring in a hot lunch program for that school, and I commend them for that. They had some extra money. They do some fundraising, and they've made it possible for the children in that school to be able to count on that. At the other schools in my constituency it was not felt that the need was there.

So if this is a matter of trying to help specific schools in specific areas where there's a lower income or an issue along that line, then I'm in favour of it. If it's about putting a hot lunch program into every school in the province, then I am not in favour of it because it isn't necessary. The vast, vast, vast majority of parents care very much about whether their children have food every day. We get up, and we go to work, and we make sure that that happens.

So, hon. member, a little less rhetoric and a little more detail would have been appreciated, perhaps an estimate of what you actually think this really needs to cost, and a lot less insulting language to those of us who have done our jobs as parents.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight and indicate that I am going to be supporting Motion 507, put forward by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. I've had, I guess, the experience, first, as a city councillor and later an MLA for a low-income constituency and a low-income ward of dealing with a number of schools in which hot lunch programs are provided. I've attended schools and helped serve the lunches. I've attended fundraising events for school lunch programs and got to know many of the fine people who deliver these programs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, wherever hot lunch programs are in place, school attendance improves, learning and educational results improve. You know, there is often the case where some children—and I'm not attempting, in saying this, to suggest that anybody here is in this category. I don't wish to be either patronizing or insulting to other hon. members, but it is sometimes the case in inner-city schools and I'm sure in some other schools as well where it's the children themselves that get themselves to school. They are sometimes the most responsible member of their family. They may come in at 10 o'clock in the morning, and they haven't eaten, but they are making a heroic effort to get themselves to school. Sometimes they have to sleep because they haven't had enough sleep, and sometimes they haven't had enough food.

It's very clear that in both the United States and in Canada the results of these programs have been carefully studied and monitored, and there is a tremendous response as a result of hot lunch programs in the schools. Sometimes the nutritional components of these programs are not always the best, but they are certainly, I can assure hon. members, superior to the type of nutrition that these children in these situations might expect otherwise.

So the question is: when, then, should they be provided and where? I was once of the same view as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, that they should be very targeted, and only certain schools, certain children really needed them, but that doesn't take into account the dynamics of schools and children. To identify children in a school as needing the hot lunch program and others as not needing it places a stigma on those children which makes it very, very difficult for them and which really sets up a system in the school of haves and have-nots.

I think that people that have worked in this area for some time have come to the conclusion that in schools where there is a significant level of need, the program should be provided and should be made available to any child who wishes to take advantage of it. That doesn't mean that they would necessarily be in every school, but where they were in schools, each child would have an equal opportunity to participate in the school.

There are plenty of opportunities for parents who have more resources—educational, social resources, financial resources—to participate in the putting on of these programs and to assist in their delivery both financially and through volunteering. There is lots to be done by parents who do have resources to contribute to those children who do not.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is a good program. I think that it is up to the government to talk to the people in the field, both to academic experts and people in the front lines who organize these school programs, who raise money for them and who administer them, and to the parents. It's up to the government to come up with proposals to extend hot lunch programs. It's not up to members of the opposition, with their limited resources, to do it. It's up to the people who are responsible for the governing of this province, the people who are responsible for the education system to do that.

Now, I'd like to go back a little bit in time. Mr. Speaker, as we know, the opposition ranks have been swelled of late by the addition of an additional member, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who sits now behind us. At one time that hon. member was the minister of learning in this province. Sometime after 1998 he was interviewed by the ATA News. The ATA News said:

Delegates to the Alberta Growth Summit in April 1998 recommended that, “[in] cooperation with communities, hot lunch programs should be implemented immediately in schools where there are hungry children. Lunch programs should exist in all schools by 2005.”

Now, that’s from the government’s own growth summit in April of 1998.

The ATA News asked the then minister, “How do you see that recommendation being implemented?” The former minister said:

Well, to be honest, this is a recommendation that I have not had time to look at completely. At the moment, we give school boards the prerogative to provide a hot lunch program, and I believe we’ll continue with that. I think schools have put hot lunch programs in certainly the most critical areas. I believe, obviously, that kids have to have food in order to learn. But this is something that we will be looking at, and at this time, I just can’t say how it will be implemented or when it will be implemented.

That was some time ago, Mr. Speaker. How long has it been since that member was the Minister of Education? At least before the last election.

An Hon. Member: Eight years.

Mr. Mason: Yes. So it goes back eight years or so, and still the government has done nothing. They’ve had time. They certainly have money. What they don’t have are the right priorities.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition talked about horse racing, and the $63 million that we spend on the horse-racing industry has been characterized by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere as helping poor, low-income people who work in the stables and work at the track. Mr. Speaker, I know some of those people. Some of those people live in my constituency, and I can tell you that very, very little of this amount of money trickles down to them. If we took the $63 million and divided it among all the people who groom horses and feed them and look after them, they would all be certainly wealthier than most people. If you divided it up equally, they’d probably get as much as a cabinet minister or more. So to suggest that the subsidy for the thoroughbred industry is in some way a low-income subsidy is to misstate the situation rather dramatically. It is, in fact, a misplaced priority of the government, subsidizing an industry that should be able to stand on its own.

The government long ago established the principle that it would not be in the business of being in business and that business should stand or fall based on its competitiveness and its ability to be in business. But they made an exception, and $63 million a year for horses and horse racing is really a subsidy of the people who raise the horses – in other words, wealthy, landed people, Mr. Speaker – and it has no basis in this Assembly.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will urge members to support the motion, and I’ll take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise this evening and join the debate on Motion 507, school lunch program funding. Albertans are enjoying the most prosperous period in our province’s history. Energy prices are at a record high, the provincial debt is gone, and our labour climate is attracting people from around the globe. As we enter our second century, we are doing so with every possible financial advantage. This prosperity cannot be considered universal, though, unless every Albertan has the opportunity to benefit from it. It is an unfortunate fact, but it is a fact nonetheless that despite the favourable economic climate in Alberta, there are some people that are not benefiting. They haven’t been left behind. They simply haven’t had the opportunity to catch up yet.

Mr. Speaker, it’s often easy to pass judgment on those who aren’t doing well, but I have seen it happen time and time again in my own constituency, with the operative word being “time.” A great deal of my constituents are recent immigrants to Alberta. Often they come from other nations or other cultures. I know from personal experience just how hard it can be to immerse yourself in the job market of a foreign country. It doesn’t happen overnight. This adjustment period takes time, and this time can be difficult for most families. I’m always amazed by the dedication and perseverance of new Albertans that live in my constituency. They often work 16 hours a day, seven days a week in an attempt to make a better life for themselves and their families. Sometimes, however, ends don’t always meet, and all too often a family’s children suffer as a result.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the value of good education. I think we also know that to take advantage of Alberta’s top-notch education system, children need to have their basic nutritional needs met. A mind can’t be filled when it’s attached to an empty stomach, but regrettably some children still go to school hungry and come home hungry afterward. Motion 507 is proposing that a school lunch program be funded for at-risk children, an idea that I think has the potential to build on the already strong commitment to the well-being of Alberta’s children and families shown by our government. It is an idea that gives us the opportunity to do better.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that we have in place several excellent programs for assisting those who are economically or socially disadvantaged. These programs work, but there are still children falling through the cracks. There are still children who go to school hungry. This is not because they have bad or abusive parents. If this is, in fact, the case, then we have several laws in place to put a stop to this behaviour. Perhaps the family’s breadwinner is sick and unable to work. Perhaps an emergency has come up to deplete the family’s savings. Whatever the reasons are, good, hard-working people can sometimes find themselves financially unable to cope with the day-to-day needs of their families.

I think that providing children with a good and nutritious lunch at school would go a long way toward alleviating the concerns of a child’s family. It would be one less thing for parents to worry about as they regain their financial footing, and it would represent a hand up instead of a handout. The benefits would be so obvious. Children would concentrate on their studies instead of their stomachs, and the financial and emotional burden on parents would be eased without any of the stigma that is, regrettably, so often attached to traditional social assistance.

Mr. Speaker, in a province with the wealth of Alberta I think we must make every effort to ensure that every Albertan is given the opportunity to prosper. We can’t forget that as we move forward, there are those who are falling behind through no fault of their own. They work hard, they try their best, but sometimes they and their families need a little help, and we should provide it. I think that funding for a school lunch program as proposed by Motion 507 will ultimately be a good investment. The children of Alberta, regardless of the social or economic standings of their parents, deserve every possible advantage that we can offer them. A school lunch program is a good way of doing so. It will help Alberta’s at-risk children take full advantage of their potential, and a better and brighter future will be the result.

Mr. Speaker, this is a goal that I believe should and does transcend party lines or ideological differences, and as such, I am pleased to support Motion 507.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very encouraged to hear those fine remarks from the Member for Calgary-East, I believe it is, very encouraging. It shows he's done his homework.

I have in my career, Mr. Speaker, been a teacher, guidance counsellor, superintendent of schools, janitor, associate superintendent of schools, school trustee, and I can tell you that there are a lot of children that go to school hungry. One of the things we talk about in Alberta is giving everyone an equal opportunity. I think it's important that we do this, and I can't think of a more suitable way of doing this than providing kids with the proper nutritional programs in our schools.

I think that it's significant, though, that we have a program that is based on some sound principles, that the program that we would implement has some nutritious and safe food values, is accessible and nonstigmatizing, is community based, is culturally appropriate, has parent and family involvement, has a nurturing and caring environment, and has a potential to teach, not only in the sense of meeting the children's needs from a dietary point of view but also of being carried back into the home and the parent and family values of what to eat and not to eat. The aspect that we're looking at is a shared funding proposal, and it's also an education for the public.

The question of costs was talked about by a member across the way, and one of the ways we could start this is to probably look at $10 million. If we looked at $10 million for our program to start, we would look at 91,000 children each day getting snacks; 59,000 children each day would be getting breakfast, and 25,000 children each day would be getting lunch.

It was interesting in our visit to Fort McMurray, Mr. Speaker. We visited the Clark school. A really interesting program there in their elementary – I believe it was grade 1 to grade 8 or 9. The food for that program was supplied by a large oil company in Fort McMurray. The students at Keyano College would come in at noon and serve the program to the kids, and there was some learning going on. I think that's a tribute to the volunteer component and the community and the oil companies working together.

One other aspect. In my constituency, St. Albert, at Sir Alexander MacKenzie I had the opportunity to see the children with special needs preparing the breakfast program every morning at 8 o'clock. These children prepare the program for the students that take advantage of the breakfast program there. So there are lots of good things going on now.

Now, if we wanted to look at pie in the sky and if we looked at doing this across the province, $40 million would give snacks to 364,000 children and breakfast to 236,000 children and lunch to 100,000 children. That's what it would cost, Mr. Speaker, to initiate this program across the province and make Alberta significant in looking after the dietary needs or the nutritional needs of our children.

I had the opportunity today to look at the research by the Canadian Research Institute for Social Policy. It talks about healthy schools, nutrition, and physical activity. Now, I'm pleased to say that this government started a program I think a year ago of a half hour of daily activity in physical education. I think it's going over well, but we have to look at that as one part of the cycle. It seems to me that it's important we look at the other aspect of nutrition.

There's a study done by Taras and Potts-Datema, 2005: 19

published studies "link participation in school breakfast programs with increased achievement as measured by standardized test scores and grades." Now, maybe we can get rid of the standardized tests.

Participation in school food programs has also . . . shown to have a positive effect on psychosocial outcomes, leading to lower levels of anxiety, hyperactivity and depression. Other factors, including absenteeism, tardiness, class participation, and suspension rates are affected positively by having a nutritional program along with a good physical education program.

Research also shows that student achievement can be maintained if schools provide more opportunities for physical education, even if class time for academic subjects is cut back. Physical activity can help increase students' ability to concentrate and reduce disruptive behaviour, which can have a positive impact on academic achievement.

So what we're saying here, Mr. Speaker, is that if we combined both the physical activity and the nutritional programs, I think we would be doing a lot for our students. I think we'd also be tackling the whole question of obesity that we have across Canada, not only in our students but with some of our politicians. We'd be doing some real headway there because by example we teach. I think we have to do a lot of work on that in terms of setting good examples for many of our constituents. So this program, again going back to cost, would cost $2 per student per day. I think that's also very significant.

Let me then look at a few other things here that I think are significant. If I can just quickly turn to your area of the province, Mr. Speaker, if I'm not mistaken, this Westglen principal – am I allowed to say the principal's name in the House? I think his name is Phil Corning. "Westglen School is a Grade 5 to Grade 8 Middle School in Didsbury, consisting of 330 students from all walks of life. There is a heavy emphasis on reading and writing in this school, as I understand it, and "all students ages 10 to 14 are usually hungry all of the time," it says here. At this particular school, which you're probably much more aware of than I am, Breakfast for Learning provided the school with the opportunity to test and prove this theory. In 2004, Westglen School successfully implemented their "Food for Thought" breakfast program using the funds from BFL along with community donations and hundreds of hours of volunteer work.

Now, what was interesting:

Staff invited a number of "Interesting" Grade 8 boys, who tended to frequent the office for a variety of reasons, to help with the breakfast program. The boys took a lot of ownership in the program, and soon took over the distribution of food, being ever watchful over the especially needy students. The boys instinctively knew who to watch out for and took care of them with kindness, courtesy, a good sense of humour, and always with a sincere concern for every child's well-being.

This service learning has become an integral part of this school, sir.

The most compelling argument in favour of the "Food for Thought" BFL program is its connection to student results. Westglen has a large population of special needs students who have difficulties with reading. A study of the Provincial Achievement Test results showed an overall improvement in all test areas. Mr. Corning [the principal] believes that these results came from both the strong emphasis on teacher training in Writing and the [special] nutrition program. The staff noticed a more alert student population once the no "junk food", no soda pop, and healthier snack choices were initiated. "The Breakfast for Learning funding has helped us anchor our nutritional program by beginning each day with something substantial".

So what I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the evidence seems to be leaning to not only better academic achievement in school and a better knowledge of what's proper to eat but also enabling them to get more out of school attendance-wise and so forth. I think it speaks for itself that we look at this program and hopefully support it by supporting this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all members who've participated so far in this debate because I don't sense that anyone here would be opposed to what the gist or what the thrust is behind this motion, minus some of the rhetoric that was provided by the mover. But that having been said, I know that his intentions are quite honourable, I'm sure.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we've heard this issue raised here in this House in question period and in various other debates. At some point I think we also have to talk about the other side of this equation. That other side of the equation is: who is ultimately going to be responsible for clothing and for sheltering and for feeding and for otherwise caring for and rearing our children? Obviously, nobody likes to see kids undernourished or live without shelter or without clothing or warmth or without the so-called basics of life – nobody wants to see that – but so too is it important to continue cultivating a culture where people take responsibility for some of life's needs, particularly when it comes to children.

In our government we have a number of outstanding programs in Children's Services or in the Department of Health and Wellness, for example, where we care for children, where we help them out, where we help families out. We have some of these programs, also, that we copartner with these ministries from the Department of Education's perspective. We have a number of other programs that are part of our social safety net in the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment.

I just want to give people at least some level of comfort to know that approximately 70 per cent or perhaps even more of our school boards already provide some form of partnership programming for breakfast programs or hot lunch programs or snack programs or whatever have you. Quite obviously, they use our government-provided monies in most cases to help support those programs, and that's not a bad thing whatsoever. The fact is, though, Mr. Speaker, that they do that as part of a nonmandatory address to local needs. We have other parts of the province where some school boards don't particularly have that need, so they may not choose to provide it. But they do this in partnership with community-based agencies and volunteer organizations who, according to the letters and phone calls that I've had at least, are quite proud and quite pleased and honoured in some cases to provide that kind of partnership program. So there's nothing wrong with what the hon. member is presenting here in this motion other than he is suggesting that it be made mandatory. Dedicated funding I believe is the wording he's using.

Now, I want to also emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that school boards asked for and want flexibility with monies that come from the Department of Education – in other words, from the government of Alberta – because Alberta Education, as you will hear tomorrow when we discuss estimates for the Department of Education, is essentially a flow-through arm of government. About 98 per cent of the $5.3 billion that we will provide to education this year will flow right out to school boards, and they will decide how to use it. That's pursuant to the renewed funding framework. So flexibility is what they want. They want to be able to address their local needs as they see fit, and we continue to allow them to do that. There are very few examples where we dictate how monies ought be spent or where we provide so-called labelled or targeted dollars.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, we need to be reminded again that we are privileged to live in this province and in this country. But in this province in particular, in terms of education, we provide the most money per capita of any province in Canada for education. We provide the most money per student of any province in Canada. In fact, we spend about $26.5 million each and every school day to help support the best education system in Canada and one of the best in the entire world.

To quote the hon. member's motion back, just a couple of quick comments here. "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to support improved health," et cetera. We're already doing that. We're already supporting improved health initiatives, many of them. Then he goes on to say "improved educational," et cetera. We're already doing that. This year's budget contains 330 million brand new additional dollars, Mr. Speaker.

Then the motion goes on to say "social outcomes," and we have higher social outcomes resulting from these investments and from other partnerships that we're already providing not only in education but for the whole nine yards of government.

Then he goes on to say "by providing increased," et cetera. We are providing increased dollars, Mr. Speaker: 330 million increased dollars. Now, nobody is bragging about that, and nobody is complaining about that. That's just the fact. We are providing the money that is necessary to continue providing the outstanding educational opportunities, but we do it with our partners, the school boards. They, in turn, want the flexibility of allocating those dollars as they see fit to meet the local needs because, after all, they are locally elected officials just like we are. They're doing their job, we're doing ours, and so are the other levels.

Now, the other part here is to do with "dedicated funding," and that's where we need to draw a bit of a distinction, a bit of a fine line, which I've already commented on earlier. I'll just move on quickly because time is ticking away here.

The motion ends by talking about "at-risk children." Mr. Speaker, we are providing a number of services already not only to help identify at-risk children earlier but also to provide earlier intervention and to provide additional programming dollars that would help with earlier detection and screening as well. We've just done that with the announcement of 22 brand new parent link centres as recommended by the Learning Commission. That takes us to 36 important parent link centres. I can tell you that if the opposition members would only do just a day's worth of homework, they would be absolutely amazed, not to mention impressed, with the results coming out of those particular parent link centres.

In special needs we're providing almost $400 million in this coming budget, assuming it gets passed tomorrow. We're providing additional dollars for ESL children, which some other members commented on. We're providing additional monies for First Nations, Métis, Inuit children. We're into hundreds of millions of dollars here, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot of money in the system, a lot of money, but it's the school boards who will target those monies at the local level after we've provided them.

So I am sympathetic to where the hon. member is coming from and, for that matter, to where even one of the NDP members is coming from. I could probably even support an amended version of such a motion if it weren't rather entirely politically motivated on the one hand and if it weren't worded in a mandatory fashion where school boards were being forced, were being mandated, were 100 per cent required to provide the kinds of programs being asked for here. [interjections] School boards are doing a pretty good job in that respect, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Education has the floor. Let's hear what he has to say.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. Thank you. I listened very quietly and very competently, I hope, to what they had to say, and it's too bad they don't afford the same respect in return sometimes.

Now, what I'd like to just wrap up with is just to reiterate that nobody is going to try and tell me, after having grown up in a small community of 200 people, how important it is for people to care for themselves and how important it is for children to not go hungry and what the linkages are between education and a full stomach and so on. I don't need that lecture, Mr. Speaker. I know very well what the implications and consequences are, but so, too, is it important to realize what the responsibilities are of other people.

Now, the final point is that we want to also comment on some of the other programs that are available here, for example our AISI programs, where we provide $71 million for some creative, innovative-type programming. I think it's important for the hon. members to overcome some of their own ignorance and realize that we have hundreds of millions of dollars available in the system and school boards want that flexibility.

It will be very difficult for me to support this motion, and I'm sorry I can't support it because of the way it's worded.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was afraid we might run out of time on that particular piece on 507. I will read, in fact, the motion, and it does say:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to support improved health, educational, and social outcomes for children by providing increased, dedicated funding for school nutrition programs for at-risk children in Alberta.

Now, that doesn't sound too politically motivated to me. That sounds like a real, honest to goodness thing that's trying to help all children in Alberta.

I do support this particular piece. It seems like it's a no-brainer here. If we can in fact dedicate $1.4 billion in resource revenues to every man, woman, and child in Alberta, then surely we can come up with .1 per cent of the overall operating budget within our province. Point one per cent is not very much money there, Mr. Speaker. Point one per cent would actually provide snacks to approximately 364,000 children each school day. Point one per cent of the budget would provide breakfast for 236,000 children each school day or lunch to 100,000 children each school day. I'm talking .1 per cent, a very small number when you think about the vast majority that we do have in our province.

We talk about the Alberta advantage. We'd like to ensure that everyone receives the Alberta advantage. No matter how bad or how big or how small that individual is, they should be able to receive that Alberta advantage. We talk about how Canada is, in fact, the country of opportunity. Well, let's centre it to the richest province in that opportunity, and that's Alberta. If everyone is not receiving that opportunity, then the Alberta advantage is not being fulfilled.

We talk about the fact that it maybe only costs $2 per day. Meals in Edmonton public, or at least in Edmonton, are provided by the hospital kitchens. They're delivered to the schools. Paid workers from the local community are used to deliver and to serve the students, and then the hospital provides and cleans up all the dishes and utensils.

As a school trustee previous to coming here to the Legislature, I do feel very honoured to be able to speak to some of the initiatives that the school board does in fact put forward with support from the communities. You have the city centre education program as well as the City Centre Church program, which do see the benefits of being able to help the students within the communities. It's not necessarily that they may be from single-parent families. They could be from two-parent families. The point is that they're going to school hungry. They have a choice? I don't think so. The choice is: they go to school.

I know that there are many, many teachers who do have their hearts in their jobs as well as bring extra meals not only for themselves but for the students that they know go hungry. I think that is very admirable. They don't have to do it. They probably have children of their own that they're providing for, but they're providing for other students whom they know don't come from a great background. That's unfortunate, but they're taking the initiative. As we always say, it's that proverb: it takes a whole village to raise a child. Well, the students are seeing the benefit from that from the school. The teachers live and breathe right there. They're trying to impact it directly.

At Edmonton public schools, like I said, we have many, many kids there. It may not just be from the lowest area; it may be from just a little bit outside that area. But there are students going to school hungry. It's not just in Edmonton. It's in rural areas, where you see an increase in food banks popping up over the last year. We've seen an increase and a need for food banks themselves to sit in the rural areas and in the city areas. So it's not like it's just suddenly appeared. It's becoming an epidemic that people are going hungry, and that's not fair when we talk about the richest province in Canada.

All other provinces except for Manitoba and Alberta provide targeted-support school nutrition programs. I think that's worth repeating. All other provinces except for Alberta and Manitoba provide, in some way, targeted funding for that. I think it's sad that we can't do that. We can give bursaries to other provinces. We can give money to very worthy causes. We have tsunami disaster relief, but we can't take care of our own. I think that's really sad.

We've heard from members opposite who do support it, members that would actually consider making an amendment to it. The point is that we need to ensure that our most vulnerable citizens, our children, are supported. It would be an honourable thing, and it doesn't have to be politically motivated. The Speaker says it in his prayers: let us all come together for the good of all when we do our deliberations, when we do our debates, such that all would be served. I think this particular motion would ensure that all would be served if we support this particular piece.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion 507, and I want to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for his motion. I think the goal is laudable. I have to say, though, that I believe that the methodology is flawed.

I don't believe that we need wholesale programs in our schools, Mr. Speaker, to feed children. I agree with the member that at-risk children should be supported. He suggests targeted support. I would suggest maybe a program that is run through our local health units that works with these at-risk children through the education of their parents on nutrition programs. Where necessary, I believe that assistance could be provided, targeted assistance to these families – and I would agree with the hon. member that no one wants to see children arrive at school hungry – to ensure that these children would not arrive at school hungry and that they would be fed and ready to learn.

Mr. Speaker, wholesale programs in the schools, I believe, can have an unintended impact probably counterproductive to that which the member is hoping would be garnered, where children who are poorly nourished would feel shy to be identified, to be singled out to participate in these programs. On the other hand, we could see these programs feeding larger numbers of children in an effort not to single out specific children. I would suggest that an unintended consequence of this is that we would have a number of parents – and I think one of the speakers earlier talked about the responsibility that we have to nurture and prepare our children for school – who would send their children to school hungry, unfortunately, because someone else will feed them. I don't think that's the type of society that we want to encourage.

Mr. Speaker, I laud the intent of the motion by the hon. member, but I cannot support his methodology. Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to make a couple of observations. When I held the portfolio as Minister of Children's Services, at-risk children were defined as those who needed the protection of the state because, in fact, they were at risk of some harm. One might assume, then, that those that would be at risk would be those that were from homes where there was poverty or family violence or some other type of social behaviour that would predispose a child to being at risk. In fact, one of the things I learned during my tenure in that capacity was that the poor have very little. The poor have their children and families. They love them a great deal, and they are very often the ones that pay most attention to feeding their children properly and appropriately.

Sometimes those in homes where affluence is prevalent, with two cars in the driveway, perhaps a boat or a motorhome, are more at risk because, in fact, their children are assumed to be intelligent enough to get their own food after they go to school, and they're left to their own devices. It was a great shock to me to knock on doors of wealthy homes at suppertime during the time that we were campaigning and find children still at home alone because families hadn't returned to feed their child. So I realize that at risk does not know any socioeconomic barrier in the strictest purpose of at risk.

What I would encourage all hon. members to do would be to take a look at a program that Sandra Woitas has been very involved in here in this capital region which is teaching both the parents and the children about proper nutrition, and after a two-year pilot has in fact advanced the case that they can influence feeding behaviours and food choices so that children are less likely to be predisposed to diabetes or some of the other things that poor nutrition will precipitate, including obesity. Perhaps in actual fact what is really needed for children in schools is a proper understanding of their own nutritional needs and what fuel it takes to keep that little body and engine burning. If you teach a child about good nutrition, it may be of greater advantage than actually providing them with the food.

I'd like to just also make one other observation. In the early '80s, when I was president of the School Boards' Association of Alberta, the issue of feeding children at school came to bear. Inevitably, many of the school boards rejected it at that time because of the feeling that if the dollars were available, they should be available to serve the three Rs, the basic needs of educating the students, and that the parents themselves were responsible for providing the lunch and ensuring that the child had a good breakfast, lunch, and supper, proper rest, and the other needs, that we should not in fact attempt to make schools all things to all people. I think that that has become increasingly a pressure on our teachers. So if one could frame a motion to the effect that the expectation would be that no dollars would be subtracted from the educational needs of the students, that might be an interesting position to take.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker . . . I thank you for this privilege.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister of health, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to close debate on Motion 507.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened to the debate, and it's been a spirited debate. I appreciate everybody's participation although I found myself disagreeing, sometimes vehemently, with some of the comments that were made.

There were questions to me, after my opening remarks, about details, and my colleagues provided many details on issues like cost, the fact that the Edmonton program runs for an average of $2 per student per day. Two dollars. A toonie a day: that's what we're talking about for each student. This is affordable, Mr. Speaker.

There were questions around how extensive this problem is, and I think that's a good question. It's not an easy one, necessarily, to pin down, but in 2003, for example, over 10 per cent of Alberta families with two or more children were living below the low-income cut-off, considered in poverty. That level is steadily increasing and, I don't doubt, has continued to increase. Over 54,000 Albertans rely on food banks, and 1 in 5 children live in poverty, facing a continually rising cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, this is a widespread problem. In fact, in doing some of our background research, we spoke to a representative of the Greater Edmonton Alliance who referred me to a parish survey done by one of the major churches in Edmonton. It found that school hunger is far more widespread than we would assume, that this is not just limited to particular neighbourhoods or particular socioeconomic statuses or groups. In fact, it's surprising how many kids from apparently prosperous families end up in school hungry.

So this is a significant problem. It's a serious problem with long-term consequences. It's widespread. It's not costly to correct, and indeed I put it to all of us here that the money put in to address this problem will pay itself back over and over and over as those children grow into adults.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all the members here tonight to consider supporting this motion. It's a motion specifically written, despite the comments of some members, to focus on at-risk families. There's nothing mandatory about this despite the comments from the minister. Indeed, I would ask the minister to consider a moral test because he was asking the question: who is responsible for feeding children? Who is responsible for clothing and housing them? The moral test for the minister to consider is that if a hungry or naked or homeless child was on his doorstep with no options, would he feel compelled to look after that child? I speculate that he would, and I speculate that all of us here would. It's a different situation when we're dealing with hungry children and clothing and sheltering children than when we are dealing with options like a child looking for tickets to tomorrow night's hockey game, for example. That's not a moral issue, but it is a moral issue to feed those children. I ask the minister and all members here to consider that issue as they weigh how to vote on this.

I think that all of us here, despite our differing views, would agree that children in Alberta should not be in school hungry. I think the solution to this problem is apparent. It's affordable. It's before us. It's within the hands of this government to take this problem and solve it or to take this problem and ignore it. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and I put it to all of us here tonight that it is our moral duty – our moral duty – as leaders of this society to take this problem and solve it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Second Reading

Bill 24

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mrs. McClellan]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006, as opposed to 2005, 2004, 2003, 2002, and so on and so on and so on.

Mr. Speaker, Yogi Berra said: it's just like déjà vu all over again. When we look at the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, Yogi Berra was right. Year after year after year this government comes to this House with an amendment to the Fiscal Responsibility Act asking Albertans to allow them to spend ever more of our nonrenewable resource revenue. This flies in the face of what Albertans are telling this government. It flies in the face of what I've been saying for the last 18 months, since I was elected. It flies in the face of what the Canadian Taxpayers Federation is telling this government. It flies in the face of what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is telling this government. It flies in the face of what the Alberta chambers of commerce are telling this government. It flies in the face of what the editorial boards of both major newspapers are telling this government. It flies in the face of what Link Byfield, of all people . . .

An Hon. Member: A small "I" liberal.

Mr. R. Miller: I wonder what Link would say if he heard that we referred to him as a small "I" liberal.

It flies in the face of even a number of the candidates for leadership of the Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, it's not just myself, a lone voice out in the wilderness calling for some vision out of this government, some long-range planning, some real concrete road map as to where we're going to go with the future of this province, how we're going to take advantage of the absolutely unbelievable opportunity that we have had laid before us. In fact, it is people across this province from every political stripe.

I'd like to touch on that for just a second too, if I may, Mr. Speaker. In the 18 months since I've been elected, I've had the opportunity to travel, not a lot because, frankly, we don't have much of a travel budget, at least not on this side of the House. But in the little bit of travelling I have had to do, certainly I've spoken to as many Albertans as I possibly can, and I've not yet found one who disagrees with the idea that we need to have a real vision, a real plan, a real concrete road map for how we're going to treat this opportunity that we have in front of us with natural resource revenues literally providing us more money than any of us could have dreamt about. It doesn't matter whether they're Liberal supporters or lifelong Conservative supporters or otherwise. They're all saying the same thing. I just honestly cannot for the life of me imagine why this government hasn't heard that. At least, if they have heard it, they've chosen to ignore it.

Here we are again this year with the government asking to be allowed to spend in this case now up to $5.3 billion of our natural resource revenues, and only a very short three years ago, Mr. Speaker, that number was $3.5 billion. So in three years' time we've seen a 51 per cent increase in the amount of natural resource revenue that they're wanting to spend. At the same time, we all know and this government has acknowledged that this boom is not going to go on forever. These numbers that we're seeing are not going to be here forever. In fact, in their own budget documents this year, as an example – and I'll just pull one out – synthetic crude and bitumen royalties are forecast to drop from $1.7 billion to $1.3 billion in only two years' time. Now, I'm not sure why that is. They talk in here about: "Adjustments within the royalty system to treat all projects on a similar basis are expected to take place." I'll be asking the minister about that when we get to the budget debate.

The point is that even their own planning is acknowledging the fact that this is not going to go on forever, and in fact perhaps it's not going to go on for very long. Yet they continue to put themselves in a situation where they're ever more reliable on this resource when economists the province over and the country over are saying that now is the time that we have to use some forward thinking and set some of this aside so that not only will we benefit from it, but in fact future generations will benefit from it as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, last week the Leader of the Official Opposition released a number of documents entitled Alberta Horizons: The Time to Dream is Now; The Place to Dream is Alberta. It was very interesting to me to see that, in fact, these documents were very, very well received out there in the real world, outside of this dome, across Alberta. Even editorialists who would not normally speak out or write in favour of the Official Opposition of this province gave our leader, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and the Official Opposition caucus tremendous credit for coming out with a document which reflects some policy but probably more importantly reflects a number of ideas that Albertans can be discussing, that sort of throws some ideas out there and encourages input and feedback.

I think it's fair to say that almost across the board we've been applauded for trying to spur this dialogue forward. I'm really pleased to see that there are people in this province that are, you know, acknowledging the good work that we're doing and are looking forward to participating in that. I think it's a very important exercise, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure it will produce tremendous results, and I don't mean just for the Liberal opposition although certainly that would be a nice side benefit. I believe that it will produce tremendous results for the future of this province, and that is really what it's all about.

One of the ideas that's suggested in there – and it's not a new idea; it's something we've been talking about for some time, and certainly it's something that many of these groups that I mentioned a few minutes ago have also talked about – is the idea of setting aside some resource revenue, making it a legislated mandate to set aside resource revenue as opposed to the sort of helter-skelter, ad hoc manner in which the government treats resource revenue right now.

The Official Opposition – and I'm sure that all members are aware of this; we've talked about it a lot – does currently have a surplus policy which would deal with surpluses in the following manner, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-five per cent of all budget surpluses would be allocated to the heritage savings trust fund, and that would mean that that fund would actually have a chance to grow as opposed to the manner in which it's been decimated by this government over the last 20-odd years. Thirty-five per cent of all budget surpluses would go into a postsecondary endowment fund. This year alone that would mean that $3.5 billion could have been allocated to that fund as opposed to the artificial $3 billion cap that this government has put on the fund. Even with this year's budget we'll be well under a billion dollars still in there, I think. The number is $750 million, if I remember right. Twenty-five per cent of a budget surplus would go to address the infrastructure deficit and the remaining 5 per cent to an endowment fund that would endow the soft sciences, the arts and humanities.

We recognize, as have many others, that a surplus policy is vulnerable to off-budget spending and doesn't necessarily accomplish what is really the potential given the situation that we find ourselves in now. As a result, I would think it's fair to say that we're leaning more and more towards a nonrenewable resource revenue policy, as has been suggested by many others. The number that we mention in this document, Alberta Horizons, is one-third. That doesn't mean that we're married to one-third, but it throws it out there, and according to most of the numbers I've seen, one-third is doable. It's quite feasible.

The Canada West Foundation has done a tremendous amount of research on this. Several economists have contributed. Dr. Ronald Kneebone, in a recent publication entitled Seizing Today and Tomorrow, goes through the past 23, 24 years identifying the amount of natural resource revenue that would be available for savings. In the last five years, which are the most relevant, I think, given where we're at right now, the average amount of resource revenue that would be available for the savings is 45 per cent, based on Alberta Finance's own numbers. The lowest was for 2002 – this was the year following the 9/11 disaster – and even that year 22 per cent would have been available. Every other year the lowest number was 42 per cent.

It's clear to me that if you were to pick a reasonable number, somewhere below 40 per cent, it's doable. If you pick 30 or 33 per cent, I would argue that it's very doable. If you wanted to be very small “c” conservative, you could do as Alaska does with their fund and drop it down to 25 per cent. But, Mr. Speaker, the point is that this is a conversation that Albertans need to be having, that they are starting to have based on the comments that I've heard as I travel the province. The benefits of adopting such a policy are unquestionable whether it be something like the Alaska permanent fund, where they rebate a portion of that savings back to the people, which, as you all know, is not my first choice, certainly, but it's an option, I suppose, or whether it be to establish endowment funds and set aside billions of dollars in savings accounts that can benefit us today and in the future, as I've already outlined. There's no question that saving some of this revenue is so terribly important.

I've talked before about the fact – and I really believe this to be true – that 23 years post the last recession here we are today evermore dependent on the oil and natural gas sector than we were then. My fear is that we really have not learned the lessons of the early 1980s, that we are as vulnerable, if not more so, today to another such recession as we were then. That causes me unbelievable concern because I lived through that time, as did probably most members in this House.

I was newly married and had just purchased a home and was operating a small business that was fairly heavily financed, and I know how difficult those days were. We were fortunate. We were able to pull ourselves through that time without having to walk away from property, selling it for a dollar as many did, without having to pull up roots and go back to what might have been our home province because we simply couldn't make it here anymore. I would be loath to see those days happen again in Alberta, but, Mr. Speaker, it's not unimaginable. One thing we can certainly do to protect ourselves against that is to start thinking in the way of enduring prosperity, and I do not believe that this current government has really taken any serious steps towards that.

You know, just looking at the numbers here as I prepare for debate on Bill 33 and Bill 34 tonight, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006, and the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, I note in there that personal income tax will account this year for approximately $6 billion in revenue to this government. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not unimaginable that a fund built up from natural resource revenue could in a very few number of years accumulate to the point where you could put a serious cap on personal income tax and perhaps even some day eliminate personal income tax altogether. That's not unimaginable if we were to take advantage of the situation that we're in today.

We're collecting at this point only $2.2 billion in corporate tax. It seems a little unbalanced there, $6 billion from personal income tax and only $2.2 billion from corporate, given the fact that we have some corporations in this province that are doing very, very well right now. But, Mr. Speaker, that's a combined total of only $8.2 billion of the total revenue of this province that is coming from income tax of either the corporate or personal nature.

Again, if we were to start saving a large percentage of our natural resource revenue, it's not unimaginable that someday in the not-too-distant future we could put a very serious cap on and perhaps even eliminate those income taxes. You know, given the worst-case scenario that I was mentioning a few minutes ago, just think of the advantage that would give to this province if we could give our citizens, particularly our small and medium-sized businesses, that sort of an advantage. That would be the Alberta advantage.

It's just one of many ideas that are in this document Alberta Horizons. Again, I think it's incumbent upon all of us to be having that conversation, and I know that Albertans are having that conversation. I know that because I hear it when I'm out there, and I'm sure members of the government side are hearing that too. But as a collective unit, as a government caucus they've not gone there yet. You know, I fully expected that we would see something in this year's budget documents that would move in that direction. Instead, what we saw is an increase to $5.3 billion in the amount of natural resource revenue that they're allowing themselves to spend. They craft this in such a way – I love this. I talked about it last year too. They talk about limiting themselves to spending $5.3 billion in natural resource revenue when, in fact, what they're doing is allowing it to grow from $4.75 to $5.3 billion.

Then they talk about the amount of money that they've got in short-term savings, Mr. Speaker. That money is in vehicles like the sustainability fund and the capital account, which by their own admission are short-term savings vehicles and, in fact, many would argue not much more than a government slush fund allowing them to announce projects in rural communities and make cheque presentations. Boy, I've seen an awful lot of these lately on the front pages of rural newspapers, with the local MLA standing there with a cheque that actually says the name of the constituency as if that MLA and his constituency somehow have the power to present millions of dollars from the constituency office to the particular project.

Believe me, I'm not speaking out against the need for improvements to a lodge in a small community, but it's the manner in which these cheque presentations are being done and the implication that somehow that particular constituency office is responsible for securing millions of dollars and there's a direct link between that particular rural MLA and the constituency office. The cheque that's being presented in this event has actually got the member's signature on it even in some cases. It's pork-barrel politics at best and, perhaps, misrepresentation at worst.

An Hon. Member: Name names.

Mr. R. Miller: I heard one of the hon. members across the way, Mr. Speaker, saying, "Name names." Well, you know what? I'll do better than that. We'll table copies of those newspapers in this Legislature, and you'll all have the opportunity to look at them. It is quite crass, to be honest.

Now that I'm on a roll, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to talk about an event that I attended on Friday where we were meeting with the Economics Society of Northern Alberta. The guest speaker was a gentleman by the name of Tony Morehen, who is the chief economist for Alberta Finance, a bureaucrat, I would point out, and not a politician, although you would never know it from the manner in which he spoke that day. I would have sworn that he was running for public office because he was more political than almost any minister could have been were they speaking there.

One of the things that he talked about – and remember that he's speaking to a room full of economists. This was quite entertaining, actually. He talked about this year's budget and the forecast for next year, and he talked about those two years having only – and he put a graph up on the screen that showed this – $300 million of wiggle room, as he described it. The titters amongst the room were quite telling. I don't think he left that room with a lot of credibility because I think the economists in that room understood that there is somewhat more than $300 million worth of wiggle room in this year's budget. The fact that rather than having come forward with a plan that would see some of this money set aside in a serious way as opposed to the short-term savings accounts, which allow the government to do such open-ended things as improve balance sheet line items as is described in the legislation, is astounding to me and, as I say, I don't think bore a lot of credibility with the economists in the room either.

Well, would you look at that? I was just going to collect my thoughts for another comment. It appears as if I've run out of time for the time being, Mr. Speaker, but I thank you for the opportunity to have spoken to it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Under a section of the Standing Orders, 29(2), I'm entitled to ask the hon. member a question, am I not?

The Deputy Speaker: We're not into Standing Order 29(2)(a) until after the next speaker.

Mr. Mason: Okay. May I be the next speaker then, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Please carry on.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McFarland: Maybe you can ask yourself a question.

Mr. Mason: That would provide, hon. member, not only an intelligent question but an intelligent answer.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise to speak to Bill 24. This bill is rather misnamed the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006. In 2003 the first version of the Fiscal Responsibility Act set the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that could be accessed by the government for program spending at $3.5 billion. In 2004 the act was amended and raised the limit to $4 billion. In 2005 the act was further amended and the amount was set at $4.75 billion. This act will raise the amount yet again, this time to $5.3 billion. This is an enormous amount of money.

I guess someone might look at the books of the government, look at the tremendous inflow of nonrenewable resource revenues to this government and say: well, it's not really that much. But what the government has done is forgotten the basic principle of nonrenewable resource revenue, and that is that it is nonrenewable, yet it is being spent by this government as if it would be forever available. In other words, the government is basing programs on this revenue, very significant amounts of programs, that one day will not be supportable, will not be sustainable when this revenue is no longer there.

This reminds me of the very short-term thinking that prevailed in some quarters in this province in the late 1970s. We've seen, in fact, that under provisions of the Fiscal Responsibility Act the Provincial Treasurer of the time, then Pat Nelson, when there was a sudden drop in oil and gas prices, was forced by the act to order very, very quick cutbacks in spending, including preventative programs for at-risk youth and children, including aboriginal youth and children. It led to quite a response, particularly from the aboriginal community. We were just debating a motion that would have put in place the hot-lunch programs for children. If that were passed or if other programs are passed, they are put at risk by the government's growing dependence on nonrenewable resource revenue. We've seen even in the last few years the government having to make cuts to critical investments in young people in this province, at-risk children and youth, because of a drop in oil and gas prices. That tells me, Mr. Speaker, that we are already too dependent on these nonrenewable sources for our program spending, and the government proposes to increase that dependence.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, what the government is doing is cutting its sustainable tax base and has taken another step along the misguided route set out a number of years ago by then Provincial Treasurer Steve West to cut the corporate tax rate in this province from 15 to 8 per cent. There is, in fact, an additional cut in this budget of $550 million in corporate taxes. This comes at a time when these corporations are earning record profits. Record profits. They're making more money now than they have ever made, and the government proposes to cut their taxes.

Now, I heard the Provincial Treasurer say in defence of corporate tax cuts – it was about a year ago, and I don't know the exact date – that the reason that they were introducing further cuts to the corporate tax rate was to stimulate the economy. So the Treasurer admits that cutting corporate taxes has a stimulative effect on the economy. I hardly need to point out that the economy is overstimulated and that small business and the public sector and some portions of big business are no longer able to get the labour they need or the materials that they need. Anyone who has tried to arrange house renovations, for just one small example, in the last year or so knows very well that the demand for goods and services, particularly labour, in this province is out of control, yet the government is offering a massive corporate tax cut which will give the biggest corporations an even greater advantage in accessing the limited labour and materials at the expense of other businesses that don't receive this and at the expense of individuals who don't receive this and at the expense of the public sector.

So it is absolutely the most irresponsible tax cut that this government has ever made. It's going to create more problems in the economy than we have yet seen. The dislocation caused by labour shortages and shortages of materials is already hurting the economy badly, and this corporate tax cut will worsen that far too much. So there's a corporate tax cut – I should correct myself. The corporate tax cut is $265 million, and the additional take this year by this bill from the nonrenewable resource revenues is $550 million.

Now, some others have had some points to make here, and I would quote some of those. The Edmonton Journal says that the point here is not that extra spending was unwise, but rather it makes a mockery of the budget process and, in the process, tends to obscure from view and insulate from proper debate in the Legislature the real rate of increase in spending. Another one, from the Edmonton Sun: the capital plan, another of those money pots that the Provincial Treasurer's predecessor, Pat Nelson, set up to make following the Tories' bouncing budget ball all but impossible. Another one from the Sun: hiding the surplus money in sustainability and endowment funds and the heritage fund doesn't make it any better; we're all for saving nonrenewable resource revenues, but it's starting to look like the government is creating endowment funds solely for the purposes of hiding surpluses and to avoid dealing with the political problems of having this kind of resources available.

Here's one from the Edmonton Journal: it's not that the Provincial Treasurer doesn't know what she's doing; it's rather that her government doesn't know what it's doing. It hasn't set out a detailed, workable, long-range plan to spend surplus money. It's not just spending on the fly; it's spending on the whim. And it goes on: the government is throwing money around like an armada's worth of drunken sailors, undemocratic drunken sailors I should add.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we believe that there should be a minimum of unbudgeted surpluses. It's the policy of the Alberta New Democrats that forecasts in costs or in revenues from oil and gas should be as accurate as possible, and we've shown in the past that we can more accurately predict those things than the government has. By simply going to the experts in the field and taking a selection of their predictions and using those, we've shown that we can predict more accurately on the price of oil and gas than the government has.

Now, unfortunately, the Liberal opposition has based its financial policy on unbudgeted surpluses. In other words, they are assuming that there will be what we call planned unbudgeted surpluses, which sounds like an oxymoron, but it's really what the government has been doing. With their policy of one-third/one-third/one-third they build in an assumption that there will be unbudgeted surpluses. It's our view that all of the surpluses should be budgeted for as accurately as possible, and then you can decide what to do with it. To have deliberately unbudgeted surpluses is fiscally irresponsible in our view, and both the Liberal and Conservative parties are guilty of making that mistake.

The NDP believes very strongly that today's oil and gas resources, today's nonrenewable resource revenues belong to all generations and not simply this one, so they should not provide the broad base of government expenditures. Rather, the majority of those things should be invested in things which will position Alberta in the future so that the same prosperity that we enjoy today will be available to our grandchildren and to our great-grandchildren.

The government's policy is precisely the opposite. It is to consume and use the value of our nonrenewable resource revenues for this generation alone, and maybe some will be left for the next one and maybe a little bit for the one after. Our view is that almost all of that revenue needs to be invested in ways that ensure the environmental and economic and social prosperity of future generations of this province, and that is not what this act does. As a result, Mr. Speaker, we cannot support it, and we urge all hon. members to defeat it.

Thank you very much.

9:50

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. leader, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege, as always, to rise in debate on legislation in this Assembly. This is an important and major bill, and it's one with which we in the Liberal opposition have serious, serious issues.

As I read through and about Bill 24, I can't help but ask: what is the intent of this bill? Why is the government doing this? Why is it asking this to go through the Legislature? I can't for the world understand why this piece of legislation is before us. I worry about its impact. I worry about its intent. I think, in fact, this legislation is taking us as a province in exactly the opposite direction than we need to be going.

It's clear, as the two previous speakers have indicated, that we are on an unsustainable trend in our spending and in particular in our spending of nonrenewable resource revenues. We have a government that in 2004 allowed itself to spend 3 and a half billion dollars in nonrenewable resource revenues, in 2005 increased it to $4 billion, in 2006 $4.75 billion, and is now proposing allowing in 2007 $5.3 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue expenditures.

We need, in fact, Mr. Speaker, to be taking our spending in exactly the opposite direction. I can tell you that an Alberta Liberal government would set the objective of breaking the provincial government's direct dependence on nonrenewable resource revenues. We should be aiming at taking that number not higher but lower. Indeed, we should be aiming at having a government that doesn't need to draw any direct money whatsoever from nonrenewable resource revenues because its financial situation is so strong.

This sets us up for long-term disaster, Mr. Speaker, so we will be strongly opposing this piece of legislation. There are four particular reasons that we will be opposing Bill 24. It's really no plan at all, is it? It's not sustainable. There's no intention here to build up savings, and it represents a breakdown of fiscal discipline.

I'd like to speak to each of those issues one by one. First, this government lacks a plan for Alberta's future. It's pretty obvious. It's widely recognized in the public, it's widely recognized in the editorial pages, and indeed it's widely recognized by this party itself as has been exhibited a few times in the last month or so.

We as the Official Opposition and as the Alberta Liberal caucus have put forward a surplus plan. As the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford indicated a few minutes ago, we are in fact reviewing that plan. The plan that we have stood behind to this point has served very well, but it's based on surpluses. It's based on 35 per cent of any surplus going into the heritage fund to ensure that Albertans can enjoy lasting benefit from the current energy boom, another 35 per cent going into a postsecondary endowment fund to achieve excellence in our colleges and universities and technical schools, and 25 per cent into a capital account to eliminate the province's very, very significant infrastructure debt, which ranges, depending on which government minister you're speaking to, anywhere from $7 billion to $12 billion. Finally, Mr. Speaker, our policy calls for 5 per cent of any surplus going into an endowment fund for the arts, humanities, and social sciences up to a maximum of $500 million.

I won't repeat the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford other than to say that as good as that policy is and as useful as it has been, we think that it can probably be improved, and we will be looking at and debating whether we should shift it from a surplus-based policy to a policy based on actual nonrenewable resource revenues. But at least it's a policy, Mr. Speaker. At least it's a plan. At least it's a vision to say: "This is what we would do with surpluses. This is what we would do to convert Alberta's nonrenewable wealth into something permanent." We see nothing equivalent to that whatsoever, no plan really, from this government. This bill does not advance a plan, and that's one of the reasons that we're going to be opposing it.

Our second reason for opposing this legislation is that, quite frankly, it's not sustainable. Spending nonrenewable resource revenues is not a permanent solution. It's not bedrock upon which to build Alberta's long-term prosperity. All kinds of groups have pointed this out, and it only stands to reason. If we keep spending more and more nonrenewable resource revenue as fast as it comes out of the ground, when it stops coming out of the ground we crash, or just as likely when the price drops, we crash.

There is a better choice, and that is to take the example of Norway and save. Get aggressive in saving this wealth. That, Mr. Speaker, is the third reason that we oppose this legislation. This government is failing to adequately save resource revenues for current and future Albertans.

Actually, one of several groups commenting on this breakdown is the Canada West Foundation. It points out that prior to 2005 of the $122.9 billion in natural resource revenues collected by the Alberta government from 1977 to 2004, over 91 per cent was spent. We're spending it as fast as it comes out of the ground, and that is brutally unwise.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are three of the reasons we're opposing this legislation. The fourth, frankly, is pretty straightforward: this legislation represents a breakdown of fiscal responsibility. There is no sense of discipline either in this legislation or, frankly, in the behaviour of this government. We need budgets brought forward, and then we need budgets stayed with. We have a government that within hours of budgets being introduced has ministers who are openly speaking of off-budget spending. That is a breakdown of the most basic tool of public management, which is the control of your budget. This government has lost that control, and this legislation is merely one symptom of that loss of control.

Mr. Speaker, I think this will prove to be a defining issue in the coming months and years of this province. Do we follow the example presented by this bill and spend more and more of the capital that makes this province so wealthy, or do we take the opportunity we have right now and save that capital and have it there permanently, drawing down merely on the interest and the earnings of that capital forever? The Alberta Liberal caucus strongly endorses the latter position, and I would say to you that most opinion leaders and probably most Albertans will prove to agree with us. So rest assured that this bill will not receive our support. We as the Alberta Liberal caucus have a better plan.

On that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move adjournment of debate.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 33

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure tonight on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill has among its primary purposes, of course, to assist Albertans by increasing the income tax threshold from $12,900 up to $14,899, thereby allowing Albertans to earn more money and to keep that money before having to pay tax. The general thrust is therefore very positive. I'm hoping that other members here will see it in that same light, in that same way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. I believe this bill has already been moved. Actually, the Finance minister spoke to it on the 10th of April, but I appreciate the comments of the Minister of Education. I guess it's been moved twice now. I don't know what that means if anything.*

Mr. Speaker, I've recommended to my colleagues in the opposition caucus that we support this bill. I think it's an opportunity to give a small, albeit very small, break to Alberta taxpayers. Given this time of plenty, it's not a bad idea that we do so although I would certainly submit that there would be better ways to do it. I outlined some of those earlier this evening when I was speaking to the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006, and my belief that we should be saving and allowing some of the resource revenue that we are experiencing right now to benefit not only today's Albertans but also future generations.

The proposal in this bill is to raise the tax exemption by $100 when you take out the factor of indexing. Mr. Speaker, that, quite frankly, isn't going to make a lot of difference for a lot of Alberta families. Depending on where you fall in terms of your overall income, probably not much more than about $35 per individual or $70 per family. It's not a lot of money and probably won't make that much difference, have that much of an impact on most families. I think it does allow this government to once again chant their mantra that the only way taxes are going in this province is down, and we've heard some of that. Really, it's virtually inconsequential.

The total cost to the government is $77 million, Mr. Speaker. In light of the conversation we had earlier this evening on Motion 507, which would have seen us establish a province-wide hot lunch program, there were comments about what you could buy with $10 million. Just imagine what $77 million might be able to accomplish, and compare that to the inconsequential impact that $35 is going to have on low-income individuals. I'd be willing to submit that most of those people would be willing to forgo their $35 in favour of a program that would ensure that no child went to school hungry in this province. As I say, while I'm not going to vote against it, I really wonder if maybe it's a little bit misguided and if we couldn't have been a little more creative and a little more imaginative with what to do with $77 million.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other little things in here that are worth highlighting: the fact that we're paralleling federal legislation and allowing the increase in the deduction of medical expenses to go to $10,000 from $5,000. Certainly, there are many individuals and families in this province for whom that will be a benefit. Also, the addition of an adoption expense credit, maxing out at $10,000 or the total of the adoption expenses, whichever is less.

Certainly, I know a number of families who have adopted. In fact, my parents adopted a young fellow who lived in our home for 10 years before we finally decided that there was no way we were going to allow him to be moved from the home, and we'd better make it official. So I have some experience with this. I know a number of families who have adopted children both from within Canada and a couple from overseas. I'm certainly aware of some of the expenses that can come with that, and the fact that we're going to parallel federal legislation and allow an expense credit for that is certainly something that I would be supportive of.

Mr. Speaker, we've talked a lot tonight and there's been a lot of conversation about a plan versus no plan or whether or not the budgeting in this province is worth the paper it's written on. I could go on and on all night about that. I guess, again, the fact that we're going to give a little bit back to some people, especially those in the lower income brackets who desperately need it even in a province experiencing what would appear to those on the outside to be absolutely incredible wealth. I'm not sure that the people in Ontario or Quebec necessarily understand the gravity of the situation that many, many thousands of people face in this province. The streets are not paved with gold in Alberta despite what, certainly, some people outside of Alberta think, and I think it's fair to say some members of the government caucus think. It's clear to us that there are families that are desperately in need of a little bit of assistance.

As I said, I'm not going to vote against this. I'm going to support it and recommend to my colleagues that they do the same, but I think it does sort of speak to the bigger issue that we've highlighted a number of times tonight. I'm just not sure that there isn't something a little more creative that we could have done that maybe would have provided even more relief to Albertans.

Of course, I'm not going to take my chair without highlighting the one tax cut that I believe and the Official Opposition caucus believes this government should be instituting, and that is an elimination for all Albertans of the health care premium tax. Mr. Speaker, this is a tax that currently collects – I believe this year's budget estimate is $882 million, which is a sizable amount of money but by the government's own admission only a small percentage of the health care budget. We're one of only three provinces that currently collects that tax.

It doesn't really serve much of a purpose, in my mind, other than ideologically the government believes people have to know that there's a cost associated to their health care, and this is one way that they see that message being sent. I would certainly submit to the Speaker and to all members that all Albertans understand that there is a cost to health care, and the fact that we have a tax that we have to pay on that service doesn't necessarily do any more or less to inform Albertans that there is a cost to their health care. I think Albertans are smart enough to understand that there is. If we really want to give a tax break, I think that that's one we could do.

I've had people say to me in the past: is it sustainable? I've gone through the numbers. I don't think I have to do it again, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, when you look at both the budgeted surpluses and, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referred to, the planned unbudgeted surpluses that we've seen in this province over the last many years, $875 million, $882 million, whatever that number is for health care premiums, is clearly sustainable if, in fact, the political will is there to eliminate that health care premium tax. It's clearly doable. All it takes is some political will on the part of the government to do so, and it could be gone. We could sustain it. There's absolutely no doubt in my mind about it. That's the one tax that I would like to see.

Since we're going to be talking about corporate tax in a minute, I might as well just say it now, and I won't have to say it then. This is a move that would benefit small- and medium-sized businesses in this province as well. Were we to eliminate the health care premium tax, it would benefit individuals and also small businesses. From my background as a small businessman I know, and in conversation with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business they confirmed that many, many small businesses in this province will pay either half or in some cases all of the health care premium tax as a benefit to their employees because it's one of the few benefits that they can afford to offer. If they are small enough to the extent that they can't afford a full benefit package, that's the one area that they can offer up in this current labour shortage climate to give some sort of benefits to their employees. Clearly, that would be a benefit to those small- and medium-sized businesses as well, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I'll end my comments and recommend, although I have some reservations, that the members of this Assembly support Bill 33. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to speak to Bill 33, the Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. As the hon. Minister of Finance briefly explained in the introduction of this bill, this act will increase the basic spousal and eligible dependent tax credit amounts by $100 on top of the inflation-proofing or indexing, for a total increase of $376. This strengthens the government's focus on building the Alberta tax advantage.

From 1999 to 2001 the government phased in substantial cuts to personal taxes, including the introduction of the single-rate tax and the highest basic spousal and eligible dependent amounts in Canada, Mr. Speaker. This resulted in a 20 per cent reduction in personal income tax rates, saving Albertans some 1 and a half billion dollars. We indexed our tax system in 2001, ensuring that the benefits of these cuts would not be eaten away by inflation. This indexing of exemptions has now removed provincial income tax costs from an additional 143,000 Albertans.

In Budget 2005 it was announced that annual indexing of the Alberta family employment tax credit would commence in July 2006, increasing benefits to working families. With these benefits a typical single Albertan can make $15,800 and a typical working family with two children can earn $37,000 before paying any provincial income taxes, Mr. Speaker.

The increase in the basic spousal and eligible dependent tax credit amounts in this bill was based on the findings of a comprehensive internal review of Alberta's tax system conducted last fall. This tax review confirmed that Alberta's tax system remains both competitive and fair but also identified lower and middle-income Albertans as a priority for future tax cuts, Mr. Speaker. This act will do exactly that. With these proposed changes more low-income earners will be added to those shielded from provincial income taxes in the future. This means that 1 million of Alberta's 2.36 million tax filers pay no provincial income taxes.

Albertans continue to pay the lowest overall taxes in Canada. Alberta's system rewards work effort while at the same time allowing Albertans to gain, to earn more income before they start paying any provincial income tax. Our low-rate, broad-based policy provides a level playing field, letting the market, Mr. Speaker, not government, determine the best places to spend and invest.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give their support to Bill 33. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: I would like to ask the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon if he has considered the advantage of eliminating health care premiums for those families and whether or not a significant tax reduction for working families like that might not be better than the 20 bucks or so that most people are going to save through this measure.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to respond to the hon. member. Thank you, hon. member. Certainly, while I appreciate your thoughts on the elimination of health care premiums, I think it would be wrong to trivialize the importance of this tax cut for the low-income Albertans that will benefit from this. The whole discussion of health care premiums is certainly a good topic for another day, but I think it's beyond this discussion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you rising again under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Although it's tempting, Mr. Speaker, I'll just speak to the debate on the bill as a whole.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed on the debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. It ought better to be referred to as the very small income tax reduction amendment act.

I just want to say a few things about this because I think that this is a very, very small reduction. I am not one to trivialize $35 for people who don't have very much money. Particularly, I don't want to give any impression that I think that savings in personal income tax are unimportant, but I really have to ask the question why the government's reduction for individuals in the personal income tax is so small, $35 or $70 a year if you have a family. At the same time, the government is charging people a great deal more in terms of the health care premiums, which is a flat tax, which affects the lowest income families much more than it does high-income families, who pay exactly the same amount. There are lots of people who are already below the income tax cut-off who still have to pay that tax. So it is perhaps the most regressive tax that the government has imposed on Albertans.

The government likes to pretend that it's to remind us about the cost of health care. Of course, every member of this Assembly knows or should know by now that it has nothing to do with health care at all. It goes into general revenues and is not used as a source of funding specifically for health care. So it seems to me to be a much better target if you want to really help people in low- and middle-income tax brackets with their tax bill.

So why is the government introducing this? Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't help but wonder and believe, in fact, that the real reason the government has brought this in is so that the massive corporate tax cut doesn't stand alone, so that the government can say: "Yes, we're giving a huge, multimillion dollar tax cut to corporations who are earning the highest profits in history," and it's a $265 million break, "but we're going to take $35 less in taxes from the average working person." So I believe that this is just to make the bigger corporate tax cut palatable. I don't see another reason for it.

It's clear that if the government really had the interests of working families at heart, they would eliminate the health care premiums, which is a much larger amount of money, and save an average family up to $1,200 a year. That's what the government should do instead of doing this. But I think, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, what the government is really trying to avoid is having to go to voters and say: "Yes, we gave a tax cut to the big corporations," who didn't need it, "but we didn't give anything to you." Now they can say at least that they gave something.

I see no value in voting against this bill, but I do think that the government has missed an opportunity. It's missed the boat, if you will, on providing real tax relief to working families in this province. They've had that opportunity. We've been pushing them for years and years and years to do that. They did have the sense of timing at least to extend that reduction on health care premiums to seniors just before the last provincial election. Perhaps they'll have a good sense of timing and eliminate it altogether before we get to the next one. One can only hope, Mr. Speaker, but clearly the government is more interested in rewarding the corporate sector. I'll have more to say on that when we debate that. Suffice it to say that that measure is extremely inflationary and quite out of place in the current economy of this province.

So we will be supporting Bill 33. It represents, in our view, a very tiny baby step towards fairness and equity in the tax position of individuals, but it doesn't go nearly far enough.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. minister of health on the debate.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I just want to clarify to the satisfaction of the hon. member who has just spoken that 140,000 fewer people paid health care premiums this year, to the tune of about $30 million, which was an acknowledgement of people who were at the lower end of the economic scale, defined sometimes as the working poor.

Mr. Speaker, it is not true that the health care premiums per se do not fund health care directly. By practice over the last several years if there are surpluses in the amount predicted for health care premiums – in the example of 2005-06 there was some $28 million that was considered over and above the amount that was allocated from the budget – those monies are directly assigned to health care for the purposes of offsetting any other additional expense that may be incurred because of the assumption that those individuals are receiving health care benefits. During supplementary estimates I identified quite clearly that those monies were in large part used to fund the over $26 million that were part of additional supports for long-term care for ceiling lifts, for medication supports, for administrative supports, and for staffing. It was directly because of those dollars that were defined as receivables above what was budgeted for and expected.

So this government by policy has acknowledged the value of health care premiums when in excess at least of that budgeted amount, and I'd say that while we have less than $800 million collected in health care premiums in Alberta – and the budget is still over $10 billion, at this stage $10.3 billion – the real obvious and glaring deficiency, if you will, is that the consumer has paid an amount which has little or no bearing whatsoever on the total cost of health care.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members rising under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the hon. minister. I would like to ask the hon. minister and just make sure that I've understood you correctly: of the $28 million last year, the health care premiums unbudgeted surplus that was put back to health care, I would like to know what percentage of the total take from health care premiums that represents.

Ms Evans: I would rather not guess at that, but if you assume that it was budgeted last year at about $765 million, it would be a very small percentage overall. But it's still a considerable amount of money. I will in fact, Mr. Speaker, provide for the hon. member and members of the House a tabling tomorrow that will represent the accurate figures.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the debate? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the time to be able to stand and speak on Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. I thank the government, and all Albertans do any time taxes are going down. I also thank the government for all those people that have been taken off of the Alberta health care premiums. It was a significant move, and those people that benefit from that are very appreciative.

But to me as government we would like to increase that amount, and the first thing that I would also like to reiterate is the fact that we need to try and reduce taxes all that we can. It's a great spur to the economy, and the one that just seemed like the most obvious, where we can reduce the size of government and reduce taxes and all of the work that goes with the collection of Alberta health care premiums. It would just be a significant help to Albertans to eliminate those.

So I would continue to urge the government to continue looking at that and to try and raise that forward. If we were to need this $1.1 billion or $900 million for Alberta health care, I think that at a time of surplus like this we could actually reassign our flat tax and say that 2 per cent of our 10 per cent flat tax is going to be considered to go to Alberta health care. We are in a surplus time, and that's the time when we can reduce these taxes.

The other area that I'd continue to urge the government on is to raise our level. There's no question that we have the lowest taxes in the country, and Albertans benefit from that, but low-income Albertans still struggle to get by. It just seems wrong to me to start taxing Albertans at $15,000 when we have such a surplus, when we could raise it to $20,000 and help out those low-income families to a greater extent. By helping them, we're helping the province.

I feel that that would be a very good area to move to not only for the people of Alberta but we have a surplus in our federal government as well. The $8,000 that they have is inadequate to start taxing people. We need to be in a position of leadership here in the country, Mr. Speaker, and show that we can and will raise the basic tax exemption across this country. We should be the leader in that area and urge other governments, provincially and federally, to follow our lead.

We're in a unique situation when it comes to the amount of income that we've got here in the province. We've gone through a long time where we had legislation that said that all surplus money must go to paying down the debt. It just seems that it would be in the interest of Albertans if we were to pass new legislation to say that we're going to split all surplus money: 50 per cent is going to go directly to our heritage trust fund, or a higher amount if we want, and then 50 per cent of the surplus would go back to the actual taxpayers.

I believe that the budget showed that we collect about $5.8 billion in provincial income tax. That's a huge amount, yet with our $10 billion surplus we could have and I believe we should have given back that income tax. It doesn't cause any problems. It's not income that's going to be taxed by the federal government. It's a surplus, and it could go back. So I would urge the government to continue looking at ways that we can help the Alberta taxpayers.

They brought the point up many times that, no, you can never take a tax off because it's so hard to get back on, and they use that for the health care premiums. You know: well, we need that $1 billion, and I can understand that. But that's the unique situation with a tax refund, where if we pass the law, we don't need to eliminate any of the taxes that we have, although I feel that we should. Then automatically that money would go back to Albertans, and that to me is really where we should be looking at it.

Another area that's of great concern – and the province and the federal area are in turmoil over this – is the child daycare centres. The federal government is giving $100 a month. What would happen if here in Alberta we were to take the lead and give a $5,000 per child tax credit to families that have children under six? Right now the economic conditions are such that it is very difficult for parents to stay at home and look after their kids. We're in a unique situation where we have a surplus. That option I believe should and could be available to Alberta parents if we would just take the initiative to lead that area and once again benefit all of Canada by showing the right area to look at those tax credits and where we should be reducing tax.

Overall, Albertans are grateful for the surplus that we have. It's how and where we're going to prioritize it. I would prioritize it, once again, first, by eliminating health care premiums; second, by raising the basic tax exemption; third, let's start giving a tax refund back on the surplus; and fourth, by seriously looking at what type of child tax credit we could be giving Albertans here in this province, where we're doing so well at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

Bill 34

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move Bill 34 at second reading, that being the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, which will have some very positive benefits to it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to offer an apology to the Education minister. I said earlier when he moved Bill 33 for the second time that I understood that it had already been moved once by the Finance minister. Perhaps it's the late hour. My eyes saw second when, in fact, when I checked Hansard, it was actually the Finance minister moving the bill in first reading. So my apologies to the Education minister. I didn't mean to put a scare into him like that.*

I would like to acknowledge the Finance minister for her cooperation on both Bill 33 and Bill 34. In fact, I would also like to acknowledge a recognition that the Finance minister was given this evening. I know that some members were at a dinner hosted by Edmonton Northlands after their AGM this evening, and the Finance minister as well as the Premier were presented with honorary lifetime memberships by Edmonton Northlands. I thought that was a fitting tribute for those two individuals but particularly for the Finance minister, whom I've come to know quite well and work with closely. That was very nice.

I'd like to thank and acknowledge the minister once again for the fact that in both instances, Bill 33 and Bill 34, she provided staff that made themselves available to myself and my staff to give us a thorough briefing on these two bills as well as making available the so-called three-column documents which the government uses to outline the changes in legislation and why they're being made. Those haven't always been made available to us. I find them very helpful in terms of preparing for budget debate, Mr. Speaker. I believe that having that opportunity with staff from Alberta Finance certainly makes for better debate and, ultimately, better legislation. Really, that's what it's all about. So I do appreciate that.

When we talk about Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out, I believe, by the Finance minister when she introduced the bill in first reading, this bill will cut the corporate tax rate from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent. I'm going to offer my qualified support to this bill. As a small-business person having operated a business in this province for many years I can appreciate the difference that this will make to small businesses in particular.

I talked a little bit a few minutes ago about some of the challenges facing small business, one of those being the fact that many small businesses do pay the health care premium tax or a portion of it. It would have been my preference to see that removed; nevertheless, this is a move that has been promised to business in this province since 2001 and is finally taking place.

I know that when I speak to groups like the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and other stakeholders, they're certainly supportive of this, and I can understand the reasons why. As I say,

I will be offering my qualified support as well, which is probably more, quite frankly, than the government will be getting from my colleagues in the ND opposition, who, I'm going to guess, aren't going to be nearly as supportive.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. I touched earlier on the fact that according to the government's revenue estimates for this year, they plan on collecting $6 billion in personal income tax and $2.2 billion in corporate income tax. As I was reviewing those numbers, it prompted me to think on a much smaller scale of the example of the city of Edmonton where the mayor is lamenting the fact that we collect an inordinate amount of waste collection fees from business as compared to individual homeowners. I'm thinking that here we have sort of the opposite. We seem to be collecting an inordinate amount of tax from individuals as compared to what we collect from corporations. So while I'm not necessarily against the idea of the government finally following through on a promise that they made five years ago, it does make me wonder if perhaps we're not giving a greater advantage to corporations than we are to the individuals.

Then I thought: well, I'll just look at the dollar value that we're giving. I mentioned a few minutes ago when we were discussing Bill 33 that the cost to government of making the tax cuts that are being made in Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, are about $77 million, yet when we look at the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, the cost there to the Alberta government is about $265 million, Mr. Speaker. So with a little bit of quick math you can see that corporations are actually receiving more than three times the tax break that individual taxpayers are receiving. So, again, while I'm not necessarily speaking against this act, I'm questioning whether or not, in fact, we couldn't have given individual taxpayers a little more break than we did given that the corporations are realizing more than three times the benefit than that which individual taxpayers are receiving.

I would also like to just point out a couple of things as far as individual sections. The idea of moving the rate from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent: as I said, it's been talked about for years, promised for years. It does sort of beg the question: why are we making this tax cut in this year? I'm not sure what sort of an answer I might get from the minister, but I'm going to guess that it would be hard to justify it by saying that there's more money this year than there was last year or the year before because, clearly, when you look at the numbers from the previous two years, that's not necessarily the case.

So I guess the question is: did the government committee examining corporate tax cuts recommend it this year? Has the Tax Review Committee finished their job of reviewing the tax regime? If that is the case, I'm wondering if the minister would commit to tabling that report in this Assembly so that all Albertans would see the results of that report and the recommendations that were made out of it to the government caucus.

Section 10 talks about allowing the minister to waive penalties or interest owing. That prompts me to wonder whether or not the minister has used power such as that in the past and, if not, whether she's aware of whether or not those powers might have been used by another minister in the past and, again, if that has in fact happened, whether or not she might be willing to table copies of those actions having been taken in the Assembly so that all Albertans would be able to see for themselves under which circumstances penalties and interest owing might have been waived.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, section 13 talks about clarifying the definition of insurance companies to ensure that, in fact, all companies operating and selling insurance in this province are paying the 3 per cent insurance tax, which is another tax that I've referred to in the past as being a hidden tax. I sincerely believe that most Albertans are unaware of the fact that 3 per cent of their insurance premiums is actually going to the government. I'm going to guess that if there was a way that I could somehow get that message out to Albertans, there would be a hue and cry about that because I think that most Albertans feel that they're paying enough tax already. I know that those that I can touch and make aware of the fact that they currently do pay a 3 per cent tax on their insurance premiums are very clearly not happy about this.

Again, if we really wanted to give a break to all Albertans, that's an area we could look at. I don't think there are too many Albertans that don't find themselves having to purchase insurance at some level, whether it be a business insurance or a homeowner's insurance or a tenant's insurance or, of course, the oft discussed and talked about auto insurance.

So in this section, then, as I say, we're talking about clarifying exactly what the definition is of an insurance company to make sure that the government is collecting that 3 per cent tax. It begs the question of whether or not – and I'm sure it must be the case – in fact, there have been some insurance companies avoiding paying that 3 per cent tax through some loophole or other in the current legislation. I'm wondering whether or not the minister would provide in writing to this Assembly an estimate of the amount of money that has not been collected from those companies if, in fact, they have found some loophole that they were using and found a way around that. Clearly, if the government sees fit to add that clarification of the definition, I'm going to guess that there must have been a reason why they felt it necessary to do so, and I would be most interested to know and I think most Albertans would be most interested to know how much tax revenue the government should have been collecting from insurance companies and perhaps somehow missed and allowed that to slip through their fingers.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I'll be offering my qualified support for this bill. Again, it's not necessarily the highest on my list of priorities, but I think that given that the government has made a commitment many years ago and certainly small and medium-sized businesses have been looking forward to that commitment being lived up to at some point – I think the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said that any time there's any sort of tax relief for Albertans, it's a good thing. Given the current economic situation I suppose that that's true. In light of that, I will be, as I said, offering my qualified support and recommending to my caucus that they do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006. As the hon. Minister of Finance outlined in the introduction of this legislation, the main purpose of this act is to reduce the general corporate income tax rate to 10 per cent from 11 and a half per cent, as was outlined in Budget 2006. Yes, this is tax relief. While Alberta's economy is strong now, cutting the corporate income taxes will benefit the province for years to come. This reduction will save businesses $265 million in 2006-07 and encourage more investment in our province.

The government recognizes the importance of low corporate taxes in developing a strong economy. Between 2001 and 2004 we reduced our general corporate income tax rate from 15.5 to 11.5 per cent, Mr. Speaker. At the same time, the small-business rate was cut in half to 3 per cent, and the small-business income threshold was doubled to $400,000. In 2005 the government undertook an internal review of the province's tax system to assess whether our tax system remains competitive and fair and encourages economic growth. The review identified the general corporate income tax rate as a priority for future tax cuts.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is not just competing in Canada with other provinces and territories but in a much larger global marketplace. Other countries around the world have reform proposals in mind that could sharply lower corporate taxes. The further reduction of the general corporate income tax rate to 10 per cent is necessary to maintain Alberta's competitive advantage. Enhancing the Alberta tax advantage for businesses helps to attract investment and encourage entrepreneurship, meaning that Albertans will have more jobs, stronger communities, and a much better quality of life.

Most of the other amendments are technical or administrative in nature and to keep the provincial legislation consistent with federal legislation, Mr. Speaker.

A couple of areas I'd like to point out for the information of the House, Mr. Speaker. Bill 34 will allow the communication of tax information to the Chief Electoral Officer or his designate to ensure that associated corporations are complying with the requirements of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. A company that claims an insurance policy reserve under the federal act will be deemed to be an insurance company for insurance corporation tax purposes and required to pay the tax.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the House to give their support to Bill 34. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung was quite right in predicting that we would be opposing this. In our view, this tax cut is irresponsible and makes Alberta's network of social programs unsustainable.

We think that it's unwise for a number of reasons. First, it ignores the fact that Alberta's budget is well above its tax base capacity. We're already depending far too much on oil revenue, and to further undercut our stable sources of income is unwise, to say the least, and potentially disastrous. In fact, the government's own budget documents state:

With no general sales tax, payroll taxes or capital taxes, Alberta's tax base is relatively narrow compared to other jurisdictions.

You see? They admit it themselves.

While this is a benefit to Albertans, it also comes with some risks.

A broader range of taxes means more stable revenues. With relatively fewer . . . sources, predictable funding for key public services is at more risk in the event of an economic slow-down.

Consequently, it is inadvisable to eliminate or dedicate more taxes.

That's from a section called Alberta Tax Advantage. It's on page 134, Mr. Speaker. Eliminating taxes is precisely what the government is going ahead and doing, and their ability to fund core programs is at risk by their own admission.

Mr. Speaker, also over the past five years the government has reduced business taxes by over $265 million per year. In the 2004 budget, cuts to corporate income taxes started in 2001 will save Alberta corporations $434 million in taxes in that year. These savings are on top of savings from cuts to other corporate taxes such as the elimination of the financial institutions capital tax and a drop in the railway fuel tax, and that comes from Budget 2004.

In two years alone, then, the cuts from 12.5 to 10 per cent will have taken, by a conservative estimate, more than $700 million out of government revenue. That $700 million would have paid for three times the amount urged as an increase for seniors in long-term care throughout the province, which is only $250 million. That $750 million would pay for more than twice the amount of new schools being sought by the Calgary board of education. How can the government consistently applaud itself as providing one of the best education systems in the world and announce that its strategic plans prepare students for the workforce and citizenship when it denies both the building of new schools and the repairing of old ones? How can this government face its citizens with such pride when it is denying children their future for tax cuts that are not needed and are damaging in other ways?

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, to lower our already low corporate tax rates in order to attract more corporate investment risks us establishing a race to the bottom in terms of corporate taxes throughout not only Canada but the U.S. and Mexico as well. We cannot afford to become the Third World labour tax equivalent of North America in order to attract investment, much less when we already have some of the poorest labour laws in the country. The government's own internal review on tax policy found that we are competitive within North America in attracting investment and skilled workers, so why, then, is this necessary?

Mr. Speaker, I've also said that this is inflationary and will give the largest corporations, who are already flush with cash, a tremendous advantage in competing with smaller businesses for labour and materials, not to mention individuals and the public sector. So on all fronts this is ill advised and unnecessary and dangerous in the long term.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, to hear that the Finance critic for the Liberal Party had some comments and offered his qualified support to this corporate tax cut bill. At the same time, he qualified it and noted that three times the tax break is being given to corporations as to individuals and asked why we need to do it at this time of the year. Notwithstanding that, the Liberal Finance critic supported this corporate tax cut bill.

Mr. Speaker, I've been in this House for some time, and I've observed the Liberal caucus in question period and in debate. The Liberals want more for education, more for health care, more for seniors, more for the environment. They want more tax money for students, more for schools, more hospitals, and they want more roads. The Liberal Party opposes an increase in the use of nonrenewable resource revenues for program spending, and it opposes increasing the amount the government receives from gambling. So the Liberals want to have it all. They want to spend in every area more, more, more. They do not wish to increase the amount of spending from nonrenewable resources, they do not wish to increase the amount of spending coming from gaming, and they are now in favour of significant tax cuts which will cost the Provincial Treasurer hundreds of millions of dollars. The Liberals want to have their cake and eat it too, but it doesn't work that way.

You know, I want to suggest that the only fiscally responsible party in this Assembly is the Alberta NDP. While we want some of the same things that the Liberals want, we know that those things have to be paid for. They have to be paid for in some way. If you're not going to keep your taxes where they are and you don't want to spend resource revenue and you don't want to have gambling revenue, Mr. Speaker, there's only one other answer, and that's to borrow money. We are also opposed to that.

There is no magic solution, Mr. Speaker, to the problems facing this province. If you want to have a high quality of education, if you want to have a high-quality public health care system, you have to pay for it. This tax cut will render the province unable to afford those things other than to continue to do what they're doing now, which is to use nonrenewable resource revenue, to use the wealth of all generations of this province for this generation only, and that's wrong. That's morally wrong. That's what the government is doing, but the Liberal answer is no better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I wonder if the hon. member could enlighten me. You said that it would render us unable to do these things when we're talking $2.2 billion, I believe, in total tax credit. When we have a surplus that could be five times that, how would it render us unable to carry on business by giving a modest tax break to the corporations?

Mr. Mason: A good question, hon. member. First of all, it's not a modest tax reduction. The plan of the government is to reduce corporate income taxes from 15 to 8 per cent – in other words, cut them nearly in half – which will make us by far the lowest in the country.

Secondly, my point is simply this. The Liberal position is not to increase our dependence on nonrenewable resource revenue, which seems to be what this hon. member is suggesting that we could do, and in that case, Mr. Speaker, we are against that as well. We certainly don't think that we should be spending nonrenewable resource revenue to pay for increases in ongoing program spending. Those increases need to be provided primarily from stable, ongoing sources of revenue such as the tax base. That's our position. We think that's the only fiscally responsible position.

There are really only two fiscally responsible positions, Mr. Speaker. One is to maintain our tax base and pay for good service levels, good programs in health and education. The other is to cut corporate taxes and also cut program spending in those areas, not a position we support, but at least it balances the books.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to stand up for a minute and go over Bill 34 as well. In response to the hon. member, I'm disappointed in the fact that this government has promised a reduction from 15 to 8 and we're moving so slowly and cautiously, like we're in trouble here. I would urge the government to continue moving in that direction to lower corporate tax. In response to that, small business really is the backbone of this province, so once again I would urge this government that just as we need to look after the individuals, we also need to look after small businesses.

There are several things that we can do. I'm going to bring up again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brought up, that by eliminating the health care premium, this is another benefit to small business because many of them do pay that on behalf of their employees. We need to make Alberta the area where we can and should have value added to all of our resources that we have here. We want more jobs for the people, better paying jobs. By doing that, we want businesses that are strong, and businesses are stronger and able to compete on a world basis, which is what we are. It's a global economy now. It isn't a trapped area where we can say that we're selling to Saskatchewan or somewhere else. We're competing with China. We're competing with India. Those areas, as I've said before, don't have the social programs that we have here, yet we're competing with them. So if we want to keep our corporations here and we want people employed here with those jobs and to process our resources here, we need to continue lowering the corporate tax to be able to make them competitive on a global basis.

I'd also like to address the fact that it is great that we've raised the threshold from $200,000 to $400,000, but once again with inflation and the value of land and property and every other area that's gone up so much, we need to look at keeping track or continuing to raise that threshold for small businesses to make them viable.

I'd also continue to urge the government to address the problem of passing on the family business. It doesn't matter whether that's the farm, whether it's a dry-cleaning or accounting business. It's a major problem to pass on these businesses. Often we lose good family businesses because of the tax structure.

I want to go back to the promise and not moving to this 8 per cent reduction. I was very disappointed with our federal Conservatives, who promised a six-month capital gains exemption and now are saying that they're not able to deliver it. I would urge this government: let's not be in a position where we tell businesses that we're going to do these things and then put them off, especially when we're in the situation where we can do it. There is no reason why we don't do that.

We need to also, I feel, continue to look at innovative ways of bringing in more businesses. Just as we've been with the tar sands in allowing that capital investment and receiving their money back, we need to do that in other areas in this province, whether that's a packing plant, whether it's in pulp mills, whether it's in canola crushing, whatever that industry might be. We need to look at other areas where we can have people wanting to put their seed money into value-added processes and into businesses so that we can continue to have those good jobs here in the province.

I vote in favour of Bill 34. It's a step in the right direction again. We want to be lowering our taxes. That always is an economic boost and will actually increase the amount of taxes that come in by lowering taxes because the economy spurs on and will do better. I have great faith that this is a step in the right direction and urge the government to continue following their program and to get to the 8 per cent quicker rather than later.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner about his theory that the more you lower taxes, the more revenue you get from taxes. I would wonder if he thought, then, that we could maximize our tax take by eliminating taxes altogether.

Mr. Hinman: There are some interesting studies on the economy of doing that. Everything has a curve, a U-curve, and it goes down and up, and there is a point. But there's no question right now that our taxes are excessive. We have a surplus, and that means our taxes are excessive unless, as you were pointing out earlier, we want to increase our social programs. Perhaps there are areas where we want to do this, but I believe that with priorities and long-term planning we could greatly increase the support for those people in need and have what we call targeted social programs rather than universal programs, which we seem to be falling into more and more. We need to actually look at those who need help. Like I say, for people with low incomes, let's raise the basic tax exemption, target those people specifically.

There is always a balance in payoff, but when it comes to corporations, we can use the banks for an example. They have huge profits every year. They set up their business plan, and they follow through on that. If you were to say, "Okay, let's double our taxes on the banks," all they do one year, two years down the road, is that they say: "Okay, we want this much profit. We need to do this to stay in business, to be viable. Cheques are no longer a dollar apiece; they're two dollars apiece. To use a debit card is no longer 25 cents; it's 50 cents."

When we tax the businesses that are in our community, whether it's the hardware store, the dry cleaners, whatever is in our community, when we raise those taxes, they in turn have to raise their costs to the consumers. When it's the mechanic in town, if his property taxes go up, he's going to turn around and it's the consumer that loses. Corporate tax doesn't benefit the economy and those people that are living on a fixed wage.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006.

This legislation will enhance the way our province administers the persons with development disabilities, or PDD, program. It'll do that by helping the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports better co-ordinate all the programs and services that address the needs of persons with developmental disabilities in our province. At the same time Bill 30 will allow the ministry to continue to benefit from the expertise of PDD's six community boards, which have demonstrated excellence in how they develop and implement service plans on a local level. These are important changes to governance, but they will not affect front-line services, and that is an important point to consider.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to review the major structural and governance changes set out in Bill 30. The preamble of the act will feature two new provisions which reflect an amended governance structure and the increased responsibilities being transferred to the government of Alberta. Specifically, the provincial board will be dissolved, and a mechanism will be created to provide greater input from the community boards into the future direction of programs that support the inclusion of persons with developmental disabilities into community life. This will include a direct reporting relationship between the ministry and the community boards and an advisory role for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, which is chaired, as you know, by the Member for Strathcona.

The Premier's council, which also reports through the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports, will provide strategic advice and input on the needs of persons with developmental disabilities. The ministry will assume the roles and responsibilities of the provincial board as outlined in the current Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act. Mr. Speaker, the provincial board has been successful in a number of areas, but there are a number of functions that the ministry is simply better positioned to take on, including issues of accountability, including auditing procedures, program policy and direction, and overall co-ordination of supports provided to people with developmental disabilities.

With Bill 30 the ministry will be responsible for developing policies for the provision and consistency of programs working directly with six community boards, allocating funding to those boards, and co-ordinating the delivery of programs and services. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, there will be a transitional period during which these responsibilities will be transferred and the new governance model is adopted. During that transitional period, the ministry's intention is that the programs and services provided to persons with developmental disabilities will continue to be delivered in an effective and efficient manner. In other words, the transition should have no impact whatsoever upon persons who receive supports from the PDD program.

Once that transition is complete, the new governance model for the program will be fashioned along the lines of the Child and Family Services Authorities Act, whereby Alberta Children's Services administers its programs through 10 regional child and family services authorities. The ministry will move toward a model that is similar to the structure currently being used by Alberta Children's Services. Within that structure community boards will become agents of the Crown and will report directly to the ministry.

Other provisions laid out in Bill 30 regarding the community boards include the following. The ministry may provide administrative and other support services to the community board. The minister, on the recommendation of the board, will appoint the chief executive officer of each community board, and each community board will develop plans for the delivery of services in its region subject to the approval of the minister. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the ministry will have the ability to provide written directions to the community boards on how they will be required to carry out their duties and various functions, on how they will set priorities and co-ordinate work with other government departments and public and private bodies to avoid duplication of effort and expense in services. An amendment to the existing legislation will also clarify that the community boards cannot operate on a for-profit basis and must use all funds to carry out statutory powers and duties.

On the housekeeping side of things, obsolete references to facility boards will be deleted from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act and the Health Information Act. This is simply because the reference is outdated as facility boards have not been in place since the year 2000.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, regarding the creation of regulations Bill 30 stipulates that the minister may make regulations regarding appeals, conflict of interest matters affecting members of community boards, and the functions, powers, and duties of the chair and CEO of a community board and that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing services that may be provided by a community board.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to move second reading of Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006. I encourage all members of the Legislature to support this important legislation as it continues our work to better co-ordinate all of the programs that provide a full range of supports to persons with disabilities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I would like to thank the minister for sharing the three-column document with me and also for the briefing that we had together. The briefing was very factual, and I really believe that this type of dialogue is appreciated. I believe that the benefactors of these types of dialogues are all the people in Alberta.

I'm pleased with this act. I had actually asked the minister to review – actually, the provincial board was what I had heard from the people that I had spoken with. So I'm quite pleased with some of the things that have come forward under this bill. I do have a few reservations about a couple of things. There was just one problem that I had. I do realize that the ministry is quite open when speaking with me, but my understanding was that when my staff had approached some of the community boards, the dialogue was cut off at that point. So perhaps that could be looked at.

The other question I had was that I'm not sure what the qualifications were for the person that actually had done the restructuring. I don't know if I can mention the name or not, but there was a person that had done the restructuring, and that report hasn't been made public, so I'm not just sure what his qualifications would have been to do that.

The other problem that I have – and I do realize that it reads that the minister's duty is to appoint the community board CEOs. I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has addressed that, but I'm not sure if I heard it correctly. I really think that the CEOs should totally be hired by the board that they are responsible to. Perhaps the minister could oversee it, but I think that too much power is going to the ministry. That would be one way that I would take it back and give it to the local boards.

The other part where again I think that there is too much power going to the ministry and away from the community boards is that the minister would give them directions on how to carry out their powers and duties and how to set priorities and how to co-ordinate programs. Now, for someone who for the last 10 months has been yapping about provincial standards and enforcing them, I realize that this just falls right under that, but I still would like to see a little bit more power and autonomy given to the local boards because if this is going to fall under and open up in the way I'm hoping it will, it really will allow those boards to get that front-line problem right into the minister's office and cut out a lot of the middle people. I believe that by the time it gets to a minister's office, it's been so watered down that it isn't the true fact at all.

The other question that I would have about the ministry – again, I'm back on my mantra of accountability and standards – is: what steps would the ministry take to really improve the transparency of how the boards work through to the ministry? I believe that their first contact is the assistant deputy minister, which is fine because it does get it into the ministry. But I'd like to be very clear on how that transparency would occur.

I believe that there were some very worthwhile projects going on, that they were updating contracts, policies, and manuals and that at one point it was the responsibility of the provincial board. I'm assuming that that is something that is being taken into the ministry with, I believe, 35 staff members, which I will address a little bit further. But probably some good work has gone on under that, and I'd like to see that out in the public but, also, that it not be lost.

I also would like to make just a little comment about the Premier's council. I understand what some of these are for, but again I think it's too many people involved in the process. The Premier's council would be asked to provide advice on the needs of people receiving PDD supports. I honestly believe that that should be the responsibility of the regional boards. Again, as I've said before, these are the people that will be hearing the front-line problems, and if it goes through too many and there are too many people hearing out there, it gets watered down, and the true facts and the true feelings of the people, in fact the people that may well be neglected, are not getting through to the ministry.

Part of what I'm talking about is certainly what I learned on the MLA task force. I think that that task force was wonderful in terms of us actually being able to hear what the people's problems were, where their issues were. They actually could come to us with feelings which were very easily translated and put into the ministry. I really have a problem with too many people being involved in passing on information to the people that ultimately make the decisions.

There are 35 staff that would be transferred to the ministry. I probably will get shot when I leave this building, but I'm not altogether sure that all of those 35 staff really have to go to the ministry. Perhaps they could – I don't know – maybe go somewhere else. I'm not altogether sure that their jobs aren't redundant once you eliminate what their need is. The fact that the ministry has put together AISH and PDD is, in my mind, I think quite a brilliant stroke and will help to be able to get the common problems. It is the common person. It is one person that could well be collecting AISH but also needs the PDD supports. I'm just not convinced that that much staff is really necessary.

Also, there was going to be a saving of $11 million by eliminating the board. I'm sure it meant the staff because I don't think the board had a budget of $11 million. At least, I certainly hope they didn't. I would like to see that savings of $11 million go directly to the front-line people, to the contract people who try to provide front-line staff and actually can't afford to pay a proper wage to them which, in fact, would then give you the continuity of staff that's required. So I certainly would have dibs on that $11 million if I had it in my hand.

Sorry. I'm getting mixed up here.

An Hon. Member: The snoring is keeping the rest of us awake.

Ms Pastoor: I'm so sorry that I'm keeping you awake.

An Hon. Member: You're not. [interjections]

Ms Pastoor: They're all awake now. Thank you.

Actually, I think that's probably pretty much what I wanted to say. Those were really my concerns. I think it boils down to that I really would like to see a much clearer line from the regional boards, who understand the problems on the ground and getting them directly into the ministry, where something can change or so that at least the ministry is aware of it at that point.

There is no speaking of funding, which is an entirely different issue. This is an issue of governance, so all I'm going to speak about is the governance part of it.

I would compliment the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for bringing this forward. I think there has been some good work been done here. I would like to see it tightened up.

With that, I would say thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few points that I would like to comment on on this bill. First of all, to definitely thank the minister for responding so quickly. She was looking for input on what to do to help the people with PDD as there is a wide perception across the province that there is a cutback. They were very concerned about being able to keep their current, I guess, help to their individuals that were there. So it's very rewarding for the facilities in my area. They're very grateful for this change with the elimination of the provincial board and hope that the streamlining will continue to improve and that they'll be able to be more functional on the regional level and to help those areas work.

We continue to urge you to streamline it and to be able to reach out and touch at a closer level, and as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East also mentioned, we want those areas to be accountable and the CEO to be accountable in the region and focus on meeting the services of the people in their area.

The other area that hasn't been addressed – and I hope that the minister can move forward on this – is the high turnover rate. That continues to be a problem. It does seem to be twofold. One is the wage level that these recipients receive. The other area, though – and I'll speak in contrast to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East – that we continue to talk about is having to have provincial standards, provincial standards, provincial standards. What I've found with the people that work in PDD is that many of them are families that have had someone in that situation or are working in that area. In rural Alberta they can't afford to go and get so-called standards to work with those people, whom they love and are concerned about and are reaching out to members in their community. I don't know that we need to raise the standards other than the fact, maybe, of raising the wages for those people that are working on that local level and perhaps increasing the funding for some of those facilities because they are having a hard time making ends meet, especially when we continue to see the high cost of operating and maintaining buildings and the cost of heating them. All of these are major concerns in those areas.

The other area that I've talked to the minister about – and I'll bring it up again tonight – is to put the trust and the faith in those people that are assessing these individuals in the regions. Across the province it isn't equal funding for equal problems. It seems like the central area, that was pointed out to me, gets an increased amount of funding though they don't necessarily have the problems in other areas. The per capita distribution of funds doesn't work well when the south has an increased number of people with PDD. Perhaps they go down there because of the nicer winters – I'm not sure – but we have a greater number down there. It needs to be addressed more on the services provided than just a per capita per region basis because the south definitely struggles in that area.

Once again I'd like to thank the minister for streamlining this and eliminating the provincial board. The facilities in my area are thrilled about that. If we can continue to function and look at the recipients and how we can continue helping them, I am confident that the minister, with her compassion and desire to help these people, will have some more innovative and improved legislation coming forward in the future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006. It's a bit of a mouthful, but I think the act in general has some very positive elements and leaves us with some questions as well.

The bill proposes that the roles and responsibilities of the PDD Provincial Board be transferred to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and that the reporting lines of the PDD community boards be enhanced so that they would report directly to the ministry. So there are some positive elements.

In section 7(b) of the amendment act (3) states that “a Community Board may not operate for profit and must use all its funds to carry out its powers and duties under this Act.” That’s something we certainly see as positive. The minister is responsible for ensuring that the boards don’t duplicate services, and that’s good, but the act also allows the minister to establish services in an area directly, notwithstanding the fact that the board may already be offering those services. That’s something we’re kind of curious about, Mr. Speaker. It seems somewhat contradictory. Perhaps the minister should have the power to make sure that the board receives the additional support that it needs to meet the needs in that area rather than setting up some duplication. But I’d be pleased to hear the minister’s comment.

The Alberta Association for Community Living will be rallying here tomorrow, and I guess this is the thing that I’d like to get to, Mr. Speaker. It’s great to streamline the delivery. It’s great to make sure that the delivery is more community based, but we need to be clear and honest and straightforward about whether or not the amount of money that they are receiving means a cutback in the level of service that people are receiving. It’s fine to say that more money is being given in an absolute sense, but we all know that costs increase. There’s inflation. There are lots of factors which can mean that even an increase in funding means a reduction in services. So we need to know very clearly what exactly is going on.

The minister has stated that there is more money flowing to PDD programs and services, but then the question arises: why is the Edmonton community board for persons with developmental disabilities sending out letters requiring service providers to cut 3.4 per cent from their budgets? That’s a real question. Maybe our math is off, Mr. Speaker, but we think that a 3.4 per cent cut is not a net gain. I think the minister needs to deal with this.

We have, for example, the Winspear fund, which is a private initiative, catching people as they fall through the cracks. Those are some of the most vulnerable people in our society, Mr. Speaker, so the act in a sense begs the question about what’s actually going on with persons with developmental disabilities and the services that they receive. The fund, for example, paid out $65,000 to help individuals and families in need. There are some pretty big cracks in the system if private endowments are having to step up to the plate and meet the needs of those families and individuals.

I guess that I could go on about that, but I do think that it’s important to all of the families of people with developmental disabilities to know clearly what level of service they’re going to receive, if people are going to be cared for with compassion at the level that they require or whether they’re going to have to be running to private-sector endowments to try and get top-up money or services that they can’t otherwise achieve. I think it’s incumbent upon the minister to explain this very clearly.

You know, it’s fine in question period to say: well, we’ve increased the budget. We all know how it works in question period. But there are going to be a lot of people here tomorrow that are looking for answers. They are very concerned. They’re dependent on government programs. They don’t have other options. Their basic dignity is at stake.

So, by all means, let’s pass the act, but it’s time that the government spoke clearly to those people and to this Assembly about the actual situation there and that we resolve this question in the interests of all people. The measure of a society, someone said – and I can’t remember who it was – is really how it treats its most vulnerable citizens. I think that this is a time to take that as our watchword.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments will just be very brief. I’d like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. He is well known for his compassion and his wisdom and his hard work, which we did see through the AISH review and the recommendations all being passed unanimously and making a very real difference in the lives of people with disabilities, which does include persons with developmental disabilities.

I would like to thank the members that spoke here in the Assembly for their support for this legislation, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned, it is about governance, which is a very real change, and about bringing the regional boards closer in with the ministry and closer in to the funding that is available for persons with developmental disabilities.

Also, just as importantly, I’d like to take the opportunity to thank the provincial board, Mr. Speaker, because the provincial board has set the tone. They have provided the vision, and they have provided the principles that have been very outstanding, which is why we are where we are today with persons with developmental disabilities, our program being a program that is renowned throughout Canada, across other provinces. It is important to take this next step in governance, and that is what this bill is about with local autonomy. So thank you.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I’d like to call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is late. I think that instead of proceeding with more business of the House we should simply adjourn, noting that we’ve made excellent progress today, and reconvene tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 11:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, April 25, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/04/25

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On the Holocaust remembrance monument located on the grounds of the Alberta Legislature are found the following words: "I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the tormented." These are words written by Elie Wiesel, a survivor, a poet, and a Nobel prize recipient. On this day may God provide all innocent victims of racism and genocide eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly guests from and representatives of the government of the Philippines. They are in the Speaker's gallery. On an unofficial visit to the province of Alberta is Senator Edgardo Angara. Senator Angara is the longest serving Senator for the Philippines. He's accompanied by escorts Mr. Lito Rocque and Mr. Augusto Tugade. Also with Senator Angara is the Honorary Consul of the Philippines, Edmontonian Esmeralda Agbulos, and her husband, Virgilio Agbulos. The Philippines is a valued trading partner for Alberta. They have recently visited your offices, I believe. The Philippines is the heritage home of more than 36,000 Albertans. I ask this Assembly to give the Senator, Honorary Consul, and their escorts our very warm traditional welcome, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Canadian Legion's Alberta-Northwest Territories Command takes a keen interest in promoting the values of good citizenship among young people throughout the province. The Legion is in partnership with the Legislative Assembly office in a program that reflects that good work. It's Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day. We're very appreciative of both their financial support for and their involvement in this annual event, which began last evening and will conclude later this afternoon.

In your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Mr. Don Orr, the Legion's command first vice-president, who is accompanied by his wife, Beryl Orr, and Darrel Jones, the Legion's chairman of the Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program, with his wife, Darlene. Mr. Orr and his Legion team have been instrumental in ensuring that participants have been well looked after so far. I'd like to invite our guests now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members 71 students from across the province who are here today as participants in your MLA for a Day program. The participants have spent time with the Royal Canadian Legion, debated a resolution, visited in their members' offices, had lunch with you, and following question period they will receive a tour and briefing on the constituent elements of this House. The ultimate aim of the day's activities is to further develop an interest and an understanding of our parliamentary system. Our shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries today. They are accompanied by their Legion chaperones, Marilyn Brooks, Muriel and Walter Heselwood, and Gordon McDonald. I would now ask all of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two ladies who I had the privilege of meeting today at the Holocaust memorial ceremonies. They are Mrs. Gillian Horwitz, vice-president of the Edmonton Jewish Federation, and Dr. Frances Cyngiser, co-chair of the Edmonton Holocaust Remembrance Committee. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly eight outstanding teachers from the Lacombe composite high school. I think they may be playing hooky today from school. I promise that I won't tell their principal. They're on a tour of the Legislature and learning about government. I'd like to introduce them. They are Corvin Uhrbach, Steve Kabachia, Don Webb, Ron Thompson, Jason Petrie, Dean Zepick, Christine Parent, and Michelle Kline. I'd ask them to rise – they're in the public gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure today in introducing to you and through you to this House three people who had taken part in the PDD demonstration on the steps of the Legislature. I would ask that they rise: Shantel Timmerman, Derrick Seabrook, and Anita Ferri. Paul Bellemare is with Edmonton Skills, Shantel and Derrick are with the Edmonton self advocacy federation, and Anita is with the Gateway Association for Community Living. I would ask that the House welcome them in our traditional manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a group of seniors who are touring the Assembly today, who I met earlier, and we spoke briefly. They are seated in both the public and the members' galleries. They're called the Probus Club, and I understand that they meet regularly at the Mayfair Golf and Country Club, which is in my constituency as well. I ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a class from one of the many fine private schools in my constituency, Calgary Academy. These are the winners of the grade 7 and 8 debate tournament, and they're accompanied today by their teachers, Danielle Hucaluk and Charles Brodeur. I see that they're in both the members' and the public galleries. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly three guests. They are here today to call on the government to restore funding for persons living with developmental disabilities. These guests came for the rally for persons with developmental disabilities at noon today on the steps of the Legislature. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly as I call out their names: Lindsay Caldwell, Alberta Association for Community Living; Wendy McDonald, Family Voices; Michelle Arkie, Abilities in Action.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you this day a few people that I have visiting. To start with, I have 26 grade 12 students from Magrath high school. Their motto is Zenith, which is reaching for the top. I'm pleased to have them here. They have two great teachers that go to great lengths to bring the students for the third time now, Darryl Christensen and Roger Baldry. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

It's also a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you a friend and a colleague from the Alberta Alliance Party. Kathy Rayner is the chief administrator of the Alberta Alliance Party, where she works to promote prudence and accountability in government. Kathy's dedication and service to the people of Alberta is not always fully recognized, but today I'd ask her to please rise in this Assembly and receive the warm welcome from the members here.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Postemployment Opportunities for the Premier

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From Peter Elzinga's consulting to Rod Love's lobbying to Murray Smith's board positions this government has turned conflict of interest into business as usual. Now the Premier has openly admitted to being courted by organizations unknown to fulfill positions unknown for purposes unknown. Unfortunately for democracy in Alberta, our Conflicts of Interest Act doesn't go far enough to ensure that public interest come before private enrichment. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the federal conflict of interest and postemployment code states that "A public office holder shall disclose in writing to the Ethics [Commissioner] all firm offers of outside employment that could place the public office holder in a position of conflict of interest," will the Premier commit to following these same open and accountable rules?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate and repeat: I am not considering any offers at this time. Maybe later. Secondly, the Ethics Commissioner will provide me with a letter tomorrow, I hope – at least, I've been promised – outlining the legislative requirements relative to disclosure. Thirdly, I have received some job offers. Many of them I would like to table at the appropriate time. I don't have the documents here. But numerous letters – oh, thousands of letters – some of them asking me if I would assume running in Saskatchewan or Manitoba or Ontario. Those are job offers. I received another job offer that this hon. member would be interested in in that he's attracted to the media. One was to informally take over the CBC.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He completely sidestepped the issue, of course.

Again to the Premier: will the Premier at least excuse himself from any cabinet discussions which may relate to or affect any of the organizations that have made offers to him?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will be very diligent and follow the letter of the law as explained to me by the Ethics Commissioner in his letter. I'll be glad to table that letter once I receive it. I will abide by all of the conditions relative to the ethics rules.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: in the interest of democracy and accountability, given that the Premier stated yesterday that he doesn't care if the cooling-off period in Alberta is extended to 10 years, will the Premier follow the recommendations of the Alberta Liberals and at least increase it to one year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will follow to the letter of the law, the law that was passed by this Legislative Assembly, including members of the opposition.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Workplace Health and Safety

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 28 workers and families across the world observed the Day of Mourning, a day to remember loved ones and co-workers killed on the job. Last year 143 workers were killed on the job in Alberta, almost three every week, the highest number since 1982, yet this government has a weak record in enforcing safe practices in the workplace through prosecutions and fines. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. While Ontario pursued 2,392 workplace safety prosecutions in the past five years, Alberta has pursued only 41. Why isn't this government getting tough on workplace safety violations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question and a very important question because any time there is an injury or a fatality, it's very, very unfortunate. We wish as the government in Alberta that none of that would happen, even with our hot economy. Alberta takes workplace health and safety very seriously. Inspections and orders have increased tenfold since 1997. Now listen to this: spending has increased $7.2 million in 2001 to $18.9 million in 2006-2007. Work Safe Alberta was introduced in 2002 specifically to reduce injuries. There are 152 workplace health and safety staff, including 87 occupational health and safety officers, 80 workplace policy standard staff, and 12 partners in health and safety. Alberta has the second-lowest rate to Ontario of work-related injuries in Canada. I think Alberta is doing very, very well. In fact, Alberta also has the hottest economy in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given all those resources that he listed, why in five years have there only been 41 workplace prosecutions in Alberta? What are they doing?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, like I said before, we've increased our budget from $7.2 million to $18.9 million. Our priority is to make sure that the workplace, in fact, is safe, not necessarily to prosecute everybody that may have an accident.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this government follow the lead of top major Alberta corporations and go for a target of zero workplace incidents, zero injuries, and certainly zero deaths?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, like I said in my opening comments, that is our priority: to have no accidents, no fatalities, and have a hot economy. Those people do not like the hot economy. It is challenging, of course. We work very closely with Workers' Compensation, who in fact have refunded hundreds of millions of dollars back to employers because we operate a safe employment record.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

1:50 Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans with developmental disabilities have made important contributions to our province's culture and prosperity. These citizens need the assistance of the community to reach their full potential. The government's approach to PDD funding is questionable. An increase in funding that fails to cover inflation and the increasing number of PDD clients is in fact a funding cut, and there are people here today to attest to that. My questions would be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that the Edmonton PDD community board is cutting community services by 3.4 per cent and the Calgary community board is cutting individually funded services by 2 per cent, why does the minister believe that insufficient budget increases won't result in reduced services? That is what is happening.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question from the hon. member. As we were out today with wonderful people from throughout Alberta that have developmental disabilities and their advocates and stakeholders, I had the opportunity to meet for approximately an hour through the audience and talk to people about their concerns. I know that this member heard very much the same.

The facts are, Mr. Speaker, that the funding has increased 84 per cent over the past six years, which is significant. Also, the caseload has increased 30 per cent over the past six years, which is substantial. When you have that kind of growth and that change in a program, there comes a time, which is now, to review it for effectiveness and for efficiency. We need to hear, as we did today, the voices of people that are experiencing the need for the services and what those would be and what those needs are and how we can continue to fund those.

I know that this issue is serious. I am concerned about it, Mr. Speaker, and I am looking very, very closely. We were here last night until midnight. You were here, hon. member, as we addressed the governance issue. I am looking very closely at how we can address what seems to be a disconnect or a gap in services and in funding with the eight layers of what funding has to go through in order to reach the client. So we're on the same page.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given the 10 per cent increase to family support for children with disabilities, why was the budget increase for adults with disabilities so minimal?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can refer that question to my hon. colleague regarding the Children's Services budget.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that we're talking about two different issues. We're very proud of what we do under Children's Services with family supports for children with disabilities. It's very unique in Canada; in fact, it's the only one in Canada. We believe that if you have the early intervention in dealing with children with disabilities, once they reach the age of 18 and go under PDD, it's a nice link.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I know that this happened this afternoon on the Leg. steps, but will the minister commit to engaging with families and the front-line stakeholders in making future decisions about the funding and the structuring of PDD?

Mrs. Fritz: Oh, Mr. Speaker, that's so necessary. We do that now. In fact, we have the president from AACL here, who met with me in my office along with the members from Family Voices. When we hired the new CEO in Calgary, for example, we ensured that Family Voices was at the table in that hiring. We will continue to have members of the community. We'll have stakeholders. We'll have our regional board chairs. We'll have people work together as we move forward with this because we are making an important step here.

As I said, I do hear the concerns, but I want to really reassure people with developmental disabilities in this province that the services that are required, that are necessary, and especially those that affect their health and their safety will be in place, and that is not going to change, Mr. Speaker, just as the funding is not going to be reduced.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports spoke to the PDD community protesters today, telling them that she is their advocate. The minister has repeated in this House over and over that there are no cuts to PDD programs, yet the Edmonton regional PDD board says that it is facing a $10 million shortfall due to inflation and increases in caseloads and that service cuts are inevitable. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will the minister explain why she has been consistently telling this Assembly that there are no cuts to PDD programs?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, I will address that, Mr. Speaker. You're right, hon. member; I am an advocate for persons with developmental disabilities. I have reviewed this letter. I am understanding more and more about that information, that letter, why it was put together in the way that it was. A part of that is that it was next year's budget that people were looking at as they addressed this letter, and it's my job, my responsibility, as I said earlier. I will do this. The buck stops here. I will do this.

Mr. Mason: It hasn't so far.

Mrs. Fritz: Yes, it has.

If I find that there are essential services that affect the health and safety and well-being of individuals and that families are not being included in the discussions as the regional board chairs have told me that they are, that will be my responsibility to ensure that it changes, and I will.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this minister tabled a budget that has cuts, and she knows it. When she told protesters on the steps that she would advocate on their behalf, why didn't she also tell them that her department's budget estimates for this upcoming year have already been passed in this Assembly and that they include the very cuts being protested today?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, there aren't any reductions in the overall funding for PDD. There aren't. That is an inaccurate statement, and the member knows that. I'm beginning to learn as a minister that many times the preamble isn't quite being in a responsible way what is actual. That is not actual. There is an overall increase in the funding. More importantly, this whole area is under one ministry, which means that we have a better opportunity, as we move forward with this, with our regional board chairs, with the governance to address these issues, and we will. It's true.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that Denise Young, the director of community development for the Calgary Scope Society, wrote to the minister and said: "Let me assure you that agency budgets have been cut in the Calgary region. We were originally asked to plan for a 2.6% cut on contracts, but this was later changed to a 2.38% cut," will the minister take back that last answer?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know that the budget has been increased overall by 4.6 per cent for PDD, don't you? You do. You know that. He knows that. I spoke with the regional chair, Alex Hillyard, for an hour yesterday about this issue, and he has assured me that he is working with families, that there are not essential decreases in services at all in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Tuition Fee Policy

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, last year the government introduced the Access to the Future Act, which outlined a commitment to accessible, affordable, and quality postsecondary education in the province.

As part of that commitment, the government promised that a new tuition fee policy would be developed. However, we've yet to see any changes in that tuition fee policy, which is dictated under the provisions of the Post-secondary Learning Act. Meanwhile, Alberta has the second-highest tuitions in Canada. My question is to the Premier. Given the fact that the new tuition policy cannot be introduced until the present legislation is changed and that there may be no fall sitting of the Legislature, how does the government propose to implement a new tuition fee policy?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Klein: No. It's an interesting question because it's a question that I was pondering.

I understand that our new Minister of Advanced Education is now preparing enabling legislation to be tabled this spring, not next spring but this spring, in this sitting, not the next sitting but this sitting, of the Legislature. Of course, this will pave the way for a new tuition policy to be implemented. I might add that it's not only tuition that is being considered but all other costs associated with achieving an advanced education.

Dr. Brown: My supplementary question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister advise when the new postsecondary student tuition policy would be announced and implemented?

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much for the question. Of course, the Premier is bang on. I think he pretty much covered it. We will have a new tuition policy in place this coming fall, giving institutions a full year to put the policy in place by September 2007. As the Premier said, we are paying tuition increases this coming fall, and we are scheduled to have a new tuition policy in place for September 2007, but our institutions need to know earlier than that. They need to know by about January 2007 in order to get their prospectuses and so on in place, so as the Premier suggested, I am as we speak planning to bring forward enabling legislation this spring that will allow us to implement the new policy.

Dr. Brown: My second supplementary is for the same minister. Can the minister assure Alberta students that any new policy will ensure that the tuition fees are not increased under the new policy?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, as you know, there have been some reports that have been leaked that I'm not all that sure were the actual reports, and I hope that the member who leaked them will change his distribution list to put me on his leak list.

Dr. Pannu: I'll do that.

Mr. Herard: Thank you.

You know, there were 3,000 people that worked on this project, a Learning Alberta project, and I know that they are going to be presenting some very good advice to us. What I can say to you, hon. member, is that those recommendations that currently fit the policy framework we will act upon immediately, and those that we need to bring in and discuss through SPC, cabinet, and caucus, new policies, we'll take through the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Children's Services Special Case Review

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the Children's Services minister announced that she was going to release all reviews conducted when a child who has had contact with Children's Services dies. When asked in this House about a specific case, that of Nina Courtepatte, the minister replied, "We'd be pleased to provide our special case review recommendations on this particular file." Almost a year later the minister has yet to make good on these commitments. To the Minister of Children's Services: given that the minister has had almost a year to put this incredibly important process into place, can the minister explain why family members and the public are being forced to wait so long for this information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a simple answer. The particular case the hon. member is referring to is still before the courts.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: can the minister tell us if the special case reviews which were supposed to be made public uncovered any serious concerns with the safety of children in provincial care?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to make comments on a specific case. I can tell the hon. member that any time we do a special case review and there are recommendations that come out of those special case reviews, we implement those recommendations.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: given that Albertans have a right to know that their children are safe in provincial care, will the minister commit to making the special case review information available to the public on the Children's Services website?

Mrs. Forsyth: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I brought that up. I mentioned that in the Legislature before. I said that under my ministry, which I took over in November of 2004, I have made it very clear that any time a child is seriously injured or dies in the ministry's care, we would be pleased to provide that special case review on our website. We have to make it clear: those reviews will not go on our website until they go through the judicial process and that is completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Highway Safety

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because of economic and population growth, highways have become much busier in Alberta. Highway 21 in my constituency is very busy, and there is also the potential for more collisions. In recent months we've had an increase in law enforcement presence on highway 21 thanks to a pilot project involving provincial sheriffs and the RCMP. Can the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security provide us with an update on how the pilot project is working?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Yes, the pilot project began this past January. One RCMP officer is working with two sheriffs in each of the communities of Fort McMurray and Boyle and two teams in Strathcona.

From the information that I've received recently, the enforcement is of a substantial nature. They are educating individuals. They are issuing not just summonses but, as well, warning tickets to individuals for all violations, whether they're stop signs, seat belts, or speeding, and a number of other summonses as well. The project is moving along and probably progressing a lot more positively than we originally thought. Actually, we've received overwhelming support from the communities, a number of e-mails coming into our office and to various officers regarding their support for seeing the additional enforcement on our highways, slowing down the traffic, and making our highways safer.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, since there has been successful enforcement and increased writing of tickets, could the minister let us know who receives the fine revenue?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue isn't about fine revenue. The issue is about traffic safety and the whole issue that the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation started two years ago with the McDermid report regarding looking at a traffic safety plan, vision 2010, looking at how we can make our highways safer throughout the province, what is required to do that, whether it's prevention and education programs as well as enforcement programs in the future, and how we can tie our enforcement capability together throughout the province utilizing sheriffs, utilizing transportation officers, utilizing the RCMP, utilizing the city police services in conjunction with the AMA to ensure that we have all those programs in place, including provincial checkpoint programs for impaired drivers, throughout the province.

So, yes, these funds do come to the province of Alberta, which goes into our revenue but will be extended back out into the community regarding programs such as this from which we're seeing a real benefit, and we'll see those numbers of fatalities decrease.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since there has been some positive reports and the minister has outlined some steps, could he elaborate on what the next steps will be throughout the province?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, another very good question. The next step, as I mentioned, is that we want to see a reduction in the number of fatalities and the number of serious injuries on Alberta's highways. Obviously, this has a huge impact on our health care system. If we can reduce the number of fatalities on our highways by one – and I'm hoping we can do it by at least 10 to 15 per cent – the additional enforcement that we provide will provide that education that we want to go to. But this pilot project is one where we're looking at a new model of service delivery, tying ourselves in with the RCMP, freeing up the RCMP to strengthen their time or add to their time on criminal investigations, allowing sheriffs to do traffic enforcement and allowing them to do traffic investigations up to injury accidents, working in a stronger partnership throughout the province in an integrated fashion. We will be looking in the future at those serious highways in the province like highway 43, highway 8, highway 1A, highway 21, and possibly highway 22 down south that have been and have proven to have been very dangerous to drive on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2:10 Sale of Surplus Crown Land in Edmonton

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January 2002 two numbered companies purchased 11 acres of land from this Progressive Conservative government in the new Cameron Heights subdivision for $55,000 per acre. These same two numbered companies also purchased land in 1999 in Cameron Heights from the Galfour Development Corporation for $21,600 per acre. Galfour Development Corporation got the land from this Progressive Conservative government for pennies per acre in 1988. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Given that this government sold land in the very same neighbourhood for $55,000 per acre in 2002, why did this Progressive Conservative government sell this land for pennies per acre in 1988?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, you know, talk about mixing apples and oranges. In 1988 the value of land was very depressed. In 2002 the value of land is up. So it's very, very plain to see why you would have two different prices.

Since we had difficulty yesterday getting the member to understand, I do want to add a couple of things about the sale of land. The process starts when a department declares land surplus and does not have use for it. The first step, of course, is to canvass the rest of the government whether, in fact, there is another department that has use for that land. I didn't mention that one yesterday. There is another case, Mr. Speaker, where occasionally you may have a parcel of land where access is nonexistent once we take what we need. We will then offer that land to the adjacent landowner. And there are times when we have sold land for $1. A good example is CKUA: we sold the building and land to them. In Red Deer at Michener Centre we sold the building that was damaged plus land to the regional health authority. In Wetaskiwin we sold the old courthouse, an historic site, to the city of Wetaskiwin for $1. So that is the range of things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that this land is worth at least $12 million today, why did this government not act as a land bank, hold onto the land? Why did you sell it? [interjections] I'm sorry?

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. He's got a question. Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Why was this land not held onto until 2002 and then sold after the Anthony Henday Drive was announced? That drove up the value of the land, and people are willing to pay $55,000 per acre for it. Taxpayers lost $12 million.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I guess that, once again, it is wonderful to have hindsight. Wonderful. None of us would ever make a mistake if, in fact, we knew that these things were going to happen. It's terribly unfortunate that the hon. member obviously has never dealt in land or anything else substantial. He would understand the way that prices go up and down, and it is extremely difficult to forecast. Really, is it a sole role of government to bank land until eventually the price goes up? I think not.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that taxpayers have lost $12 million in this neighbourhood alone because of this Progressive Conservative government's bumbling incompetence, when will you initiate a full, independent judicial inquiry into this deal, which has turned out to be a very, very bad deal for the taxpayers?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this is getting almost to the point of being ridiculous. To talk about a judicial inquiry over the legitimate sale of land I find almost unbelievable. I wish that the hon. member would really take a close look. He would see that, in fact, the process has been open, transparent. We attempted to get the best value for the government at the time. We're not going to end up trying to imagine what the value of land would be 10 years from now and then not sell anything up to that point. That makes no sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Battle River Water Supply

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Camrose in my constituency is a lively, growing community. As it continues to grow, there is a concern that in time development will be constrained by its water supply, which comes out of the Battle River and Driedmeat Lake. The concern centres on quantity and quality of water from the Battle River source. My questions are all to the Minister of Environment. What is Alberta Environment doing to ensure that reliable water supplies exist in the future for Battle River water users such as Camrose and surrounding villages and communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Water for Life strategy obviously is a very progressive strategy, and it's more than just a strategy and a policy. It is a strategy that has teeth. It has $172 million that has been committed to it. It really is so important in terms of water usage in bringing us all together, working together. Of course, right now, as I speak, watershed planning management is going on in the area, which is so important, bringing all of the users to the table because when we have all of the users at the table, we have to first determine what will be required to protect the ecological basin of the Battle River.

Second of all, then, is: what is required for its users? By working together in a plan under the Water for Life strategy, that's what we're doing so that we can protect well into the future, to allow our economies to grow but at the same time protect our basin.

Mr. Johnson: The second question to the same minister: given that the Battle River is facing increasing demands for its water, how will the minister ensure that the many groups competing for a water supply from this river will all have their voices heard?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. Having everyone at the table, as I mentioned in my previous answer, is so important, also balancing the environmental concerns, ecological concerns with economic development. So as we go forward, it's important to recognize in our Water for Life strategy – did you know that one of the goals of our Water for Life strategy in terms of conservation is to in fact improve water usage among the existing users as well as the new users who are coming to Alberta? One of those objectives is, in fact, to have a 30 per cent increase in terms of water usage by the year 2015, and we're on plan in order to achieve that objective in our Water for Life strategy.

Mr. Johnson: Again to the same minister: why don't you simply pipe water from the North Saskatchewan River, where it's not fully used, to the Battle River so that it can be fully used for the benefit of the people of the area?

Mr. Boutilier: I think, hon. member, that certainly could be one of the solutions, in fact, once we clearly understand the water usage, how it's being used, how we can improve the usage of the water. We also want to look at potential water supplies and alternatives. Some of that is off-stream storage, some of that potentially could be on-stream storage, and one of them is also potentially the transfer of water from the North Saskatchewan River, all of those options. All of the people at the table will be participating in that with that knowledge to get the right answer to protect the environment and also to ensure that our growing economy can in fact accommodate that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Provincial Parks Infrastructure

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mismatch of government spending and the priorities of Albertans is made clear by the recently released survey of visitors to the network of parks and recreation areas. Victims of shortsighted cutbacks, the basic infrastructure of everyday parks is in a poor state. My questions are all to the Minister of Community Development. Given that almost half of all campers surveyed had negative comments about facility conditions, will the government commit to rebuilding parks infrastructure across the province and not just in a few specific campgrounds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's parks attract 8.5 million visits a year; 1.5 million of those are from out of province and contribute $1.3 billion annually to Alberta's economy. Budget 2006 responds to the feedback that we've received in regard to our infrastructure deficiencies. Twenty-four million dollars in capital funding will renew aging park facilities, and another $1 million will help to operate four new interpretive centres and monitor water quality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Community Development: given that campers are dissatisfied with the value of the camping fee as it is now, how can the minister justify increasing the fee in the future, as the former minister stated in his press release?

2:20

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, for 2006 fees for basic campsites range from $5 to $20 per day depending on the location and the amenities that are being provided. Camping fees are dedicated revenue for Alberta parks and do not go into general provincial revenue. Those dollars are then reallocated back into the ministry to do further improvements.

Further, I'd like to comment, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta is one of the few jurisdictions that does not charge any fees for day use, and the majority of our visits are for day-use facilities.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, my third question, again to the Minister of Community Development: will the minister commit to improving park information services and improving the park reservation system to address the high levels of dissatisfaction with these services?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Ministry of Community Development will do whatever is in their power in terms of the proper things to ensure that the experiences in our parks are enjoyable for our visitors and for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has to give the final rubber stamp to admit temporary foreign workers. However, the entire rest of the process is controlled by the provincial government and employers such as the division 8 designation for the Horizon oil sands project and setting up a special group process for assessing qualifications. The Advanced Education minister admitted yesterday that out of 941 applications received, 836 temporary foreign workers have already been approved. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why are these 836 jobs not going to Albertans or Canadians, including aboriginals, youth, legal immigrants, or refugees already here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. For a number of weeks and months now, in fact, the issue of the temporary foreign workers has been brought up. When I look around this House, I see lots of foreign workers. In fact, I'm probably the only member that might not be. That's even questionable. What makes Alberta and Canada strong is that we are a multicultural society. Jobs are open to various nationalities, but our first priority is to hire Albertans, Canadians, aboriginals, persons with developmental disabilities, older workers that may be displaced. We have a hot economy out there. There are jobs for everybody.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish some on the other side were temporary foreign workers.

Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister. The minister repeated again that his first priority is Albertans, aboriginals. He goes through this particular line. My question is again: why, then, have these 836 jobs not gone to these people he's talking about and gone to temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, this member knows – he's been around the House a long enough time – that any approval of temporary foreign workers or immigrants is done by the federal government, not the province.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly the point I was making.

Why does this minister refuse to admit that it is his government, not the federal government, that is leading the parade when it comes to setting up special rules through measures such as the division 8 designation for the CNRL Horizon project and through such measures as fast-tracking the assessment of credentials of temporary foreign workers? That goes against the people that he's talking about.

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, again, this is what makes Canada strong. We are open. We are in a world economy now, and we have to share some of the benefits we have in Alberta. But when it comes to workers, Albertans, Canadians, persons with developmental disabilities, older workers like me, and aboriginal youth come first, and that's one very important area. There are 200,000 aboriginal youth between the ages of 15 and 24. With minor changes by the federal government – I have said this over and over again – we could have those 200,000 aboriginal youth working in those darn jobs in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Assistance for Alberta Athletes

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While it's true that Alberta athletes have enjoyed tremendous success on the international stage, including the Olympics, Paralympics, and Commonwealth Games recently, many of these athletes continue to struggle to make ends meet even as they're representing our country and dedicating themselves to be their absolute best. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. I know that these athletes currently receive some funding from Sport Canada through the athletes' assistance program, but what is this province doing to support its athletes?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member alluded to, these athletes who compete for Canada are supported through Sport Canada, an organization of the federal government. I'm unable to speak to their funding levels as it's not in the jurisdiction of this House. However, with Sport Canada responsible for funding national athletes, it allows this government to focus on two priorities. One, in supporting the development of provincial-level athletes, last fiscal year this government provided $12.8 million in funding to provincial sport associations and to sponsor the Alberta Games and Team Alberta at interprovincial and national events. Two, we are working with partners to provide exceptional training and competition facilities in our province for Canada's national athletes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have one supplemental question for the same minister. There's some good news; I'm hoping there's a little more. Over the years I've spoken with a lot of athletes at all levels across the province, and there's a common theme about this stretching of resources. My final question is: can they look forward to increased support when it comes to sport development programs and renewal of facilities that need renewal?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, we recently addressed these issues. The Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation will be receiving an additional $2.8 million to their annual operating budget this year, bringing that to $15.6 million for sport development. A portion of the increase will go to developing athletes by strengthening programs which have already produced many talented competitors who went on to become international stars.

Our second priority is to strengthen and renew our existing facilities, many of which are legacy projects from the 1988 Olympics in Calgary. These facilities are 20 years old now, Mr. Speaker, and need to be renewed to continue to be effective. The government is doing its part. We committed over $23 million this past year for the renewal of the Canmore Nordic Centre in time to host the first World Cup event in 16 years. The centre is also home to the national cross-country ski and biathlon team. We also provided $600,000 to upgrade the ski jump at Canada Olympic Park, ensuring that athletes can continue to train in Canada, and we will continue to work with our partners to see what else can be done.

The Speaker: As the hon. member had a preamble in his second question, I gather that he's waiving the third. Correct?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta spends only 5 per cent of its provincial GDP on health care, the lowest of any province in the country. Other measurements, like health spending as a per cent of government revenue or as a per cent of government expense, show that the numbers are declining. What we need from this government is fewer myths about health funding unsustainability and more answers about their real intentions. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the evidence that health care spending is not unsustainable, why does the minister only quote the total spending and ignore all other measurements?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that will happen tomorrow is that we will be able to provide not my view but the view of the people that did the actuarial analysis on modelling sustainability in terms of health care expenditure. I'm confident that then it will become clearer that our projections of doubling the number of people that are 65 and over, who currently consume about a third of the health care expenditure – when we double those in 2025 to about 18 per cent of Albertans that are 65 and over, if that same record holds true, we will have considerable pressure on continuous care, from long-term care, from pharmacare, new technology on the health care expenditure. It doesn't matter how much money you earn; it matters how responsible you are in the spending. So, quite frankly, I think we have to look to the future about sustainability.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: well, given that Aon Consulting found that private insurance models are not an affordable way to deal with health care pressures, is the minister planning to create or assist the private market for private insurance by delisting publicly insured services?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, yesterday there was an inquiry from the leader of the opposition, a member of the hon. member's own team, about if there was an intent to delist service. I identified at that time that neither in the policy document nor any other statement by any member of this government has there been any assigned delisting of service. I regret and I feel somewhat frustrated that people are attempting or that this member is attempting to scare or concern people about things that are absolutely not true, absolutely not planned, absolutely not the intention of this government.

Mr. Speaker, if I may go back to the point about how much money, today we spend about $400 more per man, woman, and child in Alberta than anyplace else in Canada. How much more should we spend to get to the right number for the hon. member opposite?

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: given that upcoming legislation will "establish a process for determining essential services,” is it the minister’s plan, as a way to save the government money in the future, to withhold public health care insurance coverage for any new procedures, technologies, or pharmaceuticals?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when the legislation is tabled, then we can have the conversation.

Vignettes from the Assembly’s History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the first of several members to participate, our historical vignette of the day. On this day we commemorate the remembrance of the Holocaust. I would like to quote directly text found on pages 213 and 215 in the book The War that United the Province: 1939-1945, volume 8 in the series Alberta in the 20th Century. This text that I’m going to quote is written by Steve Weatherbe, and I will quote the text in its entirety. I begin now.

Aberhart, despite his own Germanic background, was unflagging in his support for the postwar dismemberment of Germany.

This did not stop his critics from hinting at secret Nazi sympathies; no populist radical was safe from such libels. It was all the worse for Aberhart because his enemies were willing to take his fights with Ottawa as evidence of sedition. National commentator C.S. Burchill warned readers of the National Home Monthly that Alberta was rife with Nazi sympathizers and that Aberhart led the pack. Burchill cited the Germanic ancestry not only of Aberhart but also of his civil servants; 250 of their names began with “K,” he noted, while a further 46 opened with the even more sinister “Sch.” Clearly, Alberta was “ripe for treachery.”

As the war progressed and Hitler’s extermination of European Jewry came to light, anti-Semitism became more disreputable, but it thereby became a convenient weapon to be used against one’s political foes. To the embarrassment of Aberhart and his senior cabinet minister Ernest Manning, their ideological inspiration, Britain’s Major C.H. Douglas, grew increasingly anti-Semitic during the war years. Aberhart shared Douglas’s conspiratorial world view, but considered the ethnicity of the “Big Shots” and international financiers to be irrelevant. Whereas Douglas (like Hitler) swore by the Protocols of the Elders of Zion, a phony document whipped up by the Tsarist secret police and purporting to detail a Jewish plot for world domination, Aberhart and Manning denounced them as a fabrication. Incredibly, Douglas came to believe that Hitler himself was part of the Jewish conspiracy and was faking the final solution in order to spread Jewish agents, disguised as refugees, throughout the world.

Many of these ideas were transmitted to Alberta through the Social Credit Board, which at one point had sought, almost successfully, to overthrow Aberhart. By 1940 the board’s chief representative was L.D. Byrne, one of two Social Credit experts Douglas had sent to Alberta to guide the province in instituting Social Credit doctrine. In 1942 Aberhart’s many Jewish supporters demanded he purge the anti-Semites in his party and repudiate Douglas. He responded that he lacked the power to oust members but promised to do what he could “to put the brakes on this foolish spirit of anti-Semitism.” Both Aberhart and Manning made statements denouncing anti-Semitism. Through the Bible institute’s publication The Prophetic Voice Aberhart declared that any nation that harmed its Jews was cursed before God.

Yom ha-Shoa, Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you mentioned, today marks a very important day, Holocaust Memorial Day, or Yom ha-

Shoa. In recognition, Albertans are encouraged to join communities around the world today to remember and reflect on the persecution of over 6 million people of the Jewish faith as well as millions of others who have perished in acts of genocide.

Through our remembrance we mark our respect and extend our compassion to the Jewish community. In addition to raising awareness and understanding of the Holocaust, ceremonies around the province give Albertans a chance to show their understanding and compassion for those who have suffered and continue to feel the repercussions of the Holocaust.

While this is a day of remembrance, Mr. Speaker, I would also suggest that it is a day for action. I would urge all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to actively promote acceptance of all people and to protect their rights and uphold our way of life in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Canadian Transplant Association Transplant Games

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are among the most generous people in Canada. We know this because we boast the highest levels of volunteerism in the country. Yesterday in this House the Minister of Health and Wellness recognized that this is national organ donation awareness week. I don’t want to repeat the excellent comments made by the minister, but I did want to share with the House a unique event taking place in Edmonton this summer.

I’d like to invite Albertans to continue with this spirit of giving by getting involved with the national Transplant Games, which will take place in the city from August 8 to 13. The national Transplant Games is Canada’s largest organ donation awareness event, in which transplant recipients of all ages gather to celebrate the active, healthy lifestyle possible for many following transplantation. The games offer transplant recipients an opportunity to say thank you to their families and health care professionals for the care they provided and continue to provide. The games also send a message of thanks to the many donor families who made the difficult decision to donate their loved ones’ organs, and they send a message of hope to the thousands of Canadians who are still waiting for their second chance at life.

I encourage all Albertans to continue with their spirit of giving and to volunteer their time to the Canadian Transplant Association for this very important event. More details can be found at www.cta-alberta.com.

Thank you.

Wilderness Association Climb for Wilderness

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to congratulate everyone at the Alberta Wilderness Association on an extremely well-organized event that was held this past Saturday. During the annual Earth Day climb and run for wilderness almost a thousand athletes climbed all 802 stairs of the Calgary Tower, right to the top. They raised more than $100,000 for wilderness and wildlife protection in Alberta.

The top climbers on a team were Luke Way, who matched his record of 30 ascents, and Rosemary Gerspacher, with 28. The youngest climber was only two years old – that was little Madelaine – and if that’s not impressive enough, Mr. Speaker, I’m pleased to report that the most experienced climbers were also the top individual fundraisers. Phyllis Hart is 91 years old. She raised $2,700 and climbed the tower twice, while Ward Neale, who's 82 years young, raised $970 and started the day with a one-kilometre run and a trip to the top of the tower, topped it off with another eight climbs of the tower.

Mr. Speaker, our hon. Liberal colleagues challenged our PC caucus in the event, and despite great efforts they couldn't quite beat us in the number of team climbs. Let's just say that we were able to reach just a little bit above and beyond in terms of fundraising in the midst of our friendly rivalry.

I'd like to thank my colleagues and our Calgary-Lougheed PC Association for their support and acknowledge my fellow climbers, including Joey Redman, who's here today as part of your MLA for a Day program; my web page designer, Thaddeus Brasok, and his little son, Harrison; Jim Hoey of TV's The Dimestore Fisherman; and the ever impressive Member for Calgary-Foothills as well. Perhaps you'll join us next year in the climb, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Centennial of Labour Organizations

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On August 6, 1906, the Edmonton Trades & Labour Council was issued its first charter. This document recognized the council as the voice for labour in Edmonton and northern Alberta. This year, 2006, marks 100 years of labour council activity in Edmonton and northern Alberta.

The first council has grown and developed and given us the northern Alberta building trades council and the Edmonton & District Labour Council. It is the centennial year for both organizations, and for those 100 years I present the thanks of all Albertans. I present the thanks from the people of our great province for building much of Alberta. Many of the great buildings, the oil sands plants, the power plants, the technical institutes, the universities, the schools, the roads, and so, so many things that we call and recognize as our Alberta were a result of the sweat from the brows of workers proud to be members of these councils. Our Alberta workers are truly the real Alberta advantage.

Nursing us back to health, clearing the snow, administering our governments: so, so many things have been done by these Alberta workers. There is so much more that we must thank these councils and their members for: weekends off, overtime pay, fair wages, safety legislation, child labour laws, and the many things that have built up and grown the fabric of Alberta society. These were a result of the work and pressure from these labour councils and their members. These councils have pushed us to build and strengthen medicare for most of the last 100 years and continue to make it part of the Alberta advantage.

Members of their affiliated unions have been elected as Members of this Legislative Assembly for almost every party that has stood in this House. They may have had different perspectives, but they all knew the value of work, the value of working people, and the progress that the union centrals have worked for and won.

I congratulate both the Edmonton & District Labour Council and the northern Alberta building trades council for their first 100 years, for all that they have accomplished, and for all that will come in the future.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past month the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports has repeatedly stood in this House and denied that cuts to PDD programs and services were taking place in the province. Well, a number of people took time out of their day to come to the Legislature today to protest the government's funding plan, and the hundreds of letters received by my colleagues and I demonstrate that these cuts are an immediate reality for many Albertans. The minister attempts to hide behind a small increase in the dollars allocated to PDD but refuses to acknowledge that inflation and the costs of rapidly increasing caseloads have far outstripped this meagre increase.

As the minister knows, an inexcusable number of disabled Albertans live on or below the poverty level. Even those families who have higher incomes face challenges that result from managing the individual needs and health complications of loved ones. Regardless of income, disabled Albertans and their families face particular obstacles and barriers to full participation in society. If the government doesn't have a role to play in supporting people past these barriers, then who does?

I find it striking that in most of the phone calls, e-mails, and letters I have received, the main emphasis is on supporting people's participation in the communities: finding work, doing volunteer activities, socializing and engaging in activities which many of us take for granted but which pose challenges for many PDD clients. These are not unrealistic demands, and indeed funding such programs ought to have a higher priority than providing $360 million in corporate tax cuts and $400 million lost to a shift to income trust. Ultimately the demands being made are more than reasonable. The government should make a strong commitment to improving the wages of PDD staff and protecting those wages from inflation. It should also ensure that none of the PDD's clients or their families have services reduced. The services are an important part of ensuring that all Albertans are able to be contributing and happy members of our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to showcase the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society. The organization lists their mission as being dedicated to immigrants and their families in order to ensure that they have the opportunity to become full participants, both as beneficiaries and contributors, in Canadian society. Their vision that equal and open participation by immigrants and refugees is possible and should be strived for is certainly something that I believe in as a member of this Assembly.

I am mentioning this fine organization here today in recognition of the 10th annual immigrants of distinction awards, that were held on Thursday, April 20. The Calgary Immigrant Aid Society holds these awards as a means to recognize the exceptional achievements and contributions of immigrants and refugees within the city of Calgary.

Specific awards were given in the categories of arts and culture, business, community service, and distinguished professional. Of course, it's difficult to choose a winner in competitions of this nature, especially considering the great accomplishments of many new Calgarians. Proof of this lies in the fact that the award of distinguished professional was shared by both nominees, Margaret Styczynska and Sinisa Sonny Tomic. Winners in the other categories included Nashir Samanani of Elluminate Inc. for the business award, Tsenden Dhogonpa for the area of community service, and Alexandra Haeseker in the arts and culture section.

The Calgary Immigrant Aid Society is committed to equity, inclusion, diversity, and accountability. The award recipients personify these attributes, and I hope that this Assembly continues to uphold and strengthen these principles through our words and actions. The efforts of the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society and the winners and nominees of the 10th annual immigrants of distinction awards contribute to the strength of this great province every day, and I'd like to thank them for their great work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because of the distance from the capital I very seldom get guests. It takes considerable effort and time and money to come and visit us, so I'm very pleased today that I do have a group. I hope that they're still upstairs. I think they are. They're from the Living Springs Christian school in my constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti. There are 12 students and seven adults in the group. The teacher is Miss Amy Bueckert. The parent helpers are Mr. Lynn Isaac, Mrs. Nancy Isaac, Mr. Galen Loetkeman, Mrs. Glenda Loetkeman, Mr. Tim Toews, and Mrs. Starla Toews. I would like us to show our welcome to them in appreciation of the effort they made to come and visit us today.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition to the Assembly that I recently received from 103 staff members and students of Fairview's St. Thomas More Catholic school regarding a smoke-free Alberta. This is to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking as reported by Health Canada.

I've got the necessary copies. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 208 Albertans asking for the maintenance of universal public health care and our medicare system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be tabling tomorrow.

head: 2:50 Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation on behalf.

Bill 38

Livestock Identification and Commerce Act

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act, for first reading. This being a money bill, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has been informed of the contents of this bill and recommends the same to the Legislature.

This bill consolidates and revises provisions of the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, and the Livestock and Livestock Products Act. The bill seeks to facilitate fair commerce, increase the protection available for livestock buyers, and promote the integrity of marketing practices within the livestock industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several documents to table today. The first is a budget planning document from the Edmonton PDD board. Despite small funding increases the board predicts a sizable deficit that will necessitate cuts to the PDD services.

I also have a letter from Denise Young, the director of community development for the Calgary Scope Society. The letter and accompanying sample contract illustrate the harmful impacts of the 2.38 per cent reduction in agency budgets caused by a PDD funding shortfall.

I also have two samples of the 200-plus letters I've received on this issue. One is from Derrick Seabrook, who is very concerned that they will lose the excellent staff at his home.

The second is writing on behalf of Joanne Visser, who is her sister. She points out that thanks to PDD and other services her sister has moved from institutionalized care into a community setting, where she has thrived. She is thoroughly disheartened that her sister and others like her will have their funding slashed by $500 per month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the program for the 2006 Food for All Seasons: Feed Edmonton's Food Bank gala, which took place on Thursday, April 13. It was a wonderful evening in support of a great cause, and I thoroughly enjoyed visiting with the outstanding volunteers and benefactors, listening to the keynote speaker, Ms Paula Simons, and the live auction by Mark Cunningham. I felt welcomed and appreciated as not only . . .

The Speaker: We're just going to table it, okay?

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. Thank you.

The second one, then, is a letter from an Edmonton-McClung constituent. Her name is Dr. Minnan Liu. She's really concerned about allegations that the Chinese government is harvesting organs without consent from living Falun Gong practitioners in concentration death camps, gives examples, and wants us here in the House to condemn this brutal persecution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 10 letters from families, staff, and residents of long-term care expressing their concerns. The letters are from James New, Herta Duncan, Denise Ryan, Hope Pennock, S.M. and N.L. Tomlinson, Mary Pasula, Marilyn Slemko, A.M. Rennie, Raminder Gill, and Carlene Lewis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that I'm still receiving letters from constituents regarding the third way, I've made a commitment to those individuals to continue to table their letters. I have one from a constituent by the name of Mr. Ronald Goss, who says no way to the third way; one from constituent Valerie Moore, who says that "it is time for this government to listen to the people"; and one from constituent Dorothy Tovell, who says, "Please do not support legislation that threatens our public health care system."

As well, Mr. Speaker, a number of tablings. I made a commitment last night during debate to table copies of newspaper articles showing Conservative MLAs handing out cheques, representing them as if they're coming from the MLAs themselves. I have a copy of the Nanton News showing the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development handing out a cheque for $600,000, with his name on it as if it were written by himself; a copy of a newspaper clipping showing the MLA for West Yellowhead handing out a cheque for $1.35 million; a copy of the Cold Lake Sun showing the Minister of Community Development handing out a cheque for $300,000; and lastly, a copy of the Ponoka News showing the MLA for Lacombe-Ponoka handing out a cheque for $734,000, once again very clearly with his personal signature on it, representing it as if this money is coming from himself.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 10 letters today. These letters are from families, staff, and residents who are involved or are dependants within the continuing care system with their concerns. These letters are signed by Joyce Prosper, Phan Wu Yuan, Rani Anand, Dorothy Butte, Asmeret Tekie, Bella Chin, Linda Song, Virginia Capicio, Cindy Fung, and Dorothy Chand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. This is information supporting my question today in the Legislative Assembly. The first one is from the city of Edmonton, the tax assessment and collection property tax search summary for 11 acres of land that's described as plan 0024559, lot A, in Cameron Heights.

The second is proof from the Alberta Gazette from January 31, 2002, of the sale of this land for $614,400 to the numbered companies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have eight letters that are from family, staff, and residents who work with or are dependent on the continuing care system. They are signed by Awetash Terere,* Dalida Tobar, Pamela Burgess, Jeanne Jensen, Jean Jackson, Elizabeth Csunyagh,* Liberty Pestano, and Karen Molloy.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Facilities Review Committee Act the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report 2004-2005, April 1, 2004, to March 31, 2005; pursuant to the Dental Disciplines Act and the Health Professions Act the Alberta Dental Association and College 2004-2005 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists 2005 annual report; annual report for the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta 2004-2005.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Education

The Deputy Chair: As per our standing orders, the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and colleagues in the Legislature, for this opportunity to present our estimates for the Ministry of Alberta Education for kindergarten to grade 12 programs and so on.

I want to begin, Mr. Chair, by just briefly introducing some folks who are here, who help serve the interests of K to 12 education in the province. Sitting in the members' gallery are my deputy minister, Keray Henke; assistant deputy minister Mat Hanrahan; assistant deputy minister Lois Hawkins; Jeff Olson, executive director of finance and strategic services; George Lee, senior manager of corporate budgets, finance and strategic services; Brad Smith, senior manager of school budgeting and funding, finance and strategic services; and Bob McManus, assistant director of communications. Listening somewhere, with a brief eye ailment, is our director of communications, Kathy Telfer, and my executive assistant, Pam Boutilier, is working away listening in as well. I wonder if they would just rise and receive the warm thanks and welcome of the House for their outstanding service. Thank you, all.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by explaining that the mission of Alberta Education is to show leadership and to work with our stakeholders to make sure that students attain the knowledge and skills they need for lifelong learning, work, and citizenship. Seven basic principles are at the centre of our business planning for Alberta's kindergarten to grade 12 education system. Those principles serve to inform us that we are student-centred and that our highest priority is the success of our students, that every student has the right of equitable access to a quality education consistent with their needs and abilities, that we are collaborative, that we are innovative, that we are accountable to Albertans, and, finally, that parents and students have choices because the education system is flexible and responsive to student needs.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

That's the opening, Mr. Chairman, that will guide the rest of this afternoon's discussion.

With that, I hope I am able to move these estimates at this time and continue on with the permission of the chair.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you may.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much. In that vein, then, I would like to move specifically to the 2006-2009 business plan, which identifies strategic priorities that the government of Alberta supports in our three-year business plan. That includes support for the healthy development of Alberta's children and youth, success for First Nation, Métis, and Inuit learners, preparing Albertans for lifelong learning, ensuring the financial stability and accountability of the kindergarten to grade 12 education system, and of course keying in on school infrastructure needs.

Albertans expect our education system to prepare our students to succeed in a future of unlimited possibilities, and with this in mind, Mr. Chair, I am both pleased and honoured to present these budget estimates and the business plan for '06-07. However, before we examine the budget estimates in any great detail, I want to specifically note for everyone's attention that there are seven programs that will be referenced in the budget this coming year. This aligns with the seven programs of the Alberta Education income statement. The breakdown of those different programs begins on page 135 of the budget document.

The budget estimates before us today will provide a 6.7 per cent increase, or an additional $330 million, in program support toward the K to 12 education system, for a grand total of $5.3 billion in the 2006-2007 fiscal year. Our voted estimates begin on page 133 of the 2006-07 government and lottery fund estimates book, and as questions come my way, I would appreciate it if people would mention a page number and perhaps, if it's available, an element number, which will make responding to questions much more efficient.

Before we get into the nitty-gritty of the budget, I also want to explain that the Ministry of Education budget has two primary funding streams. The first stream is what we call voted government and lottery fund estimates, which total $3.82 billion and comprise about 70 per cent of our budget and which we will be voting on today. The second stream of funding comes from education property taxes, which total about $1.48 billion and comprise the remaining 30 per cent of our Education budget for K to 12. About $1.3 billion of that $1.48 billion resides in what we call the Alberta school foundation fund, which, as we all know, is governed by statute. The remainder, or about $169 million, goes directly from municipalities to those local separate school boards that choose to collect their education property taxes in that manner. When we combine the $3.82 billion in voted estimates with the $1.48 billion in education property taxes, it brings the total support for kindergarten to grade 12 education to the $5.3 billion for government's '06-07 fiscal year which I mentioned a few minutes ago.

Now, with respect to the programs. Program 1, ministry support services, is the corporate function of our department. Support to this area will actually decrease by $1.2 million, primarily due to funding for one-time initiatives for technology that were generously provided in 2005-06. Because they were one-time, they weren't carried forward, so there's an explanation for that decrease.

Program 2, operating support for public and separate schools, will increase by $185 million, or by 8.2 per cent, up to $2.45 billion. This money will go almost entirely towards increased grant funding for 62 school jurisdictions and 13 charter school operations. This $185 million increase represents only the general revenue fund portion of support to school boards. Another $1.3 billion in support comes from education property taxes, as I mentioned previously. In total, government and education property tax support to public and separate school boards increases by $194 million, up to $3.9 billion for 2006-07. This represents an increase of about 5.2 per cent for this fiscal year, not for the school year, which starts September 1, or five-twelfths of the way through our fiscal year.

Operating support for public and separate schools includes grant dollars for our renewed funding framework, which will be going into its third school year of implementation this September. This framework is very important to school boards because it provides them with both per capita funding and credit enrolment unit instructional grants that give locally elected school boards flexibility to meet local priorities. Plus, that renewed funding framework also provides differential or additional funding for cost differences that are beyond the control of an individual school board. These differences take into account factors such as large changes in enrolment, differences in the number of special-needs students, the requirement to operate small schools in remote areas, and/or higher costs of doing business as a result of geography, and so on.

Now, with respect to the school year, as opposed to the government's fiscal year, base instruction grants will increase by 3 per cent for the 2006-07 school year. All other grants will increase by 2 per cent.

The Education budget also anticipates and will provide funding for increasing numbers of children with special needs and for students who require English as a Second Language programming whether they are Canadian-born or foreign-born. In fact, Mr. Chair, grant rates will increase in these areas by 2 per cent, and there is also an allowance for a 7 per cent increase in the number of children receiving early childhood services, ECS, funding for mild and moderate special needs, a 10 per cent increase in the number of children requiring program unit, or PUF, funding, and a 12 per cent increase in the number of students requiring instruction for English as a Second Language.

This budget also carries forward support for high-speed networking so that schools can take full advantage of the SuperNet and of the transportation fuel subsidy to address the continued high cost of fuel for school busing.

Under the banner of provincial initiatives where we actually specify where and how dollars may be spent, the budget also provides increased grants to school boards for our class size reduction initiative. That will be an increase of $16.6 million, up to $126 million in other words, which represents an increase of 15.1 per cent.

At the start of the class size initiative it was recognized that lowering the class sizes in kindergarten to grade 3 would be the most challenging task. Now that the 2005-06 jurisdiction class size reports have been reviewed, we know that all grade groupings are at or below the guidelines set out in ACOL, or virtually all of them are, with the exception of kindergarten to grade 3. By the end of the 2005-06 school year, which is rapidly approaching, all school boards were to have an average class size in kindergarten to grade 3 of 18.5 students. In fact, 38 school jurisdictions will not quite meet that target if something is not done, and this is a concern.

At the same time, we have also heard that some school jurisdictions are having difficulty continuing to meet next year's guidelines due to challenges such as availability of classroom space and recruitment of new teachers. Therefore and because of these reasons, school boards will be given additional flexibility and a little more time to plan for and to reach the average class size guidelines that were recommended by Alberta's Commission on Learning. That recommendation suggested that those jurisdiction averages be met in a five-year time frame. We have done our best to try and get them accomplished in the three-year window, but through my discussions with school boards, we encountered what some of their challenges were, so we've allowed an extension of time and flexibility to help address the situation.

For the 2006-07 school year funding will be focused as follows. One, all school boards will receive a 3 per cent increase to their 2004-05 class size reduction funding initiative to ensure that they can retain the 1,685 teachers they have hired over the past two years as part as our class size reduction initiative. Two, the 38 school jurisdictions that have averages in kindergarten to grade 3 above 18.5 students will in fact receive the funding necessary to reach a jurisdictional average of 18.5 for kindergarten to grade 3.

Obviously, this will require about another 250 teachers – new, additional teachers, I want to stress – who will need to be hired, and this budget will help provide the funds to help accomplish those new hirings. To ensure that school jurisdictions can attract and retain the 250 teachers required to get to that guideline of 18.5 students per class, funding will be allocated based on $70,400 per teacher. This, Mr. Chair, is the midpoint of the teacher salary grid.

This budget also provides a 6 per cent increase to another important area, which we refer to as student health initiative partnerships. We have 15 of these that provide integrated health, therapy, and emotional and behavioural supports for identified children with special health needs.

Funding for the AISI project will also increase; that is, our Alberta initiative for school improvement. That increase will be 2 per cent, and it will go up to $71 million for local innovative programs and projects. Mr. Chair, these projects include things like professional learning communities in schools, early literacy, math skills, and stay in school programs that support student learning. I might stress that this money will fund the first year of a new cycle of three-year projects for this highly successful AISI initiative.

Program 3, which is support for teachers' pensions, will increase by 6.3 per cent, or by $20 million, up to $339 million. Of that amount, $152 million will address government's responsibility for the unfunded liability of the Alberta teachers' pension plan, and $187 million will go towards government's share of the current service payments.

Under current legislation, Mr. Chair, government is responsible for two-thirds of the unfunded pension liability for teachers and for one-half of teachers' contributions for current service; in other words, for service earned as a teacher after 1992. The increase, of course, is due to higher contribution rates that were implemented in September 2005 as well to teacher salary and grid movement increases and, finally, to additional pension costs associated with hiring more than 250 new teachers starting this coming September under the small class size initiative.

Program 4, which is program delivery support services, is a program that provides help for delivery and development of curriculum standards, governance, achievement and diploma testing and rewrites, technology support to develop and deliver print and electronic learning resources for teachers and students, and, finally, for corporate administration such as financial reporting and budgets. This program will increase by 1.1 per cent, or by $667,000, up to $59.7 million.

I should point out, Mr. Chair, that about one-half of this program is related to ministry salaries. The increase will support negotiated salary increases for staff. The other half of this program is related to bringing in expertise for assistance, such as contracting teachers to mark diploma exams or to assist in curriculum development and so on.

Program 5, quickly, is basic education programs. In this envelope we provide support for teaching and learning resources, and we provide technology support, such as high-speed networking connectivity. Support for this program will decrease by 5.5 per cent, or $4.5 million, due to a $6 million projected decrease in sales of learning resource materials and a $0.5 million decrease for one-time funding provided last year related to student transcripts, that will not be required this year. This is offset by a $2 million increase to support high-speed networking.

I also want to clarify, Mr. Chair, that last year our Learning Resources Centre experienced exceptionally high sales volumes due to a special agreement we have with the B.C. government for learning resources. In fact, we saw $6 million in one-time sales toward the very end of the year as a result. This was an initiative where the B.C. government provided one-time funding to their school boards in 2005-06 for textbooks and learning resources, which they ordered through our Alberta Learning Resources Centre. We do not expect that same level of sales from B.C. again this year, and that accounts for the bulk of the decrease, for those members who were asking or were wondering about it.

Technology support for high-speed networking will actually increase under this envelope by about $2 million, up to about a total of $8 million.

Program 6, Mr. Chair, provides support for Alberta's accredited private schools, private early childhood services operators, and for designated special education private schools. This program will increase by 5 per cent, or $6.4 million, to $135.5 million.

I see that the time is ticking away on us quickly here, so I'll just jump to program 7. I'll come back and answer questions in more detail on program 6 if anyone wishes. Program 7 provides support for school facilities or infrastructure, which, I think everyone here would know, was officially transferred April 1, 2006, to Alberta Education from the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation. Therefore, funding for school facilities now resides entirely within Alberta Education's budget, and there are three envelopes there: one for school construction or school capital, the other one is for infrastructure maintenance renewal, and the third one is for plant operations and maintenance. Perhaps we'll get into some discussion as to those amounts in specifics; however, suffice it to say that the total amount being transferred from the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation over to the Ministry of Education will be about $734 million this particular year.

Mr. Chair, I'll just conclude by stressing that with the money that we're getting into Education under the infrastructure banner from Infrastructure and Transportation, we will conclude 21 school capital projects this year. In other words, 21 new projects will be completed. We will also have built and placed about 109 modular classrooms, and together we'll be providing more than 10,000 brand new spaces for Alberta students.

We're very proud of our education system. We're very proud of our teachers, of our students, of our administrators, of our trustees, and together we will continue providing the best education system in all of Canada as we strive to become one of the best in all of the world.

I will look forward to some lively questions and answers now, Mr. Chair, and I would just remind hon. members to please cite a page number and an element number if you could. That would help facilitate speedier answers.

Thank you for your kind attention.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I may not be able to follow the format that the minister has set for me in terms of pages and so forth. Our team will comment on different parts of the budget. I believe I heard the minister say that the transfer of funds – and maybe you could just nod to me if I'm on the right track – for infrastructure was April 1, '06. Was that correct, Mr. Minister? Thanks very much.

From what I'm able to gather, Mr. Chair, professional people across the province – trustees, teachers, the ATA – refer to this as a hold-the-line budget. With this in mind we're going to go through it, if the minister doesn't mind, on some topic areas, starting by raising the issue of infrastructure because our mail and phone calls and delegations tell us that there is a serious infrastructure problem or deficiency across the province. We look at that as about a $400 million infrastructure deficiency. There are hundreds of new neighbourhoods across the province that have no schools: 40 neighbourhoods in Calgary and 75 in Edmonton.

The other thing that bothers us terribly is that there doesn't seem to be an acknowledgement of the community school concept in our urban centres, and that concerns us.

The government has met with school districts to discuss off-budget spending for schools. Considering that each school district provides capital plans to the minister, and therefore the minister knows what the capital priorities are and could have included these priorities in this budget, why is there no money in the budget for new schools? It seems to me that we're here in '06-07 discussing the budget, and we are not clear why there is no money for new schools in the budget. We look at the media and press releases, and we hear that there will be new funding announcements just around the corner.

My question to the minister is: where is democracy in a system that relies excessively on off-budget spending? Why weren't these schools, the capital projects that school boards have submitted to the minister, in the budget to enable us to discuss these issues presently while we go through this budget? Why won't the minister commit to debating the budget for new schools in the Legislature with other budget estimates? Quite frankly, it smells a little bit like a political agenda, but he'll probably straighten me out on that.

What is the plan to address the problems of infrastructure in schools in Alberta, Mr. Minister? Maybe you could tell us that. How can the minister talk about the best education system in the world when the schools are literally crumbling around students' feet. We have heard of the problems in Grande Prairie and some of the issues there. We have heard even my own colleague talking about the Ellerslie campus, about the water problem. So we think one of the biggest issues in the budget that bothers us is that there's no clarification about what's going to happen with schools across Alberta. Trustees are saying to me: "Why doesn't the minister listen to our plans and discuss them with us? Do we not have priority? Why is he taking up all this administrative time getting us to submit these plans to the minister and not doing anything about it?" I think one of the biggest areas is the Calgary public school board. They have a number of issues. I've certainly read some of the letters that the chairman has written; they've been well written and well documented. So that's the first big issue, Mr. Minister, that maybe you could clarify for us.

The next one we look at is students with special needs. We raise the issue of students with special needs. One significant concern is funding for students with severe disabilities. This group receives about $20,000 a year when they require a full-time aide costing $50,000 a year. The business plan states that there is more money for children with special needs. I guess what we're asking, Mr.

Minister, if you could help us, is: where is this described in the budget, this more money for this particular group of pupils? Is the specific problem of funding for aides, teachers' assistants, going to be addressed by this budget or something down the line that we don't know about? What exactly are the increases in special-needs funding? How is this budget going to change conditions for children with special needs in Alberta schools? We'd like some clarification if we can get it on that, sir.

The next issue – and the minister talked about it in his good summary at the beginning – is the class size initiative. The class size initiative received, I believe, in the budget $126 million this year, or an increase of 15.1 per cent. We are concerned, sir, about how slowly class sizes are being reduced, the link between class size and infrastructure, and how the class size is calculated. Class sizes are becoming smaller as mandated by the class size initiative; however, the utilization formula has not changed. The utilization rate for the school is calculated by dividing enrolment by capacity with complex adjustments for special cases. Smaller class sizes lower the utilization rate, making it more difficult to gain funding for new infrastructure under existing practices, sir.

How is the minister addressing the conflicting demands of the class size initiative and the school utilization formula? Will the class size initiative provide capital funding for schools or just funding for more teachers? We're not sure about that. For example, in my constituency we have a problem with infrastructure and space as we try and get more teachers involved. Is the funding sufficient to meet the class size targets described in the Learning Commission report? That is 17 students for K to 3, 23 students for grades 4 to 6, 25 students for grades 7 to 9, and 27 students for grades 10 to 12.

The Learning Commission recommended average class sizes for school jurisdictions rather than legislated, hard-and-fast rules for maximum class sizes. Considering that we have received reports of teachers with classes of over 35 students despite the class size initiative – and I think you talked a little bit about that in the percentage that you mentioned; you may want to bring that in here – would the minister consider measures other than jurisdictional averages to assess actual class sizes? Or will the minister acknowledge this weakness and take steps to address the calculations of average class sizes by removing abnormally small classes from the calculation? I'll be interested in hearing comments on that, sir, because I found this difficult to understand. Maybe you can clarify this for me. That's why I raise these questions.

The other issue that we'd like to address, if we can, is plant operation and maintenance, sir. If we understand it, PO and M increased by $19 million, or 5.1 per cent. This increase is barely above the 3.5 inflationary increase, and I think the increase went up a quarter today, if I heard correctly, but I may be wrong about that. PO and M has been an area where the government has requested supplementary supply of $24 million in 2005-06. We recognize that in that I think there was money for diesel and that kind of thing. So we understand the issue there, but maybe you'd like to clarify a little bit more if this is going to be adequate. Will the budget increase of 5.1 per cent be sufficient to provide the boards with the stable, sufficient, and predictable funding they require to plan for the whole year, or will boards need to come cap in hand for another allotment in mid-year? In other words, will there be enough money to carry on with plant operation and maintenance in the budget as you see it, sir? Maybe you can give us some insight on that.

Then we move to – and we may be wrong on this one – staffing of the department. It's my understanding – and I could be wrong in these figures – that presently there's an increase from 691 to 696 staff in the central office. We would like to know what this staff will be used for and what divisions or branches of the department they will work in. We'd like to have some insight into that. We'll look forward to your answer to give us some clarification on that.

Now, one of the areas – and I haven't got the necessary background on this – is the funding model and audits, and one of my colleagues will speak more in depth about this. The government completes audits of a school in a jurisdiction. If overspending is discovered, funds are clawed back in future years. The clawback takes funding from future students, who were in no way involved with the overspending. As such, this process seems to be unfair to future generations of students. If the minister is aware of clawbacks as a result of audits based on credits taught, such as those in St. Albert Catholic high school, why is the minister allowing this practice to continue?

Now, you know, many times I'm asked: is criticizing the good minister about what he's doing all you can do? I think that's a good point. In terms of asking the minister if he has a vision down the line, I would just like to spend a few moments talking about what we would do as a government if we were to form the government, what we would do that's different than what's presently going on.

One of the things that we would do as a Liberal government in Alberta: we would look at full junior and full-day kindergarten right across the province. We would also look at diagnostic testing for K to 3. We would get rid of achievement testing at the grade 3 level and maybe carry it on at 6, 9, and 12, but certainly we would do more remedial work at the elementary level. We would do more screening with students. We would do more helping them prepare for learning. We think this is very, very important. We think the government is remiss by spending a lot of money foolishly at the elementary level.

We think that having access to specialists in schools such as social workers, guidance counsellors, and psychologists is crucial. We think that there's a need for a vocational thrust through the system, not only in the sense of saying that we're going to do something about the vocational thing but giving it some credence, giving it some prestige, and having a program for vocational students with a diploma in vocational education or a diploma in career education, something of that nature, to recognize the importance of that stream and to meet the manpower needs of the province of Alberta.

We hear constantly about this wonderful apprenticeship program. We have difficulty as a group across the way finding out how many students are in this program and how many complete it. We think the number of kids completing the apprenticeship program is a lot less than we're hearing about although I must commend the minister that in Fort McMurray their program is, I think, one of the best in the province. Of course, that fits in well with the oil industry and what they do.

Money to fund established techniques to improve the dropout rate. We think there are enough innovative situations in the province right now that if they had some unique funding, like the teacher-counselor concept, like the teacher assistant concept, these kinds of things, different stimulating ways of keeping kids in school. They could be unique and doing things that are very, very interesting.

The other thing we'd look at if we were government: we would look at the whole question of system-wide school nutrition programs. I want to compliment the hon. Member for Calgary-East for his good comments yesterday on that. He showed me a lot of insight into some new thinking that he proposed. We need funding to address the community use of schools because we think that in a lot of communities this could be the key for helping adult education, senior events, and so forth. We need to look at that whole thing and see if it's viable.

I think that another thing we would do is look at the resolution of the unfunded liability problem. What was very interesting to me – and I know the minister should be commended on going back to local bargaining, but I thought he would tell us a little more about local bargaining that he was proposing with a different flavour. We've studied this very carefully, and we think there are some different things that should be done with this. One of the things, Mr. Minister, is this whole business of the tripartite system that the Alberta teachers are proposing. I think it has some merit in looking at ongoing ways of dealing with things like unfunded liability, problems that come up within school systems on an ongoing basis. I think also that we would look at, hopefully, allowing school boards to become more involved in policy and more involved in planning.

Maybe I could just say three other issues before I sit down, Mr. Minister. Could you tell us what the status of the DARE program in schools is, and are there any plans to look at it in junior high school? We don't hear anything about the drug problem. I just got back from British Columbia, and I can tell you that in the Kelowna area this crystal meth thing is out of control. Schools there are just pulling out their hair. I'm just asking: has the minister got any initiatives or any thoughts on this that could give us some idea about what could happen?

Has he got any thoughts and further thinking about the whole question of junk food in schools and where that's going? That will be brought up later on, I believe.

One more issue. Current funding for new schools only provides funding for the bricks and mortar of the buildings, not for the items inside the school such as textbooks, science equipment. Will this be addressed? Is it addressed in this budget, or do you have plans down the line to look at this matter?

So with that, Mr. Minister, I'll thank you for allowing me to speak to your budget. I'll sit down, and maybe you'd like to address some of the questions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much to the Member for St. Albert for raising some of the important issues before us today. The first comment was with respect to the transfer of responsibility. That's correct. That happens as of September 1, but of course it'll officially occur once this budget is endorsed and embraced within a few weeks. Suffice it to say that on the three envelopes of funding that I mentioned, school capital funding – that's about $258 million – is coming our way; the plant operations and maintenance budget, which is about $395 million, is coming our way; and the new infrastructure maintenance and renewal funding, which is $81 million, is also coming our way. I believe the three together would total $734 million.

You know, it's interesting to hear the comment about hold-the-line budgeting. I read those headlines as well, hon. member. It might be true in a couple of the very many, many aspects of the budget, but let's not forget that we're increasing the budget overall by 6.7 per cent. That's a very significant increase, I think. It takes us up to $5.3 billion and gives us an additional $330 million to work with, but that's the key part of the phrase: to work with. We rely on locally elected school boards to do their best to work within those budgets, and it's certainly generous. It could always be more, I suppose. But we rely on them to do what's correct at the local level and also to be accountable back to the taxpayers of this province for those budgets.

The comment with respect to off-budget spending, I think you called it, and how it relates to capital priorities and capital plans that are submitted by school boards is also an interesting question. I'll respond this way. I think the specific question was: why is there no money for brand new school announcements in the current budget we are discussing? The answer is that we could have held back on the $207 million of new school construction projects that we made last September, in '05. We could have held that back until now, but, you know, my experience in government is: when you need money and some is available, you take it. You receive it and you employ it because you know it's needed. So we took the money that came available from unanticipated surplus dollars, and we used it to fund dozens of projects across the province.

In fact, that money has been melded in with some of the amounts I referred to earlier today. Some of it is spread out over a couple of years, granted, but the fact is that we will be able to complete 21 new-school projects, which I alluded to earlier in my comments. What I didn't get to because time ran out was the fact that we will begin or continue 51 additional projects with those monies. So there's a tremendous amount going on.

But it's important to realize, members, that what we are working on right now with the school boards is this new plan for the working title project which we've called schools for tomorrow. As part of that, I've asked school boards to please provide me with their revised or updated capital plan submissions by not later than June 2 so that we can get on with this as quickly as possible. I've asked them to provide their information in a slightly more strategic way. I've talked with several school boards already, and they understand fully what I'm asking them to provide.

The first part is to provide a complete list of their new-school construction requests, which can be comprised of new schools that add capacity for more students because of increased enrolments, or it can be new schools that are replacement schools and simply continue the existing capacity.

The second part is a list of school preservation construction requests. This is everything to do with expansions, modernizations, upgradings, rightsizings, and so on.

The third part would be a list of emergent modular needs. Now, modulars are the new steel-frame construction units, typically housing up to about 25 students, with much better ventilation systems and sound systems and wired capacity for new technology, computers, and so on and so on. They really are a godsend, you might say, because they are helping us replace many of the old portables that are out there right now.

You were asking questions about: where is the democracy in the system that relies sometimes on off-budget monies? I can tell you that there isn't a school board out there that doesn't welcome off-budget monies. There isn't a school board out there that doesn't welcome monies, period, when they have a need for them. So I will continue to press as hard as I can for additional monies, and if they happen to crystalize in a formal budget, perfect, but if they happen to come off budget, well, we'll take the money however we can get it when we know that it's necessary.

You asked the question: why not debate new schools now? Well, we are asking first for a plan to be arrived at. You may recall that there was a major plan done in 1999-2000 called the new century school plan, and literally billions of dollars were rolled out or contemplated at that time. It took about three or four or five years to actually deliver the majority of that plan. There's some planning that goes on every year, obviously, but as we inherit the responsibility for more and more of this planning to occur, I can assure you that we will be talking more about what those new school needs are right across the province. We were fortunate to receive that $207 million, but I also understand that it wasn't enough to address all of the needs, quite obviously, throughout this great province. There are more needs that exist today.

You mentioned: how can we talk about having the best education system in Canada when certain things aren't right? You cited Grande Prairie and Ellerslie. Well, I can tell you that just last week we did make an offer to the Grande Prairie public board with respect to a school project that they brought to my attention a year ago and re-emphasized again in September, and we're just waiting now to see what they want to do. We've offered them 20 brand new modulars to replace 13 out-of-date and otherwise lacklustre portables that, frankly, just need to be replaced. I've told them that that was a priority, so we've made them that offer to help get that done.

The interesting thing, hon. member, is that should they choose to take up that offer, then we would begin with them. They would do it, and we would help them do site preparation immediately on July 1, moving forward so that come September 1 or in time for their school start-up, we hope we would have those 20 modulars in place, fully hooked up, and so on. Now, I don't know what their response will be to that.

Now, with the Ellerslie situation that has been mentioned two or three times, I just want to politely but bluntly say that we're really waiting on municipal hookups there for their water and sewer capabilities, but the fact is that fresh water is trucked in there every day. It's a system that is working as well as it probably can under the circumstances. As soon as the city runs the lines up there, which is their responsibility to do, then those hookups will occur.

You mentioned something about the minister not listening to your plans and not doing anything about school infrastructure and whatever else it was. I am listening to the plans, and more particularly I'm listening to the plans that are being enunciated by the school boards because they, too, are elected officials. As you know, I've met with them three times in the space of a year and a bit, and I hope to continue meeting with them as long as they want to continue meeting with me because we do get a lot of good work done. There's no question about that. Can we do more? Sure we can, and we're trying our best to do that.

You mentioned Calgary public's needs in particular. It might interest the hon. member to know that just last week I met for over two hours with Calgary public. I met for almost two hours and a bit with Calgary Catholic. We started looking at their infrastructure needs in great detail. I'll be doing this with the two Edmonton metro boards here as well very soon and with other boards as we look more closely at their particular needs.

The needs of some communities, as we would all know, are completely different as you go from one part of the province to another. Province-wide we have rather a flat enrolment – rather flat – but in some areas we have burgeoning populations, Fort McMurray for example, but not necessarily equally burgeoning student populations. There's an interesting phenomenon there. In Grande Prairie we have both unarguably occurring. We have a burgeoning student population that is reflective of the burgeoning general population. Now, Fort McMurray is experiencing some of that as well, and I don't want anybody to misunderstand that, but it's a slightly different phenomenon.

In other places we might simply have aging infrastructure. We might have very, very old portables, such as is the case at Alexander Forbes in Grande Prairie, or we might have a lot of older, even sandstone structures that were built decades ago in Calgary. They're very famous for those, as you would know. Some of those are historic sites. There's a series of things that have to be looked at here.

With respect to your questions about special needs I can tell you that special-needs funding has increased almost every year that I can remember, but for this particular budget year that we're talking about now, there will be an increase of $34 million, or about 9.7 per cent. That will take us up to $373 million for special needs. I think that's a very generous and significant one.

What we typically try to do, hon. members, is ensure that we have enough money built into the budget, based on our jurisdictional profiles and other information, that accommodates both increased volume for special needs as well as increased price. By price I simply mean that the complexity of the students might be changing, and therefore the cost of providing the services changes, as it would do also with the aides and other staff members, if you will, teachers and so on, who are involved in helping out. So there is quite a bit of that happening.

I don't have the exact page in the budget. That was your question. Does somebody have the exact page for special needs in the budget? I would just convey it to you if I knew it off the top of my head. I don't. I'm sure that if you looked at maybe page 146 or thereabouts, hon. member, there is a general summary. I'm not sure that the detail is there, but we'll try and get you the page number where special needs is particularly cited.

Moving on with respect to the class size initiative, you're correct. There is about $126 million this year. It is a significant increase in the amounts you mentioned. The class size reduction initiative had an increase of $16 million, which is about 15 per cent, and that will allow school boards to hire well over 200 new teachers. Now, remember that we're averaging this, and I mentioned in my opening comments that I think the average costing that we've put into the budget is about $70,400, in that ballpark, but I know that there will be a number of teachers hired for far less than that, and you know that as well, and there will be some hired at a little bit higher than that, but as an average that should allow us to accomplish that goal.

I realize that time is moving on here. I just want to mention this quickly though. When the class size reduction initiative was first ushered in two Septembers ago, it was thought that the entire jurisdictional averages recommended by the Learning Commission could and would be met within a three-year time period. Enormous dollars have flowed out so far, well over $200 million. I can't remember if it's $214 million or $294 million, but it's 200 and some million dollars in total so far, and all of the class size reduction targets that were envisaged after the two-year period have been met or exceeded, in other words bettered, for grades 4 through 12. There might be one exception here or there, but I'm pretty confident that it's virtually 100 per cent.

Where the system hasn't yet met the target is in K to 3, so that's why we're putting emphasis there. Now, some school boards did that right off the get-go because that's where their immediate pressures were. But I'm talking province-wide now, and I'm talking about several dozen school boards that have not met what they and we expected they would meet by way of a progress target after the two-year framework. So it's caused us to sit back, stand back, respond to parents, respond to school boards, and say: hang on a minute here; we've got to take a new, fresh look at this.

Now, no one to my knowledge made specific commitments this far out to hire more teachers than they would have until the budgets have been approved, obviously. So we shouldn't be seeing any school boards that are vulnerable, so to speak, or being short-changed in any way. What we're simply doing is saying that it's time to just refocus this lens a little bit. It's for this coming year only. We'll try and sort this out a little better with them and help them through it.

At the same time, we need to look at one other important factor that was tremendously impacted, hon. members, by the class size reduction initiative and that's the area of infrastructure. School boards have told me almost to the person that the class size reduction initiative is a wonderful thing but that the pressure it has put on the system for more classroom space, for more teachers to be found and hired, some with specific skill sets, obviously, for certain subject areas – that part of the equation just needed to be looked at more carefully. Therefore, we've just slowed this down for this year. But let's not make any mistake about it. We're still going to be helping school boards hire somewhere between 200 and 250 brand new teachers over and above the 1,685 teachers that have already been hired in the first two Septembers of 2004, 2005.

So I think that's fairly positive news, but I hear what you're saying about it. It leads into that question that you asked: will the budget provide just money for the class size reduction initiative and nothing for capital infrastructure? Or you asked something along that line. Well, there are significant monies already in the budget for both. For example, with respect to infrastructure on page 135 you would find that the budget proposed is $115 million over last year's forecasted budget and $180 million over last year's budget. So government is responding to identified needs, and we're increasing funding as those dollars become available. That's just one example of that.

You asked a question about jurisdictional averages. The reason that we do jurisdictional averages, hon. member, is simply because that was what was recommended in the Learning Commission's report, and I think that was because school boards themselves didn't necessarily want mandated capped sizes of classrooms. The explanation is very simple. Let's just theoretically say that we made it a law in theory, hypothetically speaking, with respect to a cap size for a particular grade level, and it's 18 kids. Now, what do you do when the 19th and the 20th kids show up? Do you hire a whole other teacher? So some flexibility has to be kept in mind, and that's what school boards impressed upon us. So that's good.

On the other side, I'm not immune to factors like you've just mentioned, where you might have a class of over 30. That's what we're working on now, to get those few sore thumbs, so to speak, dealt with. Having been a teacher – and I know that you have as well, hon. member, and others here have too – we know how challenging that can be, depending on the demographics and learning abilities of your students, of course.

The other question you asked about was with respect to PO and M, plant operation and maintenance, increases. Is it enough or is it not enough? It's about 5.1 per cent of an increase, up to $395 million. You know, we're working with the school boards on this because I'm sharply aware of the increased costs of some basic things, but PO and M, generally speaking, is with respect to the cost of turning on the lights every day, with respect to heating the schools every day, with respect to custodian/janitorial services, that type of thing. We hope that that increase will work, and if it doesn't, then I'm sure that the school boards will be letting me know. That's what we got, so that's what we're passing on, hon. member.

You asked about staffing within the department. The specific question that you asked was on the increase from 691 to 696 FTEs. I think it's on page 145, at the bottom. The answer is that the additional five staff spots are related to implementation and support of the accountability factor in relation to our work with jurisdictions, where we collect and analyze a very broad array of items, many, many of them, and how they pertain to our accountability pillar. We have measures there, as you would know, and we help keep jurisdictions up to speed with that, and we help interpret and use that information for various purposes.

I'll continue with other stuff in the next segment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Going through estimates, you get 20 minutes, and you sort of have to pick, I suppose as the minister does, things that you want to concentrate on. I want to talk about some specific issues, but just generally to begin with, I think we'd be kidding ourselves if we didn't recognize that there are still some educational issues simmering in terms of funding and the rest of it.

The minister is well aware of the last poll I've seen. It was last September or so. The Ipsos-Reid poll revealed that 72 per cent of Albertans still believe that the education system is not adequately funded. They're looking at things like school fees, and the minister has alluded to class sizes and the rest of it. It doesn't matter, Mr. Minister, if we throw out big figures to people; it doesn't mean much. It is a lot of money, but education is an investment, I think we'd both agree. It's not an expense overall. Sure, we have to try to put the resources in the most efficient way we can, but when you throw out big numbers to people, what they understand is what's happening in their own school or in their own classroom and if they see problems there. That's why I think that poll is still there.

I would remind the minister that to some degree we are playing catch-up, having been through the strike as a trustee in Edmonton public, the fact that the arbitration came in at 7 and 7 and we were given 4 and 3. There were a lot of teachers laid off, I know, in Edmonton public. To some degree I would say that we've probably caught up. Generally, when you talk to people, it's hard to say whether it's better or worse, but most people feel that we're sort of where we were before arbitration. There's some improvement in terms of the class initiative, I think, especially at the K to 3 level. We may not be there yet, but I'm told by people that we've seen some improvements there. Some classes in junior high and senior high are still pretty heavy.

The minister talked about capping. I think the problem with averages is that in a special-needs class you can't take that many kids. So you could have a nice average and still have a lot of classes over 30 because of the makeup in that particular school. That's why I believe that at some point there's some sort of capping. It doesn't mean that with the capping you'd have to hire somebody with one or two students later. You'd take that into the average. But I think we have to begin to look at that. Just generally those are some issues.

I want to come back to the Learning Commission. The minister knows that I'm going to raise certain things. I'm sure he's well aware of that. I want to talk about the remaining outstanding items on the Learning Commission. I mean, we could go through the Learning Commission and say that, yeah, we've done some things here; perhaps not enough. But I want to talk about the remaining items.

First of all, the fact that I'm very disappointed in our reaction on the junior kindergarten and kindergarten. The Learning Commission said that those are probably two of the most important items they made. I'm not suggesting that we need it immediately to go throughout the province. Probably financially that may not have been in the cards. But in the schools I represented and still do as an MLA – I represent the city centre project, and I know the minister is aware of that particular program. It's had a dramatic impact on those kids to have that sort of help. The Edmonton public and other boards have done this.

I just happen to understand Edmonton public the best, the 18 high-needs schools and Dr. da Costa's work – I'm sure the minister is aware of that – and the tremendous impact that's had on those kids. If we don't do the job there – in fact, I can say that when the cuts came after the arbitration with the city centre project, yeah, they said that small classes are important. But you know what they said? Full-day kindergarten, junior kindergarten, and reading recovery were probably even more important. That's how much of a priority they put on it.

You know, I look at the figures – and I'm using the Learning Commission's figures – to see if we could afford it if we picked, you know, full-day. We already have half-day kindergarten. If we just did it in what we call the high-needs schools, that would have been $21 million more in junior kindergarten, and funding for kids at risk was pegged at $42 million. With all due respect, Mr. Minister, I think we could have afforded that. I think it's the pay-me-now or pay-me-later sort of syndrome. If these kids don't get that opportunity, they're going to be behind all the rest of the way through school, and we're going to end up with some of the problems that we face. I know that the minister knows this, and I know that he probably faced some pressures from some of his MLAs. I'd be surprised if this minister didn't believe this. That's why it was so disappointing that we couldn't start there, at that level. It didn't need to be universal, right across the scene.

So now Edmonton public and, I expect, others are going to have to decide whether this program is important enough. The AISI funding is running out. Is this program important enough that we take money from other instructional dollars? Then you get into the problem that other people don't think that's fair. I know that it's not going to happen in this budget, but I'd say to this minister: let's go back and review that in a very short period of time. I think that it's, as I say, pay me now or pay me later. That's so absolutely crucial for those schools. I can't say it strongly enough. I would hope that this is not a final answer, the announcement he made – what was it? – a month or so ago. I will keep pursuing that particular issue because it was something that was very important to me as a trustee.

I'll be quick on some of the other ones. You know, there's that saying: just say no to drugs. I can say something very quickly to the minister. One of the outstanding items is principals taken out of the bargaining unit of the ATA. Just say no. Just say no. It doesn't work. In fact, I don't know why the Learning Commission advocated it. They went out and talked to Emery Dossdall in B.C., who is the minister. He told them that it didn't work. I think the system works well now because it's more of a collegial model, the principal and people working together. The minute you start to have the principals out of the bargaining unit, it becomes sort of – they're at a different strata. Then you have to have the ATA involved much more and the rest of it. So I would say: just say no to that one.

The bargaining is a tougher one, the provincial bargaining. As a trustee in the Edmonton public we thought we could do our own bargaining. In fact, I sat in the unit. I also know that a lot of the rural boards don't want it, so there's a mixed message being sent there. The ASBA has basically endorsed provincial bargaining, but all the metro boards, to my knowledge, are saying no. So we have a split there. It makes it difficult for the minister.

At the very minimum if you're going to move towards provincial bargaining, the government has to be at the table. You cannot have an internal group like the ASBA bargaining if they don't have access to the money. So if we're going to look at provincial bargaining, then we have to bring the government to the board because they're the ones that control the purse strings. You can't bargain with people who don't control the purse strings. That's the only thing I would say. As a school trustee in Edmonton I thought our system locally worked very well, but I also understand that there's a big split on that within the community. So that would be my advice there to the minister.

I'd like to turn to the whole area the minister talked about: $180 million more on schools. This has been a big issue here. The reality is that we're playing catch-up again with our school maintenance. Again, if I come back to my experiences as a trustee, we had schools falling apart, and the ones that seemed to be built in the '50s were the worst because they weren't built to last. The maintenance dollars were not coming in fast enough, and you're always sort of playing catch-up with one or the other.

I would want to ask here, though, if the minister – and this is a school I know he cares about – could do something in the Edmonton public to loosen up the situation with Victoria comp because it's having a ripple effect on all the rest of the schools in Edmonton public. As the minister is well aware, when I was there, they were going to change it and partially knock down part of it. Now we find, because of inflation and what's going on, that that's too costly, and now they're looking at a different school. We have to make a decision here on this school. Remember that they were promised, back when, $64 million and then totally for our budget I remember $35 million, and $30 million was going to go into Vic comp. So it has really played havoc there, and I think it's time that we did something with Vic comp. I know that the minister – I remember from meetings we had – had some interest in that particular school and seeing it go ahead. That should be a priority because, as I say, it has had a ripple effect on all the other schools in the Edmonton public.

The reality is that we're playing catch-up. We can say: $180 million more. Yes, I don't doubt that that's the case, but the reality is that like the rest of the infrastructure budgets in the province, we have a deficit of playing catch-up. Calgary has probably been the most aggressive, but I know that the minister has got letters from Edmonton. I think the minister brought up the Grande Prairie situation. The MLA for St. Albert: we're getting these calls – I'm sure the minister is – from all over the province. It's a lot more money, but the reality is that we may need more. Rather than us doing it later, I would have liked to have seen in this budget how we're going to deal with this deficit problem, this maintenance problem over a three- to five-year period as part of the budget.

Now, I'm not going to turn it down if there's unfunded money in June or whatever. I'm sure the school boards will take it and say thank you very much, and I'm certainly not going to say: don't give them the money. But the reality is that that's not the proper way to budget. I would suggest that if it takes $180 million or $500 million more a year to catch up in the five-year period, that should be part of the budget. It shouldn't be based on unbudgeted surpluses because it makes their budgeting at the school board level very, very difficult. How do they do it? We may get a school; we may not. We may get maintenance money; we may not. Nobody is budgeting properly when that happens.

Flowing from that, Mr. Chairman, is a specific question to the minister because we've had this discussion. I've been very concerned about the way the school closure process works. We had this discussion last year, and I recollect the minister saying that they were looking into it. The process here in Alberta does not work well. We talked about the variations in construction, of taking out education, taking it over, that they will get rid of some of the situations where the per-student factor was based on the size of the halls and the bathrooms and all the rest of it. That seems to be a no-brainer, and I would hope that there would be some clarification on that. I would think that that would probably be better being under the Department of Education. They would understand that more than infrastructure, who deal with roads and the rest of it.

It's the school closure process, again, that worries me. Remember, Mr. Minister, we talked about the fact that Ontario got rid of this sort of payoff, the inner city against the suburbs. It's true in rural Alberta, too, where you have to close down schools to get new ones. Remember, we talked about that. They got rid of that in Ontario. They said:

There have been "rewards" in capital funding for closing schools which has distorted facility considerations. Some boards felt compelled to close schools in one area to be eligible for new schools in another, even if the sites were far apart. Some boards closed school prematurely to become eligible for new replacement schools. The ministry will no longer recognize closed schools as creating eligibility for new school grants.

The point I want to make there, Mr. Chairman, is that I would hope that we're looking at this closure process. The minister, I think, said that they were looking at the school closure process as part of the act. It creates enemies. It pits schools against schools, it pits neighbourhoods against neighbourhoods, and it doesn't make sense. I would really hope that we are looking closely at the Ontario model. If a school closes itself because of lack of students, eventually it will do that whether it's in rural Alberta or not, but they should not be rewarded by saying: oh, if you close a bunch of schools down in the inner city or one town or another, somehow you'll get another school. It's unfair. It doesn't work. I remember the minister saying that they were reviewing that, so I'd like his comments on that if we could, Mr. Chairman.

The minister is talking about high school completion rates, and that's a big concern in this province. I think we have some of the lowest – for some reason in rural Alberta I think the minister has alluded to kids getting jobs making more than the teachers. It's a little harder process to tell them that they have to stay in school, but they have to because down the way we're creating a big social problem.

I want to say to the minister – I think he said something about this – that round-tables are nice, but there are some things that we can do. I think the minister knows this. In Edmonton public we had to deal with the number of counsellors. Maybe I'm biased, having formerly been one, but I think that has an impact on the number of counsellors we have and the number of people that work in library services, learning resources. I expect that this is true throughout the province. The memorandum from Edmonton public on September 27 showed that the number of school counsellors has dropped from 99.1 full-time equivalents, FTEs, in '90-91 to 43.8 in 2004-2005. The number of learning resources, mainly librarians, dropped from 81.7 to 12.1 FTEs. Now, these are people that deal with literacy, and these are people that as counsellors deal with students in not only career counselling but personal counselling. They have a big impact on whether kids stay in school. The minister would be aware of this.

The figures I've seen indicate that if a kid comes out of grade 9 one year behind in reading level, their chances of being a dropout are very significant. Most of them will drop out. Even one year. So that's why I think librarians are that important. We may need a special initiative, as we did with the class learning sizes, something to deal with that problem. But I suggest very strongly to the minister that this is at least one part of the puzzle. I would argue that if we don't do something with the high-needs kids at the earlier levels that I was talking about, we're still going to be facing a problem in those schools, and of course we need to do more for aboriginal education because they have a tremendously high dropout rate, and some things seem to be working better than others.

I'm moving along fairly quickly here, Mr. Chairman. The other thing I wanted to briefly talk about is the unfunded liability. I know that this has been raised in question period, that we have the $6 billion, and I know that there was an agreement in '92. We know all that, but something that worries me is that it could be a $46 billion problem down the road. Then that has implications not only for the teachers; it certainly has implications for the province in terms of our financial stability down the way. I think the question is: do we work on a $6 billion problem, or do we work on a $46 billion problem?

I would remind the minister that another province, Newfoundland, has wiped out its teachers' pension liability with negotiation, and the elimination in Newfoundland just came up as part of the agreement between teachers and the government. It will see the government of Newfoundland and Labrador pour $1.952 billion into the teachers' pension fund. In return, the province's 6,400 teachers agreed to enter into a four-year collective agreement for the period between September 1, 2004, to August 31, 2008, which will see a wage freeze in years 1 and 2, and a 3 per cent increase in each of years 3 and 4. If they can do it, we should be able to do it, because to postpone the problem is going to cost us more.

Mr. Chairman, I'm almost out of time. I realize that by looking at the clock. But those are some of the issues. I would have liked to talk about too much predominance of standardized tests – we've done some work on that, as the Member for St. Albert did – but time runs out. Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for raising actually some very, very good points. We may disagree on some of the methodology to a few of them, but I think spiritually we probably would agree on most of them.

I'll begin just by commenting on the poll that I think was cited at the beginning of his comments, and I would simply like to rebut, if I could, by saying that of all the parents that were surveyed across the province, 83 per cent of the parents expressed great satisfaction with our education system. In general, the public responded with a 72 per cent satisfaction rate. So I think that on balance things are pretty good. Obviously, they could always be better. They could be better in virtually every part of our personal and professional lives, but in terms of the education system the results are there. We have the highest funded education system anywhere in Canada. It's the highest per capita, Mr. Chair. It's the highest per student, and we have the best results on virtually everything. So we're very proud of that. Can it be better? I've said it before; I'll say it again. Of course it can. That's what we're working on: constantly improving, constantly pushing our own borders, and constantly trying to help our students up the ladder of preparation aimed at success.

I am aware of some of the difficulties that still exist with respect to special-needs funding. I think there was a point made in that respect, that when we're talking about class size averages on a jurisdiction-wide basis, they don't mean a lot to the people who are having the other side of the experience, larger than ever classrooms. I have some in my own riding, and I'm sure that others do as well. But, still, we're working away on that. I expect some tremendous progress to be made in the next two years as we complete that five-year window.

With respect to remaining recommendations in the Commission on Learning report I know that there are a lot of people who would support additional junior kindergarten programs, and I know that there are others who would like a full-day kindergarten program.

I'm well aware of that. The only thing that we said, however, is that we're not going to force them onto the system.

Now, that's a key word. We're not going to make them mandatory, but that doesn't mean we're not going to support the provision of them or that we're not going to step up to the plate and provide money, because we do. We provide about $241 million in this budget alone, but the difference is – and you would know this perhaps better than most in the Chamber, hon. member, because you've been a trustee – that school boards do still want flexibility. You are correct that it will vary from metro centres to large urban centres to rural areas. That's true. There's a great amount of variety that we're proud of in this province, so finding a way of addressing everyone's needs and desires has been extremely challenging. I don't think that there's a part of government that doesn't experience some of those issues on a jurisdictional basis.

Let me just say this in response to what we are doing to help the so-called at-risk children that need that additional assistance and so on. This past year we opened something along the line of 22 brand new parent link centres.

Mrs. Forsyth: Forty-five in total.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Forty-five in total this year? Yeah, there we are. The Minister of Children's Services, who leads that initiative – and I partner with her and help where I can – has seen to it that these parent link centres, in response to a recommendation out of the Learning Commission, I might add, fulfill their function of helping parents help their kids. Some of it becomes medically involved, and we have the Minister of Health and Wellness that will chip in and help out in that respect as well.

In my experience I've found this. These parent link centres are helping parents and the system in general to do far earlier interventions, far earlier screening, additional diagnostic-type screening that really helps to identify what kind of help a particular child needs. But let me just give you one example of where I wish things could be a lot better: speech-language therapy. You know what, hon. member? If we had more people in that profession, we would absolutely see them being hired. The fact is that there's a shortage world-wide, not just in Alberta or in Canada. You just can't seem to find them. They're almost as scarce as welders in the construction business. You just can't seem to find enough of them. The minute they graduate, they're snapped up. Still, there is a lot of good work going on there, and, yes, I am familiar with Dr. da Costa's work.

You mentioned reading recovery. I agree. That is very important. I don't have any argument there. But I stress that just because we didn't make these programs mandatory doesn't mean that we're not continuing to do something about it.

I think that you said something about: is this the final answer? Well, that's the answer for that particular recommendation, but the next question is this, at least in my mind. If you're not going to make junior K mandatory and you're not going to make full-day kindergarten mandatory, what are you going to do? I mean, that would be the logical question from my perspective. So what we are doing is constantly adding additional dollars to the system. We're working with partnering ministries, as I just said, to create other ways of addressing this. We're involving the communities more so to help them out because Alberta is a very different place from corner to corner to corner to corner. I agree. It doesn't need to be universal, and some strides are being made. So I hope that you'll take some comfort in that, and we'll see what else develops as we go forward.

With respect to another issue coming out of the Commission on Learning, the principals being in or out of the ATA. As you may recall, the government did accept that recommendation, and my predecessor, in fact, had hired a gentleman, I think out of the Rocky Mountain House area, to do a survey and a report. I have that report. I haven't acted or responded to it yet, but I hope to get that done fairly soon one way or the other.

I do understand the point of collegiality that you mentioned, and having been a teacher in a larger school, a very large school, for a while and in a smaller school, I understand the difference there. Having grown up in a very small rural community where we only had a handful of teachers gave me that experience as well.

The collective bargaining model is another issue, and I'll just re-emphasize again that 59 per cent of the school boards voted to accept the model proposed by the Alberta School Boards Association, the so-called ASBA model, but, obviously, 41 per cent didn't. Then there were a few – shall I call them fence-sitters? They liked the concept of a new collective bargaining model, but they didn't like the specific proposal that ASBA had come up with for their own particular reasons. Still, when you counted up the number of students that were represented by the boards who didn't like province-wide bargaining or didn't like the specific model that ASBA proposed, they represented about 50 per cent of the total student base across the province. It was almost a dead even split, almost right down the centre of it. So I think we took the position that we took with respect to, specifically, the ASBA model and indicated that we could not support that model as presented.

Can government be at the table for future bargaining? I think you asked that question. Other people have asked this question as well. We have resisted that temptation, and I think we will continue to resist it because in keeping with what I just explained about the local bargaining model being kept local, so too is it important for us to recognize that school board officials, school board trustees, are locally elected folks and they have a role to play in this. I would get concerned after a while as to how much of a role we're really leaving in the hands of elected school boards if we were yet to take that away from them, you know. So that's an important point.

Your other point was with respect to Victoria school for the arts or what was once called Victoria composite. Yes, that is a fond place to me, having taught there for a number of years. I recall the announcements of the $63 million and then the $51 million and then the $35 million or $36 million or whatever. I should tell you that we do have a proposal that came in for 1,700 students at that particular school. I understand that they now have around 2,000 students already or soon to be enrolled. I'm not sure if it's current, right this minute, right now. I understand that it is right now. But that figure that we're talking about doesn't necessarily even include anything for the demolition cost for the current school.

You will remember that there were three different proposals, right? One was for a brand new, stand-alone over there and knock this one down. The other one was to build something new and keep part of this and so on. It's gone along the way quite a bit, but it's not quite there yet. I would say that even with the $36 million, hon. member, assuming that goes ahead as planned – and we'll see what those monies will bring – that will be the most expensive school project, I believe, in the province's history, even at that amount.

I'm not arguing for a moment because I think the arts are extremely important, and that model is unique in Canada. So, too, is the Grant MacEwan arts model. It's unique in Canada. They are absolutely amazing. You hear about Grant MacEwan, for example, in other parts of the world where I have had the pleasure of travelling to and visiting. So, too, I expect the same will occur with the Victoria school for the arts. I think it will become Juilliard north, if you will, for that age group. They do tremendous work there, and they do it very successfully. But we still need the community to come together a little bit more on this, hon. member. That's why we don't have any one finalized, settled solution yet to comment on.

Very quickly moving ahead to the point you mentioned with respect to deficits. I can't remember the exact point you mentioned, but it was something about proper ways versus improper ways to do budgeting. Now, if you're talking about the school infrastructure piece – and I think you probably were – I am very aware of some of the deferred maintenance as it's called, or the backlog, in both the O and M envelope, which is the routine, day-to-day upkeep stuff, and also in the IMR envelope, which is the infrastructure maintenance renewal budget. I'll say this. With respect to the infrastructure maintenance renewal budget, which is where most of this would come in, we are going to increase that funding envelope by 68 per cent, from $48 million to $81 million if the numbers serve me correctly, and they do. That's a tremendous increase, but, you know – I've said this to my colleagues as well – that's still not enough because there are some significant other factors to keep in mind here.

One of them is the sharply rising costs of labour and of materials and of equipment. Even though a 68 per cent increase sounds impressive – and it is; let's face it: a 68 per cent increase in any part of the budget is huge – when you're facing backlogs that are four, five, six times that amount, that is where we have an issue. That's what we're trying to work on with this new plan that we're working on for June. I don't know yet what the success of that entire plan will be, but I have to be confident that it's going to reflect very honestly and accurately what the needs are in a prioritized fashion province-wide.

Your comments about the school closure process I will probably respond to in some greater length in writing because of time. Suffice it to say that I am aware, having just inherited all of this three weeks ago – the files, that is – of the issues you've mentioned with respect to how hallways or gymnasiums or closets or whatever it is may or may not have been counted in terms of school utilization of space.

I want to say that people that I have met over in the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation are extremely capable, talented, and professional people who know this area very, very well. I had my first meeting with them about a week and a day ago, as I recall, and we spent a couple of hours together looking at issues just like this. I told them what my expectations were, and they told me what their expertise and experiences were. We're trying to come together in the middle and sort this out to everyone's benefit. I don't like seeing schools pitted one against the other or neighbourhoods being pitted one against the other, and we've lived through a few of these together.

I can't recall what the details of the Ontario model are that you referred to, and I don't know if we have that model in our shop or not. We probably have it. I wouldn't mind taking a closer look at it then.

What I can tell you in having met with some of the school boards – and perhaps some of the trustees were from other parts of Canada and brought this idea here. I don't know. They indicated that there was thinking about the community playing a larger role, not just the elected school board folks or the government but the community. Now, that's one issue.

The other issue that I hope to look at through this plan in June that I'm going to come up with is with respect to where the schools are physically located in relation to where the population now lives. We see neighbourhoods maturing now to the point where there may be very few kids there, but the school is still there. What is the impact going to be of a school board looking at a potential closure in that area and the building of a new school, a replacement school as it were, in an outlying area so that we can avoid some of the transportation costs, the busing times, and all of that? I don't honestly have that answer sorted out yet, but I want you to be aware that we are looking at those aspects as well.

On high school completion rates there are things we could do now, absolutely, and we're doing them. I have mentioned this in all three of my meetings with the school board chairs or school board trustees in general. I know that more counsellors would probably help and that we need to be careful when talking about that whether we mean guidance counsellors or work counsellors. A huge difference between the two. I would suggest that work counsellors are very important and fulfill an important role, obviously. However, guidance counsellors tend to do a little larger array of counselling. That would be one area that I'd like to strengthen going forward, but I don't have those dollars built into the budget to make any announcements at this point.

I feel similarly about librarians. Librarians are a critical part, and they, too, would impact in a positive way our high school completion rates. We have seen a large number of library technicians come into the system, but I think we all know that that's not the same as schoolteacher librarians. They perform different functions. In fact, library technicians don't typically have the authority to even supervise or to teach a class of children whereas library teachers do. There are some fundamental differences there. I agree, though, that it's very important, and that is an initiative that came out of the Learning Commission in part as well. I have met with the Library Association once or twice now, and I don't have any huge progress yet to report on that front, unfortunately.

The FNMI, First Nations, Métis, Inuit piece, the aboriginal education piece that you mentioned, is important. We are strengthening that. I don't have all of the dollars just handy in front of me right now, but I do notice, for example, that Edmonton public will receive over $7 million, almost $7.1 million this year. It's probably an increase of about 2 per cent, somewhere in that neighbourhood, I think.

Similarly – I meant to give this to you earlier – with the ECS instruction funding Edmonton public will be getting $13.6 million this year for ECS or kindergarten-type programming. Plus, for ECS mild/moderate disabilities and gifted and talented they'll be receiving about $683,000 this year. Again, another increase. For ECS program unit funding, PUF funding, they'll be receiving $15.8 million, which is about a $300,000 increase in that category. So there's quite a bit going on there, and we're pretty pleased with that.

My final comment, quickly, is with the unfunded pension liability, which I think you referred to. We will be providing through this current budget about $152 million for addressing government's responsibility for a two-thirds share of that unfunded pension liability, which is, as you know, consistent with the 1992 agreement. The question is: what is the impact of the unfunded pension liability on the recruitment of future teachers and on the retention of existing teachers? I would say that there are some unpleasant possibilities of negative impacts if we don't do something about it, but I don't have the mandate at this point to do anything about that. We have talked about this with the ATA, we have talked about this with the Alberta School Boards Association, and it's an issue that we continue to see some movement toward. Newfoundland wiped out theirs and made a four-year deal, as you know.

I'll stop there. I hear the bell, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, given that there is a great demand for members to participate, the chair is going to recognize the following: Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods, and then the minister.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to take this opportunity to rise and raise with the minister a few issues which I've raised with him on previous occasions. One of them was alluded to by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and that is the issue of high school completion rates. I would like to know whether or not we've made any progress in that regard over the past year. Would the minister also advise whether or not his department has taken any initiatives in this budget to improve any progress that we have made?

The second is the issue of participation rates in the postsecondary education system. I realize that it's not primarily in the bailiwick of your ministry. However, decisions on whether to pursue postsecondary education and training are decisions that for the most part are made during high school. The die is cast, so to speak, at that time on the career paths, whether it be trades, colleges, technical, or university. I wonder whether the minister could comment on whether there are any measures being taken by way of improving career counselling or similar measures to encourage more participation in postsecondary education, particularly in view of the economic circumstances that we are in right now, where there is temptation for young people, perhaps, to go out and make money in an easier manner to their long-term detriment.

The third issue that I would like to address to the minister is another one that I've raised on previous occasions and that relates to the age of leaving high school. I would like to know whether the minister has any intention in the future or in the plans to proclaim the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, which was passed in the 25th Legislature, whereby it would make compulsory attendance necessary until the age of 17 years. As the minister is aware, that has been on the books for two or three years now, and I'm wondering whether or not there are any plans or any budgetary provisions to implement that in the future.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've got some specifics that I'd like to look at, but as I was thinking about this very important budget and this very important portfolio, our Ministry of Education, I felt that it was important to look at the long-standing education pedigree that needs to be recognized in this province. It began in the late 1930s with the election of the Social Credit Party. William Aberhart, an educator himself, served as Minister of Education as well as Premier. Together with his deputy, G.F. McNally, and H.C. Newland and John Barnett of the Alberta Teachers' Association, they formed a formidable team for educational reform. Particularly interesting was the partnership between the Premier and his deputy minister. In background and temperament they were very different men, yet they shared a common commitment to education, which is exactly what Alberta needed.

Aberhart was a small "c" conservative. Religiously, he'd be called a fundamentalist. McNally was a Deweyite, trained in the progressive school of education at an American university. Both were prepared to be radical and flexible in facing the need for change. McNally recognized that any solutions must fit Alberta's situation, that they could not be superimposed from some other experimental school system somewhere else. Aberhart recognized the need for students to be exposed to other points of view. As Minister of Education he signed letters defending the teaching of evolution in Alberta high schools at a time when this was very contentious. He stated that exposure to scientific theories was a necessary part of a liberal arts education.

McNally, the progressivist administrator, was also a churchman. He donated a trophy for citizenship to a Calgary postsecondary lay training school. It was awarded annually to a student chosen by secret ballot by his or her classmates. McNally believed that citizenship was a necessary ingredient of a good religious education. That school was later studied by Americans, who said admiringly that they'd seen nothing like it in their experience. A later group of Americans did the same recently in commenting on Edmonton public schools leading the way in innovation, in school-based budgeting, alternative programs, and a relaxation of boundaries. An issue of educational administrator was devoted entirely to what was happening here, the first and only time it focused on a single district. This commitment to education continued two generations, through Social Credit and into the early years of the Progressive Conservative government. Politicians and teachers saw each other as allies, not adversaries, in the need to better Alberta students and society.

Alberta's educational excellence is also recognized at the postsecondary level. A friend of mine, a graduate of the University of Alberta, was accepted into doctoral studies in education at Oxford 15 years ago. He was pleased and surprised to learn from his adviser there that the faculty considered our graduate school here to be among the top in Canada. The U of A's new president is committed to making her institution a world-class university. This achievement is not far off. It grows out of a dream by Alexander Cameron Rutherford and Henry Marshall Tory a century ago, when they built a campus south of the river. It is paralleled in a province that now has four full-fledged universities and a number of colleges offering university-level courses and approaching university status.

Yes, Alberta has an educational pedigree of which we can be proud. It was begun with the first Liberal government, reformed by Social Credit, fostered by progressives and early Progressive Conservatives, and needs to be conserved by all Conservatives to take their name and our heritage seriously. The past decade of using education as a chopping block for budget cuts is a bad dream from which we are thankfully beginning to awaken. I and my colleagues look forward to renewing this province's commitment to education. Given the opportunity, we'll see an Alberta whose motto, Strong and Free, is rooted in an even more enduring line: you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. When that happens, we will be able to look back on the past decade of educational cuts and controversy as a blink or hiccup against a backdrop of history and of promise that is bright indeed.

My first area of concern has to do with high school funding and course completion and credits, that sort of thing. Since funding is based on course completions in high school, they only receive funds for actual courses completed; that is, where there's been 50 per cent attendance and a minimum mark of 25 per cent. I know that some schools feel that they have invested heavily in staff time, smaller classes, aide time, calls to parents, attendance policies, tutoring students, and making plans to assist students at risk, but if the student is not successful or does not attend in spite of all these efforts, there is a loss of funds to the school.

Another thing to consider is clawbacks which result because of audits. This has affected every CTS school, any school with CTS courses, because of funding based on individual modules. The problem was the number of prerequisites required. If a student completed the intermediate level but had failed the beginning module, the credit funding was removed. Because of grandfathering and Alberta Education searching out individual models, schools have been affected. I believe they're suggesting now to clump the modules in three- or five-credit groups, which will be better overall, but this really looks like a return to what was the case 12 years ago where we taught, for example, beauty culture 10, 20, and 30. Why they changed this is beyond me. Those schools that were offering the three-year or full program were of course hurt the most.

The concern that the requirements for the apprenticeship board and Alberta Education differ is also a huge one. For example, if you look at cosmetology, nail art 2160 was a prerequisite for manicuring 2, 3, but nail art is not recognized by the apprenticeship board. Schools that only offer partial programs were dinged even bigger time because they didn't have the prerequisites, and cosmetology has been the biggest hit.

Now, if the student passed all the courses, no search was done for prerequisites. As soon as a failing mark was issued, however, a complete history was done, and money was taken back. Clumping modules into three- or five-credit clumps could get rid of this problem. I think also that we could get advice from the people who are in the front line. Maybe that's a novel idea, but it's a good idea. Until they are seriously changed, this existing model's delivery problems will continue to arise.

Education should not be funded on a business model because it is not a business. It is a tool whereby society assists, as much as possible, future citizens in becoming contributing, active, and moral members of society. Because human growth and development cannot be legislated, automated, or regulated, funding schools as though they were factories creates the groundwork for a dysfunctional education system and produces not only poor results but a liability in the future.

CBC's Wild Rose Forum during the week of March 6, '06, discussed a study which estimated that a possible 40 per cent of Albertans are essentially illiterate. This is a staggering number. However, considering the way public schools are funded, perhaps it's not unexpected. The funding crisis in public education is bound to produce poorly educated young people, and that was bound to become eminently visible sooner or later.

I've seen enormous changes in the way education is delivered to students. Some of the changes have been very beneficial. For example, technology has helped students to become more aware of the world in which they live and has provided them with vast amounts of information. Some of the changes have been less than beneficial. We've also seen enormous changes in the attitudes towards learning on the part of large numbers of students, and it has not been a change for the better.

For whatever reasons many children are coming to school with impaired abilities to learn, to read, or to concentrate. Some are severely impaired, and their problems are being addressed as best the schools can. Some are impaired only just enough that they do not receive any extra assistance, and since the burdens on classroom teachers are tremendous, the problems of these children remain unaddressed for years. As they progress through school, not because of capability but because of age, their deficits become larger and larger. By the time these children become disillusioned young adults entering high school, their reading and academic deficits are so large that they feel that they can never catch up or succeed.

The way schools are funded – and at this point I'm speaking about high schools – contributes enormously to the problem of providing appropriate education for all students. Yet at the same time the Department of Education requires that teachers provide appropriate education for all students. In a population area where large numbers of students tend to be reluctant learners, schools face uncertain funding levels from one year to the next. Having to rely so heavily on payment for completion of credits and for retention on a year-by-year basis makes it difficult for these schools to plan longer term programs that will address students' needs. Because of the volatility of students' lives, one year may be a great success, another may not, and with funding fluctuating accordingly, as if students were blocks of wood that could be carved identically, a program cannot maintain itself over the rougher times.

Another thing that is happening about the funding is the coercion used on teachers to ensure that students pass their courses, sometimes whether or not students have fully demonstrated understanding of the outcomes/concepts prescribed in the government's various programs of study. This coercion creates in some financially struggling schools a certain disregard for how students pass to get their credits. These schools may demand that teachers push, pull, or drag students across the passing mark line, thereby allowing the school to receive its funding. Development and reinforcement of behaviours that are detrimental both to the student and to society as a whole can easily ensue.

For example, when a class of students is given an assignment and a reasonable due date, responsible students adhere to that due date. Responsible students ensure that they work on the assignment, clarify whatever they can't understand, and submit the assignment on time. On the other hand, students who do not take personal responsibility do not make good choices, and when the due date arrives, they do not hand in the assignment. Many students make excuses. If each incomplete assignment eventually affects the bottom line in funding, teachers are expected to get that student to do that assignment. On one level it is, of course, a good thing that teachers do not allow students to remain irresponsible. However, the real emphasis is not on ensuring that students learn to take personal responsibility; it is on ensuring that no funding is lost.

Schools need to be assured of an adequate block of funding each year. Schools, unlike factories or other industrial or business undertakings, cannot be treated as though their products can all be made, shaped, molded in an identical manner. Stable and adequate funding allows schools to function, whether they serve an academically elite population or a population comprised of less able students. Without stable and adequate funding we teach too many of our students, young people who are already disillusioned and angry with adult society, that school is irrelevant, adults are fools, and society has abandoned them. It's a high price for society to pay.

Along with stable funding there are some other things that we can do. I think that if we could provide additional funding to enable jurisdictions to offer early intervention programs – and I know you're looking at that; I really emphasize the need for full-day kindergarten – we could avoid some of these later problems. Alberta Education should ensure that there is additional funding to support guidance and counselling services. I like that you mentioned that. We need to support them and to co-ordinate the delivery of multi-agency and school-based services, including exit interviews of students leaving school, to find out why that's happening.

Again, I'll go back to high school counsellors. I think there's a need to have a formula, a student/counsellor ratio in place. With the limited resources of child welfare there are a lot of families and students that are falling through the cracks, and we're not able to meet the demands in the school properly. I think that there are just not enough resources. If we look carefully at perhaps including social workers or children's services workers in the school building to work alongside school staff, I'm wondering: would we see a greater co-ordination and a more seamless approach to getting these students and the families the help that they need?

In addition to the school counsellors, I'd like to mention again that we do need librarians. We do need adequate funding. Teacher-librarians are essential. But we need money yearly to keep up the libraries in schools. One of my elementary schools had an audit lately, and their status says that they need $60,000 to catch up and then $5,000 a year to make up for the past cuts.

Another area that I'm concerned about is school fees. Albertans with school-age children have become accustomed to a bill coming home in their child's backpack which asks for payment of school fees. I think that with the booming economy that Alberta is experiencing and the wealth that we're experiencing, not seen for many years, we should be assisting those that are trying to improve their quality of life. In doing so, they are contributing to the richness of our province. I believe we should look at the elimination of school fees.

Another area related to that, I suppose, is fundraising. This is a huge problem. I have letters from parents from numerous schools in my own constituency saying that they're concerned about the lack of identifying and funding basic education in Alberta. Computers are seen as tools to success and learning and part of the Alberta curriculum. Why, then, are parents having to fund raise to purchase computers? Parent fundraising is also subsidizing school expenses such as the school intercom system, headsets for the teachers, library books.

One school council is telling me that in the past four years they have provided over $40,000 to the library. They're talking about buying computer labs, $20,000 that they've put in; school photocopier, $10,000; AV equipment, $4,000. The bottom line is: why do we fund raise and attend casinos to pay for computers, library books, playgrounds, and all these other things that I've mentioned? Again, if literacy is important, why isn't there a literacy fund for each school to draw on and use so that they have proper books in the library and other resources that are required?

I wanted to say something about AISI funding. I believe that the professional development it has allowed has been amazing. Focusing on teacher practices in the classroom and looking at results have all been relevant. It's important, and I'm glad to hear that AISI funding is going to continue.

I know that the reading recovery program was a Rolls-Royce. It had a massive impact, but it costs one teacher who sees one student at a time for half an hour. It's being cancelled because schools can't afford it, and that truly is a shame.

You mentioned the shortage of speech and language therapists. I'll include school counsellors in that. By that I mean trained school counsellors. That's happened, I think, in large part due to the fact that the jobs were disappearing with all of the cutbacks. People didn't see that there was any reason to be confident that they'd have a job. I'm glad that you're recognizing a need for these people. I hope that we'll get them back.

The 45 parent link centres, I want to say, are wonderful. I'm glad that we have initiated that and that we're continuing that program.

The unfunded liability. I know that many have mentioned it today. Could you explain to me, because I need to understand. You said $152 million for unfunded liability, $187 million to the current service payment. What's the balance? Like, where does that leave us? How big is the problem with this unfunded liability? It is a big concern. I'm glad you're addressing it. I'm glad it is on the radar screen at this time.

Special needs. I want to mention that. I think I've got a few more minutes. Curriculum is changing. New textbooks are required in many of our regular programs, and the province doesn't provide any money for those changes. Funding for special-needs students remains inadequate. For example, an aide costs the school close to $40,000, yet the direct funding that we're getting from the province is about $20,000. That means that we're taking $20,000 from the general operating funds, and we're stealing from the other programs.

How are we working towards prevention through early intervention for students at risk of school failure with school districts across the province? The pilot junior kindergarten at Norwood, Delton, and Spruce Avenue are exemplary models that are in place, models that we need to expand on.

Thank you.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair had indicated that given the long list of names that we had, the chair would recognize the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and then the minister. I do know that there are two other members who wish to speak, but that's what the chair had indicated before.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I will try to be brief so that we can get the other members' questions on record because I assume that that's what they want.

Calgary-Nose Hill asked about high school completion rates, and I want to just give him and other members here some comfort knowing that we have a variety of very innovative and creative ways of addressing high school completion, and we see that as we hop around and visit school jurisdictions. Some have an arts focus, a programming focus in the cultural vein. Others stimulate interest in the CTS or industrial arts vein. Others perhaps have more of an academic bent. Suffice it to say that jurisdictions are now offering very wide and diverse courses that perhaps they weren't always able to offer and are enticing students to hang in there longer.

In fact, we are seeing the high school completion rate averages moving in the right direction. They have improved virtually every year for the past several years on average, and our projections are right on target with what is in our annual report. So we're pretty confident and comfortable that we're meeting them. Of course we'll do more, I'm sure, after we finish our round-tables this spring or this summer as we travel the province and as we culminate with our high school symposium later this fall, assuming that we're able to get it all done in the time frame available. I hope we can. That's all good news.

With respect to participation rates in postsecondary, I'll just say that we're seeing tremendous results coming in – we truly are – as a result of our RAP program, the registered apprenticeship program, and with respect to the YAP, the youth apprenticeship project. We have a new one now that we've been working on called learner pathways, which is a cross-ministry initiative between Alberta Education, Advanced Education, and Human Resources and Employment. It includes kindergarten to grade 12 students as our first thought, obviously, but we work with these other ministries because we know that we're trying our best to encourage students to not only complete high school but go on to some form of postsecondary, be it in the arts or industrial arts, skilled trades, or academic pursuits. We have those specific goals.

Your question with respect to the age of leaving high school and whether or not we're able to proclaim a higher age: not at this point. This is a longer, more complicated answer, Mr. Chair, so if the member will indulge me, I will respond in writing. I have done this before. It's about a three-page letter, so I will provide that information there.

Very quickly to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who is also a former teacher, I appreciated your historical lesson, your vignettes, as they were. What sort of jumped out at me, of course, is not only the pedigree, as you referred to it, that has been created but the relationships between Premiers and ministers and deputy ministers. It occurred to me how privileged I feel to be sitting right beside the Premier in my role as Minister of Education because it ties in back with the Aberhart days as it does back with the Rutherford days, where there was a very close relationship. In fact, it was so close that it was one and the same person. Our Premier is extremely supportive of our educational initiatives, and I know that I can always count on his support to take it even further.

The high school CEUs I'll just comment on very quickly, Mr. Chair. This area is under review. I heard a lot about it, on March 24 in particular, from school board chairs. I think we have to just remember that, fundamentally, we do expect accountability, but we don't expect to be unreasonable in our approach to it. We need to keep in mind that most of the funding recoveries, or clawbacks, or whatever the word is that some people have used here this afternoon, relate to a funding request that should not have been asked for in the first place. Some school boards actually told me that they understand that. The trick here would be to not incur those kinds of situations to begin with, and then there is no need for any recoveries or whatever.

I am sensitive to the point, however, of the 50 per cent attendance minimum or whatever it is – I've just forgotten the exact criteria – the 25 per cent minimum test score. There are things like that. I am sensitive to that because I know that when school boards do their planning, they don't plan on students dropping out on the 49th per cent day, so to speak. They've incurred the costs: they've hired the teacher, they bought the equipment, and they bought the supplies and whatever. I'm not sure what we're going to do about it, but it's one reason why I asked the deputy minister and his staff to get me back some information on this, and let's see what we can do about it. We had a very good dialogue with the teachers.

Mr. Chair, how much time do we have left, roughly?

The Deputy Chair: We have about, I would say, five minutes.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, maybe I'll just stop there so that the Member for Calgary-Varsity can get in a couple of points.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I will respond in writing to the rest of your questions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, we have about five minutes.

Mr. Chase: Thanks very much. I wish I could talk 10 times as fast.

The lack of support for education in this province was my prime motivation for becoming politically involved in 1997 in a support role as a Calgary-Foothills Liberal Constituency Association director. Education concerns noted over a 34-year teaching career, which led to my running in 2001 and again in 2004, continue to drive me. I'll primarily be using the Calgary example, with which I'm most familiar, as the petri dish of problems faced by students, parents, teachers, trustees, support staff, maintenance and custodial support throughout this oil and gas rich but education vision poor province.

Last May the Calgary board of education presented to this province a capital plan that covered three years, 2005-2008, and that was presented to the then minister of infrastructure. Of the 13 projects listed in the 2005-2008 capital plan, only one was approved for provincial funding. No new schools were announced the year before, though the Calgary board of education did submit a 2004-2007 school capital program. The board submits a three-year capital plan and a 10-year facilities plan to the provincial government annually. I would suggest that local boards attend to their homework and vision for the future to a much larger extent than this government.

Since 1995 Calgary's population has increased by well over 200,000. It's the equivalent of tacking the city of Regina onto our borders. In 2004-2005 alone over 23,000 new residents moved into Calgary, and that growth continues. In Calgary there are approximately 40 new and developing communities in varying stages of development with no public school presence. High school population is increasing, especially north of the Bow. At least two new high schools are required.

This next figure I cannot believe. The Calgary combined boards of education bus in excess of 50,000 children a hundred thousand kilometres per day. This is a waste of children's time, school board resources, never mind the environmental effect and the resource depletion associated with it.

Fifty per cent of our schools are 40 years or older, creating a backlog of deferred maintenance and facility upgrade costs. When you add the Calgary Catholic with the Calgary public, the deferred maintenance is well over half a billion dollars. There's no excuse for this being left to this sad state.

With every new school constructed in the newly established suburbs, there is a corresponding decline in enrolment in schools in established suburbs or the inner city: close a school, kill a community, kill the price value of the homes that are in the existing community. Why would people want to move back into an area that doesn't have a school? Very short-range planning.

There's a whole series of problems along with school closures. Since the 1999-2000 year – and I'm just going back five years basically – the board of trustees of the CBE has closed 18 schools and five programs. This year, of the programs closed, Fred Seymour elementary school and Jerry Potts school as they currently exist were closed. Added to that, four of the entire schools and programs out of the whole city were in Calgary-Varsity. It greatly upsets me that the school board was forced by poor planning in this province that doesn't take into account the reduced class size formula and the school utilization space formula.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following questions after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$3,824,278,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$1,000,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of the Department of Education.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases,	$3,824,278,000;
nonbudgetary disbursements,	$1,000,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for participating in the estimates of the Department of Education today. We have again seen a great deal of good progress and some very good discussion, debate. Some interesting points were made.

On that note, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 tonight in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 25, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/04/25

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the 166 Blue Quill Scout group. There are 12 of them present. I'm doing this on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who is not here tonight. We welcome this Scout group here. Their group leaders are Darren Gordon, Lorne Purantz, and Dave Young. I would like them to stand, and we'll extend our warm greeting to them.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Gaming

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to move the estimates for Gaming and for the Alberta lottery fund.

It's my pleasure to be here today and to discuss the Ministry of Gaming's 2006-2007 estimates. Our ministry does good work. Every year Albertans see that good work first-hand. They see new playgrounds, new community buildings, and new social programs for seniors. This year we intend to continue to ensure that the revenue derived from gaming and liquor benefits all Albertans.

Maybe my staff can't get through security. I'm not sure. At any rate, I will have some staff members up there. [interjections] I can handle it. Maybe they're at the casino. I'm not sure.

The Ministry of Gaming is somewhat complex in its organizational makeup. In order to put our estimates into perspective, it's important to understand the different entities and their responsibilities. I ask that the committee bear with me while I briefly introduce each entity within the ministry. First, we have the Department of Gaming. The department's area of responsibility includes the strategic direction for the province's gaming and liquor policies and communications. It is also responsible for the administration of several lottery-funded programs, including the popular community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program.

The estimates for the Alberta lottery fund are included under the Ministry of Gaming. It is used to support thousands of volunteers, public and community-based initiatives annually. The ministry also includes the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or AGLC. The AGLC regulates all gaming and liquor activities and establishes operational policy for these activities within a provincially approved framework. In addition to these entities, Gaming is also responsible for the Horse Racing Alberta Act and the Gaming and Liquor Act and the Racing Appeal Tribunal.

My main focus today will be on the Department of Gaming and how we intend to spend the $202 million reflected in those estimates. This includes our request for funding for the community facilities enhancement program, the community initiatives program, and the other grant programs from the Alberta lottery fund.

Before looking at the department details, I'd like to briefly mention the Alberta lottery fund. The Alberta lottery fund provides the extras that help improve our overall quality of life in this province by funding volunteer groups and public and community-focused initiatives. There is little doubt that the funds benefit Albertans. Some of the Alberta lottery fund is allocated to programs in the Department of Gaming, and the rest of it is allocated to programs in other ministries. I'll leave it to my colleagues to speak to the lottery funds allocated to their individual ministries this year. I'm sure that as people have been in the House and listening to the estimates over the last few weeks and as they stay tuned over the next few weeks, they'll hear mention of funds in their estimates that are coming from the Alberta lottery fund.

However, I will speak tonight to my ministry, the Ministry of Gaming's lottery-funded programs. This year the ministry is requesting funding for two very important grant programs: the community initiatives program, or CIP, and the community facility enhancement program, known as CFEP. Without them many worthwhile projects and initiatives throughout Alberta would never come to fruition.

I'd like to share with you some feedback we received at various trade shows that we attended this past year. These are comments that people shared with our staff as they manned the booths at these trade fairs. "Thanks to CFEP the Darwell library has a new facility. Without this grant we couldn't have done this. This program is extremely beneficial to all types of community groups."

"I come from a small community. We have benefited many times from lottery funding for our recreational buildings. We have been happy for this support."

Another quote: "Thanks to a previous lottery grant our school library was able to move forward into the 21st century with new technology. Thank you so much for making a difference in the lives of our students."

This feedback is important to us. It shows that Albertans want and need lottery funding for their communities. Again this year we plan to invest back into Albertans and into their communities. Again this year we're requesting $38.5 million for CFEP and $30 million for CIP.

Another program under the ministry is the horse racing and breeding renewal program. Horse racing and breeding renewal is another highlight of this fiscal year. It goes without saying that these activities have a long and valued history in this province. It is continually proven year in and year out that they contribute to Alberta's economy, benefiting everyone from the breeder to the farmer who grows feed for the horses. A recent economic impact study commissioned by Horse Racing Alberta shows that the industry generates annual economic benefits of over $355 million to Alberta. Additionally, the industry provides over 2,700 full-time jobs and supports over 7,800 Albertans.

This year we have budgeted $63 million for the horse racing and breeding renewal program. The $18 million increase is due to projected revenue growth resulting from an increase in the number of slot machines and their performance at four racing facilities. As with all our flow-through arrangements the actual amount of the grant will be determined by the actual revenue generated. The government's share of net revenues generated by slot machines at racing facilities flow in part to the horse racing and breeding renewal program and in part to other lottery-funded programs.

The department also deals with exhibitions and fairs. I will continue with a related topic, and that is the exhibitions and fairs. The item is particularly important to me, having seen the value of a regional exhibition first-hand in my hometown of Grande Prairie, where my constituency is. They are the heart of the area's agricultural activities. They bring together people from all over the province. They provide facilities for the local communities, and they provide valuable economic spinoffs for local business.

As I mentioned to the committee last year, funding to each of our two largest exhibitions, Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede, will remain at $10.35 million. In addition, $2.66 million will go to seven other major fairs and exhibitions located in the seven major cities around the province: Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, and the three others. This will also help support the various programs offered by those facilities, including fairs, trade shows, and other community events that they host every single day of the year.

This fall the first ever First Nations casino is expected to open in Alberta. This achievement will be the result of hard work and consultation with Alberta's First Nations. In 2001 this government made a commitment to give First Nations an opportunity to enter the casino business as a means of improving economic conditions in their communities. Through the First Nations gaming policy an amount equal to 40 per cent of slot machine proceeds in First Nation casinos will go into the First Nations development fund grant program. All First Nations in Alberta will have the opportunity to apply for funding for special and socioeconomic and community development programs that they identify under this program. So whether they happen to be the host of a casino or not, all First Nations get to share and make application to the development fund grant program. These projects may include education, health, infrastructure, and addiction programs. These funds cannot be used for capital operations or financing costs of gaming activities or facilities.

The $20 million increase from the 2005-2006 forecast is due to the fact that no new First Nations casinos were operational last year. To date five First Nations have received approval to begin construction on their casino facilities. The Enoch First Nation, just on the western outskirts of the city of Edmonton, is expected to be the first one to open their facility this fall. Since this is a flow-through arrangement, the revenue has to be generated before the flow-through grant can be provided, and the actual amount of grants will be determined by the slot revenue generated at First Nation casinos. Again, the government's share of net revenues generated by slot machines from the First Nation cash flow goes in part to the First Nation development fund program and in part to other lottery-funded programs.

We also are involved in the bingo business. The bingo associations grant program is the third and final flow-through arrangement. Each year thousands of charities throughout Alberta depend on bingo proceeds for their worthwhile programs and initiatives. The bulk of the bingo proceeds go directly to the nonprofit groups who work those bingo events. However, as part of the ministry's efforts to help revitalize the bingo industry, which has been in decline for a long time, new games such as keno and electronic bingo are now offered in bingo facilities.

The bingo associations grant program was initiated in 2002-2003 to enable all the net proceeds from these electronic activities to flow to the charities that use these activities for fundraising. Our estimates show that $10 million will be generated for charities from bingo facilities that hold electronic bingo and keno events. All benefiting charities have been properly registered, and their use of proceeds is thoroughly scrutinized to ensure that these funds are going to eligible uses. As you will note, we are requesting a $2 million increase from last year's budget. We are expecting higher levels of activity and upgraded electronic bingo machines to generate increased funding for the charities that are working those bingos.

Another lottery-funded program is other initiatives. This pool of funding provides us the flexibility to react quickly to high-priority initiatives that arise in the year and may fall outside the parameters of other government programs.

Our final lottery-funded budget component is $1.6 million for gaming research. This maintains the level of spending from other years.

To wrap up our budget request, Mr. Chairman, my ministry remains committed to ensuring that our administration costs are kept to a minimum. This year $4.1 million will go towards the cost necessary to administer the department and its lottery-funded programs. This is only 2 per cent – 2 per cent – of our total $202 million allocation this year and is comparable to our prior year's budget.

As you've heard, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Gaming is requesting approval of its $202 million budget for 2006-2007. As in the past our primary goal is to ensure that Albertans continue to see the maximum benefit from the province's well-managed gaming and liquor industries. Albertans expect and Albertans deserve to see new playgrounds, buildings, and programs in their communities.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is a responsible budget, and I will answer questions. I see that the staff members have arrived, so I will introduce them at the end of my presentation here. With us is Ann Hammond, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Gaming; Marilyn Carlyle-Helms, the director of communications; and my executive assistant, Chris Brookes.

Thank you, all members, for your attention.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for that mercifully brief description of his department. We have a long night ahead of us, so I figure we should just move it along. It's my pleasure to begin the debate on the Gaming ministry. I think I'd probably rather be at Rexall Place with most of the other people here right now, but we do what we have to do.

I agree that when the minister says that your department does good work, it doesn't mean that you couldn't do it better, so some of the questions I'm going to ask today are going to clarify some of the issues in your department and maybe improve the situation a little bit in some cases.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to do more of a give-and-take sort of thing, where I'd like to ask a few questions and give the minister time to answer them rather than just going on a 20-minute rant, if that works for you. I hope that works for everyone here, and we can get through it a little bit faster and a little bit more effectively, I think.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, is that okay with you?

Mr. Graydon: Oh, yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, you may proceed.

Mr. Tougas: Well, I'd like to start with some questions about the other initiatives program. As I recall – and I'm sure you do too – the Auditor General found that there were some gaps in the way the other initiatives program was operating. It appears that there were no real rules written for the other initiatives program, at least nothing that the public could see. I think the Auditor General pointed out that there were some deficiencies there, and I want to know if the ministry has made any sort of progress in clearing that up.

I know that there's a lot of value to the other initiatives program. I had an experience with that myself with the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society. It's a very worthwhile group. They were desperately short on cash, and I alerted them to the other initiatives program. They applied, and your ministry acted very quickly and supplied them with $75,000, which kept them going in a time of crisis. So I can see why the other initiatives program certainly has some benefits, but if I hadn't known about it, they never would have heard about that money. They had never heard of it. They didn't know it existed, and I think most people don't know that it exists. It certainly has some value, but I would like it if, when I'm done asking this first batch of questions, you could address what you've done to improve the public's knowledge of the other initiatives program, the criteria, and to lay out for the public exactly how these grants are arrived at.

I notice that under the other initiatives program – at least, I believe it's under other initiatives – the Alberta Junior Hockey League gets $25,000 a year, and the teams in the league get between $7,500 and $8,500 a year. Now, this comes under other lottery spending, I believe. Is this the type of thing that falls under the other initiatives program? Is it a regular grant that they get without having to apply for it? Maybe you're not familiar with it. If you aren't, I'd appreciate some answers to that at a later date.

I'm also curious, when it comes to the other initiatives program, where the total of $11,088,000 came from. It's sort of an odd figure, and I'm just wondering. In the past it's been as high as $16,700,000, and now you've got it at $11 million. How did you arrive at that number?

Some of the other programs: community initiatives and community facility enhancement program grants. You're absolutely right. They do a lot of great work for everyone in Alberta, but I would like to know if we could get some numbers from the minister so that we can determine if the $30 million for community initiatives and the $38.5 million for community facility enhancement are the right numbers. Now, I think the best way we can judge that is if we actually had an idea of how many grants are being received and how many grants are being rejected so that we can get an idea of whether this is an adequate amount. I mean, are there hundreds of grants that are being turned down because there's not enough money in these programs, or is that a rarity?

I'd also like to know, if possible, if you could tell us if there are people who have received approvals for grants but then the grant money ran out and they had to do it again the next year, if this is something that happens from time to time, if it's rare, if it's fairly common. I suspect that some of these things you'll have to supply in writing later, so I would appreciate a commitment to supplying the answers to that if you don't have them right now.

Continuing with these program grants, I'm wondering if you've considered the maximum that you're allowing these days. I believe it's $125,000 for some programs. I'm wondering if maybe this doesn't sort of drain the pot dry a little bit earlier than it should. If some of the groups are perhaps a little bit better organized, a little bit more professional at their fundraising, they might be able to scoop up a lot more money a lot faster than some smaller groups. I'm wondering if maybe that number should be a little bit lower so that we can level the playing field for a small group that maybe is getting lost in the shuffle while some of the other groups are a little slicker at it and getting the top dollar year after year. I wonder if you could address that and if you've given that any sort of consideration at all.

You also discussed the bingo associations grant program. I appreciate your explanation of that. I wasn't too terribly familiar with that. I believe your estimate of that is $10 million. I'm just curious, again, where you came up with that number. Is this based on all these new games of chance that you're introducing as well?

So if you could answer some of those questions for me right now, I'd appreciate that. Once you're done, I have a few more questions for you here as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Yeah, you bet. I may not answer them in the same order they were asked, but I will cover them all by the time I'm finished, I would hope.

I think the first questions dealt with other initiatives and whether there were, you know, specific criteria around that. I guess it's basically designed as, if you will, an emergency fund to be called on, to be accessed for something unexpected. A very good example that I can give I believe was in the community of Viking, where their arena burned down. They did have insurance, but the insurance that they had fell far short of what it would cost to rebuild that arena. It would be certainly outside of the maximum $125,000 normal CFEP thing. So they made an application, and it was felt that that was a very appropriate use for that community to use other initiatives funds.

Another one that you talked about, I believe, was hockey teams getting a grant from other initiatives. The Alberta Junior Hockey League, I believe, was the one you talked about. Yes, it has been kind of an annual thing although they do need to apply. I'm not sure how many teams there are in that league, but as opposed to processing 12 applications or whatever the case may be, the league itself makes an application under other initiatives. They get the one grant, and they divide it up amongst the teams in that league. That's why it is handled through other initiatives as opposed to receiving individual CFEP grant applications or CIP grant applications from their not-for-profit junior teams every year.

The total amount is just an amount that Treasury allocates to us for that program, and we live with it. As you mentioned, it's a little lower this year than some other years, and that's despite requests from us to keep it up there because it's certainly well accessed and well used for emergency situations. We were fortunate this year that when it came to the Katrina disaster and the Pakistan earthquake disaster, we had surplus funds that we could call on for those two $5 million donations. But if we hadn't had the surplus funds to call on, those would have come directly out of other initiatives because that's a perfect place for an event such as that to access the funds.

No, we don't advertise it. We don't advertise CFEP and CIP either. You won't see an ad in your local newspaper saying: apply for a grant from the government. But I believe that when people approach their MLAs on all sides of the House, certainly MLAs are aware of the other initiatives. If they've been paying attention at all to these estimates over the last few years, they're aware that that fund exists, and they're aware that it traditionally funds expenditures higher than the $125,000 limit.

I'll skip to that $125,000 number now before I get back to some other questions. Actually, the most pressure I get is to increase the $125,000 as opposed to decreasing it. What we're finding is that with construction costs – and we all know what's happening with that in Alberta with the economy the way it is – that $125,000, although it sounds like a lot of money, just doesn't cut it with these big projects. As a result, people are coming and asking for more and more and more, and the $125,000 is the limit. So we do find that we have to turn down more than we probably used to in the past because we do run out of money. We also find that we have to cut people's requests back. Their expectation is that they're going to get more than that, but we have to really stick to the policy and say: "No, I'm sorry. That's as much as we can do."

If there are applications on file at the end of the year and we're out of money, those applications are carried over into the next year. They don't have to reapply. It's just that they may not get their grant in March, but they'll be early in the lineup come April or May, when the new budget kicks in. So they don't lose their spot in the line, if you will. They are still in the queue to receive their grant if they're an eligible-based group.

The revenues in bingo. It's pretty well a mathematical formula based on the number of locations, the traditional play that's been going on in bingo. We have taken a considerable hit in the bingo revenues. Charities have taken a considerable hit, if I might say so, particularly in the city of Edmonton with the smoking regulations that are in now. Bingo revenues have declined, and one of the ways that we're trying to get that revenue back to those charitable groups is to allow them to access the electronic bingo machines, that are a little more high-tech – people seem to enjoy that – as well as the game of keno, which you can play at a bingo hall. We are trying to help the charities, particularly, as I say, in those communities that have gone 100 per cent smoke-free, because their revenues have dropped. The revenues in casinos dropped as well from July 1 of last year, when they all went to nonsmoking in the city of Edmonton. They are slowly coming back again, and over time they will get back to where they were, but initially, certainly, that had an impact on the revenues at casinos and, more importantly, at the bingo halls for the charities involved.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Thank you. Just in regard to some of your answers, the money for the Junior Hockey League comes from the other initiatives program, but I believe you said that it's more of an emergency fund for programs that fall outside of it. I don't see how a regular cash donation to a hockey league qualifies as an other initiatives grant. Perhaps it should go under Alberta sport and recreation or something along those lines. It's also my understanding that the league receives $25,000, and each team receives between $7,500 and $8,500. I don't know whether they all have to apply for it or not, but that's hardly an emergency situation. That's something that should be looked at in the future, I think.

My question was regarding the Auditor General's report on the other initiatives program. I didn't hear whether you have addressed that or not or whether you're making any moves towards clearing that up. When you say that you don't advertise it specifically, that's true. None of these programs are advertised, but it still isn't something that people really have a very good grasp of. As I recall, the Auditor General's report said that the rules for this are not posted on the website. There's no application form or anything along those lines, so it still has kind of an underground feel to it, where people really don't know that it's there.

Ms Blakeman: Underground? It's a slush fund.

Mr. Tougas: It could be a slush fund. It could be something like that, where it's a large pile of money that's at the minister's discretion with no particular rules in place.

I still would like to hear if you are going to do anything about what the Auditor General had to say about that.

Moving ahead to the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, AGRI, I was at their conference in Banff last weekend. It was an excellent conference, and I understand – and I hope you can confirm this for me – that they have a new five-year deal in place or are looking into a new five-year deal. I was going to bring this up and say that it's about time that we actually had consistent funding for this organization. It looks like maybe some steps have been made in that direction as it is right now, so perhaps you could clear that up. I heard that from some members of the board. I never heard a confirmation of it. I haven't seen a press release, so I wonder if you could clear that up for me right now. Giving them long-term, sustained funding will give them the opportunity to do what are called longitudinal studies over several years. It's a term I just learned the other day, so I wanted to use it today.

Ms Blakeman: And you used it very well.

Mr. Tougas: I used it very nicely. Thank you.

The organization has been getting the same amount of money for several years. It's been the same, I think, since it began. I'm sure it's probably time that these guys started getting a little bit of a funding increase, either a regular increase or just a boost of some sort. I was talking to a fellow from the Ontario Problem Gambling Research Centre, I think it was called. They get over $4 million a year for funding for problem gambling research. With all the money Alberta is making on gambling, I think it's time that we gave these guys certainly some more money to do some of the very good work that they're doing.

Moving on to casinos. I think I asked this last year, and I don't know if I got an answer for it then. I'm curious if the government has any long-range plans for the number of casinos that you have planned for Alberta. There are a number that are on the board right now that have been given approval, not just the First Nations ones, but I think there are some expansion plans. I think we're at 16 casinos in Alberta now – is that right? – so we're going to be up to 20 or more in a short time. How many is enough? How many is too many? I mean, is this something that has come up in discussions in your department, or is this just sort of ad hoc? Do you kind of play it by ear and say, "Okay, we're going to call it quits now"? At what point are you going to have too many casinos in Alberta? At what point are there going to be too many slot machines? You could make the case that we already have way too many slot machines in Alberta. I would like to know if you have any future plans for casinos.

Also, regarding the First Nations casinos, are you concerned that these casinos will draw customers, clients, whatever you want to call them, away from some of the other casinos? I mean, is there a saturation point, where these casinos are just cannibalizing other casinos instead of actually generating more business?

If you could address some of those questions, I'd appreciate it, and then I have a few more for you after that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the minister, I've just been advised that the score is 1-0 for Edmonton.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: And I don't have any bets on the game either.

Okay, other initiatives. I think the very title is a perfect title. While we do use it as an emergency fund and it's accessed in case of an emergency, it is for other initiatives that don't fit the strict rules of CFEP and CIP. The hockey teams that you talked about are a very good example. I'm not sure that they would fit the strict guidelines of, certainly, the $125,000, the not-for-profits, although they are not-for-profit teams. They are scattered across the province, and it's been determined that they are a worthwhile cause in the communities that they are operating and playing in. So that's where it is funded from. I guess if it came out of the traditional CFEP or CIP programs, that would be that much less that could go to other community groups in the constituencies across the province. I think it's a great place to fund programs like that or initiatives like that. As I say, it allows the other money in the traditional two programs to go to other worthwhile causes.

The Auditor General. I know that we're very conscientious with the applications and extremely conscientious about how the money gets spent once it is granted to an organization. We get accused of being overregulated and overaudited, if you will, in some cases, but I'm a strong defender of the audits that we do and the amount of due diligence that we take. We're dealing with an awful lot of cash money here, and it would only take someone with a little bit of sleight of hand to siphon off a tremendous amount of money that should go to a charity. So I'm a strong supporter of all the forms and applications and audits and reports. I know that they're as long as your arm, but I think they're required because we are dealing with cash money that could easily go astray. I'm very confident that it doesn't go astray. If we hear even a hint that there may be a little bit of money that hasn't been used appropriately as per the request, we have audit teams who would go in and very closely scrutinize that. That is strongly supported by the Auditor General.

The Alberta Gaming Research Institute. As you mentioned, they had their annual meeting and conference in Banff this past weekend. Yes, we are in the final throes, if you will, of signing a five-year contract with them, which does give them assurance as opposed to year by year. At the moment it's set at $1.5 million, but that is something, I guess, that could be negotiated over that five years. The assurance they have is that we're going to be funding them over a five-year contract. It's my understanding that they're agreeable to the terms that have been laid out, and so are we. So it's just a matter of days or weeks until that is signed. Certainly, they're still getting their funding. That hasn't been cut off or anything like that.

Of the money that they've got to this point, a lot of it has been used for what they call capacity building: getting staff on board in Calgary, Edmonton, and Lethbridge, where they operate in those three communities. Now that the staff and, kind of, the overhead is up and in place, we feel that it's adequate for them at the moment to carry out the research that they want to carry out.

I, as well, spoke to the fellow from Ontario who suggested that if Ontario gave their researchers $4 million, Alberta was being a little chintzy. But if you look at, perhaps, a number like the per capita contribution to gaming research by Alberta or by Ontario, I think we would stand in pretty good light.

I did attend two or three weeks ago the responsible gaming conference in Toronto, which had delegates from around the world. There were delegates there from New Zealand, Australia, Holland, and pretty well every province in Canada. The people that I talked to there felt that the Alberta government was quite generous in our contribution to research, and they admired the way that we not only gave them the money but the way we stayed out of their business once we gave them the money.

I can stand and say with a clear, clear conscience that we have never told them to hold back any of their research. We have never directed what results we want to see out of that research. We may give them topics that we would like to see researched, but that's it: no direction as far as what we expect from that report. Certainly, any of the research that they do, once it's vetted by their professionals and once they get their work done, they're free to post whatever they want on their website and circulate it. We've seen that some of their research has not been that favourable to what we're doing. I admit that. But it's out there, and we accept their research for what it is.

Casinos. You're right; at the moment there are quite a few casinos that have gone through the eight-step process. We've talked about that in here before. It's a very complex and detailed process from step 1 right through to step 8. Step 8 is when all the due diligence has been done, all the partners and financial backers have been checked to the nth degree, and basically they're given permission to go ahead and construct a casino. They are not really given the licence to operate that casino until it's finished and ready to go. They have to prove that they've built what they said they were going to build and that it's equipped the way they said they were going to equip it.

As you mentioned, there are several, particularly First Nation, casinos that have received the okay to proceed, but at this point in time they're not proceeding. They're not constructing. Maybe they're still working on financing or whatever the case may be, or maybe there are internal band questions that they're trying to get settled amongst themselves. At any rate, they are not proceeding at this point in time, and we just need to wait and see whether they proceed or not.

We open up tourist destination areas. We kind of block our casinos into those areas. We open up those areas for applications and say, for example, "Okay, the board feels that there's room for another casino in the greater Edmonton area," which they did, oh, a year and a half or two years ago. I think it was even before I came on board. But they opened up that area. There were several applications, and at the end of the day there was one application approved. That casino is under construction in northeast Edmonton. There are no areas open at the present time that I'm aware of. That's not to say that someone couldn't come along and say, "We think there's room for another casino in the northeast part of the province" or wherever the case may be and start down the eight-step process.

In that process the board looks very closely and very detailed at the market and determines, as you said, whether all we're doing is taking revenue from one charity over here and giving it to another one there. There's not much point in having people work twice as hard for half as much money. So they are very careful about, if you will, awarding a casino licence or giving people their approval after the eight steps and take into consideration that the market is what they're looking at.

There is no question that a concern right now, the Enoch casino – we're sure that it will be a smoking casino. It's outside of the city of Edmonton, so the city bylaws governing smoking will have no impact on that casino that they're building there. It's a $120 million project, I believe. It's a 12-storey hotel operated by Marriott. I've been out to tour it under construction. It will be a first-class operation. It'll be something that certainly the Enoch band can be proud of, and Albertans can be proud that we're building casinos that are tourist draws and destinations. Part of their casino will include – actually, finished already are twin ice arenas, indoor ice arenas attached to that casino. There are entertainment rooms. They have plans for soccer pitches and ball diamonds and that sort of thing. The market they're after is adult tournaments and bonspiels, if you will, to have those people stay in their hotel, use their recreational facilities, including the casino, of course, as a recreational facility.

There are approved applications at the moment. One is very close to construction in Camrose. That's the only traditional casino that I know of that has gone the eight steps, has approval to start construction. They may have moved a construction trailer onto the site, but that's about as far as they've got at this point in time. The other traditional casino that has been approved, the only other one, is the one in northeast Edmonton. It's well under construction, but the completion date is many months down the road.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. As the previous critic in this area, you know, your interest never goes away. I've been listening carefully. We're still not getting a clear answer on whether we're going to see any specific criteria for the slush fund known as other initiatives. That has been put on the record very clearly by the Auditor General. I'll ask one more time to see if we're going to get anything clearly laid out as to criteria. I did manage to sort of wheedle a vague criteria out of the previous minister in one of our exchanges during a budget debate, which did set out that it was for larger amounts of money, that it could involve grants that carried over a fiscal year which allowed the government to channel much larger, in the millions of dollars towards certain projects, that it was at the discretion of the minister, that it's not publicly known that this exists. You have to kind of be an insider. So it does look like a slush fund. You're going to have to work hard here to get on the record and convince me otherwise because by any definition, my friend, that's what it looks like. So I'd certainly encourage you to be able to get that criteria clearly stated and as part of information that is publicly available should the public seek it out.

Another question that has arisen many times over the years and I would like to raise again is that we often hear that government MLAs have control over the CFEP money or the CIP money that is available in their constituency. What we're led to believe is that there's an allocation or that the money is divided up equally or somewhat equally in every constituency, but the government MLAs are aware of how much money, and they orchestrate how much money and who gets what in their constituency. I'd like to hear what the minister's take on this is.

I recently had a group approach me and say that they were trying to get some money for a playground. They had gone to their local MLA and were told by the office staff, well, so and so only gave X amount of money for playgrounds, and they were looking for a more significant playground. I think that it was actually a multicomunity playground. They were looking for more money and were trying to talk to me about what other sources were available. I was really interested in their having been told that so and so MLA for blah blah, you know, only allocated X amount of money. I was really interested in that because I thought the decision was made through very careful criteria that were set out and administered by civil servants. Once again this little issue keeps raising its little head, so I'd like to get the minister on record for that one.

Could I also know, please, what year of the three-year cycle we're in with both the CFEP and the CIP grants? I understand that those still go on a three-year cycle and that the minister does decide at the end of every three years whether the program will be extended or not. Could you let me know what year we're in and whether there's anticipation that it will be rolled over and started again?

I'm also interested in another issue that has come up before, and that's an issue around double-dipping. Now, strictly speaking, in my definition of double-dipping that would be getting paid from two or more sources for the same activity. I know that a while back there was some real interest from the government members around organizations like arts organizations getting operational funding through AFA but at that time also applying for special project money through Community Development. I suppose in that mix could also be considered a grant from CFEP. There was great pressure not to allow this terrible double-dipping, which at the time I argued wasn't double-dipping because they were doing different projects for the grant money they were getting from each different grant. I'm interested in whether the Gaming ministry has a policy on double-dipping, question one. Question two, how do they define it? Question three, are they anticipating putting anything in place over this fiscal year or in the three-year business plan cycle that we're looking at that would restrict any organization from applying for more than one grant from government no matter what the source?

Here's another example. I know that a number of golf courses can get funding from one source, and then they're going back and getting CFEP money. Good example. Is that considered double-dipping if they're getting sort of operational funding or repeated funding from another source and then they're getting a CFEP grant? I'm mostly interested in hearing whether there is any move towards restricting organizations to only applying for one kind of grant, and that would include a CFEP grant. This one's come around before, minister, and I've argued successfully that CFEP and CIP should not be in the mix because they're for a different purpose, but I'd just like to know where we're at with that.

Finally, I'd like to hear a discussion from the minister on the horse-racing initiative. Now, when this initiative was first announced – and I'm thinking that we're not sure where we are in this three-year cycle, but I'd bet you that we're probably seven or eight years into this initiative – it was three years. It was to be, I think, up to $45 million over three years. It was a very finite program which was intended to increase the racing purses to attract and rejuvenate the horse-racing industry.

At the time I did an awful lot of research into what was the future of the horse-racing industry, and what I found out was that it's dying. The number of race days that everybody is having are reducing and reducing. Essentially, the bettors were more interested in betting on a simulcast of a big race like the Kentucky Derby or the Queen's Plate or whichever one you want to come up with. They found it more interesting to bet on the really good, big races that could be simulcast than on a local race. There were fewer and fewer local race dates. What it was looking like was that the – I'm going to apologize in advance here because I can't remember how they're rated – racetracks like Edmonton and Calgary, whatever ranking they're in, were going to disappear. The small ones like Lethbridge may well make it because for some reason they could sustain their market, but for the other two, where you had bettors in Edmonton and Calgary, for instance, they wanted the big races to bet on.

That was supposed to be a finite project. Now here we are in, I think, the third cycle of this, and we're now up to giving the horse-racing initiative $63 million a year. You're going to have to work hard to convince me that this isn't a massive propping up of a dying industry. I know that the Minister of Finance gets up and says: oh, all kinds of people make their money through the horse-racing industry. But, frankly, there are about 40 good breeders in this province, and they're the ones making the money off of this one. So I'd like the minister to explain to me why we are pouring $63 million a year into a horse-racing industry that is dying, which essentially, it could be argued, benefits basically 40 breeding operations. That's a nice operation there.

I don't see improvements in the number of race days. I don't see improvements in the number of attendees at the racetracks. I do see an increase at the racing entertainment centres, which is not the racetrack. That's a different deal. They're watching the simulcast there. I'm seeing the government continue to fund something without reporting back to this Legislative Assembly and to the people of Alberta about a particular project. I would argue that the project has failed, and I'm questioning why we continue to see the government support the horse-racing initiative and increasing amounts every year, Mr. Minister. I mean, we started out, I think it was, at $17 million and $18 million, and then it went up a bit. Now we're doing $63 million a year.

When I look at things like hot lunch programs, when I look at housing initiatives, when I look at all kinds of projects in this province, frankly, I'm really angry when I see $63 million going to horse racing. You know, I look at my small business people in downtown Edmonton that are looking for a break or venture capital or a way to get going. They don't get to access that money. They're certainly not one of the 40 breeding operations. What's the deal here? I know that you guys take a lot of flack about this. I know that you get teased a lot about it. Frankly, you should because along with your slush fund I think that this horse-racing initiative is a highly questionable activity on behalf of the government.

Finally, to wrap up, could the minister discuss whether it was considered how addicted to gambling revenue this government is and whether there is any kind of discussion or study or analysis that is going on right now as to backing off the dependency that the government now has with over a billion dollars of revenue being generated for the province from the proceeds of gambling? That revenue is not rising at the same accelerated rate as it was, but nonetheless it continues to get higher every year. Does the ministry just have a policy of, "Great; let it keep rolling in; we're going to keep using it," or is there any anticipation that, you know, it's inappropriate for a provincial government to be addicted to gambling revenues and that we're going to start backing off by 10 per cent a year for 20 years or whatever until we don't engender that or what? I'm wondering what your actual philosophy and attitude are about the government itself bringing in revenue on a regular basis and anticipating that revenue through gambling sources.

I've gone through about five major topic areas there. Understandably, you may not have some of the detailed responses that I'm seeking or the more thorough responses, and I'm happy to accept those in writing if you could endeavour to get those to me. I know you've got crack staff. If you could try and get those to me in writing before I'm expected to vote on the final budget, I would appreciate that because then I could be doing it with that information in my head.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. Well, I'll answer some, and some, obviously, you will end up getting in writing too.

We started off with other initiatives, and you're right, it tends to be large amounts. It certainly tends to be too much to handle in one year in some cases, so we spread it out over two or three years, and that does happen on the larger projects.

Another organization – autism, I believe it was. My colleague back here isn't available at the moment, but that was just another one that came to mind. The Autism Society in Calgary, the new Ronald McDonald House in Calgary, Rotary Challenger Park in Calgary: those are the kinds of projects which tend to be multimillion dollar projects. As I say, you know, it's nice to have the other initiatives fund to draw that from because that leaves the $30 million that we talked about in CFEP and CIP for the smaller projects, and we do a lot of them.

You talked about government control. You know, they are very carefully examined by staff. Every application goes in to staff. I can assure you that there isn't a constituency in the province that's left out, that every constituency accesses that fund, and you might be surprised that some of the opposition constituencies end up getting more money than government constituencies. It's not really a criteria when we look at the applications. It's: is it a good application? Does the staff say that it's a good application? Is there money available? If the answer is yes, that's just the way it's handled.

We're in the first year of a three-year cycle, you mentioned.

Ms Blakeman: On CFEP?

Mr. Graydon: Both of them, yes, I believe.

Your discussion about double-dipping was interesting. There are certainly no new restrictions planned, and I don't consider it to be double-dipping because the programs are so different. CFEP is very clearly a capital program. CIP can be operational funds, so you can get funds to hire staff to get you going on a new program, a not-for-profit. Maybe they need someone to do some computer programming for them, or they want to hire a staff member to go out and raise funds for them, a fundraiser so to speak. They can access CIP for that. It's not capital. The programs are very different.

The Foundation for the Arts. Certainly there are groups that get money from the Foundation for the Arts. There's no question about it. They also can apply for specific project funding under those programs. I've never ever considered that double-dipping. The uses are very different.

Horse racing. Oh, we could talk for a long time about horse racing, but I obviously need to start out with the thing that we always start out with, that there's not one nickel given to horse racing until somebody plays a loonie at the slot machine at the racetrack. If you play the slot machine at the Casino Yellowhead, Horse Racing Alberta gets nothing from that, not a penny. But if you go to Northlands and play the slot machines there, there are flow-through funds that go to Horse Racing Alberta, there are flow-through funds that go to Northlands Park, and there are flow-through funds that go to the Alberta lottery fund. So there are several partners in the money that's generated at a racing entertainment centre.

The industry is being rejuvenated. If you ask people in the industry, they are spending more money on breeding stock. I talked to a fellow on the weekend who said that as a result of the rejuvenated industry, the fact that the purses were going up and that it looked like there might be a new racetrack built in Calgary, he was investing $400,000 in a new barn down near Olds, Alberta. He said he had staff – oh, he employed two or three trainers, and I forget how many people; anyway, considerable staff – and he said that if it wasn't for the horse-racing renewal initiative, he would be out of the business, guaranteed, 100 per cent not involved. So the money that he's earning through purses is allowing him to reinvest in the business and increase the product.

Handle is the term used to indicate the amount of money bet on horse racing. The handle for simulcast racing is going up. You're very correct that people like to bet on the Kentucky Derby and the Breeders' Cup, but they also like to bet on the Premier's cup in Alberta and the big stakes races in Alberta because the purses are higher, the quality of the animal is higher, and it's a more predictable race to handicap, if there is such a thing. The purses are going up in simulcast, and the live handle is going up as well. I believe this is the only jurisdiction in North America that's seeing an increase in handle. So that speaks something about the initiative that we're taking to renew the industry: the only jurisdiction where the handle is increasing as opposed to going in the tank. If you look across North America, you'll see that in a lot of cases they're called 'racinos,' a combination of racetrack and casino, and just about every state in the U.S. has gone that way to support the horse-racing industry because they are finding that it's a good mix of entertainment. There are people who go to the racetrack for the entertainment value of the racing, and there are people who go there for the entertainment value of the slot machines. We're happy to provide that entertainment for them.

It's a little bit misleading to say that there are only a few breeders benefiting. I would like to think of the several hundred people who work in the backstretch cleaning stalls and exercising horses at Northlands, Stampede, Evergreen Park in Grande Prairie, and in Whoop-Up Downs in Lethbridge. In a lot of cases those people would be almost unemployable if they weren't doing those jobs, and they're doing a very good job of it. They're well respected and well treated. They take advantage of the daycare centre that's been provided at Northlands specifically, so if they have families, they can do their job and put their children in the daycare centre that's on track.

There are a lot more people and a lot more economic spinoffs than just to a few breeders. You know, the horse isn't much good if it's not being fed, if it's not being cleaned, if it's not being watered, if it's not being exercised, trained, or if somebody doesn't ride it around the track in a race. There are even jockeys who are benefiting from this. We can talk about horse racing forever. We'll agree to disagree, and that's kind of the way it's going to be.

The figure of $63 million, I believe you threw out, is a complete estimate. That's exactly what it is. It's a very mathematical calculation. Number of machines, dollars per hour into the machine, number of hours that they're open, based on past performance: here's how much potential there is to earn. Now, it can go down or it can go up, but it's our best guess, if you will, of what is available at those racetracks.

It's particularly hard to predict over the next couple of years because of the new track in Calgary, which is talked about and appears to be moving ahead, but the start-up date keeps getting moved back. So we put money in our estimates, that we think the track in Calgary will generate so many dollars, and then they say: oh, we won't be open that year; we won't be open until a year later. So those estimates are pretty fluid, and we just do the best that we can and hope that they get that project going.

You talked about whether the government is hooked on gaming, if you will, or addicted to gaming. Certainly, we are unique in Canada with the charitable model, and I guess I have to ask the question: we know there's going to be gaming, so who do you want in it? Do you want the Bandidos, the Hells Angels, or the government of Alberta? Who do you want to be in the gaming business in Alberta, because where will the profits go? Where will the profits go from organized crime? Organized crime will be in gaming if the government isn't in gaming. Guaranteed, 100 per cent they would be in the business, and you wouldn't see one nickel going to your playground or one nickel going to the Foundation for the Arts or one nickel going to any of the good causes that we support every single day.

So, yes, we're in the business, and we're going to stay in the business. We are going to keep it current. Eighty per cent of Albertans are responsible gamblers. They think of it as a good form of entertainment. They go. It's not an issue with them. It's just a good night out, and away they go. Yes, we know that there's about 5 per cent of the people that have the potential – potential – for an addiction problem, and of that, less than 2 per cent will be the people that you read about, unfortunately, in the paper that stole from their employer or lost the family home or whatever the case may be. We know those numbers. We work very hard at reducing them.

We make improvements every single year. We take initiatives. We just opened responsible information centres. We opened one in the Palace Casino in Edmonton a month ago. We're opening another one in Calgary in the next week or two. They're staffed by trained addictions counsellors who are employees of AADAC. You can go up to that booth right on the casino floor and ask your questions about the true odds of a game. They're told the truth about all these fallacies, that if you pull the handle, you might win, and if you push the button twice, you're going to lose, and all these false theories. The truth is told to them that, no, that makes absolutely no difference at all. It's a random number generated, that you absolutely one hundred per cent cannot influence the outcome of that slot machine. The only thing that's a hundred per cent guaranteed is that if you play long enough, you're going to lose all your money.

So they're told that. They're handed brochures if they want that. If they want to have a private meeting, there are private rooms to go with the addictions counsellor and get that information. That's just the latest initiative that we've taken to help people, and we will continue with that. That particular program is a two-year pilot program, and if it proves to be successful, as it appears to be taking off and that it will be successful, then it will be expanded across the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark raised an issue with respect to the rules on smoking at the proposed casino at the Enoch First Nation. One of the questions that I would have for the minister is that I understand that the Enoch casino would not be subject to the smoking bylaws of the city of Edmonton. However, my question is whether or not that casino will be subject to the laws of the province of Alberta and, therefore, subject to any future regulations restricting smoking. In other words, is there something in the granting of the casino licence which provides that they will conform to any future regulations regarding smoking?

A second question that I have is relating to the apparent proliferation of casino groups, the groups that obtain the two-day casino licences. There seems to be some significant change in the makeup of those types of groups. Whereas once they were largely community associations, charitable groups of broader interest and broader participation in the community, they seem increasingly to be more small, ethnic or sports-oriented groups that have a very narrow focus and whatnot, and it seems like the legitimate community groups are having to wait longer and longer in the lineup to get their casino licences.

Thirdly, there was one other issue that I wanted to raise, and it was with respect to the community poker tournaments. I'm led to believe that there could be permission given to communities to operate these Texas hold'em type tournaments provided that the house does not take any of the proceeds of the gaming or the buy-in. I wonder if the minister could clarify what the rules are relating to those particular issues.

Mr. Graydon: Sure. Well, to deal with the smoking on reserve, certainly, as far as the operation of the machines and that sort of thing our agreement is that, as with other casinos, the government owns the slot machine. The First Nation or the casino operator owns the chair you sit at. He owns the ashtray that's sitting there if you happen to be in a smoking casino, pays the staff, owns everything else in the place. The First Nations are going to honour those same regulations.

I think that if they decide that it's going to be a smoking casino, it will be a smoking casino, and there's nothing that the province of Alberta can do. They are a First Nation under federal government rules and regulations if they're even governed under those. We're seeing an issue in eastern Canada as we speak, I believe, about jurisdiction and rules. So I think they're pretty well calling their own shots when it comes to smoking in that casino.

Your mention of charities is an interesting one. If there's any real pressure that the department gets, it's not for less casinos. It's for more, and it's for more casinos from charitable groups who are not happy with the three-, four-year wait that they have to get in to work a casino. As groups have found, you know, bingo revenues have gone down, but, boy, you can make a nice little ton of change by working a casino. So more and more groups, as you said, are applying. As a result, the wait-list has gotten longer and longer and longer. So they're saying, well, you know, build us another casino. We're not really sure that that's the answer. As I said, there's not much point in having you work twice as hard and make half as much money.

The other issue that we're finding, of course, is that casino revenues are pooled. If you happen to work a city casino, at the end of the quarter your pooled share may be $70,000 or $80,000. If you're working a rural casino in Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Red Deer, some of those more rural locations, the pooled amount that your charity would receive would be probably about half that much. So they're not particularly happy about that as well.

The other issue that we're finding and you mentioned is the smaller groups. One of the regulations is that, number one, you have to have approval for what you're going to spend your charitable money on. Secondly, you have to spend it in two years. Some of these groups are making so much money, they're having trouble spending it in two years. Then they apply for extensions, or they try and get another project going or whatever the case may be. So they've been maybe more successful than some people are expecting.

I know that the commission is doing a review at the moment about the whole idea of pooling and the whole idea about spending the money in two years and the whole question of wait-lists. They're trying to come up with some solutions. If there are any issues, as I said, that are raised with the department, those are the most prevalent that end up on my desk.

Poker tournaments: oh, yeah, an interesting topic. Everybody is caught up in poker fever these days. You can't turn on your television set in the evening or maybe in the daytime too – I'm not sure. Certainly, there isn't a minute that goes by that you can't be watching some kind of a poker tournament on TV. As a result, it has caught on around the province. It has become extremely popular at the casinos. They have 24-hour poker rooms where people go 24 hours a day: go off shift at midnight, and go play poker if you want. It is a card game controlled by the Criminal Code of Canada, so we need to be conscious of the rules that they have in place. Yes, the rule is that if the house is taking a cut or profiting in any way from that poker game, then it's illegal. That's just the way it is.

So the not-for-profit groups, to my knowledge: I don't think any of them have been approved at this point in time, but I'm not sure. I don't know of any at any rate. But another group like – well, there are groups that say: we don't charge so much per hand for playing poker, but we charge everybody, you know, $10 for the coffee that they're going to drink or something. Well, no, I'm sorry. All of the money from the poker game has to be distributed to the poker players. The house can't take a cut unless you're playing at a licensed casino in the province of Alberta.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the first speaker that was recognized did indicate to the chair that he wanted to use the 20 minutes back and forth, but none of the other speakers indicated that upfront. Now I do have requests from Calgary-Nose Hill as well as Edmonton-Centre to go again. However, because I've been keeping track of people who identified that they want to speak, the chair will recognize members in the following order – and in between the minister will be recognized to respond – Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Nose Hill.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps, upfront, I would like to be able to exchange back and forth if that would be permissible.

The Deputy Chair: We will allow that, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. It's been a very interesting conversation that has gone back and forth, and I've changed my position many times on where I should start. I think I'll go back to where I was originally going to start, and that goes back to the criteria of applications for CFEP and CIP and the other initiative programs. It is very frustrating for the people that have contacted me on what the actual criteria are in making those applications, and when they've been turned back to them, there's never any explanation, really, saying why or what they need to change or do to help them with applications. I've received the criteria from the Gaming minister, but still as I go back to the various organizations, a number one concern of the people that contact me is that they don't understand what the criteria are. As the good Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out – I'm disturbed to hear that it's not just my area that has been told that the MLAs have a certain amount of money that they're allotted to give out in their constituency.

Ms Blakeman: Government MLAs.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Government MLAs. Thank you for that correction. A very critical point to point out.

I've had many organizations, whether they're historical societies or libraries or whatever else, that are very much under the impression that the government MLAs have a slush fund that they can allocate to their area and very much make those people dependent on those MLAs. So I would appreciate the minister getting up again and clarifying that so that I can take Hansard back to explain to the good people of my constituency that this is not government policy and to clarify that because it would be my number one major concern with this ministry.

To jump back now, I was shocked to hear the government say that we want to be in the gambling business because if we don't, we have illegal organizations that want to participate and take up that area. This is unbelievable to me, and I guess I have to wonder if the think tanks are looking at opening up legal government drug centres to compete with the Hells Angels and those organizations so that therefore people won't be going to these illegal organizations. Perhaps we're going to be opening up Vegas chicken homes, or prostitution centres, so that people won't be going to illegal facilities.

I'm just wondering if this is government thought and process on how we're going to limit all of these vices that are a curse to our society, that we're going to go into competition and make it legal for government but illegal for anybody who isn't in government. Like I say, that was quite startling to me, and I'd like some clarification on that if we're going to be expanding our gaming and lottery to entertainment as well and other areas in that direction.

I would like to address to the minister at this time that the other initiatives program has done a lot of good in the province. I won't argue with that, but I still have problems. Many of the people say to me: why do we have to be dependent on this? They love the old heritage trust fund and that area where they were making applications. But with the other initiatives program has the Warner Hockey School ever contacted the ministry to look at something like that? With the money that we see going into horse racing and other areas, I think maybe this other initiative should be going to special schools. There's one in Vauxhall wanting to open up for baseball development and the Warner hockey school, which I still think would be an outstanding project here in the province. I would ask the minister that he maybe look into that or set up a meeting with the Warner hockey school on making that application because there is a fair amount of money that's needed there.

Perhaps it's just my shortness of time, but the minister has talked about the amount of funds coming in from horse racing, and I can't see the line. I see the line where there's $63 million going out to horse racing. I would appreciate it if he could point out to me the money that has actually come in and the flow-through fund that he talks about to see what the actual income is from the horse racing. If he could point that out for me, I would really appreciate it.

Maybe I'll just let him answer those few questions, and then we'll proceed if that's okay, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Graydon: Well, sure. I guess that when it comes to CFEP and CIP, I'll repeat what I said before. There is not a constituency, including yours, that has not received many, many grants. There's not a constituency that hasn't been refused a few as well. That goes across the province. It's based on the application. It's based on the money in the fund. The MLAs in all cases are invited. If you want to put in a letter of support to the group, you're certainly welcome to do that. Some MLAs do; some don't. It's their own personal initiative whether the group approaches them for a letter of support. I don't have my list tonight, but I certainly have a list of projects in Cardston-Taber-Warner that have been funded through both those programs.

Yes, I can give you a list of ones that have been refused too. The reasons why? You know, I don't have those details. The staff has a rating system, and they check off various points. Number one, is it a registered, not-for-profit society? I mean, that's question 1. Is the use of proceeds something that we would consider appropriate for the use of gaming funds? I suspect that that's maybe where your Warner hockey school falls into. I have met with that group. I've had a presentation from them. I went to Calgary, actually, and had an audiovisual presentation from that hockey school. It is a good project, and they to date have been unsuccessful. It is a school. I don't know if it's classed as a charter school or not, but I think of it as that because it's very specifically geared to young ladies, I believe, who want to pursue careers in hockey. We don't use lottery money to fund school programs. We don't. I'm sorry. We may top up the computer budget, or we may buy some equipment for the gymnasium, but we don't pay teachers' salaries and we don't build schools out of lottery funds.

I'm not sure, but I'd probably have a question back to you about: should the government be in the gaming business? Do you think prohibition works? If you do, by gosh, there are a lot of people involved in the liquor industry and in the gaming industry that would like to talk to you. I don't think it works. I'm very comfortable in saying that if government wasn't regulating gaming and if government wasn't regulating alcohol in this province, those two products would still be available in Alberta. There are costs and there are benefits to both these businesses, guaranteed. We know that, and we have to, if you will, put up with some of the costs, but we also are able to take advantage of some of the benefits. I think that all Albertans should be involved in the benefits as opposed to a select few who are maybe pursuing illegal activities.

On the other things you talked about, I guess common sense would answer those questions.

Mr. Hinman: I guess I'll comment on prohibition versus promoting. I think there's quite a difference. I have to comment that I guess it seems like this government is very much promoting these industries, and I don't see them as great.

Another question I have is going back to the problem gambling research that is going forward. Albertans are definitely grateful for that program that's there, but has there been specific research done on a cost benefit? Is it really a benefit to society? I have to ask the question. We're promoting gaming and lottery, and it's playing on a human weakness of wanting to receive something for nothing. That hope that we can get something is a very intriguing carrot, especially to the people with lower incomes. They have that desire that this is my one lucky chance to buy the lottery ticket, to win at horse racing. What is the impact on those lower income Albertans that seem to be the ones that are there the most?

With that logic that the government is going forward with, it seems like I'd have to ask the question: should we not be promoting smoking, then, and increasing taxes so that we can have a better benefit to Albertans? We know that the answer to that is no. We don't benefit from promoting smoking and having a heavy tax and say: well, it's going to offset the other illnesses in our society. I feel the same about gambling. Why do we want to promote it and see so much advertisement for lottery, gaming, and those activities? I feel that that's a wrong direction, to be trying to intrigue and increase the number of Albertans that come to these facilities, whether they're casinos, whether they're bingo facilities. It just seems like a poor route to be going down.

No, I'm not advocating prohibition, but I'm certainly not advocating the amount of promoting that we do. Along with that promoting, the toughest thing is that one of the better ways in order to, I guess, create loyalty is by creating dependency. Many of the charitable organizations, many of the sports facilities, the arts, all of those areas that are benefiting at this point from gaming feel very loyal to it and the promotion of it because they're dependent on their organizations. Without it they couldn't succeed. I would urge the government to look at other ways, perhaps taking a percentage of our oil royalties and saying, "This is going to go to these other facilities," and not having them be dependent on gaming and lottery. That's the game that we've played, and people have to line up in the queue to participate in those areas. I don't think that it's for the betterment of our society.

You mentioned a rating system and, first, is it a charitable organization and those areas. Is that open public knowledge, and do we have access to know what that rating system is? More importantly, when a facility or an organization has asked for funding, does the rating come back and say, "Well, you only scored 55 out of a hundred, and you need to get over 65"? This is the area where I'm asking. They really have no idea where they're out of line or if there's something that they need to change in their facility. They don't know how to reapply, yet they're in dire need. I've very much as an MLA endorsed many of them asking for funds, yet we seem to be running into a brick wall and not able to reach that.

I'll make the comment and the question, I guess, that I hear too often. Who's addicted more to gambling: the government or the people that are participating in it or those who are receiving the funds doing it? I think it's something that we need to take a couple of steps back and look at and look at the best interests of Alberta and come to a little bit better balance because it seems like we're all rushing to the lottery fund, and I don't feel that it's healthy.

I'll let the minister perhaps respond to those.

Mr. Graydon: Well, first, let me say that there is a huge demand for the kind of entertainment we're providing. If there wasn't, nobody would show up. Okay? If there was no demand, we wouldn't be building casinos. If there wasn't, we wouldn't have applications for companies to build new casinos. If there wasn't a demand, I wouldn't have these charities saying: build more because we want the waiting time to be cut down. So there is a huge demand for the entertainment that's provided at a casino.

When it comes to advertising, you will never see a government advertisement saying: go play the local casino. Western Canada Lottery advertises the 6/49, for example, and those kinds of things. Western Canada Lottery is made up of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, and we're a shareholder in Western Canada Lottery. They do advertise and buy advertising in sports facilities and that sort of thing, but certainly the government of Alberta doesn't advertise. The casino owners can advertise. They advertise entertainment that they're featuring on the weekend and that sort of thing, but I can assure you that no part of the government's budget for advertising is saying, "Go down and play poker tonight or go down and play roulette" or something like that.

Your comment about cost benefit is very timely in that the whole conference that was just held in Banff was centred around: is there cost benefit? And there is. The researchers are having trouble getting their heads around what the criteria might be. How do you measure it? They talked around it for several days, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was there. He spent more time at the conference than I did, and I'm sure that he will reconfirm that they were having a hard time getting their heads around: how do we measure the cost, and how do we measure the benefit in terms of coming up with something that makes sense? There would be no argument that there is a cost and there is a benefit. No argument. But how do you measure it into a number or a statement that is reliable and accurate and makes sense?

When it comes to CFEP and CIP applications, I know that we have excellent staff both in Edmonton and Calgary. You would be dealing with the people out of the Calgary office. I know that if they get an incomplete application, those kinds of things, they're the first ones on the phone back to the group saying: "Here's what we need. Here's what you left out. Here's what we're looking for." They may not call back if it's a rejection, but certainly they try and help them through the process. Their job is to get as many of these applications fulfilled and as many groups satisfied as possible. As I mentioned, that's getting tougher with the costs that are going up; the money is running out quicker than we would like. But I can assure you that our staff try if at all possible.

We had an issue a while ago about some people applying for a nonmatching part of a grant where it was supposed to be matching. Those are the kinds of things where the staff will say: no, we can help you through that. Not every grant has to be matching. Even if it says it's a matching component, there are parts in there that we can waive, depending on the circumstances, the organization. The staff are the first ones to tell them that that's an option and to help them through it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have about three minutes.

Mr. Hinman: Super. That's all I'll take.

I appreciate the minister and the information and the enlightenment that I've received. I'll just make a quick comment about the advertising and billboards. We banned alcohol and tobacco signs at sports events, and they said that they'd never survive. You've mentioned that there is an increased demand, and I don't argue with that at all, but it's that promoting. I think that these facilities could go on if, in fact, we didn't have the billboards and the advertisement that goes on. They just checker the highways as you're going into the cities to come to this casino, come to this area. I go back to the cost benefit, perhaps Adam Smith's invisible hands, that we're not looking at the real cost to those people, that 5 per cent, and how devastating it is to their families. How do you put a price on that? I would urge the minister to continue looking at those things.

I appreciate the answers that I received. I'll probably have to come to his office to try and help facilitate a few of those applications from my area, but thank you.

Mr. Graydon: Just one quick point on the revenues. Actually, ticket revenue from 6/49 and the scratch-and-win, those kinds of lotteries, is going down. It was the big deal a few years ago, when it was first introduced, because it was the first kind of lottery we had, the 6/49 and the big payouts and all that sort of stuff, but now there are other entertainment options, so the gross sales of those kinds of products are on the decline as opposed to increasing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I just had to get up in response to some of the comments that the minister made. Now, come on, Mr. Minister. How long are we going to quibble about whether or not the money that goes to the horse-racing initiative is made possible by the government? Of course it's made possible by the government. If you want to quibble about whether it's coming directly into government coffers and then going back out again, fine. Play that game. We all know that it's through the government's acquiescence and actual facilitation of the process that that money, $63 million, is going to the horse-racing initiative and not going to a hot lunch program.

Now, because it's going into the slot machine, it's being counted in the count room and a higher percentage cut off and left there for the organizations. Usually, it would be scooped up, come back to the government, flow through, and go back out to other organizations through whatever lottery-funded initiative you want to talk about, be it AFA, Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife, Wild Rose, CFEP, CIP, whatever.

What is happening there is that the money is going to that horse-racing initiative, and it is foregone revenue from those other granting funds and ultimately from other organizations in the community. That money, $63 million, if it was not flowing through to a horse-racing initiative, would be going into the rest. That extra 35 per cent that's going to the horse-racing initiative that allows them to make that money would be going back to the government and would be coming out to the rest of the groups through one of the other lottery foundations.

You could call it some other name if you want, but let's face it: the government is facilitating this process. Frankly, I just think you look silly trying to pretend that because everybody knows that 63 million bucks is going to the horse-racing initiative. For the minister to constantly stand up and wave his hands and say, "Oh, no, no, it's not the government that's granting this money," you just look silly because everybody knows 63 million bucks is going there, and it wouldn't be going there without the government.

The other thing raised both by myself and by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that the minister has sidestepped again is about who makes the decision about the CFEP and CIP grants. Both of us have asked the minister to confirm or deny that government MLAs have a direct role and perhaps total decision-making power for the CIP money that is allocated to their particular constituency. The minister has given the same response, that there are criteria that are looked at, et cetera, et cetera. He's sidestepping the question we're asking. So one more time: who makes the decision in all 83 constituencies consistently? Do we have the staff doing it according to criteria laid out, or do we have a second scenario where in constituencies where there is a government MLA in place, the government MLA makes the decision about how much money is happening? So I'll put that one on the record one more time.

I'd like to go back again on the horse-racing initiative and ask: what is the criteria that is being used to measure the success? The minister claims that the horse-racing initiative is successful. By what criteria are you doing that? You're talking about an increased handle. Okay. Let's see what your performance measurement is there. What's your target? I don't see that in your business plan. So what exactly is the performance measurement that you're using? What's your criteria? What's your target? How's that all coming out?

And, please, trying to tell me that the people that muck out the horse barns are somehow getting a cut of this $63 million: I mean, it's going through to the breeding operations. That was the point of it. That's why it was set up. It was supposed to be going to the breeders and to the larger purses.

The other thing that's of interest. The minister was talking about the new problem gambling initiatives that are happening on site in casinos. One of the interesting things about that is that there's a 48-hour cooling-off period. So if you go in there and go, "I've got a serious problem, and I want to register as a problem gambler so you won't let me in here; I want to take advantage of that program," they say, "Absolutely; no problem; come back in 48 hours." Well, what's the use in that? They were ready to do it then. That's like somebody saying, "I'm ready to quit smoking; give me the patch; I'm going to slap it on; I'm ready to go," and someone says, "No, no; come back in, you know, two or three days, and then we'll give you the patch." If they're ready to go, they're ready to go. Why is there a 48-hour, or maybe it's 24-hour, cooling-off period?

We've tried three times here, between the efforts of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and myself, to get the minister on the record as to the clear, measurable criteria for the slush fund, and again the minister has sidestepped it and not answered the question directly. So I will take it, then, that there is a refusal on behalf of the minister or the ministry to follow the recommendations of the Auditor General to put those in place.

Those are the rebuttals that I wanted to make while I had the opportunity. Thank you very much for the exchange that I've had from the minister today. I appreciate it very much.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. Well, contrary to what the hon. member might believe, not everyone feels the same way about the money going to the horse-racing industry. People understand that if the machines weren't at the racetrack, they wouldn't be getting a cut of it. They understand that it's another form of entertainment offered at the racetrack. Maybe a husband and wife go. The husband bets the horses, and the wife goes to play the slot machines.

Some of that money that's located in the facility at the racetrack is returned, flows through back to the industry. We're not trying to hide anything. The number $63 million keeps coming out, but that's clearly an estimate of what might be earned. It is not a grant. It's not a guarantee. It is clearly an estimate of the percentage of revenue from the slot machines at racing entertainment centres. That's what they're called. That's what they are.

They don't qualify to be a racing entertainment centre if they don't offer live racing. You can't have a racing entertainment centre and just put a TV up on the wall and show a simulcast. That doesn't cut it. You don't get any money for that. You have to be a racing entertainment centre and offer so many days of live racing every year. That qualifies you to be called a racing entertainment centre and qualifies you to apply for some slot machines. At the moment there are four locations in Alberta: Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Calgary, and Edmonton. Those are the only places that offer live racing and the only places that have racing entertainment centres.

The criteria that we use to see whether they're successful or not. Gosh, there are pages full of criteria that we measure and that Horse Racing Alberta measures. Handle is one of those things, how much is actually bet. The breeding stock in the province is another measurement, the amount of money that was spent purchasing that breeding stock, the number of Alberta-bred horses that are winning races. The amount of money won by Alberta-bred horses is another measurement. There are pages and pages of criteria that we use to measure if this thing is working or not. If it wasn't working, you'd see us retreating out of it, but it is working. The industry is getting healthier. I don't know. You can tell the guy in the backstretch that he doesn't deserve to get paid if you want, but he wouldn't have a job if we didn't have this program and if the breeder didn't hire him to do his work.

The 48-hour cooling period is clearly indicated on the self-exclusion form if you ask for the voluntary self-exclusion. It can be waived if they ask for it. There's not much point putting that on the form, you know: we have 48 hours, but if you don't want that, it can be. It's on there at the express opinion and advice of professional addictions counsellors at AADAC, who advised us on that form and said: you should have a 48-hour cooling period because you may get someone who is just there for the entertainment, but maybe that one particular night they lost more money than they thought they should have or they wanted to, so they say, "Okay, I'm going to sign that form." Well, once you sign that form, and once it's filed, I mean, it's a legal document, and you're not getting in anymore. If you get recognized, you're escorted out the door. That's it. They may decide in the 48-hour cooling period, the next day: "Gosh, this has only happened to me once in the past year when I lost $200, and my limit's a hundred. It's happened to me once in the past year. Maybe I was being a little rash with that decision to sign that form last night." So that's why the 48-hour cooling period is there, fully supported by professionals from AADAC.

To answer the question about slush funds, there is no slush fund.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to seek some clarification from the hon. minister regarding the issue of smoking on the Indian reservations. While I recognize that the First Nations are not subject to some of Alberta's laws as they've got a primary relationship with the Crown in right of Canada, it's my understanding that the federal government conceded the right to regulate gambling to each of the provinces. It's also my understanding that it's conceded that the Crown in right of Alberta has an undisputed right to regulate gambling within our boundaries. Given that the Enoch nation has gone through all of these eight steps, or however many there are, in order to apply to the government of Alberta for a casino facility licence, I must presume that they, too, have conceded the right to regulate the licences to the province of Alberta. So my simple question is: why can it not be made a term of granting the licence or a term of the contract that the facility would have to comply with the health regulations of the province of Alberta? That is my one question.

The second question that I have is: can the minister advise on the mechanism for allocating casino slot revenues and whether that is done on an equitable basis right across the province in Calgary and Edmonton and the rural areas?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, just before you respond, according to our rules in my opinion this appears to be asking for a legal opinion. That is not necessarily the purpose of the estimates, so you may proceed as you wish.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. Thanks. Yeah, if the Minister of Justice would be here. I know that he raised the question at the last meeting of Justice ministers from across Canada. His question was: if Internet gambling is illegal in Canada, how come the First Nations in Quebec are operating Internet gambling sites and the federal government is letting them get away with it? While the federal government says that they have to honour some of these rules, there are certain First Nations in this country who tend to ignore those Canadian rules and seem to be getting away with it. It is an issue that, unfortunately, I don't think we're going to solve in Alberta.

The question of the distribution of lottery funds. As mentioned, they're pooled, either urban or rural. In the city of Edmonton they're all classed as urban casinos. That amount of money is pooled, and at the end of the quarter it's divided equally amongst the charities that worked for that quarter. Rural casinos would include, I believe, St. Albert. Probably Grande Prairie is in the same pool. I'm not too sure. There aren't too many others out in the north rural part. They would be pooled. As mentioned, it's a concern in that, certainly, if you're participating in an urban pool, the charity is going to end up with a lot more money than those participating in a rural pool.

As I did mention, the commission is studying that issue at the moment. It's a bit of a no win because if we leveled it across the province, obviously the urban charities would cry foul, that they're getting less money, and the rural charities would be happy because they're getting more money. At the end of the day it probably will have to be a political decision.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few other quick comments. I was worried my three minutes had run out.

Dennis Gartman runs quite a famous investment letter. The most profound advice that he gives is: do more of what works and less of what doesn't work. I think very much that lottery and gambling and those areas are not something that work great for society. Once again I would urge that we look at doing less.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre brought up this 48-hour cooling-off period. I would like to talk about that a little bit. I was down at a committee meeting in Helena last week, and they got talking about gambling. I think it was in the state of Missouri where they actually have a list, where people with problems can go in and say, "I don't want to be allowed into these facilities again," and they're banned. They can do it right there when they realize the problem, when they're in the remorse state, and not two days later. I just want to enforce what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying, that we need to address that and try to look at helping these people. If we wait until after the moment has passed, it's like somebody who's checking themselves into the hospital or something, and you say: well, you know, come back in 48 hours and see if it's still a problem. It just isn't in the best interest.

Another part about doing more of what works and less of what doesn't work. I find that these meetings like we're having here work much better in the conversation back and forth and the exchange of ideas, yet we're always limited to two hours. This afternoon, unable to speak on Education, it was very disappointing. I just want to make the point that maybe with some surplus money and funds you have left over – we have a $4.3 billion teachers' fund liability debt. This province has had in the past a law that we had to have surplus go to eliminating the debt. Perhaps we need the different ministries, if they've got a surplus, to put that surplus into the teachers' pension fund. Maybe that would be a good place to go to eliminate the rest of our debt that we've incurred here.

Mr. Graydon: The voluntary self-exclusion program is one that we operate in the province. It's successful. There are several hundred people who have taken advantage of that program, have signed themselves out, if you will. There are very sophisticated cameras, et cetera, security devices at the front doors of these casinos. With the cameras they are able to recognize people who have signed the self-exclusion form. Some people even go so far as to try a disguise. They've signed the form, but then they say: oh, I want to go back. They try a disguise, and we've been able to stop them from going in. No, they're excluded, and that's all there is to it. The 48-hour clause, as I mentioned, is in there at the advice of trained addiction counsellors.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Just one more point about the voluntary exclusion plan. Wouldn't it make more sense to accept the form right away and then give them the 48 hours? If you really insist on that 48-hour plan, say: you can phone back in 48 hours, or you can come in. Accept it right away; not tell them to come back. Does that not make a little bit more sense?

You said that there are sophisticated cameras and all that sort of stuff. The woman I spoke to when I brought this matter up initially said that unless the people who run the casinos know you, there's no way anybody is actually going to be able to see you that well because it's just a book of photos. So unless the people who are running the casinos are well versed by leafing through all these photos, you can really circumvent this quite easily if you just go to a different city. If you go to Red Deer or Calgary and you're a regular in Edmonton, you can easily work your way around it. But if you really insist on that 48 hours, start it and then give them 48 hours to think it over.

Mr. Hinman: Buyer's remorse.

Mr. Tougas: Buyer's remorse. Exactly. Give them a chance to think it over. You know, if a drug addict comes in and says, "I have trouble," you don't tell him to come back in a couple of days. You help him then. I think you should apply the same rule to this.

Mr. Graydon: Well, to compliment the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, my critic, he did bring that suggestion forward when we discussed this earlier in the session at question period, and it made sense to me. I felt that it was made in a sincere attempt to help with this issue. I have sent that information over to the commission and asked them to follow up on that idea. I'm sure that they will follow up with AADAC. Maybe we'll see some changes; maybe we won't. But I can assure him that the idea was not thrown out of hand. It was advanced forward. Someone is checking to see whether that would be a positive move or not.

You probably can move from one city to the other and beat the system if you want. There's always a way to beat the system. Some of the casinos have more sophisticated security measures than others, if you will. Some of them have fantastic security cameras that can read a licence plate two blocks away and that sort of stuff.

It was just the last week or so that someone showed me this system where they input your photo into the computer. They actually ended up moving their camera so that they got a better shot of your face. Then there's software that will determine certain features, you know, if your left ear is lower than your right or whatever the case may be. The software puts all of that together and alerts the operator that this person is on the list.

True, we do depend on the staff at the front desk, at the security desk. Usually it's people trying to get back into the same one that they traditionally go to. You know, you may think: gosh, how can they remember a hundred people? They're probably not trying to remember a hundred people. There are probably many fewer than that at that one specific casino who would try to come back and would be caught. New technology will become more and more effective, and we want to help those people if we can. That's our goal.

The Deputy Chair: I guess that since we're dealing with the Gaming minister, I'm just tempted to state this. Calgary is leading 3-2, and Edmonton is leading 3-1. So that's a good sign from the Gaming minister. Alberta is leading both ways.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Gaming for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense	$201,627,000
Lottery Fund Payments	$1,306,155,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I might point out that the Medicine Hat Tigers also won tonight.

I move that the committee rise so that we can report the estimates of the Department of Gaming.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Gaming: expense, $201,627,000; lottery fund payments, $1,306,155,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and
Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, proposes six amendments that will ensure that Albertans will continue to benefit from some of the most stringent environmental protection legislation in Canada. The first amendment will ensure that the emissions trading regulation, which came into effect on February 22, 2006, will have full authorization under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, making it one of the toughest regulations of its kind in North America. The amendment will allow the electricity sector to conduct emissions trading in nitrogen oxide and sulphur dioxide. One of the main areas of focus in our plan to address climate change is the development of technology to reduce emissions in Alberta. All of our compliance tools will be used to ensure that electricity will be generated to meet the new, best available technology/economically available standard at the end of their design life. Not only will emissions trading offer a performance incentive by allowing for the generation of emissions credits when operating at better than required performance levels; it will also encourage early shutdown of older units and new emission controls at existing units. The amendment follows the consensus recommendations of the Clean Air Strategic Alliance and has the support of industry, government, and nongovernment stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment clarifies industry's obligations to report and remediate contaminated sites even if they were closed before the EPEA came into effect on September 1, 1993. The intent of the amendment is to ensure that industry remains responsible for old sites where contamination causing an adverse effect is discovered or becomes apparent. Any closed sites that continue to have an adverse effect will be reported and managed appropriately. Remediation certificates will be issued for sites that are cleaned up to Alberta Environment standards. This will ensure a timelier cleanup and also indicate when the cleanup is complete and when industry's legal obligations are met. As land changes hands, banks will be more willing to lend money once a certificate is issued.

This amendment supports the recommendations of the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee and significant stakeholder input. The two-year consultation process with stakeholders included industry associations, nongovernmental organizations, Alberta Environment, Municipal Affairs, the Farmers' Advocate, Finance, Energy, the Energy and Utilities Board, Canadian Bankers' Association, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

Mr. Speaker, the third amendment upholds the EPEA's existing principle of polluter pays in that it supports the reclamation security system for coal and oil sands mines. Companies will be responsible for reclaiming land as soon as possible. This can mean not waiting until the whole mine is finished before starting reclamation. This returns the land to a productive state faster and reduces the overall active footprint of the mine.

The amendment further provides authority to implement a new tool called a record of progressive reclamation. This new tool will act like an interim reclamation certificate by formally acknowledging that the company has done the majority of costly physical work on the site. The record will be a formal acknowledgement of industry's initial stage of reclamation work, where the majority of the reclamation costs are incurred. The amendment also provides broader authority to write reclamation security regulations to ensure that funds are available when they are most likely needed for reclamation.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth amendment expands the type of regulatory tools we use and supports the continued use of codes of practice for activities with low environmental impact. This will streamline the approvals process, ensure environmental protection, and reduce the regulatory burden on industry, municipalities, and Alberta Environment. Codes providing province-wide operating rules for an activity lead to regulatory fairness and consistency. Examples of codes of practice currently in use include activities that are typically predictable and operate in the same way regardless of their location in the province, such as codes of practice for small incinerators, codes of practice for pits, and codes of practice for waste-water systems using a waste-water lagoon.

The full range of prevention and enforcement response tools under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to respond to noncompliance still applies. All operations under a code of practice will continue to be inspected by Alberta Environment.

Mr. Speaker, the fifth amendment allows Alberta Environment to partner with a wide range of organizations and individuals in order to deliver our environmental protection mandate. The amendment specifically broadens the list of candidates to which the minister may delegate work. This supports a place-based approach to environmental management. In order for successful partnerships to exist, government partners need to have the authority to advise, consult, and become engaged in the process. This amendment will allow them these capabilities. As with all partnerships we will ensure that accountability frameworks are in place.

Mr. Speaker, the final amendment allows the minister to make a regulation listing information that can be released to the public. This increases the amount of environmental information Albertans can obtain without the need for a formal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act request. Releasing environmental information on a routine basis will improve public access to information.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for support of these recommendations, and I move adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 32

Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The principles and policies in this legislation before us today reflect the recommendations of two advisory committees for organ and tissue donation and transplantation. The new legislation will broaden the scope of and modernize the Human Tissue Gift Act, originally passed in 1973.

The first key component consists of changes to definitions in the legislation. The definitions that are currently in the Human Tissue Gift Act need to be updated to reflect and include modern technology and procedures. New and revised definitions will make the act consistent with current standards. Among the updates are changes to the definitions of "tissue" and "transplant." They'll be defined distinctly now, whereas in the current legislation they are both under the definition of tissue. The new section includes definitions for "donor," "estranged," "immediate family," and "independent assessment committee."

The second key component speaks to living donations by minors. The current act does not allow for living donations by minors. The new act will enable minors to consent to donation in specific situations or require the consent of a guardian and the approval of an independent assessment committee in other situations. All living donations by minors will be addressed in this legislation: donation of by-products from a medical procedure, donation of regenerative organs or tissues, and the donation of nonregenerative organs or tissues.

A minor who is 16 years of age or older or who is living independently of a guardian can consent to donate by-products from a medical procedure. The donation of medical by-products has no foreseeable medical consequences for the donor. An example might be the donation of amniotic tissue obtained during a Caesarean section. A minor can make a living donation of regenerative organs or tissues with the consent of a parent or legal guardian. Examples of regenerative tissues and organs include a liver lobe or bone marrow. Now, because there may be medical consequences to making a living donation of regenerative organs or tissues, the consent of the parent or legal guardian will be required as well as the requirement for an independent assessment to ensure that the minor's interests are indeed protected.

The donation of nonregenerative organs or tissues will always have medical consequences for the donor. For that reason donations of this type will not be allowed by minors less than 16 years of age and will also require the consent of a guardian and the approval of an independent assessment committee.

The third key component of this legislation describes the operation of independent assessment committees. This independent assessment is designed to protect the minor donor, especially when the legal decision-makers may be compromised in their ability to make a decision in the best interest of the child. An example of this situation may be when a child is considered for the donation of a kidney to a sister, brother, father, or mother. In this scenario the parents may be unable to balance the best interest of one family member with that of another.

An independent assessment committee will be established and must include three people not involved in the donation or transplantation, including one physician, one psychiatrist or psychologist, and one additional person. The independent assessment shall ensure that the agreement has been obtained from the minor to the extent possible considering the minor's age, that the donation presents minimal risk to the donor, and that no coercion or pressure has been placed on the minor. The independent assessment must be unanimously in favour of allowing the donation. The donation cannot proceed if any of the three individuals does not agree that all of the above conditions have been met.

Another area of change is in regard to consent requirements. They've been revised to address certain gaps. These include how consent must be documented if the consentor is not physically capable of providing written consent or, in the case of a cadaveric donation, if the next of kin is available but not physically present to provide consent. If a consentor is physically unable to sign, consent must be documented in the presence of two witnesses. In the case of a cadaveric donation by next of kin who are not physically present, one of the two witnesses must be knowledgeable and inform the consentor with respect to the nature and consequences of the donation. Minors and dependent adults are now specifically addressed.

A provision has been added to ensure that consent as documented on the back of Alberta health care insurance cards is considered valid.

On to the fifth key component, which deals with respecting the wishes of the deceased. The current legislation does not ensure that the donor's expressed wishes take precedence over the wishes of the family, but the new act includes an addition so that the known wishes of the potential donor take precedence even if they conflict with the wishes of the family. This, of course, represents a change in current practice. Clinicians generally require consent from next of kin even when the known wishes of the deceased were indicated by a donor card or other document. So this change will strengthen the donation program.

Consent by next of kin is another key change in the legislation before us. Current legislation does not speak to an estranged spouse. The new legislation will exclude estranged spouses or estranged adult interdependent partners from the consent hierarchy as it has been determined that since they are estranged, they do not have a right to provide consent.

Mr. Speaker, consistent with proposed changes under private member's Bill 201, changes are being made to the area of mandatory consideration for donation. Currently there are no mandatory consideration, documentation, or notification requirements. The new Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act will ensure that every person who dies will be considered for organ and/or tissue donation. The objective of these amendments is to consistently consider all potential donors in an effort to significantly increase the conversion of potential donors into actual donors. The process of donation consideration will be carried out and documented by medical practitioners in conjunction with appropriate donation agencies.

The seventh key component is the addition of sections that address safety and quality. Current legislation does not contain any quality assurance mechanisms. Proposed changes will require all individuals, agencies, and regional health authorities that conduct donation and transplantation procedures and activities to be registered with the provincial government. All of these organizations must comply with this act and forthcoming regulations, including any regulations regarding registration requirements or accreditation. This will include agencies that broker tissue. The list of registrants will be disclosed to the federal government and/or other regulatory organizations as required.

Changes have also been made to the area of information confidentiality. Proposed changes will protect the privacy of individuals while providing explicit legislative authority for the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information for the purpose of the act. Personal information will be required to seek consent, to screen donors, and to carry out procurement and transplantation activities. Proposed changes will integrate and align with provincial privacy legislation.

In relation to the area of buying and selling tissues and organs, the current act prohibits anyone from buying, selling, or otherwise gaining from any tissue for transplantation purpose, medical education, or scientific research. This provision has been revised to apply to organs as well as tissue, and the offence for noncompliance has been significantly increased. In fact, penalties for all types of offences have been increased in the new legislation.

The offence for knowingly contradicting the current legislation is a maximum fine of $1,000 and up to six months' imprisonment. While this offence provision may have been adequate in 1973, when the act was introduced, it's no longer viewed as an effective deterrent. So in the new legislation the general offence provision has been increased to a maximum of $10,000. This could apply to a health service provider who intentionally disregards requirements or procedures or to an individual who wrongfully obtains consent.

A specific fine for breaching the information confidentiality provision has been added and could result in a fine of up to $50,000.

The fine for buying and selling human tissue or organs has also been specifically addressed. Since the objective of this prohibited activity is financial gain, a significant fine must be in place to function as a deterrent. This fine will be $100,000 and/or a term of imprisonment of up to six months.

Regulation-making powers have been added in the anticipation of carrying out the intent of the act. The regulation will provide more details with respect to the designation of donation agencies, establishment of independent assessment committees, and registration of individuals and agencies involved in organ and tissue donation, procurement, and transplantation.

Finally, this bill will repeal the Human Tissue Gift Act and the unproclaimed Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, which was passed to amend the Human Tissue Gift Act. Mr. Speaker, these changes reflect the considerable feedback that has been received about this issue. The new legislation will broaden the scope and modernize current legislation to more accurately reflect and regulate organ and tissue donation as well as transplantation in the province.

With all of that, Mr. Speaker, finally I move second reading of Bill 32. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 32, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act. I am quite supportive of this legislation and expect to see it get fairly speedy passage through this House.

There are a couple of questions that I would like to ask on a few current issues. What's that incredibly lurid phrase they use, ripped from the headlines of today, that I think has raised the darker side of organ and tissue donation and transplantation? I'd like to make sure that this legislation is anticipating that and will cover any of those situations. I'll come back to that later.

Essentially, what we've had here in my time is that in '98 we had the Human Tissue Procedure Statutes Amendment Act, which got debated and passed but didn't ever get proclaimed. Immediately following that there was a committee with a very long name, and then there was a second committee with an equally long name in 2002. My understanding is that this bill is springing out of the 2002 committee. The long name for that one was the Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation Interim Implementation Committee. It should get a prize here for the longest name. In between that we had Bill 201, which was a private member's bill, the Human Tissue Gift Amendment Act, which was brought forward by the MLA for Calgary-West, the same sponsor now of government Bill 32.

When Bill 201 was up for debate, we noted that it was based on legislation that was attempting to have it conform with the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. Now, 201 did pass second reading and then was subjected to one of the periodic magical disappearing acts that the government members are able to do with private members' bills. I understand that this was partly because of the medical community expressing concerns with being put in essentially a conflict-of-interest position to their medical vows in that they were expected to take action to obtain consent for a donation when the death of a patient was imminent, which runs against their try and keep them alive and do no harm.

We have some examples before us. Very interesting. I'm noticing that a number of provinces are coming to more or less the same point. We've got a private member's bill sponsored by a member of the New Democratic Party in Ontario that is based on presumed consent, which is the sort of negative billing option. I will be very interested to watch the passage of that because I really believe in organ and tissue donation. I'm aware that we are, as always, struggling to be able to have this process work for us. I'm very proud of the Canadian tradition we've always had of donating blood, and we do well by that. In comparison, in the States, for example, people are paid to give blood. So I'm really proud of that Canadian tradition of donating, but we're struggling with it often because, as I mentioned in the response to the ministerial statement that I did yesterday, the individual may well have given their consent, but the family balks at the time that they're approached.

Some of that appears to be addressed in this bill, but I think we need to watch the progress of that Ontario private member's bill. I'm moving on to the side of looking at a presumed consent model just to be able to get enough of those organs and tissues available for transplantation.

We also have another private member's bill, I think also in Ontario, that is based on a mandatory direction, which I think essentially requires that everybody state one way or another whether they're willing to participate in organ donation or not, but they're going to have to say it one way or another, which I suppose is another way of doing this. This bill may well pass before then, but I still think we should keep an eye out on this. We have legislation in New Brunswick that basically prevents families from overturning a deceased person's wishes to donate. So lots of activity on this front across Canada.

A big part of that is that we're all aware, or we should be, that between 15 and 20 per cent of all people on waiting lists die before a suitable organ is found. In 2004 there were 313 transplants performed in Alberta, but 534 people were waiting for a transplant, and 42 people died while waiting for a transplant. So there's a great demand there for us. There's lots of possibility, and I would really like to facilitate that process.

What we're seeing is that the rate of transplants has not kept pace with the transplant waiting list. Part of that is that we have people where the acuity level is less. They're not as sick, and they are living longer and are able to stay alive long enough to actually receive the transplant, and that's causing the longer waiting list. On the other hand, we can't keep up with what's needed there.

One of the questions that's always being asked by the government is: how do we keep our system sustainable? Frankly, this is one of the answers. There's no quick fix. There's no umbrella solution to that question, but there are a number of ways of going at that, and transplantation is one of them. The annual cost of supporting a person with a kidney transplant is 40 per cent less than if they had stayed on dialysis. Now, there's a considerable savings.

A couple of quick issues that I wanted to raise. [interjection] Did I hear someone say question? That's just incentive to keep me going here. Thank you so much. I appreciate that.

The two issues that I had referred to earlier were that terrible situation in the U.S. where we had a funeral home that was using bone marrow and tissue from cadavers that were under their control and responsibility. They were harvesting it and selling it. This, of course, has now been transplanted into people, and there are huge questions about whether potentially we've transplanted cancerous cells or HIV or hep C or any number of other serious diseases into people. I'm noting that in section 3, which is dealing with transplantation and medical education, there are two sections that talk about, you know, not using "tissue, organ or body donated under the Act except for the purpose for which it was donated" and that no one "shall use, procure, transfer or process any tissue, organ or body for transplantation except in accordance with the regulations."

I just am looking for assurance and proof, if I can get it from the sponsoring member, that a situation such as I've described would in fact be covered by the act. We have someone selling there, but we don't have someone purchasing the parts to start with. They're basically harvesting them without permission, and I want to make sure that that's being covered here, because while we've got this legislation in front of us, let's not make the mistake of not covering what we know is a possibility. In other words, does it actually cover the situation of stealing the organs and tissues and then offering them for sale further down the line?

The second situation I have gone through and I don't find anything prohibiting this or anticipating this. Someone brought to my attention that there was a group of doctors in Guyana that were talking about harvesting organs there and then essentially exporting them, sending them to Canada to be used here. There's nothing that's being addressed in the act about that sort of coming from somewhere else. Obviously, our act is anticipating that it would all come from Canada, but it's not prohibiting something coming from somewhere else. I think we need to be careful about that, so I'm looking for the sponsor of the bill to detail that and tell us how it's going to be handled and give me a specific citation in the bill where that's anticipated and where it would be handled.

Finally, as we've noted, there have been a couple of runs at this that were not successful. I'm looking for assurance that the bill actually would be proclaimed. What is the anticipated date of proclamation? Often a bill will receive royal assent and will get proclamation six months down the road or a year down the road, once the regulations and the program that supports it have been put into place. So what is the anticipated proclamation date for this legislation assuming that it passes in this spring session? I'd like to know what's up there.

The other thing was that Bill 201 was setting up a number of other agencies or funneling-through agencies, and all of that has completely disappeared in this act. At the time we were told that Bill 201 was being withdrawn because it was substantially similar to coming government legislation. I was looking at the two pieces of legislation, and the concepts are substantially similar, but the actual implementation is quite different. So I'm wondering what happened to the processes that were being outlined in Bill 201 around the use of those various agencies in the community through which they were organizing and tracking and in one case storing tissues and organs.

Finally, we did have – oh, I've said finally several times; sorry about that. When will the government be implementing the recommendation that was made in the 2000 report of the first committee, which was the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation? That was to make strategies for "initiating discussion about end of life decisions, including opportunities for donation . . . an important element of pre-licensure education and of continuing professional education” for health care professionals like doctors, nurses, social workers, et cetera. Is that still on the table? How does one integrate and make sure that we don’t cause doctors that conflict-of-interest position where they are counselling end of life at the same time as they are committed to trying to extend it?

Those are the questions I wanted on the record. I’m looking forward to hearing back from the sponsoring member. I’m happy to receive a written explanation if it’s anticipated that there may be some delay in time between now and the next time the bill would come forward. I know that sometimes the backbenchers that are sponsoring bills do give me information in written form, which is very helpful, before the next time we get up to debate it. So thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a privilege for me to stand and speak in second reading of Bill 32, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act. As I was part of the discussion on Bill 201, I really think that this is a tremendous improvement. I’m glad that we went through that process of debate on Bill 201, a private member’s bill, and this is now the result of a process of consulting with stakeholders and so on. This is a great improvement. It’s a very positive bill and contributes, I think, a great deal to establishing the right kind of basis for donation of tissue in this province.

We’ll get a chance in Committee of the Whole to look at specific wording in this bill. I, too, have the same kind of questions that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre has about the issue of harvesting of parts. There was a particularly disturbing article in the Globe and Mail on March 18, which was entitled Raiders of the Lost Parts.

A ghoulish scam reveals the dark side of the booming tissue-harvesting business: Corpses’ bones (including those of former Masterpiece Theatre host Alistair Cooke) were stolen and replaced with PVC piping. Some of [these bone parts] were sold in Canada. Do you know where your transplant’s been?

It’s an interesting question.

So that whole issue of the harvesting of parts and the transporting of those parts to other parts of North America is really a serious issue. I think that section 3 in this bill goes a long way toward establishing strictures to prevent this from happening. But as my hon. colleague has mentioned, I think we’ll have to look at this carefully to see whether, indeed, it answers the problem or not. It does suggest that anybody who receives a “reward or benefit for any tissue, organ or body for use in transplantation” and so on would be open to sanctions, and the sanctions are rather high, in this case even as high as $100,000 or imprisonment for contravening this act. So I’m encouraged by the points under section 3.

In terms of research “only a university with a medical, dental or related health program may use a body donated under this Act” for research, and that’s a really good thing. So I think that section is very good.

I am also impressed by the wording for the deceased donor section, involving the family and laying out all of these levels of discussion that have to be gone through in the case of someone who is deceased and the consultations that have to be made in order for that person’s body to be used.

In terms of a living donor the whole issue of consent is here clearly laid out, that consent is necessary, and when the adult person lacks capacity to give consent, then there is a turning to personal directives and so on, which is established under other acts. So that, too, is good.

The section on determination of death: I’m impressed by that too. I did raise the issue of the definition of death and determination of death when I dealt with Bill 201 because there are lots of issues around that. In this bill it clearly outlines that the physician who decides on the determination of death should not be the same physician that is involved in the transplant procedure. I think that’s a good safeguard.

Also, the issue of mandatory consideration for donation I think is a tremendous improvement over Bill 201. I was quite concerned with Bill 201, which seemed to suggest that a donation agency would come into a hospital and lurk in the halls of the hospital and look for the perfect specimen who would be able to make their body available for transplants and tissue donation and then try to persuade that person to give their consent. I thought: well, wait a minute; a person who is actually dying in a hospital has enough to deal with in terms of dealing with their own death, let alone have somebody come in and try to persuade them to donate their body. That section is not here; it was taken out. That’s a tremendous improvement. So the mandatory consideration for donation is simply left in the hands of a medical practitioner, where it should be. The medical practitioner makes a determination of death and recommends in terms of tissues and organs for transplantation, and the donation agency then has to work through the medical establishment to determine how to proceed. I think that the procedures here and the requirements for written consent are all quite clear.

I really like the tone of this bill because I think there’s a danger that we get into language such as the language of harvesting body parts. I don’t like that language. I like the language of giving, of being a donor, of donation because I think it’s an important moral question. To whom do body parts belong? Do they belong to the person who is dying? Do they belong to the state? In my view, a human person is an embodied person, not a soul with a body attached. The body is essential to one’s own identity. So if a body is to be made available in terms of body parts, it must be as a gift, and we must see it as a gift. It always must be a question of giving. So if the person is living, then they must give consent that they’re going to give their body parts. The family has to be involved if the person is not able to make a decision themselves, if they’re not capable, and I think that’s always where the emphasis should be.

I noticed also that the reference to religious beliefs is not included here. I don’t know why that was left out because I think that it’s important that the religious beliefs of a person while they were living should be honoured in their death. Maybe it is covered in some way here, but I would like to know where it is covered.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That’s all I would have to say about this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, our fine colleague the Member for Calgary-West has done yeoman’s work in both the private member’s bill and this one. I know that he is eagerly anticipating researching Hansard and is happy to entertain questions received tonight as well as anything else during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Bill 24
Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate April 24: Dr. Taft]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Oh, I can't let this one go by, Mr. Speaker. Honest to goodness, I have seen a version of this bill, Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006, which is currently before us as Bill 24, go by – oh, let me think – four times before? Yeah, here we have it.

I mean, basically, what this government does is set itself a law so that it can go around and tell everybody that it's being fiscally responsible, and then as soon as it doesn't work for them, which is, like, the next year, they just change the law. They don't actually adhere to the rule that they set in place for themselves. They just change the rule so that it will fit what they've now done with it.

That's exactly what we have in this situation. We have nonrenewable resource revenue that is being used in the budget. They set themselves an amount of money last year, I think it was, or two years ago, $4.75 billion, and now one year later they can't even adhere to that, and we're at $5.3 billion. So, you know, they don't even follow their own plan. What is the point of even listening to the plan? Why do they spend any time even developing it? I'm wondering if they have any intention of following any of this.

I think what I'm more concerned about under all of this is the government's attitude around nonrenewable resource revenue. I think that there are two points that we need to be really concerned about. One is: what do you do with surplus revenue? We need to have a plan for surplus revenue. Certainly, when we went through the last election, the Alberta Liberal plan was very well received at the doors when we talked about what our surplus policy plan was. That was 35 per cent reinvested into the heritage trust fund, 35 per cent into a noncapped postsecondary education fund, which, by the way, wasn't just about university but also about apprenticeship and colleges and anything that was basically postsecondary. Then there was a capital fund amount of 25 per cent, which was essentially to eliminate the infrastructure deficit that the government has now created, and a final 5 per cent into a humanities and social sciences and arts endowment fund. There's a plan. I'm happy to have the government steal it from us. Go right ahead. I think it's a great idea. Actually, they did sort of take part of it in the postsecondary legacy fund that they set up a year ago.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there's another side to this that we need to consider carefully, and that is the fact that this government is now spending more of its resource revenue. We're spending our inheritance. We're spending what's coming before us. If you take away the resource revenue from what we've got coming into this province, we can't sustain what we're spending with the rest of our revenue sources through income tax and licences and various other means the government has to raise funds. So we are now dependent on spending that revenue as it comes in, and that's a really bad habit. That's equivalent to living from paycheque to paycheque, which this government so despises in the population.

That, in fact, is exactly what it's doing here, except that it's not just paycheque to paycheque. That nonrenewable resource revenue belongs to all of us, including the children, and what we're doing right now is spending our parents' share of that nonrenewable resource revenue, our share of it, and our kids' share of it. Frankly, 20 years from now it won't even be there for them to be able to get a share of in the same way.

So I'm really seriously starting to look at whether we shouldn't be looking at some amount of money that we pull aside before it even gets into the government coffers, that we divert a certain percentage of our nonrenewable resource revenue and take it off to the side right away, understanding that this is the future's money and that we need to be setting it aside to help us bridge when the natural resource revenue starts to diminish for us. Maybe we're looking at a third of it that we set aside into endowments or into the heritage savings trust fund. I mean, there are lots of examples for us to look at: Alaska, Norway, various other places. The fact that we're just taking that money straight in – it's like a tap we're hooked up to, a hose that we're sucking as much as we can out of – is just wrong.

I really have concerns about the government's ability to hold itself to any kind of spending plan. We've got people talking about off-budget spending before we've even passed the budget, and that happened last year as well.

So, frankly, surpluses are very bad for this government. It doesn't seem to have any kind of self-restraint and any ability to get a reasonable plan and stick to it. This bill is a prime example of their total inability to do that. I mean, the whole bill is two lines long. The Fiscal Responsibility Act is amended, and then it changes the amount of money. That's the whole point that it's in front of us in the Assembly today.

I won't be supporting this bill. I know it's late at night. I know people are tired and crabby, and the game is probably still on. Somebody told me a score.

Mr. Graydon: Not on this side. Nobody over here is tired and crabby.

Ms Blakeman: Excellent. Well, thank you for the encouragement. That's good. We'll stay much longer. Thank you. I was going to sit down, but if everybody is so keen to keep going, then, I certainly can do that.

I think it is about a long-range plan. The government occasionally, you know, talks about the 20-year plan that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud came up with, but it is so vague as to be meaningless. When you look at the various components of that, it really doesn't tell you what the government is planning on doing. It's not a plan. It's some sort of really loose vision that doesn't give much direction to what's happening. I think this government is in serious trouble. They've taken a lot of criticism recently for not having a plan, and I think there's a reason why that's sticking. There isn't a good plan here, and there's certainly not one that the government has the wherewithal, has the stamina, has the fortitude to stick to. Any reason at all is a good reason to vary off of this.

So what are we going to see come forward next time? What we've got already is planning to go forward and spend even more of that nonrenewable resource revenue. Fiscal year 2004 was $3.5 billion, 2005 was $4 billion, 2006 $4.75 billion, and now we're looking at $5.3 billion. That's what's happened to it just over the last couple of years. That doesn't show any kind of restraint to me. It doesn't show any kind of planning. It just shows: where do we get more money from to do whatever we want to do? I think we as stewards of natural resource revenue have to be much more careful than what I'm seeing coming out of this government. I don't see the ideas coming either about exactly where we would want to spend that money. The whole thing just smacks of old, tired, and let's do what we did last year but a bit more. I don't think that's the expectation that Albertans have.

So thanks for the opportunity to speak some more. I know we've got some other bills up tonight, and I'm eager to get on to them. I will cede the floor to others that are interested in continuing this debate.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 31

Health Information Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 31 proposes amendments to the Health Information Act. These amendments are, in fact, a culmination of stakeholder feedback, input from an all-party Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee, and analysis by Alberta Health and Wellness. Approximately 72 individuals, stakeholders, and organizations did provide feedback during the initial phase of the Health Information Act review. These proposed amendments are required by the department or the health system for things like enhancing the use of the provincial electronic health record, co-ordinating the retention periods for health records held by professional bodies, and clarifying disclosure rules.

In order to have greater accountability in how funds are spent, the department is recommending information disclosure for the limited purposes of determining a person's eligibility for health services, payments, benefits, or for auditing those services and payments. These limited disclosures would be done among governments and some third parties for the purposes of paying for services and ensuring accountability. There is general acceptance of these proposals by the majority of stakeholders, including the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner and Government Services.

The all-party Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee made broad recommendations that health information must be reported to the police for public safety purposes. Mandatory disclosures have not been enabled by this bill; however, there are significant amendments that would allow discretionary disclosures for reasons of public safety to prevent or report health system fraud, et cetera. These disclosures will be at the discretion of the custodian and are limited to specific data elements. These amendments balance the privacy of an individual's information with the protection of the public and the health system.

A significant amendment is to allow the Health and Wellness department to compel reporting on health system management information matters, initially in regard to community-based drug dispensing information. This is an emerging issue recently raised by the department. The change would allow the department to better track drug trends as the growing cost of pharmaceuticals has a significant impact on health care budgets. It will also have a positive impact on patient safety issues. Facilitating greater use of the electronic health record would allow pharmacists and doctors to have more accurate patient drug histories. Each year 18,000 Albertans require hospitalization due to improper medication use.

A further recommendation not addressed by the select committee has been raised by Government Services in response to the USA PATRIOT Act. It deals with the need to protect the privacy of Albertans by ensuring that their health and other personal information cannot be automatically disclosed in response to a U.S. court order. Alberta Government Services is recommending an amendment to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and a complementary amendment to the Health Information Act to ensure a consistent response for foreign contractors. This will apply to disclosure provisions in the Health Information Act that allow disclosure without consent of a court subpoena, warrant, or order. The penalties for a violation of this disclosure provision would increase to a minimum penalty of $2,000 for an individual and $200,000 for a corporation to a maximum of $10,000 for an individual and $500,000 for a corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 31.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've been looking forward to this because I was actually on the special committee to review the existing Health Information Act, and what fun we all had. So now we finally see some of the fruits of our labour coming forward in this bill. I've been going through it, and I think in some cases I've been able to match the recommendation.

Sorry, let me back up a bit. The committee did produce a report and a number of recommendations. There were a lot of them. I think we're into the 50s, actually, 59 recommendations. There you go. A number of them were saying that the committee should be restructured and should examine various other aspects, but quite a few of the issues that we dealt with are in fact reflected in Bill 31. We accepted a number of written presentations, and there were also public presentations that were made to the committee, raising a number of different issues.

What we need to remember, if I may just sort of do a really brief little refresher course, is that the Health Information Act is exception-based legislation. It essentially says that we don't disclose people's personal health information except under the following circumstances, and then you get the rest of this quarter-inch thick bill that basically outlines how that happens or under what circumstances that happens.

Now, there are also two ways. There are the sections that talk about disclosing information with the consent of somebody and disclosing information without the consent of somebody. This is where we need to be very, very, very careful because we need the co-operation of the public in order to have this system work. We need people to give us health information, and if they think we're not going to do the right things with it, they won't give us the information, which stymies our system.

Especially when we look at innovations like electronic health records and even electronic medical records, we really need the co-operation of Albertans to give us the information. That is balanced by legislation like the original Health Information Act and by Bill 31 to have restrictions and limitations in place on how we're going to use that information or allow others to use that information. So it's a fine balance, and we need to be careful here because we can do this well and advance forward, or we can do it not well and hamper some really wonderful opportunities to enhance the health care system.

The second suggestion of the night from me to my colleagues on the government side. You know, I think we all recognize that electronic health records can help streamline our system and correspondingly reduce costs, but it relies on people having trust in what we're doing, and it relies on our being able to use their information appropriately. I would argue that in many cases we collect too much information from people, and we use it too much, but that's another, longer argument.

Let me attempt to address what I'm seeing here or some of the questions that have arisen for me already in this legislation. I believe, and I'll ask for confirmation, that the sections about the registration number for the health services providers is reflective of recommendation 13.

Let me go at this another way because in second reading you're really talking about the principle of the bill and not a sort of clause-by-clause examination of it, which is hard to do in this context, Mr. Speaker. So I'm asking you to grant me a bit of leeway here because we have to work with the details of what's here.

I'm wondering which sections in particular the sponsor of the bill believed were addressing the concerns around the PATRIOT Act. If I may correct the sponsoring member, the PATRIOT Act indeed had a great deal of discussion in the review committee. It was most certainly raised in that committee, so the member's statement that it wasn't considered is not factual. We had a great deal of discussion about it. You're reading the final report, which does not include many hours of meetings and discussion. Believe me: that was discussed. So what section in here does he believe is addressing the concerns that were raised around the PATRIOT Act?

Just as a refresher for everybody here, the concern there was that the U.S. passed the PATRIOT Act, and where it started to affect us is that it basically said that the U.S. government could use personal information that any of its companies held even if it was on other people. So, for instance, if we had a health care provider or insurance provider in some way or somebody . . .

An Hon. Member: IBM.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, that's right.

This is very far reaching because if we had a contract with IBM, an American firm, which we do, to take our data on health information and put it onto reel-to-reel tapes for storage for archival purposes, under the PATRIOT Act the American government could get our personal health information that is held by IBM. That's what that act was enabling. So what can we do to protect our information, and what clauses in here, exactly, does the sponsoring member believe are going to protect us in that case? I'm assuming that it's probably section 3 and possibly one I'll come back to later, but I'm interested in hearing that in particular.

The second one, that I believe may be the one they're trying to use to address the PATRIOT Act, would be appearing on the top of page 4 and which is amending section 35, adding in talking about courts having jurisdiction in Alberta or a rule of court that's binding in Alberta. If this is what they're trying to protect us from the PATRIOT Act implications with, let me know that. If not, please tell me what mischief this clause was designed to address. Generally speaking, when you get amending formulas brought in or you get legislation like this changing an original act, it's trying to address a situation that has arisen or a problem that comes up or a mischief that's been created. What are you looking to address with that particular clause?

Now, you've got some housekeeping there where you're going from an ethics board to a research ethics board. That's fine. It's a little housekeeping change. It shouldn't be identifying anything. I think this is referring to recommendation 39, and I'm just checking about the scope. That should come under the sections on scope and use of individually identifying health information. Is that what we're up to here?

I think that we've got recommendation 27 in section 35, which is the disclosure of diagnostic treatment and care information without consent. We need to be really careful about this because this is where people have to trust us that we won't be disclosing that personal health information without a really good reason and with a lot of limitations on how it's done and with a great deal of oversight and double-checking and guards in place to make sure that it's not abused.

So that's section 5. This is where having an all-party committee that worked out some of this legislation in advance would be very helpful because then I could have just worked through this, but this government won't go for those kinds of committees.

Okay. What's significant about this is that it is without consent. Part of what's important here is how long the information is kept. History itself is never stale-dated, so once we've collected this information or we've allowed someone else to disclose it, that information is out there forever. We can't get it back from them, so we've got to be really careful when we let it out there. What we're talking about here is the government of Canada or another province being able to get at this information. Why are we doing that?

Now, one of the other issues that was very contentious in the committee – and I want to make sure that we don't get anything being snuck into this legislation – is in the section that's talking about registration information to complete warrants. I want to know whether we're getting implementation of the contentious issue that was around allowing or actually forcing – this would be allowing – medical professionals to have to disclose personal health information about someone that was in the hospital in response to a request from a police officer in a nonemergency, non-life-threatening situation. That was the contentious part of this because I believe that where it was emergency or where it was life-threatening, there were already provisions that would allow for the provision of that information.

I didn't believe that it was appropriate for us to have a sort of general fishing trip, for a police officer to wander in there and see if his favourite top five criminals happen to have broken their legs or cut their hands on a piece of glass and were currently in the hospital, and they could then get a mitt full of information about them, including their health insurance, their whereabouts, home addresses, telephone numbers, and all of that sort of stuff. I'm looking for the assurance from the member that that is not being enabled under this legislation that's being brought forward in Bill 31. There are a number of sections that talk about it.

The problem is that lots of times police officers don't have all the information they need to complete a warrant. They need a home address or they need some kind of personal identifying information, and if they can wander into the hospital and say to the nearest doctor: "Gee, I'm looking for Joe Blow. Is he in here? By the way, what's his home address and his telephone number?" if there's a clause that allows that to happen, then it's not for us to be putting health professionals in a position where they're doing the work for police officers. That was very contentious in the committee. The recommendation was actually put forward by the committee by a majority vote, and I certainly wasn't supporting that. I want to ensure that that is not being contemplated in this legislation.

That's the stuff that's showing up at the bottom of page 3, which is amending 35(1) and various subs under that, where we end up talking about:

For the purpose of complying with a subpoena, warrant or order issued or made by a court, person or body having jurisdiction to compel the production of information or with a rule of court that relates to the production of information.

So I'm looking to make sure that we're not allowing them to sort of warrant information shop here.

I have additionally a question about some interesting language that's being used on the bottom of page 4, where it's talking about:

For the purpose of obtaining or processing payment for health services provided to the individual by a person that is required under a contract to pay for those services for that individual.

What's being contemplated here? Are you talking about a guardian? I don't think so. I'm wondering if you're not talking about a private health insurance plan that would be required or contracted to pay for a particular service for somebody. Can I get an explanation of what's being contemplated there? This could be referring to section 28, but I'm wondering what the "pay for" part of it is about. Could this also be around a delisting of services that somebody would have to pay for something? What's being contemplated there?

There's a section that's being deleted here, and that's the requirement that if information is disclosed by a custodian – and again this is individually identifying diagnostic treatment and care information. So a custodian is disclosing this to a health professional body for purposes of an investigation or a discipline hearing, a practice review, or an inspection. Right? There were clauses that required that the information be destroyed and at the earliest possible opportunity if the complaint doesn't go forward. Now, I think I'm remembering a discussion that they wanted to be able to hang onto that information for a period of time because sometimes the complaint is not resolved or it comes around again in a slightly different form, and they didn't want to have already dumped the information. That might be what's being contemplated here, so let me know if that's the case. If not, why are we dropping or deleting the requirement that the health information – and this is individually identifiable information – be destroyed?

We're adding in a unique identifier number, which again there was a great deal of controversy about. My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar – well, I'm sure he'll want to get in on this discussion because he really did not like that concept. But I see it's coming in here.

I'm wondering about section 7 – I believe it's reflecting recommendation 34 from the committee – how it affects a fee-for-service or a contract provider. Does it limit investigation of fraud or abuse of the system for a private provider? The way this is laid out now, it looks to me like you couldn't investigate a private provider based on what we have in Bill 31 here, so I'd like some additional information on that.

Oh, my time is going to run out before I am anywhere near finished. On the section appearing on page 6, which again is amending section 37 in the main act talking about a custodian disclosing health services provider information, how does this affect a private provider? I'm sure the member is well aware that 30 per cent of our health services are currently provided out of the private sector. It's very important for us that we know how they're supposed to handle information and how we're able to investigate them. So questions about that as well.

There's an entirely new section in here that's adding a new section after section 37. It is around the limiting of fraud and abuse of the health services, and it's looking for information about individuals, but it also gets into being able to provide or collect information on the health service provider. Now, I'm wondering here if we don't have a back-door provision being added. Another very controversial aspect of the committee was the health service providers, which for the most part are doctors – right? – and pharmacists, I suppose. They did not want individually identifying information out there, and right now the act basically protects that. There's tombstone information and very little else. I'm wondering what's possible under this new section appearing on pages 6 and 7 and 8, I think. Is that going to allow more information to be released or demanded about health service providers through that section?

I'm assuming that section 8 is corresponding with recommendation 43. You can get back to me on that one.

I think my time is almost out, and I know that there are others that want to speak. I'm hesitating on supporting this in second reading until I get some answers back about exactly what's being anticipated.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 15
International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to bring Bill 15 to the Committee of the Whole. This bill is motivated by Canada's signature on two international agreements, the first one being the convention on international interests in mobile equipment, also known as the Cape Town convention, and secondly, the protocol on aircraft equipment. These two agreements create a registry of financial interests in aircraft equipment. The registry will give banks more confidence in the security of their airline loans. Bill 15 creates legislation that will link Alberta to this international registry once Canada ratifies.

Canada has already said that it will not ratify the agreements until a critical mass of provinces indicate support. With Bill 15 Alberta would become the third province, after Ontario and Nova Scotia, to pass legislation that links us to this international registry. Ratification is likely to happen over the next 12 to 18 months.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 15 does not amend Alberta's Personal Property Security Act, nor does a new registry on aircraft equipment affect registries for Albertans' cars, trucks, and homes. Bill 15 does allow Alberta to exercise our jurisdiction in an area where the federal government has reached an international agreement. This will help companies like WestJet take advantage of future lower financing costs on new equipment.

Speaking of costs, Mr. Chairman, debate during second reading raised the issue of associated costs to the government of Alberta. The international registry is designed as a self-financing entity and, accordingly, will not be an expense for the Alberta government. Also, when the time comes for our government, we will work through my ministry with our colleague provinces and the federal government to ensure that the convention and the protocol are implemented consistently across Canada.

I conclude only by saying, Mr. Chairman, that I encourage all members to support the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act at this stage of reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would rise to support this bill. I had a fairly thorough briefing with the former Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and feel that in a way it really is just global housekeeping at this point in time. It's sort of a small step on our part if we're only number 3, which I understand.

The one thing that I would like to think and dream is that if we're making it easier for WestJet, it might be cheaper to fly. I know that that also is pie in the sky. However, that isn't really what I think the point of it is. It also would actually help not just the aircraft but also the parts that would be going across the different international borders. So I would support this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 15 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 27

Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister for Infrastructure and Transportation on behalf of the Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, I'm extremely pleased to have the opportunity to talk to this extremely important bill that has outlived its usefulness. This bill eliminates the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act and the two associated regulations, the vegetables sales regulation and the grades, packages, and fees regulation. This act was enacted some 50 years ago to define grades, package sizes, and inspection protocol for major vegetables that were grown in Alberta.

Times have changed since this act was originally introduced, and federal grades and standards are being utilized across the entire industry to create consistency and to make interprovincial and international export as simple as possible: one consistent standard simplifying exports. Industry is very supportive of the elimination of this unnecessary and unused act.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the glorious vegetable. I've been very impressed with the passion that this particular repeal act has raised, particularly with my colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford, who in second reading gave an impassioned speech supporting market gardeners.

Interestingly, I have a great respect for vegetables, and I have to eat a lot of them because I can't eat meat. So, boy, am I a fan of vegetables. But I've got to admit to you that I am more than willing to repeal the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act, which stands before us in Committee of the Whole as Bill 27. I would like to wish it all good sailing down the channel of repeal. At this point I think we could call the question.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others?

Mr. Chase: I heard the cries of the vegetables.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Vegetables are a maligned outfit. They're quite often confused; for example, tomato, to-mah-to. Is tomato a fruit, or is tomato a vegetable? Any act that clearly defines and distinguishes between fruits and vegetables is especially important, and I'm glad this government saw fit to repeal the act because that clarification is now ever present.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bills 15 and 27.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 15 and Bill 27.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and the considerable progress made this evening, I move that we now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 26, 2006

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sir, it is a privilege to rise in this Assembly and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very honoured guests: the ambassador of Croatia, Her Excellency Vesela Mrden Korac, and Mr. Korac, both of whom are in your gallery. The ambassador has represented Croatia to Canada for six months, since November of last year. However, as a career diplomat she is no stranger to our country of Canada. Ambassador Korac was in Canada a decade ago, from 1994 through 1997, as the first Croatian chargé d'affaires to Canada and as a counsellor at the Croatian embassy in Ottawa, and we are happy to welcome her and her husband back to Canada.

Alberta and Croatia have a small trade relationship, and about 10,000 Croatians are living in our province as Albertans. Ambassador Korac is in Alberta today to explore how her country and our province can develop closer and better ties and a more productive relationship in the years ahead.

I ask our guests to rise in your gallery and for the members of this Assembly to give them the warm traditional greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom, à vous et à l'Assemblée, une délégation de Sénateurs français, membres de l'Association interparlementaire Canada-France du Sénat.

Ce matin ces invités spéciaux ont eu l'occasion de rencontrer Dr. Jean-Michel Turc, consul honoraire de la France à Edmonton et président directeur général du Alberta Cancer Board, qui leur a donné une visite guidée du Cross Cancer Institute. Cet après-midi le groupe rencontrera des membres de la communauté francophone et visiteront le Campus Saint-Jean à l'Université de l'Alberta. Demain le groupe ira à Fort McMurray pour visiter les sables bitumineux, et ils termineront leur séjour en Alberta avec des rencontres à Calgary pour discuter des opportunités d'investissements et d'échanges commerciaux entre l'Alberta et la France.

Je suis heureux de vous présenter en premier lieu M. Claude Saunier, Sénateur des Côtes d'Armor, vice-président du groupe interparlementaire France-Canada du Sénat; M. Michel Guerry, Sénateur représentant les Français établis hors de la France; M. Joseph Kergueris, Sénateur du Morbihan, et son épouse, Mme Kergueris; M. Yannick Texier, Sénateur d'Ille-et-Vilaine; M. Matthieu Meissonnier, administrateur du Sénat.

Les accompagnant aujourd'hui sont M. Luc Serot Almeras, consul général de la France à Vancouver, et la Sénatrice albertaine, l'honorable Claudette Tardif, qui est la vice-présidente de l'Association interparlementaire Canada-France du Sénat.

Je leur demanderais de se lever et d'être reconnus par l'Assemblée. Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly a delegation of Senators from France, members of the Canada-France Inter-Parliamentary Association and, specifically, the Senate group.

This morning these special guests had the opportunity to meet with Dr. Jean-Michel Turc, the honorary consul of France in Edmonton and president and CEO of the Alberta Cancer Board, who provided a wonderful tour of the Cross Cancer Institute. This afternoon the group will meet with members of Alberta's franco-phone community and visit the Campus Saint-Jean at the University of Alberta. Tomorrow the group will travel to Fort McMurray to see the province's oil sands development and then proceed to Calgary to discuss further investment and trade opportunities between Alberta and France.

I am pleased to first introduce Mr. Claude Saunier, Senator of Côtes d'Armor and vice-president of the Canada-France Senate group; Mr. Michel Guerry, Senator for French expatriates; Mr. Joseph Kergueris, Senator of Morbihan, and his spouse, Mrs. Kergueris; Mr. Yannick Texier, Senator of Ille-et-Vilaine; Mr. Matthieu Meissonnier, Senate administrator.

Accompanying them today is Mr. Luc Serot Almeras, consul general of France in Vancouver, and Alberta's own Senator, the Hon. Claudette Tardif, who is the Canadian co-chair of the Canada-France Inter-Parliamentary Association.

I would ask them to please stand and be recognized by the Assembly as I invite the members of the Assembly to join me in extending them a warm welcome. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, hon. members, I have the great pleasure of introducing Dr. David Carter, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery. Dr. Carter served as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for 15 years. He was first elected on March 14, 1979, for the constituency of Calgary-Millican and then subsequently for the constituency of Calgary-Egmont in 1982, 1986, and 1989. He served as the ninth Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for seven years, from 1986 to 1993. He was the second ordained clergyman to serve as Speaker. Reverend David Carter now is the minister of St. Margaret's Anglican church, nestled in the Cypress Hills of southern Alberta. He's also a renowned author of such books as Behind Canadian Barbed Wire, a story of the prisoner of war camps in Canada after the Second World War. I'd ask members to join with me in welcoming Dr. Carter once again to our Legislature.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are going to have a blast here this afternoon. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly eight members of the Bureau of Learners from Alberta Speakers Team, commonly known as BLAST. BLAST team members are adult learners who have worked hard to improve their literacy skills. Through the BLAST program they learn to develop their public-speaking abilities so that they can talk about their experiences with others. They then move on to take part in speaking engagements across the province in schools and community groups, sharing their stories of courage and determination. Together they emphasize the importance of literacy and inspire others to take the steps necessary to improve their skills. Literacy is a vital component of Advanced Education's family of programs.

These remarkable individuals are with us today and are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask each BLAST member to stand when I call his or her name. So let's blast off: Jacquie Coulas, Kalvinder Dhillon, Lillian Gallant, Jill Manning, Scott Maslyk, Paul Ruot Galuak, Leonard Duby – and you might remember that Leonard was Alberta's first recipient of the Council of the Federation's literacy award, which was presented last year – and Philip Beakhouse. I'm sure that many of you recognize Philip because he works right here in the Legislature. Philip often shares his successes with his Legislature colleagues, and they celebrate these achievements with him. The BLAST team is joined by Janet Lane, executive director of Literacy Alberta, and Cindy Easton, manager of the literacy help line of Alberta, also with Literacy Alberta. Please join me in extending the warmest welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our colleague the Minister of Human Resources and Employment I'm delighted to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly 10 staff members from the Department of Human Resources and Employment. They are doing their public service orientation tour. I'd have them stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's very appropriate today that while most Albertans are caught up in the chase for the Stanley Cup, I have a classroom of grade 6 students from Alberta's most famous hockey town. I speak of Viking, Alberta, and the Sutters of course. Joining the 38 students here today are their teachers, Muriel Hill, Debbie Snider, Trudy Josephson, and Anna Rutledge, and their parent helper, Colleen Loveseth. I would ask the students and their teachers to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 35 visitors from St. Mary's high school in Vegreville. Just like the hon. member who introduced Viking as the home of the famous Sutter family, we're known, of course, as the home of the world's largest Easter egg. These fine students are seated in the public gallery. They're accompanied by teachers Mr. Steven Tymko and Ms Shalynn Zakordonski. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House the Propane Gas Association of Canada. We have here several people:

Sharon Lemke, Dan McPhee, Bill Egbert, Leslie Siegman, Rick Evans, Bruce Osborne, Harry James, Wyatt Lund, Jack Osland, and Brian Shaw. I see that they're all standing, and if we could all give them a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 46 visitors from Bow Valley College in my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo. These students are from the social studies program at Bow Valley College that is currently studying Canadian government. They are at the Legislature today to get an inside look at the government in action, and I trust that their visit will be a pleasant and informative experience. I had the pleasure of meeting with these students earlier this afternoon. Their intelligent questions and dedication to learning will ensure their success in the future. Travelling with the 46 students are their two teachers, Ms Susan Jolliffe and Jeri Wylie-Smith. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone who 25 years ago, when I was first learning how to hang-glide, I literally and figuratively looked up to. Bill Leegsma was flying off mountains while I was on the training hill, and he's making his first visit to the Legislature today. I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Nick and Margaret Carter. Nick and Margaret have been active members in their community, and Nick also serves as the Grand Exalted Ruler of Edmonton Elks lodge 11, which is the Edmonton local located in Edmonton-Calder. They have three wonderful children – Michelle, David, and Deborah – and five grandchildren. Nick is also a cancer survivor and is grateful for the facilities like the Cross Cancer Institute. I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Nutrition Programs in Schools

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week this government shut down a Liberal opposition motion urging for sufficient resources to be made available to feed the tens of thousands of children who go to school hungry every day right here in Alberta. Just the next day the Premier announced his plans to participate in a taxpayer-funded world tour before he retires. In a province as wealthy as Alberta it is shameful – it is shameful – that eliminating child hunger is not a government priority. My question is to the minister of learning. Given that 3,000 children are on the waiting list for a volunteer-run hot lunch program in Edmonton alone, when will this minister admit that there is a problem with child hunger in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear in the House during that particular debate on that motion where we stood on this matter. The fact is that we're providing $5.3 billion for kindergarten to grade 12 education, and within that envelope there are dollars, flexible dollars, available to school boards to virtually do a lot of these innovative kinds of programs.

I should point out again, in case the hon. member didn't hear it clearly earlier this week, that approximately 70 per cent of school boards throughout the province do provide one form or another of a hot lunch program or a breakfast program or a snack program or some nutritional program in partnership with a community agency. They're very proud of that, and so are the community agencies. So it's not as if these issues are being ignored, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: But they are. There are 3,000 kids in Edmonton on a waiting list.

Again to the same minister: given that almost all other provinces recognize what many studies have shown, that proper nutrition is essential for learning, why did this minister choose to vote against the Liberal opposition's motion to allocate proper resources to remove child hunger in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm so grateful for this question because it will give me a chance to remind the opposition leader of what I really said. What I really said was that I could support a motion like this if it had a friendly amendment and if that friendly amendment didn't compel in a mandatory fashion school boards to provide those kinds of programs because they want some flexibility at the local level. They are locally elected to make local decisions. All that he would have to do to gain this minister's support would be to review that word "dedicated" or labelled or targeted funding in his motion, and then we could have that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the hon. minister to return to the motion and tell us what wording it is that he thinks compels school boards to deliver this program. He's misreading the whole thing.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I just exactly did that moments ago, but the hon. opposition leader was too engaged trying to tell us why he might support unelecting school boards in the province, and he didn't hear the answer. That's the exchange he was engaged in.

I'll repeat it, and I'll say it more slowly, Mr. Speaker. I said on Monday when the motion came up, and I'll say it again, that this minister could possibly have supported such a motion because we understand the value and the balance required with nutrition and food and clothing and shelter and how, essentially, parents have to provide that but in some cases don't. We could support that – this minister could – if it didn't have the word "dedicated," which translates as labelled or targeted funding. That goes against the grain of flexibility, which school boards are looking for.

Premier's Travel

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's long goodbye has cost this government some cabinet ministers and any semblance of a legislative agenda, and now it looks as though it's going to cost Albertans tens of thousands of dollars. Taxpayers will be sending the Premier and his Tory entourage on an all expense paid, first-class tour of Russia and China and France and Ukraine. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the Premier will be retiring within weeks of these expensive trips, won't he admit that it is pointless for him personally to be making these contacts?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked I'm still the Premier, and as Premier I intend to serve Albertans until the day I walk out the door. I will continue to pursue every opportunity that exists to build on the tremendous success of this province. When the time comes and details are finalized, we will issue news releases that will include itineraries and estimated costs, and those details will be posted on the website for anyone in the world to read.

I'll be promoting Alberta's oil sands to business interests in France, including investment, technology, and equipment supply. We already have one French company, Total, with very substantial investments in the oil sands. I have announced already that it's my hope that someday we will eradicate cancer. Dr. Turc, who was introduced in this Legislature earlier, will be part of the mission, and I'll be touring cancer research and treatment facilities in France, which I'm told has the best in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier said just yesterday that he'll be taking the minister of learning along as his translator, can't he find a less expensive translator and leave the minister here to do his job?

Mr. Klein: Fine. I don't know if the hon. member can translate Ukrainian. I don't think he can. He doesn't speak Russian. As a matter of fact, he hardly speaks English.

I'm visiting Alberta's sister provinces in Ukraine for the first time since we signed agreements on various areas of co-operation. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member recalls, the governor of Lviv was here, and we hosted a reception for him. He was here for the centennial celebrations, and of course we signed a protocol of agreement with Lviv. So this is a reciprocal visit, given that governors from those sister provinces have been here. There is one other province, and I can't pronounce the name, but maybe you can.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Ivano-Frankivsk.

Mr. Klein: Right.

The Speaker: And we may get to it in the third one.
The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier just said that part of his agenda is to help find the cure for cancer, why doesn't he use some of the resources for this trip to solve school hunger in Alberta instead? Why don't you do something useful instead?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education already outlined very clearly the policy of this government and the opportunity to give flexibility to school boards, unlike the autocratic, compulsory attitude of the Liberal Party where they want to force everyone to do everything that they want. They want to force everyone to do everything that they want.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Benefit Design Options Report

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government seems to be the only jurisdiction constantly fearmongering its citizens about the future of the health care system. Canada and the United States are the only places that experienced a baby boom, while Japan and many European countries already have an older population. They are not experiencing the catastrophic scenario of unsustainability that this government is predicting. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that all the evidence already showed that privatization wasn't viable, what was the point of this $1.5 million exercise with Aon?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, last October when we released the RFP for a contract subsequently managed by Aon, we were looking at an Alberta database, an Alberta model that would look at our growth scenarios, look at the costs, look at the probabilities, and look at the fact, too, on areas where we have a high incidence of costs, like pharmacare, where we have services provided to Canadians that are not necessarily covered under the Canada Health Act in terms of supplementary allied services, look at nonemergent services, look at the continuous care program, look at those elements and see in the future what the aging population would do. We noted in Finance that we didn't have people that were building actuarial models. Although there was the latitude to spend $1.5 million, about $1.3 million was spent on the contract.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: given that competition has proven to drive up costs in the public health care system, and the minister's own framework suggested more co-operation between regional health authorities, is the minister considering accepting Aon's suggestion for increased competition in the public system? How does having the Royal Alex compete with the Misericordia get us anywhere further? It doesn't.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Aon presentation that today was made to members of all sides of the House, including the hon. member opposite, very clearly articulated that Aon Consulting was not there to do a policy recommendation or a policy review. Somehow in the question there is an implication that that is something that has been recommended by Aon as a policy of this government. It has neither been recommended nor does this particular document become the basis of any policy that we're directing now.

What we are looking at in the policy framework is the kind of regional co-operation and collaboration that should take place, the use and the role of hospitals, the use of community facilities. That's quite separate and apart from the kinds of things that Aon evaluated in their actuarial modelling of issues surrounding mandatory provision of health care insurance, which we have chosen not to implement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given the concern about containing costs, why isn't the minister implementing public system cost savers like bulk buying pharmaceuticals, including midwifery services under the public insurance plan, specialized surgical centres, or any number of other good ideas we already have?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, for a minute there I thought I heard the hon. member opposite say "specialized surgical centres." I must explore that with her later to find out under what auspices she was considering those because over the past several weeks all I've heard is that the sky is falling.

Mr. Taylor: Go to an ear, nose, and throat specialist and get the problem fixed.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.
The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Costs

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the minister for the briefing – I'll start with that – because it gave us some good stuff to ask questions about. The government has hired Aon at a cost of 1 and a half million dollars, one of the world's largest insurance corporations, to come up with scary scenarios designed to frighten Albertans into believing that we cannot afford to maintain our public health care system. If we take Aon's word for it, we are expected to believe that the entire provincial budget will be consumed by health care by the year 2025. What nonsense. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why should Albertans put any stock in the 20-year financial projections done by Aon, which are based on assumptions generated by the Ministry of Finance, which has underestimated government revenues to the tune of $41 billion in the last 13 years?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. Provincial Treasurer will supplement my answer. Quite frankly, by looking at the models for private insurance and determining that we would not pursue those models of private insurance, from the perspective of Aon Consulting, who is not itself an insurance company, albeit subsidiaries of that company do insure, they certainly did not come forward with anything that would be a conflict of interest. In fact, they recommended quite the opposite, that we not engage in any of those particular options.

In terms of the assumptions that Finance makes in terms of financial information, to the Treasurer, please.

The Speaker: Perhaps they'll get that in another question.
The hon. member.

2:00

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, that is the government's own number.

This is again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why should Albertans put any stock in the Aon report which assumes that health spending will increase by 10 per cent a year for the next 20 years when health spending has only gone up at a rate of 5.9 per cent every year since 1993?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that Albertans, including the hon. members opposite, really look at every part of that report and determine what, in fact, they would shoot down in the assumptions in that report. That report looked at a middle-growth scenario, looked at not only the figures from Finance but, in fact, comparisons across the world, looked at their actuarial design. One might say: well, why do they have the expertise to do that? We did a lot of work in framing a request for proposal that would get us an unbiased report on that.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think that if anybody can identify what was wrong with it – I note that the members that were there and stayed until the very end heard that they looked at a number of the ways that they predicted resource revenues, which in the next 20-year period are presumed by Aon's report to decrease in terms of the valuation of all of the other kinds of costs. So if you look at the fact that they depleted the amounts of monies that were attributable to resource revenue, you can hardly argue that we were using any inflationary factor to try to in fact scare the Alberta public. They used modest assumptions. They followed through with a document that I'd like to see quite specifically what Albertans would say is wrong with their assumptions and wrong with their conclusions.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, why should Albertans accept the cost projections and fearmongering contained in the Aon report when the government has rejected excellent ideas for actually bringing down the costs of health care, such as the NDP's pharmaceutical savings agency that could save us $75 million a year in the first year?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I can't resist saying this. This minister has taken more hits than George Chuvalo by the members opposite on both sides of the bench. Quite frankly, this kind of a hit, this kind of fearmongering that they continue to do is because I don't think they have a leg to stand on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Education Issues

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Education mentioned to the Committee of Supply, which due to the two-hour time constraint I was unable to participate in, that program number 3 is up by 6.3 per cent. Of that, $152 million will address the government's responsibility for the unfunded liability of the Alberta teacher's pension. To the minister: could you please explain both to the citizens of Alberta and the teachers how $152 million addresses, as you said, "government's responsibility for the unfunded liability of the Alberta teachers' pension plan," which is over $4 billion?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Certainly, and thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, prior to 1992 the teachers' pension plan was largely underfunded both by the teachers and by government, so in 1992 an agreement was struck whereby the government of Alberta undertook responsibility for two-thirds of the unfunded portion. The funded portion is done on a 50-50 basis. Now, teachers undertook responsibility to pay for one-third. Our share on an annual basis is now going to be $152 million this year, and it will grow proportionately thereafter. So the exact answer is that the $152 million that is in the Education budget that was debated and passed yesterday is reflective of our commitment to honour our obligation.

Mr. Hinman: I'll have to do the math. I don't see how that catches up.

To the Premier: will the Premier follow his own legislation to put all surplus revenue to pay off debt or offset debt with a trust fund, as you have with the provincial debt as it comes due, by creating a trust fund for the teachers' pension before implementing new programs and increased spending?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, in the financial statements of the government the pension liabilities are below the line, so in fact our commitment to remove debt is met.

Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we are as interested and concerned as anyone about ensuring that we have absolutely no financial obligations in the way of debt. However, I'm proud to say that under this government, this Premier's leadership in sound fiscal management we are prepared to meet all of our obligations in this province.

Mr. Hinman: I don't know how this spending spree will end.

Again to the Minister of Education: will the minister act as fast as possible to address the 50 per cent of Alberta students who do not go on to postsecondary education by implementing a work experience program in high school that addresses the needs of the students as well as the insurance liabilities of the schools and the employers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of work experience related programs that are really turning in very successful and proud numbers. We work in conjunction with the Ministry of Advanced Education to deliver those. Included in that bevy of options are programs such as RAP, the registered apprenticeship program, and YAP, the youth apprenticeship program. We have a new one now called learner pathways. We have a number of outreach sites that school boards have in place right now where students have that experience, and we have a number of CTS programs as well. I'm grateful for the question. It is an important area, and we are making good progress there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Federal/Provincial Fiscal Relations

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to live in Alberta. Why? Because evidence of a thriving economy is all around us. We have low unemployment, Albertans have new opportunities, and the province leads the country in most economic measurements. We know, however, that this has not gone unnoticed by other parts of the country. Sometimes being the leader makes you susceptible to the envy of others and to those who claim it is unfair. My first question about equalization is to the Premier. How is the provincial government ensuring that other Canadians understand how our province's economic success benefits the rest of the country?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can't really ensure that everyone understands, but certainly I've been saying in speeches in . . .

An Hon. Member: In China.

Mr. Klein: No, not in China. They understand. Unlike the Liberals they understand in China. It's their cousins. It's their Liberal cousins in Ontario that don't understand, and I've been in Ontario on numerous occasions to explain that we are a caring and we are a sharing province and we are the largest net contributors to Canada on a per capita basis.

Mr. Speaker, I point out the Canadian Energy Research Institute, and I allude to the report that they released recently indicating that the federal government is the largest recipient – the largest – whether it's a Liberal or a Conservative government, of the tax revenue that will be generated by Alberta's oil sands between the year 2000 and 2020. According to the report Ottawa will collect some $51 billion – billion – or 41 per cent, of the estimated $123 billion in taxes associated with the oil sands facility. Just from oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Finance. What is this government doing to ensure that Alberta's success is not somehow hobbled by changes to equalization or to transfer payments or to some other program they come up with?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is and has been concern raised by some groups in the province, and I think this is an area that's not well understood by many. There are people who would tell us that we should just stop our transfer payments to Ottawa. Well, in fact, the government of Alberta does not transfer money to Ottawa. The benefit, as outlined by the Premier in his answer, is gained in Ottawa by taxation, taxation that Albertans pay when they file their federal income tax, which the federal government under the Constitution has the ability to collect.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing I can tell you is that under our Premier's leadership, working with our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and certainly the Minister of Finance, we will be in constant contact with our counterparts across Canada and review each of the studies and reports that come forward on this. We will make sure that there is nothing that goes forward that in any way unfairly impacts Alberta.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell this House and all Albertans more details on what is happening in those discussions with her counterparts across the country. How are they trying to get our money?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, I think that what many provinces are saying is that they want a larger amount of money under equalization. Equalization is something that Alberta has been a strong supporter of, a proud supporter of, because what equalization does is it ensures that every province in Canada can offer quality core programs to their people, their constituents. But having said that, we are following this very carefully. We will ensure that the reports are vetted, and we will not support a program that increases payments to provinces based on poor policy developed in those provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Appointment of Chief Judge

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The appointment of a Chief Justice of the Provincial Court of Alberta is important not just to the legal community but to all Albertans. It is absolutely critical that the judiciary operates fairly, openly, and most importantly with complete impartiality from interference from any other entity, especially political influence. Albertans and the legal community have many questions about the process that led to the appointment of Gail Vickery as Chief Judge of the Provincial Court of Alberta.

My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell us what considerations were involved in this appointment process, who made the decision, and what criteria were used in screening and evaluating applicants?

Mr. Stevens: It is an excellent question, and certainly I think that the points raised by the hon. member in his preamble are accurate with respect to the importance of this particular position. The Chief Justice of the Provincial Court of Alberta does have a very important role in our justice system, and it is important that we do a good job and appoint a very, very qualified person, and I'm very pleased to tell you that Judge Gail Vickery is indeed a very qualified individual.

Under our rules, Mr. Speaker, the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court has a seven-year appointment. The retiring Chief Judge is Chief Judge Walter. His term is up in May of this year. Last December, as part of this particular process, I as Justice minister did two things. Firstly, what I did was I said to all Provincial Court judges in the province of Alberta by way of a memo that as a result of Chief Judge Walter's term coming to an end in May, they should, if they were interested, send applications through to the department and that we would receive those.

As part of the process of vetting I asked that a committee be established. Now, this was a completely new process, but I thought it was important that it be done, that a committee be established to vet those applications, not knowing whether there would be one or whether there would be 115 because there are 115 Provincial Court judges. That particular committee, Mr. Speaker – and I'll end with outlining who was on it – comprised the current Chief Judge, the former president of the Law Society of Alberta, the Deputy Minister of the Justice ministry, and the chair and one nonlegal member of the Provincial Nominating Court Committee.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: can the minister tell us if the new Chief Judge's involvement in the Multi-Corp affair was considered along with close personal ties to the Premier? Did the minister or the committee consider if this would interfere with judicial independence?

Mr. Stevens: You know, Mr. Speaker, there are typically two things in life that we all recognize as being certain, and those are death and taxes. But I think that there's a third that we can add, and that is that this Liberal opposition will at every opportunity take an opportunity to impugn the reputation of good people outside of this Assembly in here without the courage to go out there and say those things. I'm particularly distressed because, candidly, I thought that this hon. member is one that stood apart from that, from this particular group.

Let me address the issue of the process. What I asked this particular committee to do was to review the applications and to provide a list of those applicants who were qualified to do the job, and I received that list. Judge Gail Vickery was on that list, and ultimately she was selected from that list.

But allow me to say this, Mr. Speaker. The obligation of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is to receive this information and to consider that along with other things. I for one had no knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the preamble of this last question, so to the hon. member I can say: it was not a consideration. In fact, I can tell you that Judge Gail Vickery had a reputation before becoming a member of the judiciary of this province that I am envious of, and I had, I'd like to think, a reasonably successful, modest degree of success as a lawyer before coming to this Assembly. She was one fine lawyer, and she's been one fine judge, and we should be thankful that she accepted the position.

Speaker's Ruling Protected Persons

The Speaker: Hon. members, as all hon. members know, the chair has no knowledge of what the nature of a question is that will be forthcoming, but the chair is knowledgeable on the rules of the House and would refer all members to Beauchesne 493(1): "All references to judges and courts of justice of the nature of personal attack and censure have always been considered unparliamentary, and the Speaker has always treated them as breaches of order."

The chair did see some movement in anticipation of a point of order – the question was raised, and the answer was provided by the minister – when it went beyond the normal 35 to 45 seconds that we require in anticipation of a perceived point of order.

So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, please proceed with your third question, recognizing what has just been quoted by the chair with respect to the rules of the House.

Dr. B. Miller: I'm just concerned about the process. I have a conscience. I represent Albertans.

Will the minister follow the example of his federal cousins and adopt a scrutiny process, like the federal government is following, allowing an all-party inquiry to ensure that judicial independence is not compromised and appointments are not just patronage appointments?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please sit down. There are two ways of going with a question. One is a very direct way, and the other one is an interesting, behind-the-door way. I think that the hon. member just took the latter approach in the third question. The chair is not going to allow a member of the judiciary to have his or her reputation tarnished in this House in any way, shape, or form.

We're now moving on to the next question. The next question comes from the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:20 Native Friendship Centres

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the last census the number of aboriginal people living in urban centres has doubled and in some cases tripled. Today half of all aboriginal people live in cities. Calgary has a vibrant friendship centre which helps aboriginal people make the transition to urban living. The city also has Canada's fourth largest aboriginal population, with 22,000 people. To the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: what kind of funding do you provide to native friendship centres in Alberta?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, friendship centres are really vital to Alberta and, most specifically, to aboriginal people because friendship centres are more than a gathering place. They actually help aboriginal Albertans make that transition to urban life. As a result, we do provide some funding to them, approximately $650,000 annually. However, we have not seen any change in that amount for a long time, and therefore I would encourage those boards to continue to work with me and with their MLAs to ensure that we can continue to receive a little bit more dollars.

Mr. Johnston: To the same minister: given that since the '80s native friendship centres have not received a funding increase from the province, what plans do you have to provide funds to help these unique organizations?

Ms Calahasen: First of all, Mr. Speaker, we are always looking for ways to be able to work with the friendship centres because they do serve a really good population within the aboriginal community. This year through my department we had an additional $100,000, which we were able to put to good use. We gave Red Deer Native Friendship Society some money to establish what we call a community liaison contact. The second one was to the High Prairie Native Friendship Centre Society to provide youth programs. The third one that we were working with was the Alberta Native Friendship Centres Association itself to assist in project management training for their staff and, as well, Peace River, which is the Nistawoyou friendship centre, to host a spiritual and health gathering.

Mr. Speaker, it's always very difficult for friendship centres because they are dealing with the fastest growing population in Alberta, and that's the aboriginal community. So we're trying to make sure that we do work with them to ensure that we can provide any help that we can to them.

Mr. Johnston: My second supplemental to the same minister: is there any other way that we can support friendship centres by encouraging the development of partnerships that benefit urban aboriginal people?

Ms Calahasen: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. First of all, one of the areas that we've been working on is to facilitate and work with other ministries, such as Children's Services, Economic Development, and Community Development, so that we can begin to see how we can build those partnerships. We have also encouraged the federal government to work with us on the friendship centre area as well as the municipal districts so that we can see the partnerships occur.

We've seen a lot of partnerships start to happen, and we've been encouraging other kinds of partnerships to occur. We've been working with seniors, as I indicated in one of my previous answers, in housing and dealing with urban aboriginal housing as well as the housing that they're having to deal with in these areas where they're located. Mr. Speaker, we're also developing strategies with the AUMA and the AAMD and C so that they can work more effectively with aboriginal people in their neighbouring communities. Of course, the urban aboriginal strategy is another area that we can push. So we've got some strategies which we will continue to work with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Education Funding for Lethbridge

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister boasts of spending $5.3 billion on education, but Lethbridge's public school board will have to choose which services to cut next year. Yes, cut teachers. We can do without the Minister of Education. We can do without the janitors. Without teachers there is no education. My question is to the minister. What is the Education minister's response to the horrifying funding situation in Lethbridge caused by this inadequate hold-the-line budget?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, Lethbridge public has a budget for the '05-06 government fiscal year of about $59 million. The budget that we approved yesterday will see their budget rise to about $59.6 million. I hardly think that that can be interpreted as a cut or a slice or whatever it is that she was saying in the preamble.

Ms Pastoor: Doesn't meet inflation.

How many other school districts are also victims of this hold-the-line budget that doesn't cover the cost of inflation, or is Lethbridge the proverbial canary in the coal mine to assess how deep these cuts can go?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member asking the question hasn't had a chance to review Hansard from yesterday, wherein I outlined all of the increases, but with the permission of the House I'll start all over.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I'll condense them a little bit. Okay.

First of all, there's an overall increase to the K to 12 education budget of $330 million. That's 6.7 per cent. That will include increases to all three infrastructure envelopes: school construction, operations and maintenance, and infrastructure maintenance and renewal. That includes increases to transportation, up to $232 million in total. That includes special needs, an increase of 9.7 per cent, up to $373 million, and the list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for referring to and using the word "construction." How much longer will the residents of Lethbridge wait for the much-needed high school as costs continue to rise without even a shovel in the ground?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to be part of an announcement I think it was last September or October wherein we announced to date the single largest project that I'm aware of for a joint project in the hon. member's hometown. I know it was 20-some million dollars, as I recall, and it's a collaborative project which sees a much-needed new high school being built there. I would have thought that the hon. member would have known about that because it was front-page coverage. Specifically, it was $27.6 million for the west Lethbridge high school new education centre.

Now, we've since corresponded, and I understand that they have some cost escalations. We've looked at those, and things are under control there. We're looking forward to a school opening very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Home Schooling

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that our government has been working to update the home-education regulation. Many parents who home educate their children are already starting to plan for next year and are wondering what the status of it is now. Reflecting inquiries and concern from my constituents, my question today is to the Minister of Education. When will the updated home-education regulation be available for use by parents who educate their children at home?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as most members here would know, we have a significant enrolment of home-educated students. They work in co-operation with a local co-operating school board. As a result of extensive consultations over the past couple of years we found it necessary to update the current regulation. However, the short answer to the member's question is that the new home-ed regulation is just about completed in terms of its drafting, and we'll have the new home-ed regulation out very soon. But in the meantime, hon. members and Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that I have extended the current home-ed regulation through to the end of July.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that some caring and dedicated parents who believe in home-education for their children have expressed concerns about student assessments, stating that their children do not necessarily follow the Alberta program of study – and it is true – how, then, does the government know what home-educated Albertan youth are learning and how they're learning it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell, we and the parents and the co-operating school board and for that matter the students know exactly how they're doing because the whole process starts with the parents sitting down with a co-operating teacher, who is there from the co-operating board, and they design a program specific to that student's needs. There are a variety of programs that can be followed. Thereafter the co-operating teacher visits the student, visits the home – visits the location, in other words – works one-on-one with the child or the student and monitors the progress. Then at the end of the year, depending on which grade level they're at, they have an option of what type of assessment might be done. It's all done in co-operation with skilled and trained professional people. So there's a fairly good method in place now.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that we all expect Alberta youth to go to postsecondary education and career training, facing a really competitive world outside their home environment, how can the government ensure that home-schooled students meet the qualifications for acceptance in postsecondary learning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. The answer, of course, is this. First of all, it's the responsibility of the home-educating parent to ensure that the track they put their child on yields the particular result that they are seeking. If they're seeking a postsecondary entrance result, there is advice on procedures and policies and guidelines that is available through the co-operating school board. Secondly, it should be noted that many postsecondary institutions don't require specific graduation diplomas to be provided in order to facilitate access to that particular institution. So there are responsibilities there, there is advice there, and there are programs of study routes to be taken which parents should be well advised of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

PDD Program Review

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues its lengthy track record of ignoring the needs of vulnerable Albertans and punishing those who challenge bad government policy. Despite the minister's efforts to pretend that cuts to services for people with disabilities are not happening across the province, yesterday's protest and a chorus of letters and e-mails from distressed PDD recipients and their families prove that there's a real funding problem. But when people have the courage to stand up and speak out in this province, this government responds with bullying and intimidation, with phony financial reviews and phony audits. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Why is it that these types of reviews only happen when people publicly voice concerns that are embarrassing to the government?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I am not bullying and intimidating. I can tell you, by going out to a rally for an hour and speaking with individuals about their concerns, that I was pleased to actually have a lot of hugs from people as I went through and as they gave their stories and shared with me what the real issues are. I was also pleased to be able to let people know that we are reviewing this situation. This review started some time ago. I had mentioned that to you in the Assembly previously. As we had AACL here yesterday, it's a review that is very inclusive. It has stakeholders. It has people from my ministry. Families themselves are a part of this. It will take some time to complete that review. It's an important initiative, and it is taking place. It's not bullying to do a review.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, the point is: given that yesterday the minister said that the problems seemed to be with the community boards, it's not a real review. Isn't that a form of intimidation when people speak out against government policy?

Mrs. Fritz: No. Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, how can the minister pretend to be an advocate for disabled Albertans when she responds to their requests for funding with punitive reviews and insufficient funding?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this review is actually going to be very helpful as we move forward with this change in governance that we have. I think that tonight we're debating this in Committee of the Whole. I'm looking forward to the participation of the community at large, of my ministry as a part of the review. Stay tuned. We'll have the results for you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Government House Leader noted a point of order, but I think I dealt with that purported point of order during question period. Unless there's something pressing, I'm not quite prepared to recognize the hon. Government House Leader with respect to that point. I think it's been dealt with.

Historical Vignette

The Speaker: Hon. members, with respect to an historical vignette let me talk to you about the Privy Council of Canada.

Rev. Abbott: Oh. Timely.

The Speaker: Timely.

Appointments to the Privy Council for Canada are made by the Governor General upon the recommendation of the Prime Minister. All current and former members of the federal cabinet are members of the Privy Council, but the Prime Minister may recommend the appointment of other distinguished Canadians as well. While the Privy Council is constitutionally an executive advisory body, convention has limited the advisory duties to those members who are currently members of the federal cabinet. An appointment to the Privy Council is intended to be a great honour.

A number of Alberta's Premiers have been appointed to the Privy Council, including Arthur L.W. Sifton, who served as Alberta's Premier from 1910 to 1917. He was appointed to the Privy Council on October 12, 1917. Charles Stewart, who served as Premier from 1917 to 1921, was appointed to the Privy Council on December 29, 1921. However, interestingly enough, both Mr. Sifton and Mr. Stewart received their appointments when they were named to the federal cabinets of Prime Ministers Sir Robert L. Borden and W.L. Mackenzie King respectively. Premier Ernest C. Manning, who served as Premier of Alberta from 1943 to 1968, was appointed to the Privy Council on July 5, 1967. Premier E. Peter Lougheed, who served from 1971 to 1985, was appointed to the Privy Council on April 17, 1982.

All former Alberta MLAs who have eventually been appointed to the federal cabinet have also become members of the Privy Council for Canada, the most recent of which is former MLA Stockwell Day.

Appointments to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada are for life.

Anniversary of Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This day marks a sad anniversary in the history of the world. Twenty years ago today one of the four reactors at the nuclear power plant at Chernobyl in the Soviet Ukraine exploded, releasing over 50 tonnes of radioactive material into the atmosphere, an amount greater than the combined bombs at Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The world first heard of the accident two days later, when Swedish monitoring stations detected the radiation that spread across northern and eastern Europe, contaminating millions of acres of farmlands and forests. Thirty-two people died from the immediate explosion. Dozens more suffered radiation burns. The accident eventually killed 5,000 people from cancer and other radiation-related illnesses and left a legacy of illness, suffering, and shortened lifespans for generations. The last working reactors at Chernobyl were shut down in 2000, and the plant was closed. But the lingering impact continues to confront scientists, health professionals, the nuclear power industry, and international policy.

Mr. Speaker, no one felt the impact of that explosion more keenly than the 300,000 Albertans of Ukrainian heritage, who saw so much of their ancestral homeland devastated, perhaps beyond recall. All Albertans felt the suffering of those affected and the fear that spread with the radiation. Alberta reacted with compassion and generosity, providing financial assistance and medical care at the time and in the years since.

Albertans have continued to open their homes to some of the 3,000 children from the Ukraine and neighbouring Belarus who are sent abroad every summer, when radiation levels are highest. Mrs. Klein visited the Chernobyl museum and paid homage to the victims of the disaster on the Premier's mission to the Ukraine in 2002.

Mr. Speaker, the devastation of Chernobyl has revealed the Alberta heart. On the 20th anniversary we look back with horror and look ahead with the Ukrainian people to a stronger partnership in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

2:40 Bureau of Learners from Alberta Speakers Team

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Literacy is important, but you don't need to believe me. Believe our guests introduced by the Minister of Advanced Education earlier today. They can blast the message much more powerfully than I. On March 11 they celebrated a graduation ceremony that I was unable to attend, so I'm delighted that the members of the BLAST team could join us today and be recognized.

Reading and writing are integral to everything we do. Sometimes we take these skills for granted. We forget that without these fundamental capabilities even the smallest tasks can be challenging. These skills are absolutely critical if we are to be successful in work and participate in our communities.

Literacy is essential for continued learning. It provides the foundation for further education and, ultimately, for maximizing one's potential through knowledge. Given the importance of literacy, programs that help and encourage Albertans to improve their literacy skills are vital to our province.

Earlier this afternoon the hon. Minister of Advanced Education introduced the members of the Bureau of Learners from Alberta Speakers Team, or BLAST. Through this program adult learners develop their public speaking abilities and then take part in speaking engagements across the province. Members of the BLAST team share their personal experiences, telling others how they improved their literacy skills and what it means to their lives. Through their stories they inspire others to have the courage and perseverance needed to develop their reading and writing skills, and they remind others of the importance of literacy. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, they are powerful stories of lives changed.

Literacy Alberta is a great organization that works year after year to support and assist learners in their literacy development. It deserves our thanks and our appreciation. The BLAST team deserve our recognition and our admiration for their courage, their achievement, and their willingness to share their experiences with others. All of our guests – Jacquie Coulas, Kalvinder Dhillon, Lillian Gallant, Jill Manning, Scott Maslyk, and Paul Ruot Galuak – deserve great admiration for their achievements and for their willingness to share their journeys with others.

I particularly want to mention Leonard Duby, who you may be aware won the first Council of the Federation literacy award for Alberta last year, and our own Philip Beakhouse, who works in the Legislature Building every day – day in, day out – making it habitable for us to work. Philip overcame a brain tumour, which was finally removed at age 25. He never learned to read or write until now. A friend urged him to join PALS in the mid-1990s, and literacy has changed his life.

Please join me in congratulating Philip, Leonard, and all the members of the BLAST team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Democratic Renewal

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I continue my series of talks on democratic renewal in Alberta. To start, let me share with the hon. members one of the four Alberta Liberal caucus documents collectively called Alberta Horizons, which all state that the time to dream is now, and the place to dream is Alberta. In this particular one the dream is to revive democracy in this province.

Why do we even dream? Dreams are jumping blocks to great achievements. There was the dream which later became Canada. There was the dream which later offered us public, universally available health care. There was the dream that this province could potentially be out of debt one day. Et cetera. But do we stop dreaming if things are better today than they were yesterday? Do we become lazy and complacent and stop thinking about our children's future? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is definitely no.

The Alberta Liberal caucus has a vision for this province's future and the people and policies to take us there. Part of our work focuses on electoral reform. It is noteworthy to highlight the fact that British Columbia, for example, has fixed election dates, something we Alberta Liberals advocate as evident in our private member's bill, Bill 210, calling for just that: fixed election dates.

We also want to increase voter participation. Under an Alberta Liberal government we will ensure that every vote will count. Albertans, Mr. Speaker, will not have to vote strategically ever again.

Furthermore, on the issue of campaign financing we are going to mandate donation limits to restore faith in the electoral process, where people are elected on their merits and with true grassroots support, not bought by special-interest lobbyists and big business.

Other areas we're working on include legislative renewal, restoring government accountability, and improving transparency and access to information.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, we advocate better government with the same virtues valued by Albertans in their daily lives – freedom, fairness, trust, honesty, and hard work – virtues which are unfortunately lacking from this 35-year-old, tired government.

To be continued.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Democratic Renewal

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Horizon's democratic renewal. Yesterday afternoon during the education debate/debacle players and audience members present witnessed the fragility of Alberta's ongoing, one-act democracy.

Under the auspices of this government's staging directions, Standing Orders, the Minister of Education figuratively strolled the stage, soaking up the spotlight without fear of the appearance of an offstage hook from his government's designated deputy drama critic. From time to time he would gaze appealingly into the gallery for the offstage prompts of his forgotten lines. Opposition players' stage entrances were not only hindered by the minister's lengthy soliloquies but were blocked by a backbench chorus not content to discuss their concerns offstage while waiting in the wings.

Fortunately, well prior to the afternoon performance, undaunted by an army of government stagehands led by an ever-expanding troupe of deputy and assistant deputy ministerial stand-ins, the .3 opposition researcher had boldly defied the odds by prearming his critic's role of David to do battle with the government Goliath. Having thoroughly prepared and rehearsed their scripts, the opposition troupe was ready to engage.

Meanwhile, on stage the real fate of billions of Albertans' dollars was being decided at the surreal rate of millions a minute. With the cancellation of the fall legislative theatrical accountability session/season in both 2004 and now again in 2006, is it any wonder that half of the once Alberta democracy subscribers, now barely 50 per cent of eligible voters, feel so disenchanting that they no longer wish to attend or participate in government preorchestrated, first past the post performances?

Democracy in Alberta is desperately calling for a scene change, for new players supported by a visionary script. This is why both the Alberta audience and the media reviewers are applauding and embracing the recently released Alberta Horizons four-pillar policy provincial Liberal blueprint. Economic and environmental ideals are balanced on a broadly inclusive social policy base supported by a democratically engaging plot line which lays out a sustainably prosperous future for all Albertans.

The curtain is rising.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Zaheed Damani

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today during National Volunteer Week to recognize a very special young Calgarian. Last night at Volunteer Calgary's 10th annual leadership awards, attended by the hon. Minister of Community Development and the chair of Alberta's Youth Secretariat, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, Zaheed Damani was the senior high recipient for the leaders of tomorrow award.

I can think of no better recipient, Mr. Speaker. Zaheed is an incredible example of community leadership and education. He's involved in the advisory panel for the Alberta government's Youth Secretariat as a leader, researcher, and presenter. He is also the province's youth representative on the learning Alberta advanced education learning subcommittee, that guides government direction for postsecondary education. In addition, Zaheed has held other volunteer positions with the Ismaili Muslim community, Boy Scouts, Camp Discovery, Child & Youth Friendly Calgary, Calgary Inter-faith Food Bank, and many other organizations at his school within Calgary and in southern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it makes me so proud to see such incredible dedication in one individual. When you take a look at his fellow nominees, there is no doubt that Alberta's future is bright.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank Zaheed for his volunteer efforts, and I am sure we will continue to hear great things about his work in the community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Volunteer Calgary Leadership Awards

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to honour the hardworking and dedicated volunteers honoured at last night's Volunteer Calgary's 10th annual leadership awards. Awards were handed out in seven categories, demonstrating the diversity of ways that volunteer Calgarians make an important difference in our community.

Lynne McShane and Connie Cook from the Glenbow Museum were recognized for leadership in volunteer management.

The Mustard Seed storefront 101 was named leader in the community for its successful and innovative volunteer program that advances the mission and goals of the nonprofit organization.

The outstanding efforts of youth who are making a difference in our community were also saluted. Youth award winners were Courtney Leach, Keirstyn Secord, and Zaheed Damani.

Excellence in workplace volunteerism was also recognized by Volunteer Calgary. Southport Dental Care received the gold medal, GWL Realty Advisors received the silver medal, and CIBC Wood Gundy won a bronze award.

For the first time this year there was a new award recognizing pets for the many and varied activities they are involved in that make our community a better place. Charlie, a five-year-old yellow lab/golden retriever assistance dog, was singled out for an award.

Volunteer Calgary's VIP award recognizes the outstanding contributions of individual volunteers. Hattie Boothman from Meals on Wheels received this year's award.

Harold Merrick received this year's heart of Calgary award, which recognizes individuals who have strong enthusiasm and take responsibility for creating a healthy and caring community through civic participation.

Congratulations to all these award winners and all the nominees for making a difference in our community.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: I'd like to congratulate three members here who just participated in Members' Statements. Might I congratulate the Member for Edmonton-McClung, the Member for Calgary-East, the Member for Calgary-Foothills for knowing the Standing Orders of the House and for abiding by the Standing Orders of the House. But to the hon. Members for Calgary-Varsity, Lac La Biche-St. Paul, and Edmonton-Whitemud, perhaps a review of the Standing Orders might be appropriate. In particular, the chair would like to draw their attention to Standing Order 7(4).

Speaker's Ruling Standing Orders

The Speaker: Now, I am going to make one other comment here today. I have ruled out points of order, and I've ruled out points of privilege with respect to members' statements. Every once in a while something is said in members' statements which, however, does cause some movement by the chair. Today the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in his member's statement alluded to the Standing Orders of this House and said that they were government Standing Orders of this House.

The chair is a nonpartisan member of this Assembly, and the chair has during the nine years that he has been the chair insisted that all Standing Orders be done by unanimous consent of all members of the House. The Standing Orders are not owned by one section of this House; they are owned by all members of this House. The Standing Orders belong to this Legislative Assembly, not to a particular caucus. That utilization of the truth is inappropriate, and it's wrong because in addition to the orders being the Standing Orders of the House, all House leaders of all parties signed off on them and advised me in no uncertain terms that all of their members supported them. For a member to then stand up and criticize them, the member is only criticizing himself, so one should look in the mirror periodically.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the hon. Premier promised to table with the House copies of an anticipated letter he alluded to that would come his way from the office of the Ethics Commissioner which would clarify postemployment restrictions as they apply to members of Executive Council under a particular act. On his behalf I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the office of the Ethics Commissioner, dated April 26, 2006, in that regard. I'll just quickly add that the Premier will also be meeting with the Ethics Commissioner to seek yet further clarification as may be necessary on May 3.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition that I received from Barbara Brown, dated April 10, 2006, with approximately 800 signatures from Albertans from the Peace Country who are concerned not only about the loss of doctors in the Peace Country but also that doctors and nurses are being over-worked. They are urgently requesting attention to this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table 10 letters from family, staff, and residents who are either involved in or dependent upon the continuing care system in this province, expressing their deep concerns about the state of that system. These letters are signed by Fred and Marie Nash, Roger Johnson, L. Howard, Linda Wood Edwards, Bob Peel, C. Isabel Pangrass, Betty and Joe Sparling, Doreen Rennie, Sheila New, and Evelyn Patterson. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table these 10 letters from family, staff, and residents who are dependent on the continuing care system and expressing their deep concerns about how the system is operating. They are Shabantla Devi, Mary Roy,* Marie Bell Tonganis, Geena Mohanan,* Susan Aup,* Leena Prasad, Seema Kumar, Mom Melo, Jocelyn Gerald, and Jane Moorenya.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Ms Sheila Haddad, who is disappointed with the Prime Minister's decision barring the media from ramp ceremonies and not lowering the Canadian flag to honour fallen troops. She, however, commends Alberta on lowering the Canadian flag on the "day of increment."

My second tabling today is 10 letters from families, staff, and residents who are all involved in the long-term care system expressing deep concerns with the way the system is run and the quality of care offered. The names on these letters are Milo Kasala,* Raymond W. Bradley, Grace Johnston, G.M. Staines, Donna Slywka, Debbie Woloshyniuk, Shelley Mathiason,* Arla Stevenson, Esther Eiler, and Donna and Bill Buchanan.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Community Development

The Chair: I'd recognize the hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present the estimates for Community Development for the year 2006-2007. Before I begin, I would like to acknowledge the efforts of various individuals who make my ministry the success it is. Seated in the members' gallery are Neris Havelock, my executive assistant; Sue Bohaichuk, assistant deputy minister for strategic corporate services; Pam Arnston, executive director of financial services; and Kathryn Weigers, director of communications. I'd ask them to please stand. Please join me in giving them a traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Chairman, my ministry also relies on the commitment of other individuals who are unable to be here today: the Wild Rose Foundation chair, Krishan Joshee; the Alberta Foundation for the Arts chair, Audrey Luft; the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission chief commissioner, Charlach Mackintosh; the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation chair, Orest Korbutt; the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation chair, Irene Nicholson; the Government House Foundation chair, Linda Mackenzie; the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund Advisory Committee chair, the Member for Stony Plain; Fay Orr, my deputy minister, and her executive team; and the entire staff of Community Development.

Mr. Chairman, our operating budget this year is $242 million. That is just 85 cents out of every $100 this government will spend on programs this year, yet this small investment has a big impact on those areas that add to and, in some cases, define our quality of life as Albertans. About one-quarter of my budget goes directly to Alberta's communities as grants to libraries, the arts, sport and recreation, volunteer organizations, community museums, and human rights education.

Our foundations and agencies contribute to 260 community-based museums, more than 500 arts groups and about the same number of individual artists, 104 provincial sport and recreation organizations that have a total of 1.2 million members. Tens of thousands of volunteers donate 449 million hours a year to their communities, plus 314 public library service points loan over 30 million items a year to Albertans.

In addition, my ministry directly operates more than 500 parks and protected areas, operates 17 provincial museum historic sites plus the two Jubilee auditoria and the Provincial Archives, sponsors sports, recreation, and competitive games like the Alberta Games and Team Alberta at the Canada Games, provides programs that support and develop volunteerism, and ensures fairness by supporting the Alberta Human Rights Commission and sponsoring the Francophone Secretariat. All this work adds up to a quality of life that builds Alberta pride, which makes Alberta a better place to live, work, and visit, and that has a big impact on our economy.

The impact is significantly higher than our $240 million investment. My budget helps leverage an annual economic impact of $3.4 billion a year in cultural activities, $2.2 billion in sport and recreation, and $1.3 billion in parks tourism. We cannot take sole credit for this impact, but we are important contributors.

Every grant dollar from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts leverages $12 in community spending. Every dollar in grants from the Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation leverages $5 in the community. Communities that host the Alberta Games average a $3 million impact. The impact of international sporting events is measured in tens of millions. The World Masters Games last year had an impact in Alberta of $30 million.

Volunteerism has a major economic and social impact: 19,000 not-for-profit and voluntary organizations in Alberta with 176,000 employees. Albertans volunteer 449 million hours of service a year, equivalent to 234,000 full-time jobs. Alberta-based nonprofit and voluntary organizations have total revenues of $10 billion. Beyond the money is the impact on our quality of life and reputation.

Provincial parks help keep people healthy and rural economies strong. Libraries support lifelong learning and in small communities are access points to government services. The arts promote innovative thinking, provide avenues for expression, and nurture mental and physical health. Museums and heritage management protect and educate about our history and identity.

Volunteers are more likely to make charitable donations and to participate in community organizations. Human rights protection and education foster equality, promote inclusion, and reduce discrimination. Physical activity reduces obesity, type 2 diabetes, and some cancers. For youth it also reduces the rates of drug and tobacco use while increasing academic achievement.

Our sports development programs and training facilities are respected across the country and the world. Almost 30 per cent of Canada's medal winners at the 2006 Olympic Winter Games in Turin were from Alberta and another 42 per cent trained here, giving Alberta a stake in 72 per cent of Canada's most recent Olympic medals.

Colleagues, the budget allocated to Community Development may be listed in the estimates as an expense, but we all know that it is an investment.

My budget for 2006-2007 shows a net decrease of $40.2 million from last year's third-quarter forecast, but the changes are not readily apparent, with some programs ending and new resources added. Several initiatives from last year do not continue in 2006-2007: $1.7 million for major sporting events in 2005, like the World Masters Games, was one-time funding. The $2.5 million NHL teams initiative is discontinued. The $20 million in new library grants was one-time funding that came out of 2005-2006 surplus and is not part of this year's estimates. The $13.5 million film development program is transferred to Alberta Economic Development.

Considering these reductions, my base budget actually reflects enhanced program funding: $7.1 million in lottery funding is added to the five lottery funded agencies. That is a 13.4 per cent increase over the previous year. This increase is allocated with an eye to balancing our priorities. Three million dollars is added to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts to support Alberta's creative side; $2.8 million is added to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation. The $1.3 million balance is distributed among foundations that support community historic resources, human rights education, and volunteerism.

One million dollars is added to parks to monitor drinking water quality to new and higher standards as well as to operate new interpretive centres in four parks. Built as centennial projects, at a cost of $17 million, the new interpretive centres will serve visitors to Writing-on-Stone, Lesser Slave Lake, and Dinosaur provincial parks and Cypress Hills interprovincial park. Parks also benefit from a small increase in fees, all of which is dedicated revenue to offset parks maintenance and services.

Six hundred thousand dollars in one-time funds go to showcase Alberta at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, DC. This is the first time in its 40-year history that the festival is featuring a Canadian province, and about 1 million American tourists, businesspeople, and policy-makers are expected to attend.

At $59 million our capital spending this year is similar to the funding provided to our lottery funded agencies. The single biggest beneficiaries are visitors to Alberta's parks. The 2004 parks survey shows only 38 per cent of visitors were very satisfied with parks facilities. This budget allocates $24 million to rebuild visitor facilities as part of a three-year, $60 million commitment. This investment protects facilities, with an estimated replacement value of $437 million.

The remaining $35 million continues our commitment to two centennial projects: $20 million will expand the tourism and educational potential of the Calgary Zoo, already recognized as one of the world's leading zoos; $15 million will help build a new home for the Art Gallery of Alberta as a provincial showcase of the best and most inspiring art.

Rural Alberta is also a major beneficiary in this budget. More than half of the province's public libraries serve communities of fewer than 1,200 people. Libraries in these communities can borrow from libraries across the province to meet almost any information need. For example, Acadia Valley in southeast Alberta has just 512 residents. One in three is a local library member. Those few hundred borrowed over 1,600 titles in just one year. Small-town libraries are also access points for a range of government services online.

Every Albertan lives within 100 kilometres of a provincial park or protected area, and Albertans use them, making 7.5 million visits a year to their provincial parks. An additional 1 million visitors come from out of province. Much of the $1.3 billion a year generated by parks tourism is spent in rural centres on gas, food, and lodging. This does not include secondary spending on the goods and services that support camping, fishing, and outdoor recreation.

Colleagues, I ask that you approve the estimates for Community Development for 2006-07. This budget features ongoing support for the ministry's core services, small but important and well-allocated increases in priority areas, and judicial investments in parks infrastructure and continuing centennial legacies. With your approval this budget will help sustain the quality of life Albertans enjoy and will start to strengthen priority areas as we head into Alberta's next century.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move my estimates. I'm ready to accept questions and will answer as many as possible here today. If I'm unable to answer the questions right away, I will respond in writing.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to begin by commending the minister on his open approach. I and my researcher had the pleasure of meeting with the minister this morning and were very warmly received. It is my belief that the minister, with his experience as party whip, will stand out and stand up for parks. As I indicated in my member's statement when I said that there was a chance to leave either a blot or a mark, I believe this minister is going to leave a mark, and for that I am grateful.

With regard to the parks and protected areas I want to also thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for allowing me to proceed, as I have a travelling engagement later this afternoon. I also want to thank the minister for indicating his willingness to provide written answers. That will go a long way in terms of dealing with the frustration I experienced yesterday at not having a full chance to discuss.

The forecast spending for parks is $148 million in 2006-2007, which is down from $165 million in 2005-06; $1 million to operate four previously announced park interpretive centres in Lesser Slave, Writing-on-Stone, Cypress Hills, and Dinosaur parks, and to monitor water quality. I'm glad that investment is being made. However, $24 million this year to rebuild parks infrastructure is a bit of a concern because that's less than half. It's down from $50 million that was dedicated to it in 2005-06. Over the next three years $60 million is committed for infrastructure. I'm hoping that that figure will be adequate. From personal experience, I've seen how rundown a number of our parks are. The core business of the parks and protected areas division is to preserve, protect, present, and promote the appreciation for Alberta's historical resources, add culture, and provide opportunities for heritage tourism too.

Questions I have with regard to infrastructure, which I'm pleased to receive in writing. Considering that the economic impact of the 8 million visits is $1.3 billion a year, that means every $1 investment in the park system pays back about $9 to the provincial economy.

That being the case, why don't we reinvest more into park infrastructure? We'll get a better return.

While the government press release boasts spending on capital projects, it masks the fact that the total capital spending will be lower in '06-07 than the previous year. Equipment and inventory purchases were down by 21 per cent. This includes all capital purchases under $5 million and might include such things as vehicles, computers, or park equipment and mobile accommodation. The questions would be: are any of the equipment/inventory purchases going to improve park facilities in smaller parks, such as replacing picnic tables, fire rings, et cetera? This is on page 100, line 5.0.3, of the estimates. Hopefully, some of that money is also going to go to repair the fences around the various sites to keep the intrusion of free-range cattle out.

Capital investment budgets. Projects greater than $5 million are down to $21 million in the '06-07 compared to $46 million in '05-06. That's on page 101, line 5.0.3, of the estimates. This is still far better than the '04-05 actual, where the total investment was $7 million. If we can keep heading up in terms of parks and protected areas infrastructure spending, I will support the minister for every appeal he makes for additional funding, provided it's within this budgeting process. I would like to know what parks have requested this money. I kind of think most have, if not all. Where will the money be spent? Is there a capital plan which includes priorities for infrastructure renewal in Alberta parks? I commented about the fact that there were only 45 management plans, but we had over 512 parks and protected areas. I'm looking forward to seeing those plans.

In the area of conservation are there any habitat restoration projects taking place in the Alberta parks? What line item is this addressed in? In my own personal experience at Cataract Creek, Bell Pole was allowed to use the access roads into the park, took out a beautiful aspen parkland campsite to get at its logging. I'm hoping that that has been restored and this might be part of the project.

The most underrepresented natural area in Alberta is the grasslands. If you looked at a map showing the underrepresented area and the private land in Alberta, they virtually overlap. Combine this with an income crisis in the farming industry, and it looks like there may be an opportunity to solve two problems at once by providing economic incentives to protect grasslands on private land. We already have a number of private and public trust organizations being founded to help preserve our land loss. Has the minister considered working with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to develop policy that works for the conservation of the grasslands and considers the need for farmers to address their income crisis? This might be a buy-back program to encourage farmers to convert marginal areas back to natural grasslands or heritage rangelands, possibly with some organic or sustainable grazing taking place on the range. This could be a win-win for farmers and conservation groups.

With regard to staffing I've frequently complained about the 50 per cent reduction in conservation officers and the effect that that has on both visitor information and parks and protected areas protection. Full-time employment is increasing by two full-time equivalents. Will these staff be in the park areas or somewhere else in the department? This comes from page 107 of the estimates.

Park conservation officers. Throughout the entire province there are 70 permanent conservation officers. An additional 88 will be added in May for the summer season. This is the same number of permanent officers as last year, and the seasonal number is slightly higher. Having spoken to a number of seasonal conservation officers who would like to have a permanent career in conservation, I hope that there will be an opportunity for these individuals, having demonstrated their abilities season after season, to receive full-time employment. This works out to one staff for every three parks or one staff for every 130 square kilometres. My researcher was hoping that the minister might provide a few staff with binoculars so that they could cover the wide range. Has the minister considered the impact to the rural communities of relying on seasonal employees that are near Alberta's parks; for example, experiment with employees living in the gateway communities near the parks rather than commuting from Edmonton just for the summer season?

Scientists and planners. The previous Community Development minister was unaware that there were caribou living in Alberta's parks, much less doing anything about ensuring that their habitat was properly stewarded. Is there sufficient staff such as biologists to work with SRD to manage endangered species such as the caribou, the swift fox, or the grizzly bear within our parks and protected areas? Are there sufficient planners and project officers in permanent and year-round positions to participate in regional planning exercises and park planning exercises that are vital to the management of park ecosystems?

Other priorities. The minister knows that this is a favourite of mine. We talked about it this morning. Will the minister work to preserve the Castle wilderness? Will the minister work to improve access to information by tabling planning documents, provide money to support the planning processes, complete a thorough economic benefit study of the contribution of Alberta's park system to the economy and indirectly – well, I guess it is directly – the effects it has on our health system? Because healthy people don't end up within the system. If he says that they already have, tell him to send us and the NGOs a copy. The footnote is there, and if you have it, I would love to receive it. Then we could have it in the library because, unfortunately, the latest version we have is 1996. So I would be appreciative of receiving that document and having it tabled and available in the library.

Performance measures. The only performance measure for the parks and protected areas department is camper satisfaction. I talked about visitor dissatisfaction in my questions yesterday. I had a good discussion with the minister today with regard to improving the electronic booking of parks, and I am confident that he will work towards that improvement. Why doesn't the ministry develop a full set of indicators for the ecological health of Alberta parks? Why not evaluate whether people are appreciating nature and understanding the purpose of parks rather than just being satisfied? We need to up the ante. People are very satisfied after visiting West Edmonton Mall or Disneyland, and it doesn't mean that the parks are serving their public purpose. I believe their purpose should be to appreciate and enjoy nature along with conserving our flora and fauna, our ecological integrity. We should focus on parks as places to enjoy the outdoors and conserve nature. This performance measure at this point does not assess that.

Also, one of the sad circumstances is that the conservation officers rarely have the time to interact with the campers, to talk to them about the local flora and fauna. In the majority of our parks we don't have the interpretive guided tours anymore. I know that my wife and I tried to provide information, which was provided to us by the government in terms of maps, posters, and so on, to educate the visitors to our campground in the southern Kananaskis, the provincial campground of Cataract Creek.

Other issues of concern. The Maqua Lake forest recreation area. We've received reports that this area is closed to the public and has been for some time, several years, it appears. I would appreciate knowing why the park is still closed. Are there plans to reopen it?

Given the demand for parks, why aren't we providing access and/or resources to keep these areas open?

Financial questions. What parks does the minister plan on making the $24 million investment in in the form of infrastructure? The reference pages are 100 and 101 in estimates, line 5.0.3, which I've previously referenced. How do you plan on assessing the need for infrastructure development, and how will the minister prioritize projects to ensure that they are based on the greatest need and not some other criteria? As I mentioned this morning when we discussed with the minister, while I'm extremely pleased that the Canmore Nordic Centre has been polished up – it's a jewel – there are a number of wilderness parks that have not had that same kind of shining. Why is total spending in the parks and protected areas division down by $17 million? This is a reference to page 115 of the government business plan, expense by core business.

The Auditor General had no recommendations in the parks and protected areas division.

I wouldn't be surprised, Mr. Minister, if this comes to you as a surprise because you've just taken over your department, but it came as a tremendous surprise to both myself and my researcher. Wal-Mart is now the official marketing sponsor for Alberta's parks information site. This includes a link to Wal-Mart's corporate site. I know that Wal-Mart allows campers to park in their lots, but are we not experiencing internal competition? What is the ministry receiving in exchange for Wal-Mart being the corporate sponsor? Will the minister make all documentation related to the agreement with Wal-Mart as the marketing sponsor public? This would include the RFP for sponsors, all other applicants, a description of what criteria were used to assess and select the sponsors, a description of what support Wal-Mart provides to the Ministry of Community Development. Now, if that Wal-Mart sponsorship will put a conservation officer at the entrance to every park, welcoming them to the park and talking about the special deals in creek aisle 4, then I think it would be a great sponsorship.

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Chairman, as was indicated by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, we had agreed that I would be responding to him in written form as he had other commitments. So if we can move on to the next speaker, please.

The Chair: Okay. I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Edmonton-Strathcona, I'll recognize you next.

Dr. Pannu: Sure. That's fine.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise and participate in the budget debate on the estimates for Community Development. First of all, I want to thank the hon. minister and his whole staff for preparing and presenting a good overview of the budget. Also, thanks for the efforts and their hard work. It's not easy to answer all the questions in 20 minutes' time or maybe a little less or more. If you can't answer all the questions, please provide them later on in writing, as you already said, but I would like to see them in full detail.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to start from the estimate on page 98, line 2.0.2. The estimate for arts is $2,268,000, a small decrease from the 2005-06 forecast. Given that your ministry overspent in 2005-06 by $700,000, why haven't you increased the funding for the arts this year so that you don't overspend? Why hasn't the government made arts funding a real priority yet? How will this money be utilized this year? Has the new minister met with the arts community yet to hear their concerns regarding funding? Why did the former Minister of Community Development pretend that he tried to get $40 million for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts? I read it in the newspaper, but now the ministry has changed, and I have to ask the new minister to work on this again because there are lots of stakeholders in the arts sector requesting more money.

I think $40 million is very reasonable because they are creating I think 3,500 jobs in the arts sector. The Alberta arts sector spent on operations and production in 2004 at least $120 million. The arts sector adds to the Alberta GDP each year. So the money we are receiving from this sector is not even close to what we are returning to them.

Next I move to the estimates on page 98, line 2.0.4. The estimate for sport and recreation is $1,439,000, virtually no change from the 2005-06 forecast. Why has the government again chosen to ignore the sport and recreation community in Alberta? The previous minister assured Albertans that sport and recreation funding was a priority for this government. If this is the case, why have you chosen not to increase funding for sport and recreation? How does the new minister plan to promote a healthier, more active population if funding for sport and recreation remains stagnant? What plans does the new minister have for implementing the Alberta sport plan? Will additional funding for the Alberta sport plan come from this line item? What does the minister have to say about the government's disappointing lack of funding to Alberta's sport and recreation community? The former Minister of Community Development responded to my debate in the last budget that we will have a new sport policy in this session as well as a cultural policy, but I haven't seen anything so far.

I move to the estimates on page 98, line 2.0.6. The estimate for the Francophone Secretariat is $932,000, a 13 per cent increase from the 2005-06 budget. Funding for the Francophone Secretariat has increased substantially over the past few years. Can the minister tell us how the additional funding will be used, and what does the minister hope to accomplish by raising the funding by more than a hundred thousand dollars?

Estimates, page 98, line 2.0.11. The estimate for assistance to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is approximately $22,080,000, an increase of 16 per cent from the 2005-06 budget. Although this increase is most welcome, it is once again far below what the arts sector requires in this province. Is the minister prepared to work with the arts sector to ensure that their concerns are addressed? Is the minister willing to commit today to making arts funding a real priority for this government in the years to come?

Arts groups have been asking for a substantial increase in funding to support them for years. It has been estimated that the arts contribute approximately $150 million annually to the economy of this province, yet this government continues to rank among the poorest supporters of the arts in Canada. The point here is – and it is agreed upon by so many stakeholders – why does the Alberta provincial government consistently fail to support the arts when municipal and federal governments recognize the importance of the arts?

Can the minister explain to these artists why they are always underfunded? The previous minister claimed that he did not have caucus support for a substantial increase to arts funding. What is the new minister going to do to change this? It was in the newspaper that the former minister worked hard and tried to convince the caucus for $40 million, but the revenue department maybe didn't agree with the hon. minister. Now it's up to the new minister to recognize and do something for the arts sector, where so many people are involved, and they've been struggling for a long, long time. I hear in this Chamber most of the departments sometimes say that they are number one, number two, whatever, in their own department. As far as I know, I was reading one of the articles somewhere that we are behind in arts funding. We are behind the federal funding as well. Numberwise we are number 10 in Canada. Incomewise it's huge revenue coming from this sector. We should focus a little bit more on the arts sector.

Now I move to page 98, line 2.0.13. The estimate for assistance to the Wild Rose Foundation is $8.116 million, a 4 per cent increase from the year 2005-06 budget. The funding for this line item saw a minor decrease between 2004-05 and 2005-06. Can the minister tell us why he has increased assistance to the Wild Rose Foundation this year? Will any of this additional money go towards implementing the Auditor General's recommendation in his annual report? Will any of this money be used to further investigate the Applewood grants? Has the minister determined yet who was responsible for providing false or misleading information on the Applewood grant application? When can Albertans expect to see the Applewood money returned to the government, where it belongs? What is the minister doing to ensure that another Applewood does not happen?

The next is on page 111. Under core business 2, goal 3, it states that one of the goals of the government is to provide "financial and consultative support through . . . the Alberta Foundation for the Arts." Why, then, does the Official Opposition continue to hear from the arts sector that this government does not support them? Why does this government continue year after year to disappoint the Alberta arts sector? When will this government stop making false promises and truly support the arts community in this province?

Next I move to strategy 3.4. This is again on page 111, under core business 2, goal 3. The government plans to "introduce an inclusive cultural policy to promote Alberta's cultural, historical and natural heritage." Again, this looks like a hollow strategy. We have been hearing for some time that the government wants to introduce a cultural policy, but there is no action. How can this government develop an inclusive cultural policy when it fails to show sufficient support for the arts and cultural sectors in this province? What can the minister tell us about this government's progress in developing this policy? We were expecting a cultural and sports policy in this session. This is what I was promised by the former Minister of Community Development, and I haven't seen anything so far yet. How long before we see some signs that this policy is in the works? What does the minister expect this policy to look like? Can the minister elaborate on the strategy and tell us specifically how he plans on making this a reality?

In the business plan, page 111, core business 2, goal 3, strategy 3.5, the government is co-ordinating the province's participation "in the 2006 Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, D.C., to increase awareness and appreciation of Alberta culture." I'm happy that our artists are going to Washington. We are not against that, but this seems quite hypocritical. Why is the government taking steps to promote Alberta's cultural and arts achievements in foreign countries when it does not even support them here at home? Why doesn't the minister show more of a commitment to the arts and cultural community in Alberta if he's so enthusiastic to promote it elsewhere? Given that the Alberta government consistently ranks among the worst supporters of arts and culture in Canada, what is the logic behind this initiative? What does the minister expect to gain from this initiative? Will this initiative result in greater government support for the arts and culture sector in this province?

In the business plan, page 113, core business 3, goal 4, performance measure 4(a), adult Albertans' perception of how well human rights are protected in Alberta: last actual, 2004-05, 87.6 per cent; the target for the next three years is 88 per cent. This seems like a pretty low target given the importance of human rights. Does the minister believe that setting a higher standard for visitor satisfaction at provincial parks than for the protection of human rights is appropriate? This government continually repeats how fantastic things are in this province, yet less than 90 per cent of Albertans believe that human rights are protected well in Alberta. Why does the minister aim for only 88 per cent on this performance measure? It would seem appropriate that this performance measure be among the most important in this ministry, yet you have set a relatively low target for the next three years. Even more alarming is that we are falling short on this performance measure. Does the minister agree that 87 per cent is far too low for this particular measure? Has the minister compared this rating to other jurisdictions in Canada to see how Alberta compares? Why doesn't the minister make this initiative a greater priority?

Now I come to the recommendations in the Auditor General's 2004-05 annual report, page 137. "We recommend that The Wild Rose Foundation review the results of our audit into the grants to Applewood Park Community Association and take appropriate action." What updates can the minister provide regarding the Applewood grants? When does the minister expect to have the contested money returned by Applewood? What has the minister done to date to address this recommendation by the Auditor General?

From the Auditor General's 2004-05 annual report, page 142:

We recommend that The Wild Rose Foundation improve its grant systems for the International Development Program by:

- obtaining third party evidence that matching funds exist before approving grants,
- enhancing the review of accountability reports, and
- establishing a way to obtain assurance that grant funds are used as intended.

What progress has Community Development made to date regarding this recommendation?

I again want to repeat that in this article I read in one of the books, it said that the amount of taxes collected from the arts sector in Alberta each year is $19.6 million. Their revenue from the Alberta lottery fund in 1992-93: $153,708. I just want to say that the revenue coming from the arts sector is maybe a little more than what we are helping the arts sector with, so we should focus a little bit more on this.

I mean, that 7 per cent increase this year was the second in the last 16 years. It is not enough. I commend the former Minister of Community Development. He took the initiative, and he started increasing grants to community developments. I commend him for that. After him another minister tried, and I read in the paper that he worked really hard to get $40 million for the AFA. My humble request, once again, is to the new minister to focus and convince the caucus and give the arts sector a little bit more attention. Forty million dollars is reasonable because if you see the job creation, it's 3,500 jobs created in this sector. They deserve it.

I leave it to you. I don't want to say more than this. Maybe I'll comment a little bit later on. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I really understand what rapid-fire questioning is all about. I'll certainly give an attempt to address some of them.

One of the questions that the hon. member asked was: why aren't we spending more on the arts? Hon. member, we've worked with the Alberta Foundation for the Arts to provide an increase of nearly 16 per cent for this coming year. Alberta's arts community has grown at an incredible rate. Recognizing this, the government has allocated an additional $3 million in funding for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts in this year's budget. The new funding will be allocated to priorities outlined in the foundation's strategic plan and will support existing clients and services in the areas of arts creation and production, arts promotion, arts participation, and art collection and display.

Government support for the arts goes beyond the foundation. For example, an additional $600,000 will be dedicated to the Alberta program at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival, which will feature contemporary Alberta, including artistic expression, ethnic diversity, industry and technological innovation. Also, $15 million, as I indicated in my opening remarks, will be provided to assist in the creation of the new Art Gallery of Alberta. There are other recent examples that have just taken place: the renovated Jubilee auditoria at a cost of $72 million. We contributed $500,000 to Alberta Scene in Ottawa and organized Alberta Tracks at a series of 10 free concerts in 10 Alberta communities, featuring 30 Alberta musical acts.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts uses a formula to determine the amount of funds allocated for all operating grants to organizations. The foundation has been granting funds to eligible applicants on a fixed budget for approximately 15 years. Based on statistics for the last four fiscal years, applicants have experienced funding that is between 43 per cent and 69 per cent of what they should receive to ensure that they are sustainable. Research has been conducted and presented regarding foundation programs that are subject to the most severe proration. All are prorated. Community support organizations receive the lowest rate, about 30 per cent. The number of applicants to this program has increased by approximately 25 per cent every year for the past three years. So, yes, there are certainly some challenges there and certainly a challenge for this new minister as he starts to work on his upcoming budget that will be forthcoming in a year's time.

You asked questions in regard to the funding of the sport plan. As I indicated in my opening remarks, the Alberta sport plan will benefit from the contribution of $2.8 million that was put into the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation. The decisions on how these funds will be distributed will be made in the near future by the board, and I can certainly say that a portion of these funds that were allocated there will be used as it was emphasized in the sport plan. While it will not address all the challenges faced by the sport and recreation network in Alberta, it is a promising step in the right direction. I will continue to work towards finding solutions to address other areas of the sport plan.

You asked questions in regard to the increase to the Francophone Secretariat. There was a 13.1 per cent increase in the budget towards the Francophone Secretariat. Seventy thousand dollars of that amount is an increase in projected funding from the government of Canada for francophone-related community projects, and $38,000 of that amount is an increase for government-wide union-negotiated salary settlements and management compensation adjustments. Basically, the adjustments are there for extra funding arrangements that we make on a sharing basis as we meet with various community groups, francophone groups across the province, where they come in as equal partners, and we get matching dollars from the federal government. So it's an enhancement of services in that way.

You spoke in regard to the targets on human rights. In 2004-2005 nearly 88 per cent of adult Albertans felt that human rights were well protected in Alberta. In setting our targets, hon. member, we use a three-year average with a 1 per cent stretch allowance factor. We feel that by doing that, we're being realistic and that it is a target that is attainable.

You made remarks in regard to the Auditor General's recommendations regarding the international development program. Following the recommendations that came forward from the Auditor General, an entirely new set of guidelines and accountability requirements has been developed for the program incorporating all of the Auditor General's recommendations. The new guidelines and accountability requirements were developed by department staff and reviewed by an independent agency. The program is reinstated, and funding proposals are now being accepted.

If I may, after he conducted the audit, the Auditor General's recommendations were basically threefold. One is that the foundation should obtain "third party evidence that matching funds exist before approving grants;" two, that the foundation should enhance "the review of accountability reports;" and three, the foundation should establish "a way to obtain assurance that grant funds are used as intended."

Basically, the current status is that the Wild Rose Foundation has incorporated all three of the Auditor General's recommendations into their grants processes as follows. At the application stage organizations that do not produce audited financial statements will now have to obtain third-party evidence that matching funds exist before grants are approved. Two and three: at the accountability stage the foundation has enhanced their review of accountability reports and strengthened their process to be assured that grant funds are used as intended, and initial discussions with the Canadian International Development Agency took place regarding possible on-site verifications. Because the agency does not perform their own project evaluations, it was suggested that the foundation perform their own project reviews or contract the same firm as the agency to complete these project on-site reviews on their behalf. The foundation is currently researching this issue, which will include taking the appropriate budgetary measures in anticipation of these annual on-site verifications.

The new guidelines originated from the review conducted by the foundation with representation from the Canadian International Development Agency and International and Intergovernmental Relations. The foundation then contracted Agriteam Canada, an independent agency, to undertake the final review of the documentation to examine the overall program parameters. On February 2, 2006, the Wild Rose Foundation publicly announced its new guidelines and accountability requirements. Funding proposals are now being accepted.

In the case of what's happening with the Applewood situation, all that I can advise the member is that the file has been forwarded to the Crown's debt collections to recover the funds, and the process is now under way.

Why are we doing the Smithsonian? It's basically to increase tourism and investment opportunities. It's going to provide American decision-makers and policy-makers with an understanding of issues that are important to us such as energy and agriculture, and it will certainly help Albertans make valuable contacts in one of the most powerful cities in the world. Mr. Chairman, this is an incredible opportunity to promote our province to the largest trading partner and enhance our trade relationship, which is already worth $60 billion. There will also be a variety of long-term benefits from Alberta's participation, including improved relations with the decision-makers in legacy projects, including a music CD and educational materials.

That's all that I have at this moment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the 2006-2007 estimates for the Department of Community Development. Let me at the very outset congratulate the new minister for taking on this responsibility. It's indeed an important ministry, in my view. How to come to the conclusion that it's an important ministry is not by looking at the total number of dollars that it spends but the significance of every dollar that it spends in the area of cultural development of communities, parks and recreational areas, arts, human rights. All of these are very, very important areas of activity in which government is involved. It is indeed, in my judgment, a very important portfolio, and I think the minister is up to the task.

I was very pleased to receive an invitation last week from the minister to meet with him. I and my colleague for Edmonton-Calder took the opportunity this morning to have a brief meeting with the minister. I have known the minister for many years in various other contexts. We've been on various committees together, worked together to address matters which are the responsibility of the whole House sometimes. I'm very pleased and looking forward to the opportunity of working with the minister. I know that he has some challenges, and I want to assure him that we'll extend our full support on matters on which we all agree that we need to work together.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I want to just suggest that I'd focus perhaps on the arts and libraries, that area in particular.

Maybe I can start with some simple and specific questions which go back to the Auditor General's report and recommendations with respect to the work that the AG looked at that this department has done in previous years. I have with me some pages from the AG's report for 2004-2005. I want to just read the general sort of recommendations that the AG makes on page 147. It says that the Ministry of Community Development's Parks and Protected Areas Division contracts out the management of approximately half of the provincial parks and recreation areas to private operators through facility operating agreements . . . we recommend that the Ministry evaluate the cost-effectiveness of the service delivery alternatives for operating parks and protected areas.

That's a very specific recommendation. These are the dollars that we spend and the effectiveness of that expenditure.

Looking at the estimates volume on page 99, I think the minister drew to the attention, I guess, in his previous remarks that the budget for the parks operations – so this is line 5.0.3 – has increased from the forecast for 2005-2006 of 34,871 million to $37,996 million. It means about a 7 to 8 per cent increase over the year. Now, there is an increase here which on the surface would seem that the step is being taken in the right direction, but in light of the AG's recommendation about evaluating the cost effectiveness of alternatives for parks and protected areas division contracts, I would like to ask the minister two questions. First, given that about half the parks in the province are indeed contracted out, how much of this close to $38 million is allocated, in fact, to paying for the contracts to provide these services through private contractors? What percentage are they in terms of dollars? You know, of the $38 million is it $10 million? Is it $20 million. How much exactly? What are those amounts?

Secondly, what steps have been taken specifically to follow up on the AG's recommendation to "evaluate the cost-effectiveness of the service delivery alternatives for operating parks and protected areas"? What seems to be hinted at here, as I read this recommendation, is that there's maybe an alternative way of delivering those services so that we can use the dollars more efficiently and effectively and use them more smartly so that every dollar that we spend takes us farther along the line of providing services and improving their quality than may be the case with contracting out. That's one question.

The second one is a follow-up on the next page, page 148. It has to do with monitoring performance of private contracts.

Parks and Protective Areas staff has been working with the area offices to ensure they obtain adequate documentation to properly monitor operators' performance.

These are the AG's report's words.

The Ministry has developed checklists indicating what documentation is to be obtained from parks operators and we are satisfied that the information is sufficient to monitor performance.

However, we examined the files of 17 park sites and found that some files did not include all the required information, such as visitor statistics, monthly revenue and annual expense reports, and inspection reports. In addition, there was limited evidence of review and analysis of the documentation that was obtained.

The report goes on.

To finish implementing this recommendation, the Ministry needs to have a system to ensure staff consistently complies with the guidelines for collecting and analyzing information from operators.

Obviously the AG's report comes to the conclusion that not in every case the staff did its work. So the system needs to be in place to ensure that this happens. My question to the minister is: will he please look into this question and let me know if there indeed is a new system that has been put in place to comply with this particular recommendation of the Auditor General as indicated in the report of 2004-2005? So these are two questions specific to the Auditor General's report.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity asked a question specific to Wal-Mart's sponsorship of parks programs, and I would request that the minister send the information that's been requested by the Member for Calgary-Varsity my way as well. I would very much be interested in the set of questions related to Wal-Mart's involvement with the parks and recreation programs. So any documents, any information that's available I would welcome having.

A few other specifics here. I note in the business plan on page 115, under Ministry Statement of Operations, the revenues. There is a considerable increase projected here under premiums, fees, and licences. When the minister and myself and my colleague from Edmonton-Calder were meeting this morning, we all agreed that the importance of parks areas, parks and recreation for Albertans, the access to these facilities, facilities in good shape and form, is very, very essential. Most Albertans like to be able to go out on the weekend with families, with children and be able to use these parks. We want to of course not only make these parks available but ensure that they are accessible and affordable to Albertans.

There is a considerable increase there in the revenues drawn from what I would call user fees or licences and fees. I notice that the 2006-07 estimates are about $9.385 million compared to the 2005-06 forecast of $8.4 million, so close to $1 million extra is estimated to be realized over the next year.

Now, looking at the fiscal plan tables on page 62, I notice that there are hefty increases for provincial camping fees. This is page 62 of the fiscal plan tables. There I notice that provincial camping fees will go up. Backcountry and basic camping fees for the current year, the year just past, have been at anywhere between $3 and $17. They'll be jacked up in the new budget to between a range of $5 and $20. The considerable increase from $3 to $5 at the lowest end is close to about a 60 to 70 per cent increase in the fees, and at the upper end from $17 to $20 is another, I would think, about a 20 per cent increase.

Similarly, in camping services it was up to $3 in the year just past, and it will go up to $5, again exactly a 40 per cent increase anticipated in the fees there. Similarly, for group camping and day use the fees have been, during the year just past, in the range of $25 to $130 depending upon the size of the group, the amount of space used, I suppose, or whatever. These fees are going to go up at the lower range from $25 to $35, close to a 60 per cent increase or more, and at the upper end from $130 to $250 minimum, which is a huge increase, close to doubling, close to a 90 or 100 per cent increase in the fees there again.

Similarly for reservations, the fees charged for that, from $6 up to $6 plus first night: that was the rate the year just past. It will go up to $8 plus first night. Again the increase is in the neighbourhood of 35 to 36 per cent.

So huge increases, in my view, that are built into the revenue projections. I want to ask the minister: how is that to be justified if our goal is, in fact, to encourage Albertans to engage more actively in recreation? It's good for health. It's good for family relations and growth and development. Why is it that we are increasing these fees at such punishing rates when we know that such increases are likely to discourage people, not encourage them to make use of these wonderful places we call our parks and recreation areas? So those are some specific questions that I have.

Now, going back to some of the other issues of arts funding, there has been interesting commentary in the wake of the presentation of the budget, Mr. Chairman, on the arts side of the funding for this department in the budget, and I want to perhaps draw attention to this, put on record some of this. I have a sort of statement here from the media, and I think it's worth the minister's notice. Arts leaders are disappointed by a smaller than expected increase in provincial arts funding, and they criticize the provincial government for its shortsightedness with respect to the budget.

The Alberta Foundation for the Arts' budget for 2006-07 is $22.6 million, and the minister I think appropriately drew attention to the fact that this is an increase over the $19 million last year, but certainly it's far less than what it's reported the former Minister of Community Development in fact asked for, about $40 million. I think that the former minister's request had the strong support of the arts community across this province. No wonder that the arts community is extremely disappointed with the very small increase that the budget in fact allowed in the area of the arts foundation and the arts in general. It's only the second funding increase, I must note, for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts in 16 years. That is worth noting.

Tom McCabe, the Theatre Calgary president, says as a reaction to what he heard, "It's just shortsighted and it shows a lack of vision in this government." Mr. McCabe is one of those who organized a petition which was received I think by the former Minister of Community Development. From what the reports says, there was support for the former minister's request across the cabinet table, but the proposal got shot down at the Treasury Board. I'm quite surprised by this, and the community representatives in the field of arts activity certainly are not pleased with this.

The increase of $3 million. Yes, it's an increase, but it is far short of what is needed and "necessary to sustain and increase the arts and culture that this province enjoys," Mr. McCabe said. It is true that the government is spending over $600,000 to present the cultural wealth and the arts production of this province in Washington, DC, this year as part of the centennial, I suppose, but it's a one-time kind of thing. Although that money is a welcome use of public money to promote interest in our cultural life here through what will be done in Washington, certainly it's not good enough to provide encouragement and support for the sustained growth in this most valued activity in our communities, from small towns and villages to big cities. There is, I think, a reason for the minister to pay some attention to it, and I urge him to look into this matter and try again this year. I wish him luck on that one.

The entire budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is a third of what the horse-racing industry's is. You can make some comparisons because that's where the government's priorities come in. [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired] Is that it? I'll come back.

Thank you.

4:10

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll attempt to answer some of those questions that came forward.

The hon. member had made reference in regard to the Auditor General's audit report pertaining to the contracting out of park facilities. I can inform the member that the audit recommendations have been fully implemented, a cost-benefit model has been adopted, and the office of the Auditor General will indicate full completion in their report, which will be released in September.

In regard to the monitoring of contractor performance for the parks a new process has been developed for monitoring performance. Satisfactory progress has been recognized by the office of the Auditor General, indicating that it's very positive and encouraging of our results to date. The office of the Auditor General will conduct another audit this fall to determine if their recommendation has been completely implemented.

We spoke briefly in regard to the fee increases in the parks. The new fee schedule provides the flexibility and the incentive to operators to respond to local market conditions, including the ability to offer off-season, mid-week, and other discounts. Camping fees and services have not increased since 1998. Meanwhile, the costs of providing these services have increased significantly over the same period. Contracted operators have requested a fee increase to cover their increasing costs and the increase to the minimum wage that has been implemented.

Under the new fee structure Alberta's provincial campgrounds remain competitively priced relative to neighbouring jurisdictions such as the national parks. Users of Alberta's provincial parks also do not pay any park entry or day-use fees, unlike some of our neighbouring jurisdictions. The changes also encourage contracted operators to reinvest in facility maintenance and development. It will be the operators' responsibility in their best interest to determine fair and competitive camping fees within the limits that have been specified by the department.

We spoke about the special event permit fees. It's to reflect business opportunities associated with the use of the parkland. Criteria are being developed, based on a number of activities and a number of park locations, to reflect the larger fee. Special events organized by the department or by the many friends-of-provincial-parks organizations, for example Parks Day, will continue to be on a no-charge basis. School groups also will continue to not be charged for special events on parkland.

Disposition fees are basically equivalent in most cases to fees being charged by Sustainable Resource Development for the use of general Crown land. A number of these disposition fees have not increased since 1983. Fee increases reflect the considerable increases of providing utilities, water and sewer services, garbage collection, and road maintenance within the parks. I can also point out that there will be no increase in grazing fees for 2006-2007.

The member spoke passionately in regard to the arts. As I had indicated in responding to the previous member, I think I answered quite a bit of them in detail. I won't go through it again. However, as I indicated to that member, it will certainly be a challenge that I'm willing to undertake as we go forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and join the debate on estimates for the Community Development department and to congratulate the new minister on his new posting. I realize that part of what we are doing here is calling upon the new minister to defend work done during his predecessor's watch, and that's not, I'm sure, always the easiest thing to do, to know the mind of the previous minister and know why the decisions were made in the way that they were and precisely, you know, what the thinking was that went into that. Nevertheless, that is the new minister's cross to bear.

So I rise this afternoon really with only one specific question about a line item in this budget, but I hope to engage the minister in a little bit of discussion that's perhaps a little bit more philosophical and forward looking because it's always interesting to be able to have the chance to discuss with a new minister what that minister's vision is for the department that he's taken over and that sort of thing. The specific question first of all because we'll get that one on the record, and then the minister can answer in the House today or answer in writing. It's his choice as far as I'm concerned.

It has to do with line 3.0.1. The estimate for human rights and citizenship is $4.405 million this year, a small increase of about 4 per cent from the 2005-2006 forecast. On 3.0.2 much the same thing: a small increase in the assistance to the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund from the '05-06 forecast of about $200,000, from $1.265 million up to $1.465 million. The same question, really, on both lines: can the minister explain why there wasn't a greater increase provided for these line items given the importance in general terms, obviously, of protecting human rights in this province, given the satisfaction rating, which we think the minister has set rather low at 88 per cent and which hasn't quite been achieved, even at that point, yet? Can the minister tell us if he plans on increasing the budget or the staff of the Human Rights Commission in the future? Can the minister explain how this mechanism can be made more effective in resolving disputes if more money is not allocated to this important initiative? That's my one question area. If the minister could answer those questions specifically, as I say, either orally or in writing, I'd be very satisfied with that.

Now if I can take the minister back to two areas, really: support for the arts and culture and support for sport and recreation, both of which I think are fairly significant parts of the mandate of the Department of Community Development, and I may spin off a question from there as well. There's been some discussion, some fairly specific questions asked by hon. members before me in those areas and some answers provided already by the minister. I don't know if I can remember the minister's words exactly, but I take him back to one of the answers that he was providing around the budget estimate for sport and recreation, where he indicated that, you know, things are getting a little bit better – these were not his exact words – and it's not what that segment, that sector of society would like, but it's a little better than last year. That sort of thing.

I think we could say the same thing about arts funding too. It's a little bit better than last year, but it's not what the sector wants. It's not what the sector needs. It doesn't address all the years where there haven't been increases at all or there haven't been sufficient increases, significant enough increases.

I got to thinking as the minister was answering: what would happen, what would the world look like in the Ministry of Community Development if the minister took either one of these areas or, frankly, many areas under the umbrella of his mandate – it could be parks, protected areas, museums, historical sites, whatever – and said, "Next fiscal year we're actually going to choose this one area, this target area, and we're going to bring it up to what the sector says it needs in order to do what it wants to do"? What would that look like?

Let's say we caught up arts and culture for nearly 20 years of funding shortfall. It's been nearly 20 years since they had a significant increase. Yes, I know that the minister will point out that there's a 16 per cent increase this year, but it's not enough. That's 16 per cent more than what was enough in 1987. It doesn't catch them up. The minister acknowledged as well that the sector has been growing and that it's tough for his department to keep up with that.

What would it look like if you made a concerted effort to keep up with that? I realize, you know, that what I'm arguing here hypothetically is that you pick arts and culture or you pick sports and recreation or you pick some other area of responsibility in your department and you say, "This year we're going to catch them up, and everybody else is going to hurt for another year" or something like that. What would that look like?

I want to spin off from there and get into the minister's head a little bit if I can about the vision and the philosophy that he is going to bring to his new portfolio over the course of this next fiscal year because that will help us understand what his priorities are and, if not to expect, what to hope for in his budget, in his estimates 12 months from now. It will give us some indication as to what to say to stakeholders as well because they talk to us regularly. They talk to us regularly about how the funding just isn't adequate to do the job.

You know, on this side of the House we think that's important because we think that you're dealing with some of the softer stuff that government deals with in the Department of Community Development. You're dealing with things that may create economic activity, and in fact they do create a great deal of economic activity – the minister has acknowledged this himself – but in a more indirect fashion than when you punch a hole in the ground and get some oil out or something like that.

The softer side of the economy if I can call it that, while it may not seem as sexy or as quick to return on investment, often over the long haul returns not only a very respectable economic return on investment but also has a real, positive impact on quality of life in our province. That positive impact on quality of life, especially when you're considering something like arts and culture, can in and of itself be a real attractor for highly skilled, highly talented, highly educated members in good standing, if you will, of the knowledge economy that we need to build in this province for the 21st century. So there are returns to be had from this.

So I'd like to get from the minister, if I could, some philosophical sense of what he sees as important within and underneath the umbrella of his ministry. Perhaps his ministry is too big, or perhaps his ministry is big in the wrong places, small in the wrong places. Perhaps his ministry should be streamlined. I don't know. This is not advice. This is speculation on my part. I'm not going to give the minister advice unless and until – well, no, I'll just say until – I hear some sense from him of what he sees as his vision and his priorities here.

You know, there are things that happen under the umbrella of Community Development that, as an outsider looking in, you might be tempted to say are things that, kind of like on Sesame Street, don't necessarily go together: one of these things is not like the others, or all of these things are not like the others. It looks as though the department could be kind of a catch-all for things that couldn't be shoehorned in any other department, you know. You've got arts and culture. You've got sports and recreation. Yes, both are leisure-time activities, and parks and protected areas involve leisure-time activities, so I guess there's the big, broad, vague connection between so much of this. But, really, just because all those things are leisure-time activities, does it take the same sort of expertise to run a world-class, world-leading network of parks and protected areas as it does to oversee the creation of great art and great culture? I would argue that maybe it could, but it probably doesn't have to.

So do we want to continue down the path we're on? Do we want to look at things in a different way? Is it time to spin off sports and recreation into its own ministry? By the way, before anyone on the government side accuses me of trying to make the cabinet bigger and pointing out that that's contradictory to everything we've said about cabinet being too big already, I would suggest that if you're going to create another ministry, you look for one you can get rid of at the same time, one or maybe two, because I think things are a bit bloated. [interjection] I'm not talking about getting rid of your ministry, Mr. Minister, at least not yet.

In fact, what I am suggesting, I guess – and I didn't want to get into the advice giving, so I'll put it as a question. Are there, maybe, mandates and activities in your ministry and in sectors of our society and sectors of our economy that would be better served if we didn't group them under the one ministry because they don't really fit together? I guess I'll leave it at that.

Again, I look forward to the answers that I get from the minister. The specific answers to my specific questions can be delivered orally or in writing, but I would love to hear a little bit of philosophical musing from the minister now if I could.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for his comments and some of his questions. I'll attempt to get a few of them, and those that I happen to miss, I'll follow up on. Many of your questions were similar to the other comments that were made, a little bit, in regard to the shortfall and funding in the arts. I guess that while the previous minister did not get the full proposed funding, we are confident that there will be significant positive impact on the arts sector as a result of the $3 million in new funding.

In the areas of funding that would go to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts for creation, production, promotion, participation, and selection, 88 per cent of Albertans feel that our arts achievements are important. We have, hon. member, the fourth highest performing acts attendance in the country, so there's certainly a great interest by Albertans in the field of the arts. We are pleased that we have been able to make some progress with the funding needed, and I will commit to continue to work with the arts sectors on their requirements in the future.

I guess I could share the same things when it comes to the sports. One of the first functions that I had the opportunity of attending was the dinner that took place in Calgary a couple of weeks ago to honour the Alberta athletes that participated in the Olympics. Of course, there are various sectors that came forward and had a spokesperson. It was a fairly well-orchestrated and concerted effort to certainly pass on to the new minister that, yeah, we appreciate the funding that's there, but there could be a little bit that could be done. Their message was not focused at the elite athlete stage, because the federal government takes over that level. Where their concerns were is that they felt that there were maybe opportunities that were lost by other Albertans, where financial restrictions prevented them from developing, you know, their skills, et cetera. I guess we could say the same thing in terms of the arts.

I'm certain that in the next little while I will certainly work hard in terms of being able to meet with the various groups on the arts and the sports side and the wilderness groups, all the things that basically fall within this ministry, to gather a better understanding of their needs and see if we can come up with some kind of plan to be able to address those as we go forward, as we plan into the future years as the budgeting processes come forward.

There was a question in regard to the increase to the funding for human rights. The 16 per cent increase this year certainly represents a significant increase. It'll be utilized to further support community groups and education programs.

We strive to maintain high-quality service through the 48 full-time equivalents that we have in this department. It's something that we don't take lightly and something that we're certainly working towards.

Should we pick one sector and have measures to work on it rather than trying to split up the egg? Well, we use a variety of tools to determine funding requirements for our various quality-of-life sectors. I think the last thing we want to do is to go and pit one against the other. I'm certain that there has to be a balance, and from seeing the correspondence that I've seen come into the office in the short time that I've been there, everyone seems to be going after their slice of the pie. So it's something in terms of being able to set up our funding decisions based on consultations with the stakeholders, to make comparisons with other jurisdictions across the country, and to consider the economic implications on the other sectors.

A very small portion of our expenditures, less than 4 per cent, goes to internal support. The remainder goes, basically, into direct program services.

I will review the comments that you have shared, the challenges and visioning comments. As I make my way through this ministry, we'll work at getting a better handling and understanding of it as we go forward to being able to provide good services for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for your report. I have one issue that I would like to bring to the minister's attention this afternoon, and that relates to a park in the city of Calgary which is a provincial park. It's called Fish Creek provincial park. It's located in the south end of the city of Calgary along the valley of Fish Creek. It's one of the largest urban parks in Canada, in fact one of the largest urban parks in North America.

I know that there's been considerable discussion over the effects of the flooding last year on the park and particularly on the structures which facilitate visitor-oriented facilities, things like pathways and pedestrian bridges. However, I believe that the floods are by and large a natural phenomenon, and if anything, they've helped to maintain some of the riparian habitat in the park.

What I want to raise with the minister this afternoon and bring to his attention are concerns over what I believe is mismanagement of the park from a natural ecosystem point of view. As the minister is aware, my educational and professional background includes involvement in the biological sciences, and I have a lot of personal knowledge with respect to Fish Creek park. My great-grandparents settled in what is now Fish Creek park over 120 years ago. I grew up in the area which is now the park. I swam and fished in the creek. I hiked over every corner of that park. I shot gophers and pheasants on it. I camped on it. So I have an intimate knowledge of it.

When it was created in 1975, I rejoiced that the natural beauty of Fish Creek park would be preserved for future generations. I've continued to visit the park periodically over those many years throughout my life and to monitor its condition. Unfortunately, there have been a lot of changes in the park, and most of them have been to the detriment of the park.

When it was created in 1975, Fish Creek park was a natural jewel, but sadly over the years the park has changed. While the north slopes still have fine stands of white spruce and there are aspen stands and there are cottonwoods in the riparian habitat along the creek bottom, the native grassland community, which predominates the park, is largely disappearing. It is being replaced by invasive species like brome grass, like the misnamed Canada thistle, and many woody herbs. The loss of this has been the loss of the native prairie ecosystem along with its wildflowers and its attendant native birds.

So many people misguidedly think that neglect of an area or leaving it alone is a way to preserve a natural area. They think that this is the answer to management, that nature left alone will stay static. But a prairie grassland ecosystem is not a static ecosystem unless it has outside forces, and those forces in the past have been the forces of either fire or grazing. Unfortunately, since 1975 Fish Creek park has had the benefit of neither of those forces, and the result has been a degradation of the natural ecosystem. This is a great loss, I would say. I would say, in fact, that there has probably been more ecological damage to Fish Creek park in the 31 years since it was created as a park than in the previous 100 years of ranching by the families in that area.

What I want to do this afternoon is ask the minister whether he will use some small resources to seek the advice of some outside experts, possibly some volunteer experts, into the state of Fish Creek park with respect to its natural ecosystems and whether or not he will take some corrective action to look at this whole issue. Better still, would he be willing to accompany me and one or two plant specialists on a tour of the site of Fish Creek park?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the member for his comments in regard to his concerns regarding Fish Creek park. As you indicated, yes, there was some flooding damage that did occur at Fish Creek park in 2005. I'm informed that the repairs there have commenced and, unfortunately, may take up to three years to complete. It's my understanding that there's going to be $7.5 million that will be expended in terms of repairing the flood damage that has occurred there.

I thank you for your concerns on the natural ecosystem management, in particular for the comments that you made on the grasslands of the park. I'll certainly take this under advisement and be able to respond back to the member. Having given the description that you gave of as a youngster going through all the nooks and crannies in the park kind of reminded me of having done similar types of things in the parks in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency.

Yes, I would certainly be amenable to accepting that invitation to go visit the park with you. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to participate in the debate on Community Development's estimates. Most of the questions I had already been asked. I appreciate the hon. minister's insight and his promise that answers not readily available today would be coming forward later in writing.

One observation I made, Mr. Chair, is the way the different government departments receive their funding. This observation might not be entirely applicable or fair to this hon. minister because he is newly appointed and he is learning about his ministry and trying to grow in his role, which is great. But, for example, you hear instances of this ministry asking for money, as was mentioned before, and not receiving all of it. You can extrapolate, and you hear, for example, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports asking for money for her programs, and then not all of what she asked for is allowed. It really begs the question: how does that work really? Cabinet should all be one unit. When members of cabinet approach the other members of cabinet for funding or when they approach the standing policy committee for funding, is it a matter of ranking? How are those priorities set? Again, this might not be a specific question to this ministry. It's more of a process question. How is that done?

Community Development, for example, received a 14 per cent decrease this year compared to the 2005-06 forecast. Some things have gone up, some of which I agree with and some of which I don't, and some things have gone down. For example, I noticed that the ministry support services have gone up by about 10 per cent. I typically think that if things go up to match inflation, then that's okay, but when they go up a lot higher than inflation or a lot quicker, then we need clarifications and explanations.

Human rights and citizenship, as was mentioned, had an increase of about 9 per cent, which is fine. Cultural facilities and historical resources went down by about 6 per cent when compared to the '05-06 budget. Again on the positive side, the parks and protected areas have received a 20 per cent increase. My hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity has done a lot of work, sometimes in question period, sometimes in collaboration with the minister, and we hope to take some of that credit. Nevertheless, it is a wonderful direction. But some things have gone up that we question, and some things have gone down.

Some of those financial questions, Mr. Chair. Think about the ministry support services, for example. When we look at the minister's office itself, the minister's office has received an increase of about 6 per cent. I know that sometimes the argument would be that if you're thinking billions of dollars in general, you know when you look at the entire budget for government, then 6 per cent, which really translates into $465,000, might not be too much. But, again, it is more than inflation. So why was this increase necessary? How will this additional money be spent? It also sheds light on the pattern. There has been a pattern for the past several years that there is an annual increase in the minister's office budget.

Furthermore, you can take it a step further and look at the deputy minister's office. For that particular situation we are seeing a 9 per cent increase over the '05-06 budget. Again, in dollars it's about $660,000. What more are we hoping to achieve this year to justify the 9 per cent increase in the deputy minister's office?

I know the comment was made about the size of government. It is not necessarily only how many cabinet ministers we have; it's also the size of our individual departments. Are they efficient? Is the money being spent on front-line services and front-line staff, or is it mostly for administrative and support services to the minister? I'd rather spend this money outside of the Legislature, outside of the minister's office, and have it allocated to those different programs in the community.

My focus today, Mr. Chairman, is going to be on the cultural facilities and historical resources. The estimates on page 99, line 4.0.4, estimate that historic sites and cultural facilities are going to receive $9.79 million, which is a 2 per cent decrease from the 2005-06 forecast, so this amount is going down. Furthermore, the 2005-06 forecast is itself $10.09 million, or 4 per cent more than was budgeted.

Again, many members in this House have made the observation that there is the budget, then there is the forecast for how the budget has changed – is it more, or is it less? – and then there's the estimate for next year. The estimate is 2 per cent less, but the forecast is 4 per cent more. Are we lowballing it intentionally? Hon. minister, why did this department overspend by more than $300,000 last year? That's the difference between the forecast and the budget. Why didn't the ministry anticipate this extra expense when preparing the budget for last year, and why aren't they preparing for it this year, when they are trying to pass the estimate today?

Also, on the same page, page 99, line 4.0.7, the 2005-06 forecast for acquisition of historical collections is $1.64 million, which is 64 per cent more than was budgeted in 2005-06. Now, this might be above board, and it might be kosher, but I need to receive clarification from the hon. minister. What was this amount for? What did they buy, basically? What did they end up purchasing?

Furthermore, I want to mention a conversation that I had with a constituent who has a lot of experience in that realm of history and heritage. He made a recommendation, and I promised that I would actually deliver it to the hon. minister in charge. Particularly in reference to community schools that are targeted for closure or that already have been closed, he said that maybe we could look at using community schools which are no longer being utilized for education as historical sites, as archives, as neighbourhood libraries. He even went on to say that some of those schools are, you know, 80 years old, 90 years old, almost the same age as our province, so they are definitely within that definition of being heritage sites or historical sites.

This constituent of mine also went on to suggest that maybe they could be used creatively to support the arts and culture community by allowing them to be used as lofts or studios for artists. We can charge rent. We can charge usage fees. We can also look at the gym and use the gym space for community sports even after the school has been closed, you know, for both adults and children. You can run a playschool, or you can run daycare programs, all that stuff. You can use the stage for performances by different cultural, musical, ethnic groups, use that stage for different performances. You can even look at using the labs for, you know, young and aspiring scientists who want to conduct minor lab experiments. So instead of closing them, they could be under the purview of this hon. minister and used as community focal points, attraction points, libraries, like I mentioned, theatre, art, and so on.

What we will achieve in so doing will be to preserve a historical site; like I mentioned, some of those schools are really old and should be preserved. We are going to preserve green space, and we're also going to allow them to continue to offer a service to the communities in which they are housed. I guess what I'm really saying is that, you know, if a school has to be closed, and that is the decision that was reached by the local school board in consultation with those parents, then maybe this ministry could acquire that site and preserve it. They can make money from it. They can just keep it for the public benefit instead of, you know, destroying it, tearing it down, and selling it for commercial development, for people to build condominiums, or for a big retail box store to come in and take it over. So that's just a thought. As I promised my constituent, here it is; it's on the record.

[Mr. Webber in the chair]

Estimates, again on page 99, line 4.0.10, estimate that for those cultural facilities and historical resources grants the amount, Mr. Chair, is going to be zero. This is different from what we had in 2004-05 and, indeed, for 2005-06. It was a modest amount; it was about $1 million. Is this initiative going to be cancelled? That's the question. Can the minister explain why there is no money set aside for cultural facilities and historical resources grants this year? If it's going to be continued, how can we continue it with no dollar allocation? If it's going to be scrapped, why are we doing this? So why is it not sustainable?

Again, a very small expense on page 100, line 4.0.2, which is the estimate for equipment/inventory purchases for the Royal Alberta Museum here in Edmonton. The purchases amount that is allotted is $150,000. There was no such amount in 2004-05 or in '05-06. So, again, to the hon minister the question would be: how will this money be spent, and what are they hoping to buy for the Royal Alberta Museum?

Mr. Chair, these are just some of my thoughts on Community Development, and I appreciate the time that I was allowed. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Well, we have a new chairman.

I thank the hon. member for the questions. I'll attempt to address some of them. The first one is: why don't we ever get the dollars that we ask for? I guess that's the same question I ask my wife when I go for an increase in my allowance. It's because there's only so much money, I guess, to go around. In all honesty, you can certainly be aware that all of the ministries go with major asks when they bring their budget proposals forward to the Minister of Finance. She has to basically do that balancing act in terms of putting it where Albertans are requesting it. As we know, the major departments that have been receiving the major increases have been Health, Education, Advanced Education, and Infrastructure and Transportation. Of course, everybody's there, but I guess the areas that could make the bigger impact, you know, seem to get the bigger dollars. So it's certainly a challenge for the Minister of Finance.

Yes, our budget decreased due to the elimination of one-time spending, but overall we did see an increase in our budget.

You asked questions in regard to the increases to the ministry support services. The increases that the ministry is experiencing are no different than any of the other ministries across the government of Alberta; mainly, salary settlements have impacted all the ministries. There's been no growth in full-time equivalents in the minister's office or in the deputy minister's office.

Several of the initiatives from last year do not continue in our budget for 2006-2007. As I had mentioned in my opening comments, there was $1.7 million for major sporting events in 2005. The World Masters Games was one-time funding. The $2.5 million in NHL teams initiative is discontinued now, and the $20 million that went out to the libraries as a form of grant of last resort is no longer there.

You asked the question regarding the funding of cultural and historical sites. There have been changes because of the centennial initiatives that were there. There was a commitment to the Edmonton 2004 centennial celebrations that took place. There's reallocation of equipment and inventory purchases for exhibit development. There was one-time funding for the heritage resource management information system and definitely anticipated decreases in dedicated revenue from the government of Canada related to the historical places initiative.

Now, in the 2005-2006 budget there was a forecast variance of $24.1 million increase. That included centennial grants to the Calgary Zoo for the project discovering gateway to the north initiatives of $15 million, and there was Calgary's Heritage Park Society for the redevelopment of the park at $9 million. That's where there were some extra dollars that would have shown that we had overspent last year for one-time initiatives.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I very much appreciate the opportunity to speak this afternoon. I know that some of the subjects that I'm going to speak about have already been mentioned, and I hope that I take a little bit of a different slant that would express some of the frustrations that I may have. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I really want to say that I believe that our parks are our signature for Alberta, and I believe that our parks should be recognized as emeralds of our province for our visitors when they come to Alberta.

When we go into the parks of Alberta, one of the most consistent and common concerns that people have is staffing, staffing not only for the parks' maintenance but also for interpretive centres. I want to refer, Mr. Chairman, to an interview that I once saw that involved the CEO for A & W. The interviewer made comment to the CEO about the success of A & W, and the first question was, "Was the success of A & W because of the root beer?" The CEO says, "No, it's not." He says, "Was the success because of the burgers? Was it the mama burger, the papa burger, the teen burger?" The CEO says, "No, it's not." So he says, "What is the success?" The success, the CEO said, was consistency of the bathrooms, having them clean, that people knew when they came to the restaurant that there would be a standard.

Mr. Chairman, we need to maintain those standards; we need to maintain that consistency. We need to maintain the consistency not only within our own parks but also the parks that are privately run. I'm not sure what the minister's direction is in regard to the allocation of staff, but I question: do you have more staff allocation in the parks?

Mr. Chairman, my next comments have to do with the arts. I very much appreciate the money that has been and is being put into the arts, but I still believe that in a province such as ours there is room to have more support for the arts. I think that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations made mention of it one time when he talked about: in 200 years, who and what will we be remembered for? It will not be for our GDP, for sure, but it will be for our culture, and part of our culture, of course, is the arts.

Presently we have I believe it's just a little over $7 million that is given to the foundations. Mr. Chairman, $3.1 million of that goes to the arts: I believe $600,000 this year to the Smithsonian, leaving approximately $2.5 million for the arts. Mr. Chairman, that may seem like a lot of money, but in consideration of all of the arts we have in Alberta and all the potential that we do have, I would like to see if there could be a little extra allocation in that direction.

One other comment that I'd like to make. You were at an award presentation yesterday that recognized volunteerism. There were 600 people at an award presentation in Calgary for accomplishments and dedication of volunteerism. Volunteerism is the heart of Alberta. Without volunteerism – and I have to speak for rural Alberta – rural Alberta would not look the same. Our arenas, our culture, the support that volunteerism gives to rural Alberta is beyond compare. A lot of our volunteers, to coin a phrase that is being used, are burned out. We do need support for our volunteers, and that support may be in support of structure or in support, I guess, in a lot of different senses. One of the main challenges that volunteers have is trying to support utility costs at the same time as trying to raise funds for projects.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I again want to thank you for the opportunity to say a couple of words. I would very much like to praise the minister for the work and the support that he has given to the directions that I've talked to. If he could just kind of have a little bit of discussion on the comments that I have.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In responding to the parks' full-time equivalents, currently, member, we have 270 provincial parks and provincial recreation areas that have facilities capable of providing revenue. The parks in protected areas are using facility-operating agreements to manage operation of facilities at 200 of these sites, and the operations of the other 70 sites are being managed through a combination of service contracts and department staff. Private-sector operators are responsible for running the facilities and are a key component to our success. We're hoping that with the increases that have been allocated to them in regard to the camping fees that they're allowed to charge, there will be dollars that will allow them to be able to enhance our sites and to possibly provide, you know, services and amenities to the camping public.

On our own full-time equivalents relating to the facilities that we operate, they were increased by eight full-time equivalents this year, and last year there was an increase of 10. I'm really hoping that the improvements that we do to our parks infrastructure over the next few years will certainly help to enhance the camping experience for visitors and Albertans alike. Hopefully, if there are more people that are enjoying that experience, there is the opportunity for extra revenues to come in. As you are aware, a portion of the revenues that do come in are rededicated back to the operation of our parks. So if we're more successful in attracting more users, then there'll certainly be the opportunity of having more dollars to reinvest into our facilities.

Your comment in regard to volunteers I take wholeheartedly. I come from a background of being a volunteer. It was so nice to see the elderly gentleman that won for the heart of Calgary yesterday. He retired back in 1980 at the age of 65, and he still continues to volunteer to this day. His closing remark last evening was: to all of you people that are retired out there, please take the time to consider volunteering if you haven't done it because it adds to bring a lot of quality of life not only to yourself, but you're able to contribute to your fellow Albertans and neighbours. It was nice to see someone in his 90s, still out there volunteering on a daily basis, come up and put out the challenge to all the retirees that are out there.

I thank you for your comments on the arts funding. I've responded to that.

As I indicated earlier, I'm up to the challenge in terms of working with the various communities to see what we can do in the future. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very quick. I have a few questions left.

Hon. minister, I do understand the importance of the Smithsonian folk festival. The government gave them a $1.5 million or a $1.7 million grant. I'm not against that, as I said before, but I just want to remind the new minister that one of the very active associations in the southeast consists of 11 leagues. It's the Mill Woods Presidents' Council. The Minister of Education and myself requested the then Minister of Community Development for just a couple of thousand. They actually were celebrating Canada Day as well as centennial day together. At that time the minister said that they didn't have money. I mean, when a festival like this or any other festival outside Alberta comes, then the money in millions comes.

My question is: where did the money come from afterwards? When we asked for just a couple of thousand dollars because they didn't get the money from HRDC – they always get the money from the federal government because they celebrate Canada Day, and 60,000 people come and enjoy their celebration every year. That grant was refused. Now, suddenly millions of dollars come. It's a big question I want to ask the new minister and find out. I mean, this department is to promote community development. If the people who are involved in the community, the leagues, don't get money, this is shameful for the government if we don't help them when they are in need. Normally they don't ask the provincial government for the money, but when they were really in need of some amount, a couple of thousand or $5,000, at that time the former Minister of Community Development said that they didn't have money. That was my first question.

The second one is about book publishers in Alberta. Some book publishers didn't get a grant from the Alberta government. They had to shut down the business. Then they moved because the big fish eats the small fish. This is what happened, and some of them are moving out of Alberta. What plan does the government have to help them? We want them here because we want all the books published in Alberta. If we really want to promote everything Albertan, we should help them from time to time. I just want to know from the hon. minister what plans we have to stop them from moving from Alberta.

You mentioned, answering my questions, that a 16 per cent grant was given to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. That's wrong. A 16 per cent grant was given for total community development. It's only $3 million. I think the grant is about a $3 million increase, which is not 16 per cent because it was $20 million before. Now it's very close to that. We were asking for $40 million or something. Please give us a breakdown because Community Development in total includes so many departments like human rights, cultural facilities, historical resources, parks and rec, and everything. If you say 16 per cent for everything, that's right, but that 16 per cent increase is not for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. They are in dire need of money. Lots of stakeholders keep in touch with us, and they are not happy.

You answered my question about the sports plan. I have the sports plan prepared in 2003 by the Alberta government, and it's still lying somewhere. I want to know when this government is going to implement that. The former minister promised that it would be in this session, the sports plan as well as the cultural plan. I haven't seen anything, and I didn't get a proper answer for that. So please.

Thank you.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, hon. member. You do make the comment in regard to the Smithsonian, the dollars that are being invested there to the tune of $600,000. We must remember that that is an opportunity, I guess a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity that the province of Alberta has been given in terms of being able to showcase itself in terms of being able to attract future tourism and future investments into the province of Alberta.

In regard to the community leagues I'm sad to hear of the funding request last year. I just would reflect it back to the member: was there any thought of maybe making an application through the Minister of Gaming through the community initiatives program? That was something that my community came together on, and we were able to access dollars through that type of funding and put on a party for in the neighbourhood of 10,000 people who joined up in the community of Bonnyville.

Your book publishing comment. I'll take that under advisement. I don't have an answer for you at this point in time.

I will double-check, looking back in Hansard, if I misled you with some statistics, and we'll get back to you on that.

The sports plan and the cultural plan. I've seen the briefings on them. As I indicated earlier, there's $2.8 million that went into the sports funding arena, which I guess could be part of saying that it's a slow implementation to the sports plan, but it's certainly something. That, along with the cultural plan, will be something that I'll be looking at in the near future.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I ran out of time last time as I was making some comments on the general situation with respect to arts funding in the province. I was comparing what we spend on the Alberta Foundation for the Arts in our budget with what this budget for this year has allocated for the horse-racing industry. There is something wrong with the priorities. That's the point that I was trying to make: $63 million for horse racing – a massive increase, by the way, from last year – and only $22.6 million for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. The increase in budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is one-quarter of the increase that the horse-racing industry has received, a 10 per cent increase, as the minister pointed out, for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts and close to a 40 per cent increase in the funding for the horse-racing industry.

The Stats Canada report in 2005 ranks Alberta, Mr. Chairman, the last when it comes to per capita public funding for the arts among the country's provinces and territories. Even Newfoundland, one of the very poor provinces, pays more in arts funding per capita than the province of Alberta does.

So there is something for the minister to ponder. I know he's new to the ministry, but the responsibility is there, and he has to address these. There are some numbers that need to be looked at.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the questions after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Community Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:
 Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $229,798,000
 Capital Investment $20,749,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
 The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report the estimates for the Department of Community Development.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Community Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $229,798,000; capital investment, $20,749,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
 The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening when we will reassemble in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Main Estimates 2006-07

Innovation and Science

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The first thing I have to do because you reminded me is move the estimates of the Department of Innovation and Science.

I'll now resist the urge to sit down and listen to the discussion. I actually am going to make some comments. I'm going to do something very unusual tonight. I'm actually going to stick to my notes. This will be a first, and it'll surprise the people that work with me.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to review the Innovation and Science estimates for '06-07, and I'd like to start by introducing Innovation and Science staff present this evening: Barry Devlin, who is the senior financial officer; Anne Douglas, director of communications; and Donna McColl, assistant communications director.

Mr. Chairman, I have a name for our department, the little department that could, because we do a lot of great things.

Ms Calahasen: Is that on your notes?

Mr. Doerksen: No, that's not on my notes.

Of course, if there's any additional information required to answer questions this evening, we will provide those answers in writing.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta is a very attractive base of operations for researchers and scientists looking to carry out investigations. With their knowledge and contributions and with business and financial plans aligned with the government's vision of long-term prosperity for Albertans, unleashing innovation is becoming a reality. Alberta Innovation and Science provides leadership and makes strategic investments in research, science, and technology initiatives in three priority areas: energy, information and communication technology, and the life sciences, which include agriculture, biotechnology, forestry, sustainable resource management, and water research. These investments are a natural fit with the province's strengths, and together they are helping Alberta build a knowledge-based economy that can compete effectively in world markets.

Where innovation flourishes, one will find well-qualified professionals, a solid infrastructure, access to funding, and of course vision. With $56 million to be voted on for innovation implementation and $80 million for building and enhancing innovation capacity, Alberta has the building blocks for success within its grasp. With strategic advice from the Alberta Science and Research Authority we are working to build this culture of innovation and success to ensure Alberta's prosperity for generations to come. Government endowment funds and support for students, universities, and research institutes are helping to ensure that Albertans develop the right skills and that we can attract and retain others with the necessary skills to help us keep moving forward.

There are four organizations which are accountable to Albertans and report to the government through Innovation and Science. They include the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, also known as Alberta Ingenuity, the Alberta informatics circle of research excellence, also known as iCORE, and the Alberta Research Council.

The additional investment of $500 million to the AHFMR endowment by the provincial government enables it to expand health research and may speed important breakthroughs and discoveries. This year the foundation announced $48 million to 63 researchers in provincial universities, hospitals, and institutions. Investing in people has been a key strategy to build capacity and power in health research. The foundation has invested more than $850 million in people and infrastructure in Alberta. The results of this long-term support have yielded tremendous benefits for Albertans in terms of basic biomedical and clinical advances in diabetes treatment, organ transplantations, cancer therapies, advances in bone, joint, and cardiovascular care, and new technologies. The foundation's support of world-class scientists and students working in a broad spectrum of research across Alberta is critical to our profile as a health care and innovation leader in Canada.

The Alberta informatics circle of research excellence, also known as iCORE, is in its fifth year of operation. Since its inception iCORE has invested $50 million in building 24 research teams, which have attracted more than $200 million in additional research funding from government and industry. These strategic investments have drawn many internationally acclaimed scientists to Alberta. Equally important, iCORE has been able to attract, retain, and educate many talented young Albertans in fields as diverse as computer software, wireless communications, and nanotechnology. iCORE also supports connections between university research and industry partners. This year four new funding partnerships were developed with Suncor, Matrikon, Castle Rock Research, and General Dynamics. iCORE together with the new ICT institute continues to ensure that Alberta has the highest calibre of scientists and graduate students bringing new discoveries to industry and strengthening Alberta's competitive position.

This year the Alberta Research Council celebrates 85 years of contributing to Alberta's growth and development. The ARC develops innovative solutions to industry and government, helping to increase the value of our natural resources and helping companies to grow. The ARC's focus on industrial bioproducts is helping our province to capitalize on the potential for building a strong bioeconomy. Through the Alberta fibre road map project the ARC and Forintek Canada will explore opportunities where industry can use Alberta's unique infrastructure to exploit new market opportunities from our fibre resources: trees, agriculture fibres, and polymers from the petrochemical industry. The experts at the ARC also take an integrated approach to managing water quality and quantity. Their water management systems and conservation technologies are improving the productivity of water use in industry.

Last year the government provided an additional $100 million to the Alberta ingenuity fund. Alberta Ingenuity continues to be well positioned to support science and engineering research that will propel Alberta into the future. Alberta Ingenuity currently supports five research centres critical to the province's economic and social well-being – machine learning, water, carbohydrate science, in situ energy, and prion research – and is looking to establish others. Increased funding will also be used to expand the industry associates program, which seeks to increase research expertise in Alberta companies and to help recent graduates gain applied research experience by contributing to a company's research activities.

The Alberta Prion Research Institute, established with government funding in 2005, is dedicated to the discovery of science-based solutions to the challenges associated with prions, the proteins best known for their link to BSE. Seven projects have recently been awarded funding, and several world-class prion researchers are in negotiations to relocate to Alberta. Planning is also under way to provide opportunities for Alberta companies in prion research.

Mr. Chairman, many sound investments in research and technologies will be made in 2006 and 2007. One very good example is the recent $30 million grant to expand AVAC. This grant will extend AVAC's successful formula for providing support to early-stage business development in the areas of information and communication technology and the life sciences. Operating within the existing AVAC organization, this expansion will offer mentoring, marketing, and financial assistance to help develop more successful start-up technology companies, offer better leveraging of resources, and improve the quality and number of investment-ready companies.

The Alberta Life Sciences Institute has now been established with a mandate to foster the development and growth of the life sciences sector. I am very pleased to co-chair the institute with Dr. Rob Rennie, a respected venture capitalist with 20 years' experience in the life sciences sector. Dr. Rennie was also a member of the Alberta Agriculture Research Institute. This new institute will work closely with the existing agriculture and forestry research institutes but will focus on integrating challenges and opportunities which cut across these sectors. The new institute will work to create partnerships and develop a shared vision, leading toward the alignment of many organizations which together can build a truly significant bioeconomy in Alberta.

The Life Sciences Institute is focusing on areas including bioproducts, which include bioenergy, biochemicals, and biomaterials; health innovation; research management innovation; genomics; nanotechnology; and bioinformatics. The institute will identify and take advantage of opportunities critical to the province's future and to our traditional life sciences sector: agriculture, forestry, health, biotechnology, and water. We've already seen excellent results from work in some of these areas, work that has been done in collaboration with several government departments.

The Alberta Science and Research Authority in collaboration with the Alberta Water Council has developed a water research strategy to accomplish the province's goals in the Alberta Water for Life strategy. Implementing this strategy is a priority.

Bioenergy is another key opportunity for our province. This work is based on the growing international interest in biofuels such as ethanol as well as increasing recognition that agriculture and forestry waste can be used to efficiently produce energy. Alberta is developing plans to take full advantage of these opportunities. With continued effort and investment and with a shared vision of its stakeholders, the Life Science Institute will develop the kind of innovation necessary to advance Alberta's resource economy to the next level.

Our commitment to expanding Alberta's research capacity is significant. Almost $27 million, to be voted, is required to meet our business goals for research capacity and science awareness. Nearly $22 million is allocated to energy research to expand the province's research capacity in energy and climate change.

The major emphasis in the coming years will be on accelerating the development and utilization of clinical technology and broadening the economic value of this vast resource for Albertans. This investment will help to ensure that Alberta will always have access to long-term supplies of sustainable energy and clean water, factors that contribute to our superb quality of life.

The funding attracts matching and supplementary financing from the private sector, research organizations and agencies, as well as other governments. A good example is EnergyINet, the Energy Innovation Network, which was officially launched from Ottawa and Calgary in March of 2005. The Alberta Energy Research Institute is the catalyst behind this national network of industry partners, researchers, provincial governments, and the federal government. EnergyINet's membership includes the provincial governments of Alberta, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan, the federal government, and 18 national and international energy companies.

Alberta's integrated approach to energy research and innovation covers six key areas: oil sands upgrading, clean-coal technology, CO₂ management, enhanced oil recovery, water management, and alternative energy development. Alberta believes that climate change issues are best addressed by investments in technology and innovations right here in Alberta and in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the board of the Alberta Science and Research Authority has identified the development of Alberta's ICT sector as a top priority for our province. This industry sector develops and adapts technology platforms that are the basis for innovation across all sectors of our economy. To accelerate the growth and prosperity of the province's ICT sector, the Alberta Information and Communications Technology Institute has been established. The institute is co-chaired by the Member for Calgary-Bow and Dr. Roger Smith, former iCORE chair. It will provide strategic advice and policy recommendations to government regarding research, development, and commercialization activities.

We are building our reputation and expertise through collaborations on national and international levels. My department continues to develop and foster affairs with industry and research professionals in China and California. The 2006 technology mission yielded a number of new projects and strengthened our ties with these important jurisdictions.

Three excellent examples of this collaborative model were formalized in January at a technology mission to China. Government's investment of $350,000 in a joint research laboratory project is supplemented by $150,000 from the University of Alberta. The research will be conducted in state key laboratories throughout China. The joint research project will focus on three main areas of research: nanotechnology, environment, and energy. Projects will be identified based on their importance and interest to both Alberta and China. The first five joint research projects have been approved, and scientists will begin their collaborations this year.

A partnership between Banff New Media Institute and Cyberport, a Hong Kong based IT firm, was also formalized and is exploring opportunities in research and development, including scientific and professional exchange, education and training, and encouraging technology and business partnerships among small- to medium-sized digital media companies in Alberta and Hong Kong.

A partnership formalized by our Premier in 2004 recently received an additional $100,000 grant from the government. The Harbin Institute of Technology Research Innovation Centre opened in January. It focuses on a dozen research areas, including sensor networks, transaction management and security, and machine learning. Long term this new centre of research and knowledge exchange will further develop Alberta's international partnership and enhance the province's research capability.

Mr. Chairman, California is also an important partner in our efforts to unleash innovation. Several projects between the Alberta government and HP are in the proposal stage and stand to enhance Alberta's research and development capabilities, making our province more competitive in a global economy. The establishment of a new facility at the University of Calgary for advanced data centre operations is providing the capability for leading-edge simulation and modelling. This will lead to more rapid discoveries in product development.

In another instance research at the National Institute for Nanotechnology will develop tiny sensors to improve medical and environmental diagnostics. The vision is that diseases like cancer will be diagnosed while the patient is still in the doctor's office instead of having to wait for results from a lab. This will cut down on the time to treatment and reduce costs, something we can all appreciate.

A third example of our collaboration with HP involves video conferencing. The University of Alberta is combining virtual reality research conducted by Dr. Pierre Boulanger, an iCORE industrial chair at the U of A, with research on desktop immersive video conferencing under way at HP Labs in Palo Alto, California. The combination of these efforts promises to give conference participants a virtual 3D presence in video and the perception of a more realistic interaction. These research collaborations extend ongoing relationships between HP and Alberta universities.

On the medical front an enhancement of current collaborations between government and an international biotech company, Varian Inc., means that Alberta's Magnetic Resonance Diagnostic Centre at the University of Alberta is getting a boost for collaborative disease diagnosis research. With $1.5 million in funding the centre will use the emerging science of metabolomics to provide more accurate and timely diagnosis, treatment, and monitoring of diseases like pneumonia and asthma. The extension of this agreement continues a collaboration that began in 2004 between the Alberta government and Varian in funding the diagnostic centre. The Alberta government is contributing $400,000, and Varian is supporting the project with in-kind contributions and leveraging its relationships with other industry partners.

Another result of the recent technology mission to California is an agreement between Roche Molecular Diagnostics and the University of Alberta that may someday mean a better life for organ and tissue transplant recipients. The Alberta transplant applied genomics centre is a collaboration between the University of Alberta, the Roche companies, and the government. Dr. Phil Halloran, who heads the centre, was initially attracted to Alberta by AHFMR. His team will study organ and tissue transplant patients to better understand why our bodies reject transplants. The information collected will help in developing commercial diagnostic technologies to help physicians monitor transplant patient responses to antirejection drugs and ultimately help to customize drug dosage and type to each patient's needs.

This project demonstrates how Alberta's reputation for medical research excellence attracts international companies to invest here. This multimillion dollar project is designed to lead to the commercial development of new diagnostic technologies, generating licensing fees for the University of Alberta and potentially creating spinoff companies in Alberta. Investments like this will ensure that the benefits of research, technology, and innovation such as jobs, business, and economic growth remain in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, our early successes often grow to become significant interests. One of those is the IBM Centre for Advanced Studies, which now includes services science. By successfully integrating technology within business processes, the resulting efficiencies help organizations to become more competitive. With a government investment leveraged with IBM and the University of Alberta, services science brings together two powerful entities: the University of Alberta, with its experience and skills in computing science, business, engineering, and law, and IBM's access to industry, technology, and global collaboration. This research partnership will help make Alberta-based businesses more competitive and equip university students with skills they need to succeed in their careers. That will be valuable to all Albertans in years to come. The ability to attract scientists of the highest calibre is a tribute to the Alberta advantage and to the solid reputation our province has built in the international arena. [Mr. Doerksen's speaking time expired]

I would ask for unanimous consent to finish my last 30 seconds.

8:20

Mr. Doerksen: We provide funding prudently, Mr. Chairman, and because these investments are strategic and relevant, other stakeholders are prepared to work with us and join us in funding these initiatives. Both the Innovation and Science business plan and fiscal plan are in step with industry, other governments, and research institutions. Alberta prospers through innovation. A strategic approach helps us achieve the goals set out in the government's 20-year plan and Alberta's value-added strategy, securing tomorrow's prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, this is the vision of the Department of Innovation and Science. The estimates before you provide some of the resources necessary to bring this vision to reality.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members the 9th Hermitage Scout group, 20 strong in number, in the public gallery along with their group leaders, Nancy, Shane, Teresa, Chris, as well as a parent volunteer, Robert. They've come here to witness the legislative process here this evening, and let's give them a warm traditional welcome, please.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, I must start by saying that I'm really envious of the hon. minister and his contingent of wonderful staff sitting in the members' gallery. I wish I had the same support writing my speaking notes. Why did they not want you to digress or deviate from the script? You know, whenever you do it, you sound intelligent, so they should have allowed you some room to manoeuvre.

Anyway, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity as I rise this evening as the Official Opposition critic for Innovation and Science. I must admit that I do enjoy a fairly straightforward, civilized relationship with the hon. minister. I can probably attribute this to how our personalities are compatible or perhaps that his department is not contentious. Nor is it plagued by controversy.

As critic in this particular case, Mr. Chairman, I find myself offering suggestions and advice more often than I am criticizing or condemning. In my view, this is 50 per cent or more of the opposition's role: to participate in positive and constructive dialogue. Even if and when we complain about something, it is usually for the public good. As such, I know that my concerns and suggestions, which I'm about to state on the record, will be discussed and examined by the minister and his most able staff, and whatever doesn't get answered live in debate tonight will be delivered back to me in writing. I must confess again here that when I trade places with the hon. minister, I am more than likely going to keep most of those staff in their places to allow them to continue their excellent work.

On a different note, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disconnect between how this government claims to appreciate and value this ministry and the actions taken or monies spent on its programs. For example and before we get into the financials, when the cabinet was reshuffled after two ministers resigned their posts and a third was evicted from the Tory caucus and yet another new ministry was created, the government's own press release on April 5, 2006, ranked all the ministries in order of precedence. This ministry scored 13th place out of 25. I take this as this ministry not being recognized to its fullest potential. I know that some of the traditional arguments would involve making the argument that things like health, education, and infrastructure, for example, would take precedence, but I would argue that so does this ministry.

During debate on supplementary supply, Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister agreed with me that his ministry needs or deserves more money, but in fact this overall estimate tonight of $143 million represents about a 12.7 per cent reduction from the 2005-06 $164 million forecast.

With that, it is interesting to see the budget for ministry support services – that is to say, administration and personnel – growing by about 7.2 per cent. The minister may indicate that this is standard across all the ministries, but I would still appreciate an explanation from him as to why this is taking place, particularly when this figure keeps rising year after year. During supplementary supply, when I was talking about allocating more money to this ministry to support its programs and services, I must be honest: I was not thinking more money just for salaries, pensions, or benefits.

Moving on, innovation capacity looks like a 9 per cent increase over the 2005-06 budget, modest considering how important this work is. You know, Mr. Chairman, after losing or relinquishing the responsibility for corporate information and communications to the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, which really needed something to do to justify its existence, this department we're examining today has only one single core business left, and by that I mean innovation.

As I read on page 270 in the 2006 business plan how this ministry's work relates to the government of Alberta's strategic direction and given that unleashing innovation is supposed to be the number one opportunity in the government's 20-year plan, why is the government not putting a greater emphasis on the activities supported by this ministry? There seems to be a disconnect, as I mentioned, between words and action.

Also, given that the ministry seems to play a central role in the government of Alberta's overall three-year business plan – and by that I mean goal 1, which states, "Alberta will have a diversified and prosperous economy," the issue of diversification here, Mr. Chairman – why is there not greater support being given to truly creating a knowledge-based, value-added economy? A $20 million reduction from '05-06 to '06-07, a $20 million reduction from last year's forecast, would seem to represent either a lack of confidence that the ministry is contributing to the government's goals or a lack of genuine commitment to those goals. Can the minister briefly share with us his comments and thoughts on why this is going on and his interpretation of this situation? How hard is it for this hon. minister to talk to Treasury Board, for example, to secure funding for his ministry? I guess what I'm really saying in plain English is that this cabinet has to put its money where its mouth is.

Moving on to the ministry's goals, goal 1 is basically to implement innovation. It lists a few strategies under that goal, and all of those strategies are good. The question again would revolve around the budgetary commitment. It is important that we don't forget the important differences in mandate between all the different parts of our research community. Our advanced education institutions in particular have a critical role to play in applied research and commercialization of our discoveries, but they also have to be careful to maintain their academic integrity and to operate sort of at arm's length or as distantly as possible from industry and industry's interests.

Performance measures with regard to goal 1. I need to receive clarification on the definition of "support innovation." How do we support innovation, and how do we measure that? Given the concern that high tech is being squeezed out by energy in terms of capital investment – we all know the stories that 50 per cent of ICT firms in Alberta are contemplating or thinking about leaving to other markets – what are we doing to assess and to address that?

Moving on to goal 3, which is to "accelerate innovation in the energy sector" – that's on page 275 and 276 – I have to say here that Alberta needs to diversify its economy. I've said it time and time again, and we even had some exchanges during question period. However, I feel that this government has failed to support that kind of development, making us more dependent on the oil and gas sector. The business plan on page 275 says that energy-related revenues account for more than 25 per cent of all government of Alberta revenues, and we know that this Legislature is also considering Bill 24, which is basically increasing our dependence on nonrenewable energy resource revenues. This is an amendment that keeps coming back year after year. So, again, are we diversifying, or are we just relying on one type of research?

General points that I would go on to mention would include the need to ensure that we get all the value from our energy resources. Second, I would say that we need to ensure that we support efficient extraction, which is, you know, a no-brainer. People agree. We also need to leverage our position as leader in the current energy resources market to become a leader in future energy technologies. So use the revenue that we're getting today to expand into new horizons and to investigate new technologies.

Energy is confirmed as the economic driver for Alberta and the reason why we are allegedly debt free, notwithstanding, of course, things like the infrastructure deficit and the unfunded teachers' liability as just two examples. Nevertheless, energy is why we're doing remarkably well and things are looking even more promising today. It is convenient to showcase and promote our energy sector at times – take Murray Smith in Washington, Mr. Chairman, for example – while at other times this government finds it convenient to lowball that picture like today when they released the much-anticipated Aon report.

I know that this is slightly off topic, but it's definitely related to some extent, Mr. Chairman, when you consider that this government uses this report that they released to estimate that by 2016 health expenses would eat up 50 per cent of the entire provincial budget and that by 2025 it will consume most of it. Part of that ominous calculation is based on, among other things, an assumption that energy resource revenues are going to go down from $12.3 billion in 2005 to only $6.6 billion in 2025. My question is: how come? I don't know where Aon is getting their information from.

My question is: do we need to invest more in energy research, or don't we? We definitely need to invest more in energy research, as we hope to continue to be a major player on the world market. However, a qualifier here would be that we also need to focus on clean energy solutions: wind, solar, geothermal, hydro, indeed clean coal, if there is such a thing, as was heavily promoted by the hon. Premier in his infomercial and the Speech from the Throne, and cleaner fossil fuels like propane, for example. Today we all in this House received visits from members of the propane producers association. I'm talking about just that. Again, we can be leaders in research: develop, patent, and sell our technologies and products to the world at a premium.

Moving on to goal 4, Mr. Chairman, to accelerate innovation in the ICT sector. Again, it has been reported, as was mentioned during question period, that about half of Alberta's technology companies would consider relocating outside of Alberta because of a lack of funding, weak capital markets, et cetera. So when will the new ICT strategy be completed and released publicly for comment? Is the minister working with Industry Canada and economic development authorities in both Edmonton and Calgary to address this situation? We are working with industry to encourage ICT research, but shouldn't there be a role also for NAIT and SAIT? Does the minister know how many of the new graduate spaces that were announced by the Minister of Advanced Education are going to be reserved for ICT grads?

You know, it is important that we recognize the importance of this ministry and its potential but also to highlight areas which are lacking or need improvement. For example, let me remind you, Mr. Chairman, and everyone in this House, that almost one year ago, on May 12, 2005, exactly, I stood up during question period and asked the hon. minister about provincial funding for Edmonton's wet lab. I asked him back then when this government was going to commit its share of the necessary funding for that facility. Back then it was, actually, almost more than two years after that feasibility study was conducted and the funding from both the city of Edmonton's Economic Development Corporation, the EEDC, and the federal government's western economic diversification program was secured. So the funding was there, but the provincial government did not back then contribute its share. All that was missing was to know when that money was coming forward.

I even commented that delays could lead to the redirection or loss of funding. This was in May 2005. In August of the same year we in the Official Opposition were talking to city of Edmonton officials who hoped to receive final word from this government as to when that money was coming forward. They hoped they would receive this by the end of September '05. They predicted that the situation was going to become much more critical and that cost overruns would be inevitable if that date passed. They even feared that any unjustified delay could jeopardize the quality of the facility built. Needless to say, Mr. Chairman – and you guessed it right – nothing got done.

Just yesterday, Mr. Chairman, April 25, 2006, we learned that Edmonton city council had to vote to allow a $5 million loan to rescue the wet lab project whose costs jumped from $14.2 million to $19.2 million in part because of the delay in receiving the provincial grant as outlined by the EEDC executives in their submission to city hall. They even indicated that there is some risk that some of the added cost might be recouped from taxpayers as the rent charged will not cover this loan in its entirety. The questions back then were and still are today: why this delay, and what's the holdup?

I can continue on a whole number of subjects and issues, but another one that really comes to mind, Mr. Chairman, involves research pertaining to the oil sands. Recently the Liberal caucus visited Fort McMurray as part of our province-wide outreach initiative. Of course, we were interested in learning more about the oil sands and the extraction process and the enormous opportunity and all that stuff, but we also wanted to hear from the people of Fort McMurray about their issues and concerns. One issue that was brought up time and time again was about the copious amounts of water that go into extracting the oil and the fact that it's water that is never replenished. It's water that's lost forever. It ends up in tailings ponds. Some of it just sits there, and a minuscule amount is recycled for on-site cooling or otherwise minor purposes, but the bulk of it is gone. If you take it from the Athabasca River, it's gone.

What research initiative might there be or that is currently being worked on to (a) look for or identify other substances to be used in the extraction process to spare our most valuable resource, water; (b) if it's inevitable that some water is going to be used, how far does our research go to minimize that amount and to maximize how much of it is reclaimed? Is this under AERI maybe, or which other program does it fall under? I don't know. Actually, I can probably even expand a bit more to oil sands extraction technologies themselves. What programs or initiatives are there under this ministry to minimize the adverse impact of oil sand development on the environment?

You know, Mr. Chairman, another layer that I can add here would be with regard to the new kid on the block, namely coal bed methane. Is this ministry currently working on or is it willing to be working on new, safer fracking technologies? Is this minister going to work with Alberta Environment on baseline water testing protocols and technologies? Again, let's put our money where our mouth is and recognize that it's not only an essential service or an obligation to our farmers and ranchers, but it can also be looked at as a revenue-generating and money-saving invention, where we use it locally for our purposes and then export it or sell it to new markets as well.

Moving on, Mr. Chairman, to page 315 pertaining to iCORE. iCORE is definitely a very important program aiding in the attraction and retention of grad students and faculty members in information and communications technology. It has implications for industry, implications on the academic life; however, we occasionally hear complaints about the application and approval process, and in some instances there are allegations that institutions intervene inappropriately in this approval process. So my question would be: do institutions have a legitimate role in screening, evaluating, or otherwise affecting the success or failure, the outcome, of that application?

You know, I have here a letter that was shared with the Official Opposition from a researcher in Calgary. This particular copy of a letter is dated March 28, and he sent it to the Deputy Minister of Innovation and Science. It basically raises the same allegation, that the U of C intervened to intercept an application. This matter is now before the courts. Did it really need to reach that far? Did these researchers have to go to court to prove that they were worth going through the iCORE application? I don't know. I'm not just making a case out of one example, but there are allegations out there. I would appreciate the hon. minister's thoughts and comments on the entire iCORE program but more specifically on the application process: if there's going to be an appeal mechanism for people to, you know, try to appeal before having to resort to legal action.

More on this ministry, Mr. Chairman. In examining the Auditor General's recommendations for the period '04-05 in the Auditor General's report, they found several errors and differences between some information and the source data. I know that towards the end of that report they talk about how the ministry is progressing and that that progress is acceptable or within the parameters that the Auditor General stipulates. I would actually appreciate receiving some information from the hon. minister. You know, what specific methodologies were found to be wrong or inferior that the Auditor General had to raise that, and then what did the hon. minister and his staff do to address that to prevent it from reappearing in the following year or the following years?

Just general questions, Mr. Chairman. I need to know if the minister is able to tell us, whether today or later in writing, what percentage of total research funding is provided without matching funding or matching grants. In essence, you know, how much is it that we give without requiring the applicant to look elsewhere first, and how much of it is done when we actually invite or encourage matching grants? I need to know where that break is.

Also, I need to know what percentage of our research dollars that are allocated through this ministry goes to or is allocated towards government of Alberta funding that is tied to industry projects. I mentioned how, you know, we need our universities to be at arm's length, similarly here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the minister, I would like to maybe remind the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky that Beauchesne 501 to 504 deals with the displaying of exhibits in the Assembly. You might want to look at your desk and take remedial action.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, as usual the Member for Edmonton-McClung has offered very comprehensive and thorough analysis and suggestions. I've always taken his comments in the manner in which they were intended because he does provide some very valuable comments, but I do have to respond to the one remark that he made, whereby he suggested that at some point in time when we trade places. I have no intention of crossing the floor. I don't know if that member was inviting an invitation to cross the floor, but if he is interested, he should call me.

I'm just going to cover a couple of the points you raised. I can't possibly answer everything you raised, but there are a couple of points I do want to make. You started off by talking about looking at the trends of funding, and I think what's important to remember when you look at the funding trends is that if you go back in previous years, there are a number of one-time items that you have to factor out when you look at the support that we give to the particular ministry. I would note that the increase at the time of $30 million, the Alberta Prion Research Institute, the $38 million, were all one-time items. So you should discount that in terms of when you look at the actual trend.

Also, not showing up in our estimates is the impact that increasing the endowment funds has. So if you look at the additional investment of $500 million to the AHFMR, the $100 million to the Alberta ingenuity fund, because those are endowment funds, that actually then begins to increase the amount of research effort that comes out of those institutions. So, in fact, we are seeing a larger impact in particular research.

Lastly, I'll say that – and I've made this comment before – it's not necessarily so important what appears in the estimates of Innovation and Science as the effort that is directed by all of government and other ministries at innovation and research in their areas. Health, for instance, will have areas of mental health research. That's why I used the comment earlier that we're a little department that could. Our role is to influence other departments and make sure that they are continually improving and looking at ways they can research and innovate. So it doesn't all have to be in Innovation and Science.

The member brought up the report that he raised in question period the other day about half of the firms considering leaving because of funding. I would just point out to the member – and he knows this – that that is only one element in a very comprehensive report. Of course, it's an item that attracted media attention because that's the one that they like to zero in on. It has the biggest impact. Again, I would say that that was a very small sample size, and the report itself says, and I'm paraphrasing, that you can't really draw hard-and-fast conclusions on that kind of sample size. I also indicated in my answer in question period that notwithstanding that, there are some trends in there that we've known about, particularly with access to capital, that we have to continue to look at. We have made an initial step, at least, with the investment in AVAC.

I'd also point out that there's a bit of an irony in that report. The same report suggested that we should look at certain incentives like an R and D tax credit. Many of the companies, a large percentage actually, did not take advantage of the tax credits that are available to them. So there's a bit of an irony in that report. I think you have to really look at the report in its entirety in terms of what it says. But it is a good report. I mean, obviously we don't want our companies to leave Alberta. That's the bottom line.

A little bit about energy. I'd just like to remind everybody in the Assembly that energy is a technology business. We often just throw out the term "the energy business." Well, frankly, our energy business is the result of good technology and good people applying good technology. We can use those strengths in everything that we do because we do have good people.

What I'd like to see in clean coal, of course, is a complete move to gasification of coal. Right now through the Alberta Energy Research Institute we're looking at making sure that we understand the characteristics of Alberta coal. While there are gasification technologies available, you have to make sure that they fit to the properties of the coal that we have here in Alberta. We are moving in that direction, and I hope to have some exciting things develop over the next year, which we've been working on.

I also want to pick up on your wet lab comment. We've been following that story a little bit too. I don't want to get into who did what because I'm not sure that that's terribly helpful. I was pleased to see that the city of Edmonton endorsed the continuation of that project in their council meeting yesterday.

There were a number of conditions to that particular wet lab, including the necessity for them to have the lease requirements in place before they could advance the money. It would be unfair to characterize the Alberta government as the reason for the construction overruns because there were a number of conditions that were required in that agreement. Our money did not go to construction. Our money is primarily going to equipment, which has nothing to do with the cost of the construction. So there were a number of different factors. I think the important thing is that our people have to do proper due diligence, and I expect that from them in any kind of proposal. We want to make sure that the money is well spent and well utilized. Together with the city of Edmonton and the federal government that wet lab project is going to proceed, and we'll continue to build on that research park, which is so important. So I did want to comment on that because we have been following the same discussion.

On your comments about a role for NAIT and SAIT I couldn't agree more. Actually, we have had several arrangements with both NAIT and SAIT in terms of helping to develop some of their applied technology. That applies not only to NAIT and SAIT. I also want to see all community colleges across Alberta get involved in that because they have expertise to offer. So I appreciate your comments on that.

The Auditor General's report. Again, if I don't remember all of this, we'll correct it in writing. I believe his comments were directed mainly at how we calculated our performance measures. It had nothing to do with inaccuracy of financial reporting. Our books have always been very properly reported, the expenditures properly recorded, but it's how we calculated some of the – what do you call it? – ratios that was problematic, and we've been paying attention to that and trying to improve that. So thank you for that.

There was one more thing that I was going to say. You made some comments about iCORE, and I've taken note of those. We'll look at those. I haven't been aware of any consistent problems with the process. I do know that the iCORE program has been phenomenally successful in terms of the kind of people that it's attracted and the disproportionate number of graduate students that we have in Alberta as a result of that program. So it has had tremendous outcomes, but we'll review your comments with respect to the process. We'll look into that.

How much is required without matching? I don't know what the percentage is. We'll look at your question on that one, but I think it would be fair to say that we look at leverage as an important element in everything that we do. We don't ever want to put $1 in just from us. We want to leverage that with other granting agencies or industry or whatever so that we can actually bump up the total amount that goes toward particular innovations.

I did want to point out, too, that there is a very good report on the sponsored research revenue to Alberta universities. You go back to '95-96, when total sponsored research at Alberta universities was under $200 million. If you go 10 years later, we're up over about $650 million to Alberta universities. So the growth in sponsored research is a really good indicator of how much commitment that we've had. The province's share, compared to everybody else, has shown the biggest increase. Frankly, where we could do better in the province when you look at all of our things is on the BERD measure, which is the business investment in R and D, to get the business investment up. We lag behind other provinces in that area.

So thank you for your good comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science and his staff as well for preparing a very thorough budget for this coming financial year. I hope that my criticisms are taken in the spirit of constructive assistance in regard to Innovation and Science. I have a very strong personal interest as well as a categorical interest in the success and the expansion of this ministry.

In regard to the history of this ministry I believe that it is in its relative infancy. I was very, perhaps, heartened or even inspired to hear the hon. minister suggest that the job of this ministry is to influence and somehow guide the research and innovation in all departments of this Legislature. In fact, I would like to see that. As you will see, my comments are directed in regard to this comment in quite a complimentary way because one of the issues that I do want to talk about this evening is just maintaining the scientific integrity and independence of research and the value of maintaining the integrity and independence of research when we are looking for science and innovation to in fact help our economy and the people of Alberta in the broadest possible way.

Just very quickly, my analysis of the budget highlights is that this ministry is in fact seeing a decrease of $14 million in its overall budget from 2005-2006. However, I am aware that this is including the one-time $30 million grant to AVAC Ltd. for the IVAC technology commercialization initiative of 2005-2006. Setting aside this one-time $30 million, the program spending will grow, in fact, by $16 million, or 9.7 per cent, of which I am very supportive. However, certainly, as was pointed out previously, I believe we should be increasing this budget by more than this amount because, of course, the overall actual amount of $181 million is quite small in regard to how effective the research can be done. It's very expensive to conduct scientific research, and we need to support that in the most generous way possible. So $2 million for new technology commercialization initiatives in this budget this year, $5 million for the identification and pursuit of priority research initiatives, especially in regard to energy and life sciences, and $9 million for the Alberta Research Council in regard to research and for core funding as well.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, I would say that I would encourage a higher percentage increase in the budget of Innovation and Science over this next year if at all possible because, in fact, the overall budget in actual numbers of dollars is, I believe, quite small.

I'd just like to go back then. As I said, the minister mentioned that his job and the ministry's job is to influence research and innovation in all other departments. I would just like to be more specific in regard to how we might do that in a better quality sort of way. So my first set of comments is in regard to academic integrity and the adherence to pure science as much as possible.

The issue of public dollars being given to private companies appears to be more relevant to some research institutes as opposed to others. The Alberta Energy Research Institute, for example, is entirely a private/public partnership at work, and I certainly don't discount the value of that by any means. On the other hand, though, the university research and strategic investment program directs the public dollars to researchers in public institutions. From the 2004-05 Innovation and Science annual report sponsored research reached $584 million in 2003-04, 35 per cent above the $434 million from the year before.

While we can appreciate that no research institute is in the position to look at research grants and take them for granted or otherwise deny them, so to speak, there is anecdotal evidence that corporate or industry-sponsored research very, very often affects the outcome of the research in question. For example, Dr. Nancy Olivieri from the University of Toronto last year quoted that over 90 per cent of published drug research shows that the drugs, in fact, work well. A 90 per cent success rate in any scientific research is simply not possible, Mr. Chairman, or logical, for that matter. The vagaries of human research are just not that good. Quite frankly, the success rate should be more in the range of 50-50.

I bring this up because, of course, on sponsored research, then, the proposals submitted by students or the researcher may be skewed for what the industry is in fact looking for. If the student or researcher proposes something that is not, perhaps, in keeping with what the company that is sponsoring the research actually wants, they might get passed over.

There is also the matter of government coming to rely on industry to fund all research. You only have to look at the University of Alberta's campus to see the simultaneous lack of government funding and the relative abundance of industry dollars at work. In the past few years engineering, biological sciences, and a host of other very worthy, let me say, Mr. Chairman, science and technology fields have seen their facilities upgraded, often quite dramatically. New buildings are being built. Lab equipment is being purchased, et cetera.

At the same time, more and more of the other faculties have in fact seen their funding eroded, their buildings falling into disrepair, and the faculty staff shrinking. The reason for this divide, in my mind, Mr. Chairman, in part is because industry, particularly the petrochemical industry, has picked up the funding slack for this provincial government, funding those sectors whose research it can benefit from most directly, leaving other sectors, in fact, short of public funding. Unfortunately, this seems to be lost on some of our research initiatives here, and the government is funding neither sector in a satisfactory way.

Speaking of not funding satisfactorily, Mr. Chairman, Innovation and Science's website states:

The Government of Alberta's commitment to energy research is more important today than ever before. Alberta's conventional oil and gas supplies are declining, and relying solely on current methods of production is not an option. Research is needed to develop [other] ways to recover the significant amount of conventional oil that is left behind, as well as less energy intensive methods to extract heavy oil and bitumen. Research is also necessary to enable the energy sector to reduce the impact of greenhouse gases and other emissions.

Now, I find that a bit disconcerting, Mr. Chairman, because nowhere is it mentioned that alternative energy source research is in fact undertaken by the Ministry of Innovation and Science although I do know that they have sponsored some things in regard to this. It's no wonder, then, that the Minister of Environment can only hope for a 2.5 per cent goal of Alberta's total electrical energy to be produced by renewable and alternative energy sources. That would be more than double last year's total, which would be almost negligible.

So I would like to ask the minister then, please, if he would not feel compelled to in fact increase the focus of this ministry to pursue research into alternative fuels. In fact, nonhydrocarbon-based fuels is what I'm trying to promote here. The necessity of this is not in question, and the importance of research at this juncture I think is absolutely critical. In the seven years since this ministry has been created, I would like to ask what percentage of total energy research dollars have been in fact invested in alternative energy sources. I would be curious to know.

The ministry's energy strategy, a clean energy future, actually seems a bit misleading because it says that the province must "develop new sources of energy, such as natural gas from coal beds." Again, why do we have the sole emphasis on extracting more of the same kind of resource rather than, perhaps, switching and extracting another sort of resource? My comments in this House have been clear in this regard. We know that it is possible through the investment of public dollars to in fact move away from hydrocarbon-based fuel dependency. So I'd ask if the minister could please give more details on the clean-coal technology. According to experts, there is no such thing yet.

Now, the potential for biogas, or gasification, is something that I, in fact, have a great deal of interest in as well. Certainly, I'm not being unrealistic in being critical of the coal rhetoric that has been coming from across the floor so far because we do recognize the necessity of developing clean-coal technology, but to presume that we do in fact have it in our possession I think is misleading. Then we have that doubly misleading misappropriation of language, talking about the fact that Alberta coal is, in fact, clean. You know, this is stretching the credibility of all of us here to suggest that the public would just swallow this. In fact, we need to do real work on real solutions to try to burn coal in the cleanest way possible. So gasification is more expensive. The technology requires more research. We have the means by which we could finance and spearhead that research, but let's be honest about what needs to be done and what we are in fact doing.

Finally, the government recently announced the mandate and board members of the new Alberta Information and Communications Technology Institute, so I'd ask the minister if he could please give us the details regarding how the board will be providing direction for public investment in research and development activities throughout the province. For example, I would like to know what proportion of public funds will be directed to private companies in regard to this initiative. How will the public hold accountable the new board? What priorities for research will be established, and how will this be determined? In other words, the whole parameters of this institute.

In regard to the support of Bill 1, Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, the throne speech this year highlighted the creation of a cancer prevention legacy fund. This will help to meet the three goals set by the government: reducing the incidence of cancer by 35 per cent by 2025, reducing fatalities by 50 per cent by 2025 . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, the noise level in here is getting fairly high. If you would like to take your conversations back out into the hallway, that would be more appropriate. Thank you very much.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It works too. That's very good. It's much quieter.

An Hon. Member: It won't last long.

Mr. Eggen: Well, yeah. It won't last very long.

In regard to cancer I would just be curious to know: what role do research institutes and research projects under this ministry play in the government's setting and achieving these goals?

Given that the name of Bill 1 was the prevention rather than treatment, I would be curious to know if this ministry would be putting pressure on others to institute prevention-based initiatives and research into the same, in regard to smoking particularly, and looking as well for genetic solutions to fighting the cancer gene. As well, I would be curious to know what role institutions and projects currently under the Innovation and Science ministry would have to play in this fight against cancer.

My last comments are just of a general nature, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know what the 10 per cent increase to the deputy minister's office budget is specifically targeted towards. Is it to an individual project or initiative? What exactly is it? Number two, why is there such a sharp increase in the innovation and service excellence programming, and what might that be spent on? It's almost a doubling of that line from the budget last year. Finally, what is the nature of the doubling of the innovation and service excellence program? What is this money being spent on? And so on and so forth.

I'd just like to once again thank the minister for his attention to detail. In the spirit of constructive criticism, I might hope that he and his ministry would consider what I have done with my research.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, like the previous member, this member has always been very constructive and helpful in his comments, and he continues to be that. I would say consistent as well because I was expecting him to focus on alternative energy, and he did that. He would have disappointed me if he hadn't talked about that.

I do want to make a few comments to some of your remarks in terms of the influencing and guiding that our ministry tries to do. If you review the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act, you will see that there is a requirement for the ASRA board, as I'll refer to them, to do an annual review of all departments and what they're doing with respect to research and innovation. That's one way in which we provide some guidance and direction to the government as a whole, and it is a part of our legislative mandate. So in hindsight, when you look back at that act that has been passed in my time, it's a very good mandate to hold all of government accountable or at least be able to ask them questions about what they're doing. So there is one element.

You raised a very important question with respect to academic integrity, and I think that's something that we'll always wrestle with: to try to keep a proper balance, make sure that there isn't undue influence from industry. But it also strikes at part of the problem in that we are told continuously that in Alberta we need to do a better job of commercialization and not just pure science. So there is a balance to be sought there, but it is a very important question.

I followed the case that you cited with a great deal of interest when it happened several years ago because it did highlight the problem. I would point out, though, just in terms of pure statistics, that for the '04-05 year of the total sponsored research in universities $264 million – I'm using round figures – was from the province, $250 million from the federal government. It was actually the first year that the province contributed more than the federal government. Only $56 million, actually, came from industry. So I don't think we're out of whack at all in terms of that scenario. But it's a very good question.

Your questions on energy. I will have to review the website to see how much emphasis we do place on alternative energy. I was actually surprised that there was no direct mention made of what we are doing in that area. So we'll check that out and make sure that that is covered because, in fact, we are doing work in that area, and we should talk about that. I do appreciate your approach, recognizing that we do want to move toward using Alberta's existing natural resources. You can't just abandon those fields. But particularly on the coal side, you have to bring technology to a place where it has a minimal impact on our environment. I like to refer to it, basically, as an energy mix. You want to have a good energy mix. You're not going to focus on one at the expense of the other. Again, I appreciate your comments there. You've always been consistent on that.

With the ICT Institute, it is largely strategic in nature in terms of the advice it's giving. It'll operate similarly to all of the other institutes that we currently have in terms of its accountability, in terms of its reporting and its mandate. But, again, we'll report back to you in more comprehensive terms the exact mandate, what the expectations are for its delivery. Really, I would say that, fundamentally, we are looking to renew our ICT strategy from about five or 10 years ago.

I was actually glad that you raised the cancer prevention legacy fund because it was not something that I raised in my comments and actually had intended to earlier. So I was glad you brought that up. How do I put this carefully? You would hope that in the area of research everybody would kind of get along and all collaborate and do things together, but like everywhere else we see that there are vested interests and people that have their own ideas about how things are to be done. So you've got a number of different people working in this area. You've got the Alberta Cancer Board, of course, and you've got the ministry of health. I raised this issue with the Life Sciences Institute at our first meeting and said: I really need your advice on this. We need to not only as a province, but we need to as a country – in fact, it's a global issue – collect and pool all of our talent as much as we can and solve this thing for the good of everybody. It's not just an Alberta problem or a Canada problem. The more we can break down the barriers between researchers, share ideas, and collaborate, the sooner we'll beat this thing. That would be my hope, so I appreciate your comments on that. It's a very important issue to all of us and touches all of us personally. So, again, we'll respond in more detail to your specific questions and appreciate your honest and straightforward manner.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and participate in the estimates of Innovation and Science. Sometimes it's not easy to answer all the questions in a short time, so I request of the hon. minister – he can give me this in writing whenever possible, but I want everything in detail.

Under this core business there are about five main goals. My colleague already discussed three out of the five.

I would like to talk about goal 2, which is to build research capacity. All strategies sound good. A question about budgetary program commitment, strategy 2.1: why not look at the counterpart to iCORE, ICT, and other priority areas? Strategy 2.4: what projects are ongoing to determine the skills required for innovations?

There is considerable scientific basis for believing that innovation is a human capacity nurtured outside of the sciences just as well as within them. While it may be outside this minister's specific administrative area, I wonder if the minister supports initiatives throughout our education system to increase our students' capacity to innovate? Does he also support a new endowment fund, one that would mirror existing ones in science and engineering and health, for arts, social sciences, and humanities? This is a recommendation of the System Transformation Subcommittee of A Learning Alberta review, a policy of the Alberta Liberals, and it could use this minister's support.

Performance measures. There aren't the performance measures to assess whether very many of these strategies are successful. Why not measure science and technology awareness? Why not measure national chairs awarded to provincial professors, et cetera?

Now I move to goal 5, which is to accelerate innovation in the life sciences sector, page 278-9. The Life Sciences Institute and the ICT Institute don't yet seem to have much of a presence on the ministry's website. When will the public be able to go and read about their activities? Key priority areas appear sound on page 278. Key will be the capacity to fund these projects as well as coupling them with adequate monitoring, testing, enforcement where applicable: bioproducts, health and nutrition, platform technologies, sustainable resource management, prion science, water sustainability and safety, et cetera. When will the new water research strategy be developed to support Water for Life, which right now is just rhetoric?

There are other miscellaneous ideas for debate to be filled in by those with interest and expertise. Some ideas and some of my points have already been raised by my colleagues, and I have some other points to raise. Allow me to start with environmental research. Overall, facilitating research in the area of environmental protection and enhancement should be one of the priorities of this ministry, yet it appears pretty minor compared to the other areas. Can the minister just comment on what sort of a balance he believes his ministry is striking to support the kind of sustainable economic development Albertans want?

The next one is clean-coal technologies. When I search on the ministry's website for research projects involving clean-coal technologies, nothing comes up. What projects are being funded to search for these mythical technologies? What is the total value of these projects given the Premier's insistence about the bright future of clean-coal technology? Why return to a technology that we know cannot be as clean or sustainable as promising alternative energy technologies?

Alternative energy. What portion of the AERI activities are going to alternative energy technologies? Does the minister believe this is to be sufficient? Are the minister's funding guidelines and processes fair to all proposals, including those exploring alternative energy technologies?

The next one is agriculture: import costs, biofuels, future of the family farm, making sure innovations and technological advances can be assessed by smaller operations.

Next is forestry: protecting massive public value in forests from pine beetles, value-added industries, et cetera.

I have some financial questions. There are undoubtedly a number of very good things going on in the minister's department. Certainly, increased R and D and strategic research export is needed if this government's dismal record on economic diversification is to be improved. However, it is important for the opposition to ensure that the public is getting a bang for our buck and that the government puts its money where its mouth is. Can the minister explain what led to the decision to increase the spending of last year's budget? If it's important enough to do, it should be important enough to budget for.

A significant amount of the unbudgeted spending went to the technology commercialization initiatives, element 2.0.1. Can the minister outline specific outcomes of this increased funding for technology commercialization? If not, why not? Given this increase, shouldn't there be a specific corresponding performance measure for commercialization? What measure is the minister using to ensure that these public dollars have their intended effects? Can the minister tell us which organizations or entities this additional funding for commercialization went to or what form this funding took? Did it go directly to firms, or is there a program within the Alberta Research Council? Did it get put through the heritage assessments commercialization initiatives? Just how did this work? This is one of my questions.

I also want to know why this minister's budget is decreasing over last year's when the business plan's first goal, page 274, is to increase government spending in support of innovation from 1.42 per cent to 5 per cent over the last 15 years? Not off to a good start. Can the minister explain briefly exactly how his department measures this funding percentage? What line items in which departments go into making it up? Overall, funding for innovation capacity, element 3, is being cut by 12.4 per cent from 2005-2006 forecasts. Research capacity, element 3.0.1, is being reduced by 15 per cent. Energy research, element 3.0.2, is up 12.5 per cent. Life sciences research, element 3.0.3, is up 10.3 per cent. ICT research, element 3.0.4, is staying essentially the same.

There was a significant increase in equipment and inventory purchases under element 2.0.2, page 307. What was this for, and what was the rationale for the year 2006-07 budget that is more than double the budgeted amount of 2005-06 but less than half than what was spent? This trend in substantial off-budget increases last year followed by reductions again this year is reversed in the expense portion of element 2.0.2, innovation and service excellence program. I understand that this stream is part of the innovation program that supports improvements to government service delivery. Can the minister explain this pattern? Would this program fit better under RAGE, particularly now that RAGE has taken over responsibility for corporate information and communication technology?

On page 309 it is reported that the expenses of the Alberta Research Council last year were less than budgeted and now have gone up again but are still projected to be lower than was budgeted for the year 2005-06. Why?

On page 311 there is significant fluctuation in other revenue in the budgeted amounts, about $2,458 million less than was budgeted for the year 2005-06, $48.7 million. Is this a reflection that some of the revenue streams were not as good as anticipated? Is this related in any way to commercialization initiatives that are not as successful or realized as quickly as you had hoped for, or is this contract revenue? If so, which organizations or companies contracted with the department? Which organizations or individuals did the contractor research? Again, on page 311 I note that within the Alberta Research Council there are two subelements: number one, core research funding, and the second one, contract research. Contract research is budgeted to be more than 40 per cent higher than the core research funding. It is typical for contract research to be significantly higher than core research. Can the minister explain why this is so, based on his understanding of how each of these types of research support various departmental and provincial goals?

On page 311 again, under innovation capacity, this pattern of overspending in the year 2005-06 followed by the reduction in 2006-07 is repeated for the expenses for the Alberta science and research investments program. Can the minister explain the need for the increase and, if this increase was warranted, how he determines to reduce it in the future?

The ministry has announced that a fourth stream of ASRIP funding was being developed that would co-ordinate more specifically with the federal funding, particularly the Canadian Foundation for Innovation. Wouldn't an entirely new funding stream with the potential to leverage additional federal dollars warrant a greater increase?

Page 311 again. Expenses for the Alberta Science and Research Authority have doubled, from $1.1 million to $2.2 million. While this is not a lot of dollars, it is a substantial percentage increase that requires explanation.

Page 311 again. Can the minister explain the rationale behind the allocation of funding to the three research priorities for his department: energy, $21.6 million; life sciences, $17.2 million; and ICT, $14.7 million?

Page 315. iCore is potentially a very important program, aiding in the attraction and retention of grad students and faculty members in the information and communication technology fields and connecting industry and academia. However, we occasionally hear complaints about the application and approval process. In some instances there are allegations that institutions intervene inappropriately in this process. Do institutions have a legitimate role in screening, evaluating, or otherwise affecting the success or failure of funding applications?

I also want to pass on some concerns I have heard about an organization that this caucus has always been supportive of, namely the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. There are apparently some medical researchers in Alberta who have concerns. The concerns cut across a number of issues, and I would welcome the minister's comments on each of these, or perhaps he could undertake a review of some of the terms of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, known as AHFMR. This foundation's goals and the institution's strategic goals may not always match, putting at least some researchers in a difficult position.

I'm talking about the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research again. This foundation has a poor reputation, among some at least, for not providing sufficiently competitive salary packages. This foundation has an unpredictable evaluation process for ongoing salary support. This foundation supports basic salaries rather than specific medical research, and it's been reported that the University of Calgary's Faculty of Medicine is more dependent for basic salaries on this foundation than is the U of A.

On a related topic I would ask the minister to have a discussion with his colleagues in Advanced Education and the institution to ensure that everyone is on the same page. There are numerous accounts of how the new Heritage Medical Research Building was built as a shell, but the responsibility for equipping it has basically been off-loaded onto the institution and, more troubling, onto the academic positions. [Mr. Agnihotri's speaking time expired] Just one minute, please. These doctors are running around begging for money to equip this building rather than attending to their research and their patients . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, your time has elapsed.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, he certainly deserved the same courtesy that I got for going a little bit over his time, so we're more than happy to give that to him.

You asked a lot of specific questions that we'll address in writing. I will make just a couple of quick comments from your remarks. You raised the issue of research capacity, and you talked about the arts, social sciences, and humanities, which is a topic that comes up on more than a few occasions. Quite clearly, in our approach we have targeted in quite a focused manner ICT, energy, and life sciences.

I appreciate your comments on the arts, social sciences, and humanities. It is a topic that needs to continue to be discussed, so I do appreciate your comments on that.

[Mr. Prins in the chair]

You made some comments about science awareness, and again that's a critical component in terms of making sure the public is aware of the science that we do and understanding the science that we do and understanding what the benefits are. A challenge that I often give to researchers is that they have to help me to translate to the taxpayer the benefit of what they're doing and how it actually impacts on their lives. Most of us, when we look back, understand how science and research have affected our lives, so intuitively we say, "Yeah, there are going to be good things that come as a result," but still it's an ongoing challenge. We have increased the budget on science awareness, particularly at the student level. We have beefed up our budget this year on that one.

You talked about page 278, "accelerate innovation in the life sciences sector." I would just comment on that particular item in that we just established this year the Life Sciences Institute. The act provides for an MLA co-chair for all of our institutes. I deliberately appointed myself as co-chair of this institute because I wanted to raise the profile of that particular institute and the importance of it in the future. A lot of us worry about our dependence on oil and gas and the energy sector, and really the message I was trying to send with that is that we see the life sciences sector as a very important future part of the province, and we're trying to give it some profile and some direction. So I appreciated your comments on that, and I hope that's helpful.

You asked a lot of questions, some financial questions about technology commercialization and getting a bang for our buck, and those are good questions. I think you asked some questions about measurement. We do an annual report on the scientific activities of the Alberta government whereby we analyze all of the contributions on science activities and related science activities, and we publish those to our stakeholders annually. So we do a continual review of our activities. Again I'm not going to get into the specifics, but that is something where we do to try to hold ourselves accountable and measure progress we're making or not making.

Just a few comments about the Alberta Research Council. You talked about that. You were right to point out the contract revenue side. The contract revenue or expense side in our budget is largely outside of my control. A substantial portion of the revenue from the Alberta Research Council and the accompanying expenses are a result of contract revenue either with government agencies or private business. So it just becomes mainly a flow-through in our consolidated books.

We have to take the numbers that they give us in terms of their budget. If they're down or up, I have no way to control that, but we do have to report it this way. The annual government contribution is quite clear, and we do stick to that figure in terms of what we provide them for operations. But, again, when you look at our budget, you have to factor out the contract revenue to really get a fair picture of the trends of our support for research and innovation activities. Yeah, when you're reading our budget documents, it can be very confusing because you have to factor out all these one-time things and these contract revenues, and it does make it difficult.

Lastly, just on the AHFMR I've noted your comments about the concerns that you have heard. I wasn't aware of such concerns, so I have taken note of that. I would say that this is the 25th anniversary of the AHFMR. I think it was last year we had an international review of the activities and results of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medicine Research, and they gave a very strong, ringing endorsement of its success and its impact. I think that overall its impact from a goal point of view has been very, very excellent and very strong, but you have raised some issues and ones that we will review when we look at the notes.

Thank you for your comments.

The Acting Chair: Thank you to the hon. minister.

The next speaker is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in the estimates debate this evening on the Department of Innovation and Science. Certainly, whenever we look at this department, it could be considered the quiet department, but hopefully it is a quiet achiever.

Now, there are many different research projects going on within this department, and I've been listening to the discussion this evening on coal and clean-coal technologies. Certainly, there is research going on that I understand the department is monitoring. This research is going on in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, with CO₂ sequestration. I think this is a very important research project. A lot depends on this project. The information I have is that it is going quite well and that the CO₂ sequestration project that's going on in Yorkton is raising significantly the production of mature oil formation.

Whenever we talk about the capture and the storage of CO₂ in this department, we're missing one word there, and that's the capture, the compression, and the storage of CO₂ in flue gas emissions. The word "compression" is important because that's the one that costs you the money. I would like to know what progress has been made on the research in this province by this department, precisely how much money is being spent, and where it is being spent in this province on CO₂ sequestration projects. It is the future.

If we're going to have coal-fired generation in this province, hopefully in the near future we are going to look at the capture and the compression of those flue gas streams. I think we should be experimenting with the entire flue gas stream to see if it can be used to enhance oil recovery in some of our mature fields around our coal-fired plants west of the city. Certainly, there are any number of mature oil fields there. I would like to know what we're doing with that research. I certainly see where there are significant amounts of money.

Maybe the minister has already mentioned this and I missed it, but what exactly is being spent this year on agricultural research? It is my information that we spent $38 million on prion research last year. Is that continuing? I think so, or at least I hope it is. I apologize to the minister in advance if he has discussed this earlier. Mr. Chairman, you're right: it was quite loud in here. I may have missed that. An update on that and the total figure: I would be very grateful for that information.

Last year there was $700,000 spent in this department encouraging innovation – innovation – within the government of Alberta. So the Department of Innovation and Science was spending $700,000 on a project to encourage innovation. I didn't think it would be necessary to spend any money on that. I just thought they would do it anyway, particularly with the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency showing leadership and leading the charge, if I can use those words in this matter.

The department was set up with a significant amount of fanfare. In fact, in the last fiscal year there was a $2.5 million transfer from this department to Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I'm wondering if there is going to be another transfer from this department and if RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency, is going to go even larger. I would like to know the answer to that question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see in the government estimates for 2006-07 on page 312 the full-time equivalent employment statistics; the department has 108. That's no change from last year. The Alberta Research Council has close to 600 employees, and in iCORE there are four employees – four.

Now, I just thought I would have a look and see how this department does in hosting expenses, and I thought I would have a look through the Alberta Gazette for the year 2005. The department, I think, is very gracious when they host. Certainly, they do it quite often. I'm not saying that it's not necessary. It probably is. There are a lot of scientists that need to get together and talk.

If we look through this – and these are just rough calculations – there are well over $115,000 in hosting expenses that exceed $600 amounts. What amounts are there below $600 that have not been listed publicly in the Alberta Gazette for this department. If I could have a breakdown of that with the department itself, with the Alberta Research Council, and with iCORE, I would be very grateful. If we're spending that amount over 600 bucks, how much are we spending in amounts less than that? I don't see it in the budget here. I'm looking at the statement of operations, the expense amounts. I don't see it listed in here, and I think taxpayers have every right to know.

Now, iCORE has four employees. It's a small part of the operation, but they have hosted significant events. One was a conference in Banff for $36,000. This was the Banff Informatics Summit from June 9 to 11, 2004. This was obviously in Banff, three and one-half days of open lectures. The conference only lasted three days. There were three and a half days of lectures and workshops for iCORE chairs and the research teams. Are there any events of this nature scheduled for this fiscal year? If there are, how much is it going to cost? That's just one example.

There's a significant amount of money here. A year ago there was $2,300 spent on a press conference. The function was a joint launch of two new iCORE research programs. The press conference was held in two locations, as I understand it: in Edmonton and in Calgary. This press conference was to increase awareness of the new research programs. Well, that's fair enough, I guess. I just want confirmation from the minister that these expenditures are valid considering the fact that there seems to be only four full-time employees in that part of the department. Now, there are certainly other listings here, but people are very, very busy hosting in this department, and I would just like the minister's input on this and what is planned for this fiscal year.

Also, the recruiting and retaining of scientists. I understand that that is going quite well. How much of a problem or is it not a problem to attract top-notch young scientists from across Canada to the Research Council?

If he could provide, Mr. Chairman, answers to those questions, I would be very grateful. Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I would just thank the member for his questions. Again, as with the other ones we will endeavour to reply in specifics in writing. He does refer to us as a quiet department. I'm reluctant to give this advice to the opposition, but maybe they should give me a harder time, which might help get our budgets up so we can spend more money on innovation like they support. But you can just kind of ignore that advice.

The member talked a lot about CO₂ sequestration and the importance of that, and we can certainly find out that information and provide it. I would note for the hon. member – and he probably is aware of this – that there is a company, actually, a private company out of Red Deer that has on its own, without any government support, captured all the CO₂ out of the petrochemical plants and is using it for enhanced oil recovery in oil fields. They're doing that because the economics make sense. Quite often the challenge in this particular area is the transportation issue of getting the CO₂ to the depleted oil fields. So it's not necessarily so much the technology as it is that particular question.

Again, it is an important area. It was actually highlighted in some of the events that I attended. I went to the Montreal conference on climate change. That was a topic there, CO₂ sequestration capture and storage, so the member has raised that particular issue.

You raised the issue of prion research and the $38 million. The $38 million went to the Alberta ingenuity fund to fund a multiyear research program on prions. It was not all invested in research projects the year it went to the ingenuity fund, but it was intended to be spread out over five, six, or seven years. So it's actually an ongoing kind of commitment to prion research. It was a one-time transfer of money but a multiyear expenditure on finding science-based solutions to the BSE issue.

The member has raised a number of questions about hosting expenses. Quite admittedly, Mr. Chairman, we do get involved in a number of scientific conferences, and we make no apologies for that. That's how we build relationships between researchers in different jurisdictions and different countries so that we can share knowledge, share expertise. You can't always do that sitting behind a desk in your office. You have to get out and meet people and talk to them, so we do that.

Another thing we're involved in, of course, is the Banff Venture Forum whereby we bring venture capitalists into our province from across Canada and from the United States to listen to presentations by our companies. We put money into helping that happen because that's an important element of commercialization, of building a venture capital industry in the province and providing that capital education endowment fund. The fund would help achieve system excellence throughout Alberta, resolve postsecondary accessibility issues for both rural and urban Albertans, and provide funding and spaces for apprenticeship and training programs across the province. Twenty-five per cent would go into a capital account to eliminate the province's $7.2 billion infrastructure debt over the next 10 years and to address critical municipal infrastructure plans across the province. Invest 5 per cent of the annual budget surplus, up to $500 million, into an endowment fund for the humanities, social sciences, and arts to supplement existing funding and encourage development in these fields.

The second one: spending nonrenewable resource revenue is not sustainable. A number of organizations are proposing savings strategies—the Official Opposition, Canada West Foundation, Fraser Institute, former Premier Lougheed, and some other economists—but I think this Tory government, Mr. Chairman, is still not listening to our policies and policies from very wise people. While every time they are asking us to show the policies, when we show them the policies, they say that it's crap, and sometimes they throw it out. I don't know.

This third one I want to mention is this: failing to adequately save resource revenue for current and future Albertans.

The fourth and the last: using resource revenue for annual budgetary spending demonstrates a lack of fiscal discipline. The consequence is that the province fails to show Albertans a clear vision or road map for the future. In contrast, in 1976 Alaska learned from its previous oil boom, when it spent most of the revenue on short-term program spending.

Everyone in this province is saying that we should legislate to save, and this government is legislating to spend. It is unbelievable. We have a plan for investing Alberta's surplus dollars and would create a lasting legacy for this province, but where is the government's plan? We need a strong, long-term vision, not a one-time drop in the pan. Instead of talking about where we will invest the surplus during the next quarter, let's talk about the next quarter of a century. How do we want Alberta to look 50 years from today?

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, this present government is a directionless government. They have no foresight. There's a huge windfall, and they are spending money like drunken sailors, some people say. This is the time, if not for us at least for our children and our grandchildren, when we must have long-term, sustainable policies on our resources.

We have seen that this government has not produced any policy on capping municipal education property tax. The teachers' pension plan is still there. They only throw money when there is a dispute or something, a lump sum amount of money without any long-term future plans.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Failing to add funds for the future. I know they invested $1 billion in the heritage savings fund, which is a good thing, but I want to see the funds go into the savings fund according to a plan. So far they don't have a plan. I would say that they just put in some lump sum amount of money depending, I would say, on the mood of the government.

Eliminate health care premiums. This issue was raised last election and the election before, and that issue is still there. Lots of stakeholders keep on asking or writing letters to my constituency, and I don't have an answer for them. I can only request the members sitting here, and they can pass it on. They can discuss it in their caucus. This is a tax, and we should have a policy. We should discuss this very seriously. I know that lots of members across the floor believe that this health care premium is a tax and that it should be eliminated, but it's still there.

This government throws money if they see problems when they are drowning in cash, and their strategic plan has gone out the window. I haven't seen any diversification policy. Electricity deregulation: do you think it's working? Most of the people, all parties, know that it's totally a failure. Why is it a failure? Some people say that it's ideologically based and that it was not thoroughly discussed or whatever. I know that if we come back to a regulated system, it will cost a huge amount of money. There are so many factors involved. We should seriously consider this because people are still complaining about their utility bills, and every time somebody asks me, I don't have the answer. I am here to tell each and every member here to think about it, at least for the people who elected you. They put trust in you, and they are paying more money because of the wrong policies of the present government.

The next one I want to discuss is diversification. If you have any policy on that, I would love to read that. Lots of people are asking. This oil or gas or all the resources will finish some say in 20 years, some 25 years. At least we should stand on our, you know, feet. I mean, we are answerable to the people. We should have a proper policy on this particular issue as well.

I already mentioned the resource policy. Environmentalists are not happy. Every day during question period questions are asked, and the answers, everybody knows, are not the answers stakeholders want to listen to. It's not appropriate what they want. As members of the opposition we can just ask the question. Seriously, if we don't have a proper environmental policy at least for 20 years, 25 years, then I think it's not good for all of us, good for our coming generations.

The government has banned deficit budgets. Why don't they ban nonemergency budget spending? I mean, if they can ban a deficit budget, why can't they ban their budget spending? Every time there are estimates or budget debates, the government keeps on spending, overbudgeting, and there's no stopping. Sometimes even 25 per cent overbudgeting. Twenty-five per cent overbudgeting. If I have a certain amount of money, I certainly will look into the matter. If I have a certain amount of income, I will spend accordingly. The hon. Finance minister is here, so I request that of her too whenever we have a budget. I know that there could be some problems, but in future we shouldn't overspend. It should be like we have a law. We ban the deficit budget. Why can't we do something to stop this nonemergency budget spending? That's what I want to see instead of overspending budget after budget.

This is my second year here, but the members who have been here for the last 10, 15 years are talking about this budget thing. This government keeps on repeating. They are not listening. If we really listen to the people who elected us—it's about time. Listen to them, and don't overspend our budget. This government is always proclaiming accountability, and they always proclaim that they are fiscally responsible. I don't see anything. If the government is fiscally responsible, if the government is accountable to the people, then we have to have long-term sustainable policies. I don't see any.

The government uses taxpayer money as a political football. We have had a huge surplus in the last few years. That doesn't mean that we just keep on spending like crazy, especially when election times come and they just throw the money. This is not democratically right. It's about time to think, but for the last many, many years just to win the election, throw some money, sometimes in the name of rebates, sometimes in the name of resource cheques or whatever. I don't mind. Lots of people are asking me about the $400 cheque. They say, “Why don’t you guys like us to get the cheque?” I said: “I’m not against giving you the money. I want the government to give you more money than this, but they should have a policy like Alaska. They are giving the dividend, but they are not giving money from the principal.”

What I want to see is a plan where they have a proper savings fund. Out of that savings fund, whatever the interest – let’s talk about the total royalty. In approximately 12 years time if we have a royalty of about $130 billion, it’s a huge, huge amount of money. If we had had a plan 12 years back, $130 billion in the bank, that dividend, I mean, Albertans could have, maybe, $1,000 a year. Now, the government is using that taxpayers’ money as a political football. They are playing games with Albertans’ money. It’s not our money; it belongs to Albertans. They sacrificed a lot, and they deserve to see a policy on the resources. They deserve to see a policy on savings plans and a diversification strategy.

Another thing. People are talking about the shortages of labour. We have a question period. The critic for human resources is asking questions; some other people are. I’ve received numerous calls from my constituents. Some people like the foreign workers; some people don’t like the foreign workers. But if we sit down, maybe all party members sit on an all-party members’ committee, and discuss the shortages of labour and make a proper policy, that would really, really help Albertans who put their trust in us. But this fiscal responsibility is not that. We are only leaning towards one class.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It’s with interest that I rise to participate in the debate this evening in committee on Bill 24, which is going to increase the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes from $4.75 billion to $5.3 billion. Certainly there have been questions from previous speakers in regard to the spending habits of this provincial government. There are many, many people from different walks of life and different organizations who have concerns about the spending by this government. In 10 years spending has essentially doubled. We still have the same problems with our public health care, certainly with public education, our roads, our bridges. We seem to be spending more and more. I don’t know whether it’s the infrastructure deficit that we can’t eliminate because of the past, when we avoided even the debate on if there was an infrastructure deficit and how large it was.

Now, certainly the Minister of Finance – and this is the first opportunity I’ve had to publicly state that I appreciate her measure in the budget to remove some of the long-term debt that the Alberta Social Housing Corporation held with the heritage savings trust fund. We discussed this last summer, I believe, at a heritage savings trust fund meeting, and the minister went away, I think did the right thing, and got rid of that debt.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

That was a good thing to do. I was hoping also that the savings for the Alberta Social Housing Corporation would be used to provide much-needed additional housing or housing units. Maybe I will be pleasantly surprised in the next fiscal year, and that will be done. I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. minister for taking the initiative to do that because in this day and age, with our fiscal surplus, that deal just didn’t make any sense. I appreciate the hon. minister’s efforts, again, to help that situation.

Now, with this budget, as I said earlier, everyone has some concerns. When we go through this in the limited amount of time that we spend, Mr. Chairman, in discussing each department, it doesn’t look like we could cut much. Every dollar is being prudently allocated or spent. But when you look in the blue books, the public account documents, at what actually was spent by this government, I’m not so sure that we are spending our money prudently. In fact, I’m convinced we’re not. Yes, I’m convinced we’re not spending our money wisely.

Now, you see the global amounts in each department. I’m just going to pick Health and Wellness, and we could start at the minister’s office, and we could go through the next element: physicians’ compensation, on-call programs, primary care. We can go through to the regional health authorities, we could go into the Justice department, and we see these line items, these elements with X amount of dollars. But when you see the spending come out the other side in the blue books and you see the amount that, for instance, IBM gets for supplies and services, you see the amounts that we spend even in office furniture – RGO comes to mind. I don’t know whether these contracts to this RGO outfit are bid or tendered or whether they’re just on some sort of system that doesn’t agree with the free-enterprise system, where they’re sole service contracts or whatever they are. Now, you see, we’re spending millions of dollars. Even in my own office, Mr. Chairman, I’ve been offered new furniture, and I’m quite happy with the old stuff. There doesn’t seem to be any end to the spending. I can understand where people are trying to look after me and give a person good working conditions, but I’m quite satisfied with that old green leather furniture that the Social Crediters bought. It’s still functional, and it’s still comfortable. So, you know, a tiny measure like that. The Minister of Municipal Affairs is shaking his head, but tiny measures like that, if you save small amounts here and there, add up. They certainly add up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was anxious to participate in the debate. It’s not long ago since that hon. member was quoted on the budget process in this province, the hon. member being one of the leadership contenders and the former Minister of Advanced Education. He indicated in the Edmonton Journal last month that he’s not too keen on the idea of more cheques. These are the legacy payments. We’re talking about another legacy payment. We had a legacy payment of $1.4 billion here, the Premier’s legacy payment. I’m concerned that Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, is just softening up the Provincial Treasurer’s purse for another legacy payment, and I don’t think that that is in the best interests of the province at this time. The former Advanced Education minister, as I said, was not keen on the idea of more cheques.

Mr. Chairman, a former member of this Assembly, a former Minister of Economic Development, no less, Mark Norris, also a candidate for the Premier’s office, in the same article – pardon me; this is from the Calgary Herald, on March 22 of this year – indicated that he had concerns as well. He speaks out against this idea of another legacy payment or rebate. He goes on to say here that repeated rebates will become “habit.” He doesn’t say it’s a bad habit. He doesn’t say that it’s a good habit. He says that it’s a habit. He also states that they could also lead to demands for an annual resource dividend similar to the one found in Alaska. He concludes by stating . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, there's a lot of noise being generated from this area over here. I know that they're probably important conversations, but they could take place out the back. If you would allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have to take Mr. Norris's words in this House seriously. This gentleman is one of the contenders for the Progressive Conservative leadership. He states: "I would hate for people to say 'Welcome to Alberta. Here's your cheque'."

Mr. Norris also adds in this article that the massive budget surpluses experienced by the government in recent years – and there's a $7.4 billion surplus forecast for this year – are partly due to "bad budgeting and overtaxation." Yes, hon. minister. Bad budgeting and overtaxation. This is from the Calgary Herald. This is from Mr. Mark Norris. If a former minister of this House, the former Minister of Economic Development, is stating that there has been bad budgeting and overtaxation, we should take a look at what that former hon. member had to say, and we should consider that when we're discussing Bill 24 here. What exactly does the former member, Mr. Norris, mean by bad budgeting? Does he agree with this side of the House? Does he agree with the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that spending is out of control on that side of the House and what the hon. member stated about the lead-up to the next election? If you think spending is out of control now . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This hon. member nor no one on this side of the Assembly thought we should expand the size of cabinet and then have this Department of RAGE. Goodness, we would like to see a smaller size government spending less money.

The Chair: Hon. member, I believe the Speaker has cautioned us in the House before about using proper names for departments instead of acronyms.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I apologize to the hon. minister. The Restructuring and Government Efficiency department.

Now, Mr. Norris had concerns about bad budgeting and overtaxation. We talked a little bit about the bad budgeting practices. Many members have expressed some concerns. But overtaxation brings me to the next point, our gasoline tax. Hopefully, the hon. minister is studying this just like the hon. minister studied the idea of reducing the payments for the Alberta Social Housing Corporation that were in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Some day I'm going to open the paper and I'm going to be surprised because the hon. minister is going to agree that maybe while these crude oil prices are as high as they are at the wellhead, we could reduce our take at the pump on our provincial tax on gasoline from 9 cents down to 5 cents and give everyone a little bit of a break. Now, I don't know. The next time I see Mr. Norris I'm going to ask him if he considers that to be one of his issues of overtaxation.

I wonder about the future. Hon. members were talking earlier, Mr. Chairman, about future revenues to this province and who will be paying the tax bill in 15, 20 years. Will a large percentage of that come from personal income tax? Will it come from corporate tax? Will it come from resource royalties for this provincial government? Who will pay that? Hopefully, Mr. Norris is going to discuss this whole issue of overtaxation at length during the upcoming campaign. That's certainly going to be an interesting campaign.

Those are some of the ideas from some of the individuals who want to lead this party. They're not very far off the mark when they express concerns about how we're budgeting.

Certainly, when you look at the budget again, there is room for improvement. You look at some of the things that this side of the House has suggested. Before I conclude, I really have to remind all hon. members of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's idea of having money set aside. We need to set aside a lot of money – we really do – for the hon. minister's grandchildren. I believe it was last year during the Queen's visit that the hon. minister's granddaughter was in this Assembly. We look at that, and we think that perhaps she will follow in her grandmother's shoes. In 40 years, 45 years, maybe she'll be the Minister of Finance. She'll be wondering: "Did they save the money they should have saved in the heritage savings trust fund? One year they made an announcement that if they had inflation-proofed it, it would really be valued at $19 billion, not $13 billion. If they even had inflation-proofed it, it would have this value. Maybe they should have been more anxious to save money than just spend it in frivolous ways."

10:40

I consider that legacy payment to be frivolous. When I go through the Alberta Gazette, Mr. Chairman, and I see the amounts that we're spending on road construction and the increases in those contracts, I have to question how this whole thing is being administered. We can't blame this on the high cost of steel, or we can't blame it on a shortage of cement, or we can't blame it on machines or the fuel to power them. We have to look at how we're administering these contracts. Contractor after contractor seems to be going back to Treasury Board for contract increases that go from 15 to 20 per cent, in some cases to 96 per cent. The question is: are we managing these resources wisely?

Again I would urge caution in support of this bill, and I would like the government to consider the Alberta Liberal plan. The Alberta Liberal plan would be to take our dollars, save about a third of it, spend about a third of it on infrastructure, and then take the rest and invest it in our future by making postsecondary education accessible and affordable to as many Albertans who would like to improve the likelihood that they will improve their compensation packages at their jobs by getting more and better education. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation has grave reservations about those ideas, but the voters in the last election certainly did not. They liked the idea.

Mr. Lund: Why didn't you get more seats then?

Mr. MacDonald: We got a lot more votes, and we got a lot more seats. A lot more. We will work hard, and we will see what happens in the next election.

An Hon. Member: I can hardly wait.

Mr. MacDonald: Neither can I. I'm looking forward to it actually. I might even get down to Rocky Mountain House and campaign. If I have time, I will.

Certainly, one of the things that this government has done is put us in this surplus position, where we do have a fiscal surplus. After the silly deals that were made, sometimes land transactions for a dollar, sometimes in the amounts of blocks, 90 acres, 100 acres, the relevance with this bill, Mr. Chairman, is that we are now looking at what to do with the surplus. We had a deficit from the same government. We have to make sure that we don't repeat the same mistakes they made and increase the deficit. Some of these deals that they made: bad deals, really bad deals.

This idea of spending money on special warrants. I was just looking at some papers before I had an opportunity to speak on that. We can't go back there.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had a 10:30 appointment, so I'm going to be brief. You've got other people that want to speak on it. I really appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for allowing me to jump the queue here and speak to it. I have to stand and say that I'm against this bill. I would have liked to have seen an amendment that maybe would have made it appropriate, the fiscal irresponsibility bill, and then could possibly look at voting on being irresponsible. We're in a unique situation here in the province of Alberta, Mr. Chairman, in that we've hit the lottery. We have money coming in. But too often we see those people that have done so well for years run into big winnings, and in less than a year they've destroyed themselves. Money is something that is very difficult to handle.

I was at an investment seminar years ago, and the person was presenting and talking about living within your budget and the importance of always being fiscally responsible and saving, or paying yourself, 10 per cent minimum and putting it away. He talked about Ivana Trump and the fact that she spent $5,000 a week in maintaining her house with flowers, and he went through all the things. She couldn't change her lifestyle when she got divorced, and the courts awarded her that same amount because that was the lifestyle she was living. We are definitely getting that way, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. members from Lac La Biche-St. Paul and Edmonton-Calder, there's a lot of noise being generated from your area. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor. If you need to carry on your conversation, please do so outside.

Please carry on.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have a real problem here. Even in the Aon report that we spent $1.3 million dollars for, they projected that in short order our revenue from oil and gas is going to drop from $13 billion down to $6 billion. Even Aon has projected, using government figures, that we're going to be in a position here in short order, not accounting for the increase in health care costs, where we're not going to be able to have a sustainable budget. We've continued to bloat the size of government, bloat the budget to an unprecedented level, and it's just, as I said before, irresponsible to go on this spending spree and say that we're doing it for Albertans. We may be, but we're certainly not doing it for the next generation of Albertans.

There is not the money going into infrastructure and long-term facilities that are going to benefit us in the long run. We've gone through one cycle where we've had to blow up hospitals, shut down hospitals and recreation facilities that organizations can't afford to keep up. The last time government went on one of these spending sprees – and I just am amazed that they need to increase this amendment from $4.75 billion up to $5.3 billion. It just isn't necessary.

I strongly object to this bill, and I think that Albertans feel the same way, that we don't need to amend this. If anything, we should step back and follow Norway at this time. We should be shooting for the goal of putting all of our oil and gas revenue into the heritage trust fund for another day and start living off the interest rather than living off the principal and eroding it away. In 20 years it hasn't grown, and it's a major concern.

I appreciate the time to speak on this and hope that we have a standing vote on this so that people can be held accountable for voting for this increase in the budget.

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, I'd like to apologize to the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I meant to say the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I would ask that this area please respect the members that are recognized to have the floor.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest in speaking to Bill 24, Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006. I haven't had an opportunity to speak on this yet, and I confess that I have a number of serious concerns that this bill brings to mind. I certainly would like to be on the record as opposing the essence and substance of this bill.

I would like to ask, first of all: what exactly was the point of passing the Fiscal Responsibility Act if it has to be amended every year to allow this government to continue its misspending of oil revenues? The stated purpose of the Fiscal Responsibility Act, Mr. Chairman, when it was first introduced was to allow for sustained program funding when prices fall in the energy market. So no matter how unlikely such a fall might seem, this government cannot continue to ask for a bigger slice of the pie no matter how worthy the projects might be, because the pie, in fact, is getting smaller each year. It's being eaten up much quicker. Since these are all nonrenewable resources, we might find ourselves without any pies at all in the future.

This government is consistently stepping away from sustainable resource development. The entire revenue system is built around oil and gas: not taxes, not other industries but nonrenewable, hydrocarbon-based energy. When the oil and the gas dries up or we have finally exhausted these resources to any real degree and perhaps compromised the environment to be able to produce much of anything else, then on what will this government depend for revenues for programs it has made dependent on such resources? I myself fully intend to stay in this fine province, and I would like my family to do so as well. I refuse to leave, Mr. Chairman, a legacy that is not sustainable for those future generations. I believe it's incumbent upon all of us here to think of those people as well.

When we're done exporting our oil and have neither saved a portion of the proceeds for future generations nor a portion of the oil itself for domestic use, what will our program spending rest on? The government is chronically spending surplus money and, after we finish with our budget, unbudgeted surplus money and is chronically spending far over and above the tax base that we've set out for ourselves, all the while in fact reducing that very tax base and increasing our dependence on nonstable sources of income. This is a recipe, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, for disaster in the future. Frankly, we as the New Democrat opposition caucus are surprised, to say the least, that the government is in fact asking for this increase yet again.

Last year while debating Bill 37, both the Official Opposition and the NDP opposition expressed very serious concerns relating to unplanned, off-budget spending of the underestimated resource revenue. Given that we keep raising this issue, on a perennial basis it seems, that we keep trying to get this government to establish long-term spending and savings plans of some sort for both resource revenue and surplus monies, how can we be asked yet again, then, to sign off on an increase that will, sure, go to good and necessary programs but whose funding should be guaranteed and stable rather than dependent on the peaks and valleys of the energy market? It's as though the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who voted for members of the opposition parties don't seem to count for anything in the overall decisions that are made here in this Chamber.

How can this government give corporate tax breaks as well to the tune of $265 million and, at the same time, in the same breath in fact, ask to access an additional $550 million in oil revenues? Might we not simply go without those corporate tax breaks this year and cut the additional $68 million, say, on the horse-racing subsidies and finally close that money-losing business in Swan Hills? These are a few things that we could easily swing together to raise that $550 million. The government could as well access $214 million from what it's squirreling away in the capital and sustainability funds. Instead of spending the additional $550 million, this could go into the heritage fund and perhaps begin a trend of saving oil revenues, Mr. Chairman, instead of spending them. We have a problem with sustainability, and in the long term it will only come back to haunt us.

One of the biggest issues, I guess, that I can see with this budget is that $265 million in corporate tax breaks into an already overheated economy, Mr. Chairman, just speaks not only of lack of planning, but it's almost like it's a deliberate overheating of the already very hot economy. We can't just look at booms as a monolithically positive event. There are many problems that are associated with them, and booms will increase the possibility of bust, quite frankly, in terms of economics. So spending and throwing extra spending pressures into an economy that's already overheated is, in fact, very dangerous and has consequences not only for this province but for the entire Canadian economy.

Why has this government been so resistant to dedicating 30 per cent of its oil revenues to savings as was done by previous Conservative governments? Clearly, we can afford it now, and with dwindling resource revenue looming on the not-so-distant horizon, it is becoming increasingly necessary to face the fact that our resource-based economy, our fossil fuel-based economy can't continue to go on as it has for so long.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do speak out quite strenuously against this particular bill, and I hope that we can find some other way by which we can in fact pay for programs, save for the future, and also run a responsible and balanced economy here in the province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to participate at this stage of debate on Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006. The name itself, actually, is interesting. It's almost like an oxymoron to some extent because this is a piece of legislation that we amend, as was mentioned, yearly. Every year it comes back to the Legislature, and there is a request for more money and more reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue.

It is introduced in such a way that one would think it's really no big deal or it's business as usual, but in fact I, too, find it questionable and objectionable. It was mentioned time and time again – some of the hon. members across are commenting: not again; we've heard that argument before – but it seems to be falling on deaf ears, so maybe we need to repeat it. Maybe somebody would listen or a light bulb would go on. The government is heavily addicted to oil. They're increasing their reliance on nonrenewable energy resources, which is something that is not sustainable and something that is unpredictable. Savings are not following at a comparable rate. So you take it with the one hand, and you're not saving any of it.

It was also mentioned in this House numerous times how we compare against jurisdictions like Alaska and Norway, and I'm not going to repeat that argument, but I think that my overarching statement would be that a plan and a vision are urgently needed. In my opinion, ad hoc, one-off decisions that are sort of unplanned and unjustified are not the right way to go. I'm not alone, and members of the opposition are not alone. Members of the public and, indeed, researchers and scientists in the community have indicated that the trend is alarming, to say the least. Take, for example, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. They have issues with this fiscal irresponsibility.

I will definitely mention a few others in due time, but first let me go over why I find this approach offensive, or why I don't agree with it. As I mentioned, there is a lack of plan. There is no solid plan that a person can refer to from year to year. It seems to be: money is coming in; let's spend it.

My second point would be that, as I mentioned, it is not sustainable. People like the Official Opposition, former Premier Lougheed, different economists in the community, people like the Canada West Foundation and the Fraser Institute, for example, which are most of the time thought of as reputable and trustworthy think tanks, have also sounded the alarm that this cannot continue the way it is. They have actually even raised questions as to: where is that fiscal discipline, that fiscal conservatism that this government prided itself on furthering? Where is it now? That's the question.

Third, the government is also failing to adequately save resource revenue for current and future Albertans. We've mentioned how the heritage savings trust fund has only finally received $1 billion this year after many years of neglect. So, again, I find this alarming.

In the week of April 17, Mr. Chairman, as an individual I went online, and I surveyed interest rates that are readily available online at the various major banks in Canada, trust and insurance companies, and, you know, anybody who would have a program that offers guaranteed investment certificates. You know, on the one hand you have $1.4 billion that was actually done in resource cheques, and there are musings now that there might be another round of rebate cheques. Again, an ad hoc decision that was not planned and wasn't well thought out. Why don't we look at what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie suggested? Invest into a dividend fund and then give out the dividends without shrinking or jeopardizing the principal.

So I went online, and I checked all those interest rates. For a simple GIC the range was between 2.3 per cent to about 4.4 per cent. The highest place, I think, during that week was PC Financial, President's Choice.

Anyway, this is an individual talking to a bank. How about a government talking to a bank? How much of a better deal would they have actually achieved talking to a bank? They don't have to go with a GIC. They can go with another instrument, something that gives them a better return. Or as a government they can go to a bank and say: "We will give you $1.4 billion. What is the percentage rate you can give us?" The bank would probably say: "Oh, I can give you 8 per cent. I can give you 9 per cent."

Mrs. McClellan: We're getting 11. Why would we go to the bank for 8?

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. The hon. Minister of Finance says that they can get 11 per cent if they save that money.

Based on my calculation, Mr. Chairman, with this 4.4 per cent, which is the best deal I can get as an individual, it would translate into about $78 per year per family in Alberta forever, and that's based on an estimate of 3.35 million people living. So $78 per year per family forever, and that is not counting that the principal might also grow depending on what financial instrument you use.

Now, you don't have to give a dividend. If it's $78 and you might think that it's not enough, you can invest it into reducing personal income tax, for example. This year the government reduced personal income tax by only a meagre amount of $35. It was also noted that $35 doesn't buy you much, and that it was really ridiculous. Business received a slightly better reduction, from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent, but some of the businesses surveyed said that they didn't need it, and it wasn't really warranted, especially when the economy is so hot. So we don't know the rationale there. But $78 is more than $35, so here's an example, and the principal is still safe.

You could have actually eliminated health care premiums. You could have invested into a pharmacare program, especially with the argument that drug costs are rising beyond control and the government is forecasting that it's not sustainable and all that big argument. Many different ways to invest wisely, and unfortunately they're not being investigated adequately.

Back to health care very briefly. I know it was mentioned before. Actually, I myself talked in budget estimates with Innovation and Science about that Aon report that came out this afternoon. That report, which was commissioned by the government, forecasts that energy revenues will decline between 2005 and 2025 by about 50 per cent. Now, again, I don't fully trust that estimation. But, anyway, that's what the government's own report is forecasting. It goes down from about $13 billion to $6.6 billion, which is almost half. So why are we relying on a resource that by the government's own measures is dwindling or going away or disappearing?

My fourth point, Mr. Chairman, on why I don't like this piece of legislation goes back to that fiscal discipline component. We are entrusted with all this money – and, you know, some would argue that it's really no thanks to the financial wizardry of this government; it just happens to come. What are we doing to justify to our grandchildren, as mentioned before? No. Sorry. We spent it all.

The many people that commented on this include the Canada West Foundation, as I mentioned. In one of their reports prior to the 2005 third quarter budget estimate update, they said that of the $122.9 billion in natural resource revenue collected in this province since 1977, 91.4 per cent – the bulk of it, 91.4 per cent – went into a combination of current consumption and debt repayment, while only 8.6 per cent was saved in the heritage savings trust fund.

Another page from that report, if you will, says that since the creation of the respective funds – Alberta has the heritage fund and the permanent fund and the petroleum fund as in Alaska and Norway – Alaska has allocated 16.2 per cent to their fund, and Norway allocated 61.8. Alberta has allocated only 8.6 per cent. The Fraser Institute also commented, and I mentioned this before in this House, that Alberta has deteriorated in its standing compared to most of the other governments in Canada on something called the government spending subindex, dropping six places, or six spots, from second position to eighth in 2005. So in 2004 it was the second-best place, and in 2005 it was the eighth. Spending increases, according to the Fraser Institute, are a cause for concern and could potentially jeopardize the fiscal advantage that this province exhibits or displays now.

So every year we ask for more reliance on something that is nonrenewable when, in fact, everybody who understands finances advises us to use more reliable, more steady sources of income, things other than the nonrenewable energy sector, like taxation, for example, premiums that are collected on various services, income from other sources like agriculture and forestry and all that stuff, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think it will come as a surprise to you that I'm going to vote against this particular bill tonight. I'm also going to vote against it every time it's re-presented into this House because it really, simply doesn't make sense. If it defies common sense, if the average person on the street says, you know, "I don't like this," if this is something people don't practise in their households, then why are we practising it in this House? I don't spend more than I make, and I usually budget based on steady sources of income. I don't rely on potential lottery wins to budget for my household.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 30

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments?
The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Some of the remarks that I was going to make were basically made in second reading, but I'd just like to recap some of my feelings on this bill. I'm pleased with the way that it's been restructured because I think that it helps clarify the reporting. I think that I have this right – and if I'm wrong, I would ask the minister to correct me on this – that the regional board chairs would then report to the assistant deputy minister. That direct link into the minister's office would extend the power of the board because the people would complain to the board. Then the board would directly go to the ministry. I just feel that there were too many – what's the word? – gatekeepers before the information actually got to the minister.

The other thing that I had spoken about was the provincial standards and, in particular, how people are assessed so that they can access PDD. I'm aware that there is a document out there that makes it a little bit more difficult to be able to actually get into PDD. In fact, it's changed it to something called emergent only. This would apply to people who actually would be PDD recipients, but they are not 18 yet. When they turn 18, they can be reassessed and not make it into the system. I think that has to be looked at.

For instance, one of the concerns that I had cross my desk and, actually, is still sitting on it was from a woman who had a child who was autistic. Now, I know that this falls under Children's Services, but the principle is the same. The child is autistic and had all of the services that he required, but when he went to school, that help was taken back, and the help was only available for so many hours. The woman's question to me, which rightly was asked, was: how can my child be cured at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and then be autistic again at 9 o'clock the next morning? It's a good question, and the same principle can apply at the PDD level to 18-year-olds or when they turn 18.

The regional boards. I would like to know, too, how many paid staff they would have. Could they not maybe pick up some of the staff that is being released from the provincial board, which I believe numbers 35 with $11 million attached to it? That seems like an awful lot of money, and I'd like to see that bureaucratic section of it maybe cut down and that money put right into the front lines.

I guess what I would like to see in terms of the layout of how this works is: here's the client, and then there's the worker, that is the actual service deliverer. That truly, in my mind, is the most important person. That's the one that really makes the difference in that client's life. Then the next worker would be the assessment and case manager. The case manager would then report to the CEO, the CEO would report to the board, and the board to the assistant deputy minister, which seems like a lot of people because the only one that's really doing the work with the client is the one single worker. We now have seven people involved in delivering perhaps just three hours of care to one client a day. I think that that can be streamlined. Yeah, it can definitely be streamlined.

Also, the fact that regions differ in their needs. They also differ in the numbers. For instance, I know that Fort McMurray has a large number of brain-injured clients that need that extra-special care, that perhaps isn't a factor in, say, Lethbridge. The regions have to be able to have a way of getting their specific needs through to the minister's office.

The other thing that I would like to see – and of course this is, I guess, a kind of dream sequence – is that the community boards at the regional levels would actually be elected from within their community, that the CEOs would be hired by the regional boards, and that the ministry and the board together would come up with the contractual obligations that that particular CEO would have to meet.

I'd also like to see on the boards, however the numbered boards would be, some persons at large, ones that aren't even connected with the system, someone that would just come in and be able to oversee it and bring a fresh perspective, who doesn't have either a monetary interest or, in fact, an emotional interest because they have somebody in the system.

Also, I would like to know how this appeal panel would work. The reason that I would ask that is that I'd like to know what it would look like. I did serve on the Canadian pension board tribunal, and there were only three of us. We had two months of training, and it was a three-year appointment. There was a small per diem and expenses if it was out of town. But that worked very, very well in terms of an appeal panel. If it is the same people hearing, they get very, very good at looking at it in a fair fashion. So I'd like to know what that appeal panel is going to look like.

Just to wrap it up, I guess what I'm really saying is that I feel that the bottom line would create a leaner ministry and a leaner board structure so that, in fact, complaints can come quicker, and it allows the ministry to be more responsive to problems, that just cannot fester for months and months. People are suffering in the meantime. This will be legislation. This is a legislated bill. But I would like to see other parts of the ministry legislated. The reason I'm saying that – I don't even have to think about this present minister; this present minister gets it. I am worried about future ministers, and I want to make sure that if this goes forward in the manner that I think it's going to go forward, the good work that is being done now will be continued, and we won't have to rely on making sure that we have as good a minister as we have now. If someone comes along later that isn't as good, that good legislation is there, and they'll be able to work within it.

Other than those few questions, I would recommend support for this bill to go forward out of Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act. The main objective of this bill is to eliminate the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board that oversees the six regional community boards, transfer responsibilities of the provincial board to the ministry, and enhance the role of the six regional community boards. The regional community boards will report directly to the minister and will be responsible for the local governance program delivery and co-ordinating other supports. According to a government of Alberta news release from April 11, 2006, the goal of this reform is to "enhance the role of the community boards that administer services . . . while improving the province's ability to better co-ordinate all the programs that provide support to Albertans with disabilities.

Changes to the system are absolutely necessary, and we recently requested that the minister conduct a comprehensive review of the governance structure. However, we do not know how the minister arrived at the decision to eliminate the provincial board in order to improve efficiency and how the changes will impact the community boards. The community boards we contacted were unable to comment on how the elimination of the provincial board would impact their operation. The minister claims that the goal of the reform is to improve accountability and transparency, yet the community boards have been directed to not comment. Hardly an improvement.

I have a few questions, Mr. Chairman. Building Better Bridges is a report on programs and services in support of persons with developmental disabilities, PDD, released in March 2000. It contains 10 recommendations directed towards improving the governance and service delivery of the PDD programs as well as addressing the needs of other persons with disabilities who do not fit under the current mandate. This review did not recommend eliminating the provincial board. How was the decision made, and what review or reports were completed? Which groups were consulted?

Lorne Taylor recently, in the fall of 2005, prepared a report on PDD governance. When will this be made public, and when will Albertans be able to see the recommendations made by Lorne Taylor about the PDD governance structure? Did the report recommend the elimination of the provincial boards? Why were the community boards given the direction to forward all questions to the departments? How are we supposed to understand and evaluate the impact of this change to community boards when they have been directed to not answer questions? How much money will be saved and where? How will that money be allocated? What arrangements have been made to prepare the department to take on these additional responsibilities?

Given that 35 provincial board staff are being transferred to the ministry, what specific changes will be made to ensure that programs are being delivered in a more co-ordinated, effective, and efficient way? This minister claims that this reform will improve accountability, administrative efficiency, transparency, and create more equitable delivery of programs. How? What steps will the department take to ensure that services are delivered in a fair and effective way? What steps will the minister take to improve transparency?

Section 24 of the current PDD governance act includes a section requiring the minister to conduct a comprehensive review of this act.

The Minister must begin a comprehensive review of this Act within 3 years after June 18, 1997 and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the Minister.

How will this section be updated?

Last year the Auditor General made recommendations for the ministry regarding PDD. The provincial board has drafted new contracting policies. The new policies detail the requirements to be met in preparing business cases and also include guidance on contractor selection, which is on page 294. Will the ministry maintain these contracting policies? How will contracting work?

11:40

At page 295 it states that "management of the Provincial Board indicated that the problems identified as a result of the OCIA reviews will be addressed as part of the project to update their contracts, policies, and manuals." What will happen with the projects like updating contracts, policies, and manuals that were the responsibility of the provincial board?

I'm still not sure whether I should support this bill. I still have questions. Maybe I will listen to the other speaker, and then I will decide. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with interest in speaking for my first time on Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act. You know, I have quite a number of concerns in regard to this act. We have as well in fact as a caucus been doing some outreach on specific elements of this bill and have come across some concerns from the PDD community. So I just wanted to articulate those to the minister specific to certain sections and pages of this bill, and perhaps she can provide me with some illumination on these bits.

First of all, just a general concern that I have is: what exactly did prompt the retooling of this act in the first place? According to the PDD groups that I've been speaking to, the functioning of the provincial board, in fact, was economical and efficient. So why are the roles and the responsibilities of the provincial board being transferred over to this ministry? What is the expected efficiency or benefit that can be derived from this?

While it seems to make sense that the ministry that is in charge of the PDD program should have a direct line of communication with these programs that support people with disabilities, the proposed amendments themselves seem to indicate that the transfer of responsibility would result in some duplication of services rather than creating any efficiencies. For example, section 9 of the proposed amendment states that the minister may, if she finds that it in the public interest, offer programs or services in regions even if the same services are now being offered by a community board. I find that somewhat questionable.

In section 10 of the proposed amendments the text states: the minister may give community boards written directions on how to avoid duplication of effort and expense in the provision of services. So if the ministry proposes to offer services already offered and in the same breath says it will give advice on how to avoid such duplication, I just have to wonder at the overall effectiveness of these amendments. If the purpose of these amendments is to make things go more smoothly in conjunction with the transferring of responsibility to the minister for the purpose of increasing accountability, will there be an increase in funding to ensure that we at least keep these services intact even if they're not being increased?

The Alberta Association for Community Living had their rally here to protest these funding cuts. The minister has stated that there is, in fact, more money flowing to these PDD programs and services. If this is so, I'm wondering why the Edmonton community board for persons with developmental disabilities is sending out letters requiring the service providers to cut 3.4 per cent from their budgets. Perhaps our math is off, but I don't think so. I think that there is a real discrepancy here. If the minister, as she mentioned, could find efficiencies in administration, then that's great. If we can realize money to the front lines where there is a need, then that's great too. But I beg to differ that, in fact, there has been anything misleading in the line of questioning that we've been taking this week. It's clear that the people who actually are receiving these services have a serious concern, and their concerns deserve to be met. To suggest that there is no essential cutback in the actual provision of monies to specific services, I just beg to differ on that.

The Winspear fund, a private initiative, is having to catch people as they fall through the cracks that this government has not only ignored but created through a lack of commitment towards the most vulnerable people in our society. Last year the monies from the Winspear fund paid out just over $65,000 helping individuals in dire need. So how does the minister respond to the evidence that obviously there are these anomalies in our system? We're looking to help people in the best possible way, and this is the place by which we can do so.

Specific to key sections of this bill that I have concerns with, the first one is on page 2, section 4. It says that this amendment does away with provincial boards. Their function is filled by the minister and community boards. There are some consequential amendments that do away with references to these entities throughout the proposed amendments. As I have said previously, the PDD community has pronounced that they are opposed to this change. The provincial boards were not inefficient, nor were they inexpensive to run.

If I can just turn attention, then, to page 5, section 9. This section is changing to state that the role of the minister is to work with other ministers and governments and public and private bodies to "co-ordinate the provision of services to adults with developmental disabilities." So I'd like to ask: what does the inclusion of "private bodies" reflect in terms of care trends throughout the province? What is the proportion of services and programs offered through these private bodies, and what's the difference in rates and quality of care between private and public bodies?

Over on page 5, section 9, this section seems to be amended to state:

Notwithstanding the regulations, if the Minister considers that it is in the public interest to do so, the Minister may provide or arrange for the provision of services in any region, whether or not those services are also being provided in that region by a Community Board.

Of course, this begs the question as to whether this, in fact, facilitates a duplication of services. If the services offered by a community board are insufficient, can the minister not just simply order the increase in such services that are needed? If they're not found to be inadequate or inappropriate, then are there not licensing or quality control issues, then, to be addressed? That's a problem.

Over on pages 5 and 6, section 10, the amendment reads, "The Minister may give Community Boards written directions . . . on how to avoid duplication of effort and expense in the provision of services." Then I say: what about section 9(2), regarding the minister providing duplicated services? This seems to be at cross-purposes at best, Mr. Chairman.

Over on page 8 section 15 states that "the Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, establish one or more appeal panels to hear appeals under this Act." In the previous legislation you had the right to appeal directly to the provincial board, but now there is an intermediary with no appeals process spelled out as it was in the previous legislation. Nor is the form of the appeal in fact stipulated in this new amendment contentwise and formwise as it was in the previous legislation. So I'm asking: is this to make the appeals process more flexible? How will the appeals process in fact change in reality? I think that many people would like to know.

Over on pages 10 and 11 section 21 amends the old section 23. "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . . respecting appeal panels, appeals and the decisions of a Community Board that are exempt from appeal." My question is: what decisions might be in fact exempt from appeal? Was there in the past any history that we can make reference to that would suggest this to be necessary? Was the whole process in general ever challenged? What is the rationale of having decisions that are above appeal? That seems to be again contrary to best practices.

So I do have a number of I think quite significant specific concerns. If the minister would be so kind as to address those and others, then perhaps we could seek clarification that would allow our caucus to consider support.

Thank you.

11:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I promise to be brief. Most of my concerns were addressed in this stage of debate and earlier ones.

As I read this proposed Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006, I must start by saying that under the guidance of my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East we don't seem to find it too contentious, and we are leaning definitely towards supporting it.

Some of my comments, Mr. Chairman. For removing the provincial board or absorbing the membership of the provincial board under the wing or the control of the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, the rationale used by the hon. sponsor of the bill was to basically improve efficiencies. I need to seek some clarification on this. You know, we're basically just moving those 15 members between different areas, from one designation to another. The budget for that board was $11 million, and there seems to be some belief that we're going to save some of that money by moving them within the ministry or under the minister directly. However, it was mentioned at one point that members of the Alberta Association for Community Living say that those board members are mostly volunteers, so these are people who are not paid a salary or a wage. They're basically paid in honorariums and per diems. So some clarification would be greatly appreciated as to how much of that $11 million we're hoping to save and which areas we would be realizing those savings in. That's the first comment.

My second one. You know, we definitely agree that changes are needed and that reform or fine-tuning or streamlining is warranted, especially when dealing with front-line services and especially for people that really need those services. PDD clients are definitely in need of protection and support, and anything we can do to reform or streamline the services that they receive is advised. However, we don't know how the hon. minister arrived at the conclusion that the way to do it or the way to improve efficiency was basically to eliminate or disband the provincial board. So again some clarification would be great.

Now, it was mentioned in this House, especially this week, about the rally in front of the steps of the Legislature. The two arguments in this House, Mr. Chairman: did they receive an adequate raise in their funding or didn't they? The hon. minister actually has gone to great lengths in explaining that they did in fact receive a 3 per cent increase in this year's budget over last year's. Yes, that's great, and we're not arguing with that or quarreling against it, but is 3 per cent enough to cover things like inflation, rising costs that actually do go up from year to year, and also for the new clients that are coming into the program? This is where the miscommunication exists. Basically we're saying that it's not enough, and the minister says: well, it's more than last year.

This year's budget is done. It's finished. You know, it's voted on. But maybe for next year's budget this might be a consideration for the hon. minister to look into, and I would definitely urge her to commit to evaluating the adequacy of funding for PDD support programs on an annual basis. Every year there has to be an evaluation or an assessment of the impact that the funding, whatever the level, has on services, staff, and all those things. So do it yearly and also commit to consulting with the PDD families and front-line care providers. People make submissions to the standing policy committees and so on, and that's how the budget is arrived at, through that process. Why not involve the people who are really affected by those decisions from the beginning? In so doing, we can always reach sort of a consensus or a compromise, and it would definitely alleviate some of that potential for them to be unhappy or to be not satisfied and having to resort to other means like, you know, picketing or demonstrating in front of the Legislature. So involve them at the beginning, and treat them as partners.

Moving on, the minister has also stated in the House and in news conferences that a review of PDD has started some time ago, and she promised to make those results available as quickly as possible. So I'm urging her to honour that promise and to share the results with the House as soon as she gets them. But if the House is not sitting, Mr. Chairman, I would urge her to consider sending those results to each of us MLAs in our constituency offices because this is an ongoing concern, and if we have the chance to report on something positive to our constituents, it would be tremendously appreciated to share that positive outlook to the future and to tell them that this is the information that the minister is sharing with us, that these are the findings of that review and here are the changes that are going to be implemented starting next year.

I had questions with regard to the line-by-line and provision-by-provision analysis since we're in committee. One of those was pertaining to section 9, talking about the minister's role. Now that the minister is, as I mentioned, absorbing the provincial board under her, it now proposes to expand the role of the minister by transferring those responsibilities directly to her. You know, this might not necessarily be a bad thing, but it always raises flags as to how much power the minister has. Are we advocating sort of a direct intervention model compared to an organization that is at arm's length? Again, it might be fine in this particular situation, and, yes, there might be some efficiency to be realized, but I need an assurance from the minister that it just doesn't simply mean concentration of more power into her hands as seems to be the case with the other ministries in this cabinet.

Moving on to section 19, which basically amends section 21 of the existing act, and that talks about personal information. As you know, Mr. Chairman, I happen to be the Official Opposition critic in charge of privacy and freedom of information and all that stuff. This section also proposes or adds the mechanism for the minister to use and deal with personal information on clients and on and from community boards and the appeals panel. What are we doing to ensure that there are privacy guarantees in place to guard against loss or theft of information on those PDD clients and to make sure that it is used for the purposes that are stated and that there is no potential for any misuse? So, you know, people are becoming increasingly aware of privacy concerns. We keep telling them to guard their information. Now that the hon. minister is taking on more responsibility as a trustee, if you will, a custodian of that information, what is she going to do to assure us in this House and to assure those 9,300 PDD clients that their information is not going to be misused or misplaced and that it's only used for the purposes that are stated?

I can go on, Mr. Chairman, but in light of the hour – it's a new day today – I think I will reclaim my chair, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 20 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and participate in debate on Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. I would start off by reiterating some of my previous comments that I made during second reading, that this bill is actually half good, half bad. We have great achievements and great progress in terms of the protection of privacy of Albertans and their information, but then we also have sections in this proposed bill that are definitely questionable and offensive not only to the opposition but to members of the public at large.

I note, Mr. Chairman, that there was some media interest in this bill. The media seem to think that the 50 per cent that is positive should definitely go forward – and that's our position – but that the 50 per cent that is questionable, that is adding layers of secrecy to this government should be rejected or thrown out. As such, it is my honour and pleasure to introduce an amendment to Bill 20. I would definitely share it with the House if you'll permit me.

Rev. Abbott: Question.

Mr. Elsalhy: Nice try.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1. Now, does everyone have a copy?

Hon. Members: Yes.

The Chair: Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On this amendment A1 what we're proposing here is to definitely remove section 5 of the proposed amendment. Now, section 5 is amending section 24 of the original legislation by adding section 2.1, talking about the chief internal auditor and, basically, making the findings or investigations or any information that is given to or collected by the chief internal auditor of this province hidden or covered for about 15 years since the audit to which the record or information relates was completed. So any information that is given to or collected by the chief internal auditor will be sealed from public scrutiny for 15 years. It definitely raises a lot of concern in my mind and in the minds of many Albertans why such a move is necessary.

Now, the chief internal auditor operates in co-operation with the Auditor General. Some of the arguments from the government side seem to indicate that his role is advisory in nature. I find this a hard pill to swallow, Mr. Chairman, because the chief internal auditor is there to provide evaluations and assessments of government expenses and programs. Yes, part of his work might be advisory. But that is not an excuse to hide it from public scrutiny, especially in this day and age when the talk and the flavour of the month is transparency, accountability, and being open. There's a saying that if you have nothing to hide, you hide nothing.

Mr. Chairman, I can go on and on talking about why this is not acceptable and why this amendment is hoping to remedy that deficiency in this bill. In essence, what I'm offering is for the government side to co-operate with us by allowing our amendments to move forward. We would find it extremely easy to support the remainder of the bill, which I mentioned was positive and timely. We don't need more layers of secrecy. If we're trying to fix the image of the government and displaying, you know, open, transparent, and accountable behaviour, then we would definitely support this amendment moving forward to remove and strike out the offending section 5.

I invite further comment from my hon. colleagues on both sides of the House. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In speaking to the amendment that has just been proposed for Bill 20, I would like to say that it is open and transparent. The reason I would say that is because all records from the internal auditor are available to the Auditor General at any time. The Auditor General represents the interests of the public. Therefore, I believe that it is open and transparent because he has the ability to call those records up. So I don't believe that this is a good amendment, and I would not support this amendment.

At this time I would call to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 24, Bill 30, and progress on Bill 20.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

12:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 24, Bill 30. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 35
Fuel Tax Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, just a few comments on this act. In fact, there are no policy changes in this act. It is a rewrite of the act to bring it up to the present day. There is some clarification in this act as to how the fuel tax is collected, which really speaks to the size of this act. We've gone through the act very carefully and made sure that the definitions are clearer and more timely to today's language in dealing with these various fuels, making sure that the clarity is there for the persons who are impacted by this act, clarification as to who pays the tax, how they pay the tax. Also, a section of it deals with areas where there are issues around the collection of tax and how you deal with that.

We thought it was important that this act be reviewed, that we ensure that there was clarity around the act to ensure that people impacted by or using this act understand clearly that there should be no hindrance or interference with carrying out this act and that, indeed, if there are infractions under this act, that there are penalties that would speak to the seriousness of that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to comments on how members in this Assembly might feel that we could further clarify sections or, indeed, to hear their comments as to whether we have clarified this act in an appropriate way. I know that most members of the Legislature will have had some contact with constituents with this act because, of course, it has been in place for some time.

Mr. Speaker, with those opening comments and that explanation I look forward to hearing from members on this particular act when we have an opportunity to debate it in this House and would adjourn debate on this act at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given the hour and the progress made this evening, I would like to move that the House now adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 12:16 a.m. on Thursday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 27, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/04/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies, and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and introduce some special young guests from my constituency. Many years ago the community of Whitecourt had an opportunity to be a twin community with Kamiyubetsu in Hokkaido. Today joining us here is a group of students from Kamiyubetsu along with the students from the Whitecourt Hilltop high school. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. I think they're on both sides.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What a privilege today to introduce some enthusiastic students from Madonna school, who are accompanied by parents Mrs. Pinkoski and her cute little girl with blonde curly hair, that was with them when we had the photos taken, and Jay O'Neill, who is not only a parent but is also the communications director for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Rudanec. I'd like to ask that they please rise and that we give them the honourable welcome that they so richly deserve. They're right up there in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to recognize a group that's travelled up from our constituency. It's the first time in 15 years that they've been able to come up: the R.I. Baker middle school. They performed last night at the annual general meeting of the College of Alberta School Superintendents. They were an excited little group, and they were a little tired this morning. They're not quite here yet, but I did want to recognize the three teachers that came with them – Cynthia Fritzer, Sandy Koberinski, Allison Thorton – along with parent helpers Sue Wells Paterson, Pam Quinn, Karen Thompson, Norma Enns, Jen Broderson, Beth Hinton, April Horvath. I had all 50 of them in my office, a little sweaty for a little while. They had a great time, they enjoyed the building, and they wanted me to especially thank you for a very memorable experience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled a group of two classes from Strathcona Christian Academy, accompanied by teachers Ryan Marshall and Alan Foster and also parents Len Koop, Myrna Poettcker, Eva Balogun, Lisa Brower, Ruth Naundorf, and Teresa Sabo. I believe they're in both galleries. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a delegation from one of Alberta's truly fine schools, which happens to be in my constituency, Parkview school. There are 29 members of the delegation, three parents or teachers – Miss Jenny Kane, Miss Erin Darling, and Miss Carrie Peacock – and, I believe, 26 students seated in both galleries. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this House guests from Calgary whose family members suffer from gastroparesis, a painfully debilitating digestive disease which negatively impacts the quality of life of thousands of Albertans. I would ask Jeanne Keith-Ferris, Paul Sénégas-Joue, Marie-Noëlle Sénégas, and other members of the group to now stand and receive the traditional greetings of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce some guests. The first one is Olav Larsen. Olav was a transit operator with Edmonton Transit, so he and I go way back. We've had the odd debate at union meetings, and he used to let me ride in the cab of the LRT when he was driving. He's now retired. With him are his brother and his brother-in-law from Denmark, Arne Thomsen and Erling Larsen Vind. They've just completed a trip to New Zealand, where they visited relatives in Christchurch, New Zealand, and they're returning to Denmark tomorrow. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very special women seated in the public gallery: Alice Burghardt, Rita Burton, and Sonia Barton. These ladies are active members of the Calder seniors' drop-in centre, and they are constituents of mine. They are here today to observe the proceedings of the Legislature, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. April 28 is the National Day of Mourning for workers who have been killed on the job. Last year in Alberta 143 families and countless friends suffered the loss of a loved one who died from a job-related injury or illness. That is 19 more tragedies than the year before, which is unacceptable and a wake-up call for all of us.

Occupational health and safety is a social responsibility. We must do more to ensure that all Alberta workers are safe on the job. Government along with our partners in industry and labour will renew our efforts to reduce workplace fatalities and injuries through Work Safe Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, almost one-third of our workplace deaths are traffic related, so the Alberta government is developing a road safety at work strategy. It will include effective practices, driver training, awareness, and enforcement, and all aim at reducing the number of these needless fatalities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for the moment of silence that you gave earlier for the injured workers and the Day of Mourning, and I thank you, Mr. Minister, for your moving words. The death of a loved one or a respected colleague in any circumstance is tragic. The thought of the death of a loved one while they're at work strikes fear into the hearts of all. It is a horror when it happens.

April 28 is the Day of Mourning for those who have died because of their work. It is the day of mourning for their families, their friends, and their co-workers. It is an international day of mourning because these tragedies must be remembered by everyone, and we must honour those that are gone.

I have seen and felt the electric feeling that sweeps through a job site when a worker is lost. I've seen and felt the horror and grief that sets in in the face of unexpected tragedy. Big, burly construction workers will cry, hug each other for support. Some will just grasp their hands, their arms together, and words will just be unsaid. Women on the job are often strongest and are looked to for support. Prayers are said even by those who often do not pray. Tears are shed. The hat is passed for the family.

But life goes on. Such deaths are senseless; such deaths are unnecessary. We can speak statistics. We can speak about the rise and fall of death and injury rates. These statistics are senseless. One death is too many. Statistics don't cry; widows and children do. Statistics don't make it better. Deaths should not be predictable. They are immeasurably costly. If numbers are important, the death rate should be zero.

I ask that you all think to the future and find ways to end workplace death, to seek ways to help the hurt, and to ensure that the families who are left behind are cared for. Today I do ask that you all mourn for those who have died because of their job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: To the hon. leader of the third party: I suspect that there'll be a request for unanimous consent for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to participate.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the members of the Assembly. Last year 143 Albertans died in the workplace, the highest number, unfortunately, since 1982. Each of these workers left behind friends, family, and a community to mourn them. It is my honour today on behalf of the NDP to stand and express our solidarity in that mourning and to join our brothers and sisters in the labour movement in renewing our call for safer workplaces and tougher sanctions on employers who shirk their responsibility to ensure worker safety.

While I appreciate the minister's message today on the importance of worker safety, I can't help but point out that this government does not have a sterling record of promoting the rights and dignity of working people.

In last year's annual report the minister reported that the lost-time claim rate, which is a good measure of how often workers are being injured on the job, is nearly 25 per cent higher than the ministry's own targets. The result is that last year a shocking 170,000 incidents were reported to the WCB, a rate of almost 500 per day. Alberta's lost-time claim rate is among the highest in the country. Even worse, our workplace fatality rates outstrip those of Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia.

We can certainly be proud that the Day of Mourning is a Canadian-born tradition that has been adopted by over 70 countries around the world, but we have much work to do to ensure that all Albertans are treated fairly at the workplace and returned to their families safe and sound when the day's work is done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The long list of town hall meetings in rural Alberta continues to grow as concerned citizens speak out about their fears regarding coal-bed methane drilling in the Horseshoe Canyon formation on or near their properties. In Ponoka, Trochu, Torrington, Camrose, Wildwood, and Wetaskiwin thousands of Albertans are telling the same story: our groundwater could be in jeopardy from coal-bed methane drilling if it is not properly managed. These Albertans have lost faith in this government's ability to investigate the groundwater changes, and they are demanding answers. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the baseline water testing protocol being proposed has not been independently reviewed by scientists, will this Premier immediately strike a team of water experts to review the baseline water testing protocols?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond. As a matter of fact, it's timely that the question be asked because the hon. minister held a clinic on coal-bed methane this morning, a clinic so that everyone understands what coal-bed methane, or natural gas from coal bed, is all about. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the assertions are absolutely false as to: is there confidence? Do we have enough information? Do we have enough experience and confidence to be able to develop natural gas from coal seams? There are about a hundred thousand wells already drilled over decades in Alberta's shallow gas formations. Southern Alberta has decades of experience drilling into similar formations, through similar depths, same techniques, and a very good track record on these. There's another report coming out that will only strengthen an already very good regulatory structure.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that it is now clear that coal-bed methane drilling does impact groundwater differently than conventional natural gas extraction, will this government develop coal-bed methane-specific regulations to guide the development of this resource so that the water quality is protected?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are very stringent regulations relative to the production of natural gas from coal bed, as there are relative to the production of natural gas from any other source; i.e., drilling in a conventional way. Again I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, once again, this type of drilling, this type of activity is very like all of the shallow gas well drilling we've been doing for decades in this province. There is a very stringent requirement on production, on drilling, on casing, and on completion so that there won't be migration of gas from one zone to another, so that there won't be contamination from the lower zones into the freshwater aquifers. It's of that that's very paramount. What the Multi-stakeholder Advisory Committee has been working on for the last two years, the report of which we will be releasing with our recommendations in the very near future, will already increase a very good statistical scientific base of being able to ensure and verify that this is being done appropriately not just now but in the decades ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess to the Minister of Energy then. Is this minister, judging from his last two comments, denying that there have been any cases of aquifer contamination as a result of coal-bed methane drilling? Is he saying that there are no cases of that?

1:50

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that there have been over a hundred thousand wells drilled in shallow gas formations over the last decades. We have a tremendous amount of experience in dealing with all of those same techniques: the drilling, the fracturing, the completion, all of those things. We have a tremendous amount of very good history.

Does that mean that there aren't incidents? There's no such thing as any activity without some incident. That said, we have natural gas everywhere. In our freshwater wells that they're drilling into, where there is freshwater – there is natural gas in the coal and the tight sands and the shallow formations. Part of the reason why in this province people come to explore for natural gas is because it is everywhere.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chernobyl has seared a nuclear scar on the hearts of Ukrainians around the world. At least tens of thousands have died in Ukraine. Hundreds of thousands have been affected by radiation; millions may die in many countries. Nuclear power scares people, yet two days ago the Premier said that he may talk nuclear for the Alberta oil sands when he visits investors in Europe. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier commit to independent evaluation with full public disclosure of any nuclear proposal for Alberta if he moves on this before his retirement?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to set the record very, very clear. I am not a proponent of nuclear power, but as we move toward becoming a centre of excellence in energy, we have to consider nuclear power. I'm a big fan of coal. I'm a big fan of wind and hydropower and solar power and any form of energy alternate to conventional oil and gas, which is running low. It's time to build on the expertise we have developed in this province to become an energy capital. Indeed, the universities of Alberta, Lethbridge, and Calgary are contemplating now an institute of energy learning to make sure that this province becomes the energy capital from a learning point of view.

So, Mr. Speaker, certainly I will undertake to disclose anything that I learn about nuclear power.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Supplementary question to the Premier. Will the Premier commit to a referendum in Alberta before he moves on nuclear power for the oil sands?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am not moving on nuclear power. Someone else is moving on nuclear power. It's been mentioned to me that one company, Total, is interested in nuclear power, generating electricity from plutonium or uranium for their tar sands operation, but that's all I know about it. I am not a proponent, and I am not pushing nuclear power in any way, shape, or form.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He's talking about it.

To the Premier: why doesn't the Premier just skip his taxpayer-paid vacation to Ukraine and the rest of Europe and donate that money to Chernobyl orphans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in order to set the record straight, I received a letter from the governor of Lviv oblast. It's dated January 21, 2006; this is long before the leadership convention. It reads:

Dear Premier Klein,

Let me express my respect to you and once again confirm our interest and readiness to further mutual Canadian-Ukrainian relationships and cooperation between our regions in various fields, understanding that the governor of Lviv oblast was here in Edmonton.

The Protocol of Cooperation between the Lviv Oblast State Administration and the Government of Alberta signed in 2005 forms a solid basis for developing of our contacts.

Attached to this letter please find our proposals to the cooperation between the Lviv Oblast and the Province of Alberta. I propose to consider them during planning of 2006 activities. I would appreciate comments and proposals from you.

It is also a pleasure to invite you, Premier Klein, as well as Alberta's official and business delegation, to visit the Lviv Oblast at any time that is convenient to you. This will offer a perfect opportunity to have more detailed discussions of our economic cooperation for 2006 and further develop mutually beneficial contacts between our regions.

The Speaker: The Premier will table the letter later at the appropriate time.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Facility Standards for Funeral Homes

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year the former Minister of Government Services struck a steering committee to look at the composition and role of the Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board and to review the recommendations that the FSRB has proposed to regulate that industry. The Official Opposition has been in contact with smaller funeral service businesses that have concerns regarding the proposed minimum standards, the effect that these standards would have on the industry, and the motive behind the proposed changes. To the hon. Minister of Government Services: will the minister table the report that was submitted by the AFSRB in 2005 recommending minimum facility standards for funeral homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, and I thank the member opposite for asking the question. It's a very serious issue we have here in Alberta. Some 10 years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Funeral Services Regulatory Board was established, and this ministry through the former minister has asked for a review of that. I'm glad to work with the member opposite to ensure that Albertans are served fairly and equitably across the province on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of those questionable recommendations is that all funeral service businesses must now have a chapel to be licensed, is the minister at all concerned that such a requirement would effectively put smaller funeral service providers out of business?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no way that we are going to corner the funeral service business for large corporations in Alberta or small corporations. We have an opportunity throughout Alberta, through our small communities and through our large communities, for funeral operators to operate throughout Alberta. There is no intention of shutting down any business. If you have specific cases, and if you're hearing of any cases that may affect someone's business, you bring those to me, and we'll deal with them together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you. My last question to the minister would be: would the minister commit to consulting with representatives from across all sectors of the funeral service industry, including alternative, nonprofit, and indeed small rural funeral homes, before acting on any of the recommendations that were submitted by the AFSRB?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, I can advise you that the review that's being done is a review made up of members from the funeral industry, from members at large, and from the department. Again, when I get that report, I'd love to work with this member on it, and we'd go through the recommendations at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's forest industry contributes billions to the province's economy each year and is the lifeblood of dozens of resource-based communities, but the government remains silent on the framework agreement that's being negotiated in Washington, DC, between the Canadian and American governments. This agreement would restrict access to the United States' lumber market by Alberta forest companies, while refunding only a portion of the duties that have been illegally collected over the past years. The question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Given that the provincial governments in B.C. and Ontario are saying that this is a bad deal, why has the Alberta government failed to stand up to its Conservative cousins in Ottawa in favour of Alberta jobs?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I should advise the hon. member and members of the Assembly that Alberta has been fully engaged in the dialogue regarding the softwood lumber dispute. I've taken calls from Ambassador Wilson, who has been our chief negotiator on this particular file.

Mr. Speaker, at this point there's a term sheet, and the term sheet has not yielded an agreement yet. It's quite clear that in the open federalism that Prime Minister Harper has talked about, he wants greater involvement on the part of provinces and territories and the industry with respect to their putting input to negotiations that clearly fall within the federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, at this point it is too early to tell what the response of the Alberta industry is going to be. I have some ideas as to the direction that they may take. Really, we want to represent the interests of industry, but we will not speak on behalf of industry. They can certainly speak for themselves. It's our intention to continue to work with the federal government in looking at the terms and conditions set out in the term sheet. We view this term agreement as being simply a starting point and not necessarily an end point.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why is the minister not availing himself of an opportunity to stand up for Alberta jobs and to speak out against the potential for limits being placed on a permanent basis on Alberta lumber products going to the United States? Why don't you take the opportunity to stand up for Alberta forestry workers?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of Alberta's industry and its workers we want to seek a negotiated settlement in this matter, and puffery on the part of a government to say that this is a terrible deal is not going to advance our negotiation. So we will continue to work on getting the right deal for Alberta industry and for Alberta workers. We'll do it through negotiation, not through puffery in the media. We want to make it clear to the hon. member and to all Albertans that we will not accept a deal for the sake of getting a deal. We will wait until we get the right deal at the right time on our terms.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll ask the minister another time. Will the government accept any deal that places restrictions on Alberta softwood lumber exports to the United States? Will you accept a deal that restricts our exports to the United States? Yes or no.

Mr. Mar: The fact that the hon. member would ask for a yes or no answer clearly indicates to me that he fails to understand the complexity of this deal. The issue, Mr. Speaker, is not simply about volume limitations. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is not simply about volume limitations. It is also about any duties. It is also about the allocation of any volume that is placed upon us by the federal government. It is also about the return of the $5 billion that has been improperly collected by the United States. So to answer a question simply with a yes or no on a very small part, a significant part but only one part of the overall agreement in the softwood lumber dispute, you clearly cannot give a yes or no answer to such a question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Demographic studies show that our school-aged population is dropping at close to 2 per cent per year and that 400,000 new jobs with only 300,000 being filled will occur in Alberta in the next 10 years at present immigration rates. The then minister of learning in conjunction with the federal Liberal government signed a temporary foreign worker agreement dealing with Fort McMurray in an attempt to deal with the labour shortage. Would the minister amend an oversight in this agreement to allow unions as well as employers access to this program when workers are not available in Alberta or Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question and a very important question. We are so blessed in Alberta to have such a good government and such a good, good diversified economy that has developed in the last 15 years thousands of jobs for all Albertans and possibly Canadians.

The MOU, hon. member, was simply a way to have the federal government recognize the importance of the oil sands to the Alberta and the national economy. The MOU outlines federal requirements for the hiring of temporary foreign workers by oil sands companies. The MOU also outlines the conditions and responsibilities of the oil sands companies and the recruitment and hiring of temporary foreign workers.

Mr. Speaker, the challenges we have in Alberta – you know, most jurisdictions in North America would love to have the challenges. Government alone cannot resolve the challenges we have in that particular area. It's going to take industry, it's going to take the federal government, it's going to take the province, it's going to take the unions, it's going to take the opposition – in fact, we'll ask for your help to assist us in meeting this challenge that most jurisdictions just dream about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In that vein, then, would the minister consider working with labour unions and employee organizations and the federal government to develop a made-in-Alberta immigration policy to alleviate potential labour shortages in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. I think that about four ministries were involved in the development of the immigration policy for Alberta, which was transferred less than a year ago to my department. It's a very aggressive policy. It is designed to attract and retain immigrants to this province, as you are aware. As I've said before, you know, the existing policies and targeted numbers of people that were to come to Canada through the federal immigration policy is around 250,000. In the past Alberta only received 7 per cent, or about 16,000 individuals. Out of the 16,000 about 3,000 of them moved back to other jurisdictions for various reasons.

I've had my first meeting already with the federal minister of immigration, Mr. Speaker, and he is willing to sit down and discuss a number of issues as to how we may resolve the beautiful challenges we have in this beautiful province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Would the minister on behalf of all Albertans sit down with the federal government and attempt to obtain the same rights with respect to immigration that the province of Quebec has enjoyed for the last many years?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that it has been the desire of this provincial government to move forward in a bilateral way with the federal government to improve our ability to have influence on the immigration of skilled workers to this province. The difference now is that Prime Minister Harper has made fairly recent pronouncements about open federalism, most recently at the Montreal chamber of commerce, and he gave us some very, very encouraging indications about what it is that he meant.

I think what this means for us is that with a greater recognition by a federal government of the roles and responsibilities of provinces, there may be a greater opportunity now, more than before, under the previous Liberal administration, to move forward on this type of a bilateral arrangement. So the province of Alberta will be committed to continuing to work with the federal government on finding ways of addressing our skilled labour shortage. As an example, the area of settlement funding, where new immigrants can access a range of programs and services to ease their transition into Alberta, is one area where we think we have some very, very good progress to report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Gastroparesis

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While no cure to date has been discovered for gastroparesis, a federally approved, highly effective treatment device exists. Quebec's universal public health care covers the $10,000 cost of the device that dramatically improves the patient's quality of life. I'd like to thank the Speaker for allowing the GUTS buttons to be distributed to members of the House so that they can encourage awareness and support for the public health care treatment of this disease in Alberta. My questions to the minister of health have been previously discussed with members of her ministry. To begin with, would the minister please inform our guests and members of this House at what stage provincial recognition and approval of the Enterra Therapy for the treatment of gastroparesis stands?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

2:10

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member opposite for his courtesy in providing me a written question today and also for the buttons in the House to profile something that hasn't been easily understood or controlled.

Gastroparesis is a condition where the stomach, almost without warning sometimes, involuntarily causes vomiting by an individual. The type of device that the hon. member opposite references is a stimulation device that helps control this urge by the stomach to expropriate its contents. The GES device, or the Enterra Therapy device, was referred to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research for a technological assessment of the effectiveness of it, and they have provided a report that has not concluded or has not given conclusive evidence that this is adequate for ensuring that we would provide public funding. So, Mr. Speaker, we have referred it to the Alberta Medical Association and to the regional health authorities, who will conduct yet another review of it and provide information later this month so that our ministry can make a determination about whether or not to publicly fund this device.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Ms Minister. I very much appreciate your support.

Given that the minister indicated in her March 14, 2006, letter that while her ministry does not issue proclamations, she would offer support by issuing a province-wide news release to help raise awareness of gastroparesis. Can she assure our guests in this House that the news release will be forthcoming?

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. We indicated at the time that I wrote in response to the hon. member that we would do what we could to provide support for the organization, but we aren't in the business of proclamations. I could keep this House and the department busy with that sort of thing. It's logistical, which is the reason that we don't do that.

However, what I'd like to do before issuing any kind of release is to get the results of the report later this month, take a good look at that and determine whether or not, based on the evidence, we can justify taking further action as a government. I think that there's a lot of reasonableness in the request. Then we will go forward and work with the association so that we can come up with something that will support their goals in publicizing something that can sometimes be a very embarrassing condition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the minister: what hope can the minister offer to the thousands of Albertans suffering daily from the debilitating effects of gastroparesis?

Ms Evans: I think, Mr. Speaker, the hope I can provide is that this government and this minister are taking a very serious look at it. I think anybody who has had any association with people with this type of condition or other medical conditions that are not easily explained hope that the people that are advocates on their behalf will take a serious look. I am simply waiting at this point for further information. Medical assessments from AHFMR were not helpful, particularly in giving extra support to the plight of this group, but I think that the work we're taking now to pursue it one step further should assure the group that we are looking after this in a way that is trying to provide some assurance that we're not going to let it die until we see what we can do to help.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Alberta/B.C. Joint Cabinet Meeting

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and B.C. hold their annual joint cabinet meeting tomorrow. Already we're hearing about a trade agreement that will open up business access to both provinces. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us if such an agreement is part of tomorrow's discussions?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is true that interprovincial trade between Alberta and B.C. is on the agenda as are other things. Our provinces have a very unique relationship. We're continuing to build on our previous commitments to harmonize regulations, reduce trade barriers, and improve efficiencies. I explained to the media the other day that not all are satisfied with this and that there are some concerns which I'm sure can be ironed out. But, fundamentally, every time we agree to a common standard and a joint initiative, we remove another barrier to trade that costs money and productivity, and of course we move to improve the competitive environment. So if we reach agreement, it will create a single Alberta/B.C. market and set a new standard of co-operation in interprovincial trade in Canada.

Mr. Webber: My first and only supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What industries and aspects of business will this affect?

Mr. Mar: It is quite a wide range, Mr. Speaker. It ranges from everything from transportation and government services to municipalities, but the long and the short of it is that workers, businesses, industry organizations, investors should be excited by the potential that this agreement entails. The agreement on internal trade that has been struck among and between provinces of Canada goes much further. It's much more specific. It does have a dispute resolution mechanism that has real teeth in it.

The long and the short of it is that this agreement will create a 7.5 million person marketplace, which will be the second largest economic region of Canada, so we are quite excited about the opportunity to move this forward. There is a transition period during which some of the details and some of the concerns that the Premier expressed on behalf of some of the parts that are in the agreement can be resolved, over the period of time of the transition, which will take two years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Municipal Sustainability

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Property owners in many Alberta municipalities question the fairness of their market value assessments. It is the role of the assessment services branch, specifically the assessment audit unit, to make sure that municipal assessments have been properly and accurately done. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that he is cutting the budget of the assessment services branch, apparently for a lower cost of legal fees related to appeals, will this affect the ability of the assessment audit unit or the provincially appointed Municipal Government Board to provide a fair and timely decision for all appeals?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that same question was asked when the discussion of my budget was up, and I believe I answered it at that time, and the answer is the same. There is, in fact, no cut in budget this year other than a reflection of an anticipated reduced cost as a result of fewer appeals that are defended by the department. But the assessors and assessment division within Municipal Affairs remains intact and exactly the same as it has been.

I might also point out to the member that assessments in each individual municipality are the responsibility of that municipality, and Municipal Affairs does not get involved in doing the individual assessments. Our role is one of audit to ensure that there's equity and fairness throughout the province.

Mr. Taylor: Well, exactly, Mr. Speaker. Since it's critical that there be oversight of the determination of market value assessment to protect homeowners from unfair or inaccurate assessments, can the minister tell us what he's doing to ensure that such oversight is being provided?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say two things. First of all, we continue to be vigilant in our efforts to audit individual municipalities, whether they be jointly working together or working together as a group to conduct their municipal assessments. There is a vigilant audit group within our organization.

As a matter of fact, at lunch today, Mr. Speaker, I was speaking at the Alberta Assessors' Association, who are meeting here in Edmonton. Although I don't anticipate that I will be contributing in a significant way, one of the commitments that I made was that I would go with our audit division into a municipality just to personally see how an audit is conducted and work with them at the grassroots level on that audit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the real problem, of course, is that the property taxes aren't up to the task of covering the cost that this government has downloaded onto our cities and towns, when is the minister going to identify some new areas for local governments to collect revenues or else give them a bigger, sustainable share of the province's loot?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I've answered that question numerous times in this House. I've indicated – and I will again – that I'm very proud to be working with the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability, with the mayor of Edmonton, the mayor of Calgary, the president of AUMA, the president of AAMD and C to discuss the issues involving roles and responsibilities. The purpose of that discussion is to determine: what are the roles of municipalities, what are the roles of the province, and which level of government should most appropriately be providing services to its citizens? Once that has been determined, we can then determine how much it should cost, and then we'll begin the discussion of how it should be paid for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:20 Oversize/Overweight Trucking Permits

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to receive numerous complaints from commercial truckers who say that they cannot get through on government phone lines to get the permits they need to haul oversize or overweight loads. These complaints have been coming in for months if not years, and in fact I've raised this issue in the Assembly before, yet there seems to be little progress. These people cannot do business without these permits, and their delays adversely affect many other related industries. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is his department doing to address this long-standing concern?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it is true that there has been a problem. Of course, at the rate that the province is growing and with the number of trucks and particularly the number of heavy loads that are requiring permits, the system has been very taxed, so we have been moving and are going to be implementing a new system. In fact, the central system that was in place some time back is being replaced. What will happen is that for most permits – there are about half a dozen exemptions – they will be issued through the registry agents as they get trained up. We've got some 19, 20 of them on the way in the province already. They will be offering 24/7 service, so that should alleviate it. The implementation is going to be very soon. As a matter of fact, after the 1st of June of this year for anyone that is faxing, the fax will then be transferred into a registry, or they can go directly into a registry. Then as far as phone calls are concerned, after the 1st of July those, too, will all go to registries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, and thank you, Minister. Well, given that these measures may speed up the process to get the permits, there will still be truckers that inadvertently or purposely break the law and are caught. Currently, Mr. Speaker, these people need to attend court to pay a fine. This has got to be costly to the court system. What is the minister doing to streamline this process?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as we speak, the process is being changed. In fact, there are a whole host of areas where there will be the ability to pay a fine as opposed to going to court. This is a very important move because we know the difficulty in the court system with all the areas that are now going to court, the overload that they have. To be able to pay a fine and not have to go to court will be very important. That doesn't mean that someone, if they dispute the ticket, isn't going to have the ability to go to court. Yes, they will still be able to go to court, but the ability to pay it – for example, a trucker from Lethbridge gets a ticket at High Level. Well, under the current system he either has to appear in High Level or would have to have an agent appear for him, so there's all that additional cost. Plus, it's going to be great for the court system that it will be streamlined.

The Speaker: The hon. member understands that as a result of his lengthy preamble on the second question, he will forgo the third question.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Education Funding for Lethbridge

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Education minister ignored the horrific funding situation in my community. The facts are that the Lethbridge public board will need to cut $2 million in spending as a result of this minister's budget. To the Minister of Education: can the minister tell us how many teachers Lethbridge public will have to cut and how many more students will have to be in a class to cover the $2 million shortfall?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that Lethbridge public has currently a budget of approximately $59 million and that that budget on the basic side will probably increase to about $59.6 million. Then there's additional money coming in on the infrastructure side which will take it up over $60 million. So there is no cut that I'm aware of that's part of this equation.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we will be providing additional dollars both through the basic instruction grant increase, which I think is about 3 per cent, plus 2 per cent to all the other parts of the renewed funding framework document. That will result in about 330 million new dollars going into education province-wide, and Lethbridge public will be a significant recipient of those dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. The budget was a shortfall, not cut.

When will the minister admit that Lethbridge public is only receiving a 2.31 per cent increase and that whatever other increases he may describe are simply not making it down to the local school board level?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't have all of the documents just in front of me, but my recollection is that Lethbridge public will be receiving an additional $2.4 million, or a 3 per cent increase, to retain 60 teachers that have been hired under the class size initiative over the past two years and that as part of the budget just recently approved here, they will receive additional dollars as well if they have not yet met the commission target guideline or our guideline for class size averages in the kindergarten to grade 3 level. I believe they may already be at that level for grade 4 to grade 12, which virtually every school board in the province is. So we're targeting our monies for those areas that haven't yet met that commission guideline and the internal province of Alberta guideline figure.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, is just to say this. School board budgets are due in to the Ministry of Education by the end of June. We will know by the end of May, for example – and they will as well – how many teachers are retiring and otherwise taking leave or moving. So let's just wait until the final numbers get a little closer to finalization before we get too excited.

Ms Pastoor: Lethbridge is being punished for complying.

Again to the same minister: given that the minister claims to be flowing through 98 per cent of his budget, how can the overall budget be increasing 6.7 per cent when the schools in my community are only getting 2.31 per cent?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think there has to be a realization of a couple of things. First of all, we do flow out about 98 per cent of all the dollars we receive in the basic portion of our budget for Education. That is a truism. Secondly, we'll wait for the final budgets to come in – that'll be at the end of June, as I have indicated – and adjustments and so on will be made. But one of the most critical things to remember is that we fund a lot of our programs on a per capita basis. Now, province-wide our student enrolment in kindergarten to grade 12 has either flatlined or it's declining. Yes, it does provide some challenges because other areas are escalating in terms of their enrolment growth.

We're working with the school boards very closely. I was with superintendents yesterday. I had a good, long talk with representatives from the Lethbridge school board in particular, and I encouraged them to please work with my officials to sort out some of these discrepancies in numbers which the hon. member who just asked the question is floating around.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

National Child Care Initiative

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early today I sent a letter to the Conservative government in Ottawa about how little their so-called child care allowance will benefit most Alberta parents. I will table the letter and related documents later. Recent calculations show that lower and middle-income parents will get to keep as little as 17 cents on the dollar, with the rest taxed back by Ottawa, and in exchange for this minuscule amount of assistance going to parents, Ottawa is tearing up previously negotiated provincial child care agreements. My question will be to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the city of Edmonton is the latest to add its name to the list of objectors, why do this minister and this government refuse to speak out more loudly against the Harper child care scheme, that will disproportionately harm hard-working Alberta families in the hundreds of thousands who need child care assistance the most?

2:30

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there can be a bigger advocate in this province for Alberta's five-point plan than this minister. On numerous occasions I have told the hon. member across the way about all of the things that we have done there. I can go back to a year ago January, when the previous Liberal government decided that they were going to have a child care plan that was equal for all of the provinces and we said no. We wanted a five-point plan that was based on what Albertans wanted and put that off rail and continued to lobby on behalf of Albertans. May I remind the hon. member that the five-point plan that Alberta has put together was based on what Albertans need. I have written to the hon. minister. I flew to Ottawa and spoke to the hon. minister. I have spoken to the media about our aggressiveness. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I guess they don't want to hear the rest of the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Quebec government is negotiating a side deal with Ottawa to keep federal dollars flowing into their child care and early childhood programs beyond 2006-2007, why does this provincial government remain silent and not stand up for Alberta's parents by doing the same?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member was here when we went through Committee of Supply when I was talking about my budget, and I was very clear about the plans that we're doing in Alberta. I called the minister probably 48 hours after she was elected. She didn't even have an office, let alone a phone number. I flew to Ottawa. I have written her. I have said that Alberta continues to lobby on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the minister will table that correspondence.

Should the federal government, against all reason and common sense, proceed with its so-called child care allowance, will the minister at least guarantee that social assistance and other income support to Alberta parents will not be clawed back as a result? If not, why not?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, golly gee willikers, Mr. Speaker, the only thing you can guarantee in life is death and taxes, but I will tell you that we will continue to lobby on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ghost-Waiparous Recreation Area

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. With the summer season fast approaching, attention is again focusing on the very popular Ghost-Waiparous area northwest of Calgary. Every year I hear from constituents expressing concerns over some indiscriminate uses and possible negative impacts on the terrain, vegetation, wildlife, and water quality. They agree with the need for a management plan, have participated in significant public consultation, and are very interested in the timelines for implementing such a plan. Can the minister please advise the Assembly on the status of the Ghost-Waiparous management plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that over the past five years the Department of Sustainable Resource Development along with departments like Community Development and Environment along with industry, municipalities, off-highway vehicle associations, and recreation users have worked very diligently on a consultative process to put in place a Ghost-Waiparous access management plan.

This last year the off-highway vehicle associations and motorized vehicles have worked very diligently on coming up with a managed trail system that will be implemented this spring. The reason for implementing it this spring is that we want to increase public safety and minimize conflict and make sure that the sustainability and the integrity of the land are kept in place out there. We want to have it for future generations, and, Mr. Speaker, a forest land-use zone regulation will be put in place this spring to regulate it as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the very same minister. I know the minister knows that this area is popular to literally thousands of Albertans, and I wonder if he could tell us how he plans to educate users on the impending regulations for the area.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. In fact, there will be new rules for the area, and those rules will be in place. It's important to educate the people that have traditionally used that area as well as the new users to make sure that they know the rules so that the place can have some semblance of order because what we're looking at is public safety. We have 40 new guardians hired this year. As a matter of fact, this morning I was in Hinton at our training centre where those 40 new guardians will be trained to implement those new rules as well as our respect the land program. We also made sure that we have a dedicated brochure on the new trail system, put in simple language, that they can give out to the users of the area so that everybody will know and understand the use of the area.

The Speaker: Hon. member?

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll get to Members' Statements just momentarily, but first our historical vignette of the day. On September 22, 1933, Vivian MacMillan, a stenographer employed by the government of Alberta, and her father, Allan D. MacMillan, brought a civil suit against Premier John Edward Brownlee under the Seduction Act seeking damages and compensation for Brownlee's alleged seduction of Vivian MacMillan from the time she was 18 and over the course of three years.

Premier Brownlee categorically denied the allegations, asserting in his defence that there was not a word of truth in the MacMillans' suit and that he intended to defend the action to the limit. Brownlee issued a counterclaim in November 1933 alleging that Vivian MacMillan together with her medical student suitor, John Caldwell, had conspired to level false allegations against him.

After a sensational – underline the word “sensational” – trial on June 30, 1934, jurors awarded $10,000 in damages to Vivian MacMillan and $5,000 to her father. The trial judge, William C. Ives, admonished the jury for reaching a verdict inconsistent with the evidence, overturned the decision, and imposed court costs upon the MacMillans. Despite Judge Ives' actions Brownlee recognized that the jury's initial verdict signalled an end to his political career.

On the morning of July 5, 1934, Brownlee delivered his resignation and that of the entire cabinet to Lieutenant Governor William L. Walsh. The resignations were effective July 19, 1934. On the same day Richard G. Reid, Provincial Treasurer and United Farmers of Alberta member for the constituency of Vermilion, was sworn in as Premier.

In the general election of August 22, 1935, Richard G. Reid, John Edward Brownlee, who ran in Ponoka, and the United Farmers of Alberta government were defeated in a landslide victory by the Social Credit, which won 56 out of a total of 63 seats in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

There are a number of postscripts to this vignette. Postscript one: in 1937 the MacMillans successfully appealed Justice Ives' decision to the Supreme Court of Canada. Postscript two: on June 4, 1940, Brownlee's appeal of the Supreme Court's decision to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the United Kingdom was dismissed. Postscript three: the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, located in the United Kingdom, was the highest court of appeal in Canada in 1949. Postscript four: the law firm Brownlee LLP bears the name of Alberta's fifth Premier.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is a great day. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 21 visitors. They are seated in the members' gallery. They come from High Prairie, and they attend Northern Lakes College. There are 17 students and four staff. The staff are Mrs. Christine Neidig, Ms Catherine Rigaux, and of course parent helpers Mr. Jim Meldrum, who's a bus driver, and Mrs. Susan Cunningham, who is also a bus driver. They have travelled a long way, and I'd request this Assembly to give them a very warm, warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an outstanding group of students, teachers, and volunteers who represent the best and the brightest of rural Alberta. The Raymond show choir comes from a school of 230 students. The choir of 80 voices, almost one-third of those students, performed in the Glenwood and Fort Macleod schools on their way to Edmonton. During the lunch hour the choir performed in the rotunda under the direction of John Squires and Jolene Paxman.

Raymond high school excels in sports and academics as well as the arts. We often state in this House that we judge society by how well we protect and care for those who are vulnerable. However, the other side is true; that is, the development of our cultural arts showcased today with the Raymond show choir inside this architecturally beautiful building. The Raymond high school graduates all-round students. These students are more than jacks of all trades; they are masters of many. I would like to thank them for sharing their talents with all of us today and for the dedication and the personal sacrifices of their teachers and community volunteers, in some small way saying thank you to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for announcing a new school in Raymond last year.

At this time I would ask the Raymond show choir, the volunteers, and the teachers to please rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 24, 1915, several hundred Armenian community leaders and intellectuals in Constantinople were massacred. This was the beginning of the Armenian genocide, that is commemorated each year at this time. Not long after the massacre of these leaders by the young Turk faction of the Ottoman Empire a mass deportation and systematic annihilation of Armenian men, women, and children failed to shock the world into action. Over 1.5 million Armenians were murdered. My grandparents, by the grace of God and the love of a Turkish family, survived this massacre. It is important to remember the Armenian genocide because there is a direct connection to the Cambodian killing fields, the Rwandan genocide, the Bosnia-Herzegovina genocide, and the Jewish Holocaust.

In preparation for the invasion of Poland Adolf Hitler said:

Our strength consists in our speed and in our brutality. Genghis Khan led millions of women and children to slaughter – with premeditation and a happy heart. History sees in him solely the founder of a state . . .

I have issued the command – and I'll have anybody who utters but one word of criticism executed by a firing squad . . . Accordingly, I have placed my death-head formations in readiness . . . with orders to them to send to death mercilessly and without compassion, men, women, and children of Polish derivation and language . . . Who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?

It is not enough to just remember. We must also act. Just as the Member for Stony Plain asked in his statement on Holocaust Memorial Day, I too would urge all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to actively promote acceptance of all people and to protect their rights and uphold our way of life in this province. Mr. Speaker, with our thoughts and with our actions we can show that we remember.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Hobbema Community Cadet Corps

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and recognize an exciting program which is taking place in my constituency. The Hobbema Community Cadet Corps, which commenced on November 22, 2005, promotes community involvement, volunteerism, assisting in traditional community events, and scholastic achievement. This program is cast in the same mould as a program which began operating in Saskatchewan roughly 10 years ago and which is operating in various provinces throughout Canada. A unique aspect of this program is that it is organized and run by the youth who participate in it with facilitation by adults.

One of the founding principles of the program is that while sponsors pay for uniforms, cadets do not receive their uniforms for free. It is necessary for the cadet to work off the $200 cost of the uniform by providing volunteer services in their community at the rate of $7.50 per hour. This translates into each cadet providing at least 26 hours of volunteer time, which gives the cadet the opportunity to build stronger ties with their community while reinforcing an important principle of the program, namely accountability. Another great aspect of this program is that it is closely tied with the school which the cadet attends. A cadet's level of success and, therefore, advancement through the ranks is directly linked to their grades and their attendance in school. So if the cadet wishes to succeed in the corps, he must also succeed in school.

In general, then, the cadet corps provides a supportive environment where members are able to attempt new challenges. This program has enjoyed amazing success in the short time in which it has been operating. Since its foundation the Hobbema community cadet corps has grown to over 400 members.

I'd like to congratulate all of the cadets who are making this program successful beyond any expectations. I would also like to congratulate the RCMP members, especially Corporal Huculiak and Sergeant Linnell, who volunteer their time to assist with this very successful program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Privatization

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The privatization of registries and auto insurance in this province has had a negative effect on countless Albertans, from concerns over security issues such as identity theft to a higher cost of goods and services once managed by the public. Many of my constituents have raised concerns that in the days since Alberta's privatization of these industries, costs have increased while services decreased. They believe that this government does not create policies in the interests of Alberta consumers. Despite promises that privatization would reduce prices and improve services, this simply has not been the case.

In the year 2003 the Consumers' Association of Canada released a report that confirmed that Albertans are suffering under the government's privatization agenda. The report states that Alberta consumers can expect to pay, on the average, twice as much for auto insurance as consumers in the three other western provinces, who have maintained a public system. This is unacceptable. Whether it is auto insurance, electricity deregulation, or health care, this government continues to pursue its privatization agenda, fuelled by a blind faith in the merit of competition.

In the interests of my constituents and all Albertans I urge this government to put an end to this disappointing trend. In general, privatization has not brought savings for Albertans as promised, nor has it brought about better service. When developing its policies, the government must be responsible and ensure that these policies will benefit all the people in this province and not only a select few.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Conflict in Sudan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recognition today of the Armenian genocide and our recent commemoration of the Jewish Holocaust moves us deeply. We have pledged ourselves as Albertans and Canadians to never again allow such violations of humanity. Eleven years ago the world watched in horror but failed to act as 800,000 Tutsis were massacred despite desperate pleas from around the world.

In Sudan, before the carnage began in Darfur, before 2003, more than 2 million died and 4 million were displaced, driven from their homes in oil-rich lands in southern Sudan by the murderous government of Khartoum. Now, in the past three years in Darfur the death toll has reached 400,000 men, women, and children and 2.4 million internally displaced, now at risk of starvation. Aid agencies, including Albertan Val Laforce of Medicine Hat, are leaving the area due to increasing violence and are calling on all citizens in free countries to act. African Union troops have not been effective, and the UN is unlikely to mobilize an international force.

It's time for Canada to lead. Violations of international law and humanity anywhere are assaults on all of us. We are either complicit in silence and inaction or we stand for human rights and security. An informal group of citizens, including former MP David Kilgour and myself, have written to all MPs and Senators, urging Canada to leave the bleachers and lead, to quote Prime Minister Harper.

NATO forces successfully and legitimately sidestepped the UN and saved the civilian population of Kosovo. If European citizens can be saved in Kosovo, cannot Africans be saved in Darfur?

I call on each member of the Assembly and all citizens to contact their Member of Parliament this week and express the strongest possible support for international action, led by our federal government, to immediately intervene in the emerging genocide.

What will you tell your grandchildren when they ask what you were doing when Darfur went down?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:50 Parks and Wilderness Areas

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The signs of spring are finally upon us. The weather is getting warmer, grass is showing signs of green, and for many families this is the time to dust off the camping gear and make plans to spend some time in our provincial parks. I'm afraid that if they haven't been there for a while, they might be in for a rude awakening.

Years of neglect have left our province's parks in an inexcusable state of disrepair. I'm hearing an increasing number of complaints about the quality of our parks, and no wonder. This government does not treat our parks and recreation facilities like valuable resources. They seem to merely tolerate the existence of many parks rather than protect and enhance them like the treasures that they deserve to be treated like.

Rather than protecting ecosystems, this government allows development activities directly inside park boundaries. Alberta wilderness areas are often fragmented and disconnected from creating a continuous ecosystem. The EUB is currently considering a proposal to allow Petro-Canada to construct a well site and access road in the Naraway woodland caribou herd's range in the northern foothills. Meanwhile, Canadian logging giant West Fraser continues to log critical caribou and grizzly bear habitats on our public lands. They hold tenure rights for over half of Alberta's foothill ecoregion, which contains the last remaining intact woodland caribou habitat in Alberta. Camping areas around Fort McMurray, which were once recreational destinations for many Albertans and a large appeal for living in Fort McMurray, are now being used to accommodate the booming population in that region.

Aside from the intrinsic value of protecting our wilderness areas, parks provide an opportunity for Albertans to engage in affordable family recreation and to reconnect with nature. It would be a shame to see opportunities for families to learn and experience our natural world permanently lost because this government will not stand up to industry and won't provide adequate park wardens and fish and wildlife officers to maintain the integrity of our provincial parks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Athabasca University

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to share with members an Alberta success story. That success story is Athabasca University in the Northern Alberta Development Council area.

Athabasca University was created in 1970. In the early years, between 1972 and 1975, Athabasca enrolled 650 students. This was a modest beginning. But take notice of what happened, Mr. Speaker. Since then Athabasca has become Canada's leading distance education, online university. It is Canada's open university. When I say that Athabasca University is an open university, I mean that Athabasca makes it possible for Albertans to earn a university degree regardless of where they live or where they work, regardless of their commitments to careers or families. Athabasca gives all Albertans access to a university education.

Last year Athabasca University served over 32,000 students. Most of these students are Albertans, but there are also students from every part of Canada, provinces and territories, and also from around the world. Athabasca University is not only the fastest growing university in Alberta, but rumour has it that it is the fastest growing university in Ontario as well.

Athabasca University offers professional programs and programs in the arts and sciences. Athabasca's MBA is one of the largest and most successful business programs in the country. But that, Mr. Speaker, is not all. Last year Athabasca University became the first Canadian university that can officially offer its degrees in the United States.

Athabasca University has taken the idea of Campus Alberta to heart. Athabasca has partnerships with all other colleges around the province. Mr. Speaker, we should be proud of the education we provide in our province at Athabasca University.

The Speaker: I must say that I'm very encouraged by the performance of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul today. That statement was one minute, 59 seconds, so the member listened very attentively to the adjudication of Standing Order 7(4). The chair will now provide that reminder to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to present over 2,100 signatures on petitions from people who were most anxious to let the government know about their opposition to plans for expansion of private, for-profit hospitals and allowing doctors to work inside and outside of the system, any action by the government to contravene the Canada Health Act, or to paying for private health insurance.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday, May 1, either I or one of the deputy leaders will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 14.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday, May 1, one of our deputy leaders will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 23, 24, and 25.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings. The first has to do with a discussion that was held in this House on March 1, conducted between myself and the Minister of Health and Wellness on gastroparesis concerns.

The second tabling is a letter I received, which was very much appreciated, from the Minister of Health and Wellness indicating her support for a province-wide news release to help raise awareness of digestive disturbances.

The third is the responses I received from the minister regarding questions with regard to gastroparesis from the Committee of Supply meeting on March 1, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two documents to table today. The first is a letter I sent to Prime Minister Stephen Harper this morning, urging him to revisit the whole issue of the future of the national child care program and his proposed alternative to it, the child care allowance scheme.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is entitled The Incredible Shrinking $1,200 Child Care Allowance: How To Fix It. Its author is Ken Battle, and it's published by Caledon Institute of Social Policy. The paper argues that the Prime Minister's proposal is social policy by stealth, which includes the use of arcane and poorly understood technical mechanisms to implement public policy changes without public explanation of the real consequences.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table on behalf of the Minister of Finance five copies of a letter she sent to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on matters raised by him during question periods on April 4 and 10 through 13 regarding Rod Love Consulting Inc. During at least two of those exchanges the minister undertook to review the issue and provide more information to the member, who will have received earlier today the information that I am now tabling.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period today our hon. Premier indicated that he would table the letter dated January 21, 2006, from the Lviv oblast state administration in Ukraine, which is addressed to our Premier and includes an invitation for our Premier to visit Ukraine. I should add that there's a page 2 to that letter, which contains a list of at least nine initiatives to be followed up during the meetings in June, I believe, and that includes five that are specifically education related. So on behalf of the hon. Premier I'm pleased to table the required number of copies in that regard.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, pursuant to the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act the APEGGA, Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists of Alberta annual report 2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Zwozdesky, Minister of Education, pursuant to the Government Accountability Act the Alberta Education 2006-2009 business plan and the school jurisdictions' audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2004, sections 1, 2, and 3.

head: 3:00 Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Government House Leader to share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week commencing May 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very happy to do that. On Monday, May 1, in the afternoon, that being private members' business, written questions will be dealt with, motions for returns will be dealt with as enunciated by myself just a few minutes ago, and Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders will include second reading of Bill 208 and Bill 210. Monday evening under private members' motions we should be able to deal with private member's Motion 508. At 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders we should deal with the government motion with respect to Her Honour the Governor General of Canada's address to the Assembly coming up on May 4, and then we should go on to second reading of Bill 29, Bill 31, Bill 35, Bill 37, Bill 36, and Bill 38, and following that, in Committee of the Whole Bill 20, all of that subject to availability of time and so on.

On Tuesday, May 2, in the afternoon, that being a day for Committee of Supply, we will deal with Government Services estimates. In the evening on Tuesday we will deal with Committee of Supply again, specifically International and Intergovernmental Relations estimates. Following that, in Committee of the Whole we will hopefully be able to deal with Bill 28, Bill 33, Bill 34, Bill 20, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 3, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders it will be a day of Committee of Supply, and we will deal with the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and its estimates. In the evening we will deal with another Committee of Supply, specifically the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General and their estimates. Following that, under Committee of the Whole I anticipate that we will be able to deal with Bill 14, Bill 25, Bill 31, Bill 32, Bill 26, Bill 29, and Bill 20, and otherwise as noted on the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon, May 4, we will of course be pleased under government motion to receive Her Honour the Governor General of Canada for her address to the Assembly. Following that, it will be a day of Committee of Supply, at which time we should be able to consider the Solicitor General and Public Security's estimates and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In addressing the estimates today, I would like first of all to introduce people in the members' gallery that are accompanying me, staff that will make sure that we respond to those questions that we may not be able to have either the time or the capacity to follow through with. I would invite members to acknowledge the presence of Bruce Perry, ADM in charge of finance; Peter Hegholz, who is a very strong support there for our financial matters; Murray Finnerty, who is the CEO in charge of AADAC; and from our office special policy adviser Michael Debolt.

In general on the 2006-07 budget, it has increased to $10.3 billion, an increase of $735 million, or 7.7 per cent, over last year. Nearly two-thirds of the Health and Wellness budget is being provided in operating grants to health authorities. Base operating funding to health authorities increases by $338 million, a 6 per cent increase on average. Health authority funding was allocated to address population growth and inflation costs ranging from 4.9 per cent for the Chinook health region to 8.3 per cent for the Northern Lights health region. The allocations provide fair and sufficient operating funds to maintain existing and new services. We fully expect that health authorities will be able to manage within their budgets.

Seven hundred and forty-eight million will be spent on health capital, including $672 million in capital grants to health authorities. Spending on the 2006-2009 capital plan will increase by 74 per cent over the previous three-year plan to $2.9 billion. This includes $2.5 billion for health facility projects, including the Alberta bone and joint institute in Calgary and the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton as well as health facilities in a number of communities. These projects will add an estimated 2,000 new beds, $309 million over three years for health information systems, including the electronic health record, Alberta Netcare, and diagnostic imaging.

Physician services receive an allocation of $1.88 billion, which includes $75 million for alternative payment plans to allow academic physicians to focus more time on research, education, and delivering specialty care to Albertans; $70 million for primary care initiatives; $21 million for the physician office system program to expand the electronic health record to physician offices. Twenty-seven million will be spent this year to reduce wait times for hip and knee replacements as well as breast cancer care, coronary artery bypass surgery, MRIs and CT scans, and prostate cancer care. The Alberta hip and knee replacement project, which decreased wait times for orthopaedic surgery from 47 weeks to five weeks, will be used as a model to reduce wait times for other surgeries and procedures.

Forty-two million will be spent to improve continuing care by increasing the number of nursing hours and personal care in long-term care facilities, increasing therapy, implementing new health care standards, and improving case co-ordination. This increase is on top of the $25 million increase provided in 2005-06. Mr. Chairman, since March of 2005, at the end of the 2004-05 budget, we have increased the funding for long-term care by a total of $83 million through funds spent at year-end, in-year spending, third-quarter spending, and the spending that's implicated in the budget of 2006-07.

Income thresholds for Alberta health care insurance premiums increased by $5,000 on April 1, 2006. This change will mean that an additional 140,000 people will no longer pay health care premiums or will pay at a reduced rate, saving them about $30 million in 2006-07.

Twenty-five million will be drawn each of the next three years from the $500 million Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund to expand cancer screening programs and develop a virtual cancer research institute to co-ordinate cancer research.

The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission's budget is increasing by $19 million, or 25 per cent, to $95 million in 2006-07. Fourteen million of this increase is being used to implement services to help children abusing drugs, including providing 20 confined residential beds.

For the first time the Alberta Health and Wellness budget has surpassed the $10 billion mark. Every hour we spend more than $1.2 million to maintain and improve Alberta's health care system. Total Health and Wellness spending will account for 36 per cent of government's total expense in 2006-07. If health spending continues to grow by 8 and a half to 9 per cent, health spending could consume about 60 per cent of the total public spending in Alberta by 2025.

What we've accomplished. Let me touch briefly on the ministry's recent accomplishments. The international health symposium was held last May, featuring 28 speakers from nine countries and over 400 delegates participating. The goal of the symposium was to identify innovations that drive excellent health systems and healthier populations. In July the 13-point action plan Getting on with Better Health Care was released and followed up by the submission of more than 450 online and written surveys. Government accepted the Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care report in principle and committed over $36 million in new funding to correspond to recommendations to improve continuing care health services, accommodation, and quality of life issues.

In October $1.4 billion in funding was allocated to 20 capital projects across the province to add bed capacity in the form of new buildings and renovations and expansion of existing facilities. Under the mental health innovation fund a total of $75 million was granted to 30 new projects over the next three years to provide a wide range of mental health services. Fourteen local primary care networks are now in operation throughout the province. The networks involve more than 500 physicians and serve 770,000 patients, and, Mr. Chairman, that continues to expand even today.

The Smoke-free Places Act was implemented January 1, 2006, to prohibit smoking in any public place or workplace that is accessible to anyone under the age of 18. The Cancer Prevention Legacy Act was introduced to create funding that will go towards putting Alberta at the forefront of cancer prevention, screening, and research.

The health policy framework was released in February, identifying 10 new policy directions to guide innovative changes to the public health care system, addressing rising costs of pharmaceuticals, rapidly changing technology, and a growing and aging population. Consultations held in March determined how government should proceed with implementing policies, and eight of the policy directions will be going ahead. We'll be introducing legislation later this spring to help government advance its health care renewal plans.

Our priorities for this year. The ministry's vision is for Albertans to be healthy, to work and play in a healthy environment. The mission of Health and Wellness is to "support individuals, families and service providers in making the best decisions about their health." To provide this support, we will provide leadership and work collaboratively with partners to help Albertans make the best decisions about their health. The ministry fulfills this mission through its three core businesses: being an advocate in providing education for healthy living, providing direction and funding for quality health and wellness services, and leading and participating in continuous improvement in the health system. In addition to the ministry's ongoing core activities, we have two strategic priorities this year: finding innovations to make health services more efficient, responsive, and accessible and strengthening public health risk management capacity.

As we look to the year ahead, we will continue to consult with Albertans on improving our health care system and making further progress on other key goals. We will continue to address four immediate government priorities reinforced by the international health symposium: promoting wellness, particularly of children and youth, advancing primary health care, realizing improvements in mental health services and delivery, and making the electronic health record a robust reality in 2008.

Mr. Chairman, obviously besides these four priority areas, we will work very hard on the cancer legacy project as identified in Bill 1. Our Healthy U program will continue to promote the benefits of healthy eating and daily physical activity to Albertans, with a special focus on children and families. This winter more than 6,000 Albertans visited the Healthy U Crew booth at 18 different events across the province.

Health and Wellness is working with Alberta Education to address healthy eating and physical activity for schoolchildren. We will continue to establish more local primary care networks in all nine health regions, and when all 29, which we anticipate, are operational, they could include as many as 900 physicians and many other health professionals. The primary care initiative has led to 24/7 access to primary health care services and will be the new model to lead the future of primary care in Alberta. We will capitalize on the success of the hip and knee replacement project, using it as a model to reduce wait times for other surgeries and procedures, and will continue expanding Alberta electronic health records, making more patient information available to health professionals across regional health authority boundaries by 2008.

Other priority areas in the business plan include improving access, where we will strive to reduce wait times for elective surgery, and improving access to primary care, subacute home care, and pharmaceuticals. Mr. Chair, I will never be satisfied until no child in Alberta has to wait for treatment or care when they need it.

Promotion and prevention. We will encourage Albertans to take greater responsibility for their health and wellness. Mr. Chairman, if you get up in the morning and you don't love what you see, then it's time to make yourself into a healthier and better person.

Mr. Chairman, children's health will continue to be a top priority, emphasizing and encouraging lifestyles, improving the rate of immunization against common childhood diseases, and reducing harm from violence and drugs. We will expand community-based care, strengthening care for seniors, persons with disabilities, and those with addictions and mental health needs, who will be able to receive the care they need on a timely basis in their communities.

In continuing care improvements will be made by increasing daily nursing and personal care hours from 3.1, which was the previous standard, to 3.6 for long-term care residents, noting, Mr. Chairman, that through this past year most achieved the standard of 3.4 hours by August, and finally, by January, all had achieved that standard.

Implement new health care standards, improving case co-ordination, and manage growing costs of emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals. Health and Wellness will work with authorities and health care professionals so that the right technologies and drugs are used at the right time for the right condition. It is important that all Albertans have access to quality pharmaceutical services regardless of their financial situation.

On health workforce recruitment and retention, working with our partners to ensure that we have the right mix and enough health providers to meet current and future needs, we are pleased to advance the case of working with Alberta Advanced Education, assuring that we will make great strides in closing the gap between what we have and what we need.

Improving access to mental health services has to be a huge priority for all of us. Regional health authorities particularly will be required to report on mental health plans by addressing the need for mental health services.

Our electronic health record, or Alberta Netcare, will continue to expand to help more efficient and effective service delivery.

We will work to prevent Albertans from being exposed unnecessarily to communicable diseases, working to strengthen the system, responding to public health issues and risks, working to assure that Albertans get timely information on how to protect themselves. In short, Mr. Chairman, working not only within Alberta but with our federal partners to pandemic-proof as much as possible our Canadians.

We will work to prevent Albertans from being exposed to environmental health risks, protecting through education, regulatory enforcement, and partnership with other agencies.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just summarize our challenges. We continue to face a number of challenges in working to improve the health care system. These include population growth and changing demographics. Currently 10 per cent of Alberta's population is 65 years of age and older. This population is expected to increase to 13 per cent by 2016 and then 20 per cent before 2030. The population continues to shift from rural to urban centres and is one of the highest population growth rates in Canada, at approximately 1.5 per cent per year.

Other challenges include the cost of emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals, workforce shortages, expectations for health service quality, increased health spending, public health risks, aboriginal health needs, mental health challenges, and addiction issues. Mr. Chairman, we face the stresses of a robust economy and Albertans that have come in to work in this economy and don't have the full capacity of families behind them.

Mr. Chairman, we face the challenge of Albertans who are not prepared to take sufficient ownership for their own health and wellness. It is something that we will continue to try and stress through program delivery, reminding people like the 18- and 19-year-olds that just because they're not seeing a TV ad reminding them not to smoke, it doesn't mean that they shouldn't be looking after their lungs. I'm astounded how frequently Members of this Legislative Assembly sitting on the opposite side continue to imagine that this government should be responsible for making changes in human behaviour in everything from nutritional needs to the health and living habits of Albertans. We carry an enormous responsibility for ourselves, and we must never lose sight of that.

While we face enormous challenges, we're fortunate to have many opportunities to address these challenges and to work, through foresight and innovation, on addressing those challenges. According to the 2005 Alberta Health survey, 88 per cent of Albertans were satisfied with the way health services are provided; 86 per cent indicated satisfaction with the quality of care they received. They frequently, though, remind us that they wish to have greater access and more timely access, a challenge not only in Alberta but across the country.

While Alberta's health care system continues to receive high marks, there will always be room for improvements. We will encourage regional health authorities to be more innovative and more accountable. As I discussed, we will emphasize wellness. We will make strategic investments to improve access and quality for all Albertans, including the aboriginal communities.

All of the ministry's spending will focus on the most effective and efficient use of resources and continuous service quality and improvement. Our government sees a healthy province as one of the most important resources for the future. The health and well-being of each and every Albertan will be our top priority as we implement the Health and Wellness business plan in the coming year.

Thank you. And, Mr. Chairman, may I move the estimates of Health and Wellness?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm just delighted to welcome to the public gallery several people who have joined us to witness the Health and Wellness debate. The first person I'd like to introduce was a colleague of mine, and she is currently a city councillor for the city of Edmonton in ward 1. Many of you will remember her serving very well on this front bench as the opposition critic for social services, which included child welfare and disability programs, between 1997 and 2001, a very vigilant defender of the vulnerable, and that's Linda Sloan. She is here today with Monica Rosborough and Anton Szabo. I'll also note that Kevan Rhead, who is a long-time advocate on health care, is joining us as well. Now, I'm going to have Kevan add to the whole bunch, and I'll get you all to stand. Please welcome them. Thank you.

I'll note that Councillor Sloan is very particularly interested in improvements for ambulance services and emergency room wait times, and she's done quite a bit of work on this under her assigned section as a city councillor.

Ms Blakeman: What I'd like to do today, Madam Minister: I've got about 20 areas of interest I'd like to talk to the minister about and get some responses on. I'm thinking that if I do about two minutes each, that's 40 minutes' worth of talking, so I'll try and do this in two sections of 20 minutes each.

I am going to start, actually, with a question about ambulance services. Now, shortly after the minister was appointed in March of 2005, which was, I think, exactly one month before the municipalities were to hand over responsibility for ambulance services to the health regions, the minister announced that that program would not be going ahead and plans would be put on hold indefinitely. That caused great consternation. We talked about it quite a bit at the budget debates last year because they had in fact been instructed to allocate their money for ambulance services to other divisions, and they did. Then when they had to keep running them, they were either having to run a debt or cut services in other areas, which was most unfortunate.

I understand that the ministry is planning to re-evaluate whether to proceed with this transfer, and there are pilot projects complete in the Palliser and the Peace Country health regions. With that is a corollary issue around emergency room overcrowding. That's a constant issue and often goes hand in hand with the issues around availability and wait times for ambulances. I think that connected to that is insufficient funding by the government to increase the number of acute care beds, which would ease the backlog in emergency room admittances. So there's been no increase in funding for the municipal ambulance program, and the funding that was announced by the minister last year was already well known to be insufficient at the time.

One of my questions is: will the minister explain why the decision was made not to increase funding for ambulances? Can you update us on the status of the pilot projects in Palliser and the Peace Country health regions? I'd like to know which stakeholders are being consulted as part of this pilot project. Are all of the municipalities that are in the regions involved in the decision-making process of an analysis around the success or the status of those pilot projects? I'm interested in whether the minister has received any complaints from the municipalities about the management of the pilot projects. I know, in fact, that they have, and I'd like to hear a discussion about that. I'd like to know when we can expect to see a report made public on these pilot projects.

We have seen a dramatic increase – in some cases, I think, a tripling – in the number of code reds and code burgundies in Edmonton and Calgary caused by a number of factors, but I would venture that it's a lack of staffing, a lack of beds, and overall management. One of my perennial questions is: given that, you know, the pressures on the emergency rooms happen every year at the same time – we know it is flu season; it's entirely predictable; it has happened every year that I've been in this Assembly – why can the government not plan adequately for these flu seasons and get ahead of this? Why does it always seem to be scrambling and behind on it when we know it's coming, when we know it happens at the same time every year? Does the ministry have some level of code reds or code burgundies that they will accept or tolerate? Is there a tolerance level there, and beyond that everything kicks into high gear? What's the issue?

There was a pilot project that placed paramedics in the emergency rooms to reduce the amount of time that the paramedics in Edmonton spent waiting in emergency departments. I'm wondering if the minister has considered expanding that program if I'm thinking of the right program. I know that there's a problem with the handing off of patients that come in ambulances. They have to officially hand over their patients, and if there's nobody to accept the patients, then the ambulances have to sit and wait. That's part of our problem with the usage of ambulances. I know that I can say that accurately from Edmonton. So, you know, when we have slower response times, that's sometimes because we've got one or two ambulances sitting in the loading bay in the hospital waiting to hand over their patients so they can leave and go and get somebody else. This paramedic program in the waiting rooms should alleviate that. That's why I'm questioning whether there's a plan to expand that or put it in every hospital or what the status of it is.

The other issue around transport of patients that's arisen is air ambulance services. Now, this was cut by $4 million. That's appearing on page 258 of the estimates. Vote 2.2.4 went from $40 million to $36 million, and the municipal ambulance program received no increase. That's staying at $55 million. Can the minister explain her decision to cut funding in this area and essentially also cut it from municipal services seeing as we've now had two years' worth of inflationary and volume increase costs that are putting additional pressure on that $55 million worth of funding there?

I'm going to move on to an issue of— well, see, that one series of questions took me six minutes. I'm never going to get through this all.

Okay. Midwifery is the next issue I'd like to bring up. In 1990 the organization I then worked for, the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, made a very thorough recommendation about making midwifery services a recognized profession, forming standards and credentials for it and covering midwifery services under health care. In 1991 the Health Disciplines Board recommended public funding of midwifery care. In 1993 there was an additional government-funded body that also recommended the same thing. Since then and in my time in here we've had a series of health ministers, all of them running different pilot projects and studies and explorations in different areas with slightly different focuses.

We know that the full course of midwifery care costs between $2,500 and $3,000, which is significantly less than a normal delivery in a hospital, which is around the $4,100 mark. That $4,100 is not including the cost of follow-up examinations, epidurals, and other expenses. So again I'm asking the minister why it's taking so long for the government to follow through on funding when midwifery care could alleviate pressures in so many different areas. Why will the ministry, why will this government not support midwifery services being funded under health care? It makes sense. The studies support it. The pilot projects support it. What is the problem?

In 1991 the Health Disciplines Board recommended the development of a baccalaureate program in midwifery as well. We are seeing midwives leave the province either because of the high costs of their operating versus how much money they can make right now and the difficulties they're encountering in their ability to practise but, I think, also experiential training. So I'm asking if the ministry will work with the Department of Advanced Education to establish a baccalaureate program in midwifery. If that's already under consideration, what is the timeline that is being considered there?

I'm going to move to long-term care, Minister, which is appearing on page 31 of your business plan. There are lots of nice words in here about improving the quality of continuing care services by implementing new standards for long-term care centres and continuing care services, et cetera, et cetera, but really what we've seen is $42 million that is being provided to improve continuing care throughout the province. I think the minister said $83 million, and I'm interested in how that divides out because our count is $42 million.

Of course, what is really lacking are the standards, which is what was promised. It was agreed to. We're coming up to the anniversary on May 9 of the Auditor General's report on long-term care. We had a private member's bill brought forward by my colleague from Lethbridge-East, who is currently the opposition critic for seniors, attempting to set up a commissioner that could oversee and monitor and enforce standards, and that was voted down by the government members.

How much longer do we have to wait? Where are we at with the standards? What is taking so long to get these standards in place? I mean, there are best practices that exist in other provinces and in other countries. The long delay is causing suspicions, and this is what starts to happen. We know that long-term care is one of the four areas that the minister continues to investigate as outside of the total health care package. Long-term care was one of the four areas identified in the Aon report. It is a mix right now of public and private funding. It is ripe for private insurance schemes to come in. When we don't see standards of care or we see the development of standards of care taking so long, we start to become suspicious that there's a delay that is allowing for the creation of a market, or there's a delay in order to somehow facilitate the private insurance market for long-term care, allow them to set up or get what they want or influence these standards in some way.

During that particular debate with my colleague from Lethbridge-East the minister had concerns about a resolution process, and I'm wondering what the minister had in mind that would make the establishment of a continuing care commissioner unnecessary. Maybe she can elucidate that.

On February 23 of this year we had the government accepting the recommendations from the MLA task force, recognizing that the current system is insufficient, but it had no strategies for standards or enforcement.

Now, I know that the Health Facilities Review Committee can conduct inspections and make recommendations, but there are no mechanisms in place to ensure that those recommendations have been implemented. It's all a sort of, "Well, we'll say this nicely and hope that you do it" set-up. I note that the '05-06 budget for the Health Facilities Review Committee was $622,000, but the forecast spending for '06-07 is $822,000, and I'm wondering what the extra $200,000 is for for this particular committee, which doesn't have the power to enforce after all of that. So please tell us what the extra money is for.

Without standards in place, what measures will the minister take within the next year to ensure that patients are receiving adequate care and attention? If there's nothing for them to measure against and nothing to mark it against, how is the minister going to be ensuring that this happens?

How close is the minister to bringing forward legislation? We are almost at the end of this spring sitting. According to what I'm hearing from my colleagues on the other side, it's highly likely that there will not be a fall sitting in which legislation can be introduced and passed. By next spring we're into a leadership race for the Conservatives and a new leader and may well be into an election, so what is the timing the minister is anticipating to introduce legislation that would contain new standards?

Could the minister tell us what the government plans are for standardizing staffing levels in long-term care facilities and also around regulating personal care attendants?

Now, I notice that the minister has agreed to increase the hours of care per day from 3.1, which was a new standard, actually, that's only been achieved recently. It was 1.9, I think. So 3.1 and now to 3.6. For most of the year the minister talked about 3.4, so I'm interested that we've got to the 3.6. Is there any consideration to increasing this to four hours per day, which is another recommended benchmark that some people have been hoping for? I'd like to see what studies and reports the minister was using to have reached the 3.6 level. I know I was looking at certain recommendations from certain groups, but I'd like to see what the minister was looking at.

I'm also interested in what research and reports have been considered regarding the optimal workload mixes and staff mixes between RNs, LPNs, PCAs. How is that mix all going to work out? Do you have a grid on that that shows us that in a given facility with a certain type of patients this is how that is all going to work out? How many of each would be useful to know.

A final question connecting the Aon report and long-term care and possible private insurance for long-term care. Is the minister doing any follow-up from that Aon report that would be looking to encourage people to be taking more of the payment costs for long-term care? Obviously, those people that have been reassigned to the housing models move out of a copayment with the government and into paying a hundred per cent. So we're just looking at the people that are still in long-term care facilities and how much they're paying for essentially their room and board. The government is still paying the health portion of it.

I'd like to quickly move on to primary care, which is appearing on page 220 of the business plan and page 258 of the estimates, vote 2.1.4. I heard the minister talk about care being available 24/7. All good. A number of people and experts from across the world, I think, have said that primary care is one of our best weapons in having a healthy population and being able to address a healthy population in a timely and cost-efficient way. On the primary care networks that have been established: just confirm, please, that we're past the pilot project stage. I believe that what we now have are 14 primary care networks, with about 500 family physicians participating.

I'm wondering if the additional funding will be used to expand primary care networks. Will we be having more of them or as many as want to start up? Will that money be made available for them, or is it finite? How many more primary care networks are expected to open this year, and where will they be located? Is the minister taking any kind of a management role or planning role in where these networks would be located? How many of them? How many to open over a certain period of time? Or is this sort of a free market, and whoever wants to open one is free to go ahead and do that?

Other than the primary care networks, is the ministry considering any other plans for primary care?

I'll have to come back and do my second half later.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, and thank you for the questions. I'll be as succinct as I can be, and then hopefully we'll be able to supplement later. Let me start on the point that I'm very appreciative to have the former social services critic here. The experience with local government now no doubt is enhancing the view of the very complex service; namely, ambulance or emergency patient transportation. I'd had that privilege for some time, so I know that it's a complex area.

First of all, we did not increase funding this year although we recognize that the $55 million did not cover the full costs of the ambulance. But we look forward to the ambulance advisory committee, on which in this city, the capital city, we have a member, Mr. Steve Rapanos, who has been involved in ambulance delivery and responsible for that. So I know that they have been working diligently. In fact, we've put municipal representatives on that committee, and they are the ones that are coming up with a recommendation.

There are two areas that I think the hon. member opposite has cited. First, on how the projects are doing and who is being consulted and the decision-making process, I expect to get a final report from the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, who has been working as chair with the chair of the Peace region, Marvin Moore, to bring forward some recommendations for us to consider. The complaints about the pilot projects have predominantly occurred in Peace River as a community being concerned and not somewhat on stride with the health region of Peace River, and there have been several efforts to try and work and resolve the issues there.

On one hand, if I'm looking at it as a health minister, it would be much more convenient to have everybody in the pilot. However, as a former reeve I also have sentiment for people who want to direct their traffic in the way they see fit. That was one of the initial problems in regional health authorities: assuming that a more coordinating role might mean that they were going to in a manner of speaking take over ambulance delivery. So we've got a lot of work to do there.

I'd just identify that I've had an opportunity on two occasions, as recently as last evening, to speak with Mayor Mandel and this city about ambulance delivery. These identified yet one more problem, and that is the lack of collectibles. Sometimes, I believe, the communities are not able to collect the amount of revenue due them for the ambulance, and he has an uncollectible bill of some $2 million, which is double what it is in Calgary. I spoke with the mayor of Calgary about that, so he's going to check about it.

Suffice it to say in summary that we will get a report fairly soon and be able to identify what the issues are there and what the progress should be for our government in responding further in their responsibilities to help and support the health delivery through emergency patient transportation.

In terms of the work in this city with the Capital health region and paramedics who often are slowed down in their capacity to do proper work as ambulance support personnel because of staying in the hospital to ensure that the triage is appropriately followed through, there is a report that I'm waiting for, but I know that the health authority has been trying to work to improve and enhance that due diligence.

Finally, in terms of the air ambulance the reduction of $4 million was a reflection of less funding required in 2005-06 due to lower utilization and fewer air miles. It simply wasn't a service that was used as much. So at this stage it was deemed that it was monies that could be expended in other areas of the health budget. As you'll note, hon. member, we've been trying to cope in a way that's responding and responsible but placing the dollars where they're most significantly needed.

If I could talk a bit about midwifery, I have great empathy for the sentiments expressed by midwives to have more support. We do support the work of the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth, the ASAC group, who'll be celebrating their International Day of the Midwife at the Alberta Legislature Grounds on May 7. Mr. Chairman, a great part of the opportunity for midwives to become more involved rests in the hands of physicians under the terms of the trilateral agreement. So we have been funding supports for them on a variety of fronts, including some of the educational supports, but we have been hopeful that the primary care networks will take on more of that responsibility. Health regions can fund midwifery services based on their assessment of community needs, but as the hon. member has noted, we have not seen as much support by the regions as we had hoped. Funding, though, for three midwives has been provided to the shared care maternity program in WestView health centre, so there is some hope that things will come forward.

In terms of more support on the baccalaureate, that has been something that I have on the agenda to advance as we work on our workforce strategy.

If I may, on long-term care I'd like to just indicate to the hon. member that the $83 million is a function of taking $5 million from accruals not expended in the budget of '04-05. So towards the end of March we took $5 million there. We had $10 million in the '05-06 budget that was designated to increase long-term care hours to 3.4 hours, and we advised the regional authorities to support and match that $10 million from funds within their budgets. So within the amounts of money that were given to each authority, we asked them to supplement that $10 million with an additional amount to make sure they match that target.

Many were able to do that and were able to do that by August, but some were not able to do that. So in the third quarter, when we provided $26 million, $15 million of which was for the staffing levels, that completed the support that was required to assure that absolutely everybody else was up and running and had fully funded the amount of 3.4 hours on average per-patient care. So you have $26 million from the care amounts that were also provided for additional support on therapy and $42 million that was designated in this year's budget. I'm merely saying that since I came into this position last March, we started with that additional $5 million, then $10 million, a total of $83 million if you add the $42 million. I went over that figure several times thinking that you probably would ask me about it today because I know your concern about long-term care.

Now, on the Auditor General's report we have accomplished many of the initiatives, but we obviously believe that there's more to be done. If we were moving from 3.6 to 4 hours per day in 2007-08, if we were to be able to do that, it would require an additional $53 million. To the hon. member, I think that the biggest difficulty we've had is getting the number of personal care attendants properly trained and in place to fill those positions. So a great part of our initiative on the workforce strategy will be to do the training and through the year monitor our progress in being able to make the right staff mix in the right place at the right time to deliver long-term care.

The reason the standards document hasn't come out yet is quite simply that I was not satisfied in the first instance, nor was my colleague the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. We issued two papers last year on long-term care, the definitions for everything from assisted living to ways and processes that we believed would be appropriate. I'm also looking at some of the additional supports beyond the regular staffing mix. I'm just giving you a little heads-up here. I'm looking at other things because my belief is that we should be looking at hydration and nutrition as key elements in those standards.

I'm going to try to see if I can encourage the hon. members on all sides of the House to support some pilots that would enable us to see how we could do with people that came in with those designated opportunities, much like we have neighbourhood moms properly trained to go in schools to help monitor school programs. If we can get retired nurses or properly trained professionals to help us with the feeding and hydration of people with multiple sclerosis and long-term care needs, maybe we'll have less use of a microwave that's reheating food for somebody because someone hasn't been able to feed them on time. I mean, I think one of the biggest things in long-term care is providing the proper nutritional supports so that they maintain their health, and then their poor little bodies don't break down.

The Health Facilities Review Committee has an increase in funding due to the activity that's anticipated and as a result of the comments by the Auditor General. Clearly, those Health Facilities Review Committee members are entitled to go in without invitation and without notice to make sure that we have the proper types of inspection in place when we have had concerns expressed about long-term care.

Standardizing our staffing levels and regulating the PCAs are things that you have mentioned that I hope we'll be able to demonstrate in short order here when we get those standards in front of Albertans. We have been working with health authorities, alerting them to the standards that are coming. We know that many of them are attempting to put them in place before they are out there because we've done a lot of work with not only the nonprofits but the for-profit groups that have been talking about that. I'm going to ask that our staff follow up on your question on studies on the 3.6 level. I think that's an important element that we should respond to.

In terms of the Aon report on long-term care, I have absolutely no intent of using that document as anything more than a source of advice about the expected increases in pressures on long-term and continuing care and in terms of encouraging people to take advantage of that themselves in the future. I think it will speak for itself as Albertans become aware of the number of pressures on long-term care and the need to find the right and suitable accommodation for themselves. So at this stage that would not be something that I would be personally inclined to move forward on. I'm much more focused right now on how we deal with the rising costs of drugs, and that will be my area of emphasis from the Aon report because not only in the bulk buying but in some of the other areas of improving our pharmacare delivery I think it's important.

Mr. Chairman, in my opening remarks I did comment that we have 14 networks for primary care, and we will be expanding to 29, with an expected 900 physicians. I mentioned that previously. Perhaps the hon. member didn't catch that. My role in the placement of those: I am not involved politically, but I am anticipating that the regional health authorities are working with their physicians to make sure that that happens. One of the delays I found is that they're all busy trying to find new ways to do the same things that were done in other areas, so this is a period of inventing things, and that's putting some of the difficulties in place. In other words, if you and I were to negotiate a primary care network, two other people in another community might say: well, those aren't the standards and things we want. So that's partly what takes some time, but by year-end we should have 29 in place, and I think that that will be extremely positive.

Mr. Chairman, there was another question, I suspect, about the timeliness of putting primary care in place and making sure that it's working well for people. I'm quite proud of the fact that at least 14 networks were in place by year-end. We've had some discussions about the use of staff. Frankly, if I could express a hope for the future, it would be that these primary care networks would absorb additional personnel.

Chiropractors, for example, have identified the hope that they would be embraced in the circle of a primary care network, and I support them on that. Why not? I support the use of other alternative professionals. We had an excellent presentation on the third way from a young acupuncturist that said that he suspected that many of the alternative therapies that could be delivered in a primary care network by well-trained and certificated and accredited acupuncturists would also provide support. Thus far it hasn't been embraced, but these are the kinds of things, when we look to the future, that I think we will see that will enable us to advance on some of these fronts.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think with that and with the thought that some of the thoughts that were expressed by the member opposite may not have been answered, I will sit down and allow the member to continue.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I just want to remind everyone that this weekend we will be having some mock parliament happening in the Assembly, and there was a request from the Sergeant-at-Arms that everybody clear their desks, particularly your laptops. I'm just reminding you to do that before we adjourn for the evening.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for her detailed questions, many of which the minister answered, and I thank the minister for those answers. I want to ask about a number of things.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, during the travels of the NDP caucus around the province dealing with health care, one issue that's repeatedly come up is a lack of coverage for physiotherapy. We've heard from physiotherapists, and we've also heard from patients in the province about this issue and the cuts that have been made which don't allow proper rehabilitation of patients and just the difficulty that physiotherapists have faced in trying to plan an actually effective treatment plan for people given that they may need a number of visits and they're limited and restricted in the things that they can do and the number of times that they can see people and the costs that that then passes on to the health care system when people aren't properly treated and rehabilitated. I'd like the minister to address what the department has done and plans to do with respect to funding for physiotherapy and whether or not she sees that as something that can be an investment so that longer term costs for the health care system are limited.

Another area that I'd like to ask about is the question of rural health care and the retention of physicians in rural areas and in small-town Alberta. That's another area we've heard quite a bit about. The rural physician action plan, which has a $6 million estimate, has no increase this year, and I wonder what the minister can tell us about that particular decision and what plans the ministry may have to allow smaller centres in this province to attract and retain doctors. What sort of health care facilities are most appropriate, and what other types of health care professionals do we need to attract – for example, nurse practitioners – and how can those services best be provided in rural areas and in smaller centres?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has dealt in part with the municipal ambulance issue, and the minister has provided some response on that. I'm trying to find my notes. Well, I'll come back to that one, Mr. Chairman.

I want to talk a little bit about aboriginal health strategies. This is another area in the department that has a fairly significant cut. I think there's a 23 per cent reduction in aboriginal health strategies.

Can the minister explain how that decision was made and what the challenges are among aboriginals, both urban aboriginals and those who are not, and what the government's plans are with respect to that?

I want to talk a little bit about the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy, which is pretty much static. The Premier has talked on a number of occasions about wanting to cure cancer, and I think that that's an extremely noble goal, Mr. Chairman, but not one that I think is going to be accomplished by one province regardless of how much financial resources they are prepared to put towards it. That's a world-wide effort and has to be shared around the world. I'd just like to know what the impacts on the funding for cancer prevention programs are expected to be and what longer term plans the government has with respect to that. I do want to raise a question of smoking in connection with cancer reduction. I see that there's a dramatic increase among young people smoking in the province, and I would be very much interested to know what the government is planning to do about that.

The minister talked a lot about how individuals need to take personal responsibility and not always ask the government to do it. I guess I would put to the minister the question: if the government doesn't get involved in something like youth smoking and says, "It's simply up to the individual, and we're washing our hands of it," to take the argument to its extreme, that "that's a personal choice and not anything to do with the government; it's not our responsibility," then what in the long run is the impact on the health of people and on provincial health care budgets? Surely prevention and government involvement in prevention programs have got to be a very high priority if we do want to get control over health care costs. This, Mr. Chairman, is very, very central to our view that the government does need to be engaged with its citizens in encouraging healthy behaviour. The language around people taking personal responsibility I think needs to be clarified because it certainly could be seen to imply that the government is not going to be engaged with its citizens in terms of encouraging that sort of thing.

I want to talk about the wait time experiment. I think it's an area where the government deserves a great deal of credit around the joint replacement program. I know that the minister has talked about extending that beyond hip and knee replacements and introducing the same process for breast cancer, MRI and CT scans, and other preventative and early detection measures. In our view, Mr. Chairman, this shows that innovation within the public system is the key to meeting the financial challenges in the future. Now, obviously, this is a wait time issue rather than a direct financial issue, but ultimately the more efficiently we can use our existing health resources, the more we can resist pressures to spend more money into the future.

That brings me to the question of drug costs. I know that the minister has just said that focusing on drug costs as a driver of health care costs is going to be a great priority of hers. I certainly applaud that. I think that that is clearly one of the areas that needs to be looked at, and I wonder if the minister is willing to look again at the proposal that we made in a private member's bill, that was defeated at second reading, to establish bulk buying of pharmaceuticals. We believe, based on the experience in New Zealand, that we could save $75 million a year on drug costs in the first year alone if that kind of approach was done just in Alberta.

I know that there have been some national discussions about doing it nationally. It would be preferable to do it nationally, but when I did meet with the minister about that issue, I was disappointed to learn that there really wasn't a lot of progress nationally about establishing pharmaceutical bulk purchasing across the country, that a great deal of work needs to be done, that other provinces and the federal government may not be particularly interested in pursuing that to a rapid conclusion. I guess that my question to the minister is: if there's an indication that there may not be a speedy conclusion to federal and provincial negotiations around this issue that produces a practical and meaningful result in a reasonable period of time, will the government be prepared to go it alone and establish a model or pilot project on bulk purchasing of pharmaceuticals right here in Alberta and thereby provide the leadership that may be necessary across the country to do that?

Now, I want to ask a little bit about health care premiums. I think that we've had some mixed messages from the government on health care premiums as to whether or not they're actually something that are helpful in terms of reminding people of the costs of health care. That's what the Premier has said. As a whole they pretty much look like a tax to us, Mr. Chairman, because they are not dedicated for health care, and there's no relationship between your use or need for health care and how much you pay. It's not based on your income. It's a fixed amount. The government's move towards eliminating health care premiums for seniors and lower income people is laudable, but can we in fact expect the government to move towards eliminating health care premiums altogether?

The minister said in answer to one of my questions I think this week that any surpluses in health care premium revenue is in fact dedicated to the health budget. I'm just wondering if she could elaborate on that: how long that's been around and how much money since it's been introduced in each year has gone into health care and where into the health care budget exactly it goes.

I want to talk a little bit about the Aon report, Mr. Chairman. I thought that the Aon report was interesting in that it indicated that private insurance may well not be the answer, and that was a bit of a surprise to us, quite frankly. What did concern us about the Aon report was its projections of costs for the health care system into the future, and that's really something that we have a great deal of concern about because it's been this unsustainability argument that has underpinned repeated attempts to move into the area of private health care.

Of course, the experts will tell us that private health care will increase your costs and not reduce them, so when we see the kinds of projections that Aon has come up with, we are very, very concerned. For example, projecting an annual increase out for 25 years of 10 per cent doesn't seem to us to be a reasonable assumption at all. If you measure back before the cuts in the mid-90s to today, increases in health care spending have actually averaged about under 6 per cent, not 10. But if you measure from the depth of the cuts in the mid-90s, the slope of the line is much higher, and that's how they got their 10 per cent. That's unreasonable. Increases in health care costs have been overestimated, and provincial growth and provincial revenues have been underestimated, so of course you get a very, very large gap over time.

I would just like to know if the minister is open to alternate information with respect to sustainability. We believe that innovation in the public system is the key to controlling costs.

I guess, Mr. Chairman, that in conclusion I want to say a few words about the third way and the process that we've gone through. I know that the minister said the other day that she feels a bit like George Chuvalo, and I promised her a helmet. I want to assure the minister that we have a strong passion for public health care. There has certainly never been anything intended personally at all with respect to this.

I want to say for the record, Mr. Chairman, that I've been surprised a number of times about the minister's honesty with respect to certain things that have come up in the issue. She at no time tried to hide what the government was planning, and she did not hide the results of her consultations or attempt to change the data that was there. She was, I think, at all times quite honest with Albertans about what the government was doing and what the response of Albertans to that was. Although we believe that she was certainly going in a direction we didn't support, we felt that she did so with honesty and integrity. I just wanted to say that to the minister.

We're going to continue to do whatever we think we need to do to fight for public health care. We also believe that we need to innovate with the system, and we need to grapple with the challenges of growing costs. We think that there's a better way to do that, and we're going to be committed to continuing to participate in that debate.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, particularly to the hon. member for that last comment. I'd just indicate that for some years now, in fact I believe it's for about five or six years, physiotherapy services have been at the discretion of the regional health authorities. They haven't been funded by the department.

Mr. Chairman, at the time that we came through all of the regions last June and asked them about the success of many of the ways they were delivering care, a physiotherapist came forward. She has been very involved in the PEP program, supporting parents who have needed additional supports because of children on drugs. She operates a clinic, and she said that at the time that we made the move to transfer the responsibility to health authorities and health authorities encouraged physiotherapists to become more entrepreneurial, they thought that the sky was falling. Now she'd have it no other way. She said: we have been better able to address efficiencies and patient care; we've been able to get some latitude in how we deal with patients and billing and so on. She was much more positive about it.

While in some communities there may have been suggestions by physiotherapists that they have not got the umbrella of support from the department, the regional health authorities have been doing a great deal of work to determine what treatment and duration is required, and they have varied. Capital health led the way, and Calgary has moved in that capacity. Others have moved in other ways to manage it. It may not be ideal, but as one of the allied services, one of the services we fund that is not required by the Canada Health Act, we have looked at local decision-making to account for priorities for some of the ways that dollars are expended, and some have made that choice.

In terms of the rural doctor shortage this is going to have to be a part of our workforce plan, and I'm just speaking to the hon. member opposite. Some of the things that have been so unfortunate this past year have been rural physicians with personal crises that have kept them from fulfilling the mission that they originally set out to do. Without divulging sad personal situations, it has certainly compromised the effectiveness for a seamless delivery in some of the isolated and remote communities. We're looking at some things that are akin to respite so that when rural physicians are absent from the job or where lapse of service could occur, we have other health authorities to go in to plug in that support.

Now, the hon. member has noted that there are no additional dollars there for the rural physicians, but we have added to our alternate physician planning. The ARPs have gone up from $35 million to $70 million in this year's budget just like the primary care networks have been funded, last year $35 million up to $70 million. So there's more funding for what we hope we'll be able to develop for some of the rural authorities, which is more support for the retention of rural physicians.

We found one other thing that the hon. member might be very interested in. We found that frequently some of the rural and outlying regions were targeting the same physician, so they might in fact attempt to recruit from three different authorities one physician located, for example, in Germany. They would have a recruiter from all three authorities over romancing one doctor. We have got to change it so that there's a more collaborative framework in the romancing of required physicians.

The bigger thing, I think, is the initiative we've started with the $3.4 million to have an influx a second time in the year, not just the fall influx of doctors into the universities but the $3.4 million that's going to allow us to support international medical graduates, which, in fact, could be our own grads returning home because we don't distinguish international medical graduates coming to Alberta. That's an interesting thing. People think we're robbing from someplace, but if you graduate from an international school someplace, in Dublin, Ireland, or in Australia, you are as much an IMG candidate as somebody who might be from that country themselves. So that $3.4 million that we put in in March will enable us to hire, depending on the speciality, about 14 to come in and serve in a residency program and become qualified as doctors.

We are looking now at a program that will enable us to bring forward all of our grads; in fact, invite everybody that's gone away from Alberta to take training in other countries to come back and have a second entry point in Alberta in the springtime so that they can take advantage of some of those times when residents may have more opportunity for placement with co-operating physicians in the educational institutions. We're looking at places like Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Medicine Hat and Red Deer, other outlying centres where we might find qualified, willing doctors to give them this support in their internship and their residency.

Last night at the Canadian Medical Hall of Fame dinner I spoke with the president of the Canadian Medical Association and contemplated some of the programs we should look to. One that I'm favouring right now is the removal of the responsibility of residents to pay back their tuition until they've completed their residency requirements.

The second would be that we look at sponsoring med students by relieving them of a portion of their paybacks on student loans if they serve for an equivalent period of time. Let's say one year of student loans for one year of service in psychiatric medicine, for example, right here in the province, provided they stay here.

So some alternative approaches to getting physicians and getting them into rural communities and not just in Medicine Hat but in places like Hanna and in places like Brooks and Strathmore because those are the places where so much more support is needed. That's where I'm hoping we can not only bring them back to live and also to work here but that we not beggar our neighbours in other countries or in other provinces but legitimately bring Albertans back to Alberta.

I've been given several figures. I know that the hon. member for south Calgary – I'm sorry; it escapes me now, but her son is a physician. She said that she believes there are 300 Albertans out there that are taking training elsewhere that she would hope we would be able to track back. Across Canada I believe there are some 600 physicians that are being educated offshore that we could bring back to Alberta and into rural communities. I note that that would be a very positive way of ensuring that people who were very comfortable in this environment would be able to be retained and work here.

Just talking a minute about the aboriginal programs, we did reduce the grants that were being provided over and above the monies that are provided to regional health authorities for aboriginal programs with the thought that we would go after in a tenacious way the federal government because we've been funding grants where they have not. The most incredibly difficult thing has been to keep backstopping programs when the regional health authorities are trying to do some of that and when we're trying to get them more involved in the programs.

The reduction was really in some of the funding that was on, I would say, an ad hoc basis in grants. It wasn't a large amount of money, but we're going to work more on the federal government to make them ante up to the plate, where they belong. It sickens me to think that there are reserves in Alberta where women are working in shelters, bringing food from their families' tables to feed the people that are on reserves and denying themselves the salaries they should have because they are not being given sufficient monies in transfers to support them. I'm going to be very tenacious on that because those people don't deserve it and it's disgusting. I'm sorry to get caught up on that, but I feel very strongly about it.

In terms of the tobacco and what the government does. It's interesting that in those stats that came out the other day for the 15- to 19-year-olds, we're doing less well. We're doing better with the 15-, 16-, and 17-year-olds, but with the 18- to 19-year-olds no question we need to start finding ways to target them again. We had that as part of our advertising program. People at the time noted last year that the federal government was doing more with tobacco ads. They stopped those wonderful tobacco ads at some point in the middle of the year, and all of a sudden we were flat. Those figures that were on the Alberta ads of people melting before your eyes were pretty effective. I personally like the one that has that woman that dissolves from being sort of a hottie to something with fangs and a tail and horns and the rest of it. That would stop me from smoking. But we have to get smarter and do more due diligence on that, and that will be a thrust of what we're doing.

In this past year a lot of our efforts in AADAC have been on residential treatment.

I do like the NDP program relative to bulk buying of drugs. I don't know if we'll ever get it with other areas, but I think the work we've done to put all of our own ministries together will start gleaning some support. We just recently, yesterday in fact, released the Aon report to the drug manufacturers so that they could tell us how they would see us justifying those rising costs and what we should be doing about those rising costs. I'm looking forward to innovative approaches that they will bring forward to see how we can more responsibly deal with drug issues and the rising costs of drugs and technologies. During the third-way discussions it was intriguing to have them come forward and tell us on at least two occasions that we could probably save other areas of our budget funding if we spent more on drugs. So I'm going to be interested to learn exactly how that can be done so that it is responsible.

Because of my own natural aversion, having alternative therapies of vitamin E and Vitalux and lutein for my eyes in my cupboard, I don't have all the other products that most other people might be considering part of a proper storehouse, and fortunately I haven't needed more drugs. But we have to find ways to curb our costs, and I think you've hit on something that is going to be a thrust of our work. I will mention it when we have the meeting with the B.C. cabinet because it's part of my concern.

Now, with the health care premiums normally any surpluses arising out of premiums would go to the general revenue fund. I mean, that's where they go. But then Health has been permitted the argument that – for example, in 2005-06 we had about $28 million that were surplus in health premiums. If we have a need for those health premiums as we did in the long-term care, we can argue that this is an ideal place to look at that funding to be utilized. These are one-time funds though, so we have to be careful because these funds have to be used for certain initiatives. Wait time backlogs is another example which could be used. But it's not so much a policy as it's been more of a practice where that argument can be made because of additional funds.

We noted that in this past year we've had significant wait times, pressures in high-growth places like Fort McMurray. Some of those health care insurance premiums have come because of more Albertans coming forward. So we looked at the revenue, we asked for some consideration, and when we tabled the supplementary estimates, we asked for the consideration of government for use of those revenues to help us this year with access and wait times.

Now, in terms of the Aon report and other alternatives and innovation, other revenues that work in that category – as you note, the resource revenues weren't shown to rise. Other revenues were shown to rise. Other kinds of costs were shown to rise. I wouldn't say that we would get a clean bill of health from Alberta Finance about that, because in showing the reduction of revenues on the resource side, it may well be that those are not predictions that our government is willing to make, but those are predictions that Aon made. In questioning them myself, they said that regardless of what Alberta Finance or our own government would wish to make, they did a lot of work on it, international work and comparisons, and believed it was really a responsible reflection.

Then I look at John Lau's comments as the president of Husky, who said that he believes that we will have some constraints because of the lack of being able to attract a workforce up to Fort McMurray. Even if you talk to Ted LeLacheur in this community with his moving and cartage company, he's concerned about the reduction of able and available labour because of the draw for the larger projects, and it may well be that these are indicators that people like Aon are looking at to say: will we be able to sustain and maintain this high growth in the resource sector? You know that today, well, the streets look paved with gold up there or black liquid crude. You think, well, yes, it will happen, but we – at least I – have lived through times when the economy has bust before, so I'm assuming that when they look out 20 years from now and see the reduction there, it may only be in their view, but it really intrigued me.

I like the increase in other revenues because it's suggestive that we'll get more smart technology here. Only hindsight is 20/20, but when I look at that Aon report, the part that's concerning me most is that figure to 2016 because it is in the foreseeable future. It is something that concerns me, and I just have to look back at the last five years and see the doubling up of our health care costs without really doubling our population. I just reflect on the joys of being on Treasury Board and being reminded about how much we're increasing our budgets on a regular basis and thinking: is there another way to do it?

I'll tell you two things that I think, out of several. I think that there has to be a pan-Canadian strategy that acknowledges sustainability of health. I think it would be absolutely wonderful if health ministers and Premiers across this country and through the territories could actually agree that these were critical issues and these were ways to attack it. I think they've looked at it before in the light of transfer payments, but I don't know if it has been looked at before in the way that we try and get Canadians to be educated on sustainability.

On the other end of it I think we should look at my belief that no child should have to wait for anything and try and focus on reducing wait times for children. Reducing wait times for everybody for absolutely everything would reduce all of those costs that are attributable to waiting and getting painkillers and getting prodded and poked and diagnosed so frequently and staying in hospital and waiting and waiting and waiting and waiting. I think that if we could evaluate the cost of wait time, it would be huge.

I think it will probably be beyond my term – if I look at this term of office that we have until the next election – before we really are able to achieve that business of no child waiting for everything because behavioural problems and psychological problems and mental health problems for children have been tolerated for so long that we have got a deficit in the number of psychiatrists and psychologists that can properly deal with those issues. The COPE program, that deals with adolescent behaviours and getting adolescents support earlier, is one of the things that gives me hope there, but we have to make a dedicated effort between schools and hospitals and communities to work together and recognize that everybody is responsible.

I'll go back to the time when I was a reeve and a municipal councillor, and I thought that that was the government's problem. Not ours, but the provincial government's problem. I thought that they should have to solve the problems because it would mean that they should give the money. But I think that when we have communities putting in curfews, we recognize that communities are beginning to recognize that a government that's under the dome way over there isn't going to do it at the local community level. So local communities in identification, in help for assessments, in building safe communities have a role to play. Beyond that, we have a role to play in educating.

This comes back to my point on the workforce, some clinical psychologists and psychiatrists to help us with the very real problem of children's mental health. I think that if we could have picked up that Fraser Mustard report and said across this country that we believe that the Mustard McCain report has the elements for making this society a healthier society, a more sustainable society, we'd have been a lot better off. To that end, we're working in this budget on the early childhood development focus along with other ministries, like Children's Services, who are trying to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have to observe that spending 135 minutes on a budget that has got over $10 billion worth of expenses is not enough time.

A couple of cleanup issues I'd like to do. One is to go back to the issue of acute-care beds. I note that there are 2,000 new beds. How many of these new beds are in the city of Edmonton? I'm also wondering if any of these beds have been previously announced. This government is getting into a habit of constantly reannouncing things and adding on one new element. So of these 2,000 new beds, how many are going to Edmonton, and have any of them already been announced as part of any other initiative?

I'm wondering if the minister can outline what efforts both the department and the regional health authorities are taking to address the wait times for the city ambulances in the emergency departments. I had addressed a bit of that before.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

There's been some work done on acute-care beds in Edmonton and Calgary, and the numbers I'm working with – these came from the regional health authorities, by the way – say that in 1993 in Edmonton there were 2,807 long-term and acute-care beds. Today, Madam Minister, there are 2,084 long-term and acute-care beds. So my question is: how does the department justify decreasing the number of beds in Edmonton over the last 13 years when we've had a fairly significant increase in population, not to mention the other inflationary costs that are involved in that?

I will also note that that same astonishing decrease in acute-care and long-term care beds was not reflected in Calgary. They did have a small decrease but a very small decrease, nothing compared to what I've just outlined for the Edmonton area.

I think there's a lot of work to be done around the primary care networks. Specifically, what direction has the minister given to the primary care networks to offer additional supports to facilitate more efficient discharge from acute-care hospitals? We're better at doing that but not fully. How do the primary health care networks fit into picking up people that are being discharged from those acute-care beds?

The last question – a cleanup again on the emergency – is a notation that if the government had put sufficient resources and supports into place, the Edmonton taxpayers would not be paying the equivalent of four full-time equivalents' worth of staff to sit waiting in emergency. So I continue, with the assistance of my previous colleague, to push the minister on that. It's fairly alarming to watch what's happening both with ambulances and the emergency rooms and, further to that, the acute-care beds.

I want to go back to the primary care networks. I think there's great potential here, but I'm wondering if the minister is considering giving more specific direction to these networks. Part of my frustration in this is that they still seem to be doctor driven. Everybody takes a step back and goes: well, I can't really, you know, direct this. But the government can use the funding that they're giving to these primary care networks to direct policy, to make things happen as an incentive in some cases or as a disincentive in other cases.

When we go back and talk about the midwives, for example, there's nothing that requires those primary care networks to seriously consider putting a midwife in every region. Without clear direction from the government that that's what's expected, nobody's going to pick it up. I mean, they could use all of that money from a primary care network, you know, to hire a couple of nurse practitioners and call that it. So my frustration is starting to grow, that we're not actually seeing those teams integrating. The minister talked about acupuncturists and chiropractors. I'm talking about midwives. All of these are possibilities, but I don't really see it coming into place.

Part of that is: what criteria? I'm looking for what performance measurements have been set in place to measure the effectiveness of these primary care networks. By this time next year they will have been running for at least a year and in some cases much longer than that. How is the ministry going to measure the effectiveness of these specifically and address some of the issues that we've raised here around (a) can we get some of these other care professionals working to their full scope of practice, and (b) getting some of the variety of health care professionals we're looking for into those primary care networks?

Has the ministry considered any other options for primary care reform aside from the primary care networks? Please give me additional information on that. An example would be increasing the number of community health centres. The three that I'm thinking of are the Boyle McCauley, the Alexander health centre in Calgary, and the Calgary Urban Project.

Still on primary care networks. What criteria did the ministry use in evaluating the applications to become a primary care network and receive funding for it? Also, were any of the applications or letters of intent declined?

Again with the performance measurements and the evaluation of the success of the projects. When could we expect a report that would be dealing with this? Included in that report, how are the primary care networks working in rural areas as compared to urban areas? What is the total cost of maintaining the primary care networks on an annual basis? What are the specific responsibilities for both the patients and the physicians that are participating in primary care networks? What is the code of expectations and responsibilities that is inherent? Are they signing a contract? Is there some laying out of the expectations?

Again, some discussion or acknowledgement from the minister around: we still have doctors as gatekeepers in the system here. Rather than doing what doctors do, we still have them as the central point, the gatekeeper, admitting who gets in and who gets out and who gets funding and who's included in the primary health care networks. Is that appropriate? Are they the most appropriate people to be driving that?

Health workforce. The minister did talk a little bit about that. I'm wondering about succession planning as we look to not only an aging of our population but an aging of our health workforce population. What programs are in place for recruitment of health professionals as part of succession planning for those that are expected to be retiring soon? Could I get some details, please, from the minister about exactly what programs she and the Minister of Advanced Education are working on around efforts to recruit and train health professionals? How many spaces or seats are being put in place or added to the health professional programs? What is the list? Does the ministry know how many health care professionals they will need five years out? Ten years out? What specifically is the goal for bringing in foreign-trained professionals and getting them accredited and certified and out and into our workforce? How many new ones are we looking at adding? The minister talked about potentially bringing in 300 Albertans who are out there at international medical schools, bringing them back in, but what's the number that you're looking at for those trained in other schools?

What was behind the decision to not increase the rural physician action plan? The minister mentioned that there was additional money put into the ARP, the alternate something, something, but what exactly is behind the decision not to increase specifically the rural physician action plan? Is the ministry considering any other programs to ensure that health professionals remain in the public sector?

The minister has talked a little bit about mental health, but I note that even though 1 in 5 Albertans will be affected by mental illness in their life, the government is only providing $69 million in mental health promotion services and care. Perhaps I've missed something. Is there any other way that mental health services are being funded in the province? Does it come out of any other pot of money or any other ministry, or is that it?

How was the money used to ensure that appropriate supports are in place to transfer people from hospitals into the community? What exactly is the status of the mental health care plan that was announced in July 2005, Getting on with Better Health Care? Does it even exist yet? Is it available? What are the benchmarks that are in place there? What are the performance measurements? What are the anticipated outcomes? What are the dates that are attached to that? What exactly are the steps involved in integrating mental health services into the overall health care system in the province?

What reports or standards or best practices are the RHAs using to develop local initiatives with the funding that's coming from the mental health innovation fund? How is the success of these initiatives to be measured to ensure that they are in fact improving services for the mentally ill? What plans for long-term funding are in place beyond the three-year, $25 million mental health innovation fund? Or is that the end of it? That seems to be the case, but I'd like to know exactly what's being anticipated there. Is there funding for preventative mental health services, such as counselling and the development of community networks?

Closely connected to that is the issue of addictions. There's a lot of talk about helping addicts here. The minister talked about children waiting and waiting to get services. Well, especially around mental health services and addiction services, which are closely aligned, there are pitifully few addiction and detox beds to deal with this, and now we've got the new bill in place where children can be committed by their parents to be detoxed. Again, beyond that immediate five-day detox there are no addiction beds available for them. So questions on that.

Pharmaceuticals. The minister has talked about some things that she'd like to look at. She is suggesting that she would be working with the federal government. I mean, all of this is kind of an if, and it's all in the future. What concrete plans is the minister working with right now around pharmaceuticals and getting a national pharmacare program in place or getting an Alberta version of that in place?

We've talked a bit about aboriginal health and the cutbacks, a 23 per cent cut to aboriginal health strategies. I recognize that this is taking away the programs that the minister feels the federal government should be stepping up to the plate for. Will there be any replacement for any of these programs coming from any other department, or is it just: the feds had better pick it up?

Health care premiums. I have to differ with the minister. I heard her say yesterday that, you know, the health care premiums are somehow an insurance program. They're not. They're simply a tax. They have nothing to do with risk. They have nothing to do with actuarial tables. It's not; it's a flat tax. It's charged to everybody. It doesn't even go into a particular budget stream. It goes into general revenues. Again, is the minister considering eliminating what is a tax; that is, the health care premiums? Or am I hearing that those would in fact be increased? According to Aon, I think they were calling it prefunding or a surplus from the health care premiums, and any surplus realized would then be put in a separate pot to somehow offset increased costs in the future. Particularly odd.

Moving on, I was in Fort McMurray a month ago. A number of health issues arising out of that community, particularly around mental health services. Again, a great deal of stress being experienced by that community. There are not enough counsellors available, period. There are some private health ones, but the private health plans won't pay for services outside the area. The Canadian Mental Health Association is fielding over 50 calls a week that they forward to the nurse at the hospital, who refers them to the health line. It's just a terrible situation at the other end. There's such stress.

I've also heard a number of comments from Fort McMurray about how they really are in a position where they have to provide the infrastructure and the staffing to deal with a huge population, but they're only being funded based on the per capita that is official. So they're actually providing services for all the people in the camps, but those people don't have a postal code in Fort McMurray. So the regional health authority is not receiving funding for those people, but they have to provide the services for them. What is the minister doing specifically to recognize the unique and unusual circumstances that Fort McMurray, in particular, is into, and what immediate help can they be expecting over the next three years? I think that they're a special case and that they should be treated that way.

The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission budget is increasing by $19 million, $14 million being used to implement services for children abusing drugs. That's 20 residential beds. I talked a bit about this before with the addictions. I also note that the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy was reduced. Very frustrating when I hear the minister, you know, talking about people quitting smoking and recognizing the problems with teen smoking, and then we reduce the amount of money for the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy.

Now, I made a 20-minute presentation in here during the debate on the cancer legacy bill around power walls, and I'm asking the minister to make a commitment today to bring forward legislation that would ban power walls in Alberta. That's one very concrete step that we can take to reduce and, I hope, go a long way towards eliminating teenage smoking. If you go back and read my comments from Hansard that day, I was working with students from the Nellie McClung school in Oliver in my constituency, and they had done a number of statistical analyses and brought forward, you know, films and work done by others to show that those power walls – that is, that wall of cigarette packages that is at the point of sale, point of purchase – are closely associated in teenagers' and young people's minds with other things that they're allowed to have, which is the candy. They walk up, and below the counter is the candy and the gum, on the counter is the lottery tickets – I can't believe that – and then when they look up at the clerk, it's completely filled with cigarette packs advertising cigarettes. They've done studies to show that kids can name brands. They can name the brands of all the cigarettes. They can name the colours of the packages. And they don't smoke, or they're not supposed to.

So there's one simple thing that the minister could be doing, and I'd like to get a concrete answer from the minister about whether she will consider bringing forward legislation on eliminating power walls. That has been done in some of the other provinces very successfully. They can show the improvement rates. I encourage the minister to do that. Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nunavut, Quebec, Ontario, the Northwest Territories, and P.E.I. have all passed legislation to prohibit power walls. So I encourage you to follow that.

A few other financial questions. What accounted for the $101.9 million increase to the support programs? What was included in that? Why the dramatic funding increase? Could we get a breakdown of the Standing Policy Committee on Health and Community Living? They received $112,000. This is the committee that the opposition members are not allowed to attend. It appears to me that this is just a monster big lunch and dinner budget and should not be paid for from the provincial budget. It should be paid for from the caucus budget seeing as only Tory caucus members are allowed to attend. That's appearing as vote 1.0.12.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member opposite has asked more questions than Carter has pills. I don't know if I'll be able to cover much more than two or three, but I'd like to give two or three answers and then refer the rest. I think that particularly on bed capacity I have a lot of responses that I could give here. She's asked for some very useful and detailed information, and I'd like to make sure that we don't short-sell that.

I cannot promise that the bed capacity announced last year, when we talked about an additional $1.4 billion for health, hadn't been announced before because functional studies and planning for beds had been announced, and to that extent announcements had been made for some of the planning. I think that's been the difficulty. I know that thanks to Madam Treasurer and her initiative to try and make sure that we fund things in a way that acknowledges both capital and operating expense and that we don't announce things and keep doing it over and over again, we'll see changes in the policies that will be delivered as program ministries become more and more responsible.

The projects that were announced on October 14, 2005, an estimated 665 acute care beds and 85 long-term care beds, will be built. The capital projects in the Capital health region will deliver 459 additional acute care beds and 100 additional long-term care beds. In short, we can give a detailed breakdown on that, but I think that a better way to do that, because of the long-range view that has been acknowledged by the hon. member, is to reach back, to look some years back – and we'll get the Blues – and record just exactly what happened to show that difference over a period of time.

I would like to comment on the remarks about the Alberta health care insurance program because although the hon. member has referenced it as a tax, when you talk to actuaries, they say that it is a public insurance program. It has all the earmarks of accountability on deductibility, on delinquent accounts and collections. It is unique in that the premiums collected, obviously, do not cover all the costs attributable to the program like other insurance programs do, and Albertans are all entitled to receive the supports and are not denied services on their inability to pay, but premiums collected in Alberta are a contribution against health care costs.

A public insurance program of any kind is still defined as some form of insurance program because of the way it's managed. It is not managed, as many taxes are, on the supports for a given number or an expanded number of service deliveries. That was my reference yesterday, and I was sure that sooner or later somebody was going to ask me about that because people do like to think of it as a tax and not necessarily as an insurance plan. But for our legislative purposes and for the way it's used, it is considered and collected very much like an insurance plan.

I'd like to just talk a little bit about the primary care networks and offer to the hon. member that we will get more criteria relative to how these are formed. They are very much a negotiated circumstance, but I do tend to agree with your observation that in many respects they are doctor driven because the doctors are still part of the lead role in managing and executing those agreements. That is why to a large extent our policy on a patient-centred, patient-delivered, and patient-focused approach was the number one policy in our health policy framework, Mr. Chair. We believe that that emphasis would de-emphasize the tendency to operate the health care system in support of doctors without due regard for the patient-centred approach that we hope will be a part of the way the future of our system will look.

There were many questions that I'm going to reference about the use of paramedics in the delivery of patients to emergencies and the overlap when there was not sufficient staff to triage those patients. There have been unique circumstances in that intensive flu season that, I agree, saw the management challenged, particularly when more than one set of paramedics were accompanying patients in a hospital. Capital health, when I spoke with them, advised me that they had been looking at and hoping to implement the use of paramedics who were there for the purposes of delivering a patient and, if another team arrived, to use if possible just one set of paramedics and release the other ambulance, or other two ambulances in some instances, so that there was not a situation where there were several people tied up accompanying several ambulances.

We have had challenges in both Calgary and Edmonton with the code burgundies and code reds, and we will be looking at the deployment of the emergency services staff within those hospitals in conjunction with how the regional health authorities bring back their management strategies on this. But if I may, Mr. Chairman, there are such differences in the way ambulance providers, contract providers or staff providers, have conducted themselves that it has been partly that that has contributed to the long-term review by the ambulance advisory committee and how most successfully to do it. Different labour agreements in this city, for example, have been extremely different than some of the regional providers in the area. So we've got a lot of work to do to see whether we can do that in a way that can be complementary to the needs of the municipalities as well.

Several questions on the mentally ill. Several questions on addictions. I would just point out that in the Getting On with Better Health Care document, released last July, many of these strategies that related to some of the other questions of the member, including work on the aboriginal focus, were contained.

I will get more detailed information on Fort McMurray. Last fall, I believe November and December, we were hearing that the Northern Lights board would run out of money. That did not happen. They did not run out of money before Christmas. We did have some opportunity to provide them some supplementary funding with the in-year budgets of the Health and Wellness department. We note that if we challenge people to deal with their initiatives, they can often come up with very innovative solutions. I'm very optimistic about the new CEO that has taken charge in Northern Lights, for example. You may have read recently that that CEO compelled six physicians who were late with their charting to get on with getting those charts in place and did in effect suspend privileges until they were caught up with their charts. Four have now caught them up. What I really like is that in terms of patient safety there is a lot of due diligence that's going on there that we should applaud and encourage because we can do better with it.

I'm also going to advise the hon. member opposite that three regions have had efficiency audits that we have done. Now those efficiency audits are in the hands of those boards and CEOs, and I think we'll see some work that will enable us to determine how the regions have been accountable on some of these initiatives and, hopefully, improve.

Mr. Chairman, all of the other questions on how we help with integrating mental health programs in the future I think I'll leave to written responses so that there's some opportunity for the hon. members opposite to continue their questions in the time we have left.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. A few follow-up questions. I'm wondering: the minister has talked quite a bit about holding consultations but without getting sort of specific. The more cynical side of my brain is thinking: oh, yeah, I've seen this one before. The government announces it'll do consultations and then does them over the summer when nobody's available. They don't give enough time for people to alert their membership to come out. So I'd like to get some sort of firm commitment from the minister as to what her timetable on consultation is. Will she advertise it publicly well in advance, so groups can get prepared? Will they be open to the public or just to an invited group? I'd encourage it to be public and, of course, to consider doing it outside of the summer months, when people are more available.

The hip and knee project that was done here in Alberta that we all are so impressed with, the times. I've heard that there's been some request to the minister that she allow this project to continue but as a half public, half private scenario. I'd like to get some assurances from her that that would not be how that project would proceed but also that the other projects that are being considered – we're now referring to the mammographies and a number of other areas that would be modelled in the same way – would not be modelled in anything other than in a public system.

The electronic health records. I'm aware that there was set-up money that was given to the doctors' offices to help them move onto this system. I'm wondering whether this seed money to help establish it will become ongoing operational money for these doctors, or is there a cut-off for it? I think there was a cut-off date, and the doctors are now saying that they're either not ready or now need a different kind of computer or a bigger computer. I also continue to be concerned with the minister allowing development of different kinds of operating systems for the electronic health networks. So I'd like some comment on that, please.

I'm wondering if there has been any discussion or any proposals or considerations for off-budget spending that's happened thus far. The minister is looking at me strangely, Mr. Chairman, but honestly we have heard other ministers discussing off-budget spending, and we haven't even passed the budget. So I'm putting that one on the record for an answer.

I'm wondering whether the minister has done any work with her colleague from Environment around health and water issues. We've got more and more calls every day coming from people worried about the quality of their water, the effect of some of our natural resource development and production on water sources. We still don't know how much water we've got under the ground although we know how much above ground. What plans are happening there? I think there needs to be a stronger tie between health and how that could be affected, which would include adopting something like the Liberal proposal for the health impact assessment so that we wouldn't get any legislation coming forward unless we'd already considered how it might impact the short- and long-term health of the people in the province.

The workforce planning. We haven't tracked our workers to date, so we don't really know where they are now. What is being anticipated or being put in place now to track where our workers are? What can be done? Edmonton has done the health tracking for the overall population. Is that being done across all of the regions with the support of the ministry?

I'm hoping I can give a few minutes more to my other colleague. [interjection] Oh, he's waiting. Okay. Excellent. Thank you.

I'm going back to the numbers that the minister gave me on the long-term care. So the $83 million that she laid out, I'm understanding, is $5 million from 2004, $10 million from 2005-06, $26 million that was put in in '05-06, giving us $41 million, and then the $42 million that's in this year's budget. That accounts. So we're going all the way back to 2004 to pull that $5 million from there. I find that a little odd.

Just an observation. I hear the minister say one thing, but then she seems to be proposing things that run counter to that. You know, an awful lot of her opening remarks were spent on how unsustainable the system is. That's mirroring what was coming forward in the Aon report, but frankly the Aon report figures are not believable. I mean, they've got the heritage trust fund disappearing out of existence, I think, within six years. It's just not realistic. And natural resource revenue would go down from $12 billion to $6 billion. We haven't seen that yet in history. Our resource revenue continues to go up, so what would make them all of a sudden decide it was going down? Then they've got the costs increasing by extraordinary amounts. It doesn't seem to take into consideration any attempts at prevention or wellness or any successes in any of that at all. So a lot of attention being spent on how unsustainable the system is.

Then she talks about things like how important mental health is, but we can't get the actual connection where the funding is transferred into those areas to support the successful transition of people from institutions or from programs and into the community. We know how to do this. It's out there. There are lots of best practices we could be adopting, but we're not doing it. We're not transferring the funds.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Chairman, I'm sorry. Could you just explain? You said that we didn't start this until 5:15.

The Deputy Chair: We finish at 5:12 on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. We have to report back to the Assembly by 5:15. That's the Standing Order.

Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$10,289,506,000
Capital Investment	$32,056,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to report the vote carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:13 p.m.]

[Motion to report the vote carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates for the Ministry of Alberta Health and Wellness.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Health and Wellness: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $10,289,506,000; capital investment, $32,056,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an incredible week of great progress. On that note, I would therefore move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 5:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and to the visitors with us today, we'll now participate in the singing of our national anthem, and we'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would you all please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Well, I think I can safely say that Mr. Lorieau is pumped.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Scott and Janice Johnston. They are in your gallery, I believe. Scott and Janice are constituents of mine, living in Edmonton-Whitemud, but members here will know them in their roles as members of the local media, with 630 CHED and CBC respectively. While they're extremely busy reporting on the hot stories of the day, their more important role is in the raising of and being parents to a young leader in this province. Yes, they are parents to none other than our page Samantha Johnston, and the time they share with Samantha is very special to them. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to introduce a constituent of mine. Mr. Karl Ryll is a tireless volunteer with the Caernarvon Community League in Edmonton and pretty soon, probably to our Solicitor General's delight, if things go well will be serving in EPS, protecting us here in Edmonton. I would ask Karl Ryll, who already is standing, to receive the traditional welcome of all members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of students from Medicine Hat Christian school. They're with their vice-principal, Mr. Shade Holmes, and his wife, Gail.

This is the first school that I've had an opportunity to introduce since I was elected. This grade 6 class was the lucky winner of a trip to our province's capital to take part in our School at the Legislature. Access: The Education Station and Canadian Learning Television sponsor a school from northern Alberta, north-central Alberta, central and southern Alberta to attend the School at the Leg. program. The school's transportation to the capital as well as accommodation costs during their stay in Edmonton are covered by Access and CLT. The program includes a guided tour of the Legislature, a chance to observe the members of the House in action, as they are doing this afternoon, and much, much more. School at the Leg. is a wonderful program, and I hope these students enjoy their Legislature experience.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the students and their vice-principal from the Medicine Hat Christian school to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who has 67 school visitors today from the Lacombe Christian school. It would be great to have him here. Because of his Dutch heritage he could probably pronounce these names better than I, but I'll do my best. They're led by their teachers Mr. Tim VanDoesburg, Mrs. Stephanie Littel, Mrs. Willeke Kraay, Mrs. Charlene Gallagher, and by parent helpers Mr. Bernie Kolkman, Mr. Andrew Zuidhof, Mrs. Vivian Kooyman, Mrs. Anita Swier, Mr. Troy Ogle, Mrs. Jeanne Ebens, Mrs. Dana Van Gyssel, Mrs. Janet Noordhof, Mrs. Louise Macleod, Mrs. Mirjke Kleinlugtenbeld, Mrs. Lyda Stijter, Ms Gerlinda VanGinkel, and their bus driver, Mr. Nick Den Oudsfen. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today, the first being a group of intelligent and energetic and very inquisitive students from St. Augustine school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. There are altogether 43 students, I believe, as well as teachers/ leaders Mrs. Lidstone and Mr. Tran and a parent helper, Mrs. Beth Williams. I think they're in either one or both of the galleries. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

In my second set of introductions, Mr. Speaker – I don't think I need notes for this one – I'd like to welcome back to the Assembly on a return visit my parents, Art and Barbara Miller. They've been away in Arizona, and they're back now that the snow has gone. Making their first visit to the Alberta Legislature are my dad's brother Ernie Miller and his son Helmut, my uncle and my cousin. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 18 students from Coronation school in my constituency. They're accompanied by their teacher, Ms Arlyn Belden, and a parent, Mrs. Darlene Elias. They're in the members' gallery, I believe. I would ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House my wife, Rhea Jansen, who is behind me in the members' gallery. You know, my wife comes from a family of 12 children, and it must be said that the in-laws are really the spice of the family, so it gives me great pleasure to introduce my brother-in-law, Gus Van Soelen, who is from Wellandport, Ontario. I'd invite them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. I'm very delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Kelly and Tyra Hennig. Kelly and Tyra are residents of my constituency and have lived in Lauderdale for the past 10 years. Kelly works as a teacher and an administrator for the Head Start program. He remains active in his constituency and the broader Edmonton community through his work as a professional and volunteer. Tyra works with families dealing with domestic violence at the Edmonton Women's Shelter and has been doing so for the past six years. They're both seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them now to rise and please receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Leith and Kirstin Cardinal. Leith was born and raised here in Alberta and has been working in the financial industry for the past five years. Kirstin is a second-year commerce student at Grant MacEwan College. Together they are the proud parents of their young son, who is going to be an Edmonton Oiler someday. They, too, are seated in the members' gallery, I believe, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sale of Progressive Conservative Party Memberships

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend the Member for Strathcona attended a walk in St. Albert organized to raise money for the Multiple Sclerosis Society. While there, the Member for Strathcona handed out brochures – I'll table copies of them – urging Albertans with disabilities to buy a $5 PC Party membership so that they can select the new leader of the PC Party and, I quote from the brochure, "make a difference." The Member for Strathcona is also the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. My first question is to the Premier. Does the Premier approve of the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities using his position to sell Progressive Conservative Party memberships?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've spoken to the hon. Member for Strathcona about this issue, and I suspected that it would be raised in the Legislature. His answer at the time was that persons with disabilities ought to be included in the political process, and this is simply a way for them to be included.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: is it the position of this government that the only way the interests of persons with disabilities will be heard in this province is if they buy memberships in the PC Party, which is what this says?

Mrs. Fritz: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier indicated, the Member for Strathcona is very – well, in fact, he's just outstanding as the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. His approach, I would understand, is very much for full inclusion and that people with developmental disabilities should not be left out of any process in any way. I mean, I wasn't at this walk that you're referring to, but I know that whatever did occur at the walk was done in the best interests of persons that were involved.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then back to the Premier: will the Premier stop the chair of his council on persons with disabilities from using his position to sell PC Party memberships, and if not, does anything go then, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Well, I don't know if anything goes. You know, Mr. Speaker, I harken back to the last leadership campaign. There were many, many Liberals and NDs who bought memberships. Many, many. As a matter of fact, I recall one Liberal buying a membership for one of my nomination meetings and then ripping it up in front of the person who sold it and saying, "I won't need this anymore" and throwing it back at her.

The Speaker: We will have a tabling later.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Resource Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Aon report presented last week portrays a bleak fiscal picture for Alberta's future under this regime. In a report designed to scare Albertans about the sustainability of the public health care system, Aon has confirmed that this government has absolutely no long-term fiscal plan. By 2025 the government is projecting to collect half the current amount of resource revenues and only a fraction of today's investment income. To the Minister of Finance: given that the projections in the Aon report are based on information from Alberta Finance, is it this government's position that resource revenues will decrease by half between now and 2025?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, let's set the record straight on what the Aon report did say. I read it; I think many of you in this room read it. What it said is that if we continue on the spending track that we're on, we would be in very serious positions.

Some Hon. Members: Revenue.

Mrs. McClellan: The opposition are saying: "Revenue. Revenue." They haven't figured out yet that there's a correlation between revenue and expenditures, and it's this government's view that you should have more revenue than you have expenditures.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll give the minister a second chance with the same question. Given that the projections in the Aon report are based on Alberta Finance information, is it this government's position that resource revenues will decrease by half by 2025, which is what the report says?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is our view that they certainly could, and that is why each year we have a very prudent forecast for energy revenues and why this government under the leadership of this Premier created a sustainability fund that would be there to cushion any variations in that. I'm on record as saying that I believe that the sustainability fund should grow. I'm on record along with my colleagues here as saying that we should increase our savings. Our budget indicated how we are increasing those savings, whether it's through endowments or whether it's through adding to the sustainability fund or to the heritage fund. We also know that the fiscal policies of this government are creating opportunities in this province that will increase our revenue from both corporate and personal taxes without raising those tax rates; in fact, lowering them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Finance and again drawing on the Aon report: given that the projections in there, based on her department's information, forecast the decline of the heritage fund, is it indeed the expectation of this government that the heritage fund is in long-term decline?

Mrs. McClellan: No, it isn't, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we began inflation-proofing the heritage fund two budgets ago. Then in the third quarter of last year we added $1 billion to the fund, and in the budget this year we added another billion dollars. We've made it clear that when it is possible, we're going to continue to increase that so that it is of benefit to this province over the future.

Mr. Speaker, you can read reports. You can spin out what you want from them. We gave Aon the very best information we had, obviously, not trying to hide absolutely anything. What it speaks to is responsible fiscal management, and this government has a record of that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Labour Issues

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Go, Oilers, go.

Seriously, May 1, May Day, is a traditional day to honour workers world-wide. In Alberta this government has worked to weaken labour laws. It has a poor record of labour support and development. Retention, getting workers to stay longer and put down roots in our Alberta, is a long-lasting and increasing problem. Many things can be done. Many things should be done. My question is to the Minister of Finance. As the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said in this House in 2001, "It's a long overdue bill," why has this government not proclaimed Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Credit) Amendment Act, from that year, 2001?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will proclaim that act in due course, in due time if it's the most appropriate way to reduce taxes for our consumers.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the minister of human resources: to fix some labour law to stop a replay of what happened at Lakeside last year, will the minister push for first contract arbitration and impose arbitrated first contracts under existing laws in the meantime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Go, Oilers, go.

I've said before, Mr. Speaker, that 99.9 per cent of the collective agreements in Alberta are in place without any labour disruption. As long as that process continues, then why would you want to make changes?

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will you encourage low-income workers to stay in Alberta by mandating a regular annual review of our minimum wage so that these workers can expect an increase sometime before 2012?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. In the hot economy, the thousands of jobs in Alberta there are very, very few people that work for even close to the minimum wage.

Mr. Renner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Health Care Spending

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Aon report contains very scary scenarios about health spending eating up the provincial budget over the next 20 years, including draining the heritage fund. However, the NDP opposition analysis, based on 20-year actual historical averages, shows that average health spending increases are much lower than those cooked up by Aon Consulting at the behest of this Conservative government. I'll table that at the appropriate time. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why would Aon project an 8.4 per cent annual increase in health spending over the next 20 years when the actual spending increase in the last 20 years has been a much lower 6 per cent per year if not to scare people into accepting more private health care?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the last six years the spending has increased by over 9 per cent on average. One year it was over 14 per cent. It's been 13 and a half per cent. The track record in the most recent past has shown that the incredible rises in the costs of technology, new procedures, new ways of doing things, and in the drug costs have inflated much more than they ever have. I should also point out that Aon, unfettered by the views of politicians and the people on this bench, provided their actuarial analysis based on the kinds of work that they do. They're professionals at it. They took the figures that we provided, and they took a look at what we've been doing in health care and the track record not only in Alberta but in other parts of Canada, and they are all very strong indications of increase.

Mr. Mason: She who pays the piper calls the tune, Mr. Speaker. Unless this government is prepared to lay all its cards on the table, including tabling the Aon model with its supposed 400 variables, why shouldn't Albertans dismiss Aon's financial projections as being nothing more than an attempt to frighten Albertans into accepting an expanded role for private delivery of health care service?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm really intrigued by the fact that, number one, we chose not to use the information that we had looked at in terms of any kinds of world-wide demonstrations of private/public payer for health. We looked at that through the Aon report, and it said that there was no advice to increase any private insurance. So we said we weren't going to do it. Number two, we invited all members of this Assembly – and the member, thankfully, chose to attend – when Aon presented it. Number three, I think that the real question is this: why are we so afraid to look at this last five- and six-year track record of health care spending and continue to think that this might extend itself over the next five or six years? We are aging; we know that. We are seeing more technology; we know that. So for the hon. members opposite to say, "Well, why are we trying to do something that would appear to be out of the ordinary or frighten people?" – we're not trying to frighten people. We are actually telling people that the reality is that we're spending more, we're growing older, that there are more things to spend our money on, and we'd better be careful.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the minister admit that the reason the government has spent so much on health care in the last few years is that they're still trying to make up for the cuts of the mid-90s, which devastated our health care system?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that were the case, you'd have to look at the fact that today we're spending over $400 more for every man, woman, and child than they are anywhere else in Canada and say: is that the case across all of Canada, that somehow we have all gone into a nosedive on expenses? In fact, our health care, when you get into the system, is doing better than it is in many other parts of Canada. We have had consistent reports that the Capital health authority, for example, has the best health care delivery system in Canada. So for the hon. member opposite to try and suggest otherwise is just not the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has put in place a $755 million grains and oilseeds program from which Alberta farm producers can receive funding, but getting that funding means that Ottawa has to receive the CAIS information it needs from this province and other provinces to start processing payments. My understanding is that there has been a delay from Alberta, which means that some producers aren't receiving their money. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister explain how this delay could have happened and why some producers have received cheques under this program and others are still waiting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. There is some good news in this, and that is that roughly 18,000 producers in Alberta have received their funding under the grains and oilseeds payment program, or GOPP. The delay for some producers and all corporation farms in the province – in other words, farms that have been incorporated, not that they're not owned by families or anything – is due to the requirement for supplementary information from files that were held by the Ag Financial Services Corporation. It was very detailed information, and from the time when the original request came in from the federal government to essentially go in and pick this information out of our files, it took a little while, about eight weeks, to get that information together in a format that the federal government payment processing system would be able to recognize and use. I have to say, too, that this was really a very big problem in provinces like ours that manage the CAIS program themselves. Included in that would have been Ontario and Quebec and, potentially, Prince Edward Island as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. Can producers who didn't participate in CAIS expect to receive a federal payment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the short answer to that question is yes, they can. If you participated in the CAIS program in 2004, you're automatically going to be involved in the federal program if you had net sales and if you qualified under the criteria which they've set out. But producers who are not participating in CAIS or who began farming in 2005 would have to submit a grains and oilseeds payment program application by the end of May. That application form, as I understand it, is available on the Ag Canada website. Producers should be aware that there are deadlines and there is information that needs to be submitted to the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What other supports have been made available to our struggling grains and oilseeds producers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had that question or a similar question in this House this spring because this spring has shown that we do have a crisis in agriculture, and that's in our grains and oilseeds sector. We're trying to address the short-term needs by doing things like the reference margin pilot project, which we did last fall, which is adding over $224 million into the farming economy in our province. That's not available anywhere else in Canada, just in Alberta. We've also raised the revenue insurance coverage for prices by 7 per cent to help offset some of those rising input costs. Again, that's not available anywhere else in Canada. Finally, we also did a 20 per cent decrease to the production insurance premiums, again only in Alberta, not anywhere else in Canada. Going forward, we're looking at a number of ways that we might be able to look at the long-term survivability, the long-term profitability of our agricultural sector because it's important for them, but it's also important for rural Alberta.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we have the federal budget, as I understand it. We are waiting to see what is going to be in that budget so that we can react appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Sale of Surplus Land in Fort McMurray

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The incompetence of the department of infrastructure regarding the sale of surplus government land continues. The land speculators continue to cash in at the expense of taxpayers. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Was the real sale price for 157 acres of surplus land sold in Fort McMurray on May 16, 2005, $2,800 as listed twice in the Alberta Gazette, the official public record of this Progressive Conservative government?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the information that I have is that the $2,800 was for 46.33 acres. The fact is that I don't have the information on whether it was serviced land: all of that kind of detail that makes a big difference on the appraised value of a piece of property.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why was the sale price in the Alberta Gazette $2,800 when documents at the land titles office indicate that this land was sold for $2,800,000? Why the big difference?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether the member has got the same land and whether there's a mistake in the decimal point. I don't know, but I certainly will take that under advisement, and we'll investigate what the difference is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, for the record, this $2,800 number has been in the Alberta Gazette since last July. To the same minister. If this land was sold for $2,800,000, that works out to $17,800 per acre. Why was that land sold for that amount when the government only weeks later set a $50,000 per-acre price in Fort McMurray? Why has that land been sold so cheap?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my answer to the last question, we'll have to investigate further. I don't have the benefit of the land titles information. I'm not sure that he's talking about the same parcel. We will undertake to investigate, and we will get back to the member on the discrepancy if there is any.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the government of Canada announced that an agreement has been reached with the United States on the end of the softwood lumber dispute. For all the positive response from other lumber-producing provinces on the end of a 25-year disagreement the best the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations could say is that he is cautiously optimistic. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can he explain what he is concerned about?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there are two concerns that are my chief concerns in the matter regarding softwood lumber. First of all, I want to say that we don't have a deal on softwood lumber yet. What we do have at this point is a framework that will be the basis for creating a deal. So this is just the first step in developing a final legal text that will finally bring this dispute to an end. The second of my concerns is that the agreement that we're working on is not free trade; it is about managed trade. Alberta and Canada still face potential limits on our share of the U.S. market and the possibility that export taxes will be put in place if lumber prices fall and if we exceed our historic market share.

We do need an end to this dispute. This framework, if it moves forward into a final legal text, will give us one. Industry will get back at least $4 billion of its duty deposits, and there will be no further U.S. trade cases during the time that this agreement is set in place, which is currently set at seven years and can be reopened for an additional two years beyond that. The Alberta government, Mr. Speaker, will continue to work with all parties involved to try and move forward on the final text.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is this deal good for Alberta lumber producers?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, the United States is a significant market for Alberta forest product manufacturers, and for many of them it's their biggest single market. Negotiated agreements are not perfect, and this particular proposed settlement is no different. This framework would give certainty of access to the U.S. markets, certainty of the export rules. Alberta has about 7 per cent of the Canadian exports into the United States, so some stability and predictability for that 7 per cent is something that is good for us, on which we can operate. Also, we have stakeholders from small mills to large mills to secondary manufacturers, and this framework agreement would affect each one of them differently. Some of the members of our industry are raising concerns over certain aspects of the agreement and rightly so, given their varied interests.

I met with our industry last week, Mr. Speaker. We're working very, very closely with them to review this agreement and identify some of the areas and address some of the concerns that they have, and we will continue to work with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Arts and Culture Funding

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition has been very vocal in urging this government to recognize the value of the arts sector in Alberta. Unfortunately, this government's track record is very, very disappointing. Despite being the wealthiest province in Canada, the Alberta government is consistently ranked among the worst supporters of arts and culture in the nation. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. What will the new minister do to improve upon this government's poor history of funding for the arts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated during estimates last week in regard to arts funding from the Ministry of Community Development, Alberta's arts community has grown at an incredible rate. Recognizing this, the government of Alberta has allocated an additional $3 million in funding for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts in this year's budget. The new funding is going to be allocated to priorities outlined in the foundation's strategic plan and will support existing clients and services in arts creation and production, arts promotion, arts participation, and art collection and display. Last week during estimates I also indicated to the member that I was looking very much forward to being able to meet with all the different arts communities within the province in the near future to be able to have further discussions as to what can be done to increase funding for them into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister considering further restricting the sources and types of grants that the arts community can receive?

Mr. Ducharme: At this point in time, hon. member, I have not had an opportunity, being new to this ministry. As I indicated, I will be meeting with the groups. As far as the distribution, I know that it's a percentage of the funds that go out to each of the groups. We will be looking forward in terms of meeting with them to have further discussions on the allocations.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: will the minister commit today to once again making arts and culture funding a top priority for this ministry?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, funding for the arts and culture, the different departments that are responsible, is always a priority for the government of Alberta. Basically, this year there is a total expenditure going out to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts in the neighbourhood of a little less than $23 million. It may be not enough dollars in terms of what everyone is asking for, but hopefully we can strike the right balance with all the different communities in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Chronic Wasting Disease Control

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. At this time of year many hunters are making plans for the coming season and are getting ready for the hunting draws that take place starting June 1. I'm receiving calls from hunters in my constituency asking about further hunting opportunities. Can the minister tell us if he will be using recreational hunters instead of government resources to control the spread of CWD in southeast Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:10

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta provides a wide range of outstanding hunting and fishing opportunities across this province. Last year we increased the numbers of resident hunter tags in the chronic wasting disease controlled areas, and that's from Lloydminster all the way down to the hon. member's riding, Cypress-Medicine Hat, and I can guarantee this hon. member that we will be expanding on this program again this year. We find it a particularly useful technique to deal with wildlife management problems. However, we do need government staff to effectively reduce the deer populations in targeted areas as well. So we're seriously committed to making sure that we can control this disease that could have an effect on 400,000 wild deer in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Again to the same minister. I understand that the CWD winter management program in southeast Alberta just wrapped up. Can the minister provide more of an update and tell us why this program is so important?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the results of the controlled program confirm that our aggressive response is justified. We had collected almost 1,700 wild deer along the Saskatchewan border, nine of which tested positive for chronic wasting disease. That brings the provincial total to 13 since 2005. These positive cases show that we have caught it at an early stage, and that's important. We have to be diligent in our efforts, and we can be successful in eliminating chronic wasting disease from this area. Big game hunting contributes about $110 million to this province, and that's why we must continue with this aggressive approach.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Highway Traffic Enforcement by Sheriffs

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the end of June the six-month pilot project utilizing sheriffs for highway traffic enforcement will be finished, and then supposedly the RCMP and the province will evaluate this program and determine its effectiveness and then decide whether it should be expanded. However, the Solicitor General has recently stated that his department received $4.6 million to hire more sheriffs to patrol Alberta highways. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister tell us why he is already planning to hire more sheriffs before the end of the pilot project and before a complete evaluation of the program has been completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and go, Flames, go.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raises a very good point regarding the provincial sheriffs, regarding the budget allocation that we received in Solicitor General and Public Security this spring and, as well, the estimates that we'll be deliberating this Thursday afternoon. The pilot project is very positive with the results we've seen thus far. The number of summonses that have been written regarding stop signs, speeding, no seat belts – those are issues that we want to deal with, and those have been the major causes of fatal accidents in this province over the last number of years, where we've had 400 fatalities per year. We want to see those numbers go down. When we look at providing this program into Alberta and look at those highways that are killer highways and those hot spots where we have to provide more enforcement, these officers have already proven in the three and a half months, almost four months that they've been involved in the program to be very successful, and we have received numerous e-mails from individuals saying that the program is working very well.

Dr. B. Miller: Will this minister assure this House that he will not expand the program unless he has complete endorsement by the RCMP and other municipal police services, and will he release the results of the evaluation publicly?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, as the pilot project moves forward, yes, we are evaluating it. A senior officer from the Calgary Police Service has been seconded to our department to begin the review which, in fact, starts today. He'll be working on that over the next number of weeks. We'll be bringing, obviously, that information back to our ministry to determine what the real effects of the program have been and where we want to look in the future.

The McDermid report, which authored the traffic safety plan and the vision 2010 project, recommended 83 officers, Mr. Speaker. We're looking at adding another 42 officers. The issues are where, when, how, looking at infrastructure issues. But we will be.

Dr. B. Miller: Given that this government reads reports of the Fraser Institute as the gospel and that one of their recent reports recommended the replacement of the RCMP by an Alberta police force, will the minister assure this House and all the residents of Alberta who value the RCMP and their dedication to service that he will not replace them with sheriffs?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, I met with Commissioner Zaccardelli Thursday night in Ottawa, and I reassured him as well as every RCMP member across this country that our contract with the RCMP is in place until 2012. We are preparing for negotiations with Canada, as are eight of the other 10 provinces and the three territories in this country. We are doing a value-for-dollar study on the RCMP and the PPSA, the provincial police service agreement, to ensure that when we enter negotiations with Canada, we're going to be fully prepared and look at what the citizens of this province want both municipally and in the rural areas.

So, yes, the RCMP are aware of the sheriff program. They're aware of the sheriff pilot project. They're aware of where we want to move in the future regarding traffic enforcement. They have the opportunity to complement the RCMP by providing this level of service regarding enforcement. Education is required. It is needed. We will work with the RCMP on a partnership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

CO₂ Capture and Sequestration

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province desperately needs to clarify to the public what its intentions are regarding CO₂ capture and sequestration. Shell Canada, with its first-quarter profits in the range of $447 million, would like to capture and inject CO₂ into geological formations to enhance oil recovery and would like public funds to help them do it. They imply that this is a way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, even though this is not necessarily true. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that Shell Canada's profits last year exceeded $2 billion, will the minister rule out the possibility of offering public money to assist in building CO₂ capture and injection systems for this or any other corporation?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we have actually been working with industry conceptually on a CO₂ pipeline for enhanced oil recovery. We have challenged industry to bring forward a business case for this, ensuring that we can recover sufficient quantities of oil, that clearly there would be an uptake for the province on royalties.

Those things should be on commercial terms. That's how we approach industry. I find it ironic in some respects that on one side you get the pressure from the same opposition members about climate change and so forth, asking the federal government to continue to put in lots of money, compelling the governments to have to solve the climate change question with government monies, and on other hand saying: keep us out.

Mr. Eggen: I didn't say that, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the development of CO₂ capture and sequestration systems would be a huge undertaking costing billions of dollars, wouldn't it make more sense to invest at least as much time, labour, and money in ways to actually conserve fuel and develop renewable energy systems?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, conservation of energy is always a very good stewardship issue for all of us. As users of all energy we'd be wise to take the best means and time to reduce our consumption of energy and to be efficient in that. So the industry itself is very much proactive in investing in technology and equipment to be more efficient in their use of energy. All of us would be wise to take that approach.

That said, I'm still quite curious, given the pressure that comes from the opposition parties, about their stance on Kyoto. Are they going to continue to push the federal government for us to have to put in all the dollars that he's all of a sudden opposed to?

Mr. Eggen: Injection for oil recovery is different from keeping it in the ground for CO₂ storage.

Instead of giving energy corporations a pointless tax break in an otherwise already overheated economy, why wouldn't the minister consider a modest increase in the royalty rates to perhaps help pay for schemes that actually achieve CO₂ reduction?

Mr. Melchin: I'm not quite certain of this one. So all of a sudden we're supposed to increase royalties so somehow we can take that money to put into the schemes that he's opposed to our putting it into. I'm not clear on his objectives there. I'd like to know, actually, even with respect to climate change, are they or are they not opposed to the previous federal government's push towards setting aside a billion dollars for things like carbon dioxide sequestration? In our instance we are challenging industry to look at — there's already one commercial pipeline that we were at not that long ago that was put on with no government money. They've captured carbon dioxide off at the Joffre plant, and they're putting it into some oil fields. It's a technology that works, and with the price I think industry will find greater success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:20 Employment Opportunities for Foreign Students

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the federal government announced that international postsecondary students in our province will now be allowed to work off campus. With businesses across Alberta in desperate need of workers this is great news for our province. It will not only help fill some of the immediate job vacancies out there; it would also make it more likely that foreign students will decide to stay long-term in our province and put their skills and training to work in our communities. My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education. Why is there a limit of 20 hours per week that international students are allowed to work under this new agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that the first reason is so they have some time to cheer for the Flames.

Seriously, this is going to really help a lot of foreign students in Alberta get employment and get to make relationships with employers because, quite frankly, only about 60 per cent of our foreign students stay here after their studies. Anything that we can do to establish relationships with employers that would last longer than that, the chances are pretty good they'd stay. God knows, we need them all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: why are foreign students who are attending private, nonprofit institutions excluded from this agreement?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I'm told that this agreement was negotiated under a different regime in Ottawa. As you know, you often have to look at the fine print to find out exactly what Dr. Welby kinds of initiatives were built into those. Certainly, I think that we need some flexibility in all of those things. Although the new agreement largely focuses on international students, there is a stipulation in the agreement that allows foreign students at private, not-for-profit institutions to participate in this program. Unfortunately, none of the seven jewels in our postsecondary system – I'm talking about the private, not-for-profits – currently fit the requirements. I can tell the hon. member that I've actually started a process through my officials to communicate with the federal government because we need them to get out of the way. That's the Conservative way.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: will this agreement take jobs away from Alberta students looking for valuable work experience?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, from what I understand, we can't find enough people to take all of the jobs that are currently vacant in Alberta, so I rather doubt that this will have any impact at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Highway Safety

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday afternoon at approximately 4 p.m. a bus collided with a pickup pulling a trailer on the QE II south of Leduc. Fortunately, due to a variety of factors, including daylight, good fortune, and a divided highway with a wide, grassy median, this accident was not a repeat of the multiple injuries and loss of life which occurred last spring on highway 28. My concern has to do with the aftermath of no advance warning provided of the accident scene on either side of the highway from at least 6:30 p.m., when I came suddenly upon the multiple-vehicle traffic backlog, to 9 p.m., when my colleague from Calgary-Currie drove by. My question is to the Solicitor General. Given the review of the horrific bus accident last year on highway 28, the density and speed of the traffic on the QE II, and the time it took to remove the vehicles from the median, why was no advance warning provided for several hours for drivers approaching the accident scene?

Mr. Cenaiko: Now, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that the lineup of vehicles heading into Edmonton especially on a Sunday evening is very, very large. There was advance notice regarding vehicles that there was an accident up ahead, but obviously it wasn't five kilometres down the road to what I'm told was the length of vehicles lined up to get into the city of Edmonton. There were measures taken to ensure that traffic was diverted around. Two lanes of traffic were closed. One was allowed open for southbound travel, and one was allowed open for northbound travel into the city of Edmonton. Obviously, in cases such as this, with the seriousness of an accident of this nature we have to ensure that the scene of the collision is secure so that proper investigation can take place and ensure that those that may be injured can be looked after by emergency personnel attending.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the solicitor general. Will the minister in light of yesterday's bus accident and others, including the horrific crash on highway 28, conduct a thorough review of response and safety protocol following a highway traffic accident?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what we are looking at doing regarding the utilization of Alberta sheriffs on our highways, regarding those dangerous areas on our highways where a sheriff could in fact assist the RCMP. They have done this on highway 21 and 63 right now: assisting the RCMP in providing traffic control at a collision on our highways, assisting them in taking witness statements at a traffic scene as well as assisting them in the investigation, not doing the investigation but assisting and complementing the RCMP in the investigation itself. Whether it be an injury accident or whether it be a fatality, the sheriffs are there, would be there and available to assist them. As we go through our project and we expand that level of service, there may be officers that are placed in the Leduc detachment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How much longer will Albertans' lives and well-being be compromised before this government fully implements the recommendations of the McDermid highway safety report?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as you know, we've been working on the report with some 35 organizations and cross-ministry. The people have met. They've come up with a number of recommendations. We've implemented some of them. There are some that have to go out for further consultation, and we're currently in that process, so we will be implementing many of them very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Residential Tenancy Dispute Resolution Process

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year about 5,000 cases go to the Provincial Court of Alberta to resolve landlord and tenant disputes. With the claims limit for Provincial Court having gone up, quite appropriately so, and with more and more issues in civil, criminal, and family law going to family court, the court is getting very busy. With a growing recognition that a better way of resolving issues and disputes includes alternative dispute resolution processes such as mediation, I was absolutely delighted to hear today that the new residential tenancy dispute resolution service started in Edmonton. My questions are for the Minister of Government Services. Can the Minister of Government Services enlighten this House and Albertans as to how that dispute resolution process will work for landlords and tenants in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the previous ministers both of Justice and Government Services, who had such an impact on getting this thing moving. Yes, this morning I did have the opportunity to open the office. You know, Mr. Speaker, like the question raised, there are 5,000 of these disputes that end up in our courts each and every year. We expect about 1,500 of those to be taken care of through this dispute mechanism. Simply, landlords or residents will have an opportunity through the Ministry of Government Services to pay a $75 fee, sit down at a table, work out the dispute, and when they leave that table, a binding agreement will be had.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very supportive of this process. I think it's going to be an excellent process for landlords and tenants. I'm wondering if the minister can tell us when it will be available to other Albertans outside of Edmonton.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a one-year pilot project, and like all projects at the end of that time we'll evaluate the success of this project. It's my intention, though, Mr. Speaker, that upon the one-year completion of this program we do a quick evaluation. If there's a need for this across Alberta, we'll put it in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Midwifery Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 7 marks the International Day of the Midwife, but midwives in Alberta are finding it increasingly difficult to operate because of a lack of recognition and support. In 1991 and 1993 the Midwifery Regulations Advisory Committee recommended that midwifery be a service funded by government. Thirteen years later funding is still being denied. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the lack of public funding has led to an exodus of midwives from Alberta, when is the minister going to put incentives into place to ensure that midwives don't leave the province?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have had many conversations with the people that are negotiating primary care agreements. The physicians presently in most of these networks have not taken advantage of an opportunity to have the support of midwives. It has been something that the midwives have raised with me. We've had conversations about it. Some additional financial supports have been provided to the midwives for a number of different activities, but at this stage I can promise nothing, only that we'll continue to try and advance their case when we talk about primary care networks. I indicated the same thing for chiropractors, another group that wants to be involved with primary care networks, and I think it's just because of the newness of this that we haven't advanced the case to the extent that we should have.

Ms Blakeman: Thirteen years is new?

Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the evidence shows that midwifery services are more cost effective than hospital deliveries, why is the minister ignoring this evidence and avoiding the opportunity to save money?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, what is new, just to clarify for the hon. member opposite, is the work that we're doing with primary care networks. This year we have doubled the funds. There is some $70 million there to facilitate that expansion, and I'm optimistic there will be something.

In terms of the evidence of cost it is not strictly on the basis of cost alone that we have been told that there has been less embracing of this. In some parts of rural Alberta they've cited a number of reasons. The physicians have raised everything from liabilities in deliveries to other ways in which they are hoping to facilitate, but we understand rather recently that some of the urban authorities are looking at the possibility of integrating midwife services within the hospital setting in order to take advantage not only of the reduced cost but of the opportunity to have a very caring and nurturing environment, especially where deliveries are uncomplicated and are able to be managed very effectively in this context.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The final question, again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the health regions have not been as supportive of midwifery services as the minister had hoped, will the minister mandate that funding be available in each health region to fund midwifery services? They need a bit more encouragement from the top.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would look at that. Clearly, there's an opportunity, but one of the reasons that regional health authorities have opportunities to make choices is the very nature of the governance model, which has enabled them to make those choices in consultation with their health care providers. So it's not a matter of simply mandating either; it's an opportunity to work with our partners. I think that in the total what is most crucial in this issue is to respect the rights of families that would have preferred to have had midwives and have questioned why, when they are saving the system that amount of money for a physician by paying their own midwife experience, they can't have some consideration for the support. So I think that both the hon. member opposite and I are on the same page. It's a matter of continuing to work to see if we can advance that not only in the context of the regional authorities' responsibility but because of some of the resistance that we have encountered from some of the other providers.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today 15 different members participated, and that was 84 questions and answers, which is very good.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Now to our historical vignette of the day reflecting 100 years of democracy in the province of Alberta. Four different political parties have formed the government of Alberta in Alberta's first 100 years. The Liberal Party was the government in the first four Legislatures. In the election of 1905 it received 57.56 per cent of the votes and held 22 of 25 seats. In the election of 1909 it received 59.26 per cent of the votes and held 36 of 41 seats. In the election of 1913 it received 49.23 per cent of the votes and held 39 of 56 seats. In the election of 1917 it received 48.14 per cent of the votes and held 34 of 56 seats. In these first four Legislatures the Conservative Party held the second largest number of seats: three out of 25 in 1905, two out of 41 in 1909, 17 out of 56 in 1913, 19 out of 56 in 1917.

In the election of 1921 the United Farmers of Alberta formed the government with 28.92 per cent of the votes but with 38 of the 61 seats. The Liberal Party received more votes, 34.07 per cent of the votes, but elected only 15 of 61 MLAs. In the election of 1926 the United Farmers of Alberta elected 43 of 61 MLAs with 39.68 per cent of the votes. The Liberals won seven seats with 26.17 per cent of the votes. In the election of 1930 the United Farmers of Alberta won 39 of 63 seats with 39.41 per cent of the votes, and the Liberals came in second with 24.59 per cent of the votes and 11 MLAs. The election was held on June 19, 1930.

Alberta's next election was held five years and two months later, on August 22, 1935. The election of 1935 saw the highest number of candidates, 240, and the highest number of political parties to date, 12. The turnout of voters was massive, with 81.8 per cent of eligible voters voting: 95.4 per cent of the electorate voted in the constituency of Cardston, 91.6 per cent voted in the Olds constituency, and 90.3 per cent was the turnout in Acadia. When the results were in, Alberta had a new political party governing them. The Social Credit Party won 56 of 63 seats with 54.25 per cent of the votes. The Liberals received 23.14 per cent of the votes and won five seats. The United Farmers of Alberta, the government in the previous three terms, received 11 per cent of the vote, and it was completely shut out with no seats.

Tomorrow, part two.

Hon. members, before I call on the first of hon. members to participate in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly a number of active Alberta citizens. These include Judy Johnson, Verne Johnson, and Gerard Liston, all directors of Campaign Life; Mary Lou Veeken, Jill Cahoon, Michele Dow of United Mothers, Knights of Columbus, United Families of Canada; Reverend Terence Chang, Reverend Garry Rohr, Ray Wiens and his wife, Katherine, and Reverend Eve Bassett, all partners in the Edmonton Faith Coalition for Natural Marriage; Robert Picard, member of the Knights of Columbus of Edmonton; and Therese Gervais, representative of REAL Women of Alberta. Our guests are seated in both the members' and the public galleries, and I would ask them now to stand up and be recognized and invite the members of the Assembly to join me in extending a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member in this Legislature understands how hard and how painful it is for parents to stand by and watch their children destroy their lives. Sometimes it is important for children to suffer the consequences of their actions, and other times it's a matter of life and death.

2:40

The Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, which will be proclaimed on July 1, will give parents a very important tool to help them help their drug-addicted child to avoid death and to re-embrace life. This legislation, known as PCHAD, is the result of addicted youth asking for help; of parents asking for help; of all the members of this Legislature, government, and opposition working together to pass this legislation; of ministers and deputy ministers of five departments working together; and of AADAC counsellors and administrators putting in long hours to ensure that this legislation would be ready for proclamation. This legislation, thanks to this team of caring people, is a gift of hope to parents who love their children and who will do whatever it takes to save them from a life of dark streets, cold jails, hospital wards, and early graves.

PCHAD will give parents and guardians a new option to apply to the court for an apprehension and confinement order to have their child placed in a protective safe house for a maximum of five days. During this confinement period AADAC will work with the child and the family to engage them in developing a voluntary treatment plan. Parents will be able to call AADAC for help after July 1.

Mr. Speaker, we do not have the research to show how effective this intervention will be; however, some believe that it will be 50 per cent. The Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre in Calgary has an 80 per cent success rate after five years. We should strive to make the 80 per cent rate of success our goal in all treatment and healing programs.

Mr. Speaker, PCHAD, thanks to the many long hours and hard work of dedicated people, will give parents a new hope to lead their children to a new life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Samantha Johnston

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an intelligent and talented young lady from my constituency who recently competed against girls from across Alberta and on March 31 was crowned Miss Alberta at the provincial Job's Daughters pageant.

Job's Daughters International is a youth leadership organization for young women between the ages of 10 and 20. The Alberta chapter is very active, with bethels in Edmonton, Calgary, St. Albert, and Red Deer. Building on a rich tradition and heritage, it teaches important skills for life such as leadership, organization, teamwork, and self-reliance.

Throughout the year Job's Daughters plan and share many activities, including serving the community by visiting hospitals and homes for the elderly to offer friendship to people who may be lonely or sad. I met the new Alberta queen at a Remembrance Day ceremony, where she was participating in the remembrance by laying a wreath.

Every spring the Alberta members of Job's Daughters get together for the grand session, where the pageant takes place. This year it was held in Edmonton. All contestants in the pageant competed in written tests, ritual, and interviews. They were also subjected to impromptu questions on stage.

Our contestant won a trophy for the highest written test score and went on to score the highest overall mark and be crowned Miss Alberta. It's been almost 10 years since Miss Alberta has been an Edmonton representative. Miss Alberta will represent the province at the Miss International Job's Daughters pageant, to be held at the supreme session in August in Vancouver, and for the next year she'll travel the province acting as an ambassador for Job's Daughters, promoting the interests, welfare, and growth of the organization.

Mr. Speaker, our new Job's Daughter Miss Alberta is none other than our own Legislature page, Samantha Johnston. Samantha is currently a 16-year-old honours student at Strathcona composite high school. She enjoys softball and canoeing and is a member of the high school's students' union. Her leadership skills and work ethic have been recognized in her selection as a page, and I think it's safe to say that she is definitely a strong leader for our province now and into the future.

On behalf of all residents of Edmonton-Whitemud and all members of this Legislature I congratulate our page Samantha Johnston, the new Job's Daughters Miss Alberta. We look forward to her success in the coming years.

The Speaker: Samantha, why don't you take a bow. [applause]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Action against Poverty

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to report on the Calgary round-table on child care I attended with three colleagues on Saturday. One thing that emerged from the discussion was a recognition that child care is not an issue of public versus private or parents versus programs. Child care is often an issue of people and poverty, poverty in the midst of plenty.

If you think you've heard that last line before, you're right. That was the slogan on which William Aberhart ran to victory in 1935. Aberhart's successor and our longest-serving Premier, Ernest Manning, knew about the effects of poverty. He toured Latin American countries that were being bled of their oil as people lived in poverty. He determined that the wealth from Alberta's oil boom would be shared with the people and not all siphoned off in corporate profits. In an online discussion three weeks ago Globe and Mail columnist Jeffrey Simpson wrote of Alberta's capacity to lead the country socially as well as economically. He suggested that this is one province that can effectively abolish poverty and lead other provinces to do the same. Simpson's suggestion is a good one.

U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt was the first North American leader to link economic, political, and social rights: the freedom from want and freedom from fear to the traditional freedom of speech and freedom of religion. Roosevelt mentored Lyndon Johnson, whom we remember for Vietnam. Johnson did not want to get involved in a foreign war at all. His focus was his war on poverty, part of the program he built on John F. Kennedy's new frontier.

I end with a quote from Kennedy's inaugural speech of my youth.

To those . . . in the huts and villages across the globe struggling to break the bonds of . . . misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period is required – not because the Communists [are] doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich.

Let us make that resolve our own and start with those who live in poverty among us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

National Mental Health Week

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in recognition of Mental Health Week, which occurs during the first week of May. About one in every five Canadians will experience some form of mental illness in their lifetime. More and more people are becoming aware of mental health issues and recognize the importance of mental health to one's overall wellness. Mental Health Week allows us an opportunity to learn more about and increase awareness of mental health issues.

This year the Alberta Mental Health Board's campaign theme for Mental Health Week is Stress: It's What You Do about It. Specifically, it targets youth ages 13 to 18. The Alberta Mental Health Board says that stress is a normal part of life and some situations are more stressful than others. It's what you do about it that makes a difference to your well-being.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to recognize that youth are also subject to both stress and mental illness. Another positive initiative that the Alberta Mental Health Board has taken regarding youth and mental health is the launch of a new magazine called Grip, written for youth by youth. The magazine is intended to be a source of information for young people that will help youth to better cope and understand issues relevant to young people.

Mr. Speaker, we're fortunate to have a greater awareness of the importance and value of positive mental health. Mental Health Week is a prime time to encourage people across Alberta and across Canada to learn more about ways to maintain and improve mental health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Education Week

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 30 to May 6 is Education Week in Alberta. All across our great province schools will celebrate this occasion through events and activities involving staff, students, and members of our schools' communities. This year's Education Week theme is Learning: It's Yours for Life. The theme is fitting because the mission of Alberta Education is to ensure that students obtain the knowledge and skills required for lifelong learning. Examples of our education system's commitment to lifelong learning are abundant every day in Alberta's elementary and secondary schools, colleges, and universities. From top marks in academics to pursuit of fine arts, trades, and athletics Alberta's K to 12 students are gaining valuable life skills and a knowledge base that will prepare them for a great future.

Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge our great teachers and the innovation shown by school administrators and school board staffs in support of Alberta's students. We are blessed in this province to have a dedicated community of education stakeholders who hold in high regard the value of education and the well-being of our students. In keeping with this year's theme, Alberta will continue to promote the importance of lifelong learning as a way for each Alberta student to maximize his or her true potential. Excellence in learning outcomes means that all students are well prepared for lifelong learning, work, and citizenship and have the skills and knowledge to be successful.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to salute all of the nominees for the excellence in teaching awards, which will be awarded this coming weekend in Calgary. In particular I would like to recognize Mo Brenneis and Jim Nahrebeski from my constituency.

I invite all Albertans to acknowledge and recognize Education Week, and I sincerely commend and thank those who contribute to our education system and the future potential of the students in classrooms all across Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health Care Spending

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'll be tabling New Democrat projections about health care spending and its impact on our future budgets. Our analysis shows that the doomsday predictions contained in last week's Aon report are off the mark at best and trumped up political calculations at worst. In fact, they are the latest in this government's continuing attempts to frighten Albertans into accepting privatization of our health care system.

Just a few years ago this government was using predictions based on the Mazankowski report to convince Albertans that radical changes and privatization were needed to stop out-of-control health care costs. In March I released information showing that instead of taking up to half of all spending by 2005, as Mr. Mazankowski predicated, health spending has stayed at approximately 35 per cent of overall program spending since 2000. But like a dog with a bone the government has now released numbers from a $1.2 million report that are just as cooked up as the guesswork contained in the Mazankowski report. The Aon report predicts that by 2016 health care spending will garner 50 per cent of the provincial budget and that by 2017 total provincial expenses will exceed revenues, causing a budgetary deficit. Mr. Speaker, their numbers are just plain wrong.

Our analysis, which is based on actual 20-year trends, shows that average health spending is lower than what Aon is predicting and that our average revenue growth is much higher than Aon's numbers. The sky is not falling, Mr. Speaker. It is true that there are significant cost drivers in health care, but it is also true that these can be managed. Many European countries have already dealt with aging populations and still manage to control health care spending, keeping it below the spending per capita that we do in Canada. More importantly, there are real opportunities to innovate within the public system to maintain a health care system for future generations. The NDP's plan to create an Alberta pharmaceutical savings agency and rein in escalating drug costs is just one example.

Health care costs are a legitimate concern but are manageable with innovation and planning. Unsubstantiated 20-year projections do a disservice to public debate on health care policy.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to advise you that I'll be requesting leave to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the future of Alberta's five-point plan for child care in the wake of the federal budget which will be presented in Ottawa tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a document that is relevant to those interested in this afternoon's debate on Bill 208. This document outlines the parallel in wording between the federal Bill C-38 and Bill 208, which will be debated in this Assembly this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. These tablings are to back up my information from question period earlier today. The first tabling I have is a copy of the Alberta Gazette from July 15, 2005, page 1736, and it indicates that 157-plus acres of land were purchased for $2,800 from the Alberta government by Fort McMurray Housing Inc.

The next tabling I have is a transfer of land from the Land Titles Act, and this is from the Alberta Government Services land titles office. It indicates that there were not 46 acres, but there were 157-plus acres in total transferred from the ministry of infrastructure to this corporation on May 16, 2005, for $2,800,000.

The third document is also in regard to that land sale as well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to table the appropriate number of copies of the PC Party membership application handouts distributed over the weekend by the hon. Member for Strathcona, referred to by the leader in his first question this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling copies of a news release and background issued by the NDP opposition today. They contain our calculation of yearly budget deficits and surpluses based on 20-year averages in growth in revenue and health spending. They show that the predictions of the Aon report are well off the mark and also demonstrate the savings potential of innovations such as the Alberta pharmaceutical savings agency proposed by the NDP opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before dealing with the application for Standing Order 30 – it's presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona – we will first of all deal with a point of order that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader caught our eye with during the question period. Following that, I intend to make a statement with respect to a motion and a private member's bill.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order
Oral Question Period Rules

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to your attention some concerns that I have with respect to a question that was asked specifically today by the Member for Edmonton-Manning. As you know, we have a tradition in this House of members asking a question followed by two supplementary questions, and there's been an increasing tendency in the House of late, and I think witnessed today by the series of questions from the Member for Edmonton-Manning, where instead of having one question with two supplementaries, we are in fact getting to the point of each member asking three sometimes totally independent questions, sometimes not even of the same minister.

I would like to bring to your attention Beauchesne 410(8), where it says that "Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles." Mr. Speaker, you have reinforced that on many occasions. Then it goes on to say, "Supplementary questions should flow from the answers of Ministers."

I also refer you to Beauchesne 414, where it actually then goes on to make further reference to supplementary questions and, in fact, refers us to Erskine May, so I'll now move to Erskine May, page

354. Under Oral Answers and Supplementary Questions it reads: "An answer should be confined to the points contained . . ." This is talking about ministers. "The Speaker has stressed that the length of both ministerial replies and of supplementary questions should be curbed. The Speaker has suggested that lengthy answers should be circulated." There's a section here that I had read earlier. It refers here to supplementary questions and suggests that supplementary questions should follow out of the original question.

In the case of today's question the Member for Edmonton-Manning had a rather lengthy preamble, in which he made reference to the government having labour laws that were, in his opinion, unsatisfactory and talked at quite some length about labour laws and issues related to labour. Then his first question, the only question according to our tradition in this House, was to the Minister of Finance, and it was related to tax policy. His question was: when will the minister be proclaiming Bill 207, which would bring about a tax deduction for tools for an apprentice?

Now, had the supplementary questions been leading out of that question, then he should have been asking the minister for some further clarification, perhaps on how the minister was proposing to implement this proclamation, but instead his first supplementary question was totally unrelated to his question. It was referred to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, in which he asked the minister when he was going to be introducing first contract legislation. His second supplementary question, increasingly referred to by members in this House as "my third question," was again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, referring to minimum wage legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I simply ask that you clarify with members of the House what questions and supplementary questions should entail and call members to order when they stray too far from the general definition of supplementary questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address the point of order that has been raised by the new Deputy Government House Leader and, indeed, to assert that there is no point of order here.

When we look at Beauchesne 410(8), it does indeed say, as the new Deputy Government House Leader has said, "Supplementary questions should flow from the answers of Ministers." Well, as the Speaker himself and many, many members opposite have often underlined to me, this is question period, not answer period. In fact, there is no obligation on behalf of ministers, as has been well pointed out by the Speaker himself and many members opposite, to provide answers in response to the questions that we've asked. In fact, I would maintain that it's a contest to see how ministers cannot answer the questions that have been put before them. So it is an impossibility in this particular House and certainly during my time here to in fact craft the supplementary questions in direct response to the answers received from the ministers. I would argue that we would be delighted to do so should we, in fact, receive answers that respond to the questions that have been asked, which is not the current state of this question period.

There was one other point that he had made, on 414. The same thing: that the following supplementary question would flow from "the answers that have been given." Well, once again, the same problem, Mr. Speaker. The answers aren't given, nor are they required to be given. The tradition in this House has been to have a preamble with a main question followed by two supplementary questions.

Now, what we actually had in the preamble today, Mr. Speaker – and I'm looking at the Member for Edmonton-Manning's notes. He covered a number of topics in his preamble, including the fact that it was May Day, a day to traditionally acknowledge workers, that the government had weakened labour laws, that it had a poor record of labour support and development and retention, that it was important to get workers to stay longer and put down roots in Alberta, and it was a long-lasting and increasing problem.

When I look at the cluster of questions, they do indeed flow directly from the preamble that the member laid out. The first question, about the proclamation of the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, is flowing from his statement in the preamble around retention. It's harder for us to get workers to stay in the province when they can't be recognized in that simple way by a bill that, in fact, was passed by this Assembly but has never been proclaimed. The question was a direct question. It did not seek an opinion. It did not discuss a matter before the courts. It did not refer to something in the media. It didn't do any of the other long list of things that are not to be done in questions. It did seek information: why it hadn't happened. It was not frivolous. It's a perfectly reasonable question to ask. It was urgent and timely; today is the traditional day of labour. It was within the administrative competence of the minister to whom it was directed. It was not sub judice, et cetera, et cetera.

The second question was asking about first contract arbitration, Mr. Speaker, and that reflects directly back on the earlier comment in the preamble around labour laws, labour support and development.

The third question, again on workers, refers back to both the retention issues that were raised in the preamble and the labour laws and labour support. Everything that flowed from those three questions related directly back to the preamble, which, Mr. Speaker, in this House is the very best we can do seeing as we don't get answers from ministers from which we could craft supplementary questions.

I argue that despite raising 410(8) and 414, there is no point of order. I do note that we have an agreement in this House that's generally put together by the House leaders and endorsed by the Assembly that if there cannot be agreement reached by the House leaders, the decision is rendered by the Speaker on, in fact, the order and number of the questions that we have as a tradition in this House.

So I argue that there is no point of order. Thank you so much for your time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anybody else want to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise here on this point of order, and I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her very thorough explanation of how that question should be dealt with.

Just to add a couple of things. You know, in Marleau and Montpetit on page 425 it states that "members should be given the greatest possible freedom in the putting of questions that is consistent with the other principles." On page 430 it also goes on to talk about some changes in the 36th Parliament in 1997, and this is in the second paragraph: "Speaker Parent allowed the practice [of supplementary questions] to be modified by not insisting that an additional question be, strictly speaking, supplementary to the main question."

Now, the questions that were involved here did actually follow from the preamble and actually did follow from the answers of the minister. The preamble did say: issues regarding May Day. It did say: issues regarding labour issues, labour law and how, specifically, worker retention is a growing and important problem in Alberta.

The tax cuts for tools, if it was implemented and proclaimed, would be something that would work to maintain workers in Alberta. The question on retaining workers by having first contract arbitration would also be something that would reduce labour conflict and would work to hold workers in Alberta by having labour laws that would not scare them away. The Lakeside Packers thing had world-wide media and was very difficult for Alberta's reputation, and I hope that that would not happen again. Even the minister of human resources said that there would be some good cause to look to implementing such a law, and even the Premier said such a thing.

The question of the minimum wage is also an important law. If we are to attract workers to Alberta, it would be something that would be well received by people who are unskilled and people who are students coming out of university.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I think we'll come to a ruling on this very important matter. Now, listen everybody. For more than a billion-plus people in the world today is one of their most important days. It's May 1. It's called May Day. The whole history of the 20th century itself surrounded May Day for, as I said, 1 billion or more people in the world.

Today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning – and I can't believe, in fact, that all questions weren't dealing with labour as this is the one day – gets up, and he says in the first part of his preamble, "Seriously, May 1, May Day, is a traditional day to honour workers world-wide." In the supplementary he talks about labour laws. In the third one he talks about workers. Well, as far as I'm concerned, if any day of the year there should be some latitude given by the chair with respect to the connection of questions, this should be the one if it's on the subject of labour or anything else.

Now, the citations that have been cited here: fine; they could be applied. I'm not sure if I understand from the hon. Deputy Government House Leader that the chair should now insist that ministers should actually give answers to questions or not, but that has already been dealt with by the chair, and he's already agreed that there was some latitude with respect to that and that we probably would not be proceeding in that way.

Of all the research that was done, actually the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has found the paragraph that sums it up best, and it's located in the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice, edited by Robert Marleau and Camille Montpetit. In addition to allowing flexibility with a lack of connect between questions, it has been a recent practice in the country of Canada that, in fact, will go the same way that we allow splitting the questions as well. It would not be normal to basically have three different questions on three different subject matters, but there was enough connection with respect to May Day, labour workers to make sure that this happened.

So thank you very much for that discussion for 20 minutes. By the way, there was no point of order.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: The chair would like to make a statement pertaining to a matter of business that will be addressed by the Assembly this evening, namely Motion Other than Government Motion 508, standing in the name of the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. The issue of anticipation may arise as Motion 508 deals with the subject of fixed election dates, as does Bill 210, which is sponsored by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Under Beauchesne's paragraph 566(7) "a motion dealing with the same subject-matter as a bill . . . on the Order Paper for second reading [should not] be considered." This rule of parliamentary practice is based on the principle that an Assembly should not consider the same matter twice. Under the rule stated in Beauchesne's paragraphs 512 and 513, a matter must not be anticipated if it is contained in a more effective form of proceeding based on the descending scale of values where bills have priority over motions, which in turn have priority over amendments.

Even in the House of Commons this principle is applied in a more lenient manner when it comes to private members' business. After stating the basis for this ancient rule against anticipation, Marleau and Montpetit in House of Commons Procedure and Practice say this at page 477:

An exception has been allowed, however, in the case of an opposition motion on a Supply day related to the subject matter of a bill already before the House. Under the normal application of the rule, the Chair would refuse the motion because it ranks as inferior to a bill. The Speaker has nonetheless ruled that the opposition prerogative in the use of an allotted day is very broad and ought to be interfered with only on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds.

This tendency not to rule private members' business out of order on the basis of the rule against anticipation is reflected in the 24th edition of Erskine May at page 389, where it is stated that because of the limited opportunities that exist for members in the British House of Commons to raise matters with ministers, "the rule is therefore enforced much less strictly than before."

Hon. members, the chair and the table officers have researched this issue and believe that this is the first time that the issue of anticipation has been raised with respect to a private member's motion and a private member's bill. It differs from a March 28, 1995, situation reported at page 872 of the Alberta Hansard for that day, when a private member's motion was struck out because it was on the same subject as a government bill. The alleged conflict here is between a private member's motion and a private member's bill.

Given the process for arriving at the order of motions other than government motions and private members' bills, a member proposing a motion would not necessarily know what was in such a bill until it was given first reading. The chair would also note that Motion 508 may have a similar subject, but it is not identical to Bill 210. The debate would not necessarily be the same.

The chair has always given the widest latitude possible to private members' business consistent with the rules and practices of the Assembly, which are in large part derived from the 1993 reforms which made Alberta a leader in private members' business. The chair will whenever possible allow debate to proceed. Given that there are differences between Motion 508 and Bill 210 and that one cannot say with certainty when Bill 210 will be considered by the Assembly, the chair does not find the motion out of order, so the debate can proceed.

I am providing this ruling at this time in anticipation of the possibility of such a motion being raised later in the day or at 8 o'clock tonight. The bottom line is that both Motion 508 and Bill 210 can proceed.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 30 application.

National Child Care Agreement

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with that order, Standing Order 30, I rise to request leave to propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the [House] to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, specifically that cancellation of the child care agreement concluded and signed by Alberta and the federal government in 2005 puts into jeopardy the funding that makes possible Alberta's five-point plan for child care, which enjoys vast popular support in the province.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, if I may make a brief argument for urgency. As we are all aware, the federal Conservative government will bring down its first budget tomorrow afternoon, in perhaps less than 24 hours from now. In that budget we expect to see the first steps towards implementation of Conservative policies in various areas, including Canadian child care. One casualty of the changes Ottawa is going to announce in tomorrow's budget is the likely cancellation of the bilateral federal/provincial agreements on child care signed last year. Albertans overwhelmingly oppose such cancellation and strongly support Alberta's five-point plan made possible by this bilateral federal/provincial agreement. These proposed changes are of serious consequence, and a thorough debate on the implications of tomorrow's federal budget is urgently required.

Alberta's parents are worried, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister of Children's Services in the House has still not been able to provide Albertans with clear commitments and details about the future of Alberta's five-point plan should Ottawa announce tomorrow the cancellation of its agreement with Alberta. It's urgent that Ottawa hear the views of this Assembly on this very, very important issue.

Last week I challenged the minister to table correspondence between herself and the federal minister, and I hope that she will do so shortly. Until that happens, Albertans won't know whether the minister is following in her Quebec counterpart's footsteps and is, in fact, able to negotiate a side deal to ensure the continuation of the funding for Alberta's five-point plan and the improvements to quality child care services promised in it. In fact, Quebec offers an important insight into why a broad-based debate on this issue is urgent and important. Quebec has replaced Alberta as a leader in encouraging women to enter the job market due mainly to its highly accessible and affordable quality child care system. Alberta, once a leader just 10 years ago, has now fallen behind.

This Assembly has not had the opportunity to debate thoroughly Alberta's response to our child care needs and how changes as proposed by the Conservative government policies in Ottawa will impact Alberta families. We have had heated debates in this Assembly about the so-called labour crunch, and if women are not participating fully in the labour market, then it can only make this crunch worse.

There's something fundamentally wrong when a government such as this prefers to exploit temporary foreign workers rather than encouraging full participation . . .

The Speaker: I think, hon. member, you should stick to the urgency of the argument, not give your argument. If you win, you'll have a chance, but we'll never get to know if you're going to win unless you give us the urgency argument.

Dr. Pannu: I will, Mr. Speaker. Returning to the issue of urgency, this matter is urgent not only because it will have consequences for our very young children and their ability to take advantage of quality child care facilities but also because it will have larger implications for our economy. That's why I thought I should perhaps raise that issue. But I will take your direction.

I would strongly urge this Assembly to undertake an immediate debate on the future of child care, and I would hope that such a debate would result in a unified commitment to the so-called QUAD principles in child care – quality, universality, accessibility, and development programming – a desirable framework for further development of Alberta's child care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Standing Order 30(2) reads the following:

The member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

It would it be appropriate to hear two additional speakers, one perhaps the Government House Leader, one perhaps the Opposition House Leader. That would be enough, then, before we come to deal with this matter. The hon. Minister of Children's Services, do you wish to proceed first?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on the debate on Standing Order 30, I believe it is, on urgency. You know this very well. You've led us for the last several years in regard to what is in Standing Order 30.

I have to stand up and say that I don't believe that this is a matter of urgency. We have had many, many discussions in regard to this five-point child care. The hon. member across the way talks about the likely cancellation of the five-point plan in regard to the federal budget tomorrow. We have not heard that budget. I can tell the member that we've had lots of opportunity to discuss this topic in the House, in Committee of Supply during the debate of my budget. In fact, Mr. Speaker, at that point in time I encouraged the hon. member to write the federal minister, to send their letters of concern.

I can tell this House, Mr. Speaker, that we received $70 million from the federal government last year. We got $66 million this year. It's business as usual for the parents, families, and the daycare workers in this province.

I have also made it clear on numerous occasions what I have done in regard to our conversations with the federal minister. Forty-eight hours after she was appointed, we called. We have sent two letters. I have also had a meeting, and, if I may, we have another meeting planned with my federal colleague at the end of May.

I think it's important that the hon. member understand that there are many issues to be discussed about this particular initiative. It's just not the cancellation, but we're looking at the seats that are available, the number of daycare spaces that are going to be created. The money that is in that particular budget we need to discuss. I think we have to meet with the federal minister, which I told you we were going to do. I understand that the details may – may, I may say – be provided in the federal budget tomorrow.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, our five-point plan that's in place right now is working, and it's working very well. I will continue to lobby on behalf of Albertans and their families and the daycare workers. I've made that very clear in this House on many occasions. We have made our commitment about the importance of choice for Albertans.

Given all of these facts, I cannot understand why the hon. member suddenly suggests that there is a need for an emergency debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak in support of the motion that has been brought forward by my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Speaking to urgency, there are a number of tests that are offered to us.

Standing Order 30(1), matters must be of "urgent public importance": I would certainly argue that children are of public importance and of a wider public importance as well, aside from the urgency.

The emergency is that the federal budget comes down tomorrow. This is our last opportunity to make any differing resolutions if we would choose to do so prior to that decision that would be rendered by them.

We have no bills on the Order Paper that would allow a specific discussion on this point during a debate of a bill.

We did have a budget debate on Children's Services, but that was on April 13. Again, we have no opportunity in a budget debate to argue what is before us specifically.

There are no opportunities for motions other than government motions to come forward. Those, of course, were set last September.

Any written questions or motions for returns submitted specific to this question as of today would not be heard for a matter of many weeks, which would not be addressing the urgency of what is put before us.

I think that when we look at Montpetit and Marleau, at 585 it sets out before us an argument that the issue has to be "immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation." That is certainly the case. It is, I would argue, not a chronic issue like unemployment rates, for example. It would I think fit under some of the occasions that have been set out in M and M 585 to admit that it is of urgency; for example, work stoppages, strikes, international crises. This certainly is a crisis if we're not able to care for our children appropriately.

With those arguments, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that in fact this is urgent. We have no other opportunity to be raising this issue and giving it any kind of satisfactory hearing. Given that, I would ask that the Speaker find in favour of the urgency of the matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you very much for that participation. We are prepared to deal with this matter. First of all, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, proper notice was given of the intent to bring forward the motion under Standing Order 30, and that's appreciated. That notice was received in my office at 11 o'clock this morning so that it did provide some opportunity to do some study and some research with respect to the matter and also to anticipate the arguments that might be forthcoming here in the Assembly this afternoon.

The key thing here is dealing with a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. In essence, the member's proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on the cancellation of the child care agreement concluded and signed by Alberta and the federal government in 2005, which according to the member's motion puts into jeopardy the funding that would give effect to Alberta's five-point plan for child care. The chair has not heard conclusively whether or not such an agreement has been cancelled, but the chair did hear conclusively from the hon. Minister of Children's Services, who participated in this particular motion, that basically this five-point plan is proceeding and is going.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debates are Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 398, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589.

The chair has also listened to the lack of opportunity alluded to by the hon. Opposition House Leader with respect to this matter, but did not hear the hon. Opposition House Leader indicate that an appropriation bill with respect to all of the budgets of the province of Alberta still has to be dealt with by this Assembly. That certainly would afford an opportunity. Although the estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services were considered and approved by this Assembly on April 13, 2006, there is opportunity, in the eyes of the chair, with respect to even the bill process with respect to this, in addition to question period.

Secondly, I don't know: can anybody in the House tell me what's going to be in the federal budget tomorrow? I have no idea how you can anticipate that. It may very well be that we have brilliant people here who all have read it conclusively and know exactly what's in it. That being the case, you could probably do quite well as consultants outside of this Assembly. From a speculative point of view I don't know whether or not the federal budget will do it.

There's no doubt in my mind that this would appear to some to be a matter of considerable interest, but whether or not it's a matter of such urgency to warrant postponing the business of the Assembly this afternoon is really the question. The conclusion of the chair in reviewing this matter since mid-morning and hearing the arguments today is that the request for leave is not in order.

Investment in Tobacco-based Companies

Q14. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Miller that the following question be accepted.

How much money in total did the Alberta heritage savings trust fund invest in tobacco-based companies in the fiscal year 2004-05 broken down by individual company and amount invested in each?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are seeking the information because we are concerned that there is a contradiction in the government's policies regarding tobacco use and tobacco reduction. On the one hand, we have the Minister of Health and Wellness identifying tobacco reduction as a means of achieving better health and wellness for our population, but then on the other side of it, we saw during a budget debate recently that the amount of money for the tobacco reduction program has in fact been reduced. So right there one very small exchange shows you the contradictions that we're dealing with when we look at what the government is doing, and we are seeking clarification. We believe that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund has chosen to invest in vehicles that include tobacco-based companies, and we are seeking specific information on which companies those are and exactly how much money has been invested in each.

Thank you very much.

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 27, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 23, 24, and 25.

[Motion carried]

Margaret Kool Marketing Inc.

M23. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the contract between the Ministry of Health and Wellness and Margaret Kool Marketing, mkm, awarded following request for proposal 05-243.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government will be rejecting Motion for a Return 23. When the public body is considering giving access to a record that may contain third-party business or personal information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party and/or individuals prior to disclosure in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Therefore, a request for this information must be made under the FOIP Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member to conclude the debate.

Mr. Martin: That's a real winner, trying to go through the FOIP Act, as we found out just recently from this minister's department, Mr. Speaker. They ignore that, the same as they do the rest. It was 10 or 15 days late, and you pay money.

I would remind the minister that this idea of the third party – Margaret Kool Marketing was contracted to develop a communications strategy to sell the government's third-way scheme. Again, Mr. Speaker, it was taxpayers' money. Now, the government may decide not to proceed with the third way. I doubt that they're getting a refund from this particular group. We know that it was a pretty ineffectual strategy. Maybe the government should be demanding their money back. The point is that it's not the government's money. They contracted it out. They were hired with taxpayers' money to provide this information to the government.

Again I would say that the minister often talks about being transparent, Mr. Speaker. Well, for those who contract with government – I don't care if it's third party or not – that should be part of it. If you contract with government, you should be prepared to be transparent in terms of your dealings with the government. Making a copy of this contract would be a way to ensure transparency in contracting. This is always going to be a loophole, this third-party business. Then we try the FOIP, and we notice that FOIP is cutting back in what we can do there. It takes forever to get it. They don't follow it the way they're supposed to. How are we supposed to get information from this government? That's the point we're making.

This contract is not two private companies out there working together. This is taxpayers' money being put together to sell a program for the government, yet the taxpayers, who foot the bill, aren't allowed to see what's going on, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly not surprised by this reaction, but obviously transparency with this government doesn't mean anything.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 23 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Margaret Kool Marketing Inc.

M24. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents produced for the Ministry of Health and Wellness by Margaret Kool Marketing, mkm, under the contract awarded following request for proposal 05-243.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the leader of the NDP we'll try again. In this case we're not asking about the contract. We're asking for the information that was given to the government from taxpayers' money.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 24. When the public body is considering access to a record that may contain third-party business or personal information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party and/or individuals prior to disclosure in accordance with the FOIP Act. Therefore, a request for this information must be made under the FOIP Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Here we go again. The minister – I've known her for many years – must be embarrassed by this, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the government has decided not to proceed with its third-way reforms, it makes it all the more important that all the reports and other documents prepared by Margaret Kool Marketing be made public. Surely this Legislative Assembly and through this Legislative Assembly the people of Alberta have a right to know what their money didn't buy. We understand that they did focus groups. We should know what those focus groups had to say. They must have produced a strategy for the government with recommendations for direct communications, brochures, leaflets as well as recommendations for print, radio, and TV advertising.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the government wants to be transparent and open – and, again, I know that the minister has talked about it – surely this would be seen as something the public should know. Otherwise, Albertans can only conclude that the government has something to hide, maybe keeping these documents secret so that they can be pulled off the shelf in the future when the government once again tries to make another run at selling Albertans on privatized, two-tier health care.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the minister keeps talking about FOIP. She knows the problems that we've had just recently with FOIP, with getting information from her department, and how this is an alternative. How else do we get information from this government? FOIP doesn't work. We can't get it through the Legislature. I mean, I guess this is just the way this government operates and intends to keep operating.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 24 lost]

3:40 Northeast Calgary Ring Road

M25. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the public-sector comparator done for the northeast Calgary ring road project, which was announced as a public/private partnership on February 24, 2006.

Mr. Martin: Try, try again, Mr. Speaker. This is a major, major project, and surely we have a right to know what we're looking at in terms of the public-sector comparator as compared to what comes in from private companies, whether we're in the ballpark or not.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation I would like to advise the House that the government finds it necessary to reject this motion. A public-sector comparator was prepared for the northeast Stoney Trail and formed part of the business case. When the northeast Stoney Trail was announced, it was also stated that the cost estimate for the project would not be released so that it would not prejudice the tendering process. The public-sector comparator cannot be made public before bids come in from the P3 proponents as that could affect the bidding process. The public-sector comparator, once finalized, will be sealed and provided to Alberta Justice. It will be opened only after all bids are received from the P3 proponents. This will ensure against any suggestion or perception that the public-sector comparator could be adjusted after bids come in. The public-sector comparator can be made public at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I anticipated that answer, and it is unusual. Public-sector comparators have been done before. It seems to me that if they're saying that that could influence the bid, well, maybe we should be looking at the whole of P3 proposals if that's the case. The public-sector comparator is exactly what we should be paying, and I don't see that having it out there ahead, as has been done in the past, would influence that. But seeing that that's the case, I'll take the minister at his word that the government is committing here, I understand, to make the comparator public after the fact as soon as the bids have been received. I'll certainly take them at their word on that.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 208
Protection of Fundamental Freedoms
(Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to open debate today on Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. The most important right in a free society is the right to disagree and criticize government policy. For this reason it has been protected in every major rights document in Canada's illustrious political lineage: the Magna Carta, the English Bill of Rights, the American Bill of Rights, the preamble to the British North America Act, the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights, and most recently the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Despite this noble pedigree of freedom, this most fundamental right, the right to disagree with and criticize government policy, is under attack across our country. In British Columbia a teacher, Dr. Chris Kempling, was suspended without pay because he publicly disagreed with the Liberal government's same-sex marriage law. Also in British Columbia the Knights of Columbus have been sued and fined because they refused to rent their hall to a same-sex wedding party. In Ontario a leading gay rights activist has called on the government to cut off funding to the Catholic separate schools and all other private schools that don't include same-sex marriage in their curriculum. Right here in Alberta the respected Bishop Fred Henry of Calgary has been charged not once but twice with so-called hate speech crimes for publicly advocating the defeat of the federal Liberals' same-sex marriage bill. These incidents are all clear violations of Canadians' rights of freedom of speech, press, religion, and conscience.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 would prevent these types of rights abuses. Bill 208 would ensure that when it comes to public discussion of the same-sex marriage issue, no individual will be punished, no community group will be sued, no school will lose their funding, and no student or teacher will be coerced or punished for publicly disagreeing with same-sex marriage. What Bill 208 does not do is interfere with the legal right of gay people to get married. This is the law of Canada, a federal law, and there is little that this Assembly can do about it.

There is something that we can do about the use or, rather, the abuse of courts and human rights commissions to silence and punish public disagreement with same-sex marriage as a matter of public policy. This is precisely what Bill 208 does. Bill 208 consists of a preamble and amendments to three different Alberta statutes: the human rights act, the Marriage Act, and the School Act. In the drafting of Bill 208 I followed as closely as possible the wording of similar rights protection provisions in federal legislation as evidenced by the documents that I tabled earlier this afternoon.

When the Liberal government of the day embarked upon the mission to redefine marriage, they were warned that there was a risk that the new same-sex marriage law could come into conflict with the traditional rights of freedom of speech, religion, and conscience. To remedy this, the Liberals initially sought to add specific protections in their own bill to address this conflict. However, in 2004 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that protecting these rights against provincial infringement could only be done through provincial legislation. If you imagine the protection of fundamental freedoms in this context as a circle, what the Supreme Court did was draw a line through the middle of the circle and say that half is federal and half is provincial. The feds have filled in their half. Bill 208 would fill in Alberta's half, using the identical wording to the extent possible. Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 merely completes what Parliament wanted to do but was prevented from doing by its jurisdictional limitations. It ensures that extending the rights to one group does not restrict the rights of other groups.

The preamble to Bill 208 declares three things. It affirms the fundamental right of freedom of conscience and religion. It declares that these freedoms protect any church official from being forced to perform a same-sex marriage contrary to his or her religious beliefs or conscience. It also declares in straightforward, clear language that "it is not against the public interest to hold and publicly express diverse views on marriage." The wording of this preamble is virtually identical to the preamble of federal Bill C-38.

The first section of Bill 208 amends the Alberta human rights act. It states that no person or organization shall be deprived of any benefit or be subject to any other obligation or sanction under this or any other law of Alberta solely because of their publicly stated views on same-sex marriage, whether they oppose or support same-sex marriage; that is, it protects both sides of this debate. This protection would be added to section 11 of the existing Alberta human rights act, which is the section that provides a number of legal defences against complaints of discrimination. In layman's terms this means, at least in Alberta, that there would be no more hate speech prosecutions like the Bishop Fred Henry case, no Knights of Columbus incidents, no Chris Kempling job loss incidents, and no cutting off of funding to separate or private schools that exclude same-sex marriage from their curriculum.

Mr. Speaker, the second section of Bill 208 proposes an amendment to the Alberta Marriage Act. Again, it has the same intent as the corresponding federal provision in Bill C-38. It protects church officials from being forced to perform same-sex marriage against their religious conscience. It also protects marriage commissioners from losing their jobs for refusing to perform same-sex marriages. Notwithstanding the federal protections the Supreme Court has clearly stated that since solemnization of marriage is an exclusive provincial power, only provinces can protect this right. Bill 208 provides such protection.

The third and final section of Bill 208 proposes an amendment to the Alberta School Act. As education is an exclusive provincial jurisdiction, there is no parallel provision in C-38. While the amendments to the human rights act also extend to the School Act, for further clarity this amendment ensures that the freedoms of conscience, expression, and religion are explicitly protected in the context of Alberta's public, separate, and private education.

Mr. Speaker, good public policy is often a question of striking the right balance between competing claims and interests. Bill 208 strikes such a balance. It would ensure that creating the new right to same-sex marriage does not lead to restrictions on the rights and freedoms of those who disagree with same-sex marriage. Bill 208 completes what Parliament wanted to do but was prevented from doing by its jurisdictional limitations: to ensure that extending rights does not restrict the rights of other groups.

Mr. Speaker, if this Assembly fails to enact Bill 208, we will have provided less protection for the fundamental freedoms of Albertans than the Liberal government of Paul Martin provided for the rights of Canadians. Surely Albertans expect and deserve better than this. Accordingly, I would ask all members of this Assembly to support Bill 208.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm getting quite a list here. I'm going to sort this out in just a second or two, but first of all, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly four individuals that are sitting in the members' gallery. They come from quite a long ways away; they're from my constituency of Dunvegan-

Central Peace. The first is Greg Radstaak. He's the CEO for the Smoky River economic development organization that we have there. The other individual is Charles Doyle. Charles is the mayor of the village of Donnelly and also a teacher. Gary Doran is a businessperson in the Falher community. Last but certainly not least is Réal Garand, also a businessperson in the MD of Smoky? River. They are here to meet later on with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. I'd like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 208
Protection of Fundamental Freedoms
(Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: I'm now going to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, to be followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, to be followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, to be followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, to be followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, to be followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, to be followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and I will continue on the list momentarily.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to enter this debate on Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. There are three parts to this bill, and I know that I'm not going to get beyond the first part because my main concern is to deal with the tone and content of this bill as a whole, which I feel is in opposition to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

While it begins in its preamble to refer to section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, such as freedom of religion, Bill 208 conveniently overlooked section 15 on equality rights; namely, that every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination . . . based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

It has been assumed that this list of the grounds of nondiscrimination is not exhaustive and that courts will recognize new grounds when necessary. As a matter of fact, that has occurred. The Supreme Court of Canada, in dealing with the case of the Crown versus Vriend, read into Alberta's Individual's Rights Protection Act sexual orientation as a nondiscriminatory ground. So when we read Alberta's Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, for example section 3, where the grounds for nondiscrimination are listed – race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, and so on – we can assume that sexual orientation is now understood to be included even if it is not mentioned. That's the way the law of the Supreme Court of Canada would interpret our human rights legislation.

The legislation passed by the House of Commons, the Marriage for Civil Purposes Act, affirmed at the outset that the Parliament of Canada is committed to upholding section 15 of the Charter. On that basis it enacted the following: "Marriage, for civil purposes, is the lawful union of two persons to the exclusion of all others." That is the law of the land. The right to have a civil marriage – underline that: civil marriage – must not exclude same-sex couples.

The House of Commons legislation did recognize the importance of section 2 of the Charter, especially the guarantee of freedom of conscience and religion, and on that basis enacted the following: "It is recognized that officials of religious groups are free to refuse to perform marriages that are not in accordance with their religious beliefs.” So that leaves churches and synagogues and mosques to pursue their own religious beliefs. Some will perform same-sex marriages; others will not.

In contrast to the federal legislation Bill 208 proceeds in the opposite direction. On the basis of its appeal to section 2 of the Charter – that’s where it begins; freedom of conscience and religion – it proposes to limit or amend three different acts: the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act; the Marriage Act; and the School Act. I think it does so in a way that the grounds for nondiscrimination are compromised. The proposed amendment to the human rights act, for example, purports to be defending the rights of persons or groups to express their opposition to same-sex marriage. But this point I think is recognized over and over again in interpretations of section 2 of the Charter, that freedoms such as freedom of religion and freedom of expression are finite, limited freedoms. Freedom of religion is not an unlimited right, and it’s easy to argue that freedom of religion is actually limited by such basic democratic principles as the equality rights outlined in section 15 of the Charter. Freedom of expression is obviously limited if such expression willfully promotes hatred against an identifiable group. In that respect, the Supreme Court decision of the Crown versus Keegstra is still important reading for all Albertans and Canadians.

We must ask, concerning the persons or organizations mentioned in Bill 208 – namely, those who wish to oppose same-sex marriage – why they are singled out for special treatment. Religion is already a protected ground for nondiscrimination, and I think it would be a big mistake to identify particular religious groups or interest groups and include them in human rights legislation. We can ask: are such persons or groups disadvantaged? Is Bill 208 referring to recognized disadvantaged groups which have been deprived of benefits because of discrimination?

Human rights legislation, Mr. Speaker, has been adopted in Canada to protect groups of people in our society who are disadvantaged and have been subject to discrimination. The Supreme Court made it clear that when a particular group such as gays and lesbians are singled out, the effect is that a burden or disadvantage is imposed on them and not on others. Benefits are withheld from them which are available to others. To withhold civil marriage from same-sex couples is to withhold a benefit which is available to others.

Bill 208 wishes to ensure that groups who are opposed to same-sex marriage are not excluded or subject to discrimination, but the question which is all important is: what burdens are imposed on such groups, and what benefits are withheld from them? Such groups are in no way to be considered as disadvantaged groups. It is a misinterpretation of the human rights acts to place this kind of limiting clause in the act. A parallel example: many people, including myself, have very strong views against gambling. To be sure, there are limits to my freedom. My conscience will not allow me to participate in gambling or to work in a casino, but I’m still able to express those views. I still have freedom of expression, freedom to express my religious views. I think that that’s really important. Whether you’re in the pulpit of a church or whether you’re in the Legislature, I can express my religious convictions against gambling.

I see that there’s nothing preventing people from expressing their religiously based views on same-sex marriage, regardless of what their views are. Whether they’re against same-sex marriage or for it, they can express their views in their churches, in their communities, and those religious-based views can be expressed here in the Legislature. So I find it very difficult to try to kind of narrow the scope of the human rights act by making reference to a specific group which is not in any way disadvantaged.

In terms of marriage commissioners I have problems there too. We’re talking about civil marriage. Marriage commissioners, if they want to be marriage commissioners, should follow the law of the land and perform the marriages of same-sex couples. If they don’t like that, if they can’t uphold the law of the land, they should consider not working as a marriage commissioner. After all, Mr. Speaker, we’re all limited in our freedom of expression. We have to make choices, and it seems to me that if they want to be marriage commissioners, such people should make the appropriate choices.

Under section 2 of the Charter it is important to recognize the pluralism of religious beliefs in Canadian society. There are a variety of religious beliefs about same-sex marriage. Some religious groups oppose it; others support it. I encourage people in the community rooted in their religious beliefs to express their views. We as legislators should hear those views. But when it comes to the secular, civil sphere of society, I think that there’s no room for discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Bill 208 intends to establish a limit, an exception to this, but in so doing, it in effect fudges the distinction between church and state and allows for limiting clauses, which goes contrary to the expressed goal of our human rights act.

Bill 208 makes it possible for a certain group of people to express discriminatory opinions in the secular, civil sphere of society, promoting the refusal of benefits to same-sex couples and promoting the refusal to participate in or teach parts of a curriculum which deals with same-sex marriage. Mr. Speaker, the effect of such limits or exceptions placed in these various acts is to send the message to all Albertans that it is permissible and perhaps even acceptable to discriminate against individuals on the basis of sexual orientation, and I find that totally unacceptable and contrary to section 15 of the Charter. So I would recommend voting against this bill.

For me personally it is morally and religiously offensive, but putting aside my own religious beliefs, I think that in the context of a legislative debate we have to deal with the issue of the nature of human rights legislation and what is in our Charter. It seems to me that this bill flies in the face of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What we should be dealing with is a government bill, such as Bill 171, passed by the Ontario Legislature to amend various statutes, removing all references to exclusively opposite-sex spouses, so that same-sex couples are not excluded from all of the statutes in Alberta. The wording of marriage ceremonies for civil marriages that marriage commissioners are to carry out should also be changed so that same-sex couples are not excluded.

Mr. Speaker, those are my remarks, and I recommend voting against this bill.

The Speaker: The next four speakers will be the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, then Edmonton-Calder.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can’t express how pleased I am to be given this opportunity to rise and address this Assembly on the very important issues brought forward by Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. I commend the Member for Foothills-Rocky View for bringing this bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, I’d like to begin by stating that I have above all else a deep and abiding faith in God and a very, very strong commitment to upholding traditional family values. As a husband and a father my beliefs form the foundation of my life and guide me in every decision that I make. I'm also proud to serve God in my capacity as an ordained minister. It's been one of the greatest honours of my life to bring the teachings of Christianity to others in my community. I've seen time and time again the positive benefits that result from a strong faith and a deep commitment to the family.

A cornerstone of my religious beliefs is the ceremony of marriage, a union that is defined as being between one man and one woman. I have performed many, many marriages, and it never ceases to fill me with wonder and joy when a man and a woman become one in the eyes of God. Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with homosexual marriage. I don't believe that it is in accordance with Christian teachings. It goes against my entire system of beliefs, and I could never perform such a marriage in my capacity as a reverend. My faith simply does not permit it.

This is a province of wide diversity. Many Albertans share my viewpoints on this subject, but some do not. I am vocal about my position. Some are equally vocal in opposing it. Do I agree with them? No. Do I celebrate the choices they make? No. Do I accept them as equals with the absolute right to state their opinion without fear of persecution or punishment? Absolutely. That brings us to Bill 208, a bill which provides an ultimate and final guarantee that the freedoms of expression and religion that Albertans enjoy will have definitive, legislated protection.

I support freedom of conscience and freedom of religion absolutely and always, not selectively or when it's convenient. I will not support the legislative suppression of anyone's belief system, even when it's contrary in every way to my own. A relationship with God and a Christian belief system are individual choices, but laws are universal. They apply to every member of society regardless of sexual orientation, race, or religion. If they do not, we cannot consider our legislative structure to be either fair or just. Laws must protect everyone equally, not just selected groups of people.

Bill 208 provides through a series of amendments to existing acts guarantees that defend the rights of religious officials, organizations, parents, and teachers to act in accordance with their beliefs on same-sex marriage without fear of retribution. Why should anyone face negative consequences for expressing their beliefs? Why should any member of our society be punished for refusing to act, teach, or raise their children in a fashion contrary to their faith or personal morality? Does legally enshrining one position on an issue and silencing public opposition protect anyone's rights? No, it doesn't. Despite the best of intentions categorical protection does nothing but fuel the engine of hatred. Bill 208 recognizes the rights of all groups to enjoy freedom of expression and freedom of religion. It gives back to the individual the autonomy to make decisions based on a nonimposed moral code.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I'm a parent. Do I want my children to be taught in school that same-sex marriage is a positive thing? No, I don't. No way. Do the parents of the other children in my class share those convictions? Maybe not. Does the teacher support same-sex marriage? Maybe, maybe not. It doesn't matter, and it shouldn't matter. Taking the position that the teaching in favour of same-sex marriage should be mandatory is hateful. Requiring a child to learn that same-sex marriage is positive is hateful. Punishing someone for not wanting to teach or learn that same-sex marriage is positive is contrary to every principle of a free and democratic society. That's the issue we're debating today, not whether same-sex marriage is right or wrong, not whether it should or shouldn't be allowed.

Bill 208 addresses the deeper and more fundamental rights behind the issue, the rights that transcend boundaries of politics and religion. What the bill does is that it gives back to the individual the right to decide, without interference or sanction, whether they oppose or support same-sex marriage. Its purpose is to reinforce rights, not to take them away.

There is a lot of division over this issue. I think that a great deal of it comes from a sense of uncertainty. Those of us with strong religious convictions against same-sex marriage are becoming increasingly concerned with the possibility that we might one day be forced to accept a position that our religious beliefs do not allow us to. As a minister I'm especially concerned that a refusal to perform a marriage ceremony could result in legal repercussions or human rights complaints being levied against me. Bill 208 would protect me in this regard, and it would protect all religious officials and marriage commissioners who also don't agree with same-sex marriage on moral grounds.

Mr. Speaker, I make my beliefs public, and I share them with others. This is what a minister does. I do not, however, require my beliefs to be practised by those who don't agree with them. I don't force teachers to teach them in our schools. So should we have laws that make church attendance on Sunday mandatory? No. Alberta does not have the Lord's Day Act any longer. No, we don't because forcing a business to close on Sunday was seen as discriminatory on religious grounds. In the interests of fairness and freedom, the law makes no distinctions and leaves the choice to attend church or to open a business up to the individuals. But there are those who would refer to my beliefs as hate speech. I'm shocked and saddened by these comments. The promotion of hatred is disgusting, and it's one of the last things that I would ever do. I support the traditional definition of marriage. How is this hateful?

According to a 2005 Ipsos-Reid poll 56 per cent of Albertans opposed gay marriage. Does this mean that over half the people we interact with on a daily basis are hatemongers, that they should be open to the same sanctions as white supremacists and skinheads? Absolutely not. I would never promote hate against anyone, nor would any of my former parishioners or any of the other decent, hard-working Albertans it is my pleasure and honour to currently represent. Because we disagree with or don't celebrate an activity does not mean that we are hateful. Mr. Speaker, disagreement is the basis of democracy. Its presence is the sign of a healthy society. Its absence is the sign of tyranny, a tyranny that Bill 208 will prevent once and for all.

The pioneers who built this province came here from around the world. They fled persecution and war to make a new home where the principles of co-operation and peace were practised instead of just dreamed about. Today we enjoy an incredible diversity of ideas and culture, and Albertans would have it no other way. Mr. Speaker, I would have it no other way.

Our ancestors have fought and died to defend the freedoms that we take for granted: our freedoms to think, act, and believe what we want, our freedom to raise our children as we want, our freedom to worship the god of our choice and abide by his principles. Bill 208 guarantees these freedoms, and it does so without discrimination. It affirms the principles of religious freedoms set down by the federal Liberals in Bill C-38. It upholds section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantees the freedom of conscience and religion. It enshrines with legislation a concept that is integral to the health, diversity, and continued well-being of our society and the dignity of Albertans.

It is, in short, a bill that guarantees mutual respect. It allows individuals to address without fear of censure or reprisal a contentious issue according to their own moral beliefs. It will go a long away toward alleviating the fear, mistrust, and anger that have been so regrettably prevalent in the debate on same-sex marriage and will hopefully be accepted as a universal proposal that transcends party lines.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to give this bill my enthusiastic support, and I strongly urge every member of this Assembly to join me in doing so. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In speaking in second reading to Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, I first want to underline – I know there were notes coming from the sponsoring member: would members of this particular opposition caucus have a free vote? I want to underline again that in this Assembly for this caucus reaction to private members' bills is always a free vote. Always. So although I've heard one of my colleagues speak and I have a pretty good idea of how he might be voting on this, how other members of my caucus will be voting has not been discussed. We don't do that. It's a private member's bill. It's always a free vote.

I also note that we are working with a duty caucus today, so there may well be members who would wish to be in their place and are unable to be and have commitments in other places or perhaps are on their way back here and hoping to get here in time for a vote. I don't know. We're dealing with a duty caucus today.

What I see contemplated and somewhat laid out by the proposals in Bill 208 are competing or contradictory rights. I think we have to be very clear about our arguments here. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, all provinces signed onto the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as did this province. It voted and passed it and agreed to abide by what was set forth in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so we all signed onto this. I'm always saddened when I hear people somehow believing or putting out there that we had nothing to do with this. Well, we did. It was a Canadian venture, and we were all involved in it. Through our elected representatives, yes, indeed, but that's the way many of our laws are passed. There was certainly opportunity for people to give input as this was being debated across the country.

My interpretation of this is that we have one identifiable group that would like to have the right to have a certain group adhere to certain principles. They're looking for protection that takes them outside of what exists now. In my reading of it it appears to say: "We'd like the protection to be able to discriminate. We want to be able to say that our rights are above another group's rights." We try very hard in Canada not to do that. There's an old description of the law in which it says that my right to swing my arm around with a fist at the end of it ends at your nose. So what I choose to do in my sphere is acceptable, but it's not if I impose it onto you in a way that is particularly harmful or discriminatory.

That's what the Charter is trying to do: to set out where that inequality has historically been in our culture and to try and address that. I'll note that section 15(2) of the Charter goes – my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has already talked about section 15(1), in which the equality rights are laid out, that "every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination." Then it lists all of those that were specifically written in at the time this was passed in 1982. It came into effect in 1985. Since then, we have had other decisions that in fact write it in, so it doesn't appear here, but it has been written in and accepted that way.

I note that what we anticipated at the time was the attempt to right the wrongs that had gone before us. Thus you get 15(2), which says:

Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of,

and then we get the same list again, race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex [which includes sexual orientation], age or mental or physical disability.

So not only did we contemplate that we wished to structure a society in which everyone is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and benefit of the law, but we recognized that some groups historically had not, and we wished to correct that. We would allow groups that were there to ameliorate conditions to continue with their work.

What I see here is an argument that religious rights should trump the rights extended under section 15, and nothing in the Charter sets that out. No right is higher or lower than any other right. There is some distinguishing language that's used in the Charter. In some cases it speaks about every citizen, which is different from every person in the country. There are those kinds of distinctions, but at no place does it say: this group has more rights than the other group. The point of it was to try and achieve equality there.

What is interesting is that we have always upheld any faith community's ability to enforce their beliefs or tenets on their own members. For example, we have the Catholic faith, which does not believe in divorce or does not encourage that, and they are able to say to their own members: this is what we believe, and we will not give you a second marriage in our church; we choose not to do that. Now, that's fine. That's taking their religious beliefs and holding it inside of their church to their own community, but they cannot go further than that and say: no other person would be allowed to divorce and remarry. They hold that religious freedom inside of their religious community.

I've heard an argument this afternoon that somehow criticizing public policy is what is being promoted inside of this legislation. I would argue against that. Criticizing public policy is not the same as promoting unequal treatment, an attempt to limit the rights and privileges of any other identifiable group. Again, I'm back to the pitting of one set of rights above another. That is not what we have in the Charter.

It seems to me that we are mistaking religious freedoms and the protection of those religious freedoms and the ability to act out the beliefs of one's faith community as somehow being an override of all the laws of the land. In fact, they must all exist, somewhat uncomfortably I'll admit, but they must exist side by side.

When I actually look at what is being proposed in this bill, section 1 is amending the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. My colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has already spoken about that. Essentially, I see it as attempting to protect those groups who choose to provide unequal treatment to others. In other words, they choose to discriminate against others, and they wish protection in doing that. It's the absolute opposite of what is anticipated in the Charter under section 15(2). I don't believe in that, and I can't uphold it.

I think that part of what we need to do here is what I often do when I'm trying to figure something out to see whether it's fair or not or equal treatment or not. I'll often take another group and substitute them into there. If you take what's being put forward in this bill and substitute, for example, mixed race or people of different faiths becoming married, does this still read as a reasonable attempt to limit the freedom of others? I would say: no, it doesn't. At that point it becomes clear that this is a religious grouping that is trying to limit the powers and the privileges and the rights of another group of people based on very identifiable characteristics.

Section 2 of the bill is amending the Marriage Act, and it is proposing that a public servant, such as a marriage commissioner, would be allowed to refuse to solemnize a marriage. Again, we have to remember here that there is a separation of this. Not all clergy are automatically marriage commissioners, and not all marriage commissioners are members of a faith community. Certainly, within faith communities they are entitled to do as they need to with their own members but not to impose that on others.

Thank you for the opportunity. I will not be supporting this.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to join debate on Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act. I believe that in implementing this bill, we can ensure that Albertans' rights as enshrined in the Canadian Charter are further built upon and protected. Albertans' freedom of religion, freedom of conscience, and freedom of expression would be protected by the implementation of Bill 208.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in over a dozen years as an educator and administrator at each division level in various disciplines, including religious education, I've learned that the citizens of this province place a great deal of importance on our education system. Now, it's well recognized that parents are the primary educators in their children's lives, and their role is pivotal in their education. They choose what schools to send their children to. They choose whether to home-school their children, and they choose whether to place them in a private institution. Parents are to do what is in the best interests of their child, and they have the right – I'll repeat that; the right – to be informed regarding what their children are being taught in school. That allows them to be an active participant in their child's life, and it helps them to make good decisions with respect to determining the best course of action for their child. That is exactly what Bill 208 is designed to do.

The proposed modifications to the Alberta School Act would help support parents and students in ensuring that parents are notified that same-sex marriages and relationships will be discussed in the classroom, and it will provide students with the option to not attend a course when this is discussed. It would further ensure that students are not penalized if they don't attend, and it would make certain that no teacher shall be required to teach students about same-sex relationships. Thus the changes to the School Act as proposed in Bill 208 would serve to protect teachers as well.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a good bill. It will enhance the rights and freedoms of all Albertans. I think that it's imperative to stress the value of the proposed amendments to the School Act. This important aspect of the issue has the possibility for far-reaching consequences in the future.

Mr. Speaker, under the United Nations universal declaration of human rights, article 26(3), it explicitly states that parents have the "right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children." Under the United Nations declaration of the rights of the child, principle 7, paragraph 2, it's stated that "the best interests of the child shall be the guiding principle of those responsible [when it comes to] education and guidance." That responsibility lies first and foremost with their parents. In other words, a child's parents have the right to express what they believe to be in the best interests of their own child.

Our very own School Act agrees with this. It states in the preamble that, indeed, "parents have a right and a responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children." The involvement of parents in the life and education of their child helps ensure that the best possible choices are being made for the child. So parents need to be notified when same-sex relationships are going to be discussed in school so that they can be involved in the child's schooling and determine whether or not it would be beneficial for the child to attend such a discussion.

Mr. Speaker, parents have the right to teach their children their religious and moral values and the right to be notified when topics within the educational system, such as same-sex marriage, are not in line with such beliefs. Now, as a province we already allow for parental exemptions from human sexuality education. I can tell you that the process is that parents are notified that this content will be discussed as part of the child's curriculum in grades 4 through 9 and as part of the high school curriculum in career and life management courses. They're then given the option to have the child exempted from these discussions. So I ask then: why can we not do the same for discussions on same-sex relationships? Parents should be given notification that their children's curriculum will include discussions on such matters and then given the option to remove their child from such deliberations if they choose.

Now, I realize that at this time schools in Alberta are not covering same-sex marriage and sexual orientation as part of the curriculum. Even so, I think it's important that we add such provisions to the School Act now to ensure that in the future of our province we don't run into the same problems that other jurisdictions have.

Other members have mentioned, at least in passing, British Columbia with numerous and serious problems related to these issues. Just to give you a little background, Mr. Speaker, most of the independent schools in B.C. are actually considered religious institutions. They're publicly funded, and therefore they're required to follow the curriculum in B.C. Now, the B.C. Human Rights Tribunal at the present time is challenging the B.C. curriculum as it feels that the curriculum does not portray a positive view of those of a different sexual orientation. Apparently, it is not enough to simply refrain from discussing the issue or avoid negative portrayals. They feel that positive portrayals must be included in the curriculum. Some individuals feel that because these independent schools receive government funding, they should follow the decisions of the tribunal, whatever they happen to be. Now, I expect that all hon. members of this Legislature can appreciate the tension that such a state of events must produce. This is a situation that I would hope to avoid in Alberta by amending our School Act before such issues arise.

I know that teachers in B.C. are also feeling pressure in this climate. The example has been raised of Mr. Chris Kempling, a B.C. teacher and counsellor suspended twice, as a matter of fact, by the B.C. College of Teachers for expressing his thoughts on these issues. In 2001 he wrote to his local paper expressing his concern regarding health risks from teaching same-sex relationships in the school curriculum. In 2005 he was suspended a second time for testifying in the parliamentary hearings on Bill C-38, the federal government's bill changing the definition of marriage. I find this extremely unfortunate, and I hope that we can avoid that here with the implementation of this act.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not basing this argument on the experience of one person or one province. It has happened in other places, including Ontario, where activists for same-sex rights have actually lobbied the government to sever funding to private schools, including Catholic separate schools, which opt to not include discussions on same-sex marriage in curriculums. This is problematic and, again, can be avoided by explicitly simply stating in the School Act how teachers, parents, and children's rights will be protected by amending this legislation as well as by the implementation of the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure that the problems in B.C. and Ontario do not happen here. In amending the School Act, we protect students, parents, and teachers by ensuring that they're given due notification of same-sex marriage content within the curriculum and by granting the option to parents for their children to opt out of discussions.

Truly, it comes down to this. This is not about taking away people's rights. It's about protecting people's rights. The freedom of conscience, expression, and religion of all Albertans would be protected by Bill 208. Therefore, I'm proud to stand today to give my support for this bill, and I trust that other members of the Legislature will do the same.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pleasure and interest to speak on the bill for this afternoon, Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act. In my view this bill seeks to strengthen or change three areas. First of all, as the hon. member who brought forward this bill said in his first reading: "Mr. Speaker, the most important right in a free society is the right to disagree with and to criticize government policy. Bill 208 would strengthen this right." As well, this bill seeks to amend three other pieces of legislation: the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act as well as the Marriage Act and, finally, the School Act as well. So it's a very sweeping piece of legislation which crosses over to many areas of provincial jurisdiction, but also, I think, has some interference with federal jurisdiction of which I think we need to take note.

The School Act, in particular, is amended to allow for teachers to opt out of teaching curriculum that mentions same-sex marriage, to allow for students to not attend classes or courses where same-sex marriage is taught, and to require the school to notify parents if the same-sex curriculum is being taught. Finally, the last amendment, which I find certainly problematic and certainly on constitutional grounds may strike the other two amendments, but this one is otherwise certainly problematic.

Mr. Speaker, in 1929 Canada's highest court of appeal ruled that women were in fact included in the category of persons. Five Alberta women lead the charge, and this Legislature celebrates them today with displays throughout the visitors' centre. The Persons Case, as it became known, established that social definitions can and must change as society does. The fight for civil human rights for women was long and difficult and is ongoing here today. A similar fight for equal recognition of rights has been going on in Canada's gay and lesbian communities for quite some time now, and since the late 1990s a lot of progress has been made.

In April 1998 Alberta's Individual's Rights Protection Act was determined to include sexual orientation as prohibited grounds for discrimination. In January 2001 a pension plan decision recognized that same-sex couples must be recognized as full partners in claimant's benefits packages. In April 2001 the Intestate Succession Act was made to recognize same-sex partners inheritance rights. In December 2004 the Supreme Court of Canada recognized in its historical reference that same-sex couples could marry as marriage was the lawful union of two persons to the exclusion of all others. Finally, in June 2005 the Canadian Parliament voted for Bill C-38, which recognized same-sex marriage. This bill also recognized, on the advice of the Supreme Court, that religious officials would not be forced to perform same-sex marriages.

When Bill C-38 was voted in, only Alberta, Prince Edward Island, the Northwest Territories, and Nunavut had yet to recognize this right. Realizing that pursuing an article 33 Charter challenge was impossible, the Alberta government since July 20 of last year recognized the right of same-sex couples to marry. So here we are today. Life goes on just as it always has except that the lives of a marginalized group have been made more equal to the rest of the population by being accorded these rights that all heterosexual individuals in Alberta have fought for for so long and enjoyed exclusively.

The proposed amendments before the House today, I believe, are running in contravention to this movement towards equality, and we must identify each section for the problematic areas that it does identify.

First of all, in regard to human rights this bill is confusing, not the least of which by using Alberta's own human rights legislation to deny human rights by permitting discrimination. The amendments to our Marriage Act propose to allow marriage commissioners to refuse to marry same-sex couples while the proposed amendments to our human rights legislation would deny these same-sex couples the right to sue for discrimination.

While the wording of the human rights amendments may be read as attempting to narrow such discrimination to only those areas in respect to marriage between persons of the same sex, this could also be used to discriminate in other areas. This amendment is so broadly written that it includes everyone and everything. No organization or person is to be deprived of any benefits nor be subject to any sanction, based on the right to express and exercise their freedom of conscience or religion. This exercise could quite easily include denying services based on moral grounds. I find it quite ironic that the human rights prohibition against denying people's benefits could be used to do just that: deny people's benefits. While these amendments would not stand up, Mr. Speaker, to a Charter challenge, I find it remarkable that this bill is proposing to subject Albertans to such difficult and trying litigation just simply to try to regain the rights that are already awarded to them through our highest law, the Constitution, and upheld in our highest court, the Supreme Court.

The second category is, of course, in regard to marriage. We are certainly not as a caucus or, I think, anyone else here contesting the rights of religious figures in religious institutions to refuse to marry same-sex couples on religious or moral grounds. The Supreme Court has already pronounced itself in favour of clergy retaining that right to refuse such marriages. Rather, the attempt to include under such exemptions civil commissioners is what we are in fact opposed to. The Supreme Court decision and Bill C-38 both recognize the right of religious officials to refuse performing same-sex marriage, but neither extend this exemption to civil marriage commissioners. The House must not attempt to legislate around our highest courts and our highest law, and in fact to do so is merely spurious and otherwise will be struck down later.

Finally, the School Act. As ironic as using human rights law to deny human rights might be, this proposed amendment to the School Act seeks to include in the diversity in shared values section of the School Act, which upholds that all educational and instructional material must reflect the diversity of our society and honour and respect and promote that diversity, and is saying that teachers and students may not be subjected to material that "marriage may be a union between persons of the same sex." I find that difficult and, certainly, ironic to see placed in the inclusive and diversity promoting section of the School Act an amendment that means the denying the very spirit of the section which it's meant to amend.

Not only are these proposed amendments to the School Act difficult to accept and inherently discriminatory; they amount to a degree of censorship that would be very much impossible to administer. Given the broadly inclusive definition of what may be excluded from teaching, the amendment requiring that “where part of the curriculum . . . consists of teaching that marriage may be between persons of the same sex, the school must advise the parents . . . prior to the material being taught,” would be next to impossible to administer, Mr. Speaker, given the vagaries of teaching and the textbooks and the breadth of curriculum and whatnot. It certainly is problematic at best.

If the purpose of our education system is to prepare students for citizenship, I believe that we’re doing them a disservice by restricting their access to materials that reflect the diversity of our society and the diversity of social options available to our citizens. It is the mandate of parents to look after their children, to decide those things, and to enforce those values in their own children.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today as well and join the debate on Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. The issue of same-sex marriage is an important matter to many Canadians. It has inspired passionate debate from both proponents of the issue of same-sex marriage and its detractors alike. I strongly believe that it is in the best interest of this Assembly and of the electorate that we represent to engage in informed debate. With that said, I think that there are some general misconceptions regarding the intent of this bill that must be cleared up.

Bill 208 is not about limiting or taking away rights. It is about protecting and enhancing rights. Frankly, this bill is not even about same-sex marriage at all. It is about protecting existing freedoms. It is about protecting our fundamental rights to freedom of conscience, freedom of religion, and freedom of speech. It is about protecting parental input regarding the education received by their children. As a Christian, I believe very strongly in the traditional definition of marriage, the union of one man and one woman. The idea of homosexual marriage flies completely contrary to my religious and moral beliefs.

I have heard from many, many individuals in this matter, and I am confident that the majority of my constituents in Lacombe-Ponoka feel the same way. They’re disappointed and frustrated with the federal government’s decision to legalize same-sex marriage. But whether we like it or not, same-sex marriage is the law of the land in Canada. The definition of marriage falls within federal jurisdiction, and last year the federal government passed legislation, Bill C-38, the Civil Marriage Act, on the matter and effectively legalized same-sex marriages across the country.

Bill 208 will do nothing to change that. This legislation will not prevent the marriage of same-sex couples. It will, however, build on what the then Liberal federal government tried to do when they passed Bill C-38. It will protect existing freedoms that may be affected by the creation of the new right to gay marriage.

The federal government recognized some of the potential conflicts that may arise from the legalization of same-sex marriage and addressed them in their legislation. C-38 originally included provisions to protect religious officials from being forced to perform marriage ceremonies for same-sex couples, to protect marriage commissioners from losing their jobs for refusing to perform same-sex marriages, and to protect the freedom of individuals to speak out against homosexual marriage. However, in the Supreme Court’s ruling on the issue of same-sex marriage our high court indicated that several areas relevant to the protection of certain rights included in the federal legislation, the rights addressed in Bill 208, fall under the jurisdiction of the provinces. Because of this, the federal government was forced to remove these protections from the text of the act over to the preamble of the act, where they do not carry the force of law.

Bill 208 simply mirrors the provisions that the federal Liberals included in Bill C-38 that were ruled to fall under the domain of the provinces. In fact, the wording of the pertinent portions of the two pieces of legislation is almost identical.

One important part of Bill 208 is the proposed amendment to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. The amendment would unambiguously protect the freedoms of conscience and religion as specified under section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Bill of Rights. The amendment to the act, the addition of section 11.1, would protect individuals or organizations who expressed their views based on freedom of conscience or religion contrary to gay marriage or in favour of the traditional definition of marriage and family values. This would protect Albertans’ democratic right to free speech.

This is one of the fundamental freedoms necessary to any strong democracy as a healthy democracy thrives on the dissenting opinions and informed debate of its citizenry. Shutting down one side of the debate on an issue is undemocratic and un-Canadian. Currently, that is exactly what is happening to individuals who speak out against a same-sex marriage. As other members of this Assembly have illustrated previously during the course of this debate, individuals who speak out against gay marriage or the homosexual lifestyle for religious reasons have been faced with charges of discrimination in several Canadian jurisdictions, including right here in Alberta. This is precisely why these protections are necessary.

As other members have highlighted, the protection of religious officials and marriage commissioners is also necessary. Currently individuals in other jurisdictions are facing negative repercussions for refusing to perform same-sex marriages, that are contrary to their religious beliefs or moral values. We must ensure that their rights are also protected. Bill 208 would amend the Marriage Act to do just that by allowing members of the clergy or marriage commissioners the right to refuse to solemnize marriages that are not in accordance with their religious or moral practices without the fear of negative reprisal.

Mr. Speaker, I’m also pleased to see the inclusion of the amendments to the School Act in this legislation. It is important and necessary for parents to take an active role in the education of their children. The provisions regarding the School Act contained in Bill 208 would mandate the prior notification of parents and students when material pertaining to same-sex marriage is to be included as part of a course’s curriculum and allow students and teachers the option of opting out of attending or teaching courses containing such material without penalty. This opt-out arrangement would be similar to the existing provision regarding sexual education in Alberta. I think it is important for children and teachers to be free of coercion and to not be forced to learn or teach subject matter that is contrary to their moral or religious principles.

As a parent and as a Christian I believe that these protections are essential. My wife and I have taken our right and responsibility to make decisions regarding our children’s education very seriously. Our four children grew up in a Christian household, and we made the decision to send them to independent Christian schools that reflect the values and beliefs important to our family.

Mr. Speaker, the protections included in Bill 208 are of vital importance in guarding the freedoms of Albertans. The right to free speech and expression, freedom of religion, and freedom of conscience are an essential part of our identity as Canadians and Albertans. It is important to ensure that these pre-existing rights are not eroded by inclusion of new rights.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to thank the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View for sponsoring this thoughtful piece of legislation. This moderate, well-reasoned legislation is designed to protect our fundamental freedoms. Because of this, I'll be voting in favour of Bill 208, and I urge the rest of this Assembly to see its passage through second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I realize that there are a number of members who wish to participate in this debate. Therefore, I'll keep my comments uncharacteristically brief.

It is said that politics and religion, like oil and water, don't mix. I disagree. Both our religious or agnostic and political beliefs underlie and guide our actions. Inclusion is an extremely important tenet of both my faith and political views. While I was raised in the Christian faith, the god to whom I swear allegiance goes by a variety of interchangeable names: Allah, Yahweh, Krishna, Manitou, Buddha. Regardless of the creator's name or the follower's religious affiliation, at the heart of all religions are the guiding principles of love and acceptance, universally expressed as the golden rule of do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

As a child in Sunday school I heard frequently the participation plea, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." There wasn't an accompanying list of disqualifiers or restricters as to which children were welcome or under what conditions. Bill 208, I believe, speaks more to rejection than acceptance. It seeks to build walls and barriers rather than tearing them down. I am opposed to exclusivity which claims that certain people's secular or religious priorities are more important than others. I believe that Bill 208, rather than enshrining and protecting universal rights, is very selective of which rights will be protected.

I am opposed to Bill 208.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View. We are fortunate to live in a country where we are afforded certain rights by virtue of being Canadian. We are free to live our lives in accordance with the faith of our choosing. We are guaranteed the right to live our lives free of discrimination. We are free to speak out against government policy that we disagree with.

These fundamental rights are enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and are a significant element of our identity as a nation. These freedoms are an important symbol of what it means to be Canadian. They are a primary tenet of our strong democracy and represent the importance of respect for both the individual and society. These rights allow us as individuals to go about our lives with dignity and self-respect.

Balancing the competing rights of individuals or groups is often an arduous task for legislators and the judiciary alike. The guaranteed freedoms of one person or group are often in conflict with the freedoms of another. For example, freedom of religion also means freedom from religion. Free press often conflicts with personal privacy.

The legalization of same-sex marriage offers a vivid illustration of conflicting freedoms. The creation of a new right for members of the same sex to marry has strained other pre-existing rights, including freedom of expression, freedom of religion, and freedom of conscience. Mr. Speaker, while it pains me to speak about the federal Liberals in a positive light, it must be said that they actually did a pretty good job of recognizing these conflicts. They included in the federal legislation that legalized gay marriage, provisions that would address the tension of conflicting freedoms and protect certain pre-existing rights affected by the legalization of same-sex marriage. In its decision on the matter, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that several of these protections fall under provincial jurisdiction and that those sections of the federal legislation do not carry the force of the law. Bill 208 simply does what the federal government intended and fills the jurisdictional gaps noted by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 is comprehensive and well-thought-out legislation designed to protect the rights of individuals and groups that may be affected by the legalization of same-sex marriage. The scope of this private member's bill is fairly broad, proposing amendments to three separate pieces of legislation: the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, the Marriage Act, and the School Act. Each of the amendments will entrench legal protection of specific fundamental freedoms that could be adversely affected by the legalization of homosexual marriage. While the definition of marriage falls under the federal authority, the solemnization of unions is within the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is the responsibility of the province to take into account how the legalization of marriage of same-sex couples would affect marriage commissioners and religious officials and act to ensure that their rights are not eroded.

It is our responsibility to make certain that the proper balance is struck between the rights of homosexual couples and the rights of the clergy and marriage commissioners in matters pertaining to the solemnization of same-sex unions. If a marriage commissioner or a priest is forced by law to solemnize a union that is contrary to his religious beliefs, then his fundamental right of freedom of religion and conscience has obviously been compromised. Does this sound like an adequate balance for all parties involved, Mr. Speaker? No, it does not. Bill 208 seeks to rectify this problem. Alberta's Marriage Act would be amended to allow religious officials and marriage commissioners the right to refuse to solemnize the marriage of same-sex couples if to do so would be contrary to their religious or moral beliefs. Additionally, they would be able to do so without the fear of prosecution or persecution.

It must be stressed that no one's rights will be diminished or removed by such a provision. This will not take away from the ability of same-sex couples to wed. They will still be able to find other marriage commissioners or religious officials whose personal, religious, or moral beliefs would not compromise their ability to solemnize such unions, but it would better protect the rights of other affected individuals.

Bill 208 also includes amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act that would serve to preserve and enhance existing rights of individuals to free speech, thought, and expression regarding the issue of same-sex marriage as well as freedom of religion and conscience. This would protect individuals from facing human rights complaints for espousing the views of the Catholic church or speaking out against the legalization of same-sex marriage. Some may argue that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms already offers these protections, but Bishop Fred Henry from Calgary may beg to differ. Bishop Henry has been charged with so-called hate speech for espousing the views of the Catholic church and speaking out against the legalization of same-sex marriage not only once but twice. Mr. Speaker, I'm as Protestant as they come, but I find this absolutely abhorrent.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that the proposed amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act would also explicitly enshrine the rights of same-sex couples in provincial legislation. The beginning of the proposed section 11.1 reads:

No person or organization shall be deprived of any benefit, or be subject to any obligation or sanction, under this or any law of Alberta, solely by reason of their exercise, in respect of marriage between persons of the same sex.

Again, this amendment would not weaken or eliminate anyone's rights or freedoms. It would fairly balance conflicting freedoms by legislating for clarity the protection of existing freedoms and the protection of the new freedoms created for homosexual couples by the federal legalization of marriage.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will also amend the School Act for further clarity to ensure the explicit protection of conscience, religion, and expression in our schools. Bill 208 would allow teachers and students to opt out of portions of courses related to the teaching of same-sex marriage without penalty, much like the opt-out provision in place for sexual education. Also, the amendment would make it necessary for students and parents to be informed in advance prior to the teaching of material regarding same-sex marriage. These provisions recognize the importance of parental involvement in a child's education and that some families may wish to address certain sensitive topics in their own homes in accordance with their personal religious and moral beliefs.

I have heard from many Albertans on this matter, and many of my constituents are concerned about the legalization of same-sex marriage. Many are concerned about how their existing rights will be affected. These are serious concerns that need to be addressed in a thorough and considerate manner. When granting new freedoms, it is also important to protect and preserve the existing fundamental freedoms that are essential to our identity as Albertans. That is the very purpose of this legislation, Mr. Speaker. This bill truly would protect and enhance the rights of all Albertans regardless of sexual orientation or religious affiliation.

I am most pleased to support Bill 208 and urge the other members of this Assembly to do so as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find myself in a curious position here in a couple of senses in that on Sunday, June 11, the annual Pride parade will take place in Calgary. I've been asked to take part, which I normally would be quite willing to do except that I have a previous commitment that day. I will be at church helping in the dedication of our new sanctuary, so I won't be taking part. That's on a very person level.

On a more general level I see the merit in a number of points made in Bill 208, yet when I take Bill 208 in total, I see that the whole is more than the sum of its parts. It goes too far, in my view, in my reading of it. Rather than merely enshrining and protecting everybody's right to be everybody that they are and believe everything that they believe and swing their arms without hitting the guy next to them, as my colleague for Edmonton-Centre put it a few minutes ago, I believe from my reading of this that this, in fact, will create a situation that will get in the way of other people's rights, and I don't think we need to go there.

You know, I might be prepared to support Bill 208 if it were amended or if certain clauses were taken out or if certain things were rewritten, and, you know, I suspect that what we're really going to need here is a rewrite of the bill in order for me to support it. But I can't support it in the fashion in which it stands because it does go too far, and I'll give you a couple of examples of that. For one, the issue of amending the Marriage Act to allow religious officials and marriage commissioners to refuse to solemnize a marriage where the marriage is between two persons of the same sex if solemnizing that marriage would violate the person's religious or moral beliefs.

You know, I think the Supreme Court made it pretty clear in its ruling that the right of a same-sex couple to be married in this country did not extend to religious groups that oppose this very notion because of their particular religious beliefs, and I think the Supreme Court made it very clear that if a church or a synagogue or a mosque elected not to perform same-sex marriages, they were absolutely within their rights to do that.

Now, I happen to consider myself a Christian, and I happen to consider, by the way, that there is a much broader scope of Christianity and definition of the term Christian than is sometimes applied when people stand up and identify themselves as Christian. I'm a Christian that belongs to a Christian church that does perform same-sex marriages from time to time. That's left up to individual congregations, individual churches to decide. Not every church in my denomination will perform same-sex marriages. Some will; some will not. That should be their choice. The Supreme Court allows them to make that choice, just as it would allow an entire denomination, an entire faith group to make the decision, if it so wished, that it was not going to perform same-sex marriage. I support that utterly. The rights of some should not trample on the rights of others. But that street goes both ways.

Where I have a problem with this – and it's a huge problem – is the fact that along with allegedly taking steps to ensure that here in the province of Alberta what the Supreme Court said really stands, we've included marriage commissioners. Marriage commissioners are not priests. They're not ministers. They're not pastors. They're not rabbis. They're not imams. They are provincial agents, provincial civil servants, employees, in essence, of the government of Alberta. While I will defend to my death the right of a minister or a rabbi or a priest or any other man or woman of the cloth to refuse to marry Adam and Steve or Liz and Joan because it goes against his or her religious beliefs or the beliefs of his or her faith community, I will not support the right of what I see as essentially a government employee to duck out of doing their job, doing the job that their employer tells them to do, because they don't happen to agree with that part of it.

That's not in the employment contract the way I see it. It's not in the employment contract for anybody. If you work for a company that asks you to do something that you have a problem with, as long as it's not something that they're asking you to do that is blatantly illegal or unethical, but you've just got a problem with it because of your own belief system, then, you know, to quote so many free enterprisers: find another job. Gosh knows we spend enough time in this House talking about how easy that is in Alberta because there's such a labour shortage that crosses all fields of endeavour these days.

So I've got a problem with the fact that this bill would amend the Marriage Act in such a way as to extend to marriage commissioners the right to refuse to perform a marriage of a same-sex couple. Federal legislation I think was very clear although it does get a little muddied when you go to the application province by province of the federal right to decide who gets married and you try to put that against the provincial right to decide what the ceremony is going to look like. But I think it's pretty clear in this case that federal law would be supreme, and if the feds say that same-sex couples can get married in a civil ceremony, then it's pretty clear that it's up to marriage commissioners, who are provincially appointed and anointed, to perform those ceremonies.

Much the same argument I would make has to do with the School Act amendment, that would allow students and teachers to opt out of attending or teaching any part of a course that references that marriage may be between persons of the same sex. It also has provisions for notification of parents if such curriculum is being taught. As well, students and teachers cannot be penalized for not attending or teaching that part of a course that references that marriage may be between persons of the same sex.

Well, methinks the lady or the man or two men and two ladies or, you know, one of each protests too much in this case. I mean, gosh, I've had two kids come through the public school system, and the sex education of any description that they have gotten since they entered grade 4 has been pretty minimal. We've signed them up for every course every year, but there's just not a lot of sex education that happens within the public school system in the province of Alberta. That goes even though we are one of the better provinces at tackling the issue. But we still like to dance around the issues. We like to avoid talking about the elephant in the room whenever we can when it comes to sex education. We do allow parents to opt their children out of taking sex education. We already do that.

No teacher – no teacher – is going to be forced by their principal in the public school system to go down a road that they are personally uncomfortable with when it comes to talking about sex education. A principal that I know recently said to me that you can always find somebody else in the school. If that particular teacher has a problem with teaching that particular part of the sex education curriculum, you can always find somebody else who won't have a problem with it and will step up to the plate on that issue. Sometimes it's the school nurse, where the school nurse is available. You know, what we really ought to be aiming at here is generally elevating the level and the amount of sex education in our public school systems in any event.

I could, I think, support this if it focused exclusively on teachers in faith-based private schools, but again it doesn't. It crosses over, in my reading of this, to the public school system, and I don't think that we should be catching up public school teachers, who are, again, employees of the state ultimately, in any measure that we would seek to take to protect the religious rights and freedoms of people and faith-based organizations within the context of this issue.

Those are my remarks. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not be supporting Bill 208 in its current form.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand before you and the entire Assembly and join the debate on Bill 208, the Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. I certainly appreciate the insight and thoughts that have been shared by my colleagues here today. I'd like to take a moment to recognize the courage and judgment of the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, who's brought this legislation forward.

Having the strength and determination to approach controversial subjects is truly important for any government. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of this topic both inside and outside of this Assembly has been quite passionate. Having an issue or a piece of legislation conjure up strong feelings and opinions is not a bad thing. It simply shows that the situation needs our attention.

The concept of ensuring that the rights afforded to same-sex marriage will not infringe upon the rights and freedoms of those who disagree with same-sex marriage is not a groundbreaking idea. In fact, it was first included as part of Bill C-38 by the same federal government that legalized same-sex marriage in Canada. While Parliament wanted to act on this front, they were unable to do so because of jurisdictional issues. The Supreme Court determined that certain matters pertaining to the protection of rights were to be addressed by the provinces. That's why Bill 208 has been brought before us in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

This is not an act of defiance against the federal government, and it is in no way a tool to deconstruct the rights of same-sex couples to wed. Mr. Speaker, this may come as a surprise to many people who view our province as, shall I say, less forward thinking. However, just as the economy of our province has shown the ingenuity of our citizens, so too does our legislation.

The controversy of same-sex marriage has received a lot of attention in the recent past. Now it seems as if most of the comments surrounding it are whispered by many and addressed by few. There remains a definite split in Alberta regarding the views of our citizens on the issue of same-sex marriage. Rather than cause further division, this bill takes steps to mend the situation. The proposed Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, gives Albertans the protection of rights they deserve regardless of religious affiliation or sexual orientation.

Mr. Speaker, in particular it is worth pointing to the wording of section 11.1, which, if passed, would markedly strengthen the rights of same-sex couples while protecting the religious freedom of others. By entrenching these rights, we are giving Albertans the opportunity to be free to do as they choose in terms of marriage and religious practices. To me, this is a true example of multiculturalism, a concept which the entire country is built upon.

The policy of multiculturalism in Canada is meant to protect the identities and ancestry of all our citizens. It is on this belief that I base my stand in support of Bill 208. Just as those who believe in the right of same-sex marriage should be entitled to that right, those who choose to uphold their religious beliefs should be able to exercise their faith. The protection and enhancement of religious rights are important to me on a personal level, and I know that many Albertans share my sentiments.

Mr. Speaker, to better illustrate the purpose of Bill 208, I would like to use a valid example from our neighbouring province to the west. In British Columbia a lesbian couple entered into an agreement to rent a hall from a Knights of Columbus organization. When the Knights were later informed that the facility was to be used to permit a same-sex marriage ceremony, they proceeded to cancel the contract. This action was seen as unjust by the couple, and as a result, they filed a human rights complaint against the Knights of Columbus.

While some of you may already be familiar with these events, I wanted to bring it to the attention of the Assembly because it clearly shows why this bill is needed. The same-sex couple who wished to be married legally had the right to do so. The couple also had the right to celebrate the occasion with their friends, family, and community through a ceremony and gathering of their choice. It is also the right of the Knights of Columbus to deny the request of the couple to hold the wedding service in their facility. This is not because of a personal vendetta the organization holds or its desire to persecute or discriminate against the couple. They had the right to cancel the contract for the wedding because same-sex marriage goes against the religion the organization represents.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a case where one board member or one

Knights group decided to fight something without grounds. The religion in which the Knights of Columbus believe is openly and clearly against same-sex marriage. By denying the use of their hall for the performing of the couple's marriage ceremony, they are simply acting in accordance with their long-standing faith and moral beliefs. It's also worth pointing out that to my knowledge the couple in question were not abused in any way by the Knights of Columbus.

Bill 208 is not calling for the protection of those who want to act maliciously towards people partaking in same-sex marriage. In fact, by entrenching the rights of same-sex couples, it is ensuring that this does not occur. By giving religious organizations the choice to opt out of the dealings of same-sex marriage, we're not saying that such places should slam the door in the faces of these couples. Instead, it would be great to see organizations and people who feel that they cannot be a part of the marriage of two people of the same sex sharing information on alternative venues and service providers who would partake in the event.

The fact that cases involving same-sex marriage can and will continue to be brought before courts is also an important aspect to discuss in relation to Bill 208. It is my understanding that Bill 208 will provide some much-needed clarification in terms of the rights of our citizens. Legislation that sets out parameters and clearly defines rights that reflect beliefs and wishes is needed now more than ever. With more and more issues being decided by our courts, it's about time that we stepped up to the plate as the legislators of our province. The people of this province do not choose us to serve them because they want us to sit idle; they've put their power into our hands so that we can make laws and regulations that support what they believe in as Albertans.

Standing by as our courts become the creators of quasi-legislation is a failure of our mandate as members of the Assembly of this province. The courts have and will continue to have their place in ensuring that we are not abusing our powers; however, they are not designated to replace us.

As an MLA I have tried my very best to determine what my constituents want. I've also listened with open ears to what I've heard outside of my riding and in this Assembly. Taking all of this into account, I firmly believe that supporting Bill 208 is the right thing for Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a true privilege to be able to stand up this afternoon to discuss Bill 208. I thank the member for bringing forward this private member's bill. It's a very critical one. There have been some excellent points brought forward from both sides, and I hope that we can continue to learn and discuss and that as legislators we'll be able to pass this bill because it will be for our benefit and the future benefit of Albertans. I'm going to go on a little bit of a different tangent because many different things have already been discussed. We don't need to be repetitive, and I know that there are other people who want to speak.

It's very sad when we look back in history and we see the discrimination and the different injustices that have occurred in the past. We have tried as legislators to correct that whether it's internment from war, whether it's suffrage, or whether it's the homosexual persecution that has gone on. The way that they have been treated in the past, there's no question that as we look back, we can see the injustices that have occurred. What we're trying to do is to balance those out and see that we live in a just society, one where we're all protected equally under the law.

This bill being brought forth is trying to tip back the scales again because so often when we get something out of balance, as it was in the past, we overcorrect, and it's out of balance. I see Bill 208 as a balancing bill, one that will bring justice back in and yet protect our rights, which is what we're trying to do here in the province. As is so eloquently put out, we don't want to chase around in a circle. It has been cut in half, and the provincial area now needs to be balanced so that we have that.

There are many issues when it comes to religious freedoms under section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We need to realize that religious freedoms are critical to the prosperity, the freedom, the happiness, and the peace that has gone on here in this province. In order to continue with that, we must recognize religious freedoms and realize the benefit of the diverse religious beliefs in this country and how we can and should get along as opposed to religious countries and their oppression against other freedoms and, specifically, religions.

I want to give a few examples. One, if a person's religion does not allow him to eat pork, does that mean, because we've given him the permission to have a store, that I can go in there and demand that I want pork, and this person has to bring it in so I can buy it because that's the closest store? No. He has that religious right to not bring in those things. Perhaps he doesn't like cigarettes though it's a legal substance. We cannot pass a law that, if people with religious beliefs don't want to promote these things, says: "No, it's the law. It's legal. You have to have it."

The current situation is very much such that religious persecution is taking place again, and it has been mentioned many times. Bishop Fred Henry has been taking the frontal attack on this, trying to protect the religious rights, so this is an area that we desperately need to look at and address in order to help those religious leaders who are trying to teach and share the value with their flock. They're not allowed to have freedom of expression as has been brought out by both sides of this argument. We need to take a calming look and realize that there isn't freedom of expression on both sides with the current bill or with Bill C-38 at the federal level. Like I say, we need to balance that out.

It's been brought up many times about the rights of parents to teach our children their religious rights, their values, and their principles. Once again, this bill will work on allowing parents to have that right again. There are many cases. I don't believe the case in Massachusetts has been brought up yet. A father of a kindergarten student wants to take his son out of that, and the Massachusetts courts have said, no, he has to be there, and they've banned the father from coming onto school property. So there's no question that this discrimination is taking place now on the other side, and it's critical that we balance this scale.

This is an excellent first step that needs to be taken to rebalance that scale, but there's still the question on the publishing of religious thoughts, as Bishop Henry has, that I'm not sure this bill protects. That would be another area that I feel we'd need to go forward and look at. I don't know that this bill gives protection to churches or societies, as was being mentioned, that don't want those activities going on there. It still is possible to sue them.

Back in the spring of 2002, with the Durham Catholic district school board in Ontario, they ruled there that that student was allowed to bring his boyfriend to the prom in contradiction of their religious beliefs.

There's no question that there are many, many examples to show us that justice is not being served again, that there is an imbalance of the scales, and it is the provincial jurisdiction to see that we balance these things out.

I would like to specifically thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this bill forward so that we can have this debate. We can continue to learn, to study, and to understand the problems so that both sides can be protected and that we can benefit here in Alberta to continue with our freedoms and to go forward.

In conclusion, what I feel is most important is that we take a look at Bill 208, read it for what it is, and realize that this is a balancing bill, one that will protect rights here in Alberta. Albertans want this bill. There's no question. The people that I represent have been very forthright in coming forward and telling me that they're very nervous about their religious freedoms and their beliefs and that this is a good balancing bill.

I'll very much be supporting this. Thanks once again to the member for bringing this forward.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View to close debate.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the proposed bill once again and conclude this afternoon's debate. I'd like to thank all of the colleagues here who've provided thoughtful and constructive criticism of Bill 208. I understood most of the speakers on our side and the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to support the goals of Bill 208 but perhaps suggested better ways to that end. In terms of criticisms from my friends to the left here: why is this necessary if the Charter is already there? Well, it's for the same reasons that your federal friends thought it was necessary. It's a question of balancing rights as so many other speakers have pointed out. The question of interpreting the Charter and balancing rights is not a monopoly of judges. All the leading constitutional scholars in Canada talk about Charter dialogue and a shared responsibility between Legislatures and judges to both take responsibility in saying what rights mean and, also, how they should be balanced. This is clearly a question, Mr. Speaker, of balancing rights.

The hon. members for Edmonton-Glenora and Edmonton-Centre showed the usual Liberal proclivity for running off to the courts and trying to suggest that Alberta would be better governed by courts in Ottawa than by their own people here. I was also a bit curious to hear the recommendation that we should adopt the Ontario legislation that's been passed in that jurisdiction. I'll be eager to see the Liberal Party campaign in the next election on the platform of deleting the words "mother" and father" and "husband and wife" from the statutes of Alberta. Good luck. This is Alberta, not Ontario.

There was some serious concern that I'd like to address that was brought up both by the Member for Highwood and also the Member for Calgary-Currie, a question that perhaps Bill 208 is overbroad in the sense that it attempts to deal with three different statutes. It may well be that the amendment to the human rights act, which is the first section of my bill, is sufficient to achieve these objectives in the sense that it applies its rights protections to itself and the wording of that amendment is "any [other] law of Alberta." Obviously, any other law of Alberta includes both the Marriage Act and the School Act. I would suggest that this is something we could pursue in Committee of the Whole.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all the members for their thoughtful criticisms. There may well be a better way to achieve these same ends. I look forward to discussing alternatives during Committee of the Whole, and I will be supportive of constructive amendments to address these concerns. With this in mind, I'd ask everybody here today to support Bill 208.

I now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour, I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:26 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Fixed Election Dates

508. Dr. Morton moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring fixed election dates every four years or whenever the government loses the confidence of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured this evening to open debate on Motion 508, fixed election dates. A healthy democracy is a vital source of our national well-being. The accountability of the government to the people directly contributes to both our prosperity and our freedom. Democratic elections and responsible government are tools of the people and for the people. It is of paramount importance that our citizens have confidence in and participate in these institutions.

While our current parliamentary system has served us well, we must recognize that the signs of democracy in Canada and Alberta are ailing. Voter apathy and cynicism are becoming more common. Each election seems to bring about further decreases in voter turnout and greater disinterest in the political process. Voters are becoming frustrated with our democratic process and more and more cynical towards politics and politicians. While there is no single cause of this negative trend, a significant factor is the absolute discretion of the government of the day and specifically the Prime Minister or Premier to call elections whenever they judge it to be in the best interest not of the province or the country but of their own government.

Currently in Alberta provincial elections are triggered when the Lieutenant Governor dissolves the Legislative Assembly at the instruction of the Premier. Section 3(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act directs that "no Legislative Assembly shall continue for [more] than 5 years from the date" of the last election. However, the exact timing of an election is at the discretion of the Premier. Essentially, the current practice allows the government to call an election whenever it believes it has the best chance of winning based on economic and political considerations. Considerations of fairness and the public interest have no place in this calculus. The decisive factor and indeed the only factor is the naked partisan self-interest of the government of the day.

In just the past decade at the federal level Canadians have been forced to put up with this contempt for democracy on three different occasions. The recent Liberal government of Jean Chretien twice called elections only three and a half years into five-year mandates, the second one only months after the creation of the new Canadian Alliance party. The Liberal government of Paul Martin did the same thing in 2004, calling an election only months after the merger of the Canadian Alliance and the Progressive Conservative parties and before the new party could have its first convention. No wonder Canadians have become cynical about this process.

So it comes as no great surprise that one of the first acts of the newly elected Conservative government of Prime Minister Stephen

Harper has been to propose legislation that would establish fixed election dates for federal elections and put an end once and for all to this sort of partisan trickery.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 proposes a similar solution for Alberta. Motion 508 urges the government to implement fixed election dates. A fixed election date can be defined as a recurring set date or time frame in which general elections are held. This motion proposes that general provincial elections be held "every four years or whenever the government loses the confidence of the Assembly." This is what's called a flexible fixed system, and it would allow us to protect our parliamentary tradition while still realizing the advantages of fixed election dates.

Mr. Speaker, there are many recognized benefits that would accompany the implementation of fixed election dates. First and foremost, it would promote fairness. All parties and all candidates would be on an equal footing as far as prior knowledge of election dates is concerned. All political parties and all candidates would have the same opportunity and the same time to develop better considered and stronger policies to present to the voters.

Set, stable election dates would also contribute to administrative efficiency. Elections Alberta would be able to prepare in advance if it were to have prior knowledge of the precise date or time frame when a general election would take place. This increased administrative efficiency could extend to the government as a whole and contribute to more effective, efficient, and open governance. Set time frames would facilitate a predictable planning and budgeting process and thus a better use of government resources and thus taxpayer dollars.

Mr. Speaker, a less obvious but, in my opinion, highly important benefit of fixed election dates would be to facilitate the recruitment of a more qualified and more diverse set of candidates for public office. The current system deters successful mid-career men and women from considering public service as an elected candidate. With unpredictable elections and candidate nominations often taking place in mid-summer with only several weeks' notice, potential candidates have no opportunity to discuss possible career changes with their spouses or business associates. Fixed election dates would change all of this. Everyone would know in advance and could plan accordingly.

Fixed election dates would also facilitate greater civic engagement in our province. Voters, teachers, educators, and the media would benefit from the extended preparation time that would accompany fixed election dates. This could contribute to more informed debate and also to increased volunteerism. By consulting with Albertans and selecting a specified, consistent time frame that minimizes seasonal constraints, voters could be better able to plan in advance for provincial elections, thus resulting in increased voter turnout as well.

Mr. Speaker, the introduction of fixed election dates into our system of parliamentary democracy is not a new concept. In fact, it has become increasingly popular across our great country. It is a democratic reform that has been discussed and even implemented in several other Canadian jurisdictions. British Columbia was the first province to pass legislation mandating fixed election dates, in 2002, and last May, of 2005, B.C. voters took part in Canada's first ever provincial election occurring on a date set by law. Newfoundland and Ontario have also passed legislation mandating fixed election dates, and the first such elections for both jurisdictions are set to be held in October of 2007. As I noted earlier, Prime Minister Stephen Harper and his newly elected Conservative government in Ottawa have also committed to implementing this reform at the federal level.

One need look no further than Alberta's own history to see the benefits of fixed election dates. Since 1983 municipalities in Alberta have held fixed-term elections. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that now is the time for members of this Assembly to engage in democratic reform and democratic renewal. Voter cynicism is at an all-time high, and voter turnout is at an all-time low. At a time when demands for democratic reform and enhanced accountability are growing across Canada, the government of Alberta could and should consider ways to address the democratic deficit. Indeed, Alberta should be a leader.

As we begin our second century now as one of the most important members of the Canadian Confederation, we should put partisanship aside for a moment. Who knows which party will govern Alberta 50 years from now? Indeed, who knows what political parties will even exist in 50 years? Here is an opportunity to do not just what is good for the party but what is good for the province and not just what is good for the next election but what is good for the next century.

After the Liberal sponsorship scandal in Quebec and the sordid backroom dealings uncovered by the Gomery commission, Canadians and Albertans want more accountability and more honesty in government, in all governments. Albertans have a right to expect a best-practices regime, and we in this Assembly have the duty to deliver it. Mr. Speaker, fixed election dates would be one important step in this direction, and I ask all members of the Assembly this evening to support Motion 508.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to propose an amendment to Motion 508, and I have the required number of copies here. Can I read it now? I want to amend Motion 508 by striking out "to introduce legislation requiring fixed election dates every four years or whenever the government loses the confidence of the Assembly" and substituting "to initiate a process to study the benefits and disadvantages of implementing fixed election dates with the intention of introducing legislation based on the recommendations arising from that study."

Mr. Speaker, I think I heard the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View talk about consulting with Albertans, and that, in fact, is what this amendment would do. Not only do I not disagree with the hon. member's premise that it is a timely topic and, I think, one with much interest, but I agree with nearly everything he said. I especially agree with the part that says that we need to consult with Albertans and understand how they want to approach this.

Mr. Speaker, P.E.I. just went through a referendum of sorts with their voters talking not only about maybe fixed dates but a blended proportional representation system. I think the government felt very strongly that this was good, but the people turned it down very strongly, so we aren't always in touch with how they want us to approach this. I believe that when British Columbia talked about the idea of fixed dates, they had a coalition of citizens set up to debate it and talk about it and take it around the province. I think that people felt involved then, and I think it worked very well, but I'm not exactly sure that term limits may be the answer to voter apathy. As the hon. member mentioned, municipal governments have been on fixed election dates for quite some time, and I would suggest that voter apathy in our municipalities is even worse than in the provincial government elections or federal elections. So I'm not sure that's the answer to voter apathy. I think that maybe getting in touch with the voters and engaging them will probably bring back their participation.

I'm also concerned, Mr. Speaker, that if we set our dates too restrictively, when we coincide with municipal election years or when we happen upon the same time as a federal election, we may, you know, kind of upset the apple cart from an unplanned thing, so we need to talk about that. Maybe a four-year term, a four-year term, and then a five-year term to get away from the municipal government. I don't know, but I think the citizens will tell us.

Mr. Speaker, I know it's not the case with the hon. member now, but it normally seems that opposition parties or parties that have lost an election often try to scramble for excuses about why they didn't get more seats. Quite honestly, everybody runs under the same rules. First past the post might not be perfect, but it is the same for all parties.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Assembly will give kind consideration to the amendment because I think it is important to get out and talk with Albertans. I know that many American states have gone to term limits, which seems to be the next flavour of the day around election changes, and I can tell you from many people down there that they feel that term limits have handcuffed electors. They may get elected in their first two years and be dealt out the second term. They may even get a committee chair. In their third term they may become quite influential, but in the fourth term the administration knows that their time is nearly done and they can ignore them without regard for having to face them in the future. So sometimes we do things in what we consider are the best interests, and the results are not only not what we wanted there, but they're negatively affected.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all people to give consideration to the amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Speaking simply to the amendment, I would like to point out – and the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster knows this – that there's really no need for this amendment because the motion, as it were, if it were to be passed, simply urges the government to take action. It doesn't bind the government to take any action whatsoever. If it were to pass, the government then can decide whatever course they wish to choose. If they wish to choose some sort of a consultative process with Albertans, which would probably be recommended, then they can do so, but certainly there's no need in particular to change the wording of the motion as it now sits. In fact, all it really does is take away from valuable time that we could better spend debating the actual motion itself.

I would certainly suggest that we vote against the amendment, and I would urge all hon. members to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: It's interesting, Mr. Speaker. When we get to a serious matter here on fixed election dates, all of a sudden we're getting an amendment that we're going to consult. Well, you know, where have we been? We've been advocating consulting for a long period of time. I have no objection. I think we should do very much what British Columbia did with their citizens' coalition. They looked at all sorts of things beyond the four-year process. When I look at this – we're near the end of the session – it says, "To initiate a process to study." Well, to initiate a process: how long will that take? Then we'll look at the advantage and disadvantage. I mean, frankly, to the hon. member, I see this as putting it off rather than dealing with the specific issue.

All we're saying here is that we would take a look. The member is suggesting that we take a look at the four-year mandates. It doesn't have to be November 17. It could be May 17 or whatever so that they wouldn't counteract the municipal. Again, that doesn't preclude, as the hon. member previous said, having a study in all sorts of situations that we should look at. But if we take this now and just vote this out, then this is gone down the tubes for another – well, we're told that we may not have a fall session, and the earliest we'd be looking at to initiate a process is probably next year.

The member previous, the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, is right. There is that cynicism out there. I'm not suggesting that fixed election dates will solve all that, but surely it's at least a start, to take a look at some of these things that other provinces are taking a look at. Then if we want, if we pass this and should we begin to look at it, there's nothing to say that we can't broaden and take a look at some other things. I'd like to take a look at proportional rep and some of the others. But I think this puts the whole process off for another period of time, and I would much rather, say, take a stand on one thing here and move on in that direction.

So for that reason I think Motion 508 is not needed, and I think it slows down and hampers the process of looking at democratic renewal at this particular time. I would suggest that we defeat the motion, look at the election dates, and then if we want to from this Legislature – I certainly don't disagree with going out to the public and asking what they think about democratic renewal. As all members have said, we certainly have some work to do out there with the public, but it shouldn't have to be an either/or at this stage. Let's deal with at least one concrete proposal that's being brought forward here by a government member without initiating a process that may come sometime, who knows when, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be difficult to speak to the amendment without speaking to the motion at the same time. The Member for Foothills-Rocky View has brought a matter before this Legislature, a motion, that is very timely, and it seems to be a matter that's quite widely discussed not only in this country but in many other jurisdictions. The matter of democratic renewal is something that's very trendy at this time and perhaps sought after by Albertans.

The amendment that's brought forward by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is not counterproductive. As a matter of fact, I would even argue that it further enhances the motion brought forward by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. It gives us now a manner in which we can introduce the motion to the Alberta population and how we are going to discuss it and debate it and what process it will take.

Indeed, I agree with the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. There is a great deal of cynicism out there in the public, and it's quite palpable, and that leads to a lack of participation during our elections, both provincial and federal and perhaps even municipal. So anything we can do in this House to enhance participation, to diminish the cynicism that exists out there in the public would be laudable and would be required of us and also probably, one could argue, allow all parties to draw a high quality of candidates to run in elections, which again would benefit Albertans from all perspectives and on a nonpartisan basis.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are some issues that will have to be considered, and those are the issues that will be addressed by the amendment by way of consultation. For example, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster addressed a very serious issue of collusion between both municipal and provincial elections. You know, one could argue that in Alberta we already have preset election dates because when one looks historically, at least over a couple of decades, we have them every four years almost without exception. But we know that it's counterproductive both on a municipal level and a provincial level to have two elections running simultaneously or nearly simultaneously. That perhaps would even further deteriorate participation in elections.

So what we may have to do by way of consultation is examine whether there is a requirement to amend the municipal act now and somehow offset by way of a formula or mechanism the municipal elections from the provincial, and those are things that I would like to hear about.

I think that it's an enhancement to amend the motion and to require public consultation because I don't think we have a monopoly on knowledge in this particular House. I don't think we have a monopoly on understanding the system. There are many other jurisdictions out there in the Commonwealth that have been experimenting with such renewals, with such initiatives, some to their success, some to their detriment. I think that those are experiences on which we should be drawing. Most importantly, we should be asking Albertans how they feel about it, what their ideas are, and if we are to go ahead with this – I personally think that we ought to – how they would like to see it entrenched into Alberta legislation.

So I will support the amendment most definitely because it gives us a process. I think that we should have a committee of experts out there consulting with Albertans, asking Albertans, asking experts, academia and others, within our province to tell us how we should proceed with it, but at the same time, notwithstanding the amendment to the motion, I will also support the motion in principle because I think it's very timely.

The partisanship of our politics very often makes for good theatre, Mr. Speaker, and makes for good columns in newspapers, and that is good because at least it gets Albertans involved on that level. They read about it. But we also have to give Albertans some predictability and let them know that even though historically we have partisanship, this province is run in a very methodical manner and that elections can be depended on and happen always at the same time and that Albertans can prepare for them.

So I support both the amendment, Mr. Speaker, and the motion in principle. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise this evening and address the Assembly on Motion 508, fixed election dates. I understand that the Oilers just tied the game, so it's 2-all.

The mechanics of any political system must out of necessity operate in a way which best engages and reflects the wishes of the people it governs. In Alberta I think that we've done a fine job . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, we are on the amendment.

Rev. Abbott: I'm speaking on the amendment, yeah. Like the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs you first must talk about the motion before you can talk about the amendment.

In Alberta I think that we've done a fine job in fulfilling the second part of this obligation. Of course, the results more than speak for themselves. The wishes of Albertans are reflected very well indeed in this Assembly, but the engagement of our citizens in the political process seems to be in a downward spiral. Voter turnout continues to decrease, and political apathy is becoming more and more common. A pollster phoned a house one day and asked the resident: what is the biggest barrier to political involvement today, ignorance or apathy? The resident angrily replied as he hung up the phone: I don't know, and I don't care. With Motion 508 as amended, I believe that we are being presented with an opportunity to take positive steps towards resolving this problem.

Obviously, studying the creation of fixed election dates will not be the only solution. Like any other problem, there are several factors which must be considered. Like most of the issues we deal with in this Assembly, the matter of electoral reform is extremely complex and doesn't lend itself to generalizations or quick fixes. I do believe, however, that fixed-term elections would be a step in the right direction or, as the amendment says, at least something worth considering.

Encouraging a specific and legislated electoral timeline would not only go a long way toward restoring public faith in the political system; it might also serve to increase the productivity of government as well. How so? Well, one of the biggest factors would be the removal of the election cycle uncertainty with the establishment of a set date. In the business world deadlines serve to set a definitive framework in which stated tasks must be accomplished. They provide motivation, and they allow employees to more effectively manage and distribute their time. That's not to say that our current electoral system breeds inefficiency. Quite the opposite. Whether an election is called in the next day or the next two years, I myself and each one of my colleagues will still be working as hard as we possibly can to represent the wishes of our constituents. We will continue to achieve great things on behalf of Albertans, but I think a fixed election date would help us to work more effectively and achieve even more.

The Alberta government was the first in Canada to adopt the practice of producing three-year business plans for each ministry. This was an innovative idea in 1993 and remains an excellent idea today, Mr. Speaker. These plans serve to not only showcase the clear and definitive direction of ministries; they also provide an organizational performance framework that increases both productivity and public confidence. Now, this is only one example of the Alberta government's long-standing dedication to political accountability and results-based improvement, a tradition that we can and must continue to build upon.

To guarantee that the people of Alberta will continue to benefit from a transparent and accountable government, we must continue to find new ways to adapt to changing demands and perceptions. Thus, the organizational framework imposed by fixed election dates as stated in the amended motion could serve in much the same fashion as government business plans. The establishment of a set time frame in which to work could enable the government to more aggressively develop and pursue its stated objectives. This drive could inspire voters to become more involved, which in turn could inspire more action. The cycle, once begun, would be self-perpetuating, the end result being . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, Edmonton-Rutherford is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In our Standing Orders where we're talking about debate on an amendment, 20(2) reads, "A member, other than the mover, speaking to the amendment must confine debate to the subject of the amendment." I would submit that the amendment specifically talks about removing the clause that says "introduce legislation" and then refers to "initiate a process to study the benefits." I would expect that the Speaker would ask all members to do as the Standing Orders ask, and that is to speak directly to what the amendment is asking us to do so that then we can vote on the amendment, yea or nay, and proceed with debate on the main motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yeah, on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I've mentioned the amended motion several times. I'm trying to put some argument in for why I agree with the amended motion. I gave the hon. member the courtesy of speaking without interrupting him on a point of order, and I would hope that he would do the same for me. I'm simply speaking to the motion as amended because I believe that the amendment should be supported. I've made that case several times. I've made it very clear that I'm talking about the amended motion, and I would like to proceed with my speech.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the point of order?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, on the motion that we amended, as the hon. member across said – he didn't finish the amended part, that said that we would continue to introduce legislation. I think his point of order about this deleting legislation is incorrect. In fact, the amended motion still says, "With the intention of introducing legislation based on the recommendations arising from that study."

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, I'm saying to consult Albertans and then introduce legislation, like the hon. member is talking about, as opposed to simply going ahead and introducing legislation without consulting.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the point of order?

Hon. members, today we were dealing with a motion, and an amendment was brought forward by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. We are governed by the Standing Orders, that each one of us has subscribed to. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford pointed out, Standing Order 20(2) states, "A member, other than the mover, speaking to the amendment must confine debate to the subject of the amendment."

Those are the Standing Orders. I am a servant of this Assembly, and it's my job to enforce the Standing Orders, that each one of you has approved. I agree that there is a point of order, and I'll caution everybody who is speaking. I have a list of people who wanted to speak on the motion that was before us, and then an amendment came forward, and anybody can speak. Technically we have 10 minutes at a time for a person to speak, and once the clock runs out at 9 o'clock, debate stops, we call for a vote, and that's how it will happen. I would caution everybody else who wants to speak on the amendment to stick to the amendment that's before us.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Had that point of order not happened, my speech would have long been over by now, but I will finish it anyway.

8:30

Rev. Abbott: While I enthusiastically support in principle the concept of fixed-term elections as proposed by the amended Motion 508, I think we must also give any future legislation to this end a great deal of careful consideration. That's why I agree with this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

I've touched on some of the potential benefits, but we also must be acutely aware of the very real negative consequences that could accompany any hasty or ill-conceived changes to the Election Act. The objective of electoral reforms is the improvement of the democratic process. As such, they must only be legislated after careful consideration and an objective consideration of all possible implications. That's why I agree with the amendments to Motion 508.

This evening's debate on this motion has been vital in this regard, and I certainly look forward to hearing the remainder of it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the amendment?

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and speak in favour of the amendment. I want to talk specifically about what the public consultation as suggested by this amendment would deal with. I think that in order to do so, it's important to put this issue into context and to understand that while I certainly am sympathetic to the original motion in that there are some pros involved with fixed election dates, there are also some cons. I think it's important that we put this into context. I'd like to talk a little bit about the pros and cons and then at that point, I think, elucidate to all of the members why it's important that we consider the amendment's proposal; that is, to initiate a process to discuss and in one way or another study the benefits and disadvantages of implementing the fixed election dates.

It's important for all members to understand that a number of other provinces, including British Columbia, Ontario, and Newfoundland, have each passed legislation setting fixed election dates. The federal government has also commented on it and is in favour of fixed election dates for federal elections although no amending legislation has been introduced. New Brunswick, Manitoba, P.E.I., Quebec, and Saskatchewan have all mused to various degrees but have not set out any specifics to the best of my knowledge. Finally, of course, municipal elections, which I'm extremely familiar with, here in Alberta are held on fixed dates.

There are a number of factors weighing in favour of the opposition to or the implementation of fixed election dates in Alberta. On the positive side, planning for elections would be easier, particularly for the Chief Electoral Officer, who'd also be able to conduct enumeration, hire and train staff, and produce election materials all based on a preset schedule. Citizens may be better able to plan and to participate or involve themselves in the election process, not just as voters but also as possible candidates or, certainly, as volunteers. It would also prevent a scenario in which existing governments can manipulate the process to either extend their time in office or find a more strategic time for an election depending upon the issues of the day. Political parties may be better able to attract qualified candidates willing to serve knowing that they could better plan their career and personal lives around the certainty of when an election is coming. There are some very positive aspects to this that I think could improve accountability to the public. In fact, in 2004 Environics Research Group reported that 81 per cent of Canadians preferred that federal elections be held on a fixed date every four years.

There are, Mr. Speaker, also some factors that can be seen as negative to the holding of elections on set dates. Primarily, there is some thought that setting fixed election dates might have the effect of extending the campaign season. Rather than a concerted campaign focus from the moment the writ is dropped, there's a fear that electioneering could begin by some eager candidates months before the set date. The worry is that some candidates, and in particular incumbent candidates, could lose focus on the issues of governance and instead put all their energies into getting elected or, in the case of incumbents, re-elected. It may also increase the risk that an Alberta election could be scheduled at the same time as the federal election although this year I think we had an opportunity to see that that can be worked around.

So there are a number of initiatives, I think, that we should give pause for thought that complement the amendment that's before us, suggesting that we should implement a study to have a look at the benefits and disadvantages of implementing the system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the determination is made that the election dates are appropriate for provincial elections in Alberta, consideration ought also to be given to the question of whether the dates should be completely fixed or whether more flexibility is appropriate. The more flexible date, perhaps specifying a one-month or two-month period in which an election must be held, provides flexibility to deal with unforeseen circumstances in a way that the completely fixed date, such as a third Monday in November, does not.

Secondly, we would also want to give consideration as to what would happen if the Legislature is dissolved in a period between one fixed election date and the next. Is the election date unchangeable and unaffected, or would it simply renew itself on a four-year basis? In that case, Mr. Speaker, there may be some issues around the inflexibility of that fixed date, so my earlier comment would apply.

Again, these are the kinds of issues that I think this study would have to take into account. Any kind of legislation that would be introduced would have to take all of these kinds of issues into account.

Mr. Speaker, on final thought, I think we should give some real good thought as to whether or not fixed election dates should be considered as part of a more comprehensive package of electoral reform. Currently, as members know, the Chief Electoral Officer has brought electoral reform issues to the attention of our all-party Committee on Legislative Offices. I might suggest that this committee or a committee similar to this committee may well be the process that members might want to consider should this amendment be approved tonight.

I encourage members to support the amendment and give some of my ideas, my thoughts a little bit of thought of their own when they make their decision on how they should feel towards this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will look at the amendment to a motion that I consider to be very important. I want to thank the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View for bringing the motion forward and for this opportunity now to discuss the amendment. The motion is to establish fixed election dates for general elections in Alberta. The impact of that would be to make the timing of elections nonpartisan, thereby increasing accountability of government to the electorate and to provide certainty to the electorate as to when elections will be during a relatively convenient time of year. Now, this amendment, which I oppose, is stating that there's uncertainty and we need to find out more about what our electorate are thinking.

I believe that Alberta has a democratic deficit. This is something that's discussed quite openly in our province. The causes are complex and require multiple changes. This change that was suggested in the motion before the amendment of course won't fix everything, and it certainly won't do it overnight, but it's a good way to begin the process of increasing accountability and reducing voter cynicism.

I know that a national poll in May 2004 found that 81 per cent of Canadians want fixed election dates. There are all kinds of examples in this country of provinces addressing the question of fixed election dates. B.C. and Ontario have already implemented fixed election dates. B.C. already had its first fixed election on May 17, 2005. New Brunswick's Commission on Legislative Democracy has recommended fixed election dates on the third Monday in October. The P.E.I. government and the opposition leaders have also indicated support. Fixed election dates were part of the Conservative Party of Canada platform. Saskatchewan and Quebec have also engaged in significant discussions about electoral reform.

We know already that fixed election dates exist at the municipal level and that that works very well. I think that this amendment, which would delay something that's very important and, to me, clearly needed, is unnecessary.

Leaving the calling of elections entirely at the discretion of the sitting government means that elections can be called when it's politically convenient. Elections should be about the regular process of holding governments accountable. They should be held on the electorate's timetable, not the government's, and I believe that that's what this motion is all about. I don't think that we need to delay it by accepting this amendment.

Considering the four-year timeline that is suggested in the motion, in practice the average maximum in most jurisdictions has tended to be approximately four years. Therefore, I think that in practice this will not make elections more frequent. This is about certainty, predictability, and accountability, greater certainty to the voting process for parties, candidates, and voters.

I believe women's groups in particular have indicated that this would help more women candidates plan to run for office. Greater ability to plan and certainty about the term could well attract greater quality of candidates and perhaps reduce cynicism related to partisan timing of elections. Fixed dates are part of a broader attack on voter apathy and declining voter turnout. Fixed dates could be coordinated with greater nonpartisan public information campaigns, particularly for first-time voters. There are many more pros that I can see, and I still want to reiterate that in terms of this amendment I believe it is unnecessary.

When you look at this idea of having fixed election dates as a breakthrough in Canada, it's actually quite commonplace elsewhere in the world. In looking at Fixing Canada's Unfixed Election Dates, Henry Milner assembled pertinent information on the rules regarding election dates in some 40 democracies world-wide. Only a quarter have unfixed election dates, another reason why I oppose this amendment, which would delay something that I think is urgently needed to begin to address our democratic deficit.

Would Canadian democracy be better served if Parliament and the other provinces adopted fixed voting dates, following the lead of BC? After examining the standard arguments, Milner finds that on balance the fairness and administrative efficiency of fixed elections outweigh the added cost due to longer campaigns. More importantly, he argues, fixed election dates can be an important element in a comprehensive strategy to address the democratic deficit. They can help remove seasonal obstacles to voting, reduce voter cynicism at the manipulation of election dates for partisan ends, and attract more representative candidates – especially women – by allowing them to plan well in advance.

Beyond this, fixed election dates could enhance the effectiveness of a variety of measures designed to actively boost voter turnout. The planning and staging of public events, such as seminars, adult education activities, and public information campaigns, [forums] to raise interest and involvement in public affairs can only benefit from having the date of the next election in view.

I know from the high school aspect that knowing when an election would come would help plan curriculum that would provoke some interest and some participation in the election process, whereas now there is always uncertainty, and then they get a very little bit of time to start planning forums and that sort of thing.

With young people voting less, civics education is a key measure.

With fixed voting days [I believe that] teaching civics could be more effective. In planning the content of civics courses targeting the young people who are about to become citizens and voters, educators would know the dates of the upcoming federal and provincial elections . . . so they could better incorporate these elements and line up knowledgeable resource people for their classes.

Milner recommends that a precise election date be adopted. He argues in favour of early fall for the date, explaining that formal campaigning would thus begin in mid-August, which marks the end of the vacation period and the beginning of the political season. Third, in case of a premature election he recommends an arrangement like the one chosen by BC and Ontario, under which the calendar resumes with the next regular election, in the fourth calendar year following the unscheduled election.

So, again, we already have people in this country moving forward, taking steps to address this deficit. I don't think there's any question that the appetite is there from the electorate. So, again, I am not supporting this amendment.

A number of arguments have been advanced in favour of change, and the most common critique of unfixed voting dates has to do with fairness. Why should the party in power have a special advantage in planning electoral strategy due to its inside knowledge of when the next election will take place? Why should its leaders be permitted to time an election to exploit conditions favourable to their re-election? Governments without fixed elections can manipulate economic policy and election dates so as to face voters at a time most conducive to attaining their electoral objectives.

As I conclude, I think Canadians are demanding changes in ethics and in accountability. They want a strong Canada resting on ethically based democratic institutions. They want honesty, fairness, and transparency to be the rule, not the exception in political life. Wherever we can, we must put an end to backroom opportunism in politics. I believe that this motion is a worthy one, that it answers a need. I do not support the amendment because I think this motion is important. We should support it now as an important step to address our democratic deficit.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Mittel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon.

Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for proposing an amendment to Motion 508 as proposed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View. An amendment to initiate a process to study the benefits and disadvantages of having fixed election dates is very important, I think. There are comments from Albertans that we have not consulted with Albertans, and it is the process this government has put forward that we will consult with Albertans on issues as important as this. I don't believe we have consulted with Albertans on this.

Take, for instance, Mr. Speaker, municipal governments, urban and rural. They have not been consulted, and I know that they have fixed elections. By looking ahead, I think they would like to see what effect this would have on their particular elections because their elections are in three-year cycles. If ours were perhaps in four-year cycles, there certainly are times when they're going to overlap each other and perhaps happen in the same year. Depending on the time it may happen in the same time of year. People certainly have spoken to me when I've met with them about having a fixed election date so that they knew what would happen ahead, but at the same time I don't think that they've been given the pros and cons for this. I think they want to know what would happen if, in fact, there were fixed elections, both pros and cons.

I think that people are not necessarily happy with elections. Take 2004, for example. There were three elections in 2004. By the time the provincial election came around, people were very tired of elections, and I think that we have to probably believe that the poor voter turnout had something to do with the fact that this was the third election that they had gone to in that year.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that we have to consult with Albertans. We have to listen to what they have to say and listen to the pros and cons on this before we go ahead with something that could be very detrimental.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak against the amendment urging the government "to initiate a process to study the benefits and disadvantages of implementing fixed election dates with the intention of introducing legislation based on the recommendations arising from that study." There are lots of reasons.

First of all, as my colleague already mentioned, this is not a bill; this is a motion. A motion is always urging the government to consider. Okay. So the member from Lloydminster in this amendment is urging the government. This is not a bill, but this is a motion.

The second point I want to raise is that 81 per cent of the poll is in favour of the reforms. This is the CBC. I mean, I read it in the paper a long time ago. As one of the speakers already mentioned, there are at least six or seven provinces considering adopting this reform. I commend the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View for introducing this motion. I think we need sweeping reforms in Canada as well as Alberta, and this is a good motion. I think instead of just introducing amendments which are according to me not needed at this time – anyway, we are dealing with this amendment.

This particular issue, this particular motion is a nonpartisan issue, and we should all consider it very seriously because, as I said, 81 per cent of the people all over Canada – 41 countries throughout the world, their lower parliaments, Legislatures, have adopted this reform, and I don't know why we need to study the benefits and disadvantages. I mean, this is not the right step. I think that this motion, this idea is badly needed at this moment. If we pass this motion, I'm urging the government to consider these fixed dates for general elections. If there's a minority government, then it's an exceptional case.

As the member has already said, most of the civic governments have already adopted this reform. I don't know of any reason why we need a study. I mean, the government studies so many other issues, and we spend lots of money. After that, if you see the record, even after spending lots of money, we still couldn't implement those studies.

I request that the member withdraw this amendment. I think it's not a good idea because 40 countries in the world have this system, and we badly need the sweeping reforms not only in election dates but electoral reforms. There are so many other things we can introduce at a later stage.

Other things I want to discuss are some pros and cons about this motion. The greater certainty in the voting process for the parties, candidates, all the voters. Women's groups in particular have indicated that this could help more women candidates plan to run for office. I think this is an excellent idea. If we have a fixed date, it will solve so many problems, especially in the electoral system. A greater ability to plan. Certainty about the term could well attract a greater quality of candidates – I think one of the other speakers already mentioned this – and reduce cynicism related to the partisan timing of the election.

Fixed dates are part of the broader attack on voter apathy and declining voter turnout. We see that not in this election but in the 2000 federal election there was only an 18 per cent turnout between the ages of 18 to 20, so if it helps the the young generation to come out and participate in the election system, I think it's a good idea. Fixed dates can be co-ordinated with the greater nonpartisan public information campaigns, particularly for first-time voters. It also improves accountability, transparency, and judgment of the voters based strictly on the record over a set period, not after economic upturn or politically motivated spending. The voting process is more accessible to certain voters based on the seasonal case availability.

Mr. Speaker, if we stick with this motion, we will have better electoral planning by election authorities, including ensuring an up-to-date voters list for each election. Fixed election dates can provide for co-ordination with the otherwise costly by-election. A certain set deadline to achieve things would focus the minds of a sitting government.

As we all know, the present government here in Alberta is not choosing the fall election date sometimes for the sake of voters but for their own political purposes. It's time to stop playing politics with the election dates. I think that's the idea, that we have a fixed election date. Calling an election less than four years into their mandate sends voters to the polls unnecessarily. I think it's ridiculous. I mean, we should look at it very seriously. The Alberta Liberal plan for democratic reform seeks to end the era of a closed-door government. Our first move would be to establish fixed dates for elections as the hon. member – I mean, I commend him for introducing this motion and asking the government to look into it. Elections should be held on fixed dates that suit the democratic wishes of Albertans, not the government. At this moment the government always sees which way they benefit. They call the election whenever it is suitable for them. This is not right. We are elected by the people, and we should always listen to the wishes of Albertans.

The Alberta Liberal plan for the fixed election dates calls for elections to be held on the same day every four years. The day would be determined by an all-party committee. Under this plan Albertans could count on being able to hold the government to account at regular, consistent intervals. The government wants an early election for all the wrong reasons. Suppose auto insurance prices are going up. The government sometimes delays the election. Sometimes they call the election early. I mean, they are playing political games.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with Lloyd from Lloydminster that a fuller public consultation would be appropriate. It would enhance my motion, so I consider that a friendly amendment and would encourage people to support it.

I'd like to respond to one criticism brought by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that fixed election dates might lead to longer campaigns, and I draw the Assembly's attention to a recent comment by Peter Dobell, who is the founding director of the Parliamentary Centre, an organization that studies parliamentary reform projects. He rejects the argument that fixed election dates will lead to longer campaigns. He says that the longer American campaigns are driven by the need to raise large sums of money, which doesn't apply at the federal level because of public financing and applies with not much force at the provincial level because of the smaller amounts required.

To conclude, I'd like to thank the other members of the Assembly and especially members of the opposition parties for their contributions to this debate and urge all members to support the motion as amended.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've chosen to do things in the correct order tonight.

I know that I don't have very much time left, but I would like to speak to the motion itself, Motion 508, as recently amended by this House. I find myself by and large agreeing with the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, which doesn't happen very often. It wouldn't have happened this afternoon, but certainly most of his comments tonight I can agree with. I would only suggest that we should extend the debate to include the entire openness and accountability package which has been tabled in the federal Parliament by his Conservative cousins.

A lot of the points have been touched on already tonight, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to point out just a couple of them. I really do believe that this is an idea whose time has come. As somebody mentioned earlier – I believe it was a minister from the other side, talking about the Environics poll in May 2004 that showed that 81 per cent of Canadians favour moving towards fixed election dates. Certainly, that would coincide with what I hear on the doorstep.

There was a lot of discussion about encouraging voter participation. One of the things that we saw most recently in Alberta in the 2004 election was some voter confusion over the fact that we'd had three elections so close, in fact within a period of six months. You throw the U.S. federal presidential election into that mix, and there was a lot of confusion. One of the comments I heard time and time again was: "Why are we having an election right now? It's only three and a half years since the last one."

I think, clearly, that if you look at the example of municipal elections, it's been shown for many years that fixed election dates work. People know when to expect an election. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to suggest that they build their lives around an election date, but certainly it's not uncommon to hear instances where people accommodate an election date by deferring their leaving on holidays or making sure that they participate in an advance poll before an election, that sort of thing. Often if an election is sort of sprung on us by surprise, those sorts of accommodations aren't even necessarily possible or, at least, the task may become too onerous. I'm thinking of snowbirds, for example. When they're spending the winters away in the south, there is an opportunity for them to vote in an election, but the process is such that often they choose not to be bothered with it because it takes a little too much time and effort. So anything we can do that would encourage people to be involved and give them the opportunity to be involved more readily, certainly I would support that, and indeed the entire opposition caucus would support that.

There was some talk about extending . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but pursuant to Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View to close debate on Motion 508 as amended.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, one of the great virtues of our parliamentary system is its ability to adapt to changing circumstances. The experiences in British Columbia, Ontario, and Newfoundland show that in response to voter cynicism and a declining interest in political elections, fixed election dates offer not a complete but a partial remedy to that problem and a step forward in addressing the democratic deficit. I think that these concerns apply with just as much force in Alberta as they do at the national level, and I think that the motion as amended tonight addresses that concern and deserves the support of the members.

Again, I'll just thank all members for their remarks and urge them to support the motion as amended. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, a number of you were looking at me when the clock struck 9. Just for your information, according to our Standing Orders we have 60 minutes for debate on the motion itself. We had a point of order that took about four or five minutes away from the debate, and that's why we went beyond the 9 o'clock mark, to complete the 60 minutes.

Second Reading

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and
Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate April 25: Mr. Mitzel]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 29, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006. I welcome the opportunity to encourage enhancements to our environmental protection in Alberta. I believe a good deal of this bill provides meaningful strengthening of existing legislation, particularly in relation to emission controls, trading, codes of practice for low-risk activities, accessibility to sound environmental information.

However, I do have some real concerns about one area of legislation, that of contaminated sites and their management. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act requires the reporting and immediate cleanup of spills and accidental contamination when it occurs. The principle of polluter responsibility and polluter accountability for costs of cleanup is fundamental and must be strengthened, not weakened. I will therefore be bringing forward several suggestions to try to ensure that such is the case, to strengthen already good legislation under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the amendments proposed there.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are increasingly anxious about the accelerating rate of industrial development in Alberta, particularly in this time of booming oil and gas prices and the headlong rush for profits. We already have over 350,000 oil and gas installations here and over 370,000 kilometres of pipelines in various states of aging and corrosion. Our air, water, and soil are under threat, and we must take this threat very seriously now. Monitoring is showing progressive degradation of water, both surface and groundwater, and soil loss and contamination in relation to industrial activity. Virtually every section of this province has now got signs of human activity.

Albertans have placed their trust in Alberta Environment as the regulatory authority to establish science-based standards beyond which contamination will not be allowed and to which industry will be held accountable. New bills must move the protection and enhancement agenda forward and ensure that our children and grandchildren have access to wildlands in perpetuity, species protected rather than diminished, and the natural capital of our landscapes, which are valued for both monetary and quality of life purposes.

An integrated land-use plan and framework is absolutely essential for us to establish the kinds of priorities and protection that our environment and our human interests and values need. The natural history of human incursion across the land both here and elsewhere is consistently and progressively damaging. For us not to move forward with stronger legislation to ensure sustainable development measured in economic, social, and environmental terms would be a travesty of our role as regulators and managers and custodians of this infinitely valuable legacy that we inherited and must pass on to our offspring. Therefore, we must, in amending the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and other legislation on the environment, ensure that we do not in any way weaken our capacity to monitor, analyze, and hold accountable those people, companies, and organizations that allow release of contaminating substances.

Let me take the opportunity at this time, though not directly related to this bill, to applaud the minister for proposing the environment endowment fund, a fund which is long overdue and would be much supported by this caucus, fully funded by industry, and again in keeping with the responsibility of industry to clean up adverse effects.

The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, 1994, deals with the release of substances into the environment and sets out requirements for the reporting of such releases to Alberta Environment related to air, water, and soil. These have to be addressed and even more consistently enforced. Further on in one of the sections under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and I quote: The director, in an approval, may specify more stringent limits than are in the substance release regulation but may not relax the limits. It is expected that substance releases to the environment will be minimized by applying pollution prevention practices and the best use of available demonstrated pollution technology.

Several elements, then, are missing from this Bill 29, and I would seek over the next couple of days to work with the minister, to talk about some possible amendments which have to do with the following issues.

Number one, to ensure that all spills are reported promptly and cleaned as soon as possible, not postponing them for years without orders or prosecution and cleaned up at the whim of the business or industry.

Secondly, more and more contaminated sites are deemed too expensive to clean up to equivalent land use, to be free of contamination, and are therefore allowed to follow what is termed a risk management approach, which means covering the contaminated soil in many cases – and this is being suggested for the old Hub Oil site in Calgary – and then monitoring the groundwater around the site to see whether any leakage actually occurs off site or into the groundwater. This is not responsible cleanup, and it's not holding responsible parties accountable for equivalent land-use reclamation.

Thirdly, under the amendments companies will be able to transfer a contaminated site to a municipality in lieu of back taxes or as a gift or where the site is orphaned; that is, has lost its owner. Albertans expect that where those lands are contaminated, they be properly reclaimed and the soil remediated before any such transfer. This is consistent with the principles of polluter paying and polluter accountability.

Fourthly, under the amendments inspectors would be given the responsibility of assessing contaminated sites. It's not clear that there would be at least a minimum basic set of guidelines for them to follow, beyond which they would have some discretion, but that minimum baseline set of criteria must be there. If this is the case, there could clearly be inconsistent reclamation and inadequate reclamation in some cases. I would want to ensure that that was not part of the intention of this amendment.

Finally, the passing of authority for site assessment and certification to appointed inspectors as opposed to staff within the department would raise the question of potential political conflict of interest and political appointments. I think all of us would agree that we must avoid this as much as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I think those summarize my main concerns, and I would welcome some opportunity for further discussion on those points. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are certainly some good parts to the bill, but there are some things that are a little disconcerting. Perhaps it's because we need more information.

The bill is a major bill bringing forth six amendments, and as I say, most of it would probably be good, but there are some concerns that we have. I would like to put them out, Mr. Speaker, perhaps for some more debate or amendments in the committee stage.

The proposed amendment relating to the minister's right to delegate to any person a great many of the minister's duties and obligations is somewhat disconcerting. I know that the intention is that it may give Alberta Environment the flexibility to work closely with environmental experts of great renown such as Dr. Schindler, for example, but what is to prevent this partnering from occurring with so-called environmental experts tied to the oil industry? In other words, what oversight is available and guaranteed to prevent conflict of interest in such partnering?

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Environmental Law Centre has contacted the Minister of Environment's office, I'm told, to discuss its concerns with Bill 29. I believe that they have recommended – and it seems to me to make some sense – a public registry of all delegations and transfers of power as well as guaranteed access to all accompanying documentation: contracts, agreements, et cetera. Such an amendment would recognize that it may be beneficial for Alberta Environment to partner with various groups and individuals in certain situations yet recognize that public accountability, guaranteed by such a registry, would help to ensure not only the judicious use of delegation but proper completion of statutory obligations as delegated.

I guess my question would be: that has gone, my understanding is, to the Minister of Environment, and I wonder if the hon. member would be discussing such amendments relating to the public accountability of delegated powers. I think that if they did that, they could follow the purpose of having more flexibility of dealing with known experts in the area, but also there would be some recognition to the public that this was not being abused. So I wonder if at some point he would at least comment if they're taking a look at that.

The government press release announces that "another proposed change will improve programs for reclamation of coal and oil sands mines, and ensure progressive and ongoing reclamation of these sites is promoted and acknowledged." Well, nobody is going to argue with that, but I guess the question that would flow from that is: how exactly is this promotion of reclaimed sites accomplished by the bill? For instance, how does the minister propose to promote past reclamation when, according to the Auditor General, the ministry does not obtain sufficient financial security from current sites to ensure reclamation? So the point is that if the Auditor General is concerned about what we're doing now, how do we go back in this bill and promote the reclaimed sites? It's going to take some money, I would think.

I probably know the answer to this, but I'll throw it out: why is so much emissions trading relegated to regulation? I understand that you need some flexibility from time to time, but is there nothing we can do in legislation to ensure proper emissions thresholds? If this section's purpose, as I say, is to strengthen emission controls, it seems to me that there should at least be some part of the legislation that we can look at rather than regulation. Again, the member is well aware that with regulations, the public, you know, and the Legislature for that matter, have no control over that. At least could the hon. member clarify what some of these regulations might look like? How would they be determined? What is to prevent industry from setting its own thresholds given that the minister may choose to delegate to industry its own regulation? So I think it's clear that we have to have some more knowledge of this, Mr. Speaker.

Given the extension of reporting and remediation responsibilities backwards to before the EPEA was enacted, section 12, and given that the Auditor General's 1998-99 report found that Alberta Environment was not collecting sufficient security to adequately cover costs of remediation – in 2004-2005 this program still had not been addressed – we have a serious problem here going into the present. My question would be: what does this new backwards extension of remediation responsibility actually amount to, and again how does the hon. member respond to the Environmental Law Centre's concerns regarding reporting of historical releases?

Without making failure to report such releases an offence, it can easily be argued that this amendment has no teeth. You know, there has to be a stick there too because, otherwise, you're not going to know. I guess the question would be: would the hon. member consider the amendments proposed by the Environmental Law Centre, those relating to sections 227 and 228 of the original act, making failure to report historical releases an offence? It seems to me that we have to do that if we're serious about the reclamation, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I guess the question that also has to be asked is: what about companies that are now defunct? I think the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was alluding to that. I guess the only answer to that is the Alberta taxpayer left holding the bag in these cases. How do you go after defunct companies? It's very difficult. But is there a process there, or is that just going to be something that we have to bite the bullet on?

The hon. Minister of Environment mused a while ago, and we wondered if the member knows or the minister can relate to this, about an environmental royalty initiative for covering the costs of reclamation projects. That might be some way, at least, to begin to look at it, Mr. Speaker.

There's just one other area, Mr. Speaker, that I want to talk about, and that's a change where previously section 112 read:

- (a) take all reasonable measures to . . .
- (ii) remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment.

Now the proposed amendment to section 12 would read:

- (ii) remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect.

It seems to me that that's almost a step backwards. The original measure seemed to me to be stronger in terms of what it was saying. While we, of course, recognize that there was a wide variety of techniques and technologies resulting in both immediate and progressing reclamation of polluted sites, as I say, the original section seems to be much more demanding than the proposed amendment. We're suggesting to the member: why not continue to require "maximum protection to human life, health and the environment" as well as "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect"? Read this way, the amendment would actually strengthen remediation responsibilities rather than water them down. So I would hope that they might take a look at that.

Mr. Speaker, those are the major concerns I have. I may have to look at, in committee stage, amendments and others, but we'll wait and see what the hon. member has to say.

Thank you for the time, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The object of Bill 29 is to amend the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to strengthen emission controls, clarify clean-up requirements for contaminated sites, establish codes of practice for low-intensity and low-risk activities, enhance the ability of Alberta Environment to partner with a broad range of individuals or groups, and make environmental information more accessible to the public.

I find that there is a series of amendments in Bill 29 that are designed to improve the government's response to the cleanup and remediation of historical contaminated sites. While this is a positive move in regard to the fact that some of the amendments are consistent with the recommendations of the Contaminated Site Stakeholder Advisory Committee, including stakeholders such as the Environmental Law Centre and Toxics Watch, these amendments fail to fully implement the CSSAC recommendations in a singular and integrated effort.

There are too many problems with other aspects of this bill to support without significant amendments. My concerns come from communication with the Environmental Law Centre. The Environmental Law Centre, ELC, is a registered charity incorporated in 1982 to provide an objective source of information on environmental law and policy in Alberta and Canada. The ELC's mission is "to ensure that laws, policies and legal processes protect the environment." In pursuit of this mission the ELC seeks to achieve the following: "enactment and effective enforcement of sound environmental law and policies; and [effective and] informed public participation in environmental regulatory, law-making and decision-making processes."

They are pleased to see the expansion of protection for municipalities from liability for contamination. This provision is consistent with the recommendations of the Contaminated Site Stakeholder Advisory Committee, and it supports the enabling of creation of a broader range of documents by the minister as set out in section 3 of the bill. They see this as positive, but we suggest that section 3 be amended to include a requirement to undertake public consultation as an initial step in the development of such documents.

They are less supportive of section 9, which expands the range of documents that can be incorporated by reference into regulations under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Such a step has the potential to make it much more difficult for Albertans to determine and understand regulatory requirements. Alberta Environment must be strongly committed to broad public access to these documents and to clearly and explicitly incorporating such documents, where merited, into the regulations.

Another concern stated by the Environmental Law Centre is regarding sections 4 to 6 of the bill, which expand the scope of delegation and transfer of administration of powers and duties under the act from government employees to "any person." They understand that such a change will facilitate the implementation of programs such as third-party reclamation or remediation certification. But the extensive scope of these amendments without clear checks and accountability requirements is the basis of the concern. These sections, without amendment to include such requirements, are inconsistent with basic principles of public accountability in relation to regulatory responsibilities. It will prove very difficult for the public to assess whether statutory responsibilities delegated or transferred under these provisions are properly carried out.

So the suggestion is that sections 4 to 6 be amended to provide for a publicly accessible register of all delegations and transfers of administration made under the act, which would include access to the relevant agreements or other documents. These provisions should also require annual public reporting by parties to whom powers have been delegated or transferred.

The CSSAC recommendations are the result of in-depth, committed work and negotiations by a wide range of stakeholders on complex issues. They recognize that there are still outstanding issues, resolution of which are key to the successful implementation of an improved regulatory system for contaminated sites. It is essential that CSSAC complete its work on the outstanding issues identified in its June 2005 report. Alberta Environment should refrain from further implementation activity until such time as those issues have been resolved and changes can be made in a complete and integrated fashion.

Another concern is section 12 of the bill, which replaces section 112 of the act and recognizes a wider range of steps for dealing with contamination, effectively downgrading the level of remediation required. Currently section 112 provides that a substance causing an adverse effect must be dealt with "in such a manner as to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment." The proposed amendment would change this to require action "in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect." This reduction is neither justified nor warranted in relation to expanding the measures that can be taken to respond to the effects of substance releases. The suggestion is that section 12 should be amended to retain the level of protection currently imposed in section 112 of the act.

Section 13 of the bill seeks to provide clarification regarding environmental protection orders and historical releases of substances. The ELC is concerned that this section contains no preventive element, which would effectively limit the director to taking action only when adverse effects have occurred and are obvious even if he or she is aware of the potential for such effect before it occurs. Section 13 should be amended to enable the director to issue an environmental protection order if he or she is of the opinion that an adverse effect may imminently occur.

I guess that when I'm looking at all of this, my conclusion is that I cannot support this because I hear cynicism and anger from many Albertans as they observe industry run roughshod over the environment. It is clear that this government is reluctant to in any way ruffle the feathers of industry and, therefore, allows contaminated sites to go on for years. There's no regulation for timelines, so we continue to have our earth contaminated by toxins, and the potential damage spreads. We need a department with teeth to prosecute and demand action to protect our environment. However, with only .05 per cent of the provincial government budget Alberta Environment does not have the manpower to monitor industry and our environment. The power of industry and the weakness of the Department of Environment have led to a lack of confidence that this government truly values the protection of the environment and truly understands the impact of failed action on the future of this province.

We are blessed with a wonderful environment. It is our responsibility to protect and preserve it. This bill does not do enough. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise again and speak to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Just one second.

Hon. Member for West Yellowhead, were you wanting to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a) to ask a question or comment?

Mr. Strang: No. I want up next.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you may proceed.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, it's my great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006. There are six amendments to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. The electricity sector will be allowed to conduct emissions trading in nitrogen oxide and sulphur dioxide. There is a clarification of industry's obligation to report and remediate contaminated sites closed before Alberta's current legislation was enacted on September 1, 1993. The goal is to ensure that any closed sites which have an adverse effect on the environment are reported and cleaned up.

An amendment is made to address the reclamation of coal and oil sands mines, to improve programs. It ensures that progressive and ongoing reclamation of these sites is promoted and acknowledged. The amendment supports the continued use of codes of practice for activities with low environmental impact. Another amendment is supposed to allow Alberta Environment the flexibility to partner with a broad range of organizations and individuals. There's an amendment to increase the amount of environmental information publicly available to Albertans without having to go through a formal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act process.

Mr. Speaker, the main object of Bill 29 is to amend the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to strengthen emissions control, clarify cleanup requirements for contaminated sites, establish codes of practice for low-intensity and low-risk activities, enhance the ability of AENV to partner with a broad range of individuals or groups, and make environmental information more accessible to the public.

AENV is implementing the recommendation of the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, CASA, electricity project team, the EPT, for the management of air emissions from the electricity-generating sector in Alberta. The EPT recommended new annual limits for nitrous oxide and sulphur dioxide, SO₂, emissions and an emissions trading program for those two substances. The amendments to the EPEA allow unit operators some flexibility in meeting their new targets and also create an incentive for operators to make emissions reductions before units must meet new annual emission limits.

Alberta Environment is now implementing new annual nitrous oxide and SO₂ emission limits for electricity generation units. Mr. Speaker, these limits are based on an intensity rate. This is a problem because focusing on emissions intensity, emissions per dollar of GDP, means that emissions intensity can decrease while absolute emissions and environmental impacts continue to rise. The focus on emissions intensity as a target for reduction is the same as the Alberta government plan for reducing greenhouse gas emissions as opposed to using Kyoto absolute emissions reduction targets.

Here is a clear example. Between 1990 and 1998 Alberta's greenhouse gas emissions intensity fell by 14.5 per cent while absolute emissions rose by 19 per cent. In this bill, by relying on emissions intensity instead of absolute reductions, electricity generation will still be allowed to increase their absolute emissions, but they will have to control and decrease the level of emission intensity for SO₂.

The recommendations of CASA must be supported as a positive move. Even though we would like to see a reduction in absolute emissions, the creation of the emissions trading program creates an incentive to make emissions reductions before the new annual emissions limit must be met. The system works as follows. The emissions credit system will help electricity producers reach their reduction target by offering them another option. They can install the best available pollution control technology to reduce emissions, or they can shut down power units that produce a high proportion of their emissions. However, if neither of these options is considered viable and a company is producing more nitrogen oxide and sulphur dioxide than the new regulation allows, the unit can then buy emissions credits from a company that has done better than its regulated targets. This system applies only for Alberta producers within Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the system has been used in the United States for over 10 years now in response to trying to control emissions that were causing a severe acid rain problem over very large areas of the country. Legislation was passed in 1990, and the first compliance period was 1995. This system of cap and trade is also being used extensively in California to control SO₂ and nitrous oxide. This program, the Regional Clean Air Incentive Market program, RECLAIM, began in 1994. There has been success in reducing the amount of SO₂ and nitrous oxide emissions in the U.S. since the inception of these programs.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the establishment of the emissions trading program and baseline emission limits is a positive move to address air quality and environmental concerns. This represents the implementation of the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, CASA, who have publicly stated that they are very pleased with this move. Martha Kostuch, a strong advocate of the environment who represented the Prairie Acid Rain Coalition and the Bert Riggall Environmental Foundation on the electricity project team, supports this move fully. Also, the Pembina Institute's Mary Griffiths supports this move as it came as a recommendation of CASA.

This part of Bill 29 should then be supported as our stakeholders unanimously supported this part of Bill 29. However, the only concern we should have is whether reliance on emissions intensity reduction instead of absolute emissions reduction is the correct standard to be applied. Remember that the made-in-Alberta plan for greenhouse gas emissions instead of adherence to Kyoto protocol reductions was largely determined to be ineffectual because it also relied on emissions intensity reductions. Put it this way: emissions in Alberta would still increase but at a lower rate than business as usual. It seems ineffectual to allow the sector to continue to pollute but just slow that level of pollution. Metaphorically, this is the same as letting a car go off a cliff at 50 kilometres per hour instead of 100 kilometres per hour. Either way the car will still be destroyed. The real solution is to stop the car, not just slow it down.

There are a series of amendments in Bill 29, Mr. Chairman, that are designed to improve the government response to the cleanup and the remediation of historically contaminated sites. While it is a positive move in regard to the fact that some of the amendments are consistent with the recommendations of the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee, including stakeholders such as the Environmental Law Centre and Toxics Watch, these amendments fail to fully implement the CSSAC recommendations in a singular and integrated effort.

The section 2 amendment is to repeal a section of the EPEA. This is a positive amendment as it protects municipalities from liabilities for contamination and should aid in the redevelopment of brownfield sites within Alberta. This is consistent with the recommendations of the CSSAC. However, even with the positive elements of this amendment it allows municipalities who acquire contaminated land after the previous owner abandons it or declares bankruptcy or land that is acquired by dedication or gift to be absolved of any duty to remediate the land if it is contaminated.

This government, Mr. Speaker, continually states that the polluter will pay. However, in this instance municipalities are protected from liability for the contamination of the sites they acquire. It then becomes unclear after the municipality acquires the land who is responsible for the cleanup of contaminated sites. If both the municipality and the previous owner are not held liable, then the environmental contamination will not be cleaned up adequately. Even though this amendment will allow for the redevelopment of brownfield sites, it lets the polluter off the hook if the site is orphaned.

The next one I move to is section 11, Mr. Speaker, which amends section 110 of the EPEA. This is a clarification of an existing revision of the EPEA in relation to the reporting of an historical release. However, the new duty to report that an adverse effect has occurred and is occurring in respect to that release lacks a mechanism necessary to ensure that failures to report under the new provisions are an offence and to establish a penalty for such an offence. Without a compliance and enforcement provision, which could be accomplished by amendments of sections 227, 228 of the EPEA, the new duty to report will be ineffective.

Now I move to section 14. This section provides an enabling function to allow for inspectors to issue remediation certificates. The main problem here is that there are not many inspectors in the Department of Environment, and those who are not qualified enough to make decisions about remediation efforts will be implementing complex decisions about the level of information needed on substances and affected areas. It is obvious that current staffing levels are insufficient to make these assessments. In addition, by allowing two levels to issue remediation certificates, the director and an inspector, the government is proposing an amendment that could easily result in broad variation in the application of requirements.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn this debate, please.

The Acting Speaker: You made a motion to adjourn debate?

Mr. Agnihotri: I make a motion to adjourn this.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 37
Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer)
Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance and move second reading of Bill 37, the Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

Let me say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, being miscellaneous statutes, contains absolutely no new policy, organizational, or other substantive changes. It is strictly a housekeeping bill. Let me give members some examples of the kinds of changes that it includes. Some 300 consequential changes are being made to align 83 individual acts with the current titles and responsibilities of the Minister of Finance and program ministers as defined by the Government Organization Act, its regulations, and various orders in council. For example, in approximately 25 acts references to the Provincial Treasurer are being replaced with the Minister of Finance where it is appropriate to change only the title.

In approximately 45 acts references to the Provincial Treasurer are being replaced with minister where significant responsibilities for financial administration were transferred in the mid-1990s from the Provincial Treasurer to individual program ministers, such as the minister designated by the Government Organization Act.

Approximately 10 acts refer to outdated titles, such as minister of revenue, Deputy Provincial Treasurer, department of Treasury.

Consequential changes need to be made and applied to these acts to reflect current titles appropriate to the individual act.

Another 10 acts refer to outdated responsibilities for financial administration. As noted above, significant responsibilities for financial administration were transferred in the mid-1990s from the Provincial Treasurer to the appropriate program minister. Outdated responsibilities of the Provincial Treasurer for financial administration are replaced with current responsibilities of the Minister of Finance and of individual ministers. Amendments address the detailed provisions of some acts which describe how certain financial transactions are to be handled.

Mr. Speaker, I ask on behalf of the Minister of Finance for the support of the House on this piece of housekeeping legislation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin debate on Bill 37, let me just say that my wife is not going to be happy. Apparently, I have to keep my playoff beard for another two weeks or so. Go, Oilers, go. For those members who are not aware, the Edmonton Oilers scored in the last minute of play and won the game 4 to 3 tonight.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed my pleasure to rise this evening and speak in second reading to Bill 37, the Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. As pointed out by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, this bill is substituting Provincial Treasurer and other incorrect language with Minister of Finance and the correct language in some 80 different acts and updates the appropriate responsibilities to the appropriate ministers. It is my recommendation to my caucus colleagues that we support this bill.

A little bit of historical information. If we go back to the year 2001, Mr. Speaker, the Government Organization Act consolidated the departments of the Provincial Treasurer and the revenue minister into one ministry, the Minister of Finance. As a result, as has already been pointed out, some 80 acts require updating.

Now, I'm just going to go through some of these – and the minister has already outlined, you know, the number of consequential changes that are being made, the fact that there's no new policy. He referred to 45 acts where references to the Provincial Treasurer are being replaced with minister and where significant responsibilities for financial administration were transferred in the mid-1990s, Mr. Speaker. That certainly brought to mind for me at least and, I would think, for others the question as to why it took 10 years for us to reach the point where we recognized that perhaps there was a need to update the legislation. Further on, we understand that there are 10 acts that refer to outdated responsibilities for financial administration. Again, these go back to the mid-1990s. I'm not sure if we're finally seeing the benefits of the Restructuring and Government Efficiency ministry or not, but 10 years later we're updating some things that, clearly, are long overdue in being addressed.

Now, I would like to once again thank the Finance minister for making her staff available to provide a briefing on this bill. I do have one question, and I'm not sure if I'll get an answer on it tonight or not, but I am curious. When the staff came over to my office to provide the briefing, they also touched on the telecommunications act and left me, at least, with the understanding that this act may also be addressed in this statutes amendment act. Specifically, it was dealing with repealing a section that dealt with the AGT Commission and the merger between AGT and Edmonton Telephones, and that's clearly not in the act now. So I'm not sure if maybe the staff are misunderstanding or perhaps it's been decided that it's going to come forward in a different fashion or maybe they just left this with us by mistake. I'm not sure. It was discussed at that time, and it's not here today, so I'm curious about that. If there's an explanation, I would be interested to hear it.

Also, Mr. Speaker, then we talked about the fact that this goes back to 2001 when those two ministries were combined. I guess the very first question that jumps into my mind is: what took so long? Why did we wait, you know, five years or thereabouts to take this action? Have there been any consequences, negative perhaps, to the government or to Albertans for having waited so long? I doubt it. I would hope not. But it does cause one to question, I suppose.

Mr. Speaker, at times governments rearrange themselves, some would argue, to make themselves look busy. Often, particularly after an election but also quite often after a cabinet shuffle, you'll see a number of ministries being switched around in terms of their responsibilities, often including a name change. I have to be honest with you; as a small businessman who was involved in the printing industry for many years, this was always a boon to our business and I'm sure to many others when governments took that step. So sometimes when you have these combinations or splitting of ministries, there is, I suppose you could say, a positive economic spinoff for business in this province, but I'm not so sure that it's always necessarily the best use of taxpayers' money. I do recall at the time when those ministries were split from the Finance minister questions about whether or not it was the most effective thing to do, and then, of course, some years later we saw them being recombined. Again, I suppose that maybe it's an indication of some good work being done by the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I'm not sure.

Just a couple of other quick comments, Mr. Speaker, and then I'll take my seat. In particular, I mentioned that there are 80 different acts that are being amended, and one of the ones that jumped out at me that we're amending is the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Hon. members will know that we currently have an amending act to the FOIP legislation in front of the House today, so I'm not sure which is more effective or efficient to deal with: the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act in this fashion or if it should have been included in the amending bill that's before the House already. It was a question that crossed my mind.

We have a reference in here to amending the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act. Mr. Speaker, certainly as a member of this Assembly I'm aware of the fact that that act is still in place, dealing with some former members, I think, probably in most cases long past former members of this Assembly. But I would submit to you that most Albertans probably are not aware of the fact that there's still a Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act in place and active. Most Albertans understand that pensions for MLAs were done away with in 1993, and I think most Albertans would be surprised to learn that 13 years later we're still dealing with that act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the one that causes me the most consternation, I suppose, is making the amendments, as the minister described in this case, to the Fuel Tax Act. We have already had a completely rewritten Fuel Tax Act introduced in this Legislature just last week, I believe, and it's being debated in the next few days. I find it interesting that we're amending a Fuel Tax Act which has been completely rewritten, and we'll have an entirely new Fuel Tax Act because it will be passed in a matter of days or weeks. I wonder why, and here I'm going to suggest that either the Finance minister or the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, perhaps, wasn't so terribly efficient. I don't know why we're taking the time to amend an act which is currently being completely rewritten and, as I say, undoubtedly will be passed by this Assembly in short order.

So those are my comments, Mr. Speaker, on Bill 37. As I say, I certainly do concur with the minister and the Finance ministry staff that there is no policy change in here. It is strictly housekeeping, although as I've pointed out, it does cause one to ponder at times as to some of the rationale that is being used. Certainly, on the whole it seems to accomplish what is being set out and ultimately, I suppose, will be good legislation for Albertans.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

Bill 36 Securities Transfer Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure tonight to rise and move second reading of Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act.

As I explained in first reading, the purpose of this legislation is to provide a single, uniform source of rules for the transfer and holding of all corporate and noncorporate securities traded in Canada. I'm going to use this opportunity to speak a bit about how this legislation came to be and why it is so significant. The act is modelled on a consultative draft of the Uniform Securities Transfer Act, USTA, which was prepared several years ago by the Canadian Securities Administrators' Uniform Securities Transfer Act Task Force. The task force conducted extensive public consultation in 2003-04 on successive drafts of the Uniform Securities Transfer Act. The USTA has received strong and favourable support. In 2004 the Uniform Law Conference of Canada approved the consultative draft, the English version, of the USTA.

Mr. Speaker, stakeholders, including the Bank of Canada, have expressed strong support for prompt, uniform implementation of securities transfer legislation within Canada. The enactment of a uniform statute within Canada represents an important example of interprovincial co-operation in responding to the needs of Canada's capital markets. The legislation provides a modernized, uniform set of rules for the transfer and holding of securities and interests in investment property that harmonizes Canada's laws as much as possible with the new, uniform commercial code in the United States, in force in 50 states.

On December 1, 2005, Ontario introduced a Securities Transfer Act in the Ontario Legislature which is practically uniform with Alberta's legislation. Most other provinces and territories have also done the same or plan to. It's clear that both the provinces and the industry recognize the importance of this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, implementation of the proposed act will require consequential amendments to other provincial acts: the Business Corporations Act, the Personal Property Security Act, and the Civil Enforcement Act. By placing securities transfer provisions in the Securities Transfer Act, securities transfer laws will apply to all types of issuers, including corporations, income funds, and the Crown. The Securities Transfer Act also amends Alberta's Personal Property Security Act to ensure that it is harmonized with the proposed Securities Transfer Act. Establishing a codified set of rules for the transfer and holding of securities and investment properties removes uncertainty about which laws apply to market transactions.

With the advent of electronic trading it provides legal clarity to modern security transfers. This is essential to ensure that Canada remains competitive not only with the United States but in an expanding global marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the Legislature to give their support to Bill 36. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act, 2006. You know, my mother always told me that I should be a securities lawyer. Well, actually she didn't tell me that, but when I look at a bill like Bill 36, I sure wish that she had pushed me in that direction. Nevertheless, here we are, and I'm learning an awful lot about securities.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments by the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. Forgive me if I reiterate some of them. Again, I can say right up front that I will be recommending to my caucus colleagues that we support this bill. There's some good work in here but, again, some questions and some good comments that came out of the debate in Ontario that I will be sharing with you in a few minutes.

As has already been outlined, Bill 36 is designed to update the securities legislation to accommodate advancements in stock purchasing. The evolution from paper stock certificates to electronic security transactions is expected to reduce administration and cut costs and make us more competitive on both a national and an international basis. I think it's no secret to anybody who has ever dealt in stocks and securities that very few of us actually hold the paper certificates anymore. That's a rare thing, indeed. So, clearly, there's a need to do this.

Bill 36 modernizes the legal framework for securities transactions, and certainly one result of this will be to reduce investor risk. Bill 36, in fact, would harmonize our legislation with other jurisdictions, including the United States. A large percentage of securities transactions, we know, are now cross-border between Canada and the United States, so certainly that would make sense. The one thing that it does not do – and this was identified as a concern in Ontario as well, Mr. Speaker – is that it does not improve the Alberta Securities Commission enforcement branch. That's something that certainly the Official Opposition would have seen included in here, but we'll talk a little bit more about that later.

Now, historically, Mr. Speaker, as I said, securities transactions involved a paper certificate. As the number of transactions increased over the years, paper clearly became impractical and the movement of such paper probably even more so. This created a logical environment for electronic securities transactions. The financial evolution means that investors would not require a paper certificate anymore to demonstrate that they had purchased or owned securities. Today this process is known as an indirect holding system.

While security transactions became electronic, security legislation did not necessarily modify at the same rate. As a consequence, a number of problems are surfacing. First, investors are having difficulty using electronic securities as collateral because security legislation is not providing legal certainty. Secondly, without clear legislative rules to detail the electronic security transfers, this area remains ambiguous, adding risk to the investor. Thirdly, the United States has updated its securities laws to accommodate the indirect holding system, but Canadian regulators are lagging somewhat behind.

Now, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky pointed out, Ontario has more or less taken the lead in terms of updating their policy. It's interesting to point out that in Ontario that legislation was vetted by an all-party committee, Mr. Speaker, something that doesn't happen in Alberta. Certainly, in Ontario in the case of that all-party committee all parties supported the legislation unanimously. So I think that's a good indication that, in fact, all-party committees can work, and when the legislation is good, they can work very well and, in fact, agree completely.

Now, I'd just like to go through a number of the pros and cons, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, of Bill 36. Security legislation needs to reflect progress in the marketplace. Most people would agree that issuing paper certificates, as I alluded to earlier, would be unrealistic by today's standards, and I don't think that there's any expectation on the part of the investor that that would happen. Bill 36 attempts to adopt these changes; that is, to move from paper to electronic. In Ontario Minister Phillips indicated that the administrative burden that could be saved is anywhere from $100 million to $140 million. So, clearly, there are some cost savings to be realized as well for the industry.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, without updating current industry practices into legislation, the current system will continue to remain somewhat ambiguous in a legal sense. Again, that can lead to investor risk, and investor risk leads to reduced investment. Bill 36, as I've already pointed out as well, attempts to harmonize our legislation with other jurisdictions, including the United States. Ultimately, that should make trading more efficient.

Now, I mentioned that the bill doesn't do anything to improve enforcement practices at the Alberta Securities Commission. I think that we also want to watch closely the ramifications of this bill, should it pass, once it's passed, particularly as to the potential for cost savings, whether or not it does in fact benefit industry in that regard and makes us more competitive on a global basis, which is part of what it's intended to do.

I have some questions, I suppose. Again, as I mentioned when we were discussing Bill 37, why has it taken so long for this bill to come forward? I would like to thank the minister once again for providing her staff, including a securities lawyer who has spent a large part of his life working on this. Clearly, you know, it's a complicated piece of legislation. It's not something that could happen overnight, but I think that when we look at the advent of computers and day trading and, you know, do-it-yourself investors, it seems, at least to my uneducated mind, somewhat odd that it's taken this long for us to bring forward legislation that would allow us to catch up to the electronic age.

I'm wondering, from either the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky or the minister, if Alberta gave any consideration to watching Ontario's situation once they've put their legislation into place and just sort of seen how well it works or if we decided to move ahead without waiting for that to happen. Clearly, it would seem to me that we've decided to move ahead without waiting for some actual experience from Ontario.

I mentioned that there are some concerns out of Ontario about the regulator side and the fact that the Ontario Securities Commission – at least, some that are fairly close to it would say that it's no further at arm's length from their government than our Securities Commission is here. Certainly, that's been an issue in the Alberta Legislature for at least the 18 months that I've been a member of this Assembly.

The Official Opposition is hopeful that Bill 36 will increase Alberta companies' opportunities to raise capital. I'm wondering if maybe the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky would like to address that aspect of the bill in more detail, perhaps when we get to the committee stage, and I'm curious whether or not Alberta Finance has done any calculations as to what that savings might be administratively, if it's anywhere near the number that has been mentioned in Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to just touch on some of the debate that came out of the Ontario Legislature, and the reason for that is because the government has talked an awful lot about how this bill pretty much parallels exactly the legislation that was introduced in Ontario. So I thought to myself: well, if the bill is almost exactly the same as the legislation in Ontario, then some of the debate might be similar as well. I was quite pleasantly surprised to see that some of the concerns raised by – oh, I guess that they would probably be Conservative opposition members in Ontario. Some of those concerns are pretty much in line with some of the concerns that I have with the bill here in Alberta.

So, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky mentioned, the bill was first introduced in the Ontario Legislature on December 1 of last year, and then on April 26 of this year, so only last week, the bill was in second reading in Ontario. Gerry Phillips, the Minister of Government Services, acknowledged that one of the reasons that they introduced the bill back in December was to give other provinces an opportunity to examine the bill. He notes in his comments on the 26th of April that Alberta has “introduced a very similar piece of legislation,” and in fact we know that to be true.

Then, Mr. Speaker – I believe this is another government member – Mrs. Liz Sandals from Guelph-Wellington indicates that she's surprised that it took so long for Ontario to update its corporate laws, “especially those relating to securities transfer,” very much like my thoughts when we were briefed by the minister's staff here. Even a government member in Ontario is a little surprised that it's taking so long for them to enact this legislation. The same member from Ontario, Mrs. Sandals, comments on the fact that, in fact, they do use an all-party standing committee system in Ontario and that all three parties involved voted unanimously to support the bill that was being dealt with in Ontario. So, again, if it can work in Ontario, I don't see why it couldn't work here.

An opposition member, Mr. Joseph Tascona from Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, spoke that afternoon. He commented, as I suggested, that the opposition in Ontario had concerns about the Ontario Securities Commission not necessarily being more than arm's length removed from the government and wanting to “make sure that everybody feels that the rule of law has been respected and that there's fairness in the process that goes on in the investigation and also in the prosecution.” You will know, Mr. Speaker, that those are concerns very much similar to concerns that the Official Opposition has raised here in Alberta.

Another member, Mr. John O'Toole from Durham, in speaking to the bill in Ontario, which, again, Mr. Speaker, is by all accounts almost identical to the bill here, asks: “I mean, who's checking the checker? Isn't that an age-old question? Who checks the checker?” Then he goes on to describe the fact that in Ontario, very much like in Alberta, the Ontario Securities Commission sets the regulations and they do the investigations and they basically do the prosecuting as well. So it's the age-old question of the fox guarding the henhouse, I suppose, and that was a very serious concern that the opposition in Ontario raised when this very similar bill was dealt with there just last week.

The same Mr. O'Toole says: “Minister, there's a lot of work to be done on this, and I commend you on the little that has been done on the securities transfer issue. It seems like a rather long bill that hasn't got a lot in it.” I'm not so sure that that's exactly the case with this, but as I alluded to in my opening remarks, it's certainly a very, very long bill. While I do believe that it goes some measure in terms of addressing some of the issues facing investors in Alberta,

I'm not so sure that it necessarily does all that we would have hoped that it would do.

10:20

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think I've pretty much said what I needed to say in second reading. I look forward to the committee stage of debate on Bill 36. There may be an opportunity for some amendments although I must concede that in speaking to the stakeholders that I've spoken to, they seem to be genuinely pleased with the direction that this act would take us. As I suggest, it would appear that, in fact, it's perhaps long overdue if anything. So, certainly, it's something that will be supported by the Official Opposition.

I thank you for having given me the opportunity to speak to it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a long bill, so I'll make a short speech. I always like to help out and make the people over there happy.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this bill has to come. I'm trying to remember. I think it was 1967 when the paper blizzard shut down the New York Stock Exchange, and we're still dealing with paper. I take it that the major purpose of this bill is to recognize that we're in a very different situation in that securities can't remain paper based as they have in the past, and we have to move on with this. So I don't think you'll have any argument on this side about the necessity for doing this.

I'm pleased that all the provinces are trying to get their act together. But, Mr. Speaker, it begs the question, again, that I asked when we dealing with the regulatory part of it. If this makes sense that we have to do this together as the member was talking about, the global society and that, why can't the provinces get together and have a national securities regulator? It seems to me that rather than dealing with all these different bills all over the provinces, we could be working together in a much better way. Certainly, we've had our problems here with the regulation and that. I don't expect that we'd have the problems once we do this. But it just seems to me to be unnecessary duplication, and I think the minister, on the previous bill dealing with the regulatory agent, said that maybe we should be looking at that. I would like us to go in that direction because it seems to me that that would solve some of these problems.

It's not a federal act. It would be the provinces working together under one national securities regulatory body. Maybe it could be in Calgary or wherever. But all the things that we're doing, this bill and the previous bill, Mr. Speaker, seem to me to indicate that we have to work together, all the provinces certainly. As the member talked about, this will make us more competitive with the Americans on commercial transactions. I guess that I don't understand the reluctance, in doing what we're doing here with these bills, trying to make it so that there's some reasonable movement between the provinces, why we don't look at that regulator.

I think that in the introduction the previous member said: maybe that's a way to look at it. I would hope that if there was some influence that they would look at this down the way. We'll pass this. Certainly, we have no objections. I think that this is an absolute necessity in this modern day and age. But I would hope that we would take a look down the way at the national securities regulator.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate.

Mr. Knight: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Bill 38

Livestock Identification and Commerce Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening and move second reading of Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act.

This legislation is primarily a consolidation and revision of three existing acts: the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, and the Livestock and Livestock Products Act. It will be jointly administered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Livestock Identification Services Ltd., which serves the ministry as a delegated authority.

Mr. Speaker, we needed to develop this legislation because it is evident that the livestock industry has changed significantly over the past few decades. Not only do livestock transactions occur more frequently; they occur across a larger region and may involve numerous sales agents, dealers, and owners. It's no longer a case of one owner raising an animal from birth to slaughter. It's become a much more complex system than that. The industry has certainly changed, and so must the way we regulate it.

Working with the industry, we've put together legislation that should be much more effective in addressing the realities of today's livestock industry. The proposed legislation will enhance and streamline the identification and sales transactions related to livestock. We started working with stakeholders in 2003, and through three years of close consultation with the industry we've put together legislation that reflects the goals of both government and industry.

I'd like to provide the members with a brief overview of the proposed legislation, how it revises the current legislation. The current Brand Act serves to establish a system of identifying livestock. The allotment of brands is used to identify who has an ownership interest in the livestock. The proposed legislation maintains these primary provisions but clarifies the legal effect of branding and livestock inspection and confirms that placing a brand on livestock creates a presumption of ownership. The inspection process is in place to assist in ownership determination. It broadens the types of identifiers that livestock inspectors can use to identify livestock such as the national Canadian Cattle Identification Agency tag program. It also provides flexibility in defining livestock as cattle, horses, and other species designated as livestock in the regulations.

The current Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act serves to facilitate fair commerce by providing a set of industry-wide rules and forms associated with livestock transactions. It requires the inspection of livestock as well as the use of bills of sale and the completion of manifests. Currently, the security interest declaration on the manifest is voluntary. The proposed legislation will maintain these primary provisions but will make the security interest declaration mandatory. It will set out a mandatory requirement that sellers disclose security interests in the livestock they are selling. It clarifies that the purpose of livestock inspection is to confirm that the person possessing the livestock is indeed the owner or the owner's agent and that the sale proceeds are flowing to the correct party. It also confirms that inspections are required prior to transporting livestock out of Alberta and on arrival at inspection sites. It also standardizes the use of manifests and bills of sale.

The regulations will address the operational details relating to where and when livestock inspection is required and operational details relating to inspection fees. The provision for inspection fees and associated commission results in Bill 38 being classified as a money bill.

Additionally, the legislation will extend a provision called the statutory bar to conversion. This is a practice that protects buyers from being sued by the seller's lenders. This legislation addresses the anomaly that the first buyer is protected but in theory subsequent buyers could be sued. I say theoretically because it has not been used in practice. Lenders rarely attach security interests to specific livestock, and unlike with cars there's no way for a buyer to check for liens and no ways for lenders to identify a specific asset. This provision is conditional upon meeting the requirements of the legislation. It will bar conversion lawsuits against buyers who follow the requirements of the act, pay in accordance with the manifest, and otherwise engage in a bona fide transaction.

The legislation is intended to improve the efficiency and certainty of commerce in livestock. It reflects the commitment of both government and industry to improve industry's due diligence practices, including those that relate to better recognition of the security interests of lenders. The statutory bar is designed to enhance market certainty to avoid any lingering uncertainty that might affect the market when people not engaged in a transaction nonetheless acquire the risk of liability.

The current Livestock and Livestock Products Act serves to promote the integrity of marketing by increasing the confidence in livestock transactions through dealer licensing, dealer bonding, prompt payment to deemed trust accounts, and other appropriate business rules. The proposed legislation maintains these primary provisions by clarifying the requirements for dealer licensing, bonding licence suspension, and usage of trust accounts. It requires livestock dealers receiving money from the sale of someone else's livestock to deposit those sale proceeds into a trust account to protect the seller's money. It also clarifies processing related to making a claim on a dealer's security.

Currently the Livestock Patrons' Claims Review Tribunal functions pursuant to its regulation. The tribunal administers two assurance funds funded by participants. The proposed legislation maintains these primary provisions and will continue the tribunal and its two funds as well as clarify the tribunal's role and function. In the end, this consolidated and revised act will help the day-to-day commerce of the livestock industry operate in a more transparent, harmonized, and predictable manner.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation was built during three years of intense consultation with the livestock industry, and we believe that this legislation reflects the goals of the government and industry. The act reflects and balances diverse interests to drive commerce forward. It reduces lending risk by promoting the integrity of livestock marketing. I believe that enactment of the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act is in the best interest of the livestock industry and the lending community. It's certainly going to help our industry advance in the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, that pretty much sums up the nuts and bolts of the proposed act. I encourage all members of this Assembly to give their full support to Bill 38. However, even though I know that there are many, many waiting to speak to this bill, we have many other things on the agenda, so I would move that we adjourn the debate on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: When we last adjourned on this subject matter, we were dealing with amendment A1. Are there any comments, questions, or further amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? On the amendment that's before us, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to the proposed amendment to Bill 20 introduced by the Official Opposition. The wording of 24(2.1)(b) is very general, and it would expand the scope of restricted information greatly. Again, this appears to be an attempt to hide government information without justification and diminish accountability.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, this section demonstrates the hypocrisy that exists within this Progressive Conservative government. On the one hand, we hear this government praise the value of accountability and criticize the unethical activities of the former federal government. On the other hand, this proposed clause would protect this provincial government from public scrutiny. It is absolutely outrageous that this government would propose and expect Albertans to accept an amendment that would hide chief internal auditor documents from public access for 15 years. Clearly, this government has developed a sense that they are somehow above accountability. I support this amendment because we don't want this power-corrupt government to add more layers of secrecy and reduce legitimate access to information.

This House should focus on protection of the privacy of citizens of this province. This should be the priority of this government. Many people have concerns about identity theft and fraud committed on and off the Internet. People don't want to wait for years for the Privacy Commissioner to review their cases. There are lots of delays and pending work, and people are frustrated, angry. The Privacy Commissioner may need some more staff or resources to review those cases.

Even with the required amount of money for the information, it takes a lengthy time. We get half of the document blacked out, sometimes blank ones, or withheld. Let me give you the example of a FOIP request I made for an agreement between the Allen Gray long-term care facility, a care centre in my riding, and Capital health. After paying a certain amount of money, the statement and some papers I received were not the current statement or the current papers. It was six or seven years old, and it took me two months, maybe three months. I hope it's not repeated again like this for somebody else. The people living inside the long-term care centre are vulnerable. They wanted the answer right away, but because I was totally dependent on the FOIP department, I couldn't help them right away.

I definitely support 50 per cent of this bill, Bill 20, but also there were already a few amendments introduced. I oppose 50 per cent of the bill, those which are already mentioned in the amendments.

This government might be thinking that they are here forever, but I'd just remind them that every kingdom has to fall one day. It is about time to be transparent. Otherwise, the time is running out.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Chairman, I heard complaints from two constituents against the office of the Privacy Commissioner. I have those papers with me here. Maybe I will ask permission to table those letters. I can't do it because they didn't give me the undertaking yet. They filed their case against their former employer, who has used their extensive personal information – name, address, phone numbers, bank accounts, signatures, SIN numbers, e-mail, et cetera – to violate their privacy by sharing information on the Internet and by contacting their banks, watching them in their homes and at work, et cetera.

First, the commission asked them to submit a written submission through a lawyer, then the oral part of the inquiry, and then investigations. The people whose privacy was violated, not the defendant, made these efforts. I mean, the commissioner didn't even ask the offender to come and explain his side of the story. But the people paid money, filled out all those forms. After even 19 months they didn't get any proper answer, and they are frustrated. The guy who is to be blamed got bankruptcy and didn't show up at the inquiry, and he should be liable to come to the commission. Now his company is bankrupt, and he has started a new company. I don't know how the commission will follow that person because now he's working under some other company name. The process has taken 19 months, as they said in this letter, with no outcome yet in sight. They invested time, money, resources, and they are still frustrated.

The reason I'm supporting this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is because the present law has got no teeth. We must focus on protection of privacy of citizens in this province. From the proposed amendments introduced so far, this bill could be very satisfying to Albertans. Then we will support this bill. Otherwise, at this stage, as I said before, we support 50 per cent of this bill, and 50 per cent of the bill needs proper amendments.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment to Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, which strikes out section 5. As indicated, the wording in 24(2.1)(b) is very general and would expand the scope of the restricted information greatly. Again, this appears to be an attempt to hide government information while at the same time suggesting that we are trying to open up the information to the public and other interested parties to hold the government accountable.

Clearly, one of the great needs in this province is to reassure people that we do want more involvement of people in the public process and the policy process to encourage more critical thinking and to demand accountability, and this will not move us toward that. It will actually diminish that accountability and demonstrates a level of hypocrisy, Mr. Chairman, on the one hand, where we praise the value of accountability and, on the other hand, fail to actually produce in terms of this legislation. Along with others that have spoken, I think we will have great difficulty in approving this without further changes.

Some of these are housekeeping changes, but on balance this will not enhance the transparency and accountability of this government. The perception from us on this side of the House is that it will make things more expensive, more difficult, more discouraging, and undermine the public process that we all seek, on this side of the House at least. This will not serve democracy and, in fact, could promote corruption and public policy that ignores the realities on the ground. If people cannot get access to the information readily, obviously this is not a win for transparency and accountability.

A confident leadership is not bent on covering up but, rather, opening up to engage citizens in a dynamic and democratic exchange of ideas about where we're going and, just as important, how we're getting there, on whether we are following ethical, fair, and accountable processes or not. A public that doesn't know what is being decided and how it's being decided is an increasingly isolated, cynical, and disengaged population.

I'm afraid that for this particular amendment I can't find the support, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment has to do with the chief internal auditor, and along these lines I find it, frankly, unbelievable that we would take a 15-year exclusion of documents belonging to the chief internal auditor of Alberta and say that we cannot have access for 15 years if the government doesn't want us to look at that.

The purpose of the chief internal auditor of Alberta is to provide independent objective assurance and advisory services. It assists management in meeting business objectives by evaluating and making recommendations to improve the government's risk management, controllership, accountability and governance processes and to improve the effectiveness, efficiency and economy of government operations.

That's right from the government website. Given that mandate, it seems to me that that's what they want. Government by extension is: we want to be efficient and the rest of it. But the Legislature is to also look after and control the cabinet and the government, Mr. Chairman, and to exploit from FOIP the auditor's documents to see how the government process is working, what controls are there, what accountability is there. It seems to me that that's precisely what we should be doing here in the Legislature, and I find it unbelievable that we'd have to wait 15 years before we could actually take a look at what was happening if that's what the government wanted.

Mr. Chairman, we're talking about transparency, accountability. We hear lots of lip service here. What we're doing is going backwards. Dealing with FOIP now, getting information, is difficult to say the least. Now we're even making it harder. I can't understand why we'd be worried about assisting when the mandate on the website says that it's assisting management and "making recommendations to improve government's risk . . . controllership, accountability and governance processes and to improve the effectiveness, efficiency and economy of government operations." Why would we want to hide that? That makes no sense to me at all. There may be a temporary reason that we couldn't do it in FOIP. I can't for the life of me think of what that reason might be. But 15 years? Fifteen years? It's unbelievable.

I think that if this government believes in transparency, they should at least give lip service to – it seems to me to be common sense that we should remove section 5 of this proposed amendment. Certainly, in the NDP we would support the amendment coming from the Official Opposition, Mr. Chairman. You know, I don't understand these sorts of draconian measures – I really don't – what this is all about, why now we're bringing all these changes in in what I believe is a totally unnecessary way.

Mr. Chairman, I would certainly encourage members of the Assembly – I won't hold my breath – to support this particular amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak on the amendment to strike out section 5 of Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. I think it's important to speak to this because, realistically, in looking at the section and the fact that the government is looking to amend section 24 after subsection (2), which clearly deals with some of the things that should be there that should be accessible by FOIP, this really brings clarity to the charge that this is not the freedom of information act but the privacy and secrecy act. The desire of the government to bring secrecy to the whole notion of this type of legislation is indeed so particularly odious.

I think this should be opposed on substantive technical grounds. Dealing with section (2) and looking at the fact that it is the section that opens up areas for the purpose of being accessible to the public – indeed, the government's amendment deals with closing it off. It deals with refusing: "must refuse to disclose to an applicant." That's the whole thrust of that whereas the actual section (2) does not deal with "must refuse"; it deals with the whole fact of trying to open up and to deal with, actually, the true purpose, which most Albertans and most acts of this type are meant to deal with. This is a restrictive measure, the government's amendment. This is, I think, not something that the public of Alberta, the citizens of Alberta, the people across this land think that these acts are meant to deal with and to achieve.

In terms of the construction of the law, I mean, if we look at the whole section, it looks at the more realistic ways of statistical surveys, things that have been around for a while, substantive rules. These are things that should be opening up. I expect that the will of this Legislature will be seen in the courts. The will of this Legislature will be seen in the courts. I hope that this is quoted to be seen that way, especially from the opposition's point of view, that this particular amendment on the government's side is something that should be turned down, turned out, and refused in any court challenge. That is something that I think will happen in the future because it does not apply to that particular section.

For that reason, I ask everyone here to accept the amendment and to strike out section 5. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise this evening and speak to the amendment moved by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung, which would see section 5 struck out of Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. I'll try to be relatively brief because the hour is late. There's still a little bit of a hockey game involving a team from down south somewhere that apparently is tied after the second period, and I'm going to guess that some members might wish to catch the remainder of that game. So we'll try to finish this off fairly quickly.

It may have been touched on already, but the wording of this section 24(2.1)(b) that currently exists in the government's proposed amendment, and is being recommended by the Official Opposition to be struck, is terribly general and would appear that it would in fact expand greatly the restriction of information. I think that the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning pointed out that it certainly appears not only to the Official Opposition but to media outlets in this province and, in fact, to almost anybody who's ever tried to access information through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, that this act is much more about the protection of privacy than it is about the freedom of information. All we're doing here, it would appear to me, is further enabling the government to do just that, protect information.

I find it ironic, quite frankly, that on a day when we've talked an awful lot about openness and accountability and restoring the confidence of the electorate in their elected officials, we now find ourselves debating a bill that, in fact, clearly goes the opposite direction by making it ever harder to access information about the goings-on of the people's government. In fact, it was pointed out by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that 15 years is what this section 5 is calling for, and I just can't imagine why there would be any need to protect information of this government for 15 years. Bear in mind that this is not 15 years from the date that something happens; this is 15 years from the time that the chief internal auditor actually either drops his investigation or completes his investigation, which could have been going on for a period of years prior. So we could in fact be talking 20 years or even longer from the time that a situation develops and the chief internal auditor is brought in to investigate. It's incomprehensible to me.

The Premier, who's retiring, will have been here for 13 years. I think this really puts it into context: this is saying that we would not be allowed to access information for two years before the current Premier became the Premier. Fifteen years in an awfully long time. They say that in politics a week is a long time. Fifteen years is literally an eon, and it's outrageous, quite frankly, that we're being asked to have the people of Alberta wait for 15 years before they can access information that the chief internal auditor would have been looking at.

You know, let's also remember that the chief internal auditor doesn't report to the members of this Assembly. He reports to the government, to Executive Council. It's often been suggested – I can't say it for a fact, but it's certainly been suggested – that some members involved in that audit are nothing more than patronage appointments, friends of the government, and certainly . . .

An Hon. Member: Close friends?

Mr. R. Miller: Perhaps even close friends.

Maybe that's why we're asking to protect that information for 15 years. I'm not sure, but it certainly pauses one to think. As I said, in an era when openness and accountability are, sort of, the buzz words – and there's certainly a greater appetite for that from the people of the province – this is clearly a step backwards.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out, as it regards this particular amendment asking to strike out section 5, that the unethical activities of the former federal government have been mentioned in this House a lot today and, in fact, a lot over the last 18 months since I've been here, but the question is: how are we to be assured that similar unethical activities aren't taking place here in Alberta with this government? Again, by hiding that information away that might show – perhaps it would show that there haven't been similar unethical activities taking place here. Perhaps it would show that this government is clean as a whistle.

Mr. Backs: Come on. Look at those faces.

Mr. R. Miller: They're clean as a whistle, those faces.

But if that's the case, Mr. Chairman, then why are we taking such drastic measures to protect that information? Why aren't we throwing the books wide open and inviting Albertans to come in and have a look if, in fact, things are as clean as whistle? But we're not going that way. In fact, we're going the other way. So that certainly is troubling to me and, as I said, not only to the opposition but to several others out there as well.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly recommend that this particular amendment as moved by the Member for Edmonton-McClung be supported by all members of this Legislature. I think it is one of many changes that would have to occur in order for this amendment to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to receive the support of this member. It would be a step in the right direction were we to pass this amendment. I look forward to hearing the result of the vote, and then perhaps we can move on to further amendments as I know that they're coming as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, as I said, I wasn't holding my breath, and it was a good thing when I'm expecting transparency and openness from this one-party state government. Again, it seems to me that we're moving backwards. We're taking a freedom of information act that was difficult enough to deal with, to get the answers that you wanted, and we're making it even more difficult.

The reality is that it seems to be that in other jurisdictions where we don't have one-party rule, we seem to be moving in the other direction. We had a discussion about the cynicism and apathy and all the other things. Well, no wonder. People can't get the information. We can't get the information. I try, Mr. Chairman, through Motions for Returns, Written Questions. We get stonewalled there. They say: go to FOIP. We get stonewalled there. Now we're going to make it even more difficult in what, as I said, was a most difficult proposal. No wonder there's so much cynicism out there.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Again, why do we have to take an act and sugar-coat it and say, "Well, it's to deal with the USA PATRIOT Act of the United States," and then stick on all these amendments that make this government even less transparent and more secret? I guess that's what comes when you've had absolute power for so long. You don't want to share information. You don't want it to get out, Mr. Chairman. We have to protect it. We have to sugar-coat it. We can't let the public know what's going on. That seems to be the reality of what we're facing here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to again look at one specific part of FOIP in this, the five-year FOIP exclusion of ministerial briefing materials. I take it that the argument for this is based on the argument that public access to these documents may impair the government's ability to prepare for session. Frankly, that's absolute nonsense. Legislative debates based on such notes are public, and to bar them is to invite accusations of secrecy. For a government already plagued by lack of accountability and transparency, we're amazed that they would even have the gall to bring forward these amendments.

I mentioned before in this bill, Mr. Chairman, that the very spirit of democracy rests on the fact that the government is formed by and for its citizens. Therefore, its documents, preparatory notes, and discussions must be made public and available to the public, particularly considering that such ministerial briefings do not – and I stress this: do not – and should not be considered as revealing the substance of the deliberations of the Executive Council any more than any other ministerial comments and debates do in the Legislature. They're public. You can't stop it. Maybe we'll find a way to not have Hansard next. Maybe that's the next step with this open government. [interjection] Tried that last week, yeah.

I just don't understand this sort of overkill about information. Is it that they're worried that something will come out and embarrass the government? Whenever governments try to block and control things, Mr. Chairman, that's inevitably when they get into more trouble.

I just want to be helpful here, Mr. Chairman, be helpful and try to help this government. The Official Opposition tried to help them out a little while ago, and they turned it down. So in the spirit of co-operation, I'd like to bring in a further amendment. I have the copies here that I would hand out. Do you want me to wait until it has time to go around or proceed?

The Deputy Chair: I think you may proceed.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It was under my colleague Dr. Pannu that this was signed to move that Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, be amended "by striking out section 4."

Now, section 4 has to do with what I was talking about, Mr. Chairman, the five-year FOIP exclusion of ministerial briefing materials. I want to repeat; these are briefing materials. This has nothing to do with deliberations of Executive Council. As I said, briefing notes should be no more valid than what people say in the Legislature here. Why we'd want to have these out of the domain for five years is overkill frankly. As I said, in the spirit of co-operation I would hope that the government members would think that we're going too far with this and support this particular amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I'd beg leave to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I call for a vote on the motion to adjourn debate, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Renner: I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 20.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and the fact that the south is about to join the north in celebrations, we hope, I move that the House now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:08 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 2, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I had the pleasure of attending an art show of donated art from Mexico, and the proceeds were sent back to Mexico for the children. I took the opportunity of inviting the Minister of Culture of Colima, so it is my honour today to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the hon. Minister of Culture of Colima, Mexico, Ana Cecilia García Luna. She is accompanied by Rebeca Gonzalez, Leonor Sanchez, Fernando Rodriguez, Fernando Rodriguez Jr., and Cristina Amaro. If we could all give them our traditional welcome.

head:

Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature two guests that are in the members' gallery, Margaret and Britney Millar. Margaret is a business owner in Kingston, Ontario, but most importantly, I think, she's here to meet the McClellan clan as Britney Millar is my son's fiancée. Britney plays for the Chimos women's hockey team here. I hate to admit this, but they lost to the Calgary Extreme in playoffs. I'd ask both of our guests to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mr. Fred Atiq and Mr. Charles Hare of Fiberex Glass Corporation. Mr. Atiq is the founder of Fiberex and an award-winning industrial engineer. Mr. Hare is Fiberex's customer service manager and helped Fiberex win a supplier of the year award in 2002. Fiberex is one of the largest independent glass fibre manufacturers in North America. They operate a state-of-the-art facility in Leduc. Fred and Charles are here today because they are very concerned about dozens of power failures that have disrupted their operations in the last few years. They're hoping that they can get some quick action on that. So I would ask Fred and Charles to please stand and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure again to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly a fine group of some 60 students from Edmonton-

Castle Downs, namely from St. Lucy Catholic elementary school. They are accompanied by Mrs. Cole Macedo, also Ms Isabelle Dennis, Mr. Daniel Forestier, and Natalie Mercy. All of them were guided through this Legislature by my junior high school teacher, Mr. Charles Grelli. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour again to introduce a group of people from the Countryside Christian school, which is located near Edberg. There are 19 people here from this school. They are led by their teacher, Mr. Justin Thiessen, and parent helpers Darcy and Maxine Goossen and Reg and Connie Siemens. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of this House 43 happy and excited students from St. Patrick's community school in Red Deer. This group of smart and enthusiastic students are among the most culturally diverse classes in Red Deer, with students born in Colombia, the Philippines, China, and St. John's, Newfoundland. We can celebrate a very bright and colourful future in Alberta. They are accompanied by their principal and teachers Mrs. Kathleen Finnigan, Mrs. Irene Pickle, Mr. Jon Burkinshaw, and Karen Peden. They're in the members' and I think the visitors' gallery as well. I would ask them all to rise to receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House two people from my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop live in Bow Island. Eric is the head of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta. I think they're seated in the public gallery. I'd like to ask Eric and Darlene to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly the newest member of my staff. Mr. Malcolm Lavoie is a third-year honours economics degree student at UBC. He spent two years on the national swim team and, indeed, swam in the world championships last year. He is also fluently bilingual in French and English. I would ask Malcolm to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Reliability of Electricity Supply

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deregulation of electricity in this province has threatened the financial viability of untold numbers of businesses, including a number in the Leduc-Nisku industrial area. Ongoing power interruptions have cost companies such as Fibrex Glass Corporation millions of dollars. This government's failure to enforce reasonable standards on the deregulated electricity industry could force successful Alberta businesses to other provinces. My questions are to the Premier. Is it the position of this government to have electricity consumers, who have already lost $9 million due to the deregulation policy, then pay millions more for transmission and distribution system upgrades just so they can have reliable electricity?

Mr. Klein: Is it the policy? No, I don't think it's the policy. I don't know about the Department of Energy, Mr. Speaker. The minister is away, and I will take that question under advisement. Oh, I understand the minister of agriculture can respond.

Mr. Speaker, just before I turn it over to him, I've had the opportunity of visiting this plant. That's when they were using gas, and of course the price of gas is so expensive. I've seen the news release that the Liberals put out on this particular situation. Apparently the report they refer to does not say who should cover the additional cost for power upgrades. As I pointed out, the Energy minister is away at the Western Energy Alliance meeting, so I'll have the hon. minister of agriculture respond as best as he can.

The Speaker: We'll move on to the next one. Perhaps there'll be time.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that this particular issue has gone on for years and the solution is well known, will this government commit now to take urgent action to address electricity problems in the Leduc-Nisku industrial area?

1:40

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, before I turn it over to the hon. minister, the news release says:

"This government must show some leadership and support a real solution to this power supply problem," said Taft. "In the wealthiest province in Canada, why are some businesses experiencing Third World power problems?"

But he doesn't offer a solution.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, acting in the capacity of Minister of Economic Development while he's away, it is my understanding – and the Premier actually is very correct when he talks about the fact that the issue is well known. Fibrex has been in discussions with Economic Development in the recent past. This is a request for something that is above what is standard in the industry in that area. We recognize that there's a new substation that needs to be built in that area. In fact, the EUB has approved that, and it will be moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're just looking for action here.

Given that Fibrex is actually now considering relocating to Manitoba, jeopardizing the jobs of 170 Albertans, will the Premier agree to meet with the Fibrex CEO and other members of the Leduc industrial business community immediately in order to decide upon a solution?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister indicated that a new substation is going to be built. I've already met with the individual involved, but I'm always interested in touring his plant. I found it a very interesting exercise. The last time I toured, he was complaining about the price of gas. He's converted now to electricity, and we're trying to resolve that problem.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition question will come from the Leader of the Official Opposition, but just a reminder before we move on. First of all, we do not make mention of the absence of hon. members in the House on a given occasion, and secondly, we do not use the names of members in the House either.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Resource Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this tired Tory government can't stick to a budget, has watched the heritage fund lose 50 per cent of its value, and has no long-term plan for our economy after this latest oil boom. High commodity prices continue to make up for poor fiscal management by this Conservative government. Now the Aon report based on Alberta Finance projections shows that Alberta is on a fiscal downward spiral. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Will this minister follow the Alberta Liberal lead and save greater portions of the unbudgeted natural resource revenues so that Alberta's economic advantage becomes genuinely sustainable?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say a definite no to accepting the Liberal policy. Had we done that, there would be needed health facilities that would not be under construction, there would be twinning of an important road to Fort McMurray that wouldn't be under construction, and many other things.

However, I do take exception to his comments about the heritage fund losing its value. There's no question, Mr. Speaker, that there is a change in the value of the heritage fund because a number of assets were removed from it. But today the heritage fund, in fact, has an additional $2 billion value, and it is a true and a real value, and it's projected to have a value of $14.6 billion at the end of this fiscal year. To commit a definitive amount, a percentage of revenues, to that when this province is experiencing 4.5 per cent growth – the anticipated could be over 5 per cent – and much-needed capital to support that growth I think would be irresponsible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the government's own numbers predict that Alberta's prosperity may not last, will this minister reject additional shortsighted prosperity bonuses and chose sound fiscal management over personal political legacies?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me correct . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, let me correct one thing right off. This is the second day in a row we've heard that the Aon report uses Alberta Finance's numbers. In fact, if you read the report, if you understood the report, you would understand that they are using an assumption of a reduction of 3 per cent per year in resource revenue. It's their assumption, not Finance's assumption. Now, we do in a very prudent way show oil and gas royalty revenues at what we believe is a very appropriate, conservative estimate. However, Aon's numbers in that report are not Finance's numbers. They are an assumption. If they understood economists, they would know that economists use a base of assumptions to lay out a long-term strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is it this minister's or is it this government's position that in the long term Alberta's resource revenues are going to diminish 3 per cent every year? Is it a valid assumption?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have analysts from the oil and gas industry, from the private sector that we use to base our assumptions on every year, and every year we're criticized by the opposition because we're low on our assumptions. So I say again: what we do is base our assumptions in a very conservative way to ensure that we can maintain the important programs that we have for health, education, seniors, children. You can't get an analysis of oil and gas beyond one year, let alone two or three. We know there's volatility, and that's why we have a number of protections in this province such as the sustainability fund to guard against that volatility.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sale of Surplus Land in Fort McMurray

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In last year's special report by the Auditor General on the sale of surplus government land in Fort McMurray the following was noted: some land sales were not publicly tendered, no analysis of appraisal, no independent review and challenge of sales. Yesterday the minister of infrastructure could not provide accurate, detailed information on the latest surplus land sale of 157 acres that occurred last summer in Fort McMurray. My first question is to the minister. What was the appraisal value of that 157 acre parcel of land?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member asked questions about the sale of some land in Fort McMurray, and I said at the time that we would investigate because I, of course, did not have the information right at hand. I did point out to them that it could be possible that there was a misprint in the Gazette, that in fact the decimal was in the wrong place. That turns out to be true, and I will be filing papers to show that. The hon. member said that it had been in the Gazette since July 15. That is untrue. The fact is that it was changed back on February 28 of '06 to the correct number. There was another mistake in it that the member did not notice as far as the property was concerned, and that was in the numbering of the lot.

The Speaker: The hon. member.
