I'd like to start with the question of the resource revenues that the province receives and the royalty rates that we receive. I'm wondering how the minister sees looking at royalty rates on our oil and gas, which are the declining revenues, on the coal-bed methane, and on the oil sands side. I note that the royalty regime that we've got in place now was done I think when oil was about $15 a barrel. Is it suitable for today's market? I guess from our perspective royalty rates should return a maximum amount of the value of the resource, which does belong to the people of Alberta, without in any way significantly impacting the exploration and development of the resource. We want to see the resource continue to be developed and exploited for the benefit of the province, so we wouldn't want the royalty rates to really interfere with that, but we wonder if you couldn't sustain, actually, a significant increase in royalty revenue given the world-wide shortage that now exists.

It's apparent, Mr. Chairman, that we're either at or very near the world tipping point in oil, where the supply of oil will no longer be sufficient to meet the demand on a global basis. That's the case that I think most economists believe, that we're going to see sustained, almost permanent, upward pressure on oil prices. I see that the department is estimating in 2006-2007 a price of $50 a barrel. Well, it was past $50 a barrel some time ago, and I think most estimates are that it's going to continue to rise. We're at $70 now, and some people are talking about the days of a hundred dollars a barrel of oil being not too far off.

I see that in the budget the government lists a number of firms that are engaged in forecasting oil and gas prices and so on, and I saw the graph about the high, the medium, the low, and the aggregation, and some of the information is not publicly available because it's proprietary and is purchased by the government on the understanding that they won't release it. I for the life of me can't understand how we're expecting the price of oil next year to be $50 a barrel. I think being conservative in your estimation is a good thing, believe it or not. You'd rather be a little under than a little over, but you don't want to be way out either way. I think that we have often been way out. Looking back over the last 10 years or so, that's been fairly common.

I want to talk a little bit about tax policy. The government is continuing the policy which was announced by Steve West, when he was the minister, of taking the corporate tax rate from 15 per cent down to 8. I happened to be at the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce luncheon as a newly elected MLA when Dr. West made that proposal. He also talked about a long-term plan for education property taxes, which I want to come back to as well. I guess the question I have for the minister is: what purpose is served by continuing to reduce corporate taxes? What is the policy objective? In a hot economy, a very hot economy has the minister received any advice or suggestion that, in fact, cutting corporate taxes at this point may be very inflationary?

We know and I know that not only municipalities in the public sector but small- and medium-sized businesses are very hard-pressed to find labour, and the cost of labour is rising very dramatically. Even McDonald's is advertising for workers and has jumped up its hourly wage by at least a couple of dollars, as far as I understand. I've talked to several mayors in the province whose engineers are being enticed away with very, very lucrative offers and contracts. So they're losing their qualified people. I guess this is just my take on it, but if you cut the taxes of the biggest corporations in the province, then how does small business and how does the public sector compete with them in attracting the necessary labour and as well the materials and supplies that they need?

I'm very, very concerned that this corporate tax, quite apart from philosophical differences, is not a good economic policy at this particular point in Alberta's economy. I wonder if the minister has looked at that because we do have – and I could read from my notes. We looked up some economists and so on who have said that there's a real concern about the impact of this particular tax cut on the economic balance. It has the potential to create imbalances in the economy, and it could in fact wind up hurting small- and medium-sized businesses who can't compete.

The other thing that Dr. West talked about that time was a long-term plan for education property taxes. I know that the government has not followed through on that commitment. They're moving sort of in the direction. In other words, they're reducing the amount that they take in the mill rate, but because of growth and so on, they're actually taking more from the property taxes. I'm wondering if we're ever going to get to the position where the province returns to a policy of gradually getting out of collecting property taxes altogether.

I know that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, when I met with their executive a few weeks ago, indicated to me that one of the things that they're continuing to be hopeful for is that the province will eventually vacate the property tax and give them the room that they need. I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs, although he didn't promise that it would happen at the last convention of the AUMA, did promise to work at it. So I am particularly interested in hearing about that and where we're going.

There was an increase in the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be spent on program spending to $5.3 billion in this budget. I wonder if the minister is concerned that we are becoming too dependent for our ongoing program spending on nonrenewable resources. From our perspective, we believe that the nonrenewable resources of the province and the revenues that flow from them really don't just belong to us or our generation to be spent on the things that we want right now. These resources have to be seen as the property of all generations, including generations to come.

There are a couple of things. There's a philosophical point about how much you are prepared to expend from your nonrenewable resource revenues to sustain programs today. The other question, of course, comes about from the narrowing of the tax base, and it ties in with the government's approach of cutting taxes generally and specifically cutting corporations' taxes. Has the minister looked or has she received reports from her staff saying that we're becoming too dependent on this and that when these resource revenues are no longer available, we might once again have to make some very, very tough decisions in this province? You know, that's certainly one of my big concerns.

There are some things in one of the government's documents. Here it is, Alberta's tax advantage, on page 134. It says that with no general sales tax, payroll taxes or capital taxes, Alberta's tax base is relatively narrow compared to other jurisdictions. While this is [beneficial] to Albertans, it also comes with some risks. A broader range of taxes means more stable revenues. With relatively fewer revenue sources, predictable funding for key public services is at more risk in the event of an economic slow-down. Consequently, it is inadvisable to eliminate or dedicate more taxes.

In fact, we are continuing with this reduction, and I'm really concerned about the twin problem of overusing our one-time resource revenues and narrowing our tax base from more stable and ongoing sources.

I'd like to ask the minister if she could just elaborate a bit on what the government's savings policy is with respect to revenues that have been received from nonrenewable sources and how she sees that playing out in the future, the role of the heritage savings trust fund and so on.

Another concern – and it has come up a number of times in the House – is the whole idea of off-budget spending, which has been growing and growing. I think we heard the Minister of Education talk about dealing with the problems with school renovations and new school construction in terms of coming from the unallocated surplus. That was within a few days, really, of the budget being brought forward.

Is there a policy to avoid doing that? If there isn't, what is the policy? What does the minister think it should be? Can we get to the point eventually where we are actually trying to accurately predict our resource revenues, budget them not for spending necessarily but budget them and try to budget as accurately as possible for the full coming year, so rather than constantly being surprised by these massive surpluses, actually budgeting for the surpluses and identifying needs ahead of time? So that's a concern.

I had an idea that I wanted to suggest to the minister, and that was based on something that happened a couple of years ago at the Alberta Urban Municipalities. There was a large surplus from the Municipal Financing Corporation. I'm not sure what its name is now. I know that it's been changed. There's a new name. It was appropriated by the Provincial Treasurer to be spent in terms of debt reduction, but the municipalities sort of rallied around it and got an agreement from the then Municipal Affairs minister, who is now the Minister of Environment. I was there, and I heard his speech, in which he said that this would be made available for municipalities to invest in energy reduction programs. It was called the ME First program.

I thought it was a good initiative. It represented a partial victory for the municipalities, but the problem with it was that it was sort of an incomplete plan because as they paid off their loans – they could borrow from the fund, invest in energy reduction programs, and then earn savings. They would earn savings, and they would repay the fund, but the money went back into general revenues rather than back into the fund. So it would've been preferable if the money was repaid directly to the fund because then the fund would become permanent.

This is sort of our extrapolation of the ideas. We could take a billion dollars from the unallocated surplus and create a permanent green fund for municipalities and potentially also for universities and colleges and schools and hospitals, for the medical system, allowing those institutions to borrow money to invest in energy reduction, and then they take the savings from that and they repay the fund. When they've repaid their loan to the fund, then they continue to benefit from the reductions in their operating costs, but the fund is intact and is available for further investment for the whole public sector. This idea, Mr. Chairman, could also be extended sometime in the future and be made available to farms, to small businesses, and to individual homeowners. It's something that we've been proposing, and we think that it's something that has a great deal of merit.

When I was on Edmonton city council, the administration came forward with a proposal for about a $350 million expansion of the E.L. Smith water treatment plant. Instead, we established a water conservation strategy for the city, and we were able to defer that expenditure for 10 years and save people a lot of money on their water bills because the capital cost would've been added, of course, to their water bills.

So it's just an example of the value of actually investing in these kinds of conservation programs. There's big money over time that can be saved.

I'd like to ask the minister about the Alberta Securities Commission, not about scandals or anything but really about whether or not she thinks that it's advisable that every province has its own securities commission and whether or not it might make more sense – and she's probably had some involvement with this – to negotiate with the other provinces. I'm not saying with the federal government when I say national. Rather than federal, have a national regulator. We think that it might be a good idea rather than having a patchwork of regulation across the country. It really makes more sense in today's financial world to have a single national regulator. We think it should be based in Calgary. We think that that would make a lot of sense. Calgary is a very important financial centre in this country, and I think it would make a lot of sense. So I wonder if the minister is pursuing that, what she thinks of it, what the progress might be.

I'd like to ask the minister also – and she doesn't have to respond to this tonight necessarily – just what the state of the regulation of the auto insurance industry is and whether or not the program there has met the objectives of the government and what the upcoming review is going to entail and what her objectives are in pursuing that.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask a little bit about the Alberta Treasury Branches and what the government's plan is for the long run in that. I know that it's not exactly the most small "c" conservative thing for the government to do, to have its own bank, but I advise them not to be embarrassed about it because we think it's a good thing. One of the things I know in my area is that the banks have abandoned some of the lower income communities, and the only financial institution that's available to many people is Alberta Treasury Branches, and it's a valuable contribution.

I think the same thing happens in many small towns and rural areas of this province. That's a really good objective from our point of view, the government continuing to own the Treasury Branches, because surely if they privatized it, then the shareholders would demand that the Treasury Branches do exactly what the banks have done, which is to leave the low-profit or negative – I don't know – areas without financial services. I'm assuming that that's why the government has resisted what would seem to be its natural ideological bent on that. I just want to know from the minister if the government is going to continue to ensure that low-income areas in cities and rural areas and small towns continue to have financial services by maintaining the ownership of the Alberta Treasury Branches.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my list of questions and comments, and I look forward to the minister's response. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much. Very good comments. Alberta Treasury Branches is business as usual. They do provide a valuable service. As long as they provide a valuable service and they're still needed, I and this caucus will certainly support maintaining them. You're absolutely right; they provide a valuable service in our rural communities but also in our urban communities.

There's one other that I just have to mention – I know you would agree – which is that credit unions have filled a very important role in many of our communities, urban and rural, and are an important part of the financial mix that's available to people in this province. I was asked by my boss one time about Ag Financial Services, ATB, credit unions. Credit unions, of course, are a little bit different. We don't own those, but we do regulate them. The other two, we have a stronger, maybe, role in. My response was that the need is still there. They still serve a very valuable purpose and still have a mandate in this province.

Auto insurance. There will be a review again this year. They'll be looking at rates, of course. They will be looking at about a year's experience under the new system, a little over a year actually, and looking at it and making sure that if there are any adjustments, they'll recommend them but make sure that it is meeting what we intended. I can tell you that the overall, general answer is yes. We see far fewer people driving uninsured, and that was a great concern to us. Very few people now are being picked up with no insurance, so that tells us that it is affordable for people to have insurance. Who wouldn't carry insurance voluntarily if they could afford it? So it has worked on that side. The rates are coming down. I won't know for some time whether they recommend another rate reduction, but that'll be coming in the next weeks, I guess. So far so good. I think it is meeting its mandate, but we'll have a better idea.

On the Alberta Securities Commission. I know that you don't want to talk about scandals. Neither do I, but I do want to put it on record that there have been three thorough investigations of the Alberta Securities Commission prompted by some different sources. In all cases the Alberta Securities Commission: there was no fault found. I said consistently from the beginning that I was confident on the enforcement side that there was not an issue. That has been proven by an RCMP investigation, by an Auditor General investigation, and by an internal investigation. I'm pleased to say that the human resource issues that did exist there are being dealt with and that the Securities Commission is implementing all of the Auditor General's report, as I understand it, meeting with the Auditor General on a regular basis to make sure that the implementation of those recommendations is proceeding properly.

You asked about the national regulator. I'm not hung up entirely on this, but I do believe that going with the passport system, where all provinces with the exception of Ontario have signed on to it, has been a great exercise. In September of last year we implemented the first stage, filing a prospectus, and I was quite amazed at our securities ministers' meeting to find the number of companies that were taking advantage of that. Whether or not it is deemed right in the end to go to a national regulator, I can assure you that all of the work that we've done on pursuing harmonization will be beneficial to that exercise.

We had the opportunity to meet with Purdy Crawford, who did the report for the Ontario minister, Minister Phillips. All of the provinces had a chance to dialog with him, and I think, in fact, that he and a member of that panel as well – there were two there; one from eastern Canada and one from Ontario – were surprised at some of the questions and concerns that some of the provinces had and realized that especially for our juniors, small companies, of which we have a lot and many other provinces do, there are some issues that they have to look at when they talk about a national regulator. Ontario, although they aren't a signatory, have been at the table with us working on this. Some of the amendments that we were putting through this House last night on securities Ontario was doing at the same time. It's an exercise that's great.

I would agree with you entirely that if there was to be a head place, it should be in the most dynamic financial markets in Canada, which would be here. It would seem to me that what they are talking about in the Crawford report is a national regulator, not a federal regulator – nobody agrees with that – and looking at it regionally as well, how you'd function understanding the difference in markets in this country, understanding the diversity of that, and some of the issues that some of the smaller provinces in particular have with this issue. So a good exercise.

We're meeting again in June, actually, in Ontario, the home of the one that isn't a part of it, which I think speaks to how much cooperation there is among the provinces to see this done. That's a little update there, and we'll have more of an update after that meeting.

On savings and the heritage fund I don't think we have any arguments there at all. I agree that we need to save where we can, but we want to make sure that we're providing the right amount to our other programs as we do it. I want to see more savings and something that has a revenue stream for us down the road.

The one thing I can tell you about forecasting energy that I've learned over 19 years is that you will almost always be wrong, and I'm always hoping that it's on the right side of wrong, that we're under in our estimate, not over. I think that I'll add you to the list of eight that we have here and see where you fit.

Mr. Mason: We've got a better track record.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, we all have in hindsight. I have a better one, too, in some things.

It's hard to get energy analysts. I mean, we're having some saying, you know, that $50 is the right place. Well, that is the middle of what the analysts said. Some are saying as much as $120, and some are saying: no, we think it will settle at $50. Some are saying: maybe $45.

I think what we have to remember is that one of the reasons that Alberta has been so strong on not wanting revenue from resources in the equalization formula is how volatile it is. There is probably about a $5 billion risk factor in there now. That's a lot higher than it was five years ago. We saw oil drop back to under $60 not very many days ago, it seems. It's been above $70, and it's been below $70. You can have something happen in South America. You can have something happen in OPEC nations. You can have a Katrina. The only sort of stable way you have is on production and refining. Then we find that the refinery capacity has been estimated incorrectly in some of our bigger using nations as well. One month we hear that they have more than enough supply, and then all of a sudden: oops, we're short. So it's a mug's game, I think, but we're going to do our best, and we're going to be on the conservative side of it.

A narrowing tax base: I couldn't agree more. I've said it publicly. One thing that came home to me in our tax review is that we have a very narrow tax base. We have to be extremely careful in making decisions as to reduction in taxes to ensure that we can sustain those reductions and still provide the dollars that are needed for our programs.

There's a section in here that I think is a very telling one. It was referred to earlier. It's page 65, and it gives you your income sort of blobbed together, your revenue and your expense for the departments. If you just look at that, it's a pretty interesting story. It speaks to the volatility of some of our revenue streams. Taxwise, pretty steady. We have growth, more people, more jobs, better jobs, higher taxes coming in. We're able to lower them, but we do have to be careful on that.

I don't use the words "nonrenewable resource" very much anymore if I can remember not to, because I'm more convinced than ever that this resource is going to be around for a long time. We know that we have at least a century in the oil sands, and we know that almost every year there's a new technology, a new methodology of recovering that that is more environmentally friendly, that is more economical. I don't think anyone would have predicted the change of technology that has transpired in that area. Of course, higher prices will dictate more aggression in getting better technology. Something that I think we can contribute to Kyoto is sharing some of this technology that we are implementing here that is more environmentally friendly, and I'm talking about using CO₂ and other methods for recovery.

Coal: a tremendous amount of coal, the lowest sulphur burning coal probably in the world. I believe that our efforts in clean-coal technology with our partners will bear some fruit that will be beneficial to us.

Coal-bed methane: a lot of deposits there, and again the technology is improving, and we see improvements in recovery there.

Should the royalty structure be reviewed? I think that the minister has already spoken to that and talked about looking at that. While we show some declining revenues, I think that we're going to have an income from that long into the future. While we should be conservative and recognize that we do have a lower revenue on bitumen and some of those other heavy oils, it's still an important resource that will be here. I believe that we need to value add more here and improve the technology for doing that and then sell that to the rest of the world, which is a good thing.

On the reduction of corporate tax in the hot economy, the real reason for reducing the corporate tax is to make our businesses more competitive in the global marketplace. Right around the city of Edmonton there are about 160 companies – small businesses, granted – that manufacture food and beverage, so agricultural products. That has grown from about 110 companies. Probably there are more than 160. The minister of agriculture might leap up and say: boy, are you behind. They ship to over 100 countries in the world, and they have to be competitive on that basis. So it's really more of a global issue.

One of the things that we learned when we did our tax review, the first thing that hit me, was how narrow our tax base was; secondly, how competitive we are in Alberta within Canada but how uncompetitive Canada is with the world. We have to look at that, remember that we compete in a global economy. We want to make sure that these small companies that are all around our city here – I've visited some of them. They're wonderful stories, whether it's the beautiful little cakes that are being shipped all over from here. A young man who was a chef in British Columbia saw a wonderful opportunity, built a business, and ships these cheesecakes not only in Canada but to the U.S., expanding all of those markets, and had to do a huge expansion on his plant recently.

Mr. Mason: Does he qualify for the corporate tax rate, though?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, yes, he probably is above the small business now. He probably started in one range and went to the other. That's one of the reasons we did small business first, raised our threshold to $400,000. I think there's some real merit in looking at either raising that threshold or reducing that rate again to make sure that they're competitive.

I have something I'd like to share. The Canadian Bankers Association – love or hate bankers, they are the financiers in this country. I have a letter from them – it's written to me – about our budget. I think it's important that we share it, and I'll just read a part of it. It says:

On behalf of the members of the Canadian Bankers Association (CBA), I am writing to congratulate you on Alberta's budget for 2006-07. Largely due to your government's sound fiscal policies, Alberta has one of the most robust economies in the country, no debt and is in the enviable position of having the fiscal flexibility to further strengthen "Alberta's tax advantage."

You can read it for yourself, but it does talk in that as well about the important priorities of health, education, and infrastructure, and it talks about it in relation to the importance of a competitive personal and corporate and business tax regime. They did encourage us to work towards our anticipated rate of 8 per cent. They say:

We believe that the current and anticipated reductions to the CIT rate will make the province's business tax advantage very compelling and set the foundation for future economic growth in the province.

That's the point I want to make.

The corporate tax reduction is not all about today. It is about the future and down the road encouraging people to invest here, to bring your investment to Alberta: a good stable tax regime, a good quality of life, wonderful opportunities for your families. I'll tell you, when people look at coming to Alberta to invest, they don't just look at taxes. They don't just look at good government. We'd like to think that. They look at quality of life issues too. They want to know if there are good recreational facilities for their families, good educational facilities certainly first of all, good cultural activities. They want the whole enchilada, if you wish, and we're proud to say that many companies large and small are saying: yes, this is the place to do business; yes, this is here for our family.

Thank you.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Finance, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$1,129,463,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$65,793,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of the Department of Finance.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Finance: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,129,463,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $65,793,000.

I would like to table the document for the official record of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I'm very pleased to rise and move the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, for second reading.

In relation to this amendment I would like to highlight that our review of the advanced learning system has been completed, and the steering committee's report has now been finalized and is under consideration. One of the outcomes of the review will be an affordability framework, and this framework will identify a broad sweep of initiatives to improve the affordability of Alberta's advanced education system. A revised tuition fee policy is one of the initiatives within the framework.

This amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Act is necessary to prepare for the introduction of a new tuition fee policy. The amendment is proposing to repeal clauses in the Post-secondary Learning Act that set out the principles that guide tuition increases by public postsecondary institutions as reflected by the current tuition fee policy. Mr. Speaker, the repeal of these clauses will remove any legislative barrier to implementing the new policy by allowing the establishment of tuition fees in accordance with the regulation.

We need to make these amendments immediately so that government can make true on its promise of a new tuition fee policy in place and working for students by the fall of 2007. Failing to repeal and amend these sections would likely delay the implementation of a new tuition fee policy until September 2008 as public postsecondary institutions will have to follow existing sections when setting tuition fees. If we were to allow that to happen, under the current legislation average tuition in 2007-08 would increase 6.5 per cent at universities and 9.8 per cent at colleges. My commitment as Minister of Advanced Education is to introduce a new tuition fee policy this fall so that we don't have to see increases of this magnitude ever again. A new tuition policy for implementation in the fall is strongly anticipated by key stakeholders. They expect to see it this year. This amendment is about being responsive to stakeholder concerns and, in particular, those raised by students around the existing tuition fee policy.

The new policy will be developed through further discussion and dialogue with stakeholders as we realign the existing regulation to support the new tuition fee policy. That's where I think most people who haven't been there and done that would not understand that making changes to regulations is an onerous number of steps. You have to be able to demonstrate that you've had consultation with stakeholders. It's not just a matter of preparing an OC for cabinet and, like magic, things change. You have to consult, and you have to prove that you've consulted with stakeholders. So I think that that's what maybe a lot of people don't understand because they've not been there and done that.

I strongly urge the Assembly to support this legislation as it paves the way for a new tuition fee policy for students, something which should not be delayed. With that, Mr. Speaker, knowing that we will be addressing Bill 40 in second reading on Monday, it's my pleasure to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 41

Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and move second reading of Bill 41 on behalf of the Minister of Finance. Bill 41 is the Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act.

The first goal I'd like to accomplish with this legislation is to establish a primary repository and claim system for the unclaimed or abandoned property of Albertans. To accomplish this, Bill 41 would require all holders to pay or deliver assets that remain unclaimed after the end of a specified holding period together with all information on the apparent owners to a central repository. Owners will be able to research a single registry to determine if the administrator holds assets that belong to them or that they are entitled to. A single-stop repository makes the process of locating unclaimed assets easier for all owners.

To accomplish the second goal of establishing a clear process to manage and resolve issues relating to property that vests in the Crown after a corporation is dissolved, Bill 41 proposes several measures. First, Bill 41 proposes a five-year limitation period during which a corporation can be revived. Experience has shown that very few corporations are revived after five years. Once the deadline has passed, the corporation cannot be revived, and any remaining property vests permanently in the Alberta Crown.

It is anticipated that property that vests in the Crown would include land. The legislation proposes a process that will enable the Crown to take title to the land and remove existing encumbrances with sufficient warning. At the same time, creditors would retain the right to enforce any security interest they might have on the property. In both cases, Mr. Speaker, claims for the return of such property or proceeds will be allowed for 10 years from the date the property is transferred to or becomes vested in the Crown. From an administrative perspective this legislation will empower the Crown to conduct searches to find vested property, administer and invest property, and minimize legal liability and risk.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will establish clear rights, obligations, and procedures for managing vested property. With that, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 41.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

Alberta has recently become an economic force in Canada that is far beyond its size. It is a Canadian leader in almost all economic indicators from growth to employment, from the education of the workforce to productivity, from average family income to standard of living. This is due in large part to the productive energy industry in Alberta. Alberta is increasingly being recognized as a global energy leader. Investors are clamouring to be a part of Alberta's energy future. Activity in Alberta's energy industry has grown to record levels across the province. Exploration, development, production, technological advances, improved environmental technologies, and protection: the list is long.

These amendments will ensure that Albertans' benefits from resources are optimized and enable both industry and government to continue to operate efficiently and effectively. As we are all aware, Alberta's competitive market is stimulating investments and growth in the energy industry. To ensure that the competitive natural gas retail market continues to operate with integrity, amendments need to be made that will enable comprehensive monitoring of the market participant behaviour.

The Gas Utilities Act will be amended in this bill to allow the retail natural gas industry to operate with similar regulations to the competitive electricity market. Amendments to this act include allowing Alberta's Market Surveillance Administrator to oversee the retail natural gas market to ensure fair and efficient competition, aligning regulatory-making powers to reduce the number of regulations in place for both the electricity and natural gas retail markets, putting a mechanism in place to ensure that the MSA is able to recover its costs for monitoring the natural gas market, improving alignment of the retail natural gas market with the retail electricity market to support convergence of the natural gas and electricity retail policy.

The energy industry in Alberta helps to ensure that Albertans enjoy prosperity and an extraordinarily high quality of life. Budget 2006 estimates that nonrenewable resource revenues will be $11.4 billion for 2006-2007. In addition, the Crown owns 81 per cent of the province's mineral rights. Key amendments to the Mines and Minerals Act will allow the rules regulating taking and managing royalties in kind to be clarified. Although the act currently provides for the Crown to take its royalty in kind, which means that the Crown collects a percentage of the hydrocarbon product that is produced under the current regulations, the Crown only takes royalty in kind for conventional oil. If the Crown decides at some point to take and manage royalties in kind for other minerals, the regulations setting out the rules for doing so will need to be clarified. Before making such a decision and before any changes are made to these regulations, consultations with the industry and further government reviews will take place.

Corresponding amendments are also being made to the Mines and Minerals Act clarifying the technical rules with respect to the business of selling or swapping the products that the Crown receives as royalties in kind. For example, more revenue can sometimes be made from the royalties in kind by swapping one type of oil for another, which may attract a better price. By clarifying the technical rules within the act, the Crown will be able to optimize the value of our resources.

Other amendments to the Mines and Minerals Act will include increasing efficiencies such as allowing electronic transfers to take place and reducing red tape, such as eliminating the need for order in council approval for routine subsurface storage agreements, such as the storage of natural gas or petroleum liquids. It is important to note that in order to undertake the subsurface storage activity, all regulatory approvals and environmental requirements must be met.

There are nine acts that are being amended in this bill, in many cases to ensure that the industry continues to operate efficiently and effectively. Of these nine, there are two that are spent and being repealed, the Natural Gas Price Administration Act and the Natural Gas Pricing Agreement Act. These two acts are no longer relevant as they served to implement Alberta's role during the regulated gas price environment prior to deregulation of the gas pricing in the mid-1980s. It is important that this industry and the acts that guide it continue to evolve to ensure that it operates with the best interests of Albertans. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 39.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 31
Health Information Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: We are debating amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm delighted to be able to join the debate on Bill 31, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006, in Committee of the Whole. Actually, if the chairman doesn't mind, I'd like to make some general comments before I move amendment A1, but you're free to circulate it at this time.

The Chair: It's already been moved, hon. member, on May 3.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, is this the one that's on the floor?

The Chair: This is amendment A1. Adjourned debate on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. So this is the one that's removing something. Hang on.

The Chair: The amendment reads as follows. The bill is amended in part A: section 2(b)(ii) is struck out.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you for the clarification.

This is an interesting one. In the health information review committee that happened in 2004 the whole section around health service provider information and how much of that information was given out was one of the major points of discussion, and in the end the committee asked that a second committee be constituted. That question got passed on to that committee, which has yet to be formed, to deal with because there were some huge issues that we just couldn't deal with in the time that we had. There was somewhat of a guillotine hanging over us as the election was looming in the fall of 2004, and there was urgency felt by the chairperson of the committee to pass certain parts of what we had reviewed in the Health Information Act. Things we couldn't get to appropriately were just passed on to the next committee. As I said, one of the big issues there was around health service provider information, which at this point is very limited as to what information is released.

Now, a number of, in particular, pharmaceutical companies were very interested in getting access to more information about health service providers. Mostly what this is about is getting at prescribing information, so for marketing purposes they could see, you know, what kinds of drugs a doctor was prescribing, allowing them to analyze them and get at them to try and convince them to prescribe their particular version of an antidepressant drug, for example, as compared to the one they were currently using. There was great resistance to adding on any more information than could be allowed under the rules right now.

So the idea that's in this act of adding in the registration number after the licence number I found was very interesting, and for whatever reason – I don't know why, and I can't remember the member's explanation for this – that has again caused some controversy, it appears, and that has been pulled out. I have no objection to that happening at this time, so I'm satisfied to have the registration number removed and that clause deleted from the amending act, which means it would never go forward into the existing act. I'm sure we'll hear about this again in the future, but at this time I'm fine with it being pulled. I think we have to go back and examine the whole issue of health service provider information, and I don't think it should be done piecemeal, and this is somewhat approaching it from a piecemeal point of view. So removing the addition of the registration number is fine.

Thanks.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. [interjection]

Ms Blakeman: I so enjoy working evenings with the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar because he just gives me so much energy to speak longer and keep going. He's just my own little version of the Energizer Bunny, just gives me lots of grist for the mill. [interjection] Thank you so much. I appreciate your thoughtful consideration of my working evenings.

What I would like to do. I have a series of amendments to progress through this evening, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to set the context for them because they are all more or less related to the same originating point.

Now, I had mentioned that I was one of two opposition members that sat over a period of about six months on the health information review committee. One of the issues that came up that I really objected to is contained in recommendation 31 coming forward from the committee. What I'm seeing in this amending bill is I think what I disagreed with so much in recommendation 31 is getting mixed in with recommendation 32, which was basically about prescription fraud, and recommendation 34, which was about individuals perpetrating fraud in the health service sector. What I'm seeing in addition in Bill 31 is the government sort of anticipating health service provider fraud. So there are two different clauses there: one coming at it from the point of view that an individual is committing fraud, getting health services they shouldn't be getting, and then there's a second section that deals with health service provider fraud, taking advantage of the system. We did not particularly deal with those separately in the committee, but they're appearing separately in the bill.

The concepts that I was disagreeing with so much that are captured in recommendation 31 are sort of sprinkled and mixed in with recommendations 32 and 34. That was the prescription fraud and the individual perpetrating fraud in the health services in obtaining it or dispensing it. I'm just going to go through this for you. Recommendation 31 from the committee read that "the Act should be amended to mandate disclosure, without consent."

Now, let me put this in context for everyone. This is individually identifying health information, so from this information those involved can tell who it was, exactly what happened to them, where they live, all their health information, basically, and the individual is not able to give their consent and in many cases wouldn't even be aware that the information has now been disclosed to somebody else. So those situations need to be very, very carefully laid out.

Essentially, the Health Information Act is an act that sets out all the rules and says that you can't disclose people's personal health information, and then it goes through and says except. So it's exception-based legislation, except in the following circumstances, and they try and keep a really tight hold on that. There are a number of provisions where it talks about, you know, the least amount of information being given out with the highest level of anonymity and a number of other precautions, but that's how this is meant to work.

So let me go back again. Recommendation 31. "The Act should be amended to mandate disclosure," individually identifying health information, "without consent, to police services" of the patient's name, their address – that's their home address – their location in the facility, the date of admission, the name of the physician, the nature of the injury.

The reasons given at the time were "for purposes of obtaining a warrant or subpoena." So the police don't have the information. They're fishing for it. You can't get a warrant unless all the information is filled out. When you go on the Internet now and you try and purchase something or get involved with something, it actually will not process unless you fill in all the blanks. Essentially, that's what happens when you're trying to get a warrant. You have to fill in all the blanks or the police have to present the warrant with all the blanks filled in or they can't get it. If they're missing information, they can't get the warrant. So here they're trying to get the information they want to put in the warrant.

So the committee's recommendation that I was so exorcized about. Getting this information – that was the information – individually identifying, without consent for purposes of obtaining a warrant or subpoena, and when the police have reasonable grounds to suspect that the person seeking health services has been involved in some form of criminal activity; and makes a request for that information; or (b) a custodian . . .

Now, a custodian is someone involved in the health system that is what we call inside the arena, so they're a custodian of health information.

. . . has reasonable grounds to suspect that the person seeking health services has been involved in some form of criminal activity.

So that was the original recommendation, and the reasoning behind it was fairly extensive.

But let's look at the situation that we have right now. Essentially, the police are able to get this identifying health information without consent if the situation is life threatening, if there is imminent danger, or if it is involving vulnerable people. So mental capacity – and they can do it under the Child Welfare Act, they can do it under the Protection for Persons in Care Act, and they can do it under the Fatality Inquiries Act. So there are already a lot of circumstances all covering urgency and imminent danger under which circumstances the police can receive this information.

So I say: why else do they need it? If they're seeking this information, it's not life threatening, it's not urgent, then it's sort of casual. Well, I've got nothing better to do right now, so I think I'll wander in and bug the nurses to get this information. It's not involving vulnerable people, so we're not in danger of somebody we should be protecting as a society, you know, being imperiled in any way. None of those circumstances apply when we're looking at changing this legislation because we've already covered it in the legislation.

So why are we doing this? Never made sense to me. This was to make it easier for police to get information on people. Well, we've got to be careful when we do that, and I think that in the interim, between when this committee met and now, we start to get a better understanding of why this becomes so important. Information once in a database in this day and age and with the electronic databases doesn't disappear. There's no time bomb that explodes or is programmed into a database that says: five years from now this information will be wiped out because we won't need it anymore. It stays in there forever, and every time somebody calls up that particular individual's information, bingo, it all pops up on the screen, including, my friends, your individually identifying health information that was obtained without your consent. In some cases you won't even know that they have it. Why would we be letting the police fish for that information?

Something else I want you to think about: is this really how we want our health professionals spending their time? Considering how backed up we are in the hospital system – every day there are questions about overcrowding and difficulty getting people through the system and stressed hospital staff and people working overtime and not enough staff to cover this, and we're now going to pass a law to change an act so that the police can go in, pull a nurse or a doctor or a hospital administrator aside, and: I'm looking for John Doe, and I think he's in this hospital, and I'd like you to give me all of this information on him.

Now, it's not life threatening. Nobody's in imminent danger. We have other ways of accessing this information if it's to protect a child or someone with a mental illness or an elderly person or a person in care. Why would we allow that? It's a shopping trip. Yet that's exactly what is being anticipated here.

Let's be clear. This is a recommendation the committee passed, and I was on that committee. I voted against it, but the committee overall voted for it. Now, it's not hard when in this configuration you always have an overwhelming number of government members on any of these committees, and they just vote it through. That's exactly what happened here, but I still disagree with it.

Okay. So let's look at some of the other reasonings about why this isn't a good idea. What you're trying to do is find the appropriate balance between privacy rights of an individual who is seeking care and treatment and, basically, police requirements for personal information. I've already argued about why the police shouldn't be needing to get this personal information, because it's a fishing trip and they should find that information through the other sources and other processes that are available to them.

We had a number of people present to us, and each one of them was asked to sort of go through a survey of the issues that we had before us. A little less than half the people recommended no change in the existing law, but some, and in particular the police, wanted more discretionary authority, which covered any circumstance, to be able to draw this information out, and that's the situation that we're anticipating with the changes in Bill 31.

Now, one of the things we need to be careful about here is the co-operation of everyone in providing health information into the system. As people become more and more aware that their information is going to go into an electronic database that will be kept and shared, we all understand that that's probably a good thing. We want to know that if we're unconscious or arrive in an ambulance, the other treatments we've had and the fact that we've got allergies to things and that we've had various tests, all of that information is available to the health professionals that are going to treat us. But we have to trust that that information is only going to be used for the purpose of treating us for whatever ailment we might be arriving at the hospital with.

People get very reluctant to start giving additional information if they think that that information is going to be used for some other reason, which is why we have to be so cautious with health information. People start withholding information and only give a partial picture, which really makes our whole idea of electronic health records very difficult to manage if we believe now that we've only got partial information and partially correct information.

Now, I want to go back over the kind of information that would be requested and why that's important. Part of what we were looking at here is what's called registration information. That has a particular definition here. Under the act registration information includes elements such as name, their personal health number – now, what does that tell you? Well, the personal health number is going to give you some indication of whether they qualify for health services in this country. It's going to tell you, for example, what their immigration status is.

So you get additional information by getting some of these basic information categories. You get bonuses, in other words. The health number gives you the bonus of often finding out whether there are dependants that are listed under the same number, what their immigration status would be in Canada, and some other information. You get the gender. You get the date of their birth. You get their home address. Now, wouldn't that be handy if you were trying to get information for a warrant? You go in, you say, "I'm looking for John Doe, and I want this information on him," and gosh, you get his home address out of it. Well, that's the information you were looking at for your warrant. Bob's your uncle. Off you go. You got what you needed. Our health professionals had to spend time digging that out of the files to give it to the police officer.

This is not to say that police officers don't have other ways of getting this information. That's their job. They have all kinds of processes to draw upon to get this kind of information. There are certain tests there that the police need to meet in order to get that information. Protecting the public's privacy and making sure that our processes of law enforcement are being abided by is exactly why those tests are in place. So I see this as an end run around some of those tests.

Continuing on: health service eligibility information. Again, you pick up some of the things I was talking about with the personal health number. Location information in the hospital: well, that gives you some bonus information too. Are they in the maternity ward, or are they in the orthopaedic ward, or are they in surgery? That would tell you a lot about why they were in the hospital.

Billing information. Well, you can get scads of information from billing information. You get some idea of their financial status. You may be able to pick up credit card information. That's likely to give you an itemization of what procedures or tests they've had so far. Remember, this is all going to end up in a database somewhere in the bowels of the police service, and every time – five years, 10 years, 25 years from now – they call up your name on that computer, bingo: up it all comes for anybody to read out.

Now, just think back to what happened around the Overtime affair. They were accessing that information for no reason that was justifiable under the circumstances. That could happen to any one of us in here. It goes on forever. That information is never deleted off that file.

Now, I think the other thing we need to keep in mind here is the Charter and whether what we're contemplating passing in Bill 31 is Charter proof. This government doesn't seem to care much if stuff is Charter proof. I've stood here many nights and talked about the fact that something they were about to do was not going to be Charter proof, and I've been proven right way more times than I ever wanted to be, Mr. Chairman. I have some sympathy for the Greek character of Cassandra, who kept making predictions that were absolutely true and everybody hated her for it. Well, I know how that feels.

I believe that this will not be Charter proof. When we look at what the Charter is about, what we want to be sure of – even though you may have legislation that limits a guaranteed right, it can sometimes be saved under section 1 of the Charter, which is saying that all rights are subject "to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society." So is what we're doing in legislation justifiable in a free and democratic society? I would argue no because we just are not sure enough about enough things that we are contemplating here.

In order to survive a section 1 test, there's the two-part Oakes test. The first part is that the objective of the law must be of sufficient importance to justify limiting a Charter right. Second, the means chosen must be reasonable and demonstrably justified by showing that the law (a) is rationally connected to the objective and (b) uses the least drastic means to accomplish the objective – in other words, that if it impairs the right, no more than necessary to accomplish the objective – and (c) it's proportionate. It must not have a disproportionately severe effect upon the person to whom it applies.

I would argue that releasing individually identifiable health information without the individual's consent in circumstances that are not urgent – they are not life-threatening; there is no imminent danger; it does not affect vulnerable people, those with a limited mental capacity, children, elderly, or other vulnerable people – is not reasonable.

So I have a series of five amendments that are flowing from the argument that I've just laid out for you. The first amendment I would like to move at this time, and that is amendment A2.

If it's all right, I'll just keep talking about it while it's being distributed.

The Chair: We should distribute them so that the members can see what the amendment is. Then you can proceed after they're distributed, if you don't mind.

Ms Blakeman: Just wait?

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: I think we're close to it. With your permission I'll continue.

The Chair: Yes, I think you can proceed.

Ms Blakeman: I'd like to move amendment A2, which is amending section 7 of Bill 31, which affects the proposed section 37.1(1) by striking out clause (a). This is part of where I see recommendation 31, which is the police stuff and giving the information to the police, being mixed in with the other recommendations. Specifically, I see it appearing as clause (a) under 37.1(1). I'll also note that all of the amendments that are added in under section 7 are in addition to what's already in the original bill. So this is all being tagged on to the end of a section that's about limiting fraud and abuse of health services.

Section 37.1(1) reads:

- (a) that the information relates to the possible commission of an offence under a statute or regulation of Alberta or Canada, and
- (b) that the disclosure will detect or prevent fraud or limit abuse in the use of health services.

Now, I'm fine with (b), and I'm fine with the way it flows to that. But I'm not fine with (a) because I think that's a back door way of the government being able to empower the police to collect that information based on whether an offence has been possibly committed under a statute or regulation of Alberta or Canada. Again, by whose definition? Who's making that decision? Is it the custodian that's supposed to know the Criminal Code here? Or are the police coming in and saying, "We believe there's been a gunshot, and it should be dealt with"?

I'll let the member respond. I think I've laid out the argument fairly clearly, and I look forward to an opportunity to respond again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will address a few of the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I wish to emphasize, first of all, that it does provide in the bill that the "custodian may disclose individually identifying health information" in all of the various sections which she had referred to. The key word is "may." As the hon. member is aware from her participation in the Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee, the original recommendation which was brought forward by the committee was that it should mandate disclosure in those specific instances.

The hon. member is quite right to be cautious about these individual freedom issues and privacy issues because these are delicate matters and there has to be a balance struck between the privacy rights of the individuals and the overriding obligation and rights of society and of the public good as a whole. So what the department has tried to do in bringing forth these particular amendments is to strike the right balance. Whether or not that is exactly the correct balance I guess time will tell. The act, as the hon. member alluded to, has several provisions that already enable custodians to disclose individually identifying information in certain circumstances, but I think the overriding thing that I would like to emphasize is that this is permissive and not compulsory, and it is the subject of considerable discussion.

As the hon. member had pointed out, not only is the issue of privacy one which is paramount in this particular issue, but it also affects the rights of the physician in the sense of the obligation of confidentiality and the protection of the confidence between the patient and the doctor, which is paramount. I think that that was one of the overriding provisions that mitigated against making it mandatory for the physician to disclose that information because we are dealing with some ancient protocols there, like the Hippocratic oath, with respect to disclosure of information.

What the legislation now does is attempt to strike a balance. So it's a two-part test that must be passed before that custodian releases information of an individually identifying nature. First of all, it must be shown that there's a reasonably founded belief that the information relates to an offence. Secondly, it has to get by another test, which is perhaps more appropriate, and that is that the custodian must in their own judgment, on balance, say whether in their judgment the release of the information is justified. They have to have a reasonably founded belief to start with, and they also must believe that in their judgment the release is justified, that on balance the public good dictates that they should release that information. So it is discretionary, as I said.

In section 7 of the bill, as far as I can see, the information does not give the person's address. It talks about the name, the date of birth, and the personal health number and so on. In the case of the health care provider it does provide the business address and so on. I would agree with the hon. member that there may be challenges under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms at some point. As to whether or not the right balance is struck in this present instance, I guess only time will tell, when the courts have some adjudication on it. But I think that what the legislation does as it presently exists is try to strike a reasonable balance in terms of discretion where the overriding concerns of the public good seem to outweigh the infringements on personal privacy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for that information. Yes, he is correct. The original recommendation from the committee – and I regret that I neglected to focus on that – was that it was mandatory. I appreciate the fine distinction that this is not mandatory, but I would argue that that matters not a hair's difference. When you're a nurse on duty at 4 o'clock in the morning and a police officer walks into your nursing station – and our police, when they're on duty, are in full garb with everything clanking off their belt, in uniform – and they come up and request information, I don't know how good a job we're going to be able to do to make it clear to that health service provider that they don't have to give that information. I haven't seen any indication that there is a massive education campaign going to be accompanying the proclamation of Bill 31.

It's something that we see happen. I've spoken to people that are health professionals that say, you know, that they're under immense pressure from their colleagues as a result of interactions with police and others that were requesting personally identifying health information, and they've said: "Sorry. I know the law, and I'm not giving you the information." They've come under immense pressure, and there have been complaints to their superiors and a number of other things. And they were right. They were absolutely right. They were doing everything that they should have done, but not everybody understands that, and they end up feeling huge pressure, to the point, I think, that one of them felt workplace harassment. They were doing what they were supposed to do, but it's very hard for people to understand that when we've got a police officer – we're a law-abiding society. We willingly give our police power. So when they show up saying, "I want this information," most people tend to go: "Oh. Okay, officer. If you are asking for it, it must be legit. I'll hand it over." Not necessarily the case.

I guess what I'm arguing here is that if the sponsoring member believes that the word "may" in this amending legislation will be enough of a test to pass, that it would guarantee a balance and a protection, I would argue that that is a pretty slim protection here.

It's very useful, for those that are following along at home and on the Internet, to be examining Bill 31 with the original bill, the Health Information Act, in your other hand because you don't always get the full picture of what's happening here. So when we look at how 37.1 and the other sections that flow in – there's 37.1, 37.2, 37.3 – they all flow following the section 37 appearing on page 30 of the original act. Those numbers will change, obviously, if these amendments go through.

Section 37 is "Disclosure of health services provider information" and starts out by saying:

A custodian may disclose individually identifying health services provider information without the consent of the individual who is the subject of the information . . .

So we're talking about a health professional here.

- (a) to a health professional body that requests the information for the purpose of an investigation, a discipline proceeding, a practice review or an inspection relating to the health services provider, or
- (b) if the disclosure is authorized or required by an enactment of Alberta or Canada.

Then it goes on to section (2). They can "disclose health services provider information," and then there's a whole long list of what kind of information they can give. That's where the previous amendment would have fit, and this is other than home address, telephone number and licence number, to any person for any purpose without the consent of the individual who is the subject of the information, unless the disclosure . . .

And here's where you get into the exceptions.

- (a) would reveal other information about the health services provider, or
- (b) could reasonably be expected to result in
 - (i) harm to the health services provider's mental or physical health or safety, or
 - (ii) undue financial harm to the health services provider.

Then this section in Bill 31 fits in because it follows after the existing section 37. So that's where you get into 37.1(1) A custodian may disclose individually identifying health information referred to in subsection (2), which was that whole list,

. . . who is the subject of the information to a police service or the Minister of Justice and Attorney General where the custodian reasonably believes . . .

And then the rest of that flows from that.

So I think there's an argument here that there's some confusion about whose individually identifying health information is actually being discussed in this section because the first time I read it, my notes on the side say "patient," but in fact, I think we're actually talking about the health service provider. Makes it even more interesting.

I would still argue that to be on the safe side, we should be taking out section (a). I hear the argument – I actually got this from Parliamentary Counsel and from the sponsoring member – that this is a two-part test, what's set out here: "that the information relates to the possible commission of an offence" and "that the disclosure will detect or prevent fraud or limit abuse in the use of health services." I question whether, in fact, that is really the way it would play out. I see section (a) being used as a back door to gain that information that I talked about earlier.

So I would ask all members to support my amendment A2, which would delete section (a); that is "that the information relates to the possible commission of an offence under a statute or regulation of Alberta or Canada." I hope I can gain the support of everyone in the Assembly.

Thank you very much for allowing me to argue the case.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A2?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

Ms Blakeman: Ah, well, one down.

We're continuing on with section 7 because my next amendment is continuing with this. But I just want to note that I skipped over section 37.2, which is noting in Bill 31 "Disclosure to prevent or limit fraud or abuse of health services by health services providers." Again, I think that there's a bit of a problem there about how this is all flowing because it looked like the first one was supposed to be about patients, but flowing as it does under the existing section 37, I think we're talking about health service providers there as well. I did not take the same clause, the corresponding clause, out of 37.2 because it was clearly about detecting fraud in the health services. Just in the way it's written, I did not see this as being used with the same sort of backdoor access.

But when I move on to 37.3, "Disclosure to protect public health and safety," this one I really see as a back door, as a way of empowering the police to request this information. I'm doing the same thing here in that I'm taking out section (a) because of what you have and the way it's worded under 37.3(1):

A custodian may . . .

And I note "may."

. . . disclose individually identifying health information referred to in subsection (2) without the consent of the individual who is the subject of the information to a police service or the Minister of Justice and Attorney General where the custodian reasonably believes

- (a) that the information relates to the possible commission of an offence under a statute or regulation of Alberta or Canada, and
- (b) that the disclosure will protect the health and safety of Albertans.

Now I think this is really the clause that reflects the intent of Bill 31.

At this point I would like to move amendment A3 and ask that it be distributed.

The Chair: Okay. We'll refer to this amendment as A3.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This amendment is asking that Bill 31 be amended in section 7 in the proposed section 37.3(1) by striking out clause (a). So it's exactly the same clause. It's the one that refers to the information relating to the possible commission of an offence under a statute or regulation of Alberta or Canada.

Again, how is the custodian supposed to know this stuff? The clause above it says, "where the custodian reasonably believes," and then "(a) that the information relates to the possible commission of an offence." Well, how are we expecting a doctor or a nurse or a radiologist or a licensed practical nurse to be up to speed on what would be an offence under a statute or a regulation of Alberta or Canada? You're asking a lot. They're health professionals. They're there to do a different task than to be knowledgeable about why the police might be searching for information on an individual.

I think that if you take that out, you can read this clause straight through, basically saying that they can disclose this if they believe that the disclosure will protect the health and safety of Albertans. I still have problems with this concept, but I think that if we take out (a), we've made it less dangerous.

Essentially, what we have here is that it's far too vague. It is not defined, and that's one of the things that we test for when we look at the Charter. How defined is it? How narrowly defined is it? This is wide open. It could be anything according to what we're reading here. So I would argue that it's not allowing reasonable limits, and I think this one actually fishes the most.

Now, there could be an argument made here under public health and safety of Albertans that this is a terrorism clause, but I don't see anything else in there that is putting that concept in context. Therefore, I think that without a great deal of other information putting that in context, we can't accept that that's what it's for, that that's the good reason, that that's the reasonable limit, because it's not specifying it enough. It is simply just too vague.

I would look forward to the response from the member, and we will proceed with this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I am sympathetic to the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but take examples of things like gunshot wounds or stab wounds, someone coming into an emergency room who's intoxicated and has been injured in an accident and says that they've been involved in a hit-and-run accident, somebody who is mentally deranged and alluded to threats against their spouse, or something like that. I think we could all agree that in those circumstances there are overriding concerns of health and safety and that there may well be hard evidence in front of the health care service provider that very likely a criminal offence has occurred.

Again, what we have attempted to do is strike a balance here. Whereas in the original recommendations in such circumstances as gunshot wounds there would be a mandatory disclosure on the health care provider's part and some obligation to do so, this does provide discretion in instances where it was deemed in the best judgment of the health care provider that those types of things ought to be disclosed to the police or to the Attorney General. So I think that, again, one would have to assume that some judgment would apply on the part of those custodians of that information.

As I said, it is limited in its scope to the name of the individual, the date of birth, and the nature of the injury or illness. If it was a stab wound or a gunshot wound, I suppose that would be relevant. So I think, again, the key is the fact that this is discretionary on the part of the custodian and it's not mandatory.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. The member has now opened up a number of other areas that I wanted to talk about. We need to deal with the problem here. If the problem is that we have gang members, for example, going into hospitals with gunshot wounds, and they get to sit in there, get our public health care system helping them, and then sneak off, and we don't catch them, and we've helped to heal them, deal with the problem. There is legislation that exists in Ontario and in other locations in which there is mandatory reporting of gunshot wounds, and in that you could include knifings and severe beatings, which, as the member noted, are identifiable and there's a high likelihood that the person incurred those in some sort of illegal activity.

If that's your problem, deal with it. Bring forward the legislation that deals with that, but don't open up people's personally identifying information without their consent and disclose that to police service employees based on that. If that's your problem, deal with it. Bring in the legislation. But don't use that as a reason to open up the rest of this can of information for anybody else to get access to.

And you are already covered for that. If you've got a situation where someone's in imminent danger – you know, there was a car accident, and somebody else might be out there – you are already covered for getting that information under the clauses that already exist and the surrounding laws that already exist around that, which is the "imminent danger" and "life-threatening." If you've got somebody coming in and you think there's a spouse somewhere bleeding in the bathroom in the house, you're already covered to get that information.

So quit using those excuses as a way of justifying what's happening here because it does not describe the situation that it is intended to deal with. You're already covered for that stuff. Don't bring examples of someone with a mental health issue in here because those are already dealt with somewhere else. So you are unable to provide me with examples of exactly what situations you are anticipating that would be covered by this legislation because everything else you've described to me is already covered, under "imminent danger," under "life-threatening," under the provisions that are already available under the Mental Health Act, under the provisions that are already available under Fatality Inquiries, Child Welfare, and Protection for Persons in Care.

What is the situation you're anticipating here? You can't describe it. Every example that I've heard raised about why you need to be able to get at this information about people is already covered. So you're not giving me examples of why you need this. Therefore, I say: then, you don't need it, if you can already get the information in the other areas through the other provisions that are given to you through this legislation and other legislation. Those are the examples that keep being used to justify this. You can already get that information. What, exactly, is it that you want to use this information for? Nobody can give me those examples. I sat through days of public presentations, and all of the examples that were brought forward by the police services were already covered. None of them applied to what was being contemplated here.

Again, I say: what is it that you're trying to get at here? If you're trying to deal with suspicious activities that you want health professionals to report to the police, then specifically put together legislation and ask them to report that. As I said, you've got model legislation to work from in Ontario. That was mandatory reporting of gunshots, and I believe that knifings and severe beatings were included there, and if not, they could be, because those would be the obvious ones we'd be seeing. But this, you know, car accident stuff and the mental health person and the spousal beatings and imminent danger to a spouse at home: sorry; we're already covered for that. So don't use those examples as a justification for what's happening here.

Given that the member just gave me such an excellent argument, I would urge everyone to support amendment A3. I'll call the question, assuming nobody else wants to speak to this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I want to just suggest, Mr. Chairman, that given the concern expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, that, in fact, this clause would provide the police services with additional access to people's personal health information with no particular good reason that is not already provided for, I am persuaded and will throw the full weight of my caucus behind this amendment. I'm sure that will prove decisive.

Mr. Chairman, I think we need to be very, very careful in light of what's happened in the United States with the passage of the PATRIOT Act. You know, the stoking of fear always needs to be guarded against. In the United States with the PATRIOT Act it was clear that this was a pre-existing agenda – a pre-existing agenda of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies – that they had not been able to get through the democratic process because people stood against it and said: "We're not a police state. We have democratic values, we have things that we believe in, we have rights, and we have protections. The individual is protected from the state, and there have to be certain tests that need to be met before these can be overridden in the interest of the greater good." Of course, the PATRIOT Act swept that away.

Now, this is by no means the PATRIOT Act, and it's by no means as serious, but it represents the same thing in principle. There is an unnecessary and an unjustified intrusion into people's rights as individuals by the state without adequate justification and without appropriate tests.

I take the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre at her word because I have not heard the government side refute her arguments, and I think that until such clear evidence can be provided that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is wrong, we must support the amendment. If the government can provide that evidence and that justification at a later time, we can always come back to this and legislate it there. In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I do not feel that it's appropriate to retain this clause in the bill.

Thank you.

Dr. Brown: I want to deal with what I think is an incorrect assumption on the part of the hon. member with respect to the issue of gunshot wounds and stab wounds. The present legislation talks about a disclosure if a custodian "believes, on reasonable grounds, that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger," imminent meaning immediate. Somebody that staggers into an emergency room with a gunshot wound or a stab wound, while they may well have signs that would indicate that they'd been involved in a criminal activity or been the victim of a criminal activity, would certainly not fall within the parameters of being in imminent danger or causing imminent danger to anyone else.

I take the hon. member's point regarding the fact that maybe there should be mandatory legislation to report such particular instances. We haven't gone that far because of the concerns. There was some considerable discussion on the issue, as I said, of the fact that we're dealing with doctor-patient confidentiality and so on, which is something that has to be safeguarded except in exceptional circumstances.

I think that one has to assume that the custodian of the information is going to use discretion on when it's in the public interest and when, in their judgment, they should disclose the information. As I said, things like gunshot and stab wounds are not covered right now under the existing legislation. Perhaps there should be some further strengthening of the bill which is there, to mandate those particular disclosures. But we haven't gone that far because we're trying to strike a balance, the balance between this relationship between the custodian – the health care provider, the pharmacist, or the doctor – and the patient, on one hand, and the public good or the public safety, on the other hand.

I think, as I said, it's a discretionary thing, and, yes, one could assume that there might be abuses, but one must also assume that we need some discretion there in order to allow the disclosure in those circumstances which are exceptional like I described, like the gunshot wounds, like the knife wounds.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. One more point that I want to raise, just to put this in context. When we're talking about the custodian, that is our health professional: that is our nurse at the nursing station or our physician or our LPN or whoever. Given the circumstances that we keep hearing from this government about the situation that the health care services are in today, how busy everybody is and how pressed we all are to be providing these services, now we want to be taking our health care professionals, pulling them off of what they actually do to provide health care services so that they can be rooting through to give information out under circumstances that I still argue are unnecessary. They're already compelled to do it in the ones that I've listed. This is how we're using our health professionals? This is what we want them to spend time doing? More than that, we also want them to stand there and consider whether this is appropriate or not. They have very little certainty because they're now going to have to know the law and interpret it. I sure hope they get assistance to do that because it would be very unfair to place this burden upon them without some kind of training, and I hope the money comes to do that.

That's what we're creating here: an expectation that we're going to expect our health service providers to understand this, to be able to stand there and make the decision, no matter how busy they are, about whether this is appropriate or not, understanding all the context that's in it. I would still argue that this is not a good use of our health care professionals, in this day and age in particular, to be having to go through this process, especially when I argue that I've yet to hear a good argument about why we need to be disclosing this information under the circumstances outlined in this bill.

Those are my arguments. I hope I've convinced everyone here to support me, and I'll call the question.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A3?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I would like to move amendment A4, and I'll let that be distributed.

The Chair: We'll distribute those first.

Okay. You may proceed hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. This is amending section 37.2, striking out subsection (4). Bear with me while I walk through this one because this appears at the end. We're back to 37.2, which was the "Disclosure to prevent or limit fraud or abuse of health services by health services providers." They go through the usual thing about they may disclose the information, possible commission, detect or prevent fraud, or limit abuse in the provision of health services, the kind of information that they can release.

Then we get down to section (4), and that is: "Individually identifying health information may be disclosed under subsection (3) without the consent of the individual who is the subject of the information.” Well, what does subsection (3) say? Let’s go back. Subsection (3):

If a custodian discloses information under subsection (1) . . .

That was the original section.

. . . about a health service, the custodian may also disclose individually identifying health information about the individual who received that health service if that information is related to the health service.

So we’re a little suspicious about Dr. X. We think Dr. X might be defrauding, so we have approached custodians of health information to release us information on Dr. X., and there’s a long list of the information that they can give. But Dr. X is also treating some patients, so we have patient A. Now what this would allow is that for patient A, who has been treated by Dr. X, their individually identifying health information would be released to the investigating authorities here, the police or the Attorney General, without patient A’s knowledge. Interesting, interesting, interesting.

I have to say: why? If you need me as a patient to be a witness against a doctor that you think is being fraudulent with health care services, then you can come and ask me, and I’ll probably be very glad to help. We’re all aware, you know, of having a good, strong health care system. I’ll probably be willing to help. But I think it is very wrong of you to put a clause in this bill that gives my individually identifying health information to the police service or to the Attorney General without my knowledge and without my consent. It’s wrong, wrong, wrong. I cannot come up with any circumstance under which that would be acceptable. This is, I don’t think, any of their information. If they need to be able to get at you to be a witness, they can come and ask your permission. I don’t see any reason why they can’t do that. As a matter of fact, I thought that at one point somewhere in here I read that you had to get written permission from somebody and that that was part of the tests that were met.

And this person isn’t even guilty of anything. You’ve got those other provisions in here that are about people where you think it’s an individual. That was section 37.1, where you thought it was an individual who was perpetrating fraud. You’ve got the sections in there to cover them. This is someone that isn’t even guilty of anything, and you’re taking their individually identifiable health information. All those tests, all your family’s genetic history, everything they have about you becomes part of this knowledge that gets passed on. You’re a victim here, and they want access to that information without your knowledge, without your consent. Wrong, wrong, wrong. I can see no acceptable reason for doing this.

That’s why I want to strike completely subsection (4) out of section 37.2. You can go after those doctors you think are committing fraud. Absolutely. Go for it. Remember, earlier I had mentioned that this was the section that I had left alone and left it there. But you absolutely should not be going after individuals’ health information without their knowledge, without their consent in order to try and get a health service provider.

So if I haven’t officially moved amendment A4, I’m happy to do so at this time. I would ask everyone’s support in deleting this particular subsection out of Bill 31.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to address some circumstances about that information relating to “the individual who is the subject of the information.” That is the way it’s phrased. It might be intrinsic to the investigation of the health care service provider. I can think of a number of instances; for example, where numerous prescriptions are written, perhaps to the same individual, and where those prescription drugs are known to be illicitly trafficked and where many of those drugs can be abused by people for nonprescription uses. Also, where multiple procedures perhaps have been billed to the same persons, it would be necessary to verify whether or not those procedures had been carried out. If there was suspicion on the part of the authorities that there was fraud taking place with a health care service provider, they would need to check with the individuals who were allegedly the subject of those procedures to see whether or not they had been properly carried out and in order to verify whether or not there had been fraud.

So I think that the fact that the custodian would have to give that information is intrinsic to the fact of investigation. I don’t think that you could properly investigate those particular instances unless you did have that information.

The Chair: Are there others? Are you ready for the question on amendment A4?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move amendment A5.

The Chair: We will distribute those right away.

I believe you can proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. This amendment is striking out the entire section 9 of Bill 31. Now, Bill 31 is amending section 42(2) of the original bill, so let’s look at section 42(2). Well, to do that, you’ve got to look at section 42(1). This is notification of purpose of and authority for disclosure. So 42(1) is:

A custodian that discloses individually identifying diagnostic, treatment and care information must inform the recipient in writing . . .

This was the clause I was thinking of.

. . . of the purpose of the disclosure and the authority under which the disclosure is made.

Now we get into the exceptions. Subsection (2) says:

Subsection (1) . . .

What I just read.

. . . does not apply where the disclosure is

- (a) to another custodian . . .
- (b) to the Minister or the Department under section 46, or
- (c) to another custodian under section 47.

And here we get into what’s included in section 9:

- (d) to a police service or the Minister of Justice and Attorney General under section 37.1, 37.2 or 37.3, or
- (e) to the individual who is the subject of the information.

So the same problem here. It’s supposed to be in writing to the individual that’s involved except in those various circumstances that are already laid out. The government is now looking to add two more circumstances and once again to a police service – uh-uh, don’t like that – and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General under the sections we just went through: 37.1, 37.2, and 37.3. This is essentially a consequential section that flows from the earlier section, and I can understand why it’s in here, but for all the same reasons I didn’t like what’s happening in the additions to 37, I don’t like this.

I want to be very clear here that in my original notes I think what we’re really considering here is that this is about people that are outside of the arena. When we talk about health information – and forgive me for repeating this because I know it's really kind of boring to a lot of people – the way health information is set up is that you have what's called an arena, and it's difficult. There are a number of tests to get access to the arena, but once you're in that arena as someone who collects health information, you are pretty much free inside that arena to share that information around with everybody that's in there. In other words, everybody, once they get access to that arena, has passed all the tests, and they're legit. They are okay. They have the gold star of approval, and they can share that information back and forth under a lot of circumstances. The information is prohibited in most cases from being shared outside of that arena except for special circumstances.

My note is saying that part of the purpose of section 42 is to deal with those that are outside of the arena. That makes me even more cautious when I see section 42 being amended by what's under section 9 because I'm concerned that we have opened up a gate in the arena for this information to now pass out to custodians that are not particularly approved, and my examples here are things like the WCB. So I have a real concern about what's being considered here.

We also have no definition of why the information is being given to the police. I understand that it's consequential to the 37s, but I still think it's problematic. If I'm correct in my reading of 42, which is about dealing with people outside of the arena – I think we really have lost control of what we're doing if that's the case.

So I would urge everyone to support this amendment because I think we need to be very careful of when we exclude people from protection. It needs to be done for a very good reason, and I'm not seeing that reason forthcoming. But I will listen carefully to what the sponsor of the bill has to say.

Dr. Brown: Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman. Section 9 adds two particular clauses there. One is the one, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned, that's consequential to the changes of 37.1, 37.2, and 37.3. There certainly may be instances where an investigation may be prejudiced if the information was released by the prosecutor's office or the police. The Attorney General is what I mean by prosecutor. I can see where in those particular instances it may be prejudicial to an investigation to disclose it.

In the case of the second instance, to the individual who is the subject of the information, obviously where an individual, John Doe, seeks their information, it would be redundant to have to disclose to that individual that they themselves had obtained the information; for example, if they were seeking damages in a motor vehicle accident claim or something and they sought the information on their own behalf. This simply adds as another category, the person who is the subject of the information, and exempts them from the requirement of having to inform them. I think that is intuitively obvious why we wouldn't have to inform them. Presumably they would've had to have obtained the information, so they would've known about it.

Ms Blakeman: I disagree with that interpretation. When we go back and look in the original bill at what 42 says, it's talking about that a custodian disclosing individually identifying information has to inform the recipient in writing of the purpose of the disclosure and the authority under which the disclosure is made except – and these are the reasons that you would have to be excepting it, and you're adding in two additional categories for why you're excepting it. So the person is not getting the information.

Dr. Brown: Just very briefly. The requirement there is to notify the recipient in writing of the purpose of the disclosure and the authority under which the disclosure is made. If we're talking about the individual subject to whom the disclosure was made, it seems – as I said, I think that that individual, obviously, has the information. There is no point to it.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A5?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This is my final amendment. I would move it as amendment A6.

The Chair: We will distribute those immediately, and as soon as that's done, then we can proceed.

You may proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This is amending section 10, and this is striking out subclause (ii) under section 46(1)(b). Essentially, this is saying that “the information is prescribed in the regulations as information the Minister or the Department may request under this section.” I really don't like this stuff being sent to regulations, and the regulations on implementing this bill are bindersful anyway.

I really don't like adding in clauses in which more decisions can be made by regulation for a couple of reasons: one, because this is intimate information. People should be able to access it pretty easily, which you can do about legislation, about statutes. You can access that online or through the Queen's Printer. It's much harder to get at regulations, much, much harder. It's almost impossible to tell that regulations are being changed because those are usually done by cabinet behind closed doors, and all you get is an order in council that comes out in the Gazette at some point, so way after the fact. You have no idea of why they made that change, what the discussion was that went on, who was in favour of it, who wasn't. There's very little, if any, public input on any changes that happen.

Whereas, if you leave it in legislation, it has to come back before the Assembly. You can have people in the public gallery watching the debate. The Hansard is available of who said what and why they felt strongly about something for or agin it. You can have a standing vote in which you can see, you know, who was in favour of it and who wasn't.

I really, really disagree, especially with health information, with empowering more decisions to be made by regulations, which is basically more decisions to be made behind closed doors, where the public gets no input on the decision-making or on any changes. And it's much harder to get this information. It's hard for me to get this information, and I supposedly have easier access to it. It's really hard for members of the public to get it, and we're talking about people's individually identifying health information here. So that's my reasoning for wishing to see this subsection taken out.

This is appearing in the original bill under division 2, Disclosure for Health System Purposes. Section 46 is dealing specifically with disclosure to the minister or the department. It starts out, “The Minister or the Department may request another custodian to disclose individually identifying health information for any of the purposes listed in section 27(2),” and then it goes on with a long list of why and how. But, essentially, this would be how the minister would deal with it, who they can disclose it to. All of that's laid out in the legislation.

This particularly would be falling under 46(1)(b), which is if the information requested relates to a health service provided by the other custodian

- (i) that is fully or partially paid for by the Department, or
- (ii) that is provided using financial, physical or human resources provided, administered or paid for by the Department, and then you get these additional services, anything that's prescribed in the regulations.

Part of my suspicion here is about how we will investigate possible fraud if we end up with more private provision of health services or health services that are paid for with private insurance. How do we ensure that we have protected everybody? The issue here is that if we see continued attempts at privatization – maybe not this year; maybe next year or the year after – I'm struggling to see if what we're encoding here is the ability to investigate the public system but not the private system except by using Criminal Code. I think that that can be more problematic because the tests are different. I don't think we want to see a system set up where we can't properly pursue private providers or private insurers of health services because we've set something up oddly here.

My initial concerns were around putting more decision-making into regulations, which I am never in favour of, but also my increasing concern is that what we may be setting up here is a difficulty in being able to use the same legislation to pursue potential cases of fraud or questionable provision of health services by a private provider or services that are paid for by private insurance providers.

If I haven't moved amendment A6, then I'm doing it now, and I urge everyone to support amendment A6. Thank you.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, just very quickly, Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I didn't echo the comments of my colleague for Edmonton-Centre when it comes to moving legislation into regulation or allowing ever more regulations to be put into place and taking away the ability of this Assembly to examine those rules before they're passed. It's been my pet peeve since I was first elected to this Chamber, and we continue to see it time and time again in any number of bills where that has taken place. So I have to take every opportunity to express my displeasure over that.

Often we hear arguments made that it's necessary because the Legislature doesn't sit often enough or it's too inconvenient to wait until the Leg. sits or that sort of thing. But that simply isn't good enough in an age where there is more and more being demanded of our governments in terms of openness and transparency. To be allowing such decisions as this to be made in the cabinet room by Executive Council without a guarantee of public debate is simply not good enough. I do understand that often there will be public consultation and stakeholder input and so forth, but it's not guaranteed to take place, as it is when it's legislation and when it's mandated that it be presented in front of all 83 members of the Legislature to have the opportunity to speak to it.

So I felt it necessary that I, as I suggested, echo the comments of my colleague for Edmonton-Centre in this case because it's just one more example of many where this is being done, and I think that ultimately the province suffers for it, and the people of this province suffer for it when we let this continue to happen.

Thank you for the opportunity to make those comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt the proceedings under Standing Order 32(2.1) and request that if a division is called, the bells be shortened to a two-minute interval.

Mr. Mason: Just on this?

Ms Blakeman: On the bill.

The Chair: This is a motion for unanimous consent on division to shorten the time to two minutes between the bells. Is that correct?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but I don't think it needs to be unanimous.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Just a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman. I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is questioning, if this is approved by unanimous consent, whether or not it applies only to this particular bill or if it applies for the rest of this evening's sitting.

Ms Blakeman: My intention was that it's for the next vote, which I believe would be a vote on the Committee of the Whole proceedings on Bill 31.

The Chair: The motion is to reduce the time to two minutes between the bells on Bill 31. It requires unanimous consent.

The Chair: We have had the vote on the amendment, and that was defeated, so we're back on the bill.

Does anyone wish to participate in the debate on Bill 31? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to address a few of the points that were raised during second reading and the Committee of the Whole debate which preceded, on May 3.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora referred to section 5(vi)(r) and asked whether it was also involving disclosing health information without consent to insurers. The answer is yes, the amendment is intended to enable the disclosure of limited health information without consent to third-party insurers for payment purposes.

Another question was asked in relation to what protections are in place for health service providers who choose not to provide confidential health information. They may make this decision in response to a request from the police if they feel that they shouldn't disclose the information because of their relationship with the client, and that's what I alluded to earlier with respect to discretion. Currently, the health service providers are protected under the act. It states that no action can be brought against "any person acting for or under the direction of a custodian for damages resulting from anything done or not done by that person [acting] in good faith while carrying out duties or exercising powers under this Act." So that would include any failure to do something where the individual has discretion under the act.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder asked about section 5 and felt that it hinted at some possibility of private health insurance. The amendment is simply intended to enable the disclosure of limited health information without consent to third parties for payment purposes. These third parties are primarily private health insurers. This would facilitate insurance that is already in place such as dental plans, drug plans, coverage for chiropractors, physiotherapists, and so on.

He asked what situation or circumstances this legislation might be anticipating, how disclosure to police services and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General or the minister of health would help the good, and what sort of situation would require disclosure for the sake of public safety. I think I've discussed that at some length already.

The Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act is a separate piece of legislation. It is not considered partner legislation to Bill 31. Assuming that the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act is passed and proclaimed, it is that legislation which would be relied upon to enable disclosure of health information for that purpose.

Regarding the issue of electronic disclosure, the proposed amendment would only remove the requirement to note the disclosure in a log because of the fact that the electronic system has automated audit capability as I alluded to earlier when I spoke to the bill. The automated audit capability, as I said, duplicates what a disclosure log would normally do.

The hon. member asked what information is available for disclosure and wanted more illumination on section 10. The intention at this time is to mandate the provision of community drug dispensing information from the health system. The information is currently being collected by community-based pharmacies. While some are already providing this information on a voluntary basis to the pharmacy information network within the electronic health record, the information is more useful for planning and evaluation purposes if a complete picture is available. Mandating the collection of this information would enable better monitoring of drug utilization and improve understanding of drug trends. The cost of pharmaceutical drugs, as we all know, is one of the major drivers behind the increasing health care costs. The department is required to complete a privacy impact assessment and to forward it to the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for comment before they implement any such regulation.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung asked about health information privacy related to research studies. These proposed amendments do not impact on clinical trials. Patients enrolling in clinical trials consent to their participation. The consent form does specify what will happen to their health information. It's my understanding that the sponsor of the clinical trial receives information in a standard, preset, and nonidentifiable format.

Regarding residents in long-term care and prison inmates the Health Information Act requires custodians to take reasonable efforts to obtain administrative, technical, and physical safeguards. These safeguards are designed to protect the confidentiality of health information within their custody or control and to protect privacy. The proposed amendments do not directly impact on the protection of health information.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East raised a point about how informed people are regarding the rights about their personal health information. Health information is collected, used, and disclosed within the health system for treatment and care purposes. Patients receiving health services do have a right of access to their own health information, and they can express their wishes as to how their health information is disclosed by a custodian. The exchange of health information for the provision of treatment and care is certainly not a new practice. In determining how much information is disclosed for treatment and care purposes, custodians certainly must consider the wishes of the individual.

Within the electronic health record a custodian can honour an individual's expressed wish by masking the information in question. While the mask expresses the individual's wish to limit the disclosure of the information, that mask can be removed by health care providers with an individual's consent. They can also unmask that information without consent if there's a safety or quality of care issue. Unmasking activities are logged and monitored. The proposed amendments have no impact whatsoever on that particular issue.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had asked: what conditions are anticipated under which third parties would have access to this information for purposes of payment for services? As I previously mentioned, this amendment is intended to enable the disclosure of limited health information without consent to third parties for the purpose of processing payments. An example would be where third-party insurers adjudicate the payment of health services or products without requiring the individual's consent.

Regarding fraud and its potential the amendments in Bill 31 are intended to address fraudulent activities within the publicly funded health care system. Of course, we have an obligation as the government to ensure that the public funds are not abused. The amendments specifically address fraud perpetrated either by an individual in section 37(1) or in the case of the health care service provider in section 37(2). I have spoken quite extensively on those provisions earlier in the debate on the amendments by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Chairman, these are my comments, and I ask for the support of the House in committee.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the clauses of Bill 31 as amended agreed to]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:56 p.m.]

[Two minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

legal opinion as a municipality in order for you to fight that lawsuit in the courts, and you don't want the person suing you to have access to your legal advice any more than the city should have access to the plaintiff's legal advice. So that's exempt, and that's a very, very reasonable exemption.

You may have, for example, certain kinds of business advice if you're involved in a business. It might be a municipal initiative. Say you had a power company, and you're involved in a competitive business. You'd certainly be allowed to protect that information because it's competitive. If you own Edmonton Power, for example, or the city of Calgary electric system before it was made into a corporation – I'm going back a little bit because I don't want to talk about the new corporate entities that have been established but rather the old electrical departments that the major cities had or, for example, any other utility that might be owned by a municipality that might in some ways be in competition – you don't want your opponents, you don't want TransAlta to know what you're doing if you're Edmonton Power, so you need to be able to protect that sort of thing.

Similarly, related to that, a municipality or a government might engage in a competitive bid process. So you have different companies bidding on some kind of a job, some kind of a contract with the municipality or with the government in which they are trying to make the case that their company should be selected, and they provide you with information to back up their bid, which is of a competitive nature. They don't want their competitors to get that information just because they provided that bid information to a municipality and the principle is that the information should be made public wherever possible. You don't want to have that situation occurring. So there's a legitimate reason for competitive information. Now, having said that, Mr. Chairman, I think this government abuses that and hides behind that.

I guess, Mr. Chairman, that what I want to say is that there are fairly strict requirements around the ways in which municipalities can release public information or hide information from the public. They have to meet certain very specific tests. But this government doesn't abide by the same rules that it sets for municipal government in this province. In fact, this government is providing itself with an awful lot more in the way of reasons to hide information from the public, and there's no justification in doing so unless, of course, the government has something to hide.

The government doesn't want people to be looking over its shoulder, and it has a number of ways of doing that. One way is to make it expensive. Sometimes you get, you know, these massive bills that opposition parties can't afford or public interest groups can't afford or the general public could never afford.

Mr. Elsalhy: Maybe they look at it as a revenue stream.

Mr. Mason: My hon. colleague suggests that maybe the government looks at it as a revenue stream. Well, maybe they do, but I think there's another more profound reason why the government does that, and that is because they want to create an impediment to citizens asking for information. It makes it hard to ask for information broadly and forces the citizen to focus very specifically on documents. The problem with that, of course, is that the citizen or the interest group or the opposition party often doesn't know exactly which document it is that they want. So they can't ask for it unless they already know what it is. In many cases that's impossible for them, so it creates a real barrier.

The second way in which the government thwarts the access to information for its citizens is to engage in lengthy delays, bureaucratic processes, and, in fact, simply refusing to meet its obligations, because there are, actually, no penalties for failing to meet its obligations under the act. In other words, the government can ignore the Information Commissioner or legal requests for information, and they often do so because there are no teeth in the act. There is no real compulsion on the part of government: there are no fines, ministers can't lose their jobs, there is really no sanction against the government if they fail to comply with the act in a timely fashion.

We have a recent example of that. That recent example was our request for information around the Aon report. We wanted to know who bid on the Aon report, what their bids were, what the reasons were for the selection of Aon as opposed to some of the other bidders on the contract. We wanted to know the terms of reference for the project that Aon was undertaking. We were stonewalled at every stage. The department requested extensions, which were granted. When their extensions ran out, the commissioner directed them to supply it by a certain date. That date came and went, Mr. Chairman, and the Department of Health and Wellness still did not provide us with the information.

We had to take it public. We had to raise it here. We wrote to the commissioner saying, "What are you going to do?" But, of course, there wasn't a sanction, so the government was able to take its own sweet time about releasing that information.

In the end, for all the time and trouble that we had taken and the lengthy period of time that had gone by, most of which was allowed for under the act and was quite legal and some of which wasn't legal at all, all we got was a handful of documents, a couple dozen pages that were sitting in the filing cabinet all along. It wasn't that the government had to do any fresh research or do any digging or undertake a massive search. They, in the end, gave us a handful of documents, only part of what we'd asked for, that were just sitting in the filing cabinet or were sitting on some administrator's desk or perhaps even sitting on the minister's desk. We don't know. But they made us go through all of that hoop.

So, Mr. Chairman, in the absence of any real teeth and penalties on the part of the government for failing to comply with the act, it is a toothless piece of legislation, and it does not protect the principle that the public is entitled to its own information that is held in trust by the government unless there's a good reason why not. So that's the second thing.

The third thing, which is really of a lot of concern, is that the government has all kinds of exemptions from the requirement, far too many. So ministers' notes, briefing notes, all kinds of things that are there that may be relevant, that are important, that are information that's been produced on the public's behalf and with the public's money: those things are kept completely outside the purview of those things that can be obtained under the act. This act, Mr. Chairman, extends those things. This act provides the government more fig leaves to hide the truth from the public.

These things, quite frankly, fly in the face of the general direction in this country. We've got the Harper government, which at least in some ways is actually doing what this government is not doing, and that's keeping things a little bit more open and accountable. Mr. Chairman, you cannot keep the government accountable if the public is in the dark.

Briefing notes, which are offering advice to cabinet ministers on their departments and pressing public issues, will be kept out of reach until 2011. Documents from a provincial internal auditor, which evaluates and improves on how the province spends taxpayers' dollars, will be sealed till 2021. This act, according to a recent Edmonton Journal editorial, "is already notorious for making it time-consuming, costly or nearly impossible for Albertans to attain government information. Now the . . . Conservatives are making it even tougher, concerned more with protecting government documents than freeing up information for the public.”

So, Mr. Chairman, it’s not just, as far as we’re concerned, to pass this document. A recent letter to the editor said: This is just a continuation of a cleverly crafted program to stop the flow of information to Albertans. What do we really know about West Edmonton Mall, Alberta Treasury Branches, the Alberta Securities Commission, the Swan Hills toxic waste disposal plant, and electricity deregulation? The list goes on and on.

Mr. Chairman, this is really a bad bill, and it’s uncalled for. The government already has more protection from releasing the public’s information to the public than just about any other government in this country; in fact, I would say the universe. The government loves to say: we’re the best government in the universe. I would say that they are one of the most closed governments in the entire universe, based on my limited experience of the universe. I do think that we need to do something different.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to introduce an amendment, and I will provide copies to you for distribution.

The Chair: That would be amendment A4.

Chair’s Ruling Division

The Chair: While the amendment is being distributed, I will take the liberty to give a brief update on voting in division based on the point of order that was called. I would like to refer members to Beauchesne’s 818(2), which states that “the doors of the committee room are deemed to be locked while a division is being taken, and the vote of a member not in the room when the question is put will be disallowed.”

Also, Beauchesne’s 306 states:

- (1) A Member must be within the House and hear the question put in its entirety, in one of the official languages, or the Member’s vote cannot be recorded. It is not sufficient to hear it while in a gallery or behind the curtains.
- (2) Members must be in their own seats should they wish to vote and should remain in their seats until the division is complete and the result announced.

Based on 818(2), the member in question was indeed in the room. When the member was asked to vote, he was indeed in his seat, and when the chair noticed him respond to the vote, he was indeed in his seat. So, hopefully, that clarifies the matter.

Debate Continued

The Chair: I see that the amendments are distributed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, so you may proceed on amendment A4.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to speak just briefly to this amendment. The last time this bill was debated in committee, an amendment to entirely strike out section 4 was, as I understand it, defeated by the House. That section exempts ministerial briefing notes and backgrounders from FOIP. We’ve seen several examples of those being denied in the written questions and motions for returns. We think that it was a bad . . . [Mr. Mason’s speaking time expired]

The Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak on amendment A4?

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Chairman, can I just seek clarification, please, if I can stand on 29(2)(a) and ask a question to the hon. sponsor of the amendment.

The Chair: You don’t do that in committee.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. So I’ll speak to the amendment then.

The Chair: You can ask a question during your comments, and the hon. member can respond when he rises again.

Mr. Elsalhy: Very good.

Okay. I’ll speak to the amendment briefly, Mr. Chairman. The hon. sponsor of this amendment is hoping to strike out subsection (4)(a) and subsection (5) under section 4. Now, what section 4 proposes to do is basically to conceal documents that are “for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council” – i.e., a cabinet minister – “in respect of assuming responsibility for a ministry.” Subsection (5) is talking about those records that are described in this clause not being open for review or open to be released till at least five years have elapsed since that member of the Executive Council was appointed with respect to that particular ministry.

Now, we have a bill here before us, Mr. Chairman, that proposes two things. On the one hand, it proposes to give ministers more power in terms of their ability to make decisions behind closed doors and to move things from legislation to regulation. It basically allows the minister to expand their role and their powers.

The other thing that this bill does and this amendment does is that it allows them to conceal for at least five years the information that is given to them when they join cabinet. So on the one hand you have them grow their powers, and on the other hand you make them less transparent and you make the information that is given to them less available.

We feel that this is a negative turn, and it has potentially a destructive impact on how things are run. If we are in fact trying to clean up government and to alleviate the concern that members of the public have with this government that it is secretive and that it is not open or transparent enough, definitely, if we allow this to go forward, we are not achieving that.

Now, I started thinking about the five-year period, and you can’t help but notice that this would be for the most part more than one electoral cycle, one election. So it was interesting to note that this basically has the effect of hiding information that might hurt that particular cabinet minister at least until they get re-elected. We feel that this is not the way to be conducting government affairs, and it is definitely something that we find grossly offensive.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was talking about fees and how fees are an impediment to access. I want to add that a FOIP application is almost like a maze now. It’s like an obstacle course. The applicant has to navigate through the obstacle course to reach the information having to contend with delays and stalls and, you know, sometimes applications to the Privacy Commissioner to disregard the application and all that. Once you get the information, if you can afford the fees and if you can be patient enough to tolerate the long wait, then three-quarters or 80 per cent of that information is blacked out. So, really, what value are we getting from that access to information, which in my view has turned now into something that is closer to restriction of information than it is to granting access?

Ministerial briefings. In a meeting with the former Minister of Government Services, he indicated that ministerial briefings are just advisory in nature and that this amendment dealing with section 4 would simply make preparing for session easier. We don’t view it as just advisory. We view it as an integral part of how any particular portfolio functions and how a minister makes decisions. We think that the opposition, members of the public, and whoever else needs this information should be allowed or should be entitled to receive it.

I have to remind this House that on the federal stage what led to the Gomery inquiry federally was a ministerial briefing note. This government received a commendation from the federal Auditor General on just one aspect when it comes to transparency, and that is basically how we hire our deputy ministers. Other than that, they did not find anything positive with how this government functions. I bet you that when somebody, you know, either in cabinet or outside tells you that you can't get any more transparent and that this is the utmost example of openness and good governance, what they are referring to is basically: "Yes, we're okay because you can't find where all the errors are, and you can't look. Once you start looking, we will deny you the information."

We've heard the comments that were made about a month ago or five weeks ago with respect to the skeletons, and in a quick turnaround to try to do some damage control, it was referred to as gaps in policy. Well, let us look for those gaps in policy, then, to try to fill them and to try to satisfy not just members of this House but also members of the public at large that those gaps of policy are being looked at. And if, in fact, we unearth other skeletons that have a bigger impact, then, yes, we do have a right to look for them and to find them.

We live in a democracy, Mr. Chairman. I know my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore is trying to muzzle his laugh, but we do. People expect us to function as a democracy, not a tyrocracy, which is basically a tyrannical democracy or a corpocracy, which is a democracy run by corporations. This is a democracy that should be run by the people. We're here, opposition and government, to serve the people, and serving the people entitles everybody who seeks information to get that information, notwithstanding, of course, what the honourable sponsor of the amendment was referring to, when it's information that is not really necessary to be shared or that is detrimental if shared. Those are exceptions. Otherwise, the majority of applications should be granted, and the fees should be reviewed based on a true assessment of the actual cost, not used as an impediment or to generate revenue. This government is extremely secretive as it is, and they don't need to make it worse.

The government tells us that what's in Bill 20 is a mere house-keeping measure and a minor ineffectual administrative change, but again, Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ, and Albertans beg to differ. You know, I was thinking that if one would conduct a survey to gauge public support for this Bill 20, for this amendment to the FOIP Act, and if we actually, in fact, asked them what their views are of this government with respect to this particular area, what would people tell us? What would they say, and what would their answers be?

I came up with an imaginary or a hypothetical survey, which I asked a few people, and this is basically how it's structured. The question would be: do you trust what the Alberta government tells you? You would see that about 18 or 19 per cent of people would say: very rarely. They don't trust what the government tells them. The government, the way it's structured and the way the Public Affairs Bureau is structured, is to tell us how to think and tell us what to believe. They're not there to seek information from us or to gauge support. They're there to condition us and to tell us what to believe and how to think. Twenty-eight per cent would say: not usually. Thirty-six per cent would say: hardly ever. And seventeen per cent would say: are you kidding me?

An Hon. Member: Are you?

Mr. Elsalhy: I'm not kidding you, no.

You would get the usual stuff at the end of that survey, talking about the survey as being accurate within a margin of 3.5 per cent 19 times out of 20 and all that.

The next stage in that imaginary survey would ask people: do you think this Alberta government is open and transparent? Sixteen per cent would tell you: only selectively. They're selective with respect to which information they share readily and happily and which information they withhold and guard fiercely. Twenty-four per cent would tell you: no, definitely not. Forty per cent would tell you: you make me laugh. And twenty per cent would say: where do you come from?

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that this is a government that tells us how to think and what to believe. It promotes itself as a bastion of democracy and transparency where, in fact, it is a dungeon of secrets and skeletons. This is an administration that is solely interested in its own survival, and if that takes becoming more secretive and opaque, they're all for it, of course.

Their arrogance is another layer. You add arrogance to ignorance, and arrogance, Mr. Chairman, is what's going to lead to their demise. They believe that there will be no consequences to their actions. That's why they're pushing ahead with this Bill 20 although we told them that half of it is bad and half of it is offensive. They think that there is going to be no consequence and no result to their actions and that they're immune to public outcries and public outrage, and there is not going to be any loss. But I have to let them know that on this particular issue they stand to lose big time because the public will definitely reach the point, at one point in the future, you know, when they realize that this is not the way to run government and that if we expect a certain degree of transparency and it's not being offered, then maybe this government has to go.

At this hour, Mr. Chairman, I couldn't help but think about my children. My children are very little, but at some point in the future they would look back at the decisions we made in this Assembly, and they would ask me as their father how could I have agreed to something that maybe they would not understand in the future. I'm hoping that one day I'd say: "No. I didn't support 50 per cent of that bill. Fifty per cent was great, and I did in fact support it, but the other 50 per cent was offensive."

My kids' favourite movie character is Shrek, Mr. Chairman, and I'm not sure if you've watched his series of movies, but Shrek is an ogre. In one of his movies he was talking to his sidekick, Donkey, and he told him, "Ogres have layers." I don't think he was referring to layers like this government is proposing, layers of secrecy and opacity. He was referring to the complexity of his emotions. He was more human than humans. He was sensitive and caring.

Now, are these attributes that are shared by this government? I doubt it. The absolute opposite of openness and transparency is secrecy and opacity. Does this government view FOIP requests as a nuisance? Are members of the opposition and, indeed, citizens of this province wasting this government's valuable time when we ask for information, or does this government have an obligation to share this information? What do they have to hide? Again I say it, for the third time on the record: those who have nothing to hide, hide nothing.

Now, the sidekick found the explanation by Shrek to be a little confusing, so he asked for elaboration, and Shrek tried to give him an example by comparing himself to an onion. Mr. Chairman, an onion has layers, and the more you peel, the closer you get to that centre part of that onion. The more sheaths you remove layer by layer, the closer you get to the heart. The closer you get to the heart, the stinkier it gets. It gets more sour, and it's basically intolerable the closer you get to the heart of that onion. So I hope that one day, after we unpeel all the layers of this government's onion, the heart would not be as poisonous as we think it is in this side of the House.

In short, I would definitely express my support for this amendment. What it tries to do is to basically salvage some of the good components of this bill, and it allows us to come back at a later date and say: "Well, you know what? We tried, and we basically made it less offensive by removing a section that is terrible." I commend the hon. sponsor of this amendment for bringing it forward, and I urge all the members of this House to vote in support of that amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. members, I've just been informed that the Oilers won 3-2, for those that haven't heard.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. That's good news, indeed, and it inspires me because I now believe that my amendments also have a chance of winning, or at least four out of seven of them, perhaps.

Mr. Elsalhy: You mean against those sharks?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, we're quite used to taking on the sharks, Mr. Chairman.

I didn't really quite get a chance to explain the amendment. The section that would be amended is section 4, and 4(a) is struck out. It says that the right of access does not extend" – and that is that the right of access to the people to get the information that belongs to them does not extend – "to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in respect of assuming responsibility for a ministry." In other words, the information that's provided to a new minister about his or her ministry and the issues that need to be dealt with and so on are going to be secret under this change.

Well, our amendment, which I move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, will strike out the section that would exempt the notes and briefing materials prepared for new ministers. We think that this might well include some of the infamous skeletons that the former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was talking about while he was still the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and before he entered opposition Siberia because he was a little bit too frank and forthright just for the moment. So we think that those skeletons should be dug up and we should know what's there. Perhaps, by making this amendment, we'll in fact be able to do that.

The section that is being deleted by this amendment provides additional cover for the government, additional reasons to exclude requests for information, and we think it's unacceptable. So our amendment seeks to remove this fig leaf that the government is attempting to apply, and we hope that all hon. members in the interest of true freedom of information will support the amendment.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get up this evening and once again speak to the amendment on Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act. I guess I just want to start by reading from the dictionary the word

"freedom." It's always been hard for me to understand how we can have the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, yet it seems like it's the protection of information. Freedom: the power or right to act, speak, or think freely. That's the first one. Two, the state of being free, unrestricted use of something; three, the exemption or immunity from; four, the power of self-determination attributed to the will, the quality of being independent of fate or necessity. It seems to me that perhaps we're looking at number three or four there, the self-determination and the protection from having that information.

It's bothersome to be in the opposition and wanting to ask a question or get information only to be shut down by the Speaker or to not have access to that information. [interjection] The Speakers always kind of tended – and these things are going back a few years, and I'll grant that some have been a long time.

The information isn't there. It isn't available. It just seems wrong, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of government is to serve the people, and the only way we can serve the people is if we're open. There definitely is not an openness in this government, and this amendment to strike (4)(a) and (5) is very much – you have to ask the question: what could possibly be the purpose of those two clauses other than the protection or the exemption of accountability to the people? It seems very much like this is a shell game. Everybody has been to the circus or been to the street where there's a nut under the cup and whether or not you can follow it as this guy moves it fast enough. The number of times that ministers are moved, that portfolios are changed, that names are changed, it's impossible to know where the nut is and under which cup. They won't even lift them to let anybody look, and they say that it's not there.

Mr. Knight: We know where the nut is; we don't know where the cup is.

Mr. Hinman: Good. Keep focused on it, then, because you're going to lose it one day.

It seems like the purpose of this bill without this amendment is that if you make it difficult enough and if you make it cost enough or if you make them wait long enough, we'll be exempt because there'll be no one left to watch when the cups are finally lifted and you see what's been going on.

So I'm very much in favour of this amendment. I once again urge the people of this Assembly to look at it and realize what is the purpose of this Legislature. It's to serve the people. It's to be open and honest with the people. The people should be able to come in here and have a virtual tour not only of this building but of what goes on in this building. They don't have a virtual tour; they have no tour. To be able to hide information for five years: there's only one reason that anybody who is on the outside can see for that, and that's because they want to retain power, and they want to take something, manipulate it, take advantage of it.

In order to show your openness to want to help the people, have the doors open, have the notes open, have the information open. That way, people will have trust and faith and will support a government that they know is working for them. I would hope that we'd all look at this and accept this amendment for the benefit of Albertans throughout the province.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In fact, it's a new chairman. It's nice to see you there.

It's my pleasure to speak to this particular amendment. I just want to expand a little further on what my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner was saying a minute ago. Recently in this House during question period the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been pursuing a line of questioning related to the ring road in Edmonton and very questionable land purchases, I would submit, and then subsequent sales of land by this government. He has been chastised both by the minister responsible and at times by the Speaker for asking questions that are 20 years old.

One of the big concerns that we have here is that with some of the changes that are being recommended by this amendment to the FOIP legislation, we will not even have access to material. In this particular case it's five years. In other places in the bill it's 15 years. I can clearly foresee the day when, if I'm still fortunate enough to be in this Assembly, the members of the day are going to be asking questions of the government, and they're going to have the Speaker chastising them for asking questions that are 20 years old, and their answer is going to be that they didn't even have access to the information until that time. That is a scary thought.

I mean, the reality right now is that this particular line of questioning that I referred to goes back to the point where it's before the current Premier. What is being suggested by the amendments to the FOIP legislation is that in almost every case the questions would be going back to former Premiers because the access to the information would be so restricted that you wouldn't even have an opportunity to see it and develop questions, to write questions until in this case five years and in some cases 15 years. So it really, really is a regressive piece of legislation. Certainly, this amendment, if it were to pass, addresses that, and I think it once again moves us towards a much more open and transparent government, and that's what people want.

I was hoping to have had the opportunity to reference this during my budget debates this evening, and I didn't have the opportunity. The Federal Accountability Act is currently before the federal Parliament. My colleague reminds me, and it is true, that it has been tabled in this Legislature, the entire act, and it's a sessional paper, so it's readily referable by all members.

Some of the 13 points that are mentioned in here: strengthening the role of the Ethics Commissioner, toughening the Lobbyists Registration Act, ensuring truth in budgeting – that's the one that I particularly wanted to speak to this evening, and I could expand on it, but as I say, it's a sessional paper, and it's available for all to see – making qualified government appointments, cleaning up the procurement of government contracts, providing real protection for whistle-blowers, strengthening access to information legislation. That's the one I was looking for.

Mr. Chairman, the reality is that access to information at the federal level is already so much easier and so much less expensive than it is here in this province. We have the federal Tory cousins of this government increasing access to information, making it more available, more transparent, more accessible to the citizens of this country while at the same time their provincial Tory cousins here in this province are going backwards. We're going the other way. We're making it more restrictive.

One of the things that I really like is the idea of separating the access to information from the protection of privacy because what we find so often with this FOIP legislation is that it tends to be much more about protecting the government's privacy than it does the freedom of information. The idea of having the Information Commissioner separate from the Privacy Commissioner I think would make great sense. Separate those two; separate the legislation. That would go a long way towards addressing some of the problems and difficulties that we in opposition have accessing information. It would go a long way towards addressing some of the difficulties that the media have in accessing information. Clearly, it would go a long way in terms of addressing the difficulties that citizens of this province have in accessing information.

So I applaud the moves that the federal government is making. By and large they mirror recommendations that my colleagues, including the Member for Edmonton-McClung, made in a written submission to – remind me of the name of the committee.

Mr. Elsalhy: The conflicts of interest committee.

Mr. R. Miller: The Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee received a written submission from the Official Opposition caucus which was surprisingly similar, as it turns out, to the election platform of the federal Tory cousins of this government and, in fact, surprisingly similar to the Federal Accountability Act, which is currently before the federal Parliament.

So I would certainly like very much to see this particular amendment passed. It would be refreshing given that every other amendment that we have had before us to this point on this Bill 20 has failed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Doesn't it surprise you that they don't even stand up and debate it?

Mr. R. Miller: I am surprised, actually, that it is only the Official Opposition that even has comments to offer on these amendments. By and large, we seldom don't even hear any sort of a rebuttal from members of the government.

Mr. Elsalhy: Because they don't care.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, I'm not so sure that it means that they don't care. Perhaps they just suspect that legislation should pass through this House without any comment or observation by members of the opposition at all. I know that we have a Premier who is on the record many times as saying that he doesn't believe that we need an opposition in this province. I'll be honest, Mr. Chair. I've heard some people in this province echo his sentiments, and that is probably the scariest thing I've heard in my lifetime, actually. We all know what happens when you have a government that has no opposition. We've seen many examples of it through history, and I don't think any of us wants to go there.

Frankly, I don't believe that the Premier really means that when he says it either. I certainly hope he doesn't mean it. [interjections] Well, I have some members telling me they disagree. They believe that perhaps he does believe it. I'm not sure, but it causes me concern any time I hear anybody say that because, as I say, we all know what happens when you have governments that don't have any opposition, and it's not a pretty sight.

In particular, now, this amendment would strike out subsection (4)(a), which is the one that says:

The right of access does not extend

- (a) to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in respect of assuming responsibility for a ministry.

Then it also would take out subsection (5). This is the one that refers to

- a record described in that clause if 5 years or more has elapsed since the member of the Executive Council was appointed as the member responsible for the ministry.

Personally, I would have preferred to have seen the previous amendment passed, which would have struck the entire section (4) out of this bill. But if that's not going to happen – and clearly it won't because it's already been dealt with by this Legislature and has failed, as I said – I think the very least is to allow us access to these records that were provided for briefing.

I asked questions in question period today on a meeting of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board that was attended by the Finance Minister, and perhaps there was a briefing that took place there. I would like to know what business was discussed at that meeting, and I know for sure that many Albertans would like to know as well. So just one example, I suppose, Mr. Chairman, of access to information that is becoming more and more difficult as opposed to making it easier, more transparent, more accessible. As I say, that goes against the wishes of the people of this province, I believe, and it certainly goes against the trend of both the federal Parliament and other provincial Legislatures across this country.

With that, I would strongly recommend that the members of the government join those of us in opposition and extend at least in this one case a little more access and openness to not only members of the opposition but, as I said, to the media and particularly to individual citizens of this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. There have been a number of speakers in the opposition supporting this amendment to strike out subsection (4)(a) and subsection (5), and I just wanted to speak briefly on the record in supporting this amendment.

FOIP is one of those great, frustrating, should have been a great idea – and, boy, did it get perverted somewhere along the way – situations that we see develop with the government. I think most new governments coming into power talk a lot about openness and transparency, and certainly if they're coming from an opposition view, they understand exactly what that means.

I'm coming up to my 10th year here, and I tell you that when I started, I couldn't get any information. I spent an extraordinary amount of time just trying to find out basic stuff of what was happening in the ministry that I was responsible as a critic for. We weren't sent media releases. We weren't told about media conferences that were being called. You know, if you could manage to get down to this building and go by the doorway where the notices were posted, then you'd know about it, but if you were operating from any constituency office, I mean, you just didn't get that information. It didn't get faxed to you; that's for sure. The government put more effort into making sure we didn't know what was going on. Now at least with the advent of the web and every ministry having a website and regularly posting their media releases and calendars of events and public hearings and things that they're holding, it does make it easier for us to get at information, but when you go to other levels of information that the government has collected, the net closes very quickly. It's interesting how this government likes to put out that they are so transparent and open, yet being able to get at real information gets more and more difficult.

We've just done the Committee of Supply debates on all of the budgets, and I can tell you that the amount of information that's released in those budgets has decreased every single year. Now you just look at a series of line items. You have no idea what programs are covered in there, how many FTEs were assigned to them, all kinds of really important information if you're to be judging whether this government is producing good value for the taxpayer dollar. You can't get that information.

Here we have another example in Bill 20 where the government is cutting off the flow of even more information, and really, information is the currency of democracy. It needs to circulate freely and to be widely shared in order to be useful to the economy of democracy, if you want to put it that way, and we get exactly the opposite out of this government. I would argue that that impairs the government's ability to do a good job and for its bureaucrats to implement the policies that the legislators develop, and it makes it much more difficult for the citizens to hold the government accountable.

You know, what goes around comes around, and what ends up happening is you end up with an electorate that is totally disengaged from what we do in this room because they can't understand it, they can't get the information for it and why should they pay attention to it, and then we have trouble with voter turnout. So it does all go around.

In this particular case this amendment is trying to restore the right of access to be able to examine basically the briefing books that are provided to Executive Council when they move into a particular ministry. Putting in place that there is a five-year clause, that you can't see the information until five years has passed, is just another way of cutting off information to the opposition, to the media, to members of the public, and to stakeholder groups in the community. I disagree with it absolutely, and I would urge everyone to support the hon. member's amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been trying to get up a couple of times. I'm speaking on amendment A4 as well, just for clarification.

You know what? It does seem pretty simple. When you do have a FOIP Act that is secret, why would you in fact put more regulations in there to make it more secret? Obviously, the government does have something to hide. It's pretty obvious.

I spoke to a couple of kids – kids we're talking; we're talking junior high, even high school – just about general facts, about the ability to be able to get information and how the government is supposed to provide that information. They talked about them being transparent and accountable, and they understood what transparency and accountability were. To be able to deny information for five years in one instance and up to 15 in the other they thought was completely ridiculous, and the question that came to their mind was: "Why? Why would they want to do this?" The question is: why? If this was such a great piece of legislation the first time, why was this not included? This would never have passed to this stage already. When it came in about four years ago, citizens had their concerns about FOIP. Now, four years later, we're talking about even more prohibitive information being sought, and people are not going to be able to get it.

We had a couple of instances just a little while ago when people tried to in fact get airplane logs. Well, we were given the run around the terminal because it was a big deal. It was secret. That's just ridiculous. Then today in the session we asked about a $900 food tab at a restaurant for approximately 12 people. It's not the cost of the tab. The point of it was that it came out as just a receipt with no explanation. When you're on the public purse, you need to have accountability. Citizens are paying the tab here. They go to the polls. They're expecting to have leadership, leadership in the form of democracy, leadership in the form of transparency, leadership above and beyond what the average citizen, in fact, is accountable to.

Mr. Elsalhy: Honesty.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah. They're asking for honesty.

The basic principle that people want is to be able to trust their government. There was a poll and government came at the very bottom. Used car salespeople came ahead of politicians, and that's exactly the reason why. When you have bills like this that prohibit people from getting any information, why do you trust them?

Mr. Elsalhy: It wouldn't be acceptable.

Mr. Bonko: No. It wouldn't be acceptable anywhere else.

I do support amendment A4 that was brought forward by the member this evening, which would strike out two sections, (4)(a) as well as subsection (5), which would again lead to the outrageous amount of time that one would have to wait. Fifteen years. Like I said the other night, that's the entire government that this one has been operating for. That's like four elections. How many times can one go to the polls and hold their nose and vote and think that they are in fact getting good money for the whole piece of it?

The whole thing, Mr. Chairman, is that I ran, and one of my platforms was accountability. So far I feel that I have been accountable to my electorate. That's why I'm here at this hour, because I don't believe this is good government legislation that's going through. I think that people need to know that this is the type of stuff that does try and go through in the wee hours because most people are asleep. Most people aren't listening. They're asleep, and they're hoping that people are watching over them. We are watching over them and over their rights. In fact, when you wake up the next morning and find out that legislation has gone through that restricts information for five and up to 15 years, that's just ridiculous.

I think that those comments should in fact be on the record and encourage people to support it. We talked about the third way and how people could see an actual effect on their lives. They may not see the effect now, but later on the effect will be there when they need to have information or they start asking more questions. We have a younger and younger population that's coming up that's inquisitive, that, in fact, is more engaged in politics now than ever before. They're not old enough to vote, but if they were, I could see them saying that they would not vote for this particular piece here this evening.

An Hon. Member: Are you sure?

Mr. Bonko: Absolutely. I'm sure they would not.

An Hon. Member: Who would they vote for?

Mr. Bonko: Well, they wouldn't vote for the legislation if it was just the legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has the floor.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would, in fact, ask, because I'm going to speak just a little bit longer just to get this particular piece out. If the division bells are triggered, I would ask that we do shorten the debate from 10 minutes to two. That would be the Standing Order 32(2.1) then, and that's for unanimous consent on this particular piece.

The Chair: You move that the bells be shortened from 10 minutes to two. Is that correct?

The Chair: Are you ready for the question? The hon Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Chair, I'm going to repeat what I've said every time they've stood up to comment on these sections. I hope this time that they hear me and that they understand. By the way they're talking, you would think that we're hiding everything in this government forever. What we're doing is: we're simply making the briefing books of the minister, who are new ministers for a new session, unavailable for five years. After that they are available. They're opened up to the public. The public can look at them and see whether or not we were hiding whatever they're talking about over there; I have no idea. I believe that because of that, because they are accessible in five years, that we should not accept their amendment. [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North has the floor.

Mrs. Jablonski: I listened to them, Mr. Chair, but I guess that they're having a hard time hearing what I'm trying to say. The records of the chief internal auditor are available to the Auditor General whenever he requests them and whenever he wants them. The Auditor General represents the interests of the people of Alberta, and nothing is hidden from him.

Mr. Chairman, for those reasons these amendments are not necessary.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I beg to differ with my hon. colleague from Red Deer-North. I'm looking at a release from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner dated March 8, 2006, and I'll quote just part of it. He says:

The Commissioner, however, cannot support a proposal to exclude Briefing Books from application of the Act. "This has never been an issue for this Office in the past. This amendment could be a very significant exception to disclosure. We already have a section of the Act which quite clearly establishes the ability to withhold advice given by officials and this particular amendment is not necessary."

That's from the commissioner.

Now, a noted political scientist in our province, Professor McCormick, from the University of Lethbridge, has some comments as well on what the government is trying to do. He said: this sounds like every secretive government's dream; this is a government that always likes to say it is in favour of freedom of information, but freedom of information is always a risk for a government; so what they want to do is look as transparent as they can while being as untransparent as they can, and that way they don't get burned.

Mr. Chairman, that sort of sums up my view. This amendment will remove from the act the specific aspects of the act that the commissioner does not support. He has said very clearly that it's unnecessary, that it's already dealt with, and it is not necessary.

So what does the Minister of Government Services say is the rationale for this? The Government Services minister has defended the proposed changes. This is the minister responsible. The minister said that staff briefing notes and the internal auditor's records contain advice that a minister may reject and that that is why it should be kept secret: because it has an alternate view. It has something that the government has not done. It has received advice from its department, and it's chosen to do something else. Well, usually that's for some political motivation, Mr. Chairman. There's usually a political reason why a government rejects advice that it receives from its own administration.

So that's, as far as this government is concerned, the real reason why we have to exclude these things from freedom of information. The public might know what was suggested to the government might be the most appropriate course, and we can't have that, Mr. Chairman, because that might inform the public as to what the government is doing, what the government spin is, and so on.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the government is clearly trying to hide objective information that the public should know so that they can compare that information about what the government ought to do with what the government actually does, and that will help people divine the political motivations behind government decisions. That's what the government does not want to see. That is why they are making these changes in this act. That is why they're making this most secretive government even more secretive.

You know, it's interesting, Mr. Chairman. When I go out and go shopping at the grocery store or out in the community and so on, most people don't know about this bill, but when you tell them about it, they say: well, what does it mean? Well, basically you tell them that what it means is that the government is giving itself more reasons to keep information secret. They get angry. I'm very surprised at how much of an issue this is for Albertans. Even though many Albertans are not aware of this bill and what the government is doing – and no wonder; look at the time of day that we've been debating it for for the last week or so – when they find out about it, they're angry because the trend is against this. The trend we're seeing in Ottawa, the trend we're seeing across the country is not being reflected in this bill. The trend is to more openness and the public asserting its right to have access to its information and to disallow governments from hiding information from the public in order to serve their own political ends.

Mr. Chairman, FOIP has entered the lexicon of Alberta. When you say "to FOIP," it is a verb. It's an adjective. It's part of the language. But I've got a new definition for FOIP. F-O-I-P stands for: frequent opacity is prevalent. That pretty much sums up this bill.

So I urge hon. members to support this amendment and will remind them that this amendment is consistent with a recommendation of the freedom of information commissioner, who is against this clause of the bill. This amendment will take it out of the bill and make the bill consistent with the commissioner's view of what protections the public requires.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This will be my last time to speak on this particular amendment as well. I heard the Member for Red Deer-North trying to explain the reasons for this, but I haven't heard anything. It was a futile defence, in fact, of a weak bill. I think most people talk about crimes taking place in the evening. Well, the passing of this bill would certainly be a crime against Albertans who, in fact, put their whole trust in the government to do the right thing.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about his interpretation of F-O-I-P, and it certainly isn't freedom of information. It's more like: fork off; it's private. We all know what I'm talking about. It's basically: "Mind your own business. This is government business. You have no reason to need it." That's why you put cost-restrictive pieces on it, and that's why we're making it more and more secretive as this government goes along.

Mr. Elsalhy: It's a crime.

Mr. Bonko: It is a crime. Absolutely it is.

So I will thank you for that last comment then, Mr. Chairman.

1:20

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 1:21 a.m.]

[Two minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Are there any other comments or amendments? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. I move that we adjourn debate with respect to Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 31 and progress on Bill 20.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 31. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and the significant progress made this evening, I move that we now adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 1:28 a.m. on Thursday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 11, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 22 home-schoolers from Neerlandia in the constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. They are accompanied this afternoon by Joy Wierenga, Beatrice Tiemstra, Ina Hofstede, John Wierenga, and John Harink. They are seated in the gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Madeleine Jacobi, who is the Athabasca Rotary exchange student from Sweden. Her parents, Lars and Ann-Mari, are also here. They are accompanied by the host parents, Dan and Lorna Dennis. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to once again introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly probably one of the most faithful school groups that we have visiting the Legislature. Crestwood school has visited our Legislature every year of the 13 that I've been an MLA, and I know that they had a tradition long before I was elected. Although they may not have the most visits, I would venture to say that if a hardship factor was put in place for whoever drove the most kilometres, at a thousand kilometres per round trip, this group has put in well over 20,000 kilometres coming to visit us here at the Legislature. They are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. I would like to introduce to you two grade 6 classes from Crestwood elementary school accompanied by principal Mr. David George, vice-principal Al Tisnic, teachers Maria Thompson, Wade Lawson, Wendy Smid, Gary Ziel, and Kathy Western, also parent helpers Shawn Carry, Darren Pederson, and Sandy Noble. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two introductions. First, I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the Alberta War Brides Association. This year, 2006, is the Year of the War Bride, marking the 60th anniversary of the war brides' arrival in Canada. In 1946 nearly 40,000 war brides and their children landed at Pier 21 in Halifax, Nova Scotia, from Britain and Europe on board special war bride ships. Organized and funded by the federal Department of National Defence, the war bride phenomenon is unique in immigration history. From Halifax they fanned out across Canada on many war bride trains. Perhaps just as compelling a story is the war brides' collective experience of meeting and falling in love with Canadian servicemen abroad. I have in my own family an example of that. My aunt met an Australian serviceman and actually was a war bride to Australia.

With us today are 12 war brides accompanied by their aides and loved ones, led by Mrs. Jeanne Pfannmuller, who is the social convenor for the Edmonton chapter of the Alberta War Brides Association. A number of the brides were unable to join us today due to illness and influenza. Those with us today are Jean Bruce, Josephine Campbell, June Dorn, Renda Grumetza accompanied by her daughter Rhonas Grumetza, Heather Heninger, Kit Kelly, Margery Paige accompanied by her daughter Arlene Kozuback, Edna Squarok, Sybil VanSickle, who is president of the Alberta War Brides Association Edmonton chapter, Olive Wadson, and Hetty Wear accompanied by her daughter Eileen Wear. I'd ask that our honoured visitors please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly family members and friends of one of our pages, Jennifer Huygen. Seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, is Susan Huygen, proud mother of Jennifer. Accompanying her are Nicole Huygen, Jennifer's younger sister; and Thomas L'Abbe and Lacey Suen, both friends of Jennifer's. Susan, Nicole, and Jennifer live in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I think it's only appropriate to take a moment to say, when her mother and sister are here, how proud we are of Jennifer and of all our pages and the great work that they do for us in this Assembly. What fine young people they are. I thank the Assembly for the traditional warm welcome for our guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, on behalf of the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, 35 people from the special town of Wainwright. They are here today with their teachers Mrs. Michelle Folk, Mr. Sheldon Gallagher, and Ms Janet Kaye and parent helpers Mrs. Jean Watson, Mrs. Cheryl Heier, Mr. Denis Mailloux, and Mrs. Dawn Worthington. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First of all, it's a privilege to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mel and Joan Teghtmeyer. Mel and Joan are two of Alberta's most committed and persistent activists. They're very interested in alternative ways of decision-making at the government level. They're calling for open and accountable government, ethical leadership, corporate responsibility. Believe me, they pursue those interests with passion and intelligence. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

My other introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Miss Jill Piebiak, my constituency office's summer STEP student. She'll be entering her third year of political science at the U of A in the fall. Not surprisingly, she has a keen interest in Alberta and Canadian history and politics and hopes to continue studying these areas as a postgraduate student. She spends volunteer time with the United Church youth of Canada, leading many of their provincial events. I know that she is going to be a real asset to my office in Edmonton-Riverview. I welcome her on board and ask all members here to please give her a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Meagan Hazlewood, our summer STEP student, back for a second year. She is taking interior design at NAIT and did a number of wonderful graphics last year for the Queen's visit. She is involved with the youth part of the party, attending our convention in June. Would she please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six wonderful people. They are Ajaib Singh Cheema from England, Mukhtiar Singh Dosanjh, Jaswinder Singh Dosanjh, Surjit Singh Dosanjh, Raghbir Khubar, Sharnjit Dosanjh. They are here this afternoon to tour the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly some of the many wonderful mothers of our caucus and constituency staff. Today we celebrated Mother's Day at a luncheon as a way of thanking our mothers for their wisdom, their love, their generosity, and most of all their support. We all recognize that our mothers have helped build this great province through their hard work and commitment to our communities. I would therefore now ask that each of them rise as I call out their names: Louise Hicks-LaChapelle, mother of administration assistant Alison Crawford; Aruna Sharma, mother of outreach coordinator Anand Sharma; Leah Andruchow, mother-in-law of communications director Tina Faiz and mother of Rob Andruchow; Sharon Flanagan Dubé, mother of Marieke Dubé, sessional research assistant; Angela Andreychuk, mother of constituency assistant Kris Andreychuk; Herta Schymizek, mother of chief of staff Sherry McKibben; Sylvia Flood; Bettianne Hayward, grandmother of STEP assistant Beth Hayward; and Marion Eggen, mother of the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly delighted and honoured to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very special guest today, John Kolkman. John has been caucus research director over the little more than nine years that I have spent in this Assembly and as part of the NDP caucus. John also served, I understand, between 1989 and 1993, when my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was the Leader of the Official Opposition. Unfortunately for us, John will be leaving to pursue other opportunities and endeavours. I want to take this opportunity to offer my special thanks to John for the most valued advice, wise counsel, and sometimes firm reminders over the years about not doing this or doing that. I would now ask John to please rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly gives me great privilege and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Gary Horan. Gary is a staunch and long-time Progressive Conservative Party member, who previously served as the president of the Alberta Alliance Party and gave up this position to return to the PC Party of Alberta and subsequently ran for Senator-in-waiting in Alberta. Gary is presently working with me. I would ask Gary to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Confidentiality of Ministerial Briefing Notes

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government has long, long been known for its secrecy. In 2004 it won the code of silence award from the Canadian Association of Journalists for being the most secretive government in Canada. Now government legislation threatens to even further restrict the freedom of information process by withholding ministerial briefings for five years, an amendment even the Privacy Commissioner is opposed to. It's the Premier's legacy of government: silence. My questions are in fact to the Premier. Given that a review conducted by an all-party legislative committee in 2002 made 62 recommendations, none of which included restricting ministerial briefings, will the Premier admit that this amendment is aimed at further protecting government ministers from public scrutiny?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker, I won't admit that. It's to protect this book. There is no way in the world that you or you or you or anyone over there is going to get this book.

You know, there was an ND – he was a very good ND; he was a critic – John McInnis. He has since passed away, Mr. Speaker, so I can mention his name. One day down in the gym he said: would you just pass along to me your briefing book? And I said: sure. Then Vance MacNichol, who was my deputy at that time, said: did you really promise John McInnis that he could have your briefing book? He said: “Do you understand that in this briefing book there is very sensitive advice to the minister” – I was Minister of Environment at that time – “very sensitive advice that the opposition would love to get their hands on? They would love to get their hands on it.”

Mr. Speaker, this is sensitive and confidential advice to a minister or the Premier, and it will remain that way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the taxpayers have paid for that book to be prepared, what secrets are in it that the public should not be informed of?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind all Albertans that they are getting paid to do nothing more than criticize the government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is the creation of a more restricted, secretive freedom of information process really the legacy that this Premier wants to leave the people of Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I want to leave a legacy of good government. That's the only legacy I want to leave. But I also want to make sure that ministers are protected relative to the advice they receive from senior government officials.

Now, when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition worked for the government, he was very careful about providing advice to the minister. But then after he found out that the minister didn't accept his advice, he quit and wrote a book. And he's entitled to do that. [interjections] I'll tell you what, he can give it to the NDs.

This information, Mr. Speaker, is confidential now under the existing rules and will remain confidential.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Process

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report released yesterday by one of the Premier's favourite think tanks, the Parkland Institute, has confirmed what opposition parties and political observers have long known: that this Tory government treats public revenues like a partisan piggy bank; that the public, media, and opposition representatives are shut out of the budgeting process; and, most importantly, that the Tory government has no coherent plan to take advantage of Alberta's remarkable resources. It is time for a change. My question to the Premier: in the wake of this damning report, will the Premier at least go on record and recommend what the Alberta Liberals have long been committed to; namely, an end to the PC-only budget process, that shuts out the views of a majority of Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm always happy to receive the advice of a left-wing think tank. The report was entitled Fiscal Surplus, Democratic Deficit.

Mr. MacDonald: Does anyone work for a right-wing think tank?

Mr. Klein: The right-wing think tanks, in answer to his question, are at least more accurate in their predictions.

If the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would turn to pages 100 and 101 of the government's fiscal plan – and this is a public document – you will see a list of private-sector forecasts for oil and gas. At the bottom of each of these pages you will also see how well these private organizations did at predicting oil and gas prices. Mr. Speaker, I would put my stock in the private-sector predictors instead of the Parkland Institute any day.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier commit, as I am prepared to commit, to creating an all-party committee of the Legislature to conduct public hearings on Alberta's budgetary process?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we have gone through a series of public hearings on all kinds of revenue/surplus situations: It's Your Future, Water for Life, the Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, A Learning Alberta: Dialogue and Direction. The list of public consultations goes on and on.

I have to explain, Mr. Speaker. This is not a top-down government, unlike the Liberals, who want to control everything. They want to control the lives and the minds of all Albertans, but we give Albertans credit for being able to think for themselves, unlike the Liberals and the NDs.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier join the Alberta Liberals in a commitment to increasing the mandate and authority of the Legislature's Public Accounts Committee, much like its federal counterpart, in order to increase legislative oversight of government spending?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Public Accounts Committee, which is chaired by an opposition member, can ask any questions they want of any minister. Believe me, I go through it. My ministers go through it. Nothing relates – nothing relates to the issue at hand, which is the expenditures of the last year. They go all over the place. In other words, they should bring their fishing rods because they're on a fishing trip.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Lottery-funded Grant Presentation Cheques

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Tory government continues to blur the line between nonpartisan government and partisan Conservatives. Lottery money is Albertans' money, not Conservatives' money. Yesterday in Public Accounts, in response to the Member for Calgary-Varsity the Gaming minister put an end to the Tory MLAs signing novelty cheques for photo ops in their constituencies.* I have only two questions, the first one to the Minister of Community Development. Now that the Gaming minister has banned partisan cheque presentations in his department, will the minister follow the lead with the cheque presentation for Wild Rose and other lottery foundations?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, on many occasions as the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake I've had the opportunity to meet with various groups that have applied for different grants in terms of being able to provide some good services and venues for Albertans to use into the future. It's symbolic when a cheque goes forward, in terms of a photo op, to show that the community has worked hard in terms of raising their funds. I think it's just part of the process in terms of acknowledging the hard work that volunteers in Alberta have done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier. In that backbench Tory MLAs have on at least two occasions given out novelty cheques with their signatures on them for expansion of seniors' centres, will the Premier put an end to this practice?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, no, I won't put an end to that practice. The CFEP grants are available to members of the opposition, as they are to government members. I'm sure that the hon. member benefits to a great extent in his own constituency from CFEP grants and all the community facilities that are built in his constituency by those grants.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Health Care Privatization

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans should heave another sigh of relief that the Conservative government has decided not to even bother introducing its third-way lite legislation this spring. The problem is that this government always wants to go down the failed road of delisting, user fees, and further privatization. The result of these dead-end approaches has been a complete paralysis on the part of the government when it comes to health care policy. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier admit that the dead end of privatization has resulted in a paralysis of the government when it comes to health care policy? And will he admit and will he tell the House what we all know, and that is that no third-way legislation will be introduced in this session at all despite the minister's promise that that would happen?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the health care debate will never come to an end, not as long as health care costs continue to rise at the rate of over 9 per cent per year. The only solution that has been offered by the NDs, by the way, is to throw more money at it. They think that the money just falls from the sky. You know, we're already up to $10 billion, and they say: oh, well, just throw more money at it.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of throwing money at things, I was listening yesterday to the radio, and I heard the hon. leader of the third party advertising: no way to the third way. Well, why would they be spending money on ads that are totally and absolutely redundant?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker, but as long as this Premier is still around, we're not going to rest.

Will the Premier admit that privatization of health care is a political and policy dead end, and will he commit himself to going down the direction of public health care?

Mr. Klein: No. No, I won't admit that, and I won't admit that Canada should be the same as only two or maybe three other jurisdictions. I don't know about Albania, but I do know about Cuba and North Korea. There has to be a better way. If the hon. member has a better way, send it over.

Mr. Mason: We're still waiting for the government's better way, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Premier commit as his legacy to improving public health care in this province through innovation and just good ideas within the public system?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's easy for the hon. member to say "good ideas." He had one idea, and we're working on that nationally. That's a national drug program. We're looking at reducing administrative costs, understanding that about 75 per cent of costs are wrapped up in salaries, many of them union salaries supported by the NDs.

Mr. Speaker, we're trying to find innovative ways to address this very serious problem. Obviously, through their misinformation and their campaign of misinformation we were forced to withdraw some contentious components of the third way, the result of their misinformation.

I'll give you an example of the misinformation that they're promoting, that people glom onto. A fellow wrote a letter to the editor of one of the Calgary papers. It was a Mr. Huck. He wrote about Granny breaking her hip. He implied in his letter to the editor that Granny would have to pay $50,000 to have her hip repaired. Well, if she fell and broke her hip, she would be treated immediately. If she went to a doctor and the doctor said, "Well, it's not an emergency, so you might have to wait three or four years or a year and a half," but it was causing her pain, then she would have the option of waiting for that hip replacement in the public system or buying insurance or paying out of her pocket, Mr. Speaker.

But it was absolutely wrong and false to say that Granny would have to wait if she fell and broke her hip. That is the kind of misinformation that the NDs were spreading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Municipal Financing

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given the urgent need for municipalities to fund critical infrastructure projects and in light of the fact that the provincial government has already taken an important first step in establishing the Alberta municipal infrastructure fund to address the infrastructure backlog, will the minister consider a longer term, sustainable solution to provide municipalities in Alberta with the financial resources to handle their responsibilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member brings to the attention of the House something that's very near and dear to the hearts of municipalities throughout the province. He points out that the $3 billion commitment that this province made to municipalities to deal with infrastructure is a five-year commitment. Municipalities need a long-term, sustainable source of funding if they're going to continue to maintain their infrastructure and catch up on some of the backlog.

Ever since I became minister, I have been engaged in discussion with municipalities on how we're going to establish that long-term, sustainable source of funding. As I've mentioned before in the House, Mr. Speaker, at present I'm engaged with the minister's council, which is representatives of various municipal organizations in the province, to define what the roles and responsibilities of municipalities are, and then we will get into the long-term, sustainable source of funding to deal with those roles and responsibilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you Mr. Minister. Based on negotiating these defined sets of roles and responsibilities between the municipalities and the province, would the province consider vacating the $1.45 billion of education property tax while at the same time balancing this by decreasing grants to the municipalities?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the options that the council is in fact considering. Is it feasible? Is it possible for the province to find an alternate way to fund education, leaving some tax room, in essence, for municipalities? Those are the issues that can be more fully discussed once we've got the agreement on what the roles and responsibilities are.

I think it's important that at the end of the day there needs to be a win-win-win. Simply transferring tax revenue from one pocket and one level of government to another level of the government isn't really seen by the taxpayer as being particularly beneficial. So we also have to figure out a way in this formula that the taxpayer can have some direct benefit as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and Mr. Minister. My last question is: will you consider and commit to bringing forward in the next year a strategic plan to coincide with budget planning to identify how and when the province will vacate the property taxes and allow municipal governments to plan for their infrastructure needs for the upcoming future?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I've asked the minister's council to be completed their work by this fall. The reason for that is that it then will allow their recommendations to be incorporated into our fiscal planning. I cannot commit that this particular option will be the one that we go forward with, but certainly what I will commit to is that once the minister's council has finalized and put their work together, we will make every effort to implement that plan as expeditiously as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Healthy Living Initiative

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier announced that the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge have initiated an innovative partnership to promote healthy lifestyles and prevent disease. The pan-Alberta public health coalition is designed to focus on healthy living programs to reduce obesity, manage chronic conditions, and train more public health officers. This project has the potential to greatly increase the health of Albertans but only if it receives the necessary support. My questions are to the Premier. Given that health promotion is exactly what we need to do to reduce costs and ensure sustainability in our health care system, what is the government's reasoning for not funding this initiative?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is an initiative of the three universities. I had the opportunity to attend yesterday at the University of Alberta. There was a video link to the U of C, and the president of the U of L was there in person. There was no mention whatsoever by Indira Samarasekera of the University of Alberta and no mention by Harvey Weingarten of the University of Calgary, nor was there mention by Bill Cade, the president of the University of Lethbridge, of any funding for this particular issue. Now, if they submit a business case to the Minister of Advanced Education, I'm sure it will be taken under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: well, given that the former Deputy Minister of Health, currently the interim dean of the U of A School of Public Health, one of the partners in this project, has stated that $20 million is needed for Edmonton, why was his recommendation ignored?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, Roger Palmer was there as well, and indeed he acted as the master of ceremonies. That is the person to whom the hon. member alludes. He didn't mention to me any need for any cash at all. As I say, if they want to present us with a business case, we'll take it under consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that this government chose to reduce funding for the tobacco reduction strategy and has abdicated from funding hot lunch programs for schools, is the Premier adding this initiative to the growing list of examples of this government saying one thing and doing another?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we fulfill our commitment to a healthy lifestyle by actions. I don't see any members of the Liberal caucus in the gym. I'm there every day. But I see them at Martini's, you know, supping on steak sandwiches. Some people see them at Martini's, not me. I don't go there; I just hear that they're there and the NDs as well. Oh, I see one in the gym, that being the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. I see him from time to time, but I don't see any Liberals ever in the gym, and I work out every day. I do my five kilometres; I feel better for it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a comment – the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations said once to a reporter, "Boy, I had my workout, and I feel really good." The reporter responded: "Yeah. I went to Martini's. I had a steak sandwich and a couple of beers, and I feel good too."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Electricity Billing

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of mine are concerned with the practice of electricity retailers using estimated meter readings for billing purposes. They are concerned that when estimates are used, they are usually based on consumption that is higher than actual usage. One constituent compared this inaccuracy to a 30-day loan to the energy marketer. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Changes to the regulated rate option come into effect in July 2006 and could result in energy rates fluctuating monthly. How can consumers be assured that billing errors resulting from incorrect estimates will be corrected based on the appropriate energy rate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct that last year there were some policy changes in respect to how the regulated rate option was designed. Those continue to be implemented over the next number of years. July 1 of this year is the first stage of implementation.

One of the other things that's happened in companion to that is that the Energy and Utilities Board has put a tariff billing code in place that will also come into effect in July of this year. That will bring out some very precise practices that will be required for both estimated and actual billings. So that should address the particular question that he's raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Will these new invoices provide enough clarity that consumers will understand how these corrections are calculated?

Mr. Melchin: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, when it comes to electricity, as with all industries it is really quite complicated in detail, but to bring it down to a simpler understanding for the public, there are two primary elements on a bill. One is for energy usage. The other is for the delivery charges. There are obviously some more details related to each of those components. What will happen is that there will be a requirement that the rates that will be prevalent for that month for an estimation, those estimated amounts will be charged at the appropriate rate for consumption during that month, and then it will be adjusted when the actual reading is done on a bi-monthly basis.

Mr. Lindsay: My second supplemental to the same minister: for the purposes of clarity and accuracy will the minister make the necessary changes to ensure that bills for electricity are based on actual meter readings?

Mr. Melchin: Optimally, Mr. Speaker, it would be great if all billings could be based on actuals every month. The challenge for that is a cost question for everybody, too. So the practice is that every other month there's an actual reading. It is a tremendous cost to go out to read those meters and record that information on a monthly basis. It would actually add additional cost, that people would pay in the long run, than having it done on a bi-monthly basis. So it's in balancing that that it was decided that for the most practical and cost-efficient means every other month would be sufficient.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early childhood education has been abandoned in the '06-07 budget. We all know that early intervention gives children a greater chance of succeeding in school and life. The Education minister knows this by his past statements in the House. Will the Education minister answer his own questions from 1999 when he was sitting as a Liberal member? My question to the Minister of Education: given that the minister asked for sufficient support for a "fair and even head start in learning," why won't he fund these programs across the province today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to tell you that since I've been sent over to the government side by my constituents, we have put $241 million toward this particular initiative.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to undertake a review of the early childhood education program, which was a critical "priority" item for him in 1999?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it still is a priority, and it always has been a priority. The simple fact is that all we're saying is that we're not making it mandatory. We're not forcing it onto jurisdictions. We have locally elected school board trustees for a reason. We have them there to make local decisions. Not every part of this province wants a forced kindergarten program. Not every part of this province wants a forced program for 4-year-olds in a pre-kindergarten either, but for those who wish to provide it, we help them with the funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the level of support that the current Education minister had for early childhood education, can he explain why full-day and junior kindergarten remain unfunded in the '06-07 budget? Can he explain to us why not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, you know, they've got to get better researchers. They just have to. They used to have them. I can attest to that. It's either that or the member doesn't understand how numbers work at all.

We do have program funding to help with both junior K and K in those jurisdictions who wish to provide those programs, and they provide them, some of them on a weekly basis, some of them on a part-time basis, every second day, or whatever. If he looks even with his own eyeglasses into the budget in '06-07, he'll see that the money is there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation Board Dividends

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the WCB has realized an exceptional return on their investments over the most current reporting period. My question today is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister share with the House exactly what the WCB plans to do with these windfall funds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. I believe that workers' compensation is very, very important to Alberta with a hot, booming economy under a good government. What Workers' Compensation does is very important. The policy of Workers' Compensation is to issue dividends to employers in certain circumstances. The reason employers received a dividend is because the funds invested came from monies paid by the employers. Of course, the guiding principle of the Workers' Compensation funding policy is to ensure that there is always sufficient money to continue operating the program from year to year because the economy could change, revenues could change. Although health and safety is not a legislated mandate for Workers' Compensation, they are also directed that portions of the money go towards safety programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: do all employers receive a share of this return on investment made by the WCB, and does the WCB place any restrictions on where employers can spend this money that they received from this dividend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's another very good question. This process, I guess, is basically a reward for good practices and good safety programs. All employers receive a share of the dividend unless they have a history of poor health and safety programs with the Workers' Compensation Board, they pay a premium of less than $100, they did not complete their annual returns, or they are in arrears in their payments. The employers are free – and that's the main part of the question – to spend the dividend money wherever they want, but we encourage them to reinvest in other work safety programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: in light of this, how do Alberta's WCB rates compare with other jurisdictions?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we are the best in the universe. We're definitely the best in North America and in Canada. The rates, of course, are the lowest anywhere in Canada. More good news on Friday, I believe. Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Ethics in Government

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As executive director of the electricity unit at Alberta's Department of Energy, Kellan Fluckiger has undertaken a number of policy initiatives that have proven to be of financial benefit to AltaLink, the province's largest transmission company. Kellan Fluckiger's spouse is AltaLink's senior vice-president of regulatory and client services. Now, the province's code of conduct and ethics for public servants states that employees are in conflict of interest and in violation of this Code if they:

- (a) take part in a decision in the course of carrying out their duties, knowing that the decision might further a private interest of the employee, their spouse or minor child.

The Minister of Energy confirmed that the government is aware of Mr. Fluckiger's circumstances but has failed, in my opinion, to clear this matter with the Ethics Commissioner. My first question is to the minister. Given that the Department of Energy has suspended the bidding process for transmission projects, the majority of which will now be assigned to AltaLink, how is Kellan Fluckiger not in conflict of the province's code of conduct and ethics for public servants?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to first set the record straight with respect to Mr. Fluckiger, who continues to be mischaracterized in what has happened. From day one, before any contracts were put forward, the Ethics Commissioner – all of those things were reviewed as to his circumstance and certainly understood and approved. So this has all been vetted. It's made sure that it has been public and transparent. Therefore, in that case that first duty has been met.

Secondly, with respect to assigning of building of transmission lines, it's the Energy and Utilities Board and AESO, Alberta Electric System Operator, that go through the needs and application and assign it to the transmission facility operator in the area.

So it isn't anything to do with our department that makes that question and no conflict in particular to Mr. Fluckiger.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the Department of Energy has intervened in an Energy and Utilities Board, EUB, hearing to actively support a $339 million expansion by AltaLink, how is Kellan Fluckiger not in conflict of the province's code of conduct and ethics for public servants?

Mr. Melchin: In this case, first off, the assignment was made by both the Alberta Electric System Operator and Alberta Energy and Utilities Board as to AltaLink being assigned to develop this line. It is in the department's interest and Albertans' interest, which we support, after it has been developed through these other boards to ensure that we have the transmission capacity in line to get electricity reliably, predictably, and on time to all of us when we need it. Therefore, it is incumbent upon our department to represent why it is the urgent need of the citizens of Alberta to see that transmission capacity is built not just in that one corridor but in a number of places where there is high growth in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the Department of Energy has exempted companies such as AltaLink from the generic rate of return that is imposed on other regulated utilities, how is Mr. Kellan Fluckiger not in conflict with the province's code of conduct and ethics for the public servants?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, first off, that decision as to rates of return or not on transmission is fully regulated, always has been regulated, and it goes through those appropriate bodies. The independent Alberta Energy and Utilities Board sets and approves and adjudicates those questions. It has nothing to do with the Department of Energy, not myself, not the deputy minister, not in this case Mr. Fluckiger in his capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impact that coal-bed methane development is having on our land and water far outweighs the modest volumes of gas being produced. The jury is very much out as to whether the societal benefits of trying to mine natural gas from coal seams is worth the environmental and health trade-offs that it presents. The jury is also out whether the Conservative embrace of the recommendations will have an effect on anything besides PR spin. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why does this minister think that the thousands of residents who are meeting in community halls throughout the province in central Alberta are wrong when they say that there's too much coal-bed methane activity on their land?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. I think – and I'm sure the hon. member agrees – that it's incumbent upon all of us to deal with fact. As much as all of us can go to a Tim Hortons and determine opinions on certain things – and I'm very pleased to say that the multistakeholder group that was very forward-thinking said: we are going to base our decisions on fact, on science-based research. Now, that's what we're doing effective May 1. In other words, before anyone can determine if they can get an EUB licence, they have to satisfy Alberta Environment as a regulator. They have to do the baseline testing. That is a recommendation, and it is the law. What that baseline testing means is that it will take the opinion and we will formulate it into what the science says. I do think – and I'm sure that the hon. member agrees: don't you think that it is very responsible for us to be using science and facts to make our decisions? That's exactly what the recommendations are, and that's why we acted on them well before they even have become public.

Mr. Eggen: Well, the hon. member has a lot of convincing to do to residents in central Alberta.

I would like to ask him: why is the protection of air, land, and water once again playing second fiddle to the bottom lines of energy companies wanting to profit from the exploitation of coal-bed methane?

Mr. Boutilier: Hon. member, there is some uncertainty out there by residents of what it is when someone goes around – I don't say this to, actually, the New Democrats, but I know that the Liberal Environment critic has been out there fearmongering relative to what is all wrong, and that is wrong. The reason why I say it's wrong: I thought the hon. member and all Albertans agree that we want to do what is right to in fact protect our water. We're taking that action, but to take a group of people with no knowledge at all and start fearmongering to them is irresponsible and wrong, and we will never do that. What we will do is deal with facts, science-based facts. In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we're doing because it is our duty to Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. member, just so the House knows, there was a point of order raised in the last exchange, and we'll deal with it at the conclusion of the Routine debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that there are many legitimate complaints from central Alberta farmers and residents that do deserve something more than the empty rhetoric that is being presented here.

Why doesn't the government at least put a moratorium on drilling into the water-saturated Mannville formations until such time as the negative environmental and health impacts identified by the multistakeholder advisory committee are fully addressed? Instead, why are you giving them royalty rates to encourage them to drill there?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, we are not. Let me be very clear. That is not accurate or not true what the member just said. Let me even be further; let me be very further. If after our science, which we are doing and conducting now, when a licence is issued, six months is incumbent – by the way, industry are paying a hundred per cent of the science and the facts. In fact, if it is determined not by the fearmongering and all of the opinion that some others are promoting out there but based on fact – I want to assure this Assembly and all Albertans that if, based on science-based fact, there is someone's well that is being impacted negatively by coal-bed methane, I will shut down that well. That's my commitment to Albertans. But as of yet there is absolutely zero science-based fact to support such action at this time.

Mr. Melchin: I'd just like to comment on one thing with respect to royalties in particular. This multistakeholder advisory committee did actually have a recommendation about the Mannville zone to give royalty changes or structures. We did not accept that recommendation as a government. Today we put that out in public. That is not a recommendation that's been accepted by the government. In fact, it's been discarded.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Farm Safety

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is a very busy month in the farming community. It's also the month of the year that most accidents take place on the farm. Last year there were 1,353 farm-related injuries as well as 17 fatalities in Alberta. Of course, one is too many, but 17 is shocking. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the minister doing to address this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, agree with the hon. member that one fatality is too many and that 17 is indeed unacceptable. On average, 18 people are killed each year in farm-related incidents on Alberta farms. That's a terrible statistic and even more terrible is that it's wholly preventable. There are many practices that farmers and ranchers can follow to make sure that their farm is a safe place to work and also to recreate. For example, farmers are urged to take a little extra time to ensure that all their machinery is running properly, that all the guards are in the appropriate places, that all the safety mechanisms are working and in good working order.

Farms are unique in that they are work sites, they're homes, and they're places where families live, work, and play, so they can't be treated the same way as a construction site. The approach has to be a little bit different. We are working closely with rural communities and industry groups to increase the awareness of farm safety issues. We're providing information through resources like Ropin' the Web, the website, like some of the other education forums that we have. We're also working with workplace health and safety and the medical examiners' offices to gather information on these accidents and these hazards and then getting that information back out into our farming communities. So really, Mr. Speaker, what we're doing is an education program. We're trying to make sure that farmers have the right information about what is safe practice and what are some of the issues that they should be aware of on-farm so that we don't have this number of fatalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: these programs are fine if they work. Could the minister tell me how effective these programs actually are? Are the rates going up, or are they going down?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We, of course, would like to see the rate go down to zero. It's very difficult to measure that kind of success because we don't really keep an accurate assessment of whether or not the education format is penetrating to the actual farmer on the ground. As well, there are so many other factors that come into each individual accident. Is it because of weather-related incidents, where the farmer might have been hurrying to get something done on-farm? Farm stress is another factor which we're seeing a lot of these days because of the crisis in our grains and oilseeds sector. We do believe that the message is getting through, Mr. Speaker. We believe that because of the calls that we're receiving in our call centres because of the information that we're putting out there and the number of interactions that we have now on farm safety.

The other issue that I believe is very, very important, Mr. Speaker, is our education in the schools because if we educate the young farmers, they will have that knowledge as they go in and become professionals.

Mr. Marz: Given that many of the accidents involve livestock and your statistics show that 38 per cent of those involve horses, could the minister tell me how many of these horse-related accidents are actually on-farm accidents, or do they include competitive sports such as racing and rodeo events?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farm-related injuries and fatalities are reported on a voluntary basis by the health regions. Many times while we're aware of what happened, we're not always aware of what activity was taking place at the time the accident happened. We don't have any official way of tracking whether the incident occurred while the person was engaged in a competitive or a recreational aspect or whether it was a farm-productivity activity, in other words working on the farm, so we don't always know if the injury or accident occurred when the person might have been out horseback riding or actually involved in a rodeo. Nevertheless, no matter what activity they are participating in, individuals should be aware that they're dealing with animals who can be unpredictable. There are a number of potential dangers when dealing with livestock, and the best way to deal with that is to ensure that you have the knowledge that you need to have when you're dealing with livestock. We have a lot of resources available to producers: Ropin' the Web, our call centre, and a number of others.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Work Camp Standards

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our big work camps in the oil sands do not allow conjugal visits. Families are discouraged from visiting much less staying with their mothers, fathers, husbands, and wives. Family recreation is nonexistent. Twenty-four days on, four days off becomes standard for many workers: big bucks, no life. It is no wonder that the divorce rate is 80 per cent for some trades after a couple of years on a camp job. It is no wonder that some oil sands projects are having trouble attracting and retaining workers. My question is to the minister of human resources. Will the minister enact basic oil sands work camp employment standards to allow for conjugal visits and work to allow and encourage family contact for oil sands workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you know, that's a very good question. It must be hard to be a Liberal opposition and wake up in Alberta and try to find something wrong with the province. In an issue like that, of course, there are a number of collective agreements between unions and employers, and you can be assured that our government does not interfere between the unions that negotiate with employers. We also do not interfere with private companies that take contracts with these companies or individuals that work with these companies. I believe that it's an individual issue that should be left that way, not get the government involved in the process.

Mr. Backs: It's camp design, actually.

To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: to retain more workers in Alberta and cut social costs, will the minister's department work to encourage improved camp standards to have, for example, at least a toilet and a shower with each room?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, there again, if the Liberals were the government – thank God they're not, and they probably never will be. Issues like that: I have confidence in the union leaders; I have confidence in the private contractors. They do provide top-quality services, probably the best in the universe.

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister encourage the big oil interests that it is in their interest to limit unsafe, overly long work schedules and encourage family-friendly hours of work?

Mr. Cardinal: There again, Mr. Speaker, this government will not get involved in the day-to-day administration of work projects in Fort McMurray or any other area.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have the hon. Minister of Gaming wishing to supplement an answer given earlier in the question period.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to supplement the answers given to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who questioned the Premier and the Minister of Community Development regarding presentation cheques. What I stated at Public Accounts yesterday was that the practice of MLAs having their signatures – their signatures – on the lottery-funded grant presentation cheques was inappropriate, not the practice of having presentation cheques presented on the minister's behalf at community functions. The lottery-funded presentation cheques should only have the signatures of the Premier and the Minister of Gaming on them.*

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie may ask another question if he chooses.

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Speaker, my question was to stop this practice.

Another thing I want to ask, through you, is why the opposition members don't get the opportunity. [interjections] Just a minute. Let me finish. We are also elected representatives. People elect us too. This is Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member has raised his question. The question has been clearly identified.

Mr. Graydon: I would encourage the hon. member opposite to check the websites of the members of his caucus, and he might be surprised at one of the pictures that he sees on that website of this very offending policy that he claims.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly we'll call upon the first of six hon. members, but today we'll continue with our historical vignettes. Today a number of random comments on a variety of election-related subjects from Alberta's first 100 years of democracy.

In the 1905 general election Albertans voted using coloured pencils. Voters selected the coloured pencil corresponding to the candidate for whom they wished to vote, then marked a coloured X on the blank ballot paper. If current members in 2006 conclude from time to time that the House may get carried away with lawmaking and the writing of regulation, let me quote from page 299 of the North-West Territories ordinances of 1905.

The pencils used under the provisions of sections 26 to 53 inclusive of this Ordinance shall be of colour as follows in each electoral district: If there are two candidates the colours shall be blue and red; if three, yellow shall be added; if four, black shall be added; if five, brown shall be added; if six, green shall be added; and if there are more than six, such additional colours of pencils shall be provided as the Lieutenant Governor may direct. The handle of each pencil shall be of wood and shall be not less than six inches in length and of sufficient thickness to enable the name of any candidate to be placed upon one side in characters not less than three-eighths of an inch in depth. The wood of the pencil should be painted the same colour as that of the marking material it contains, which shall be inserted securely in the handle so that it cannot be removed.

The Alberta Election Act governed the election process for the first time in the 1909 election, less than a month after the Act was proclaimed, and it thus deemed the ordinances unnecessary.

I might then jump a long way forward in the history of Alberta. The office of the Chief Electoral Officer was created in 1977 under the Election Amendment Act, and this office oversaw its first provincial election in 1979.

Members may wish to know as well that in 1905 the deposit required to file nomination papers was $100. In 1993, 88 years later, it was doubled to $200, and in 2004 the deposit was increased to $500.

For elections in Alberta March and June are the favourite months, with each hosting seven elections. August has held five, November has held three, May has seen two, and April and July have each experienced one. In Alberta a general election has never been held in January, February, September, October or December.

Tribute to Cicely Elizabeth Truman

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Even before our current version of Mother's Day, there were days honouring mothers. In ancient Greece, Rhea, the mother of gods, was paid tribute, and in the 1600s in England there was an annual observance called Mothering Sunday. In 1914 President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed that Mother's Day become a national observance. Canada adopted the same day to celebrate mothers.

As Sunday is Mother's Day, I would like to tell you about my mom, one of four daughters born to Thomas and Cicely Lauder. My grandparents immigrated to Canada from Scotland and England, settling in a small farming community in Saskatchewan following the First World War. My mom was one of those rare children that did so well with her school work that she was recommended by her teachers to not write finals in high school.

My dad, like so many good Alberta boys, found a wife in Saskatchewan and promptly brought her back to Alberta, where they embarked on a life filled with adventure in the oil patch. By adventure I mean no power, no phones, no TV, no running water, no grocery store within 20 miles, and usually on a back bladed road. Sometimes the only way in or out was to be pulled in behind a D3 Cat.

As hard as it was, I do not remember thinking that life was hard. It was always just a challenge or an opportunity. I'd like to thank my mom for that attitude because, no matter where we were, she always made it our home. The best days were getting off the school bus and smelling fresh bread baking or seeing the sheets freshly washed and completely frozen on the clothesline, mom and the family black lab looking out the window to make sure both my brother and I were home safe. Summer was always fun. We picked blueberries, strawberries, and the inevitable bouquet of Alberta wild roses mixed with bluebells for my mom.

I'd like to thank my mom for teaching me about the little things in life that make it good and the wisdom that she passed down, including "If you can't say anything nice, Carol, don't say anything at all" or "Carol, if you make that face again, it will freeze like that forever" and my all-time favourite, "If everyone is going to jump off that cliff, are you going to jump off it, too, Carol?"

For all that and a million other things, to my mom and my friend, Cicely Elizabeth Truman, thank you, Mom, and happy Mother's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Canadian Federation of Independent Business

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize an important 35th anniversary today. Nineteen seventy-one was a good year for the friends of free enterprise and prosperity. Nineteen seventy-one was the year of the formation of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, known to most of us as the CFIB. For 35 years the CFIB has been giving small firms a big voice in the public affairs of Canada.

Many of my constituents in Foothills-Rocky View are members of the CFIB. Many of the colleagues within this Legislature, past and present, are also members. Over 105,000 independent business members are with the CFIB and wholeheartedly support the federation's mandate of promoting and protecting Canada's free-enterprise system. Almost 10,000 members are from right here in Alberta. These 10,000 members in Alberta are pillars of their communities. They spearhead innovation, they create real opportunities, especially for our youth, and they're the drivers of our economy.

I know I speak for many of my colleagues today when I say that we appreciate the input from the CFIB on the issues of the day. CFIB keeps its fingers on the pulse of small business in Canada. It helps to relay to us where the members stand on the issues before us. We might not always agree on the best method of solving these issues, but we share the common goals of making Alberta the best place in the world to live, work, and raise our families.

Mr. Speaker, my own work in the Regulatory Review Secretariat has given me a new appreciation of the efforts of the CFIB. The federation recently did a report on burdensome government regulation and presented copies of this report to myself and the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. This report is tough but fair. We've discussed the report with the CFIB, and I look forward to continued co-operation with the CFIB as we move forward on this important initiative.

This is just one example of how we can work with the CFIB to ensure that Alberta has the most effective and efficient regulatory environment in Canada, and I certainly look forward to strong relations with the CFIB in the future. Congratulations on your anniversary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Lloydminster Super Cities Walk for MS

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon in recognition of the Super Cities Walk for MS, a walk which took place in the beautiful city of Lloydminster and included people from the surrounding area as well as my home town of Vermilion.

On April 29, Mr. Speaker, not only did I have the privilege of attending the eighth annual MS walk, I attempted the 10 K walk. I soon realized that five K was more my style, and after two blisters and a small rash, I realized that "K" meant "killer." But I digress. It was a wonderful morning to spend in the beautiful Bud Miller park with over 260 walkers.

For the year of 2006 the goal of the MS Society of Canada Lloydminster branch was to raise $80,000. I have been informed that not only are the pledges still coming in but already the Lloydminster branch has surpassed both last year's funds of $73,000 and their intended goal of $80,000 for this year. To date the pledges officially turned in by the walkers are now over $87,000. That's an increase of more than $13,000 over last year. In fact, the staff at Wal-Mart raised $5,000 themselves, which was matched by the Wal-Mart head office. So we're $10,000 from Wal-Mart, Mr. Speaker.

For the sake of all people who have been so affected by this disease, the fundraising will continue, and one day soon we can only hope and pray that the ultimate cure for multiple sclerosis will be found. To all the Lloydminster walkers, to the volunteers, and to the sponsors: for a job well done congratulations on a truly special event.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Democratic Renewal

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am continuing my series on the need for democratic renewal in this province.

In the Speech from the Throne this Progressive Conservative government talks about wanting to be more open and transparent, but are words followed by action? Is this government serious about transparency and accountability? The answer is no, as is evident in one particular piece of legislation that is before us in this Assembly; namely, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, better known as Bill 20. The amendments contained in Bill 20, Mr. Speaker, are half good, half bad. The good part is the extra protection against foreign-based agencies or organizations obtaining access to Albertans' personal information, as what's in the USA PATRIOT Act to give an example. Also, there will be bigger fines for contravening the act, which is definitely positive, and I support.

Now, what don't I like about Bill 20? It attempts to add new layers of secrecy to a government that is already labelled as the most secretive and least open in the country. Ministerial briefing notes similar to the ones which led to the federal Gomery inquiry will be sealed from access for five years. Even the Privacy Commissioner himself opposes this change. Chief internal auditor investigations will become off limits for a whopping 15 years. That's like four elections or four governments, Mr. Speaker. The 30-day processing time limit on FOIP applications will now be removed, so a request can stay pending indefinitely while the Privacy Commissioner is considering whether it ought to be dismissed or not.

Even the federal government in Ottawa, regardless of which party is in power, is strides ahead in terms of openness and access to information. Our provincial Tories, however, do not respect the people's democratic right to ask questions or seek answers. They think they're above scrutiny. Access to information requests are now processed from the angle of "How can we deny, restrict, or delay access?" not "How do we co-operate with the applicant?" It is also clear that government staff have been instructed to communicate verbally wherever possible or choose their words very carefully just in case they're FOIPed one day. Consultants are increasingly receiving compensation for verbal advice with nothing to show for it on paper.

I will repeat myself today, Mr. Speaker: those who have nothing to hide, hide nothing. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:50 Support for the Book Publishing Industry

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to speak about the importance of Alberta's book publishers. This industry has been starved by the government for years, forcing some businesses to relocate to other parts of this country. Just last year, Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer Press was forced to sell out to a larger Ontario-based company in order to stay afloat. This should not be happening.

Alberta book publishers help in attracting and keeping talented people in this province. Book publishers help to create literary work and foster talent that feeds other Alberta cultural industries, such as film, theatre, and magazines. They generate employment stability and provide a creative avenue for local writers to show off their talents. However, a lack of provincial support in Alberta has put our book publishers at a significant competitive disadvantage.

The Book Publishers Association of Alberta has developed a plan that would assist this province's publishers greatly. The Alberta publishers' fund, as suggested by the association, would ensure the stability and growth of an important cultural industry in this province, but it requires government support.

We discover who we are as individuals and as Albertans through our arts and culture. I urge this government to acknowledge the value of our book publishers and to work with the Book Publishers Association of Alberta to keep these important businesses in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

John Kolkman

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to recognize today John Kolkman for his contributions to the Alberta NDP opposition caucus in the nine years since April 1997 that he's been with us. John was invited to join the NDP caucus by then leader Pam Barrett. John came to the caucus with considerable experience in the nonprofit sector as an administrator, a researcher, and a community builder. He was an active citizen in his neighbourhood of McCauley, where, amongst other activities, he was part of the group that developed Edmonton's first community health centre to serve inner-city residents.

Prior to joining the caucus, he was assistant director at the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, where he worked tirelessly to assist the diverse immigrant community to establish themselves in the community. From this and other experiences John developed deep-rooted interests in human rights, good governance, and government policy.

During his tenure with the caucus his primary role was as caucus researcher, and as such he developed an encyclopedic knowledge of government policies, finances, and legislative matters. He has used this prodigious knowledge to benefit the New Democrat opposition as we actively pursue quality of life issues for Albertans. John has also been the chief of staff on a number of occasions, fulfilling this vital caucus role when the position was otherwise vacant. In this capacity he worked to create a stable, productive work environment. I want to mention that John has a tremendous capacity for work and a very, very strong work ethic, Mr. Speaker.

He has a wonderful family as well. He's married to Kate Quinn, who's the executive director of the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton. He has two young-adult sons, David and Brendan. John Kolkman is a person of vision, dedication, and compassion, and he supports various nonprofit organizations and other causes promoting human rights, social justice, diversity, and peace.

On behalf of the caucus I wish John and his family the best of everything. We are indeed grateful for his outstanding contribution to our caucus, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Might I also point out to all members that today is the birthday of the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee I'd like to table the committee's report recommending the appointment of Mr. Lorne R. Gibson as the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta. Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to give notice today that on Monday pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 17 through 28 and 30, 31, and 32.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday, May 15, I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 27 through 35.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to give oral notice today of two time allocation motions which will apply to Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, which, as we all know, comes under the primary jurisdiction of Government Services, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. This is the first time we have found it necessary to use time allocation in this House since 2003. In fact, during the past five years our government has used time allocation only six times. I will table the exact figures for reference in this regard very shortly.

With that brief background, Mr. Speaker, I hereby give oral notice of the following two motions. Number one:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second oral notice, I think it's valuable to just quickly remind the House that we've already had about six hours of debate on Bill 20 so far, and we have also debated at some considerable length 10 amendments proposed by the opposition with respect to Bill 20, so this next motion and the one just given will bring us to a total of approximately 10 hours of solid debate on this particular bill. Therefore, I will give oral notice now of the second motion. Number two:

Be it resolved that when an adjourned debate on third reading of Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration at this stage of the bill, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills
Appropriation Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to introduce and would beg leave to introduce Bill 42, the Appropriation Act, 2006. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having being informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, and I know that all of the members of the House know, the Appropriation Act provides voted spending authority to the ministries for operations of the Legislative Assembly and government for this fiscal year. Expense and inventory/equipment purchases are about $27 billion, capital investment about $1.2 billion, nonbudgetary disbursements $172 million, and lottery fund initiatives $1.3 billion, as well as the $75 million for the expenses of the Leg. Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and table the appropriate number of copies of the 2003-04 and 2004-05 Child and Youth Advocate annual reports. We value the role the advocate plays making sure that the voices of children are heard.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table copies of two documents outlining the action Children's Services has already taken to address the issues in these reports. All of the issues have been addressed through various program ministries, services, or legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from a Paul Armstrong of Edmonton. He was quite upset by the response he received from the Minister of Advanced Education in regard to his concerns about Bill 40 and the undemocratic process the minister is establishing for tuition policy. Mr. Armstrong says the minister's response showed a "lack of consultation with the taxpayers."

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. Both are exchanges between the Minister of Advanced Education and two concerned Albertans, Shannon Phillips of Lethbridge and Lou Arab of Edmonton. Both asked us to table what Ms Phillips called a dismissive response from the Minister of Advanced Education to concerns that Bill 40 will reduce democracy and transparency in tuition policies. In both cases the minister tells the correspondents that “those who have not been there done that would not be expected to know” about the processes involved in passing orders in council and that Bill 40 “would avoid wasting energy on matters that are not a problem.” Both correspondents claim that they’ve been there and know what’s going on.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, pursuant to the Regulated Forestry Profession Act the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists 2005 Annual Report.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the projected government business for next week, the week commencing May 15.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, hon. member and Mr. Speaker. On Monday, May 15, in the afternoon under Introduction of Bills we will deal with Bill 43, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, and then there will be private members’ business, Written Questions, Motions for Returns, as explained earlier, and other private members bills, should there be any. As part of that under Committee of the Whole and assuming that there will be time we will deal with Bill 207, Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006, and Bill 208, Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. On Monday evening from 8 to 9 we’ll deal with private members’ motions, presumably 511, and at 9 under government business we should be able to do second readings on bills 42, 40, at least, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday afternoon we should be able to deal with second reading of Bill 43 and Committee of the Whole for bills 42, 40, 43, and 20 and possibly some third readings as well as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday evening, May 16, we should be able to deal with Committee of the Whole for bills 42, 40, 43, and 20 and third readings for bills 10, 14, 28, and 32, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon we should be able to do third readings on bills 42, 40, 43, and 20, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. On Wednesday evening, May 17, we should be able to do third readings on bills 42, 40, 43, and 20, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon we anticipate dealing with, of course, question period and the spring sitting adjournment motion and also any other bills as per the Order Paper that may be necessary to be dealt with at that time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I actually rise with a heavy heart to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly persons who earlier today bravely shared heartbreaking stories about their families in continuing care. Anna Pavolich* is an RN who feels that the system bullies, is dishonest, and is run with unqualified staff. Marjorie Starr, Charlotte Helbak, and Merla Poulette,* who were here earlier but had to leave to get to the International Airport, have a mother who is helpless, aged, and had been sexually assaulted in a long-term care facility. Theresa Sawchuk* and Cheryl Doucette’s* father’s leg is being amputated as we speak. Their contention is that the care of his leg was neglected and therefore this amputation was necessary. Darryl T. Adams’* father choked to death. Beverly and Gary Heddington’s* mother died of dehydration despite having a feeding tube in place. Robert Warden’s mother died in care, and a public inquiry will take place. I would ask these brave people to rise and be recognized by this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against Members

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I give you the citations 23(h), making “allegations against another member”; 23(i), imputing “false or unavowed motives to another member”; and (j), using “abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.”

The situation was that during question period the Minister of Environment referred to actions of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who is also the opposition critic for the environment, as fearmongering, and he repeated this a number of times. I have checked the definition of fearmongering, and it says – well, a monger actually to be specific – a person promoting something considered contemptible. I would argue that the member was promoting public health, promoting community consultation, and promoting research on water. I would argue that those are not contemptible actions.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View draws on his background as a public health official, as a medical doctor, and, specific to this issue, from his direct dealings with Albertans. He’s brought the claims of Albertans to this minister and to the House. In that the primary source of Calgary-Mountain View’s concerns were those of Albertans, I’m disappointed that the minister would disparage the concerns of Albertans as fearmongering. I argue that the minister may not like what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has to say along with the community activists that have worked with him, but that is no cause to impute motives or to make allegations that he is somehow involved in something contemptible.

I will also quote as a citation Beauchesne 484(3) in which it cautions that members “will not be permitted by the Speaker . . . to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.” Clearly, under the provisions of 23(j) language like fearmongering is likely to create disorder and certainly promote additional debate, which is unwanted during the exchanges in question period. So I argue that there is a definitive point of order against the Minister of Environment for the use of those words, and I would ask that he would do the right thing and withdraw them in regard to the actions of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

*These spellings could not be verified at the time of publication.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, we don't have the benefit of the Blues at hand, so there's no way of verifying or not what the accusations are that were just presented by the previous speaker from Edmonton-Centre; however, I will anxiously await the arrival of those Blues so that we can have a look at it.

I want to point out a couple of other things, though, with respect to the issue of the word or words "fearmongering". I've looked into Beauchesne to see what in the past has typically been ruled unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker. I would just remind the House that under Beauchesne 489, where it cites, "Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions" – and then it goes through and lists copious quantities of words and phrases – nowhere can I immediately see fearmongering, nor can I see the use of the word "mongering" either. Similarly, when I look at Beauchesne 490, which also deals with expressions that have been deemed parliamentary or not parliamentary – in this particular case it says "ruled parliamentary to use [them]" – I don't see any specific reference allowing the usage either. So I'm at a loss to comment on what may or may not be parliamentary from those two citations.

However, I did check a third citation. I noted under Beauchesne 492 that "the following expressions are a partial listing of expressions which have caused intervention on the part of the Chair" – in other words, one could assume that they would have been deemed unparliamentary – and nowhere do I see within citation 492 that "fearmongering" or the word "mongering" have caused the chair to intervene at any time.

I do recall, however, on several occasions in this House over the past number of years where, perhaps, government members have used the term "fearmongering." No points of order were raised then. I also remember, if memory serves correctly, that certain members of the opposition have used the term "fearmongering," and no intervention was applied then either.

So I would submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, that there are examples where this wordage has been used before and no interventions were created and that if, in fact, something did come from the hon. minister referenced that caused some anxieties, those issues can and will be reviewed. But I do know that the hon. minister in his comments felt that there was some fearmongering that had occurred and he was merely expressing his opinion in that regard. I think his feeling, as explained by the minister to me prior to this issue coming up, is that any comments that are made should be based more on scientific fact or on evidence or on direct, provable experience or whatever, and that's the context within which I think those comments were made.

So, Mr. Speaker, given the cut and thrust of debate, as we all know occurs in this House from time to time, perhaps there were some misunderstandings, and I will look forward to your ruling in that respect.

The Speaker: Any others?

Well, at the outset, the intervention in terms of what was said came on behalf of the Official Opposition House Leader on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. There's absolutely no doubt at all about what the hon. Minister of Environment said, and this is: "... but I know that the Liberal environmental critic has been out there fearmongering relative to what is all wrong, and that is wrong." This is a partial one. Then it goes on, "We're taking that action, but to take a group of people together with no knowledge at all and start fearmongering to them is irresponsible and wrong, and we will never do that." Then going on to a subsequent one, "In fact, if it is determined, not by the fearmongering and all of the opinion that some others are promoting out there but based on fact," and then in the third response, "We're taking that action, but to take a group of people together with no knowledge at all and start fearmongering to them is irresponsible and wrong, and we will never do that." That's a repetition of what I just said a second ago.

The word was used. There's absolutely no doubt at all about that. But if one wants to go to Marleau and Montpetit on pages 525 and 526, so much of it is based on "the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber." I'm not so sure in terms of what I've just quoted that it would apply today, but the bottom line is that the language in itself, while it may not be unparliamentary, has to be taken in the context of what it is.

It would have been very helpful if the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View had heard the remarks directly. Such is not the case. I do not believe that it's in the best interests of anyone in this House to use the word "fearmongering" in the way that it was used. It was almost intentional in terms of providing an allegation or a motive, and it certainly was intemperate language. I'm not happy with the utilization of the word or the words in this and will caution the hon. Minister of Environment to disassociate himself with the use of that kind of language in the future, as I would ask all hon. members to do the same thing.

Hon. members, I want to provide just a bit of advice. It is rumoured that perhaps we'll be here for, say, only another six weeks or eight weeks or something like this. It's my experience in the past that as we get towards the conclusion of a session, tempers start to flare a little more and patience becomes a little less. It's also my experience that at this time in a session we may have increasing numbers of points of order simply based on body language and words and utilization and a whole series of other things. I would ask everybody to just sit back, take a great big deep breath, and remember that you're all wonderful elected leaders of the province of Alberta, here to do the public good, and there is some give and take. Maybe this is the time when we actually do have a little more give and take. It's like the bodychecking in the third overtime period at about 1 o'clock this morning: there was a lot being given there that could have been called but was not necessary to call. So if we can deal with it that way. Let's move on.

Third Reading

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 9, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006.

I appreciated hearing many thoughtful comments and discussion on this bill. To recap, Bill 9 will provide more flexibility to take the individual circumstances of some grant-funded students into account and clarify authority to establish forms pertaining to child support agreements.

Thank you.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Bill 26
Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 26, the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act.

I'd also like to thank a number of the stakeholders for their very good work over the summer last year: the police, the firefighters, the paramedic profession, the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the regional health authority, the medical officers of health, the Alberta Advisory Committee on AIDS, and the Alberta Community Council on HIV. I'd like to thank all members for their support of this bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

Bill 11
Architects Amendment Act, 2006

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move third reading of Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006.

I would like to thank those who participated in the discussions on this bill. Everyone's comments were most helpful. Mr. Speaker, this act will help to clarify and strengthen the architect profession by allowing the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for mandatory continuing competence in their profession.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We support this bill, and to review, these changes allow the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for compulsory continuing competence in their profession. The bill clarifies that licensed interior designers and their employees can engage in the practice of interior design, allows them full voting rights to elect architects and interior designers to the association council, and also ensures that up-to-date regulations and bylaws can be developed for licensed interior designers that are registered in the same manner as architects.

If you visit the city of St. Albert, you will see how the core of the city is being enhanced, and the Arts and Heritage Foundation, I believe it is, is a perfect example of what the planning of these two professions would do together. Also, I believe that if you look at the city of Edmonton, the new mayor has talked about the significance of this.

We support the bill and are pleased to see it go through. Thank you.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 12
Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006.

Mortgage fraud is a complex and costly crime that impacts a variety of sectors. This bill will go a long way to combat mortgage fraud by empowering the land titles office to take a more active role in detecting and preventing mortgage fraud by requiring proof of identity of a person registering a transfer and in some cases refusing registration. In addition, this bill will assist the Privacy Commissioner with determining what uses of land titles information are acceptable under the Personal Information Protection Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak on third reading of Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006. I think it's a really good bill, and I'm willing to voice my support for this bill. It appears to be primarily aimed at cleaning up and updating the language. I'm happy with this bill.

It's good to see that we are making the needed changes in response to the problems associated with mortgage fraud in Alberta, but I want to make sure that the government is still considering some points. For example, I have a few questions. What steps is the government going to take to stop the assumption of a mortgage? I know that it's related to real estate, but real estate and the land titles are very much connected.

I mentioned in second reading that we highlight sales by the government, any transfers of land. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked many questions. Some questions were related to 15 years ago, and it's very hard to answer those questions at this time. But if we had some amendment in the land title, if we highlighted in the land title all the properties sold by the government or transferred by the government that we still can trace out in the last, say, 50 years, it would be easy for the government to answer those questions. My suggestion is this: that from today onwards in the land titles all the government-related sales and purchases or transfers of land should be highlighted, and it should be publicized in the newspaper if something is going on with a sale and purchase.

Also, when somebody pulls a land title, they pay $6, $7 for every land title report. They don't get the full history, the full property archive report of the land title. This is not right. Suppose that you buy any product. You have every right to know the full history of the property. They are not buying vegetables. They're buying properties.

I mean, now we have a problem. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked so many questions about fraud – maybe fraud, maybe not – but still every time I'm listening here, the hon. minister is answering: this question is related to 15 years ago or 20 years ago. If we had a system in the land titles – just punch out all the properties sold or purchased or transferred in the last 50 years; click one button – you should be able to find out. It's not there. If we really want transparency – and in the land titles report it is a must – the government should consider it very seriously for the future misuse and, you know, mix-up like we have today.

RECA is responsible also. RECA is doing a marvellous job in the real estate association. At this moment the major problem that they are facing is the assumption of the mortgage. Like, one person had the mortgage from the bank, and they transferred it to somebody else. What we normally see, those advertisements in the paper – many sitting here in this Chamber might have seen “zero down payment” or “you pay $10,000; you move in” or something like that. Why can’t we see that in the land titles report? If we find all the details in the land titles report, it will make the job easy for the real estate. It will make the job easy for the banks because it’s a big problem for the banks as well. Assumption of the mortgage must be stopped. It’s only in Alberta, I think. In other provinces they don’t allow you to assume the mortgage. I think that assuming the mortgage is a major problem. RECA and the real estate board are trying to stop this practice. But still I want to know why they haven’t stopped assumption of the mortgage so far.

The detail of the full property archive report, including assumption of the mortgage, including the highlight of all the properties purchased, sold, and transferred by the government, must be highlighted in the land title. The system should be like this: you just click, 15 years of records from the government, and one person using just a PC, you know, sitting at home can pull out all the information. In 1981 how many lands, properties, or buildings were sold by the government of Alberta? The person, even an ordinary person in Alberta, should be able to trace out all the records. That’s transparency. The government must be accountable for that, and it’s not happening.

I tried to explain this in second reading, and I’m trying to explain it again. It’s for the benefit of all Albertans. Those frauds must be stopped.

Mr. Backs: Do you think they’re listening?

Mr. Agnihotri: I don’t think so.

Anyway, the government should create a task force, a task force who could stop the frauds. Frauds are happening, and the realtors admit – I have read many articles. It’s through transparency, through the clear archive report that the land title can help to stop fraud in the real estate business. Some people, they don’t work; they just make deals under the table. It shouldn’t happen. It’s our responsibility. We are the elected officials, and we have the responsibility so that frauds in Alberta should not happen. This is my suggestion.

Otherwise, this bill is mostly cleaning up and updating the language. It’s a good thing. But we should go a little bit further. An ordinary person should be able to get the full report in the land title, and it will help the real estate board to stop the fraud.

Mr. Speaker, that’s all I have to say. This is my suggestion. It’s totally up to the government because it’s in their hands.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s with interest, again, that I rise and participate in the debate on Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006, this afternoon. Overall, I would have to say that I would support these changes to the Land Titles Act. Certainly, when we consider that one of these changes was recommended by the mortgage fraud committee at the Law Society of Alberta and is supported by that committee, we have to take notice of that recommendation and support it. Also, this bill reflects recent commentary from the Privacy Commissioner. The hon. Minister of Government Services made reference to that earlier.

We have to be very careful with our land titles and the administration of our land titles. I’ve had in recent months first-hand experience with land titles. I’m the first to admit that I learned a lot about the entire process, and I’m still interested in learning more, but to have information accessible to potential purchasers of properties is very, very important. I certainly hope that at any time we’re not going to try to hide behind the privacy cloak in regard to this matter. If a party is considering purchasing a property, they should, either themselves or through their legal counsel, have the right to access that information in a timely fashion and for a modest price.

Certainly, whenever you look at any historical title of a property in Alberta, there’s a lot of information on there. Information can be related to past market value. Information can be related to parties that have had a caveat on the property for whatever reason. It could even be a caveat relating to remediation costs of an environmental spill. It could be any number of things, Mr. Speaker, that could be on there. When we look at property values in this city and in this province, we have to make sure that consumers – because for a lot of us the biggest purchase we’re ever going to make is a piece of property of one sort or another, we have to make sure that the land title system works.

In conclusion, I would urge the hon. minister and his department to make sure that the land titles system works in a timely fashion so that buyers and sellers and their agents are not hindered by delays in the whole process. I’m certainly not stating that this bill will slow down the process, but the Department of Government Services is spending a lot of money. I understand that there is more money needed to make sure that this process and this system work for buyers and sellers of real estate in this province in a secure and timely manner.

With that I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House. Certainly, Bill 12 is of merit, and I hope everything works out. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 12, Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006, has the support of the NDP caucus. It’s a bill that really addresses a growing problem in the province related to land titles, mortgage fraud, and what have you. The two are obviously related. So legislation needs to be updated, changed, improved, amended to take stock of the growing problem and find effective solutions to the increasing incidence of fraud related to mortgage in this province.

It really is too bad that we are getting a reputation as being, sort of, the mortgage fraud capital of the country. Partly, I guess, it can be attributed to the number of transactions that are related to property: purchase, transfer, property changing hands in this province. Given the economic activity related to real estate transactions, one would expect problems along this line. I remain unconvinced that all of this problem can be attributed to the increase in economic activity. Clearly, the laws in place are wanting, are failing in what they’re supposed to do. So this bill is an attempt, I guess, to recognize that there is a problem and do something about it.

Giving powers now to the registrar to be able to refuse registry for certain transactions unless the registrar is fully satisfied with respect to the identity of the persons involved in the transactions I think is a good thing. But I think the whole issue of identity in itself is problematic, given that identity fraud itself has also become a problem in this province.

I am sure that while we are giving more discretionary powers to the registrar to make sure that identity documentation is there when he or she considers it necessary to confirm identity, we need to work on the side of making sure that the documents needed for personal identity themselves are also dependable and sound.

That's where the problem of private registries has come up, and in this House during this spring session we have visited that issue as well in relation to another piece of legislation, which was debated in this House a month or more ago.

Clarifying and strengthening the powers of the registrar with respect to confirmation of identity is important. I don't think these by themselves will lead to a substantial reduction in crime related to the fraudulent mortgages.

I think identity is a problem and one hopes that there will be more specific legislative action forthcoming to deal with that. Unless we deal at both levels, on both fronts, I think the problem will remain. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, while I'm happy that the registrar will have the power to ask for documentation for identity, it's the power that's given: he "may" do that or she "may" do that. I think that given the high incidence of mortgage fraud in this province and given the fact that we know that it's been increasing over the years, perhaps it should be made mandatory that the registrar seek appropriate identification before proceeding to okay a registration.

Furthermore, if the registrar were to have that kind of power, then there is also, I think, a need for making room for an appeal by someone who may find that the action of the registrar in refusing registration based on his concerns is unwarranted. I think that to make sure that the laws are implemented properly but also respected by all who are affected by them, the room for appeal perhaps should also have been there. It's not there now, but I hope that there will be attention paid to improving this piece of statute later on with respect to that issue.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is the need to strengthen, perhaps, the consequences for those who engage in mortgage fraud. Certainly, they are open to criminal prosecution, but I think there need to be in addition some consequences in terms of monetary sentences or monetary requirements in what they have to pay if they are found to be guilty of mortgage fraud. In some cases this mortgage fraud leads to massive, massive amounts of exchange of money through illegitimate activity. That's the only other observation that I wanted to make on the bill in general.

We certainly are in support of the provisions of the bill, but I think in some ways this bill will need further improvement once it becomes law and we have had the opportunity to use it for a while and find some flaws, too few of which I have drawn attention to in my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Minister of Government Services to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: I thank the members for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and Edmonton-Strathcona for their comments, and I will take that advice seriously.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask for the question to be called.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Bill 15
International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development on behalf of.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill creates the legislative authority for Alberta to participate in an international registry of financial interests in aircraft equipment. In plain language it is largely a registry of liens against airplanes. With such a registry banks can provide better secured loans to airlines with a corresponding drop in interest rates and costs.

Canada has already signed but not ratified the two international agreements that create the registry. The federal government will ratify when a critical mass of provinces indicates support. With Bill 15 Alberta shows that support. In passing this bill, Alberta becomes the third province to create a link to the international registry. We can expect ratification in 12 to 18 months.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 15 does not amend Alberta's Personal Property Security Act. It affects no other Alberta registries. The international registry will be self-financing, so there is no cost to this government, and we will work with other jurisdictions to ensure consistent implementation across the country.

I encourage all members to support the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very interested and pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act, on behalf of the Liberal Official Opposition. If the intended effects of this act come forward, there will be a decrease expected in insurance costs for commercial airlines. There will be a decrease in interest costs for mobile aircraft equipment. If it's a decrease for commercial airlines, hopefully that will bring about some greater competition, and the competition in costs will result in lower airline ticket costs. If there are lower airline ticket costs, it will obviously reduce the need for the government to have its airline fleet and to use its private airline fleet. Perhaps then we could be looking to seek the sale of the government aircraft that we have, and I look forward to that, you know, as being a good effect of Bill 15 in coming forward on this.

I'll just touch on some background, though. Prior to 2001 the risk level for lending money to companies wishing to purchase aircraft equipment was high. Aircraft do not have a fixed location. Countries adhere to different sets of legal rules, making the process for debt collection difficult. In November 2001 the Cape Town convention was held in South Africa to attempt to mitigate this financial risk. At the convention no fewer than 20 states, followed subsequently by two others, signed the convention on international interests in mobile equipment and the protocol on matters specific to aircraft equipment.

In 2004 Canada signed the convention and protocol. Signing the convention means that Canada will adhere to an international registry when purchasing large mobile equipment similar to a vehicle registry. Given that the registry is a provincial responsibility, provincial implementing legislation is needed before Canada ratifies the agreement. That's why we have this legislation essentially coming into force. It has been moved through the first and reading reading, Committee of the Whole and such and is almost complete in its debate. The effect will be good. There has been support from the finance industry, support from the airline industry. Some of our companies that have done well here in Alberta in growing up look to support this bill, and I think it's a good thing.

You know, it might be good to look after this is ratified and if see some effects from it in reducing insurance in the long term, airline costs, as I said, will be reduced for good companies like WestJet that would benefit from this. Then at this time of year we could be flying or having others fly here to enjoy our Edmonton Oilers winning the Stanley Cup two years from now, their third in a row. It'll be their third Stanley Cup in a row, you know. If necessary, we can send some players out for special dental work in those times.

The effect of the bill, I hope, will reduce those airline rates. I think it is going to have some good affects in the long term.

I hope that it does go through in terms of getting its full ratification soon. With that, I support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act. It's a bill that I did speak to in its second reading and indicated the NDP caucus support for the bill. I am looking at the introductory remarks made with respect to this bill by the then minister of international and intergovernmental affairs. I totally agree with the reason that he gave as to why this legislation needs to be passed by this Assembly, in order for Canada to be able to ratify two international conventions and agreements that it put its signatures to. We will become, I guess, the third or the fourth province that will be passing this legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, we are in Assembly. We're not in committee. You need to be back at your seat.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's so quiet in the House sometimes, you begin to wonder, you know, what's going on here.

I think the purpose for this bill being brought forward and the reasons for us all to support it are quite clear and uncontroversial. One point that I want to draw attention to that was made by the then minister of international and intergovernmental affairs, who introduced the bill, has to do with these treaties that are ratified leading to a reduction in the lending rates that purchasers of airline equipment, mostly airline companies, will have to pay. It was suggested and a hope was expressed by the minister at the time that if these lending rates that banks charge come down for the purchase of this very expensive equipment – aircraft are very expensive, and the equipment that's used in them to modify or change or repair is also very expensive – given the fact that the overall cost to buy and maintain these machines will come down, that will mean, perhaps, that some of the savings resulting from this will be passed on to customers.

I think that's a tall order, certainly a very interesting hope expressed there, but will that happen is a question. I think that with the rising cost of travel, Albertans and Canadians in general would be very much interested in seeing some measures taken, in legislation if necessary, to ensure that some of these reductions in cost are indeed passed on to the users of the services provided by the airline industry.

Certainly, this bill is not the vehicle for undertaking such measures, but I hope that this will not fall off the agenda, that if indeed there are savings resulting from the passage of this bill and ultimately the treaties coming into place, then savings made by the airline industry will be shared with the users; that is, you and me, the travelling public of Alberta and Canada.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I want to express our support for this bill in third reading. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in regard to Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act, it's one that I can support, but I certainly cannot support this government's current practices surrounding their frequent international travels on other commercial aircraft.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Minister of Community Development on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to close debate.

Mr. Ducharme: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 27

Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to move third reading of Bill 27, the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act.

I believe that we've had extensive discussion on this bill in second and in committee, and I would ask for support again from the hon. members in third.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, on behalf of the Official Opposition at this time I would say that Bill 27, the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act, is one that we can support now that all vegetables produced in the province are graded with national standards in mind and the fact that this bill removes the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act plus two other enabling regulations from the statutes. I think that when we discuss this bill, we should be cognizant of the fact that so much legislation has been attempted in the past to be moved through this Assembly through Miscellaneous Statutes. This was one piece of legislation that at one time was considered under Miscellaneous Statutes.

I think, not only in this matter but in other matters, it's better for democracy, it's better for the government that people be given an opportunity to get on the public record if they have any issues whenever bills are drafted and introduced and debated in this Assembly so that people have a chance. One cannot forget – whether they're in power for six months or six years or in some cases 35 years, governments can't be afraid to put all their legislative ideas before the Legislative Assembly. This may seem like a rather boring matter. It may be a very boring matter for some members, but when you think of the fact that all government ideas and policies should come before this Assembly, it's a good idea that we have an opportunity to discuss the implications of ideas and policies before the Assembly. The notion that we can put everything through in Miscellaneous Statutes is misguided. It's wrong.

In conclusion, I would remind all hon. members of this Assembly, whether they were present or not in the year 2001, when Miscellaneous Statutes was the best part of three-eighths or half-an-inch thick, and there were a lot of policy changes involved in that. So one has to be very, very careful about what we put and what we do not put in Miscellaneous Statutes.

I'm pleased to support this bill, and I'm pleased to see that it was stand-alone legislation. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just really pleased to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three of my favourite people in the whole world: my son Jeff, who works for our Minister of Finance, his beautiful wife, Layna, and their wonderful son, probably Alberta's next best up-and-coming hockey player, Mr. Austin Mulligan. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our House.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 27

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to miss this opportunity to speak on this bill. It's a bill about repealing a piece of legislation. In my little more than nine years in the Assembly I don't think I have had an opportunity to speak on a bill that repeals an existing piece of legislation, so it's very important. Secondly, it's spring-time, so spring cleanup time has come, I think, and this bill is in the spirit of doing that.

I was looking at the news release that the minister of agriculture issued to explain what this bill is about. It's interesting to note that this legislation has been around for 50 years and hasn't been used and has been found of no use for the last 20 years at least. Very, very interesting. I didn't realize that there is, in fact, federal legislation that serves the purposes that at one time the existing law of the province called the Vegetable Sales Act was supposed to serve.

So the bill is now considered to be redundant. No one uses it, no one seems to pay attention to it, and no one sees the need to continue to have this piece of legislation on the books of this province. There are two regulations, I guess, that are associated with Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act that will also die a silent death as this bill is repealed. I think it's time for cleaning up our statute books, and this bill is a good candidate for it.

Mr. Speaker, I support the repeal of the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act, which Bill 27 intends to accomplish, hence my support for Bill 27. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy the House is going to "lettuce" have a final look at this bill before we "squash"

it. This has "bean" a very contentious bill, and as a matter of fact, the opposition was certainly able to "turnip" the heat on this bad boy. So I would suggest that you "peas" give us full consideration as this may improve the "celery" of our farmers.

Thank you.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise to support the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act. You know, it's not particularly a hot potato, this act. It really isn't too corny, and there really was no need for the government to move with a carrot-and-stick approach on this particular piece of legislation. We do not have to get really into depth on how to "repeel" this vegetable sales act.

I just rise in support. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Shall I call on the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace to close the debate or call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Bill 30
Persons with Developmental Disabilities
Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and move third reading of Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006.

During the first two readings members on both sides of the Assembly supported Bill 30 and what it proposes. I appreciated their comments and questions during our discussion.

Mr. Speaker, as we've discussed many times during this session, the persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD, program is extremely important. It provides assistance to approximately 9,300 Albertans with developmental disabilities so that they can live actively as part of our communities. Bill 30 will help strengthen this very important community focus of the PDD program. Dissolving the PDD Provincial Board and transferring its roles and responsibilities to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports will enable the ministry to enhance the overall accountability of the PDD program. This governance change will also enhance the role of the PDD community boards in delivering programs that support the inclusion of persons with developmental disabilities into community life.

In short, Bill 30 will enhance the way Alberta administers the PDD program, which will help our government better respond to the needs of Albertans who receive PDD-funded supports. I think that's something all the hon. members would celebrate.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all of my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber for their support and for the questions that they raised during the debate. I ask that they once again support Bill 30 and pass it through third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006. As it has been going through the Assembly, we certainly have to support this bill.

I have cautious optimism that this bill will meet its objectives when we look at eliminating the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board that oversees the six regional community boards, when we see that we are transferring responsibility of the provincial board to the ministry. This, as I understand it, will enhance the role of the six regional community boards. These boards, as I understand it, will be reporting directly to the minister and will be responsible for the local governance, program delivery, and co-ordinating of other supports.

I certainly hope that with these changes no one in the PDD community will have to be as active as they've had to be this past spring to ensure that their budgets at least meet the inflation rate and meet other cost pressures that PDD boards have been faced with. I know that there was an increase. But, again, was it enough? We have to make sure that persons with developmental disabilities – and I've said it here before in this House, and I'm going to say it again – and everyone in this province can live in dignity and with respect. Certainly, people who work with individuals with developmental disabilities do their very, very best to ensure that people have the opportunity to live in decency and respect.

We can't dismiss or we can't ignore their pleas for financial assistance. They're necessary. They're needed. Some of these boards have in the past done remarkable things with the money that they have been allocated. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, in the future this government will ensure that the practice of having to write letters and e-mails or visit respective members of this Assembly in their constituency offices or phone the minister's office or visit the minister's office before the budget is determined will no longer be necessary. Hopefully, these individuals will be able to count on a budget that reflects the cost pressures that we talked about earlier.

Now, whenever we talk about persons with developmental disabilities as we're doing in Bill 30, we cannot forget other individuals who have disabilities, but they're not developmental disabilities. We cannot forget about their needs as well. If it means that we have to have other measures so that they can participate in the workforce and maybe get some additional income in the time that they can work, I think that we should study this issue more. We should have a look at the entire issue of accessibility for people with disabilities.

I was astonished a couple of years ago that in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, we had chosen to lock a door for a period of time which provided access to people who get around in wheelchairs. We had them coming in the loading ramp down by the press gallery. That ramp was steep. I asked questions in the Assembly about it. I was glad to see that finally the other ramp, which had the proper building code slope to it so people in wheelchairs could have easier access to these premises, was finally opened up. But that's only one example of what we can do. Whether people have developmental disabilities or another disability, we cannot forget those citizens, and we must in this Assembly make sure that we do everything so that they can live again in dignity and respect. If they can work or do any sort of community volunteer work, it should be encouraged. We should make sure that they have every opportunity to participate.

With that, I would conclude my remarks on Bill 30. Let's not forget that everyone has the right, again, to live in dignity and respect. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak in third reading of Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act. This bill eliminates the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board that oversees the six regional community boards, transfers responsibilities of the provincial board to the ministry, and enhances the role of the six regional community boards. The regional community boards will report directly to the minister and will be responsible for local governance, program delivery, and co-ordinating other supports. According to the government of Alberta news release from April 11, 2006, the goal of this reform is to "enhance the role of the community boards that administer services . . . while improving the province's ability to better co-ordinate all the programs that provide support to Albertans with disabilities."

Mr. Speaker, the changes in this bill to the system are absolutely necessary, and we have recently requested that the minister conduct a comprehensive review of the governance structure. However, we do not know how the minister arrived at the decision to eliminate the provincial board in order to improve efficiency or how the changes will impact the community boards. The community boards we contacted were unable to comment on how the elimination of the provincial board would impact their operation. The minister claims that the goal of this reform is to improve accountability and transparency, yet the community boards have been directed to not comment hardly on improvements.

The community boards are supposed to represent adults with disabilities, their families, service providers, and advocacy groups.

We hope that this role will be strengthened under the new structure rather than just being a voiceless arm of the government. A report conducted by former MLA Lorne Taylor on the PDD governance structure has not been made public. It may contain a recommendation on eliminating the provincial board, but we would like the report to be made public.

Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions that may be useful in the future. Building Better Bridges is a report on programs and services in support of Persons with Developmental Disabilities, PDD, released in March 2000. It contains 10 recommendations directed toward improving the governance and service delivery of the PDD programs as well as addressing the needs of other persons with disabilities who do not fit under current mandates. This review did not recommend eliminating the provincial board. How was the decision made? This is the question I want to ask. What review or reports were completed? Which groups were consulted?

Lorne Taylor prepared a report in the fall of 2005. When will this be made public? When will Albertans be able to see the recommendations made by Lorne Taylor about the PDD governance structure? Did the report recommend the elimination of the provincial board? Why were community boards given the direction to forward all questions to the department? How are we supposed to understand and evaluate the impacts of this change on community boards when they have been directed to not answer questions? How much money will be saved and where? How will that money be allocated? What arrangements have been made to prepare the department to take on these additional responsibilities? Given that 35 provincial board staff are being transferred to the ministry, what specific changes will be made to ensure that programs are being delivered in a more co-ordinated, effective, and efficient way?

This minister claims that this reform will improve accountability, administrative efficiency, transparency, and create a more equitable delivery of programs. How? What steps will the department take to ensure that services are delivered in a fair and effective way? What steps will the ministry take to improve transparency?

These are my few questions. Otherwise, we support this bill, and we still can consider these few questions in the future for the good. That's all I have to say. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to make some brief comments on Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006. On the face of it, Mr. Speaker, the piece of legislation, in its third reading before us, is certainly about changing the way programs related to the services that are made available to Albertans with developmental disabilities are administered. The administrative changes being sought by way of this piece of legislation result from the fact that the programs that support adults with disabilities were placed under the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports in November 2004. So it's a response to structural and institutional changes that have taken place within the government's and the departmental structures. So far so good.

While we've been talking about changing administration in response to the changes in the ministerial responsibilities that impact particularly the adults with developmental disabilities and the services provided to them, the persons with developmental disabilities were seeking, in fact, answers to different kinds of questions. They were on the steps of the Legislature not long ago asking for action, which had more to do with the adequacy of resources and the services that are presently available to them. They were asking for enhanced resources for the purpose of improving the quality of the services that they are receiving, and they were also seeking a greater institutional responsiveness so that their needs are met in a timely and appropriate manner.

The question that comes to mind, of course, is will the administrative and governance changes that are proposed in this piece of legislation also address the issues of institutional responsiveness and resource adequacy seen from the side of the persons with developmental disabilities who need these services, who need these services on a regular basis, and need these services in a way that both protects their dignity and supports their daily needs that result from the disabilities from which they suffer. Whether or not these administrative changes and changes in governance will in fact enhance that institutional responsiveness remains to be seen. We'll have to wait, I guess, a couple of years to see how these changes being proposed impact in regard to the express desire on the part of persons with developmental disabilities for more responsive institutional arrangements.

There is in this bill, obviously, no room for addressing the need of adequacy and budgetary allocations. The rally on the steps of the Legislature two or three weeks ago by both the advocates for persons with developmental disabilities and by persons with developmental disabilities was also about the perceived cut of close to 3.5 per cent in the budgetary allocations to deal with the resource side of their concerns. Certainly, this bill doesn't address that. The fact that there has been a reduction in the budget for them is regrettable, certainly, but the administrative and governance changes proposed here I think will have to await the test of time for us to know whether they will increase either efficiency or accountability or increase responsiveness, which is in fact the concern expressed by adults suffering from developmental disabilities.

So there is only a limited impact that the changes here, even if they have a positive impact, will have on the daily living experiences of Albertans with developmental disabilities. The part that really concerns me and certainly concerns the recipients of these services has to do with the reduction in the budgetary allocations to them, which necessarily, from their perspective and in my view, will lead to a reduction in the quality of services and the responsiveness of the institutions that provide those services.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks on Bill 30 in its third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief on Bill 30. It's a reorganization, and perhaps this is a good thing. I think my colleague was just talking about the other problems. The question that has been raised with me by some of the groups, certainly in a meeting I had in Calgary, is that there should be some savings involved here. I expect that's what the government's saying. We were told when the debates were occurring here and people were coming forward that the minister at the time said that this bill is important, that somehow by passing this bill, it would lead to better service for the people that required the service.

The question I sort of ask: is there a savings by doing this? The question that they had, Mr. Speaker: will that savings, then, go to the families and the clients? I'm not sure if this is true. I remember them saying that they felt that this board was being administered with something like $11 million or in that range of money. The question they had: would that money be transferred? Is that how the minister was justifying that this would have some impact? Because with just the reorganization, that's fine, but it's not getting to the people that need it, and there are some very serious concerns about that. I'm raising this question because it was asked of me, and I don't have the answer, so I'm hoping that the hon. member will have that answer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, no need to close the debate. Then the question will be called.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a third time]

Bill 24

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 24, Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, through the second reading and in committee there have been some excellent comments and thoughts provided on this bill, nothing in the way of questions other than through comments. So I think I've been able to respond to anything that was there.

I look forward to the comments in third reading and again, Mr. Speaker, will search Hansard, and if there are any unanswered questions, we'll be pleased to respond in writing to the members.

Mr. Martin: Just very briefly. I like the title Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act. Now, only a good Conservative spin doctor could take that title at the same time that we're jumping the limit up of what we can spend. I might call it the fiscal irresponsibility act, but I guess it's all in the matter of spin.

I know why we're doing it, and I can't recall if she indicated what it looks like down the way. I mean, this limit was raised to – I think it's $5.3 billion. Is this something that we're going to have to look forward to in terms of next year's budget, the budget after that, or by this one jump does the hon. Finance minister feel that this will sort of solve the problems as we're going forward? This is a fair chunk of cash. It goes from $4 billion in 2004, $4.7 billion in 2005, and $5.3 billion. So we can see trends there, and I think that must be somewhat disconcerting for the Minister of Finance. Just in conclusion, I would ask her if she could give us some indication of where she sees this going.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in previous bills that we've dealt with earlier this afternoon the chair has ascertained no movement from individuals with respect to Standing Order 29(2)(a), and I gather that there's no request for participation with the questions here either.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when we have a look at this bill and the title, Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006, we have to recognize that in Alberta thrifty Tories are a very scarce political commodity these days. When we look at the spending habits of this government, we recognize that "thrifty" and "Tory" are words that don't get along. When we look at the spending that goes on here, there's a significant increase in spending. So when we look at this bill, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, one again has to wonder.

I know that we talked earlier in debate about this, and we're certainly increasing the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for the budget purposes, from 4 and three-quarter billion dollars to $5.3 billion, but we should be careful. The Minister of Finance I think means well, works very hard, but again "thrifty" and "Tory" don't get along these days.

Everyone in the province is stating that we should legislate to save, and this government is legislating to spend. Now, that is a contradiction. I noticed in the Appropriation Act that was introduced earlier that we're certainly going to set aside a billion dollars for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. That's a start. It's a modest start. I think the minister will do the right thing and make every effort immediately to ensure that the heritage savings trust fund is at least inflation-proofed, brought up to a pool of cash that should be larger than $19 billion.

Now, the Alberta Liberals, the Official Opposition, have a plan for investing Alberta's surplus dollars that would create a lasting legacy for this province, but I don't see a solid plan, Mr. Speaker, from the current government. We have also long-term vision. We have a savings plan. We have a spending plan. When we look at some of the other sound fiscal ideas that this government has adopted from us, I wouldn't say too much – I would say very little – if they were to take our investment plan and use it. I think it would be wise. Imitation is a fine form of flattery. It doesn't matter whether we call it the sustainability fund or the stability fund, but that was one of our past economic planks, and this government has adopted that.

Now, instead of talking about where we'll invest the surplus during the next quarter century, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said during budget debate, let's talk about the next quarter of a century, and instead of the next fiscal quarter, let's talk about the next quarter of a century. When we look at this legislation, we have to stop and think and ask this question: how do we want Alberta to look in 50 years?

Earlier today we had a discussion, and I listened with great interest to the comments from both the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment in regard to the development of the coal-bed methane industry. If we're talking about fiscal responsibility, Mr. Speaker, we should also be talking about environmental responsibility. We all know that as conventional natural gas production declines, regardless of the price we're going to be faced in the near future with a reduction in the amount of money that we collect for the treasury.

So it is wise, it is prudent to facilitate environmentally sound coal-bed methane development policies. The development of coal-bed methane should proceed slowly, and it should proceed so that landowners and industry can both have confidence that the policies will protect the environment and also ensure that there is a return on the investment by the resource companies. I think there's a balance to be met there, and I think that that balance can be achieved. I'm not so certain that the direction that we're going with coal-bed methane development is necessary at this time. I think we should proceed but proceed with caution.

In regard to Bill 24 it would be responsible only if we were to bring on over time, in an environmentally safe way, significant amounts of coal-bed methane, which, hopefully, we will collect a significant amount of royalty on. So whenever the minister is talking about increasing the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes, from $4.75 billion to $5.3 billion, well, that nonrenewable resource revenue will be coming in the future from coal-bed methane production.

Now, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would caution all hon. members about this bill, and again we have to remind ourselves about the words "thrifty" and "Tory" and the fact that in the last five or six years the dramatic increase in government spending, the size of government, there hasn't been a dramatic reduction in the problems, whether the problems are in public health care, public education, or in improving our infrastructure. The budget has increased dramatically, but again the fundamental question that taxpayers ask is: where is the money going when we still seem to have crowded classrooms, when we still seem to have the prospect of teacher layoffs at the end of the school year, when we have emergency rooms that are overcrowded, people are waiting eight, 10, 12 hours sometimes, and when we have roads and bridges that certainly need a lot of work that has been overlooked in past decade? So we have to be cognizant of that.

Thank you.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called. Should we proceed with calling?

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

Bill 16 Peace Officer Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and move third reading of Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act.

We have had extensive discussion on this bill in second and in committee. I would ask for support again in third.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is one of those particular bills that could be good or bad, depending on how we use it. I know that the Solicitor General talked about this when I was here – I believe it was in second reading. You know, we've had peace officers for many years, and he's absolutely right about that, but I think we're seeing differences here now.

Part of, if you like, the overheated economy, the best in the universe, or whatever the government says, is that we are facing some serious problems, perhaps in abundance, more than we have in the past. Crime rates are up, and this comes with an overheated economy. There's no doubt about that. It can also come from another direction: when you have poverty. We know that crime is fairly rampant. Whether we can hire enough police, I think we can still do more. We've advocated that, especially community policing.

I still can't get a handle on whether the hiring of these peace officers is complementary – and I suppose that would be good – or if we're looking for a cheaper fix here. They've raised this in second reading, that we are putting out people that perhaps aren't as well trained as they should be rather than paying a little more for the police that we actually need. Then I tie that to the most recent revelations about the Guardian Angels coming to Alberta to solve our problems and the minister not endorsing it but not rejecting it either. So I don't know where we're going with all this. As I say, I'm not exercised enough that I think that hiring these peace officers could be helpful, but I would suggest that the problems are probably more than this bill is going to solve. If it's a complementary piece of legislation and it's going to be used that way, fine. But if, as I said, we're looking at this as sort of being a cheaper version, trying to solve some serious problems by doing it cheaper, then that creates some very serious problems for me.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we have to relook at our whole policing situation, how this fits in. With the economy – and I'm speaking of Edmonton, but we hear of the problems in Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, wherever the economy is booming. Calgary, I know, is facing increased crime problems. The mayor has alluded to that, and I think he endorsed the Guardian Angels, which I was a little surprised about because that could create more problems. I think that it comes down to – and I think the minister and I would agree – the best way we can deal with it is to have enough well-trained police out there working with the community groups themselves as much as possible, participating.

I've said at community associations that the police can't solve all the problems. It takes the public working with the police. You see, my problem here is that I just don't know how this all fits into the whole policing structure. As I said, it's not enough for me to vote against it, but at some point I would like from the minister or the member or whatever some more clarification about where we are going, especially in view of the most recent discussion about the Guardian Angels. Even at their best that creates some other problems, and I don't think that's the way to go. Certainly, the police forces that I've talked to don't believe that it's the way to go.

Where does this fit in the whole policing structure? Where are the preventative programs that we've talked about to deal with the problems of crime in the overheated economy and prevention and what's happening? Again, I don't expect the member to have all the answers to these, but that's my basic concern about the bill. I'm not sure exactly how it fits into the total picture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak in third reading of Bill 16, Peace Officer Act. The main objective of this bill is to bring all peace officers, previously known as special constables, under one piece of legislation that will clarify their roles and responsibilities, increase accountability, and strengthen provincial standards for training, use of force, and qualifications.

My comment, Mr. Speaker, is that I think that there's a role for special constables to play in a complementary role to traditional police services, whether that is a foot patrol presence in communities responding to minor calls for investigating purposes – vehicle break-ins, accidents, whatever – or other such roles, but to put them into situations that are extremely dangerous without full training is dangerous.

Traffic stops are extremely dangerous, Mr. Speaker. The police spend hours in scenario training on just this one aspect of police duties. The question has to be: do these special constables going out onto highway 63 have the same training? Have they completed the same scenario training that regular police officers have? These are my comments. If they haven't, they are being put in harm's way, and that is unacceptable to me and unacceptable to many people in Alberta. Additional traffic enforcement on highway 63 is absolutely needed, but let's get real here. We need police officers with full training out there, not special constables who haven't received the same level of training. The minister should put more money into front-line policing services if he wants to get serious about traffic safety. This method is putting these special constables in harm's way, and that is unacceptable.

What level of authority will these special constables have? Can they just enforce provincial traffic laws, or are they going to have full Criminal Code powers? Have they been trained in all the policies and procedures dealing with the traffic laws? Do they fully understand the law and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as police officers are trained to do? Have they undergone the same level of firearms training that police officers do normally? Have they undergone the same level of training in the use of the baton and the pepper spray, and have they received the same hand-to-hand training that regular police officers have? Without the same level of training, the safety of the special constables and the public is at risk.

We are also very concerned that this bill leaves most of the details to the regulations. All of these details, Mr. Speaker, such as conditions of employment that must be met, qualifications, performance, standards of conduct, training, duties, and discipline, all of these crucial areas are left to the minister to make through regulation. In other words, we have no idea what training will be provided, how much it will cost, what standards an employer will use to hire a peace officer, and who may carry a sidearm. There is far too much ambiguity and not enough substance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a good bill. I mean, there still needs to be some clarification on it, but we are in third reading, and I don't know whether corrections have been made during the committee stage. That's all I have to say. Thank you very much.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Question has been called, so I'd call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to close the debate or call the question.

Mr. Johnston: Call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Bill 21

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, or the AISH Act, for third reading.

As discussed, this new act will continue our renewal of the AISH program and create a more flexible and responsive program that will better meet the unique needs of Albertans with severe disabilities. I'd like to briefly highlight the proposed changes again for my colleagues and what those changes will mean for the clients.

Mr. Speaker, this act will make the reporting and appeals processes more adaptive to client needs. Reporting income based on individual situations will make the reporting process easier for AISH clients and will also reduce paperwork, administrative error, and the occurrence of overpayments and underpayments. The act will also help ensure that clients have the opportunity to appeal an overpayment before a debt is assessed and collection action is taken. If clients feel they haven't received due process, they will still be able to take the matter to court.

To answer a question raised in Committee of the Whole, clients will have the opportunity to appeal most decisions of a director. An example of a decision that may not be appealed will be the rates at which the personal income supports benefits are provided. In this case, the client can appeal the eligibility but not the rate of the benefit. Another example would be the provision of additional health benefits not normally provided under the various health plans.

This legislation will also allow the program to take into account special or exceptional circumstances and, if appropriate, exempt the client from repaying the amount they were overpaid. In passing Bill 21, the government can also update the language of the act and consolidate legislative provisions related to the AISH program under one ministry.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Bill 21 will allow us to provide health benefits on a limited basis to those people with disabilities who because of their income are not eligible to receive AISH. This legislation also increases flexibility by allowing AISH clients to request that the program pay third parties directly on their behalf for things like rent or continuing-care accommodation fees. That's another example of how the renewed program will be more responsive to the individual needs of the clients. Likewise, as was mentioned before, moving some of the provisions to regulation will help the program remain flexible and responsive to the needs of its clients now and into the future.

I'd like to take a moment to address one other issue raised in Committee of the Whole. A well-established process is in place under the AISH program to determine whether a person meets the definition of severe handicap of mental or physical functioning. Medical eligibility is not solely based on an applicant's medical condition. It's also based on the person's current and future ability to earn a living through working. AISH administrators use information obtained on AISH application forms and medical reports to determine eligibility. They also have medical consultants available to assist them in analyzing complex cases.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to speak today to Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. This legislation truly will create a more flexible and responsive program that will be able to adapt and better meet the needs of clients. I'd encourage all members to support this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a pleasure to get a chance to participate in the debate on Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, this afternoon at third reading. Now, there have been attempts in the past to amend this legislation. Certainly, when we listen to the hon. Member for Strathcona, I think all is meant well with this bill, but when we look at some of the past practices of this government and how they treat the citizens of Alberta in the AISH community, it's not a stellar record. The treatment of these citizens, a group of citizens who we must treat with decency and respect, has been, unfortunately, very bad.

Before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, I think it's time that we acknowledge the contribution of the citizens of Alberta who are recipients of the AISH program. We have to recognize Edmonton lawyer Mr. Philip Tinkler, who filed the class action lawsuit in September 2004 on behalf of two recipients of the provincial assured income for the severely handicapped program. The two men argued that they were underpaid by the program or subject to an illegal and abusive debt collection process. For this government to pick on these citizens in this way is wrong. I can't believe that this government would do that.

This government went out of their way previously, seven years before this lawsuit was filed, and retired an entire loan for Millar Western when Mr. Stockwell Day was the Provincial Treasurer. Retired the loan just like that. There have been other loan guarantees that have been given and relaxed and in some cases retired entirely. But what do we do? Oh, no. We're going to squeeze every dime out of the disenfranchised and the unfortunate, the disabled. We should be ashamed of ourselves. We should be ashamed of ourselves, and we should be ashamed of ourselves that we're not indexing the monthly income for the assured income for the severely handicapped.

Now, hon. members of this House went on at length in committee whenever we tried to change that. We all have our salaries, each and every one of us, linked to one index or another. So if it's good enough for us, how come it's not good enough for the AISH community? Why should they have to go begging to this government? Maybe you like that. Maybe it makes you feel powerful. I don't know. But I don't think people should have to do that.

That's why in committee we had suggested that there's a better way of doing this, and that was to ensure that if there was a significant increase in the cost of living or if there were other factors – rental rates, energy costs, you name it – there would be an automatic increase in the monthly amounts that these individuals get under the program. But, no. It was seen fit by this Conservative government: oh, no, we can't do that. The thoroughbred horse racing renewal? Well, every budget year we can increase that amount by millions and millions and millions of dollars. But the AISH clients? Well, they have to go to court.

Fortunately, they won their legal case, and hopefully they'll never have to go to court again with this government. But I'm asking this government: when we consider the needs of the AISH community, we consider that every little bit that they get helps. They're very good managers of their monthly income. I've met with many different individuals in that community, and I'm amazed at how they get by. Maybe they should be giving the Minister of Finance budgeting advice because they know how to manage on very small amounts.

Maybe they do have some tips not only for the Minister of Finance but for the entire government caucus. There will be trips taken by this government. Economic Development itself would spend more money on some luncheons on some foreign city than these AISH clients would spend in a month. If we were to look, for instance, at the Economic Development hosting expenses for even a six-month period – and these would be amounts exceeding $600 – and we were to show any member in the AISH community just exactly what this government was doing and where and in what restaurants or with whom, they would be very, very disappointed. They would be very, very disappointed that this is the same government that said, no, we can't have any sort of barometer that would link their benefit schedule to increases in cost of living.

We seem to have a set of rules here for ourselves, and we have a set of rules for the disabled. I think that's wrong, I think it is unfortunate, I think it is misguided, and it's reflective of a government that's out of touch, completely out of touch. I would urge the government to reconsider and, in your dealings with the AISH community, please recognize that they have every right to live in dignity and in respect. They shouldn't have to go beholden to this government with their caps in their hands. Programs should be well financed, and they and their families should know that the money will be there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Cardinal: Make it quick.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. He says "make it quick." Where are you going?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments. Maybe not quite as quick as the hon. minister would like, but I will make them anyhow. The bill, like so many bills, obviously has some good parts to it. Who is going to argue with, I think it's section (4)(a), that there'll be some discretion regarding allowing persons whose financial resources exceed AISH's allowed limit but who have high medical costs to benefit from eligibility for an AISH health benefit card? I mean, nobody is going to argue against that. It makes sense.

I would also argue and maybe throw out that I've been told that some people, even if they had help with such things that we used to have like bus passes, might be more employable if they could get around. I would hope the government might take a look at that as an area that could be added to something like this on the bill.

But, you know, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the government, I think, was embarrassed from the last election. I'm not saying that it was this member that did it, but certainly it became an election issue, and thankfully there are at least some improvements with the most recent raises in the wage and the fact that even this is a step in the right direction. There's some discretion with high medical costs.

But I would say to the member and say to the Legislature that these people are not in the lap of luxury. This is very, very difficult. I wonder how many people here could live on roughly a thousand dollars a month. That's the reality. It's better than it was, but if we look at the reality – and I've said this, and the member knows this – when you take inflation into account, these people are not as well off as they were back in 1991. That's the reality. I could have accepted this if they would have said: "Okay. This is the reality where we're going to be now, but we will put" – and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was talking about it – "the indexation on their benefits." What indexation level you use is debatable, but we could at least do it. We've advocated that and advocated that.

I know that the member and the minister have said, "Well, we'll review it," I believe in a couple of years. Correct me if I'm wrong. But, I mean, this member may not be there. It could be somebody else. It could drag on, Mr. Speaker, another seven years, and these people could fall further and further behind. As I say, they're not up to where they were in 1991. I do not honestly understand. I do not understand why we cannot bring in some sort of an indexation for the most vulnerable people in society. Nobody has given me an indication yet why we do not do that. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned that we do an indexation here, some sort of indexation so that we don't fall behind inflation. If it works here and it works in other areas, why for the life of us can't we do that?

Now, as I say, the bill doesn't refer to that immediately, but some of the realities are that they must recognize that there are some problems because they want some more discretion to be able to deal with people, and they talked about high medical costs. They have made some improvements to the benefits, admittedly. I'll give the government credit. That's at least a step in the right direction. But we've got a long ways to go yet, Mr. Speaker. A long ways to go.

You know, they say that the mark of a civilized society is how we treat the most vulnerable in that society, and I say to the members opposite that we have a long way to go to become a civilized society because we can do much better than we are with this particular bill.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there are some steps that make it a little better for some people. Hopefully, the minister would use that discretion in a generous way now that she has that discretion and that we might be bringing cases forward, as other MLAs might be too, when this occurs. I would suggest that with the indexation, we will keep haranguing the government until they do the right thing on that, but I also want to throw out the idea of some other things, like bus passes. That could be very valuable, because if you can't get to another job, how do you be productive and working? A simple thing like that. I'm told that we used to have that here in the Legislature at one time, but I haven't had time to research it, we're just getting letters about it. I think that even the hon. minister might be prepared to look at something like that. That's people helping themselves. That could be an immense help, just like we're dealing with in this bill in terms of medical benefits.

So I would hope the government would take that as constructive criticism and at least look at that. But let's not wait two years till we have another review, or seven or 10 or 12. Let's move in the next budget year at least and do something about the indexation and get these people up to some sort of level where they can live.

I just say to people: think about yourselves. Think about yourselves. It could be any one of us that could end up on AISH for whatever reason. How would you like to live on a thousand dollars a month? How would you like to do that?

Mr. Cardinal: It could be tomorrow.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Well, that could be anybody tomorrow. Exactly, hon. member. It could be any one of us. Then all of a sudden we're having to live on a thousand dollars, you know. It's just unbelievable that we can't afford to do better.

Anyhow, thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to speak to third reading on this bill.

The Speaker: Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Strathcona to close the debate?

Mr. Lougheed: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all members for their valuable contributions today. It has indeed been a very exhilarating and great Alberta day. On that note, I would move that we now call it 5:30, in view of what the hour actually is, and resume sitting on Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 15, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work for the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Hon. members and to all in the galleries, I invite all to participate in the language of your choice in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Well, Mr. Lorieau, as we thank you for your service to the Legislature so far this spring, we want you now to go home and rest for the next couple of days to be at your absolute best Wednesday night.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sir, it is a privilege to rise in this Assembly and to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two honoured guests who are seated in your gallery. The ambassador of the Republic of Korea, His Excellency Sung-joon Yim, and his minister-counsellor, Soontaik Hwang, are both here this afternoon. Although the ambassador has visited Alberta before, this is his first official visit to our province.

Korea is Alberta's fifth-largest trading partner and a very important source of tourism, investment, and immigration. Alberta's office in Seoul, the capital, was created in 1998, and our very first twinning arrangement happened between the province of Alberta and Gangwon province in 1974. It is our oldest twinning arrangement.

Tomorrow His Excellency will visit Alberta's north, going to travel to see the oil sands, and also he is going to take part in the Alberta-Gangwon Technology Forum in Banff later this week. I ask this House to give Ambassador Yim and his minister-counsellor a warm Alberta welcome, and I ask that they rise and receive our warm welcome.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf

I would like to introduce to you and through you 22 grade 6 students from Legal school, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Jason Paik and parent helpers Julie Keane, Tammy St. Jean, Robyn Witter, and Lorraine Zilinski. I would like to ask them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature 53 very special guests from Win Ferguson school. They are accompanied today by teachers Ms Faust and Mrs. Simpson, parent helpers Mr. and Mrs. Wheat, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Middleton, Mr. Bowes, Mrs. Hagen, and Mrs. Noyen. They're all seated in the public gallery and I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to introduce to you and through to members of this Assembly a group of 42 visitors from Glen Avon school in St. Paul. They are seated in the visitors' gallery and are accompanied by teachers and teacher helpers Miss Amy Charter, Mrs. Brandi Jean, Ms Janice Foster, Mrs. Sherri Piquette, and Mr. Dave Doonanco. If I could get them to stand, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 22 visitors from Thorsby high school. They're seated in the members' gallery, and they are led by teachers and group leaders Kim Van Steenis, Tracy Blood, Sam Kobeluck, and Mrs. Karen Marr. These are not only Alberta's brightest and best students; they're also Alberta's best Oiler fans. I would ask them to all rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a talented, young, and very bright fellow that we've hired in our office this summer as our STEP student. His name is Brendan Kane. He's a SAIT journalism student in his second year, and we obviously didn't hold that against him because we did hire him. He's accompanied by my assistant, the best in the building, Carmen Frebrowski. I'd ask both of them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Jessica Wagenvoort, who's my STEP student for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Jessica is currently entering the third year of the bachelor of arts in political science, history and economics, at The King's University. She plays soccer on their team, and her plans are to pursue law school and a career in international law. I'd ask Jessica to rise and please receive the warm and traditional welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you today a person well known to this Assembly, Mr. Oscar Lacombe, a former Sergeant-at-Arms, also a decorated veteran of the Korean War, and well known for his righteous challenge to the federal fire arms registry, which evidently is going to die a well-deserved death this week in Ottawa. Please stand and be recognized, Mr. Lacombe.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Wanda Dennelly and Karin Campbell from the Public Affairs office, assigned to Sustainable Resource Development, both working on public lands and the land-use framework policy for the province and helping our department with that. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely pleased this afternoon to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special visitors from the Netherlands. We have a group of five that are here today on a Rotary International group-study exchange. They're in Alberta for a month to visit various government, industrial, and professional offices, and I'd like to take just a minute to introduce them all and then ask them to stand. They are in the members' gallery above me. First, we have team member Hanneke van Weert, who is an addictions counsellor with Novadic-Kentron. We have Jennifer Lebon, who represents Diesel. I mistakenly took that to mean engines, and it is in fact a brand of clothing. We have Mark Bankers representing ABN AMRO Bank, rather appropriate with that last name, and team member Martijn Lanenga representing NedTrain. He is an engineering and management science technologist. Joining them is a Rotarian team leader, Jeanne Pullens, who founded the Rotary Club of Houston, and that was some 15 years ago. As well, we have three members from the Rotary Club of Edmonton South: Ihor Kruk, Hank Hendricks, and Wayne Cameron. I would ask them all to stand as well and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you a young nephew of mine. It's his first time in the Legislature, and he's here this afternoon to observe what his uncle is doing in the House. So I would like Lionel Gauthier to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Freedom of Information Legislation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Noxious. That's the word used by a top expert in government secrecy when asked to describe this government's Bill 20 proposal to further limit Albertans' access to government documents. This Conservative government seems hell-bent to ram through legislation this week to make Canada's most secretive government even more tight lipped. My first question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us who benefits besides himself and the front bench from restricting public access to ministerial briefings?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I explained last week that there is no way the opposition is going to get this briefing book. They will use it for purely political purposes. Purely political. I very seldom refer to it. As a matter of fact, I get my briefing notes here. But there are some sensitive pieces of information that were put together by the administration.

Relative to the FOIP legislation, you know, we've received over 3,000 FOIP requests. That's since 2004 and 2005. Ninety-four per cent were completed by government public bodies within 60 days or less. That is commendable. That's pretty impressive given the number of requests we get and the complexity of those requests and understanding that most of them come from the opposition. One criticism . . .

The Speaker: Hello? With due respect let's move on.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is then to the Minister of Government Services, who's responsible for the FOIP administration. Is this minister proud of the fact that his first major piece of legislation as a minister is being described as noxious by a top expert in the field of government secrecy?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that we all believe in the democratic process. You know, we've debated this bill in this House this session for six or seven hours. I think we have three more hours to go. I think that's enough.

Dr. Taft: That speaks for everything, doesn't it, Mr. Speaker?

Well, to the same minister: will the minister justify his decision to put the interests of 24 cabinet ministers ahead of those of 3 million Albertans?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we'll have three more hours of debate this week in the Legislature. We'll have lots of time to talk about those facts and other important parts of this bill.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few months thousands of Albertans have gathered at town hall meetings across Alberta to voice concerns over coal-bed methane development. Some residents, such as Dale Zimmerman of Wetaskiwin, are struggling to get by after their once normal water wells are suddenly containing high levels of methane and have lost considerable volume. Last week after the release of the final report of the coal-bed methane advisory committee the Minister of Environment dismissed the real and valid concerns of these thousands of Albertans as fearmongering. To the Minister of Environment: given the importance of many of the coal-bed methane report recommendations to all Albertans, what are the timelines for implementing these important recommendations? Completion dates.

Mr. Boutilier: First of all, a couple of points that the hon. member has raised. One, in the Alberta Liberal opposition release they say – and I will table this at the appropriate time – “This report contains some excellent recommendations.” I thank him for that. Also in the report it says that perhaps if the minister didn’t dismiss, he would take the time to listen to Mr. Zimmerman’s concern.

I just want to remind this Assembly that about a month and a half ago, in fact, I met with Mr. Zimmerman, and I invited the hon. member to join me. We listened to his concerns. We have acted on his concerns. I might also say that we brought in leading experts to deal with some of the issues that he has raised, and I’m very proud to say that we’ll continue to listen to concerns and deal with the facts of the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to establishing a public committee, including independent scientists, to investigate specific and cumulative impacts in the Horseshoe Canyon formation around coal-bed methane for the last five years?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to all members of this Assembly that that is exactly what we have been doing in the past in terms of looking at what the impact is, working with concerns of citizens, using independent experts from the university, such as I mentioned relative to Mr. Zimmerman, and we’re going to continue to do that because it’s that important to this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What will the minister do to ensure that residents with concerns about groundwater, including Dale Zimmerman, 10 months later still waiting for responses, meaningful responses, will be heard and that immediate action will be taken to ensure safe water for these people?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the fact that this member brought up in this House concerns – I met this gentleman with the hon. member. It is really not entirely complete when the member says, “waiting 10 months later,” when he knows very well that I met with the gentleman for over two hours with my experts and with him in attendance. I think it’s really important to us to forget about the politics. Something more important to me is the facts, the scientific, independent evidence. That’s exactly what this ministry does today, tomorrow, and well into the future in terms of securing the water for the people of Alberta, that we all value.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We’re told – and we spend a good deal of time in this Legislature talking about this – that we have a shortage of skilled labour in this province, and the numbers of people going into the apprenticeship program certainly indicate an attempt to deal with it, but are we succeeding? To the Minister of Advanced Education: I wonder if the minister can tell me how many apprentices were registered in Alberta last year in comparison with the number registered in 2002.

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I don’t know that I’ve got those numbers in front of me, so I will endeavour to provide him with a written response, but I do know that in the last two weeks it went from 49,000 to 50,000.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since it takes three to four years to make journeyman from the start of one’s apprenticeship, out of the thousands of apprentices registered in 2002 – and I’ll give the minister the opportunity to get back to me again if need be – how many graduated, obtaining their apprenticeship? In other words, how many journeymen did we obtain last year?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, again I will respond in exactly the same way because I don’t have those figures in front of me. I want to be accurate for the hon. member, so I will give him a written response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I wonder if I can get one other response from the minister. How many apprenticeships were cancelled in 2002, 2003, and 2004?

Mr. Herard: I will endeavour to respond to that, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Just a second, hon. member. Is the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks free for a second? Would you mind just checking on that young lady who just about fell? I’d really appreciate it. Thank you.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Funding for Rural Areas

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Among the many health issues the government has ignored while it played around with dead-end privatization schemes is rural access to health care services. Many rural communities are experiencing a crisis as they are unable to obtain or to retain physician services. One Alberta town, being Bashaw, has gone so far as to levy a special tax in order to support their local physician. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister believe that it is appropriate and correct for the residential taxpayers of Bashaw to be paying to support and subsidize a physician in their town, or can she offer a solution which is more in keeping with her responsibilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, having been raised in a rural community, I can well appreciate the sentiments of residents who chose, in the face of an opportunity to either lose a physician or retain a physician, the choice that their council and perhaps some of the residents certainly supported, to provide some tax dollars in support of living expenses. The sheer fact remains that a doctor who has to be by himself pay for a receptionist and all the other clinical expenses under the currently negotiated trilateral agreement for funding doctors, is not likely to earn sufficient funds to support a family in a smaller community where there are not as many acute care services delivered. So we have been attempting with our rural physician action plan to help and to broaden that net of primary care delivery so that we can serve the residents in circumstances like this. But where local councils have that discretion and make that choice, we have no rule against it, nor should we.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Then I'll ask the minister: why should local taxpayers have to subsidize doctors in order to retain those services in small communities? Why doesn't the government make sure that small communities do have physicians?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta our salaries for physicians, if you look at the Canadian Institute for Health Information, are in excess, on average, of $340,000 per year. In Quebec, for example, they are about $188,000 and, in fact, capped. So our dollars for doctors under our trilateral agreement are significant. Physicians who feel that that isn't sufficient – in this case a physician with a young family who wants to stay in Bashaw has identified to his community that it's not possible with the limited amount of exposure there. We are going to work on an aggressive workforce strategy to try and catch in the net the issues for smaller communities. But this government nor any other, I suggest, could promise to have a physician in every town. It's simply not practical, nor is it possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that it is the responsibility of the provincial government and Alberta Health and Wellness to make sure that small towns and rural areas have appropriate medical care and not local ratepayers?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're doing our level best and, in fact, are identified as a very strong provider of care on the Canadian scene with all of the work that we've done and the capacity we've had to deliver better quality care in a more expedient fashion. We are working on a rural physician action plan, this year adding 14 physicians in another unprecedented move by adding more funding in this year's budget for universities to take in more resident physicians. We're increasing that capacity. Once again, it is not our job to tell local communities how to spend their money, nor is it our job to interfere with that local decision-making.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Traffic Surveillance Cameras

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Police Commission has stated that since deploying 44 red-light cameras at sites with high collision rates in 2001, the number of right-angle injury collisions at those intersections has been reduced by 47 per cent. The police service also conducted a trial by enabling the existing speed-monitoring capability within the red-light cameras, and at one intersection alone the trial identified an average of 400 offenders a week travelling in excess of 100 kilometres per hour in a 70-kilometre zone. Studies show that the risk of involvement in casualty collisions doubles with each five-kilometre increase of speed over 60 K per hour. My question is to the Solicitor General. In view of these startling statistics, will the government commit to increasing funding support for more red-light cameras in Alberta's cities and towns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member's question is very good in the fact that technology has a critical role to play in a number of industries throughout Alberta but, as well, in policing. The red-light camera, the statistics that the member mentions, has really provided safer intersections in the testing period. In both Calgary and Edmonton they've been utilizing red-light cameras now for more than five to six years, and we've seen a reduction in serious collisions as well as fatalities at these intersections, a marked decrease. It's a proven fact that we can save lives as well as being able to provide those individuals that do go through red lights with a ticket and the opportunity to go to court. So the government has a strong record in supporting this, and we'll continue to support those decisions that are made by municipal police services.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: will the minister allocate more enforcement resources to photoradar enforcement?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, the main focus of photoradar is traffic safety. It's about ensuring that we can educate drivers but, as well, issuing summonses for those that fail or refuse to follow speed limits. We have seen a marked decrease in the number of photoradar tickets since its real inception in Alberta from 9 per cent of drivers in the province of Alberta to now about 2 per cent of drivers. So we've seen a marked decrease, and obviously the education program is working.

Dr. Brown: A further supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will the minister commit to moving forward with the use of photoradar on provincial highways, including the Deerfoot Trail in Calgary?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the policy currently is that we do not allow photoradar on our highways. The public consultation that we have seen so far indicates that the public is not in favour of having them on the highway. Of course, part of the difficulty is that a person could be speeding on the highway, and with photoradar you probably don't know about it for at least two weeks. We're more interested in using radar where, in fact, an officer then stops the vehicle, gives the ticket, and they get demerit points, whereas if it's photoradar, they do not. As far as the Deerfoot is concerned, that is in the city of Calgary. The province does not have jurisdiction on that stretch on highway 2.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Federal Child Care Benefit

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite Alberta's immense wealth there are approximately 9,000 families with children in this province who receive income support. Many of these families require access to affordable child care services, but the recent cancellation of the federal/provincial child care agreement leaves very little help for parents struggling to keep up with high fees. To the Minister of Children's Services: has the minister consulted with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to determine the effect that the new $100 federal child care benefit will have on Alberta families receiving social assistance?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. As I explained to the hon. member about two weeks ago when I sat down with her, Alberta won't be clawing back any of the benefits. My hon. colleague may want to supplement.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a really important area, and it's a real high-needs area. Therefore, Alberta provides many, many supports on top of the basic rates we provide. Supports include money for babysitting, special diet allowances. These are supplementary benefits, among the best in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what plan does the minister have for families on income support to ensure that they are able to receive the full benefit of the new $100 allowance?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, again, that is one area that's really high needs, and we're really sensitive in that particular area. I've given directions to my staff already to assess the situation, assess all the new federal programs announced, assess what programs we have to offer here in Alberta, and determine where adjustments could be made. I'd like to thank the opposition member again for that question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister commit today to joining the governments of Saskatchewan and Ontario and agree to not claw back the new federal funding from families on income support?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've agreed to this already, that we will not be clawing back any of the benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Monitoring for Health Program

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents have come to me with concerns about costs and provisions of diabetic treatment supplies. Now, I understand that more people are eligible to receive help managing their diabetes under the monitoring for health program. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister outline how this program can assist more people with diabetes while funding for the program has apparently not increased?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in September 2003 funding for the Alberta monitoring program was assigned to the Canadian Diabetes Association, and it was increased significantly. In fact, we increased that to a budget of about $9 million annually. The program is intended to assist some 40,000 low-income people to access those supports so that they might be able to supplement their income sufficiently in order to look after the costly supplies that are needed for diabetics. The project was not intended, though, to fund all of the supplies. These supplies include blood glucose strips, injection supplies, lancets, and pump infusion sets. People who are insulin dependent receive about $550 per year and with the oral medication about $250 a year. So it is noteworthy that it is an expensive program, but to date there have been fewer people subscribe to the program than we originally thought would subscribe.

Mr. Johnson: My only supplemental is to the same minister. Could the minister indicate if there are plans to further increase funding for this program?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in light of the increase that has been identified for the number of people that will be receiving support for Alberta health care insurance premiums, raising those thresholds so that more can be a part of it, we are planning to announce some increase in those thresholds so that, in fact, instead of having a little less than 20,000 people in support and receiving support through the program, we can increase those support levels, increase those thresholds, and ultimately hit closer to that target of some 40,000 people that will receive support for their supplies. So it will be imminent that we will make those announcements, and I hope we'll be able to help considerably more people with the cost of diabetic supplies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Lottery-funded Grant Presentation Cheques

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Gaming minister put an end to Tory MLAs signing their names on lottery cheques. The minister stated that partisan cheque presentations using lottery funds will not be going on any further. The minister went on to say that the Official Opposition should check out its site and that we would be surprised at one of the pictures. We e-mailed the department for clarification, but it went unreturned. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister tell us which picture he was referring to and on which website he saw an opposition member presenting lottery money, not charity money? They are two different things, my dear hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there is still some confusion even after my supplementary answer last week, obviously, when I said that MLAs shouldn't be signing the bottom of the cheque to make it appear as though the cheque was coming out of their account and not the government account. I've been trying to avoid embarrassing the member opposite whose website the photo is on, but unfortunately I guess I'm forced into telling the Assembly and the member opposite that if they would check the website of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, they would find a photo of a cheque being presented to the Afton School Parent Advisory Council. It's a $125,000 community facility enhancement cheque. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I'll be tabling an appropriate number of copies of that photo at the end of this session. Clearly on the photo is the Alberta lotteries logo.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that the only cheque presentation on our website involves charity or personal cheque presentation, will the minister take back the statement and apologize right now?

Mr. Graydon: Are you telling me, Mr. Speaker, that the $125,000 to the Afton School Parent Advisory Council came from the hon. member's personal account? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister . . .

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Agnihotri: I will find out about that.

Will the minister commit to getting better research from his staff because I confirmed from the present 16 MLAs that they didn't have any?

Mr. Elsalhy: This is false.

Mr. Agnihotri: This is totally false. I again request you to apologize because you don't have any evidence. If you have any evidence, please table it right now.

Mr. Graydon: As mentioned, I will table the appropriate number of copies of the photograph at the appropriate time in this afternoon's session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta/B.C. Economic Agreement

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta recently signed an historic agreement with the province of British Columbia to reduce barriers to trade, investment, and labour mobility between our two provinces. This partnership gives businesses and workers in both provinces greater access to a larger range of opportunities. In addition to this agreement a special memorandum of understanding was signed covering postsecondary education. My first question today is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Many students in the province today struggle to get accepted into a postsecondary program in Alberta because of the increasing demand for these spaces. Will the new agreement make it even harder for students to be accepted into a postsecondary program in Alberta's learning system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, this is good news all around because this agreement creates an economic region second only to Ontario, and the way that the economy is going in both British Columbia and Alberta, look out Ontario. This agreement will make it easier for students to be accepted into Alberta's postsecondary learning program and vice versa. One of the main purposes of this agreement is to improve the accessibility of each province's postsecondary programs to students in Alberta and British Columbia.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also directed to the Minister of Advanced Education. How will this partnership with B.C. support entrepreneurs wanting to start up companies in Alberta who can't find skilled labour?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, both Alberta and British Columbia currently face low unemployment, shortages in the skilled trades, and lots of entrepreneurial opportunities in a booming economy. This agreement will allow an entrepreneur in British Columbia to start a company in Alberta knowing full well that the rules are going to be the same here as they are there, so the same requirements, for example the same credentials, will be accepted on both sides. As we know, small business is the engine of the economy. This will make it easier to grow even more.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:10 Physician Supply in Rural Alberta

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to fail rural communities with their health concerns and doctor retention issues. It's not about funding; it's about training doctors. The government's current approach to workforce planning is insufficient now and will be totally inadequate in the future. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. When will the minister release a detailed five-year plan on increasing the spaces allocated for educating and training doctors in Alberta's universities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question because, in fact, we have a meeting scheduled tomorrow morning with the minister of health to discuss exactly that.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, but when do we get the plan?

To the minister of health: given that the minister recognizes that there is a shortage of health professionals in rural Alberta, why was there no increase in funding for the rural physician action plan in this year's budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there were a number of ways that we increased funding that would benefit rural Alberta. For example, we had $35 million in last year's budget for primary care networks. We have $70 million in this year's budget. Our hope is that with another 14 – and we've expanded to 14 primary care networks now – raising the numbers to some 28 across the province, we'll have a wider net of health care professionals that will work in teams that will help support not only urban communities but rural communities.

Mr. Speaker, the other part of the equation, of course, is the work that we're doing to prepare health care professionals that are not physician related that deal with the supports for long-term care, the nursing supports, licensed practical nurses. If you talk to some of the regional health authorities, for example in Calgary, their anticipation is that we will be fine until the year 2010, but after that, for the broader net across Alberta it's clear that we have to do more as the boomers move towards retirement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain how health care in Alberta is equitable when the good people of Bashaw are paying income tax, health care premiums, and a share of natural resource revenue and now they have to pay a $68 per year tax to retain their only physician?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier, there are two sides to this issue. The one issue is where we have a trilateral agreement that compensates physicians on a fee-for-service basis, and without an acute-care hospital where there's long-term care in that community, the fact remains and the fact is that there are simply not sufficient procedures to compensate a doctor at the level at which he wishes to earn.

The second part and a very fundamental truth, however, is that if a local community chooses to undertake a service and supplement a service in order to retain that service in a community, we should not try to stop that discretion. It happens many times where local communities pay more to keep a school in function so that that school can continue to serve community capacity and needs. So although communities in many cases have been part of the recruitment process for health care professionals and have chosen to put their own tax dollars there, you cannot argue that this province funds insufficiently its physicians because, in fact, we're at the top of the scale.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Tuition Fee Policy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Advanced Education has been tying himself in knots trying to justify removing tuition policy from legislation, where it's subject to the public scrutiny of this Legislature, to regulation, where future decisions would be made behind closed doors at the whim of the cabinet. The minister can go on arguing as long as he wants, but the fact remains that democratic oversight on tuition policy will be replaced with a secretive and undemocratic process. My question to the minister: if the tuition policy is good enough to be put in regulation, approved behind the closed doors of the cabinet room, why is the tuition policy not good enough to be included in the legislation that is openly debated on the floor of this Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be careful not to talk about the legislation itself because it is on the Order Paper, but I will acknowledge the concerns of students. That's why our government paid a tuition increase for students last fall and this fall, saving them $87 million in preparation for this.

I'll make the hon. member the same offer I made to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. I offered him a spot at the consultation table, and I offer the same thing to you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is the minister refusing to listen to every student organization in the province which is calling on the government to keep tuition policy in legislation so that it can't be changed at the whim of the minister or his cabinet?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm not refusing. In fact, I'm meeting with them this afternoon. You seem to have got there first.

With respect to the process, the hon. member knows that you can't pass an OC in cabinet without doing consultation. I'm offering him a seat at that consultation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is this government sandbagging the work of its own postsecondary steering committee and the work of the subcommittee on transforming the postsecondary system, which nowhere recommends that tuition fee policy increases be made by cabinet decision rather than by this Legislature?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the consultation process that will in fact form the regulations is a very extensive process, and I invite the hon. member to be part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta/Montana Relations

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we know that relations between Canada and the United States have been strained over issues like BSE, softwood lumber, and emerging issues, like water. I understand that the federal government is responsible for resolving these kinds of international issues, but my first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What does Alberta as a province hope to accomplish through its relationship with Montana by working outside the federal diplomatic process?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has had a formal relationship with the state of Montana since 1986. This was long before issues of BSE and heightened border security arose. We've worked well with the state of Montana for the last 20 years co-ordinating things like agriculture and transportation, tourism, trade and investment, the environment, including water. In fact, there is an international joint commission that's been in place since 1909 to deal with transborder water issues between the two jurisdictions.

When issues arise between Canada and the United States, we think that our good relationship between the province and the state of Montana can influence federal negotiations and decisions. Last week Alberta and Montana both agreed to train together in support of each other's emergency response. As an example, we agreed to work on transportation issues to encourage the flow of people and trade across the border. Also, Mr. Speaker, the consul general for the United States, Mr. Naim Ahmed from Calgary, was in attendance as well as the Canadian consul general representing Canada based in Denver, the hon. Michael Fine. Both of those individuals will take the nature of the discussions held between Alberta and Montana back to their respective federal governments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: given that border security is one of those issues decided by the U.S. government, not the state of Montana, what kinds of actions can Alberta take through its relationship with Montana, if any, to influence that decision?

Mr. Mar: We do know, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation has already been passed by the U.S. Congress, so we recognize that a U.S. government decision has been cleared to require passports or some other form of identification to enter a U.S. jurisdiction. We're hoping that our two jurisdictions, Montana and Alberta, might be able to have some influence on the timeline for implementation. We believe, between the two of us, that more time is required to estimate the economic impact of this decision and perhaps lengthen it so that people will be ready.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, the U.S. consul general indicated that the number of people who use a passport to clear U.S. customs at the Calgary International Airport is about 70 per cent, but the number of people who have a passport to clear customs at Sweetgrass, Montana, is only about 30 per cent. With the introduction of the requirement to have a passport or secure document at land crossings of the U.S. border to be implemented by January 1, 2008, we believe that more time is required to ensure that the 70 per cent of people who don't have a passport will in fact be ready for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My last question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that there is somewhat of a dispute between Montana and Alberta relating to the use of water in the Milk and St. Mary rivers, can the minister tell us how the province is working with Montana to determine a solution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has mentioned, we are working very closely with our neighbours to the south. We have an incredible long history of almost 100 years. I want to say as Minister of Environment responsible for water that, clearly, Albertans are viewed in North America as excellent managers of water. I applaud Albertans for their work over the past 100 years. We continue to work with our neighbours to the south; in fact, right now the IJC, the International Joint Commission, that the minister previously had mentioned. We are asking for consultative feedback from residents in both Montana and Alberta. That's what's happening. We will continue in terms of conservation and collaboration because I think that at the end of the day this important resource we've been blessed with is far too valuable to do anything but work together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Water Quality Monitoring

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta needs to learn from other governments' botched water strategies where the lack of government planning and monitoring led to dangerous results in North Battleford, Saskatchewan, and Walkerton, Ontario. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that the money allocated in Budget 2006 for water and wastewater management doesn't even address the water infrastructure backlog, let alone address current needs, how can Albertans be confident in their water supply?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, since the Water for Life strategy has been adopted, the government of Alberta has taken that as a very serious issue. Of course, this year $54 million was allocated to water/wastewater projects. As well, we know that in the agreement that we signed with the federal government – some $88 million from us, $88 million from the federal government, and $88 million from the municipalities – some 55 per cent of that money has to be spent on projects that are green. Water and wastewater management are a part of those.

As far as the testing of the quality of drinking water to make sure that it's absolutely safe, Mr. Speaker, we are promoting the regional type of projects. One of the big reasons for that is so that we can build water treatment plants that are efficient because you get some economies of scale, but also it's very critical that we have people operating those that are qualified. So to build a number of small stand alones, we believe that there's more danger of having some problems with the management of the plant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister admit that Alberta's infrastructure deficit is in fact downloaded provincial debt?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me see. We have a 13 and a half billion dollar capital plan, triple any other province in Canada. We've added additional Water for Life funds in each of the last two years. We continue to support our municipalities. I would remind the hon. member of the $3 billion commitment to municipalities that's being paid to them by their request over five years. There's a municipal sponsorship program. I lose track of exactly the amount of that one. Are we downloading? We're downloading a fair amount of money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Three billion dollars with lack of planning isn't going far enough.

To the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, capital planning: has the minister considered adopting the Alberta Liberal plan that would see 25 per cent of all surpluses go into an endowed capital account that would responsibly deal with water treatment and other infrastructure shortcomings now and into the future?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to be able to work with the Minister of Finance, who has outlined exactly the amounts of money and the programs that are currently in place. As we go forward beyond the three-year business plans, we've got billions more dollars to identify and how those programs will work and how we'll pass on the money and continue to work with our municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports indicate that there are a record number of mountain pine beetle-infested trees in our province this year, nearly 15,000. The mountain pine beetle has devastated the B.C. forest industry and a large number of communities that depend on this industry. Now the mountain pine beetle is threatening Alberta's forests more than it ever has. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is his department doing to get the mountain pine beetle out of our forests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. We've said in this House many times that all along the mountains there are pine beetles and they are a serious threat to our forests. We've pursued a very aggressive strategy since they were first detected in Alberta in 2002.

We survey our forests both in the air and on the ground. We continue to cut and burn our infested trees, and we do prescribed burns in particular areas, strategic locations where we have a large infestation of pine beetles. The department, in addition to that strategy, has also asked the industry to review their harvesting sequences in their already approved plans and to focus on removing mature forests that might be threatened by the pine beetle. This aggressive, comprehensive strategy to fight the mountain pine beetle strives to meet the methods of our industry as well as the needs of our communities that depend on that industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Has his department learned anything from the B.C. government on how to effectively control this pest?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we are indeed fortunate to have British Columbia as such a strong and experienced partner and an ally in battling this particular disease. At the recent Alberta/British Columbia joint cabinet meeting we renewed our commitment with British Columbia at that time to work together on our shared border. We're doing a very aggressive plan on both sides of the border to stop the beetle at that border. We target areas where the mountain pine beetle will most likely come across into Alberta. Again, we cut and we burn those infested trees in those areas. It's important that we continue to work with British Columbia to ensure that there is a ban on barked wood coming across the border into Alberta to reduce the beetles travelling into Alberta in that way as well. We're taking a very proactive approach in working with British Columbia, and we're going to be making sure that we do everything to limit the spread of the mountain pine beetle into our mature pine forests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How will the government deal with the potential impact of the mountain pine beetle on the softwood lumber framework?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. It is a question that the industry has brought to our attention, but it is too soon to say how the softwood framework might affect the challenges that we have with the mountain pine beetle. Our focus right now is on trying to prevent the beetle from spreading to the mature forests, as we said. We have met with the industry, and we all recognize that there are details to be ironed out in addressing and finalizing the framework as it's presented. We are concerned about the potential threat that will bring to Albertans as we bring forward the negotiations under the framework, and we will work closely with all our partners to make sure that the realities of our day-to-day forest industry like out-of-control beetles are considered in finalizing those details under that framework.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

2:30 Alberta/Montana Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Promoters of major new electricity generation projects in Alberta want greater access to U.S. electricity markets as a prerequisite before they invest here in Alberta in the construction of more power plants. Export power lines benefit the generators at the expense of consumers here in Alberta. The first new export power line planned is now through a public process, and that line will be constructed between Lethbridge and Montana. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Is the Montana/Alberta tie-line licensed as a utility here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the Montana/Alberta tie-line is a merchant line. It's a private-sector application. To build, they have to go through all the regulatory processes to have that line approved just as any other utility company would have to. It'll be up to those making the contracts to see if it's viable.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is the Montana/Alberta tie-line a merchant line? Is it licensed as a merchant line, or is it licensed as a utility here in the province of Alberta? Yes or no?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the specific licence application in front of me. I'd be happy to get that and report back in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: given that electricity ratepayers will pay the cost now for additional transmission capacity that is to be constructed between Lake Wabamun and southern Alberta, will any electricity transmitted between these points after the new transmission capacity is developed be exported on the Alberta/Montana tie-line?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the application for this 500 kV line between Wabamun down to the Calgary area is to strengthen our grid for delivery of electricity to our residents, our businesses here in Alberta. It is in the primary needs application, that it was to strengthen our own grid, not anything to do with export.

That said, I do want to say, though, that we do already have a couple of interconnections, one through British Columbia and one through Saskatchewan. They're limited in scope. You can effectively already transport electricity through to British Columbia through to United States. That happens already. But it acts as greater stabilization to have access to more electricity, other plants in other jurisdictions that will help stabilize even our own market and would be to our benefit.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six to participate, but today just a little further information with respect to the democratic history of Alberta. While the length of time between Alberta's 26 elections varies, the overall average length of time is 3.95 years, almost right on the four-year mark.

The longest period between elections is five years, two months, and three days, the time between the election held June 19, 1930, and the election held August 22, 1935. The second longest time is four years, 11 months, and 10 days, the time between the elections held July 18, 1921, and June 28, 1926. The shortest time between elections is two years, 10 months, and 12 days, the time between the elections held May 8, 1986, and March 20, 1989. The second shortest time is two years, 10 months, and 24 days, the time between the elections of August 5, 1952, and June 29, 1955. Nine elections were held after four years since the previous election and 12 have been held in the third year.

To repeat, the overall length of time between elections in our history is 3.95 years.

Marigold Library System

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and recognize the 25th anniversary of the Marigold library system. This system links libraries over a wide area, with member communities stretching throughout south central Alberta, including my constituency. Linked together, libraries can act as deposits of information for a much larger number of people than live in the immediate area around the library.

Since the creation of the Marigold library system there have been many changes in how they do business, and one of the main drivers of this change is technology. When this system was first implemented, microfiche was the tool most used in libraries. As new technology became available, libraries have become more connected, first through telephone or computers which linked to a system-wide reference and interlibrary loan system between the member libraries.

Not only the technology has changed the way the Marigold library system operates. New partnerships have also opened up broader horizons for rural libraries. Since 1999 Marigold has had a partnership with Northern Lights library system and Yellowhead library system, and this collaboration is referred to as the Regional Automation Consortium, or TRAC. Since that time, more regions have joined the partnership, and this level of interconnectedness allowed for the creation of the Alberta library card. With this a cardholder from Hinton could walk into a library in Edmonton and borrow materials.

In 2003 the Peace library system joined TRAC, which meant that the members were able to share books from over two-thirds of the province. Further improvements have led to other changes such as cardholders being able to access the system from home to check out books and have them delivered to their home library.

Over the past 25 years there have been a great many changes in technology, and this has greatly affected libraries in our province. The completion of the SuperNet means that rural libraries will be able to offer even more services to their members, and the possibilities are endless.

Mr. Speaker, when people communicate and co-operate, the sky is the limit. I would ask all members to join me in marking the 25th anniversary of the Marigold library system.

Native Prairie Grasslands

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's grasslands constitute a tremendously important part of Alberta's natural heritage. They're home to over 1,100 diverse species of fauna and flora, including characteristic species such as the prickly pear cactus, the western diamond-back rattlesnake, the pronghorn antelope, and the burrowing owl. Unfortunately, human development has led to the loss or degradation of much of our native mixed-grass and shortgrass prairie, causing many species to become threatened or even extinct.

Recently the energy company EnCana has proposed a project which could see as many as 1,275 new gas wells drilled in the national wildlife refuge portion of the Suffield military base in southeastern Alberta. While not completely free from human impact, the refuge still contains much of its natural beauty and integrity as a native grasslands area.

The EnCana proposal has the potential to cause further degradation of the area. While the wells, once in place, may have a small footprint on the environment, a larger danger lies in the cumulative impact of drilling and servicing and associated pipelines, roads, and trails. This cumulative effect could be very damaging to the grasslands and threaten the tremendous biodiversity and the uniquely aesthetic nature of this area.

I want to commend Lieutenant Colonel Drew, the base commander of CFB Suffield, for recognizing the unique nature of the refuge and its fauna and flora and for his efforts in safeguarding the area. I believe that we as Albertans must take action to protect the last remnants of our native prairie grasslands, and I would encourage all concerned Albertans to make their views known to the panel established by the federal Environment minister to review this drilling project.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Asian Heritage Month, and I rise with great pleasure today to recognize the rich culture and important contributions of the Asian community in our province. There are over 250,000 people from Asian backgrounds in Alberta, and the Asian community has been an important part of our province for its entire existence, over 100 years. From the business community to the academic world to the cultural sector there has always a vibrancy and dynamic feeling that the Asian community shares with the rest of the province.

The events celebrating Asian Heritage Month throughout Alberta demonstrate the diversity and energy of this community's contributions. In Calgary photo exhibits, a film festival, a writers' showcase, and concerts will highlight the amazing experiences of Asian artists. In Edmonton art exhibits, a book launch, an international martial arts championship, and a spring garden festival will showcase the diversity of Asian culture.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is proud of its multicultural heritage and the strength of its diversity. Albertans from all cultural backgrounds working together have made Alberta what it is today, a rich and unique province with opportunities for all. Asian Heritage Month provides communities with another opportunity to work together to make cross-cultural connections and recognize the value of our cultural diversity.

I encourage all MLAs and all Albertans to celebrate Asian Heritage Month. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Diversity in Alberta

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to focus on an Alberta that is coming of age socially, politically, and spiritually. It is becoming a cliché to speak of our diversity, yet it is this breadth of our people that is the strength of the new Alberta. Alberta is coming to reflect the pluralism that makes our country a microcosm of planet Earth.

Politically Alberta is coming of age. As a new Prime Minister from Alberta gets used to governing Canada as a whole, the rest of Canada is learning that Alberta does not march in lockstep. We have many voices and viewpoints. Child care is an example. While Ottawa now wants to get out of the field, other Albertans are determined to have a voice in the choice the new government offers. We are becoming mature enough to recognize that to question and challenge is not disloyal for choices that grow out of debate and scrutiny will be more enduring.

Spiritually we are coming of age. In my riding I've been part of discussions where Hindus, Sikhs, Muslims, Buddhists, Christians, and Jews have shared our deepest concerns and admitted that it doesn't matter what we call God. That is truly a miracle. A century ago it was hard to get Christian denominations to talk. The Hebrew name for God, I am what I am, is one we cannot escape. Every time we make an I-am statement, we either affirm our source or take the name in vain. Let us make our I-ams not statements of individual ego but recognition of belonging to a larger whole. When we do that, we will reflect not only diversity but our divine splendour. Then we will truly have come of age.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans depend upon modern freeways for commerce, recreation, and commuting. That's why the new sections of Anthony Henday Drive are such a boon to the city of Edmonton. But my constituents have raised serious questions about the downside of this freeway.

Albertans in southeast Edmonton living next to the drive are angry and frustrated because the road runs less than a hundred feet away from some houses without true noise or safety barriers. They anticipate that their property values may fall because of increasing noise levels and air pollution from passing vehicles. More importantly, they are concerned for the safety of their children and pets. With vehicles zooming by at freeway speeds, children living near this road will be at risk every single day, yet the government has no plans despite requests from Edmonton city council to create earthen berms or barriers that could dramatically lower the risk to children while protecting property values and the quality of life of southeast Edmonton residents.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Ellerslie and, indeed, on behalf of all Edmontonians living near Anthony Henday Drive, I call upon this government to do the right thing and reconsider their position. The investment required to make the residential areas bordering Anthony Henday Drive safe and protected from noise and dust is well worth it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Bullying Prevention Campaign

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last June government launched a three-year province-wide bullying prevention program. This campaign encouraged children to learn how to handle bullying through the S-team heroes game at teamheroes.ca. I'm excited to say that this website recorded over 1 million visits in less than a year, a remarkable achievement. Parents can also learn more about the bullying prevention program through a web resource called bullyfreealberta.ca.

We are expanding on the S-team heroes work through a new campaign that encourages 12- to 18-year-olds to stand up and stop bullying. Bullying can stop in less than 10 seconds, Mr. Speaker, when someone intervenes on behalf of the victim. Youth can visit b-free.ca for practical tips and advice on how to stand up and stop bullying in a positive way. We're also trying to encourage youth to talk to their parents or a trusted adult.

In conjunction with the new campaign, Mr. Speaker, government has launched a toll-free 24-hour provincial helpline for youth who are struggling with bullying. The number is 888-456-2323. Adults can also call this number for help and support with bullying. I'm confident that we're on the right track here, but we still have a long way to go.

Making bullying history requires the combined efforts of government, community, school boards, teachers, parents, and students. Schools can play an integral role in preventing bullying and are making a difference. This is one of many reasons Alberta is recognized internationally for its outstanding and caring education system. Alberta has also been recognized nationally by bullying prevention experts and is a leader on this issue, Mr. Speaker. Parent link centres have also played an important role in this work by ensuring that parents have the tools they need to help their children deal with bullying situations. I commend all those who have taken part in this very successful campaign and encourage all Albertans to do their part to end bullying in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice being given this time, it's my pleasure to introduce a petition signed by 23 students from St. Joe's school in Calgary. The petition calls for concerted government action to address the reported rise in teen smoking in Alberta, and not only do they offer their criticism; they also offer us some possible solutions: a tobacco tax increase, legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, and legislation to make all workplaces completely smoke free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to give oral notice of three motions, the first of which is with respect to the Standing Orders of this Assembly and a package of edits and important updates, corrections, standardizations, and so on, put together by the Speaker's office and his staff, for which we are very grateful. It goes as follows. Be it resolved that

The Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, denoted as being effective April 11, 2005, be repealed in their entirety and the Standing Orders tabled in the Assembly on May 15, 2006, and distributed to members be substituted in their place.

The revised Standing Orders come into effect on the first day of the next sitting of the Assembly following the adjournment of the 2006 spring sitting.

The second motion will read as follows.

Be it resolved that:

- (1) A Select Special Personal Information Protection Act Review Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed to review the Personal Information Protection Act as provided in section 63(1) of that act consisting of the following members, namely Mrs. Ady, chair; Mr. Goudreau, deputy chair; Mr. Backs; Mr. Johnston; Mr. Liepert; Mr. Lindsay; Mr. Loughheed; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Martin; Mr. Rodney; and Mr. Snelgrove.
- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most recent Members' Services Committee allowances order.

- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (4) In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans.
- (5) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly or the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner.
- (6) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (7) The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the act, within 18 months after beginning its review.
- (8) When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my third motion is as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Mr. Lorne R. Gibson be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 43

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two reports to table. First, I would like to table five copies of the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the 2004 provincial enumeration and the November 22, 2004, provincial general election of the 26th Legislative Assembly.

Secondly, I would like to table five copies of the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the Senate nominee election, Monday, November 22, 2004.

Copies of both were previously distributed to all MLAs.
Thank you.

Mr. Graydon: I'd like to table five copies of a photograph referred to in question period earlier today.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is raising a point of order on the Minister of Gaming's tabling of a picture?

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it later. I just wanted to know that that's exactly what it is.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of four of the many letters I've received from concerned citizens of Alberta voicing serious concerns with the proposed third-way health care system. The first letter is signed by six individuals. They are R. Seamans, V. Brennen, E. Roy, M. Fichter, E. Morrissey, and J. Dunkle. The remaining letters are from Stan Nykiel, Jonathan Hyatt, and Tim Cambridge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the required number of copies of the Cuisine & Concours d'Elegance program from the Meals on Wheels fundraising gala that took place at the Roundup Centre in Calgary last Saturday evening. Calgary's Meals on Wheels delivers not only nutritious meals to over a thousand individuals each day but provides dignity, companionship, and security, allowing primarily fixed-income seniors to remain in their homes and therefore out of expensive institutional care. Hopefully, the Alberta government will recognize and financially support this now 41-year-old voluntary program that has outgrown its current facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table here today. The first is from Carl Ulrich from Edmonton. He says that Bill 20 is a step backwards and that one of the reasons the public has such little faith in elected officials is because of the lack of transparency.

I also have a letter from William Dascavich. He recently visited a senior in a health care facility in Edmonton. He was impressed by the high standard of accommodation but was very disturbed by the lack of staff and the resulting distress that this causes residents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three letters to table today. They are all from people who are deeply disturbed by Bill 208 and who wish to voice their opposition. They're from Rheanna Sand of Edmonton, Rod McConnell, also of Edmonton, and Paul Sereda from Calgary. They each feel that Bill 208 would not protect human rights but would legislate and legalize discrimination.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have eight tablings today, and they're all regarding questions that we've asked over this past session in the direction of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation on the Calgary and Edmonton utility corridors or the ring roads. The first tabling is dated December 2, 1982, and again it is regarding the Calgary and Edmonton transportation and utility corridors.

The second tabling is also from Alberta Environment, and it's a memo dated February 25, 1983. The subject is again the Edmonton transportation and utility corridor.

The third tabling I have is dated September 18, 1981. It's a memorandum again from Alberta Environment to the hon. Premier of the day from the Minister of Environment, and it is on the Calgary and Edmonton corridor land purchases.

The next tabling I have is from September 18, 1981, and it's from the Minister of Environment again to the chairperson of the members' priorities committee. It is on the Calgary and Edmonton corridor land purchases. [interjection] Yes, hon. member, 1981.

The next tabling I have is from January 5, 1983, and it is from the Minister of Environment to the chairman, again, of the finance, priorities and coordination committee, and its subject is the northeast energy corridor land purchases.

The next tabling I have is dated October 9, 1980, and it is from the Minister of Environment to the president of the Executive Council, the hon. Premier of the time, and the subject again is the Edmonton and Calgary RDA purchases and special warrants.

The next to last tabling I have is also from the Minister of Environment, dated November 23, 1981. Again the subject is the Edmonton transportation and utility corridor.

The last tabling is from Alberta Executive Council, dated September 10, 1985, and the subject is the Edmonton-Calgary restricted development area land purchase, and this indicates that the finance, priorities and co-ordination committee authorized the minister of public works, supply, and services to "proceed to purchase a one acre parcel of land in the Edmonton Restricted Development Area from Northwestern Utilities Ltd. for approximately $650,000." I don't know whether there was an oil well or a gas well on that property or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two letters to table today, both on Bill 208. The first one is from Dr. Alan Rimer and Mrs. Shirley Rimer. They state that they are ashamed of what they call the close-minded approach to issues and people contained in Bill 208.

The second letter is from Mr. Peter Pratt, who also objects to Bill 208, and says that if a marriage commissioner feels that his or her job conflicts with their conscience, the right thing for them to do is to resign their position.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a document signed by 69 persons in my riding of Edmonton-Glenora protesting the Alberta government's plan for third-way health care reforms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon, the first being the program from the second annual Stop and Smell the Flowers, a fundraiser held on Saturday evening for the Edmonton region of the Canadian Mental Health Association. They do work in partnership with other community agencies "to educate about mental health and illness, to advocate for better conditions in the community and to help . . . build strong supports for community life." Speaking that evening were the president of the board, Abigail Parrish-Craig; their executive director, Bill Hofmeyer; and a mother of a son who suffers from a mental illness and has benefited from their programs, Cathy Ashton. Several thousand dollars were raised to benefit the charity.

As well, I have the appropriate number of copies of a rather heart-wrenching e-mail that was sent to members of the opposition from a Rodney Rea, a resident of Edmonton. Both he and his girlfriend, Beatrice, are clients of the AISH program, and he raises several concerns about the inadequacies of that program.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of e-mail correspondence that I referred to during the supply estimates for the Department of Finance last week. These are written by an insurance industry expert by the name of Susan Saksida in Ontario. She is raising concerns about the Alberta special broker and the fact that perhaps several million dollars, even tens of millions of dollars, may be slipping through the hands of Alberta Finance every year in uncollected insurance tax.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is the chair's pleasure today to table with the Assembly copies of the revised Standing Orders. As the hon. Government House Leader indicated when he gave oral notice of the motion, these Standing Orders will take effect at the next sitting of the Assembly following the adjournment of the spring sitting.

These revised Standing Orders have been discussed by government House leaders for nearly three years. They modernize the language used in the Standing Orders to bring them in line with the language used in the Revised Statutes of Alberta. They do not make any substantive changes, but members should be aware that the editing process means that certain Standing Orders have been renumbered.

After tabling this, I'm going to ask the pages to distribute copies of these revisions to all members in the House. If the Assembly should approve them, they will be put in the standard format in green binders in time for the next sitting of the Assembly following the adjournment of the spring sitting.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Minister Zwodzesky, Government House Leader, a report dated May 11, 2006, entitled Number of Times Closure/Time Allocation Used by the Alberta Government during the Past Five Years, prepared by the office of the Government House Leader.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Special Areas Act the special areas trust account financial statements, December 31, 2005.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on the point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is referring to the tabling that I believe the Minister of Gaming made. If it's the same one that I took off the same website, we're talking about the same thing. I haven't been able to see exactly what the minister did table, but I'm assuming that it's the same picture. The citations that I'm using here are 23(h), (i), and (j).

In fact, the situation was such that the school asked if the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would do a cheque presentation because they had been successful in receiving lottery money through the grant program that falls under the minister's ministry. The school contacted the government for the cheque, the actual cheque to be presented, and was told that protocol dictates that it had to be a government member who came out with the cheque. They offered the Edmonton caucus chairperson, who is the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. The school wanted their local MLA, and they were dissatisfied with the government's lack of co-operation, so the students created an outsized cheque for them to use, with some help from the staff there. The school asked the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to present the students' cheque so that they could have the benefit of a ceremony that all of the school could participate in.

I note that the signature on the cheque is not the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's, so once again under 23(h), (i), and (j) there was a statement made that is false and a motive made that is incorrect. This is not a government cheque that appears in the photograph. It is a student project that had been done. I suppose that the minister could take pride that the logo was fairly well duplicated, but it was certainly not either the actual cheque nor the official photo of cheque that the government sends out as the school was so clearly told that only government members are allowed to do this. Opposition members are specifically excluded from this.

We have a situation where the minister alleged that the cheque was a government cheque. It is not, Mr. Speaker. That's under 23(h).

Under 23(i) he imputed a false motive, that the member was attempting to put himself forward as a government member, I suppose, and claim that he was putting forward this cheque and that he indeed had signed it. That is absolutely, 100 per cent, totally, flat-out wrong. Again, the language that was used in the question and follow-up and that culminated with the tabling has certainly created disorder, and I hope that this can be alleviated.

I believe that I have shown that the allegations from the minister are false, that the information given was inaccurate, and I'd ask that he please withdraw his statements and apologize to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who did exactly as his school asked him to do.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just reviewing 23(h), (i), and (j), which are the three citations mentioned by the hon. member. Unfortunately, I don't have the benefit of the Blues to check verbatim what was said or what was not said in the spirit of the debate that occurred earlier today, nor have I yet seen the tabling, so I cannot comment on that. However, I would comment on whether or not there were allegations as such appropriated. I would simply say that the issue seems to be that a reasonable facsimile was provided which, according to what I've just heard, may or may not have borne the official logo used by one of our government-approved lottery programs. Whether it was the real cheque or a facsimile is sometimes not abundantly evident in a photo reproduction. So we would have to wait and see if, in fact, what has just been presented by the Opposition House Leader is the exact version of events as we understand them.

I wouldn't suggest that there were any allegations or unavowed motives either as I would indicate. I don't think that under (j) there was any "abusive or insulting language" used in the exchange, at least not from our side, nor do I think that there was any ensuing disorder, perhaps a bit of a disruption. I don't personally see that any of the standing orders were breached. However, I will yield my position to the hon. Speaker for his comments in this regard.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark going to get involved in this, or are we all going to have spokesmen on behalf of everybody? These are points of order respecting the member.

Mr. Tougas: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to confirm that everything from the Member for Edmonton-Centre is true. The cheque was . . . [interjections] Do you mind? Do you mind? Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, they asked that I present a cheque to them. They were denied because the government told them that only government members can give out these cheques, so they decided that since I helped them fill out the forms and I was their MLA, they'd ask me to come and make a presentation. This is nothing like the cheque presentations . . .

An Hon. Member: You could've said no.

Mr. Tougas: Do you mind?

This is nothing like the cheque presentations that the government does with the big cardboard cheque. This was done by the school. It's as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. I mean, there was . . . [interjections] Do you mind?

I presented a cheque that the school gave me because the government denied the opportunity to do the cheque presentation, which is exactly the point we've been making, Mr. Speaker. It was a gesture by the school. I'm certainly not going to tell them: oh, no, I can't do that sort of thing. They wanted me to do it. The government insisted on sending a government member to do it. The parents said: we don't want a government member; we want our MLA. That's why it happened. It's as simple as that.

The Speaker: Okay.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, do you still want to get involved?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, very briefly, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(j) I actually beg to differ with the hon. Government House Leader because it did in fact create disorder in the House. The minister was responding to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, yet he chose to target the Edmonton-Meadowlark MLA and basically accuse him – you know, I don't have the Blues in front of me – of being a liar and of practising something that he doesn't preach. So it did in fact create disorder in this House. There was a lot of noise and a lot of interjections back and forth. We feel that this point of order actually is a valid one. The hon. minister should get his facts right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The argument that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark just gave is the exact same thing that we face all the time. We have our constituents coming to us saying: "We would like you as our MLA to present this cheque. We're very glad that the Alberta government has decided to fund our playground or whatever through Alberta lotteries, and we would like our local MLA to present the cheque." Sometimes MLAs agree to do that. The very thing that he said he's facing is the very thing that they're accusing us of doing all the time. He could've just said no. If he didn't want to present the cheque, he should have said: "No, we don't believe in that. We don't want to do that. We don't want to present the cheque.” Instead he went and he presented the cheque.

Mr. Speaker, I’ll say on the record what I said earlier: if it looks like a duck, if it walks like a duck, if it quacks like a duck, then it’s a duck. So he should just admit that he presented the cheque and did the very thing that they’re saying shouldn’t be done.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency on this point of order.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we’re actually debating here on an object that was never ever said. I sit right beside this hon. member. I don’t have the Blues in front of me, but he actually didn’t accuse anybody of doing anything. He just mentioned that there was a cheque presented from both sides – there’s a picture of the logo on it – but he never at any time made any accusations to try to dispute that that hon. member did anything wrong whatsoever. All he was doing was saying that that hon. member as the MLA presented a cheque exactly the same as the hon. member – we should say a mock-up cheque. It wasn’t a real cheque that he presented, and it’s not real cheques that we present. He never ever once accused the hon. member of signing that cheque either. If you look in the Blues, I’m sure that it doesn’t state that he signed it.

Anyway, an MLA is an MLA, and I respect the hon. member for that, for wanting to look after his constituents and present whatever it is that the government can supply to his constituents. I respect him for wanting to look after his constituents.

The Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much. I just want to do a little bit of a historical reference on what’s happening today.

The Speaker: But we’ll deal with citations today and everything?

Mr. Chase: Exactly.

The Speaker: Right. Okay, go ahead.

Mr. Chase: In Public Accounts, Mr. Speaker, I asked the question: is holding large, government prop cheques with government members’ signatures on the bottom ethical? The Minister of Gaming indicated that it wasn’t, and his reply was noted by the Auditor General.

There is an extremely large difference with a six-foot by two-foot government prop cheque with a member’s signature on it indicating that the money apparently came out of that government member’s bank account. There is quite a difference between a child’s poster with no member’s signature on it and what this government has been putting forward as their money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can’t resist.

The Speaker: We are on a point of order, please.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. I will speak to the point of order.

We have in this province a wonderful program called the community facility enhancement program. Under that program, which has a nominal division of funds so that it’s fair across the province so that every community can participate, communities get together and raise money and then apply for matching grants under the CFEP program. Those matching grants more often than not, I would assume, although I haven’t done the research, are granted because people can comply with that program by doing good things in their community, creating community facilities.

Those monies come out of the lottery fund. The cheques come out of the lottery fund, and they come out of the lottery fund with the lottery fund logo on them. Sometimes there are cheque presentations, and that is a wonderful thing because what it does is provide an opportunity for an elected member to go to that community organization . . .

Mr. R. Miller: A government-elected member. Make the distinction.

Mr. Hancock: A member of the opposition just yelled, “a government-elected member.” I’m glad that he did because that was the point I was very much going to get to. I wasn’t here when that program was set up, but I understand that in the course of discussion when that program was set up, all members of the House were offered the opportunity to do that, and the Liberal opposition at the time said no, that they would not participate. They would not go to their local organizations and volunteers who do good work in their community and say thank you and deliver the cheque.

Now, if they’ve changed their minds, that would be a wonderful thing. Perhaps they’ve changed their minds. But that’s what happened when it was set up. That’s the practice now. I as a member of the government and I as an MLA, a representative of the people, like to go to community organizations whether they’re in my constituency or in my city or otherwise and say: thank you for the good work that you do. There is nothing amoral about taking a mock cheque.

Now, the minister indicated, I think, at Public Accounts, although I wasn’t there, but he certainly reiterated in the House that he didn’t think it was appropriate for the MLA’s signature to appear on that mock cheque, and I quite agree with him on that. But I didn’t hear him in this House accuse the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark of signing the cheque or having his name on it. What I heard him say, which was very clear from the document he tabled, was that the hon. member was standing there at a presentation of a mock cheque with the lottery fund logo on it saying thank you, presumably, to people in the community who are doing good work to build our community. That’s what he should be doing. That’s what we should be doing because we should be encouraging the community to get involved and build the community. That’s what the CFEP program is all about, and we shouldn’t be making a fuss about cheque presentations because it’s just a way of saying thank you to community volunteers, and that’s what should be done.

The Speaker: There was a citation there somewhere, was there not?

Mr. Hancock: The citation that the hon. member was referring to was 23(h), (i), and (j). How can you create disorder, Mr. Speaker, if what you’re doing is referring to an action which an hon. member did, which was quite an appropriate action, and just talking about tabling a picture to show that that was done?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on this point with a citation, please.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 23(h), (i), and (j). I would just like to inquire as to whether or not the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud would be willing to table this agreement that he’s referring to. Lord knows how long ago it may have been or if it even exists. Certainly, I believe he indicated that he wasn't even here then, so we know that it goes back many, many, many years.

Often government members accuse members on this side of the House of going back too far. I don't know how far back he's going, but clearly there's a willingness on the part of members of today's opposition to have the opportunity, the same opportunity that is extended to government members, to present those cheques. Really, the crux of this matter is that the opportunities – and, Mr. Speaker, you are one who always talks about the fact that MLAs are all equal in this House. What we're learning here very clearly by the reaction from the government members is that MLAs are not all equal in this House. Some MLAs, unfortunately, are more equal than others.

The Speaker: Okay. Anybody else?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: What question is there to be called?

Well, in this most useful exchange in the debate this afternoon with respect to this, I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for raising the point of order, and I do thank the Minister of Gaming for tabling the document, which is a picture. It's not very clear to me, but I think I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in the picture. I see a great big cheque, at least a facsimile of something that says $125,000 on it. There seem to be some logos on it, and there seem to be some names on it. It seems to be at least three feet by a couple of feet, and there are a bunch of happy-looking faces there.

All right. The thing had to deal with 23(h), (i), and (j). First of all, 23(h) says, "Makes allegations against another member," (i) says, "Imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," and (j) says, "Uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

So here is exactly what was said on the replay. Okay? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Gaming minister put an end to Tory MLAs signing their names on lottery cheques. The minister stated that partisan cheque presentations using lottery funds will not be going on any further. The minister went on to say that the Official Opposition should check out its site, and that we would be surprised at one of the pictures. We e-mailed the department for clarification, but it went unreturned. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister tell us which picture he was referring to and on which website he saw an opposition member presenting lottery money, not charity money? They are two different things, my dear hon. minister.

That sounds filled with a lot of nice salutations: "My dear hon. minister." That's polite.

The Speaker then said, "The hon. minister," everybody being polite, of Gaming.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there is still some confusion even after my supplementary answer of last week, obviously, when I said that MLAs shouldn't be signing the bottom of the cheque to make it appear as though the cheque was coming out of their account and not the government account. I've been trying to avoid embarrassing the member opposite whose website the photo is on but, unfortunately, I guess I'm forced into telling the Assembly and the member opposite that if they would check the website of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, they would find a photo of a cheque being presented to the Afton school parent advisory council.

Okay. So far everything seems to be as it is.

It's a $125,000 community facility enhancement cheque . . . I'll be tabling an appropriate number of copies of that photo at the end of this session. Clearly on the photo is the Alberta Lottery logo.

Well, unless this photo has been doctored up, it seems to have the logo on it.

Then the Speaker said, "The hon. member." The hon. member said, "Thank you." Then there were interjections. The Speaker said, "The hon. member has the floor." The hon. member said to the same minister:

Given that the only cheque presentation on our website involves charity or personal cheque presentation, will the minister take back the statement and apologize right now?

"Involves charity or personal cheque presentation." So the hon. minister says, "Are you telling me, Mr. Speaker, that the $125,000 to the Afton school parent advisory council came from the hon. member's personal account?" Then the hon. member said, "To the same minister: will the minister commit . . ." An hon. member then interjected, "Answer the question." The hon. member says:

I will find out about that, but will the minister commit to getting better research from his staff because I confirmed from the present 16 MLAs that they didn't have any?

Then an unidentified hon. member said, "This is false." Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said:

This is totally false. I again request you to apologize because you don't have any evidence. If you have any evidence, please table it right now.

The hon. Minister of Gaming says:

As mentioned, I will table the appropriate number of copies of the photograph at the appropriate time in this afternoon's session.

Then we got into a tabling, and then we got into a point of order.

So 23(h): "Makes allegations against another member." I'm struggling with that one. Under 23(i): "Imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Again, I'm struggling with that one. Under 23(j): "Uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." As a matter of fact, I think that the purpose of this whole debate the last 10 minutes actually was pretty positive and not negative at all. There's a feeling of love in the room.

Let me make a couple of comments. I'm going to quote from Beauchesne 494.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

Well, I'm not sure how many different accounts we've got here today, but we've certainly got a couple of interpretations.

Let's just clarify another thing. There was a lot of talk here about a member's signature on these cheques. I should, I guess, confess to the House that in a previous life I was the minister who created the community facility enhancement program, and the rules were determined as a result of conversations that I did have with everybody. This was a long time ago, quite frankly before anybody in this House was here.

Mr. Lund: No. I was there.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was a member at the time. He doesn't have to stand up and attest to what I'm saying to be correct.

But the versions of various facts provided here this afternoon actually do hit the target. Offers were made, and rejections were provided to the then minister at that time, but that does go back in time. Never at any time, to the knowledge of this particular person, did any MLA ever have a signature on any cheque, certainly a facsimile of a name but not their signature. Their name was on the cheque. That probably continues through to today. There was the name of the person but not his handwritten signature. That was never permitted, and that was never allowed.

Now, what the situation today is: one can only attest that that same thing applies. But there were definitely members' names on the cheques until, I guess, the hon. Minister of Gaming declared in the last few days that that would be discontinued other than the name of the Premier and the minister. However, that's a policy decision that members can work out for themselves. The question here today has to do with Standing Orders. The bottom line is that we've had an exchange. Members have provided their questions.

There's one other thing, too, that one could just probably mention at a certain point in time: one should always be careful of the question one asks. The response given may not be necessarily what the hon. member asking the question wants to get.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, May 11, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, and 32.

[Motion carried]

Royalty Review Consultations

Q17. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What groups or individuals did the Ministry of Energy consult with in its latest royalty review?

[Debate adjourned May 8: Mr. R. Miller speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I recall, when we adjourned debate on Written Question 17 last Monday, the government had declined to share with this Assembly and all Albertans which groups or individuals the Ministry of Energy had consulted with in its latest royalty review. I believe I was speaking to the fact that as I travel across this province, this is an issue that arises more and more often. In fact, at a charity casino that I worked for the Ermineskin Community League last night, it was the hot topic of discussion once the Oilers playoff hockey game was over. Many members of the community league that were there volunteering were asking me whether or not, in fact, the Alberta government is realizing its full share of royalty revenue through the royalty program. I would have been very pleased had I been able to share with those community volunteers which individuals the Ministry of Energy was consulting or had consulted in their most recent review, but unfortunately I had to tell them that the minister has chosen not to share that information with us. So I would like at this time to express my deep disappointment at that.

Thank you.

[Written Question 17 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Review Consultations

Q18. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What consultations, studies, research, or other information gathering exercises did the Ministry of Energy conduct in relation to its latest royalty review?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we found out through the course of debate on the previous written question that the minister doesn't know what has been done and what has not been done. I'm very, very disappointed to learn from the minister that he thinks the royalty review is an ongoing process and that there isn't a latest royalty review. Well, I don't know what exactly the department has done with the information. It's obvious that there is some confusion on that side of the House. We only have to look at the recent budget, the business plans for this year, 2006, Strengthening Today, Securing Tomorrow, and we can see in the business plan for the three years 2006-09 for the Department of Energy that one of the challenges – it's listed as not an opportunity but a significant challenge – is "Fair Share, Changing Prices and Economics." It states in here:

The department will continue to review its royalty regimes, considering new price and economic conditions, to ensure they capture both a fair share of profits for Albertans while also attracting the investment needed to sustain future energy development and government revenues.

Now, that indicates to me that there certainly is a review of royalty regimes. I suppose we could say that we are looking at a continuous royalty review, but there are reports made. They are referred to in other government publications, yet for whatever reason the hon. minister is reluctant to release them. I don't know why, Mr. Speaker. It could be shame. It could be guilt. It could be a combination of both. I was as surprised as the members from the community league that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had been talking about because there is a lot of talk that there is not enough royalty being collected at this time by this government. Whether we look at the royalty holidays or the tax credits that are provided, that's the perception with the citizens who own the resource.

Now, certainly when we consider that as a percentage the amount of royalties that we're collecting is going down, the government isn't even meeting its own business targets. [interjection] Yes, that's true, hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. It's true. The target is that the range as a percentage would be between 23 and 24 per cent on an annual basis of the value of the total production should be collected in royalties, but this year – and I'm disappointed; I'm really disappointed in this minister because I think he can do a lot better – it's 19 per cent. Yes, it's 19 per cent.

Those extra millions of dollars we could find any number of uses for. Certainly, I think that if we were collecting those sorts of royalties, there wouldn't be any cuts in teaching positions, not only in Edmonton public but across the province. [interjection] Yes, there are, hon. minister, significant cuts across the province in education, through teachers. We can even have teachers or small class sizes, but we can't have both. So maybe the money could be used there. Maybe the money could be saved, and we could build up the heritage savings trust fund into a significant investment pool. That would be a good idea.

The consultations that have been done on these royalty reviews, the studies, the research, and other information-gathering exercises, would certainly help us with our research if the minister would provide that. The minister has promised. In fact, in this Assembly last week the minister promised. This is, Mr. Speaker, what the minister said, “We’re going through some of that right now, and those documents will be provided in due course.” This is in Alberta Hansard, page 1366, May 8, 2006.

Well, in budget estimates the minister also promised me some information on royalties and royalty structures. I’m still waiting. The minister promised me last year and promised the research staff information. Still waiting. Meanwhile, we’re collecting less in royalties. The value of the resource goes up. Profits, certainly, for the energy companies are going up, way up, but the amount of royalties that we’re collecting as a percentage is going down.

Now, who are we consulting with? How often are we consulting with them? Whose numbers are we using? Which portions of the resource are we collecting royalties on and which are we not? For instance, if we were to receive the information with Written Question 18, we could ascertain how much royalty is being paid on pentane-plus, how much is on butane, how much is on ethane if anything. These by-products of the natural gas production, what royalty are we paying on those? Should we perhaps be changing the bitumen royalty? Should we be looking at perhaps changing the royalty regime to enhance heavy oil development in Peace River?

Maybe the answers lie in a response to Written Question 18. I would encourage the minister, if we’re going to be open and if we’re going to be transparent and if we have nothing to hide, to give us this information and also to provide to us the authors of this information and tell us exactly whose production figures we use when we calculate the royalty structure in this province and the amount of money that goes to the treasury. Is it CAPP’s production figures? Is it production figures from the EUB? I know that they do a production audit. I’ve yet to see it. I’m not holding my breath to see it because I don’t think that I’m going to be allowed to see it because, I’m sorry, we’re not open and we’re not transparent.

Why would we use other people’s production figures and not the Department of Energy’s? Does that indicate to me that this new electronic system is not working as well as had been anticipated? This idea that people are going to volunteer accurate production data and that we can calculate our resources from that, is that system not working? Am I to conclude, particularly with Written Question 17, with that response, that perhaps those systems are not working? Certainly, the Auditor General has had some questions in the past about the integrity of this system. But we are now into electronic reporting, and perhaps the reason why this government is so shy, so reluctant to provide this information is because they know that it would cause significant interest with the public, and the public would come to the conclusion that: oh, my, this government after 35 years is not managing our resources the way we thought they were.

They started off very well by starting the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, but now we see that we would have to put an immediate $5 billion infusion of cash into it just to inflation-proof it, to bring it up to an amount over $19 billion. If we had been collecting the royalties that we should have been collecting over the years, that fund would be worth significantly more than even $19 billion. We don’t know unless the government through the Department of Energy will provide to us through Written Question 18 the information that we are asking. Who is advising this government on their royalty structure? Whose interests are being served here? Is it the citizens that own the resource or the energy companies?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Let’s find out what’s going to happen with this question. Okay? Let’s hear from the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Written Question 18. A similar kind of wording, a different request, to Written Question 17. We are going to reject the question. The problem is that a lot of these questions that come forward are so generic. If you even wished to provide some information from the latest royalty review, whatever that is, I don’t know where that starts and stops.

I don’t know if it’s specific to one instance. For example, we are specifically looking at the Alberta royalty tax credit. So is that the latest royalty review? We’re also looking at the deep gas royalty program that we have. Is that the latest royalty review? Is it on an oil sands kind of a question? Is it on natural gas? Is it on conventional or unconventional? What date did it start? When he wrote the question, do we get into that date or is it today’s date?

I actually don’t even know how to answer the question if I wanted to give all the information that he asked. So, in that vein, we have said that what we will supply in due course – as we’ve gone through this, as we’ve had some third-party documents or otherwise that have come forward, we’re quite happy to see that he’s provided the information. I won’t know even if that would have supplied the answer to this question.

Therefore, it’s in that vein. It’s not having anything worried about trying to hide. We go through and publish our business plans. We have, as he’s mentioned, quite a bit of discussion on royalties, a three-year extrapolation of what royalties would be collected.

He’s also gone into a whole bunch more detail that gets outside the purview of his question, so as he’s gone into his own discussion, it gets broader and broader and broader. I’m not certain that he’d have enough time ever in his lifetime to go through every piece of paper or that we’d have the time to find every piece of paper that he ever might contemplate or dream of or think of. But we would be willing, quite frankly, if he’d be a little more precise, narrowing the discussion so that we’re not trying to interpret. It would be very helpful and constructive if he would narrow the phrasing of the question to be more precise so that we actually knew what he was trying to find out.

Saying “consultations, studies, research, or other information gathering exercises,” well, just the other day I suspect that we’ve had discussions with my colleagues on this, so that was a gathering exercise. I gathered some information on royalties, so is that the information? I didn’t know that we were supposed to keep minutes of everything that was going on. I might be at it just as he mentioned. He could be out talking with his constituents or stakeholders or otherwise, and they might give you some information on royalties. Is that the latest review they’re referring to? I didn’t – sorry; I apologize – take minutes of that dinner meeting or whatever that one was.

In all seriousness, though, we will provide if we’ve had some consultations. There have been a few in the past. I have undertaken and said that we’d supply those documents to the House. We’re going through those right now, and I’d be happy to see that in the not-too-distant future the members of this House will have that information.

But because of the vagueness of the question – really, I’d say impossible to actually interpret what is being asked as to what specific information is being requested other than please do a memory dump of everything you can ever, possibly find on the topic – in that vein, we’re going to reject Written Question 18.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some consternation as to why this particular question was rejected. I do understand that the hon. minister has some trouble with the language.

Certainly, considering what's been going on in these past few months in regard to discussions on royalty review, I think that we can at least come to an agreement as to what the parameters of this question are suggesting. The parameters are: where are we going with the royalty regime in this province, and how are we going to get there? I expect the hon. minister to be exercising due diligence in this regard, and I don't doubt that he has been, in fact, working very hard on this issue because it's one of the most pressing, important issues that we have before us, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the future financing of this fine province of ours.

We have the perhaps somewhat precarious position in that we are financing more and more of the functions of this Legislature and of the province through our energy resource revenues, and this is not necessarily the way we want it to be. Certainly, some greater degree of economic diversity would be in order, but considering that the boom is here and away we go, we have to grapple with this energy royalty issue in the most wide-ranging but the most honest way possible.

We know that we can project ahead into the next couple of years and realize that the price is not going to go down significantly, and if it does, in fact, we can build measures that can accommodate for that too. As I have mentioned previously in this House, and I will again, there is a way by which we can use a progressive system to increase royalty rates based on the windfall revenues that energy companies are enjoying. As the windfall revenues increase, then modestly and very carefully our royalty rates can increase somewhat as well. This is a way to capture literally billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, that we are in fact effectively losing in this province over these weeks and months and last few years certainly.

Average Albertans, of which I consider myself one, are starting to speak about this more and more often. It's an issue that has been on the back of a lot of people's minds for quite an extended period of time because we know that the resources are finite, and we know that the royalty level that we set, which is not a taxation level at all, is the piece of the pie, so to speak, that we are taking for what's ours.

The resource is ours, and it's not unreasonable to review it. I certainly know that the hon. minister is reviewing it as we speak. We'd like to be able to review those materials so the owners or the shareholders, otherwise known as the whole population of Alberta, get to make an intelligent decision about where their revenues are going to go. We're not suggesting some sort of regime that will kill the industry and send the rigs and heavy oil and tar sands machines packing off to somewhere else. We're just looking for what is a fair share for Albertans here in this province. I don't think that's unreasonable. Considering the billions and billions of dollars that are at stake, I don't think it's unreasonable that that discussion should take place in the public realm as much as possible.

So while my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar might have used some language that's too broad for the minister's liking, then certainly I would ask him to perhaps narrow the parameters and give us something to work with. Certainly, my own position as a critic for the Energy ministry is to be just that but in the most constructive way possible. I certainly don't want to be cavalier about the criticisms that I choose to make. Rather, I would choose to build a constructive argument that is going to work in everyone's favour. I think that's the sort of democracy that we should aspire to exercise here in this House. Certainly, as time goes on and majorities get slimmer and things change hands, this is the way that we have to do business. We see it being quite successfully done in other levels of government. Minority governments are becoming more common federally, and who knows what we have in store with our own provincial legislative system?

So working together in a collaborative way and hammering out compromises with the information put before us in an honest and logical way is the way to do business, and I think that Albertans expect nothing less.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listening to the previous member speaking and talking about working in a collaborative way, I couldn't help but rise to speak to this particular written question because, precisely, this is a mechanism. Written questions are a mechanism under our Standing Orders and under the way that we do business here to allow for specific things which require more detail or more information than one might expect in Oral Question Period to be asked for and, perhaps, answered through the written question process.

But one does have to be precise about the question because if it's used as a fishing expedition, if the question is not phrased properly, there is no good way to answer it because, in effect, by voting the question, there is an order of the Legislature for a return. So it is not collaborative. It's not in the minister's determination as to what he or she is to bring to the House. By voting in favour of a written question, it's an order of the House to return certain information. If the question is not precise as to the information that's being asked for, if the parameters cannot be determined, then the question cannot be accepted. Over and over again in this House we've debated the acceptance of a question, and often ministers have come forward with amendments to try to clarify precisely what it is that they should be ordered to deliver to the House.

I would agree with the hon. member that we ought to have a collaborative process. A collaborative process would be an opposition or government member who wants information approaching a minister and saying, either in writing or through a meeting, "This is the type of information I need to have in order to do my job, in order to talk to my constituents, in order to go out and consult with stakeholders," to ask for that kind of information and perhaps work out the nature of the question that could be framed if, in fact, there's a disagreement as to what information could be provided, to work out the nature of the question so that it could be brought to the House and there could be, in fact, an order of the House returning that information.

When you have questions framed with such broad parameters that are not specific to the details, what it shows is two things: one, the member is using it for a political purpose rather than the purpose that is intended, which is an opportunity to get required information; two, they're not operating collaboratively. They're not working to narrow down the focus or to determine precisely what they're trying to do, so it's not a collaborative process.

I would agree with the hon. member opposite that there should be a collaborative process, that as legislators we should be working together in the interests of all Albertans. That means that every member of this Legislature should be able to get access to the information they need to do their job. They should be able to get access to the information they need so that they can critique a minister, so that they can critique a policy, but they can't do that by abusing the processes of the House, which is what happens when you write a question which is so broad in its parameters that it cannot actually be answered and, therefore, a minister has to stand and reject it and then be accused of not wanting to give up information, which in most cases is not the situation at all. In my experience most ministers would be happy to provide the information if it didn't mean shutting down the whole order of that department for a period of time to find exactly, precisely the information that's being required. The Minister of Energy, I think, identified that quite clearly.

If the parameters are too broad, then the question is: are you talking about a conversation I had? Are you talking about casual consultations? Are you talking about things that happened in caucus? Are you talking about things that have happened? Written questions could be used a lot more effectively in this House if people paid attention to what their value was or what their purpose was and then worked the questions so that they asked for specific information which, in fact, could be responded to.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't planning to speak on this, but some members have got me up. You know, I always get a kick out of the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the former House leader and deputy House leader. I remember him saying: just ask, and we'll give you whatever you want. Well, I've been around this place for a long time, and the only things they give you are the things that they know are not going to embarrass the government. That's the reality.

When you ask a question like this, the minister can say: well, it's too vague. If you ask a specific one, they'd say, "Well, it's too specific; there are third-party people here we can't deal with," and the rest of it. This is a government that's going to tighten up the FOIP Act. You can't get the information this way. You can't get the information through FOIP. It's going to be harder and harder. They're just closing it off in all directions.

The hon. Minister of Energy knows precisely what this question is driving at. We have very low royalty rates – everybody knows it – compared to Alaska and compared to Norway, and that's costing money for the taxpayers, who own this. At the same time we're going to give to some of these same companies the lowest corporate tax rate. So we want to know why this is happening. Who are you talking to?

The minister could be very specific. I'm sure it's not a person in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview or constituents that are talking to the Minister of Energy; it's energy companies. The minister certainly should say: "Well, these are the people in industry that we're talking to. These are what we're coming to." At least then we'd have some idea why we have these low royalty rates. I'm sure there's not a balance of people here. They're not talking to people from labour. They're not talking to farmers. They're not talking to ordinary citizens. The Minister of Energy is well aware that this is political dynamite.

You can say to these questions: they're too vague. I've heard here earlier on that questions are too specific. I don't know how you'd ever word questions, to come back to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, that they would ever accept. Then if we try to do it through FOIP, we know that we run into difficulties there, and it's going to be even harder. So how do you ever get answers out of this government?

It's not as easy as working collaboratively and saying: gee, Mr. Minister, can you give me this information that might be embarrassing for the government? "I'd be glad to do it with you." I've been around here too long to know that little game, Mr. Speaker, but it's a nice thought. It's a nice thought.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the point that's trying to be made here is very clearly the old saying: he who pays the piper calls the tune. We know where the Conservative donations, the money is coming from. We want to know. Is that the reason? Is it the reason that these people sit down with the minister, the Premier, or whoever else, and they say: "This would be nice if we got another royalty tax break.

We're hardly making it here. We're poverty stricken. Can you do a little better job in terms of giving us more money because we're going to invest all this money in Alberta?" I know enough about the global economy, and that's not even the case. The minister knows that when we compare what's happening in Alaska, when we compare what's happening in Norway, the people who own the royalty, the people of Alberta, are being taken for a ride.

Sure, we have all sorts of money flowing in right now, but as pointed out by the previous speakers, there could be more. There should be more. Then we could be doing other things or at least putting it in the heritage trust fund for down the way.

So I think that the minister, you know, is very clever in saying that it's too vague, but I'd be interested in what sort of question you could ever get that they would answer because I've hardly ever seen it in this Legislature. It's not through FOIP. It's not through here. Maybe he can give us a course on what questions he will accept that will tell us which oil companies he's talked to in the last little while, why the royalty rates are so low. He knows exactly what we're driving at, what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is driving at with these questions, and he doesn't want to answer the questions. It's as simple as that. You can make all sorts of excuses, and that's what they are, Mr. Speaker. They're excuses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first off, again I have to express my disappointment in the minister and my astonishment that he would accuse us of being vague through the wording of this written question. We only have to look at the business plan of this department, the Department of Energy, if we want to talk about being vague. We're talking directly about the royalties here. This could mean anything. Strategy 1.1, "Continue to review the department's royalty regimes, mineral taxes, rentals and bonuses, and recommend changes needed to address changing economic circumstances and opportunities." Well, that's vague. That's vague. That could mean any number of things.

What we are asking for are the reports and not limited to – but, again, if the minister would read his own department's budget, he would clearly see that there are quite a number of outfits tracking the forecasts of natural gas prices. The majority of the royalties that we're collecting at the moment in this province are from natural gas. That royalty structure depends on the price of natural gas in the North American market.

So we're not asking for anything vague here. We're asking for the forecasters' reports, from Wood Mackenzie to Groppe, Long & Littell to Purvin & Gertz to PIRA and RSEG, and these forecasts are in the Henry hub prices. We were talking about this last week. How exactly do the Henry hub prices compare to the Alberta reference price? Are there reports done on this, or are these forecasters like Rod Love and those other hired consultants, where they're giving you verbal advice? Yeah. This may be why we're not getting any of this information. It's because it's provided on a verbal basis. There's no invoicing. It's just: here, talk to me sometime, even if it's long distance or by voice mail, and we're still going to pay you. Maybe that's the reluctance of this minister to answer Written Question 18. Clearly, there are companies that are providing information, and the minister for whatever reason is reluctant to share this with the citizens, who own the resource. Again, I must express my disappointment.

Now, the performance measures. We talked before about the fact that we're only going to get 19 per cent in total on a percentage of the value of production in royalties. We know it should be considerably higher, and the minister knows it should be considerably higher. But, again, we're looking at the Crown revenue share. This is on page 148 of the business plan. Sharing the profits from resource development: the Crown revenue share, or the "portion of industry's annual net operating revenue that is paid to the Crown as royalty." Now, the source for this information is again from CAPP, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Surely, that can be provided through this written question, and that is not vague.

This is not a fishing expedition. One day we're told: "Oh, that's too complicated for question period. We have to do it through Written Questions." Then when the written questions come up in the Assembly on Monday afternoons: "Oh, no, this is not suitable. It should be done through another forum." This has got nothing to do with political purposes, and if it did, one could argue from this side of the House that by being vague like this, like the descriptions that are provided in the Department of Energy's business plans, then it's certainly being done for political purposes, and that has been reflected by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in his remarks.

I take exception, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, that this question as it's worded is abusing the process of the House. I just find that incredible, that the hon. member would think that Written Question 18 is abusing the process of the House because again we were told: "Oh, no. If you're seeking details of that nature, do it through a written question." I don't know how many times we have been told that, and we're doing that. You can't have it both ways, hon. member.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about royalties in Alaska and Norway. Well, if we could receive the information that we're requesting through this, we could see how Alberta compares with the royalty structure in the lower 48 states. The hon. member was quite accurate about Alaska and about Norway, but what about the lower 48 states? Has anyone done a recent comparison in that department in regard to the royalty structure in Colorado, Oklahoma, Louisiana, or Texas? Now, perhaps if we haven't done it, we should, but I'm confident it has been done.

I'm confident that we're not collecting enough in royalties in this province with the prices as high as they are. The current royalty structure may have been very effective in 1992, '93, and '94, but with oil at $70 American a barrel and natural gas at $7 a gigajoule for the North American market, that's a whole new marketplace – a whole new marketplace – and the minister knows it. To reject this question is to reject the concerns and the complaints of thousands upon thousands of citizens of this province who own the resource and want a thorough public review of the royalty structure now that market prices for these resources are so high.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I'm very, very disappointed in this government. I'm very disappointed in this minister. If our royalty structure at these prices is so sound and so fair, why use this lame excuse to prevent this information from being provided through this Assembly to the citizens who own the resource?

Thank you.

[Written Question 18 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Lund: Try again.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. I will try again, hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Natural Gas Well Applications

Q19. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, 2003-2004, and 2004-2005 how many applications received by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to drill natural gas wells in Alberta were rejected?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, we know that drilling is going on in this province at a frantic pace. We know why. But there are concerns being raised by landowners about the process. Many landowners, regardless of whether they live on the edge of the city, for instance in southeast Calgary, or on acreages surrounding large metropolitan areas have concerns. If we were to receive the answer through this question, we would see exactly how many applications received by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to drill natural gas wells in Alberta were rejected and why they were rejected. Were they just too close to built-up areas? Was there a potential for sour gas leaks if the well was successfully drilled and went into production, either through the drilling process or the installation of the production facility or the operation of the production facility? Would there be the potential for a sour gas leak?

Now, we need to restore confidence with the landowners in the regulatory process that is at the EUB. Certainly, when we look at Compton and the controversy around those well applications, the right thing was finally done, and those wells just southeast of the city of Calgary are no longer going to be drilled. How many other examples were there and why?

Whenever we look at the potential for sour gas, is the compliance record of the operator considered in the drilling application? If the application was to be rejected, would the compliance record of the operator be part of the decision?

Now, if we look at some of the directives that the EUB uses and the Department of Energy obviously considers and if we look at, say, directive 056, for instance, which is going to be used for the regulation of the drilling of coal-bed methane wells, and if we look at the violations of that directive by companies, there were a lot of violations. There was noncompliance. Some of it was major; some of it was minor. Not many people have followed that with the recent release of the MAC report, but certainly I read those compliance violations, and I have some concerns. Is it information like that that would be used to reject the drilling of a natural gas well?

I think this information would be very useful for any number of reasons, but I would remind the minister that it would go a long way to restoring public confidence in the regulatory process, and it would give landowners both on the edge of the city and in rural areas more confidence that this regulatory process is a balanced and fair way of dealing with applications.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Written Question 19. Certainly, with some degree of concern about what opposition members expressed about wording – wording is important. It's a good thing that in language we're better able to communicate so that we understand that which we're asked. In this case, I'm going to ask for an amendment, actually quite willing and wanting to provide the information, though I'm going to ask for some co-operation from the members opposite on this one in the co-operative spirit to try and engage in providing information on a useful, timely basis, but here's the challenge. I don't know if the amendment has been passed out.

With respect to the amendment I'd like to move that Written Question 19 be amended as follows: by striking out "2001-2002, 2002-2003" and by striking out "2004-2005" and substituting "2004-2005, and 2005-2006." So the amended written question will read as follows: "For each of the fiscal years 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006 how many applications received by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to drill natural gas wells in Alberta were rejected?"

Now, the reason for that is that I'm told that the records for the information requested for the earlier years, 2001-2002 and 2002-2003, would need to be manually accessed and collated due to a change in the computer system that they've had put in place. It would take some considerable time for them to compile the information, just getting the numbers, giving the quantity of wells and applications they have, which they would not necessarily have available for the past years.

That said, we wanted to say, "Okay. Well, let's provide them with the more up-to-date figures and add another year on to the end of it," so that we still give you as much of the information that's available that could be reasonably and easily compiled. All that is asked for, though, even in this one, is how many applications. In the hon. member's comments, before he started getting into reasons why, that's not even in the written question, but we certainly can comply with that, and I think that's the reason we'd like to provide as stated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again the reasons for this amendment surprise and startle me. If the department is not as the minister indicated last week in Hansard – "There isn't a 'latest royalty review'" – I think there would be lots of staff in there that could dig up that information for those years, 2001-2002 and 2002-2003. We're going to get two years' worth of information here. Perhaps my suspicions in regard to these electronic records were more accurate than I thought, whenever we're talking about this issue here in the last 15 minutes. Perhaps that electronic system over there is not working as well as had been anticipated. But, you know, as the Rolling Stones say, you can't always get what you want. In this case, I will certainly look at two years' worth of information.

Mr. Melchin: Three.

Mr. MacDonald: Three? Oh, yes. Pardon me. Three. Absolutely. The amended written question will read for 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006. You bet that's three years. We will look forward to receiving this information. I would have to on behalf of the citizens at this time thank the hon. minister for at least providing part of the information that we requested.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Again on this one I will be very brief. On behalf of the public, the diligent Alberta Liberal research staff, and myself I would express my gratitude to the minister. I am disappointed, however, that he could not provide information even in amended form in written questions 17 and 18, but we will look forward to having a look at this information throughout the summer.

Thank you.

Community Initiatives Program

Q20. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Tougas that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 1998-99 through 2004-05 what is the total number of community initiatives program grants awarded without matching funds being provided by the grant recipient broken down by recipient and amount of unmatched grant?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason for requesting this information is that the CIP is set up so that below a certain amount groups can apply without providing matching grants. Above $10,000 it's required that you provide matching grants. We're wondering how many have taken advantage of the threshold and applied for the grant that doesn't require the matching amount.

The second part of this is that in our experience in questioning the government on this particular issue, we've now been told that they can make exceptions. So we're wondering if perhaps there are additional people that we're not aware of that had their requirement for matching grants waived that would also be included in this amount. So that's why we're looking for the breakdown of recipient and the amount of the unmatched grant to see which of those, in fact, were over $10,000 that were granted by the exception that has been brought up.

I'm hoping that this will meet with approval, and I will give way to the government member to see whether we're going to get this accepted or not.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. With respect to Written Question 20 I'm pleased to comment on behalf of the hon. Minister of Gaming that we will accept this question.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close.

Ms Blakeman: Excellent. Great. I am looking forward to this information coming forward. We wish to probe this particular incident around the sorority house and the answers coming from the government, which we feel were somewhat incomplete. So we feel that the reasonable explanation has not been thoroughly evaluated.

In addition, in this particular instance the application that we FOIPed showed that the reasons used for justifying the nonmatching funds were that they weren't being provided because the fundraising the group was doing for the year had already been decided and they weren't going to do additional fundraising.

Ms Calahasen: It was accepted.

Ms Blakeman: Relax. This is the only chance. You tell us that we're supposed to be asking the questions here, so I'm asking the questions here, minister of aboriginal affairs. This is our opportunity to talk about it and ask the questions. You want me to spend more time justifying it to you? I'm happy to, but I'd really rather just get on with it.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please. Are you finished?

Ms Blakeman: No, I'm not finished.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, but through the chair, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and of course through the chairperson at all times.

The issue here is that there were a number of the provisions that are set out as criteria in this particular grant that appear to have been waived or not met; in particular, the reasonable explanation for why they weren't providing the matching grants, the fact that it was waived above the threshold level of $10,000, and the particular justification of public good that was involved in this particular grant application. I think that a number of people are finding leather-covered bar stools and all a bit tough to justify somehow as works for the public good seeing as this is furniture that was inside of, basically, a private group that you couldn't... [interjection] Well, that's true. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is drawing a similarity to the leather-covered chairs we have in the House. But the public is invited in to watch what we're doing, and that is not necessarily true in the group that we were examining.

So I'm delighted to hear that we are going to be getting the information that I requested, and at this point I'd like to call the question.

Q21. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Tougas that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 1998-99 through 2004-05 what is the total number of community initiatives program grant applications that were rejected?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Part of our reasoning for this is trying to figure out the total number of applications that were received. We know how many actually received money. If we know how many were rejected, that tells us in the end how many applications were received. So we're just looking for some baseline information as we try and weed through how these two lottery programs administered by the Minister of Gaming are in fact administered and the choices that are made with that. It's pretty straightforward information. Just how many of the grant applications that they received were rejected?

Thank you.

Community Facility Enhancement Program

Q23. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Tougas that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 1998-99 through 2004-05 what is the total number of community facility enhancement program grants awarded without matching funds being provided by the grant recipient broken down by recipient and amount of unmatched grant?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is following up on some earlier things where the minister made it clear that he has the discretion, if he wishes, to make different decisions on the CIP grant, which is the other grant administered by the same department. We note that the CFEP grants quite clearly state that you are to match those funds, but we wondered if, in fact, there was the same sort of discretion available to the minister with this grant, so we're asking to see which grants were provided without the matching funds and who were the recipients and what were the amounts of the unmatched granting amounts.

I hope that the government is able to provide this information, and my thanks for the opportunity to request it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written Question 23, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Alberta Gaming I'm pleased to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 23.

A Learning Alberta Advanced Education Review

Q24. Dr. B. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What is the total cost broken down by function – projected staff costs, consultant and legal fees, facility and hosting expenses, travel costs, et cetera – of the review of Alberta's advanced education system known as A Learning Alberta?

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that this review is coming to an end. There have been lots of other reviews of advanced education over the years and not much has come out of those reviews, so it's really important that we get this kind of background information about what kind of costs are involved in this particular kind of review.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:20

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Advanced Education it's my pleasure to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 24.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to hear that, and I'm wondering at this time if the hon. member could confirm to this House that when we're talking about the total cost breakdown for consultants in particular, it will be advice that has been received verbally as well as all written contracts.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the type of question that calls into question the purposes and motives of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, so I can't let that one go by. The hon. member knows or ought to know that there was a process engaged in last year called A Learning Alberta, and there was huge participation from Albertans, giving lots of verbal advice. To make what I assume was a quip intended to be humour just draws to the attention of the House, though, exactly the problem with the way some of the questions are phrased.

Now, this particular question isn't a problem. This question asks for certain cost information which the House would be entitled to have and the public would be entitled to have and would clearly point out not just the cost but, perhaps more importantly, the value of the process of A Learning Alberta and the number of people that engaged in it. For the hon. member to get up and say, "Would this include verbal advice?" shows his ignorance of the process that went on, which involved in excess of 350 Albertans participating in round-tables around the province and giving verbal advice, all of them consultants, all of them active participants in the process, all of them stakeholders, and all of them interested in Alberta being a learning society and in Albertans having the opportunity to advance their level of knowledge, skills, and ability so that they can fully participate in the Alberta economy and fully contribute back to building a stronger Alberta and stronger communities.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close debate.

Dr. B. Miller: I'd like to call the question.

Student Loan Program

Q25. Dr. B. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2000-2001 through 2004-2005 inclusive what was the total dollar value of all Alberta student loan program disbursements, all Alberta student loan relief benefit payments, and all Alberta student loan relief completion payments?

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question, considering the fact that tuition has gone up so much, especially for the professions of medicine, law, dentistry. It's very important for us to know what kind of loan programs have been in place and what kind of benefits have been disbursed so that we can get an idea of what the burden is on students in Alberta. I'm looking forward to this kind of response to this kind of question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Alberta Advanced Education it is my pleasure to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 25.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close debate.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. I'd like to put the question.

[Written Question 25 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on behalf.

Problem Gambling and Workplace Performance

Q26. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.

What consultations, studies, research, or other information gathering exercises pertaining to the impact of problem gambling on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism are currently planned or under way under the auspices of the Ministry of Economic Development?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This as well is a very important question given that we all I think recognize that problem gambling is becoming a greater issue in this province. Alberta Gaming is taking steps, thankfully, to address this problem, and I think it's a relevant question to ask whether or not the Department of Economic Development is also doing studies to see what the impact of this growing problem is on business in Alberta.

I look forward to the government response. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Economic Development I wish to respond to Written Question 26. The Ministry of Economic Development will be rejecting this request as the department is not currently planning nor has under way any consultations, studies, research, or other information gathering exercises pertaining to problem gambling on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand the reasons for rejecting the question. If, in fact, there are no studies under way, then it wouldn't make sense to accept the question. I guess the only thing I would say is that perhaps Economic Development should be considering whether or not, in fact, they might wish to undertake such consultations and studies given the seriousness of the problem and the impact that it may well be having on business in Alberta.

Thank you.

[Written Question 26 lost]

Access to Prince Rupert Port

Q27. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.

What steps is the Ministry of Economic Development taking to work with the government of British Columbia and the federal government to allow all Alberta exports safer and faster access to Prince Rupert port in British Columbia?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Economic Development I wish to inform the hon. members that Written Question 27 will be accepted by the Department of Economic Development as they are presently working on an ongoing basis with the governments of B.C. and Canada.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to see that the government has accepted Written Question 27, and I would call the question.

[Written Question 27 carried]

Illegal Drugs, Alcoholism, and Workplace Performance

Q28. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.

What consultations, studies, research, or other information gathering exercises pertaining to the impact of illegal drugs and alcoholism on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism are currently planned or under way under the auspices of the Ministry of Economic Development?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Economic Development I wish to inform the Assembly that the Department of Economic Development will be rejecting this written question. Economic Development is not currently planning nor has under way any consultations, studies, research.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it's 5:30. The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 15, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/05/15

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Water Supply Inventory

511. Dr. Swann moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately commission and regularly update an inventory of all ground and surface, including glacial, water supplies in order to responsibly manage and sustain this resource in the public interest.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 511, ground and surface water mapping. The motion advocates a complete inventory of surface and groundwater resources in Alberta. An inventory of water resources should be the first step, in fact, in managing our water resources in the province.

Arguably, water is the most limiting natural resource in Alberta. It is intimately linked to social, economic, and environmental sustainability. Sustainable water management, Mr. Speaker, is an essential role for government. Alberta holds only 2 per cent of Canada's fresh water, so we are in a vulnerable position, particularly as we are having such exponential growth both in our industrial sector and in our population. Saskatchewan and Manitoba have a hundred times as many lakes as Alberta. I was surprised to learn that from the Water for Life literature that's available: a hundred times as many lakes as Alberta. I also learned this past while that a third of our groundwater is used for oil and gas development, and in conjunction with all industrial development 53 per cent of all of our groundwater is used for industrial purposes.

Climate change is obviously a key issue for us in the next few decades. With the prospect of a three-degree increase by 2050, with reduced precipitation at certain times of the year, with increased evapotranspiration, and with the loss of glaciers we're looking at some very serious potential problems over the next few decades in Alberta. I was very pleased to see that the government has committed $33 million in this next three years to groundwater mapping. It's a tremendous statement and commitment to this important issue. Six hundred thousand people in Alberta depend on groundwater, and their livelihoods day to day as well as their health and their safety depend on our understanding groundwater and managing it better.

Motion 511 comes out of the well-documented need to have a solid understanding of our water resource if we're really going to manage it correctly and before making decisions about how we will allocate it and license it. A reliable, accurate, comprehensive, and current inventory is long overdue in this province as we try to examine what and how to sustain our quality of life into the future. I'm unclear at this time whether $33 million is enough, not enough, or too much for this tremendous task of mapping the groundwater in the province. I'd be very interested to know how we established that as a figure for what we need for the coming few years as a priority to establish our groundwater reserves and our groundwater quality. We must address these water issues now. We know that we've already overallocated the Bow, the South Saskatchewan River basin.

We cannot go any further without knowing precisely what it is we're dealing with as an inventory.

There has been recent high-profile coverage of water issues in Alberta, including a report in the scientific journals by Dr. David Schindler and his colleague identifying that by mid-century we could have significant ecological change, increasing droughts, and very significant impacts on our productivity from an economic point of view and the capacity of our agricultural community to sustain itself.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all hon. members to reinforce the direction that the government is already taking, to applaud the government for the initiatives that it's already taken, and to ensure that we have the right investment in Water for Life, more generally, and specifically for groundwater mapping. I would just add that the current serious concerns in the Horseshoe Canyon formation of southern and eastern Alberta must be the priority for the groundwater mapping. As part of this motion I would hope that the communication is clear that a very timely assessment of groundwater is in order.

I hope all members will support this motion to move as quickly as possible and return to the issue with a report, I would argue, six-monthly to give us a sense of just how we're doing in terms of the mapping and what else we could be doing to ensure that we are managing our water sustainably.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased this evening to rise in this Assembly to join the debate on Motion 511, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The natural resources of this province have always been of vital interest to Albertans. Hydrocarbons, forests, soil, and animals are all important commercial items, but they're also very necessary for our survival. Mr. Speaker, over the years Alberta's growing population and ever-expanding economy have placed a great deal of stress on these resources. The task of monitoring and managing these resources has become pivotal in sustaining our way of life now and for future generations of Albertans. As such, the government is committed to ensuring that Alberta's natural resources are responsibly maintained to benefit the citizens of our province for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, water is a resource of particular concern in that it extends far beyond serving to sustain our economy through agricultural and industrial needs. More than anything water is essential in sustaining humanity. Water is life. This notion is certainly not lost on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I admire the member for directing his concern over the long-term sustainability of Alberta's provincial water supplies to the Assembly.

However, to alleviate this concern, one must look no further than the province's Water for Life strategy, which lies at the core of this government's mandate to effectively manage all aspects of Alberta's water resources. This strategy demonstrates how Alberta is among the nation's leaders in water management initiatives and represents the government's commitment to effectively manage the quality and quantity of our provincial water supplies to make certain that this resource is indeed protected for future generations.

As all members of this Assembly are aware, the intent of a motion is to raise an issue and urge the government to adopt a particular strategy in an attempt to solve it. Having said that, the very fact that this particular motion has been brought before this House implies that the government currently does not have a strategy to sustain our water resources in the future. As I alluded to earlier, this is defininitely not the case. In addition, I feel that through the wording of Motion 511 the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is suggesting that the government has been irresponsible in the way it has managed and continues to manage our provincial water resources.

In response to that suggestion, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that the hon. member has been misguided as the government's Water for Life strategy represents a framework with which all water quality and quantity issues, including inventory, are already being addressed. The government without a doubt recognizes the challenges at hand and fully understands what is at stake in terms of the long-term sustainability of our water resources. I for one am very pleased to debate this motion because it will provide my colleagues with the opportunity to highlight all that the government has done and will continue to do to ensure that our citizens enjoy healthy, reliable, and abundant water supplies well into the future. This evening we will hear categorical evidence to reinforce that the government does in fact manage Alberta's water supplies in a very responsible manner.

Mr. Speaker, motions are important in this House because they help to bring attention to issues affecting Albertans and recommend that the government take action, although in terms of our water this is already being done. As we will see, the claims of Motion 511 are unsubstantiated and lack substance to support the suggestion that the government's current water management strategy is ineffective.

I fully support any initiative that aims to effectively manage and protect our natural resources for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. That is why I would like to wholeheartedly endorse the government's Water for Life strategy as the means to secure Alberta's water resources rather than what is intended by Motion 511.

I strongly urge all of my colleagues to join me in withholding their support for Motion 511 as I feel that such an initiative is very unnecessary in light of the water strategy the government currently has in place and all that the government has done to remain accountable to Albertans in this regard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening with great pleasure to speak in favour of Motion 511. I think that the timeliness of such a motion spreads across party lines and ideologies and different intentions and puts us all together in the same boat, so to speak, in regard to the impending water crisis that Alberta could be facing in the very near future.

Now, none of us can pretend to be able to see the future accurately, but we have to act on contingencies that are placed before us. We are facing clear signs that we are in the midst of a water shortage or a downturn in precipitation not just in Alberta but in the prairie provinces. Combined with climate change, a warming trend throughout this hemisphere and, indeed, around the world, again, makes a water shortage even worse. Now, when climate does change, it destabilizes, so we can't be certain as to what will happen, but certainly it is our responsibility to build systems into conservation of water in this province of Alberta and, first of all, to know better how much water we do in fact have flowing through the province and what it's being used for.

As my hon. colleague mentioned previously, we are in a country with a tremendous amount of the world's fresh water resources, but conversely here in this province we're amongst the very driest parts of the country. We only have maybe 1 or 2 per cent of the potable water that's available across the country. So water is a very geographically based commodity, and certainly the closer that it is to its consumption, the more efficient the system is.

So this is why it's imperative, Mr. Speaker, that we do in fact invest and reinvest in the inventory of both ground and surface water supplies across this province. I know that this provincial government has undertaken to do something like this, but I guess what this motion might do is reinforce that initiative and perhaps increase in scope the Water for Life strategy. Indeed, the wording of this motion is to "regularly update an inventory of all ground and surface, including glacial, water supplies" and to invest properly in the ongoing maintenance of that inventory. I think this is absolutely essential because although, as I say, I do speak in favour of the Water for Life strategy in its conception, in reality I am starting to see some key problems, not the least of which is the fact that we don't have information from this initiative yet. So I would like for us to remind ourselves: what exactly is the Water for Life strategy doing, and are we going to see all of the information as it becomes available to this government?

There are a number of challenges that we have to face in regard to water here in this province over the next 30 years and questions, I guess, that I would like to bring up that we need to work through here in this Legislature as well as through the public on a more local level. I think water is a great unifying force for political change and action as it is for the public's participation. Of course, as we see with the CBM issue through central Alberta and irrigation in southern Alberta, water brings people together to the political process like no other topic that I know of. This is a motivating force. I consider that to be a positive force, in fact, and we can harness that to increase the level of participation and interaction that we have with the public and with government in general.

One of the issues that I would like to bring forward is talking about charges that we put on to water systems, and I think it's imperative that we look carefully at the regulatory role of this House. First of all, we are looking to make an inventory of where the water is, but then we need to make a weight of how we use water in our society and what value we place on it. I think that some economic incentives are absolutely important for us to help conserve water. Of course, as we know, we can have charges or we can have incentives for conservation, both of those things working in concert. So I think it is important for us to revisit the charging for water idea.

Of course, the first imperative is to value how we charge for domestic consumption, how we charge for agricultural consumption, and then how we charge for industrial consumption. Okay? The very first principle that is basic to all human beings, as we hear people so emphatically suggesting here, is that every single human being has the right to access to water for their own personal domestic use at a very reasonable price. We have to ensure that it is affordable for all people and that clean, sanitary fresh water is available to every Albertan at a very reasonable price.

The second priority is for agriculture because agriculture sustains us both economically and in terms of our nutritional requirements. Again, another pricing system has to be placed on the agricultural sector. We cannot have the agricultural sector competing directly with an industrial sector like the oil and gas sector because, of course, the oil and gas sector can afford to pay for water at a much higher rate just because of the nature of the industry that they're engaged in. But we have to recognize what's an essential part of water use, and that is agriculture. So, again, we need a specialized tier for that.

Then, finally, charging for industrial use. It's absolutely essential that we set a price structure for the industrial use of water in this province now. Lots and lots of the oil and gas systems that we have in place use a tremendous amount of water, but also these energy systems do defer towards conservation and efficiency. When you go to a heavy oil facility or to the oil sands projects, certainly the engineers would love to use less water if that task has been placed upon them. Again, it's a regulatory body. It's imperative that we place those regulations into the industrial sector now so that everyone can play on a level playing field, know what to expect, and to realize the efficiencies that we set forth for them. We must challenge them in regard to water conservation, and we have to factor in the cost of using fresh water with these industrial processes.

When we take a look at the oil sands and we have billions of dollars of new expansion, many new plants on the horizon, which is great – it's great for the economy and whatnot – there has to be a more complete inventory of all of the inputs that go into making that barrel of oil. Cost factor that in so that the barrels of water that go into the production of that barrel of oil are also factored in and that we are in fact making sure that we're (a) regulating it and (b) charging an appropriate price for that because otherwise you don't know what you've got until it's gone, as they say. I should expect that suddenly when water becomes in short supply, it doesn't just sort of trickle down, so to speak, to use a bad metaphor, but rather, once you get past that certain point, you end up with catastrophic shortages of water.

Certainly, in my own experiences living in southeast Africa, it's not a question of suddenly everybody's a little bit short, but rather everybody has no water at all, and we don't want to be in that situation. We don't want to be draining our rivers like the Athabasca to that degree. We want to be regulating it and moderating it with long-term conservation in mind.

When we're talking about Motion 511, we have to be concerned about pollution back into the groundwater systems. As I said, up in the north with the tailing ponds, this has to be factored into an overall inventory of our water supplies because this is a net output of water that is not being recycled back into the system, and in fact it's not even being processed at all. I don't think that there has been any appreciable process by which these tailing ponds have been reclaimed, and it's becoming a disaster on a very large scale. The oil companies know that they have to do something, but they need a nudge from us, from this body, to ensure that that water is recycled, that it's not contaminating the groundwater, and that, in fact, we are being responsible stewards of the whole system.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to participate in debate on Motion 511. I'm definitely standing in support of this motion, ground and surface water mapping, as sponsored by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View. Obviously, it is abundantly clear that the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View, both inside this House and outside, and to that effect our entire Liberal caucus care about the environment: our soil, vegetation and plantation, air, and, indeed, water. The hon. Minister of Environment also appears to have his heart in the right place, and by that I mean the correct place. I'm not talking about his affiliation with the political right.

I'm not going to repeat most of the arguments that were made by the members before me, although I must note my disagreement with the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who said that it was redundant. I would argue that if it is in fact redundant, it basically emphasizes something that we already know and it urges us to take some action. I argue that there is nothing to be lost if this House passes this motion or accepts this motion.

Now, it was mentioned that the province has just committed to promptly act on 32 of the 44 recommendations contained in the final report of the advisory committee on coal-bed methane developments. Of course, one would have hoped that they acted on all 44 of them, but at least it's a start. One-third of that entire report talks about water, and this is definitely important to note, and it's also worthy of appreciation because water is, in fact, the utmost resource, as I said before in this House. It is the ultimate commodity.

You remember when First Nations tribes a while back fought over horses or buffalo. They fought over grazing land, and in fact they did fight over control of their water resources. You probably agree, too, Mr. Speaker, that devastating wars are likely to be waged over what little water is left. The resource is dwindling, be it because of global warming and the effect it has on our habitat or be it waste by consumers or the increased demand or, equally, industrial or commercial use. Nations and, indeed, pacts of nations will go after other nations or alliances to raid or control their water streams. Water is that significant, even more so than oil or any other resource. The argument that was made that we have to charge more for a barrel of water than we do for a barrel of oil is a valid one.

Again, it is positive that this province has yielded to pressure from the many concerned citizens and from us in the opposition and that it is taking action. The question here is: how long before all the recommendations are implemented fully? Further to that, what will the continuous and ongoing monitoring process look like? We can pass recommendations all we want, but if you don't monitor their implementation and enforcement, nothing is gained and the exercise becomes useless.

Now, although I have a science background, I am not a scientist in the area of water or the environment, but I can tell you that I am worried about Alberta's future just like the majority of Albertans. We have to look at the big picture. We have to look at our lakes, rivers, groundwater, wetlands, et cetera. The discussion is not limited here to drinking water, for example, although it is a big, significant component of that picture. The government's own Water for Life document says that water supports people, prosperity, and preservation. This is a strong recognition of the importance of water. It then talks about how this resource is "renewable, but finite," and by finite I mean that the amount of water that we lose is lost forever, permanently. The water that is not recycled or that doesn't come back to the system is gone forever, and that's where we have to be very careful, Mr. Speaker.

This motion before us advocates for a complete and thorough inventory of both ground and surface water in Alberta. That is like taking a snapshot, or a picture, of where we are today so that we can plan for the immediate, intermediate, and distant future. This inventory or reading would then form the basis for a comprehensive water management plan for this province. This is exactly like what we have done as Alberta Liberals with our provincial land-use strategy. To sustain a resource, you have to quantify how much of it you have, how you're using it and for which purposes, and how you plan to manage it. This is definitely what we're trying to accomplish here today with this Motion 511.

Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that time and time again I find it a little frustrating that members of the government caucus sometimes agree with us in principle but choose not to vote for the ideas that we present, and they quote reasons and excuses, however weak, to reject opposition ideas or amendments. But today I'm a little optimistic that they will rise above their petty partisanship and will join me in supporting this important idea. What we're proposing here makes sense, and it is the right thing to do, and if the government has already adopted some of it, then why not go the extra mile to adopt something that is positive and that makes sense? Let's get to the point and start doing this for our benefit and that of our children and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, if I expand a bit beyond this inventory idea – and, really, if it were up to me, I would look at the whole gamut of things like studying drinking water quality, for example. Many communities have commented or complained about the level of pesticides, herbicides, pharmaceuticals, industrial and commercial pollutants, and possibly also microbial and viral pathogens. E coli comes to mind, for example.

We also have to think outside the box, although this government finds it hard to do sometimes. Here's an example. We use chlorine to disinfect drinking water across the board. Right? Lloydminster, on the one hand, wants to use an ultraviolet light system to purify its water. Two problems. One, the UV system is expensive, more than $100,000, and, two, reducing the amount of chlorine may mean that Lloydminster doesn't comply with the provincial standards. So they're in a catch-22 situation. They have a technology that's at their disposal that they can use to purify and clean their water without resorting to chlorine, which has its own problems, but then now they risk not being able to meet provincial standards.

Now, is this an idea that Alberta and Saskatchewan can co-operate on and run as a pilot study? I think so. In the summer of 2005, if I remember correctly, Lloydminster had an E coli scare, and many residents today are still wary of their water supply. They drink it, but that's the only source of water in Lloydminster, and ultraviolet could have actually helped with that.

Again, to think outside the box, take Edson for example, Mr. Speaker. It is growing fairly quickly, mainly as tourism grows. It's also outgrowing its water supply. They draw their water from a system of old wells, but the demand is fast surpassing what's available. New hotels and resorts are being built, more people are moving into the area to work at those hotels and resorts, and you have to also factor in the number of guests and visitors, which is climbing.

The town of Edson approached this Progressive Conservative government to drill a new well, but they were told instead to reopen old wells. Now, I think that's probably some bureaucrat in some office decreeing that they can't and telling them to go open old wells. I don't think that decision was based on any science or any research. Those old wells are not going to provide the amount of water that Edson needs. Nobody cares. They were told to open the old ones, and that was it. Further to that, there is also the fact that some of Edson's water shortage problems are caused by truckers taking water out of town to the oil rigs, water that should have stayed in their local system. Now it's being taken out.

We can probably extrapolate from these two examples, Mr. Speaker, to any number of locations and situations across Alberta, but today is not the day. We are here to discuss a motion that basically asks for an honest, comprehensive, and periodically updated water image, water inventory picture. We need to know where we have the water, how much of it, its state or quality. We need to also plan effectively.

Taking the picture today and then doing the periodic evaluations as we go would allow us to also determine the trends or the patterns that would help us forecast and plan. If we notice that our water is okay in a certain area but is suffering in another area, then we can study the reasons why this discrepancy exists. It really offers us that forecasting security that we can know what we're doing and what effect our actions have on our environment.

I'm going to repeat the title of that motion, Mr. Speaker: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly . . . [Mr. Elsalhy's speaking time expired]

Thank you. I appreciate the time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to join the debate on Motion 511. Water is an important resource in this province and one that this government works hard to protect and conserve. I find the wording of this particular motion to be somewhat offensive. To say that we need an inventory of all ground and surface water "in order to responsibly manage and sustain" Alberta water resources neglects to take into account the fact that this government already manages this resource responsibly. It also neglects to note that the government is currently working towards an inventory of Alberta's water sources and supplies, that the government is already collecting data.

Mr. Speaker, to imply that the government is not responsibly managing water for Albertans is completely false. I have four words for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View: Water for Life strategy. As the hon. Minister of Environment informed the member opposite during May 3rd's question period, Alberta's Water for Life strategy is the most progressive water strategy in North America. The strategy is in place to examine the issues surrounding water quality and water quantity while being conscious of the long-term challenges the province faces. It is, as the name states, a strategy to ensure that this province's water remains sustainable.

In developing the strategy itself, Albertans and stakeholders were consulted, resulting in three main goals for the strategy. These include a safe, secure drinking water supply, healthy aquatic ecosystems, and reliable, quality water supplies for a sustainable economy. To ensure that the Water for Life strategy is successful, not only were Albertans given a voice in the creation of the strategy itself, but it's also being implemented by partners in communities, municipalities, industry, and agriculture as well as government.

There are three main types of partnerships involved in implementing Water for Life. The provincial water advisory council, the watershed planning and advisory council, and the watershed stewardship groups all work to manage Alberta's water. The provincial water advisory council is the main group responsible for implementing Water for Life. Ultimately, the council helps to ensure that the outcomes are achieved across the province and provides the government with policy advice. The purpose of the various watershed planning and advisory councils is to provide a system for public and stakeholder involvement in the overall management of Alberta's water within our individual watersheds. They work to help plan, create best practices, and report on the watershed which they manage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the watershed stewardship groups allow Albertans the opportunity to act as stewards of their own local water sources. These volunteers most effectively take the initiative to protect their own water sources. This would lead one to believe that these everyday, hard-working Albertans are working in the best interests of all Albertans to responsibly manage these local water sources in the public interest despite what the mover of the motion may believe. Thus, the Water for Life strategy works to address the concerns of Albertans in terms of the use of Alberta's water and, of course, to manage Alberta's water supplies in the best possible manner.

Mr. Speaker, I myself sat on the South Saskatchewan basin advisory council for the Water for Life strategy. This was a great opportunity to take part in the building of the strategy. I experienced first-hand the consultation that was done with Albertans regarding management of our water resources. From this experience I honestly believe that through the Water for Life strategy this government is responsibly managing Alberta's water and ensuring that this resource is being sustained in the public interest.

To imply that the province is mishandling water supplies is totally unjust and completely misleading to all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the Water for Life strategy is already addressing the sustainability of Alberta's water resources, and as the Environment minister noted for the member opposite during question period on May 3, mapping or data collection is already taking place as part of the Water for Life strategy.

It is for these reasons that I cannot support Motion 511. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to join the debate on Motion 511. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward as it allows an excellent opportunity to highlight the many steps the government is already taking on this very matter.

No one disputes the fact that water is an extremely important resource to this province. In fact, the Alberta government has made water management a high-priority issue as evidenced by the comprehensive Water for Life strategy. Creating an inventory of the water supplies across the province is a huge task, however. This undertaking is extremely complex and will take a great deal of time and resources. Fortunately, Alberta Environment is already working diligently to ensure that this task will continue to proceed in a professional and thorough manner.

One important step in this process involves the creation of the Alberta Water Information Centre. The Alberta Water Information Centre, initiated in '03-04, is a multiyear project designed to provide Albertans with self-serve access to information about the status of Alberta's water resources, including quality, quantity, licence commitments, and actual use of surface water and groundwater.

The first phase of this project focused on building a data warehouse infrastructure and establishing a process to ensure surface water quality data from Alberta Environment's operational system. Work was also undertaken to develop a series of standard surface water quality information products, such as tables, graphs, et cetera, to meet the common request received from Albertans. The first rollout of the Alberta Water Information Centre was made available to the public in February of '05.

The next area of focus for the Alberta Water Information Centre will be to integrate information on water licences and licence use, the development of the ad hoc reporting capabilities, and taking steps to incorporate additional sources of data at the AWIC.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, one major goal of the Alberta Water Information Centre is to develop additional data and products on surface water quantity and quality. This will be one important source of information available to Albertans pertaining to the water quality in our province and its quantity. This initiative is but one aspect of the government's comprehensive Water for Life strategy, devoted to creating and maintaining an inventory of our province's water supplies.

This is a colossal undertaking, Mr. Speaker, both in terms of scope and logistics. First of all, there's a great amount of water in our province. In addition, water levels are constantly fluctuating. Thus, maintaining an accurate inventory becomes very difficult, yet it is attainable. It just needs a comprehensive strategy.

Alberta Environment has been reviewing the various provincial ground and surface water monitoring networks, programs, and the databases. The department continues to compile information and data to help us better understand and record our water supplies. Keeping track, Mr. Speaker, of the water supplies in our province and ensuring future sustainability of this important resource remains a long-term goal of this government.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 511 is redundant. It is urging the government to do something it is already doing. Moreover, Alberta is considered to be a national leader in this regard. It may be a good idea, but the government is already acting on this initiative. To be honest, the next thing you know, the opposition will be calling for the government to eliminate the debt or to establish a taxation regime where Albertans pay the lowest taxes in Canada or to create the best climate for business in our economy. Maybe a motion will come forward this fall from the opposition calling on the government to prepare for this province's centennial. Fortunately for Albertans the government doesn't need to be urged to act on this matter; we're there. To support this, as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has asked, would imply that nothing is being done by the government, and that is not fair, it's not accurate, and it's not reasonable. For this reason, I will not be supporting this redundant motion, and I encourage all my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I stand and join the debate over Motion 511, and I'm very pleased to be able to do so and to add my thoughts and the things that I have come across in speaking and listening as we travel through Alberta.

I must start out by saying that I'm very disappointed that this current government seems to think that this is unnecessary. It seems to me that it goes back to the story of when you came across a person walking down the street and you were to ask them, "Where did you get those shoes?" and immediately he takes the defensive: "I didn't steal these. I bought these, and they're my own." It seems that they're very touchy on this subject, and therefore I deduce that they realize themselves that they can and should do more. In this perhaps we could just change the wording a little bit, if they find it offensive – and I don't think that it is; perhaps it's a little bit gruff – to say that we continue to speed up and do all we can to gather the inventory because we all know that that inventory is being taken, that we need to speed up, especially in areas where new development is being used, such as in the coal-bed methane, and to perhaps look at water supplies in order to more responsibly manage. We can always do better.

As an irrigator in southern Alberta we're always looking at innovation and how to move on. I very much get the feeling from the government members that they're on autopilot: "Everything has been achieved. We've got a plan. We have nothing left to do, and we don't need to talk about it." I find that disappointing because there are many innovative and great ideas out there that we can and should be discussing as we want to use our most valuable resource wisely and for the benefit of all current Albertans but, most importantly, future Albertans.

It's interesting to me to realize the numbers and the different numbers that we get from one side to the other side. What I would urge the government to do is to perhaps publish a simple report that has ordinary accounting, that says how much is being used in the north for the bitumen extraction, how much is being used in well water and being put down. We have many numbers out there. Perhaps they could get those numbers and publish them in a way that works.

I think that we need to split the use of the water. There have been many good ideas talked about, you know, on the different uses of water, whether it's for human consumption, whether it's for industrial, whether it's for agriculture, but perhaps we need to split the consumption or the use of water into one that is returned to the system versus that which is taken and eliminated from the system, leaving us with no water now, and also an inventory of that water that is being contaminated and can't go back into the system. I think that would be of great benefit to Albertans.

We've talked about the inventory. Perhaps Albertans need to be updated and to realize: are there still some environmental assessments going on? Are we looking at off-river storage? Are we looking at more dams? We don't have the retention in the mountains anymore, and the glaciers are shrinking, and thereby when it rains and the water is running down at its full stream in June – and we experienced terrible flooding last year – we're losing an enormous amount. We need to look at storage. We need to look at ways to capture it because we've injured nature in many of those areas, and it no longer has the capacity to hold that water. So we need to be innovative and see where we can look at retaining that water, using it and letting it flow downstream throughout the year on a steady, slow basis.

As a long-time scouter I was always very concerned with the importance of wise use of our resource, and that's what we want to do. There has been mention, you know: is it worth six barrels of water to extract a single barrel of oil? Is that true? What's the data on that? Let's see the different plants and how they're doing that. I think every Albertan would say: "No, it isn't. We can live without our oil, but we can't live without our water. It would drastically change our lifestyle." But we'll lose our lifestyle if we don't have water, Mr. Speaker.

It's critical that we don't be partisan about our water and what we're looking at. We should have good ideas coming forward and everybody spending the time on it. What are the things that they've heard or learned or seen? We've had, I guess, somewhat of a lecture about this Water for Life strategy and talking about municipalities and being able to protect their water. There are many things, including agriculture, that aren't always friendly to that water: the problems with runoff that happens when we get these outbursts of weather, and the change of weather pattern. There's always, it seems, something new. I can't remember where I was at, but they were showing the 25-year flood line. What's important in the AOPA Act is, you know, to stay outside the 25-year flood line. Now we're having that twice in 10 years. Is that still relevant? We need to re-evaluate.

In 1912 the river bottom at Edmonton was flooded, and there was $700,000 damage. That's when they decided to turn that into a park area. It's been the biggest and best in Canada. I love the river bottom here in Edmonton. The government has taken that action to protect it. Are we looking at those things and realizing that the climate isn't the same as 100 years ago or 25 years ago? We need to learn that if it happens now, let's act now and not say: "Oh, that was one in a hundred. Gosh, that's one in a hundred, twice in 10 years." Those aren't good enough answers. We don't want to be on autopilot. We don't want to cover our eyes. We don't want to plug our ears. We should have an open, honest discussion. Let's do all we can for current and future Albertans.

I'm very much appreciative of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View in bringing this motion forward. There's nothing more important to Albertans than our water. Our Environment minister has referred to it as blue gold many times. It's exciting. The opportunity is there for us. Are we going to maximize it, or are we going to sit back and say: oh, we're doing the best that's being done anywhere? No, we have greater potential. Let's be innovative, and let's do it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, did you want to speak?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and debate the motion before us tonight, Motion 511. I want to respond to some of the comments made by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright because I was struck by the bald-faced arrogance of his statements and struck again, not having worked all that many Monday nights this session, by how the members of the government seem to take the opportunity to debate an opposition motion as an opportunity to essentially abuse the opposition at will. I think it's shameful. I really do.

You know, the Water for Life strategy, Mr. Speaker, is a great policy, and I'm impressed with the work done by the previous Environment minister and those involved in crafting the Water for Life strategy. In my opinion it's one of the best policies this government has ever come up with. But, you know, right now it's barely worth the paper it's printed on because the Water for Life strategy is almost totally dependent on volunteers, on watershed groups, acting in isolation, making decisions in isolation. There is no communication to speak of, no co-ordination to speak of. There is inadequate funding: $33 million over three years. To do what? I don't know.

For the last five years, while the oil and gas industry has been busily punching holes in the ground searching for coal-bed methane, there has been no baseline water testing. None in the last five years. Now the government is starting to talk. After unrelenting pressure this session from my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View and other members of the opposition now the government is starting to talk about doing baseline testing, five years late.

You know, we've got here a great policy that's underfunded, underenforced. Because it exists on a piece of paper somewhere, this government seems to think that it can arrogantly sally forth and talk about how wonderful it is and how behind the times the opposition supposedly is. The opposition is not behind the times, Mr. Speaker. The opposition is saying to the government: it's time to put your money and your management skills, if you have any, where your mouth is and where your policy is and start doing the work, the heavy lifting, that a government is supposed to do when a government brings in policy. But no: this government would rather sit back on its laurels, pat itself on the back, feel smug and arrogant and complacent and isolated from the people it's supposed to be serving. This government has been in power so long that it has utterly forgotten that it works for the people, not the other way around. It's about time they climbed down off their high horses, if they can find the route down anymore, and got to work and did the job Albertans elected them to do. I'll tell you, Albertans are getting increasingly fed up with this government not doing its job and are looking for an excuse to vote them out of office.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the discussion and the comments from all members. Again, I would like to reinforce that this is a motion that supports in good measure what the government is already doing in terms of investing $33 million over three years into the Water for Life strategy. This is long overdue, and I commend it for making this kind of commitment. I would like to see the same commitment to the Alberta Environment department overall so that it could do its job in this province. But this is a good first step, and I want to support it with this motion.

This motion does nothing if it doesn't concur with the priority that groundwater has. Along with other comments that have been made, it's not clear to Albertans that groundwater has been a priority for this government. It is not clear that this government has taken seriously the risks to groundwater for 600,000 rural Albertans. It is not clear that they have done due diligence and looked at the science that's needed to manage our groundwater, both the quality and the quantity, in a more sustainable fashion.

We have a long way to go to build public trust in the government's capacity and willingness to take care of our water resource, both groundwater and surface water. I would strongly encourage the members to move quickly on the groundwater inventory, to again look at the way the Water for Life strategy is working, based fundamentally on volunteers. We cannot expect volunteers to manage our surface water with any reasonable, sustainable, and good-quality assurance without adequate funding, technical support, and opportunities to plan for the whole watershed, not one piece of the river at a time.

The other issue that has been alluded to by the hon. members for both Medicine Hat and Battle River-Wainwright is the need to shift from supply management to demand management, especially in Medicine Hat. The greatest threat exists for drought and impacts there. We have to find ways to reduce demand. There is no way that we can increase supply. We need to look at demand-side management: conservation, water collection, storage. We have a tremendous lot to do there. I have no idea whether $33 million will be anywhere near what is needed to seriously take on the commitments that are needed both in terms of the surface and the groundwater.

It's clear to me that there are hundreds of people in the Horseshoe Canyon formation of southeastern Alberta that are extremely anxious about their groundwater, whether they'll be able to use it and for how long and to what extent it's been damaged by coal-bed methane. It's extremely urgent that that be the priority for the groundwater mapping, to allay increasing anxiety that this more shallow coal-bed fracturing is or is not damaging their aquifers.

I would encourage all members to support the motion. It reinforces some of the good work that is being done, but it highlights the need for a high priority on planning and measurement, science-based management principles as opposed to ad hoc decision-making. It fosters, I think, a very strong ethic of water conservation and demand-side management that needs to be much more explicit than under the present jurisdictions of government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before we get on with the moving at second of the appropriation bill, I wonder if I could seek unanimous consent of the House to reduce any division bells that might occur throughout this evening going forward from 10 minutes down to five minutes. I understand that some people were in touch with my office, and that would be an appropriate request to make. I would ask for that unanimous consent first, and then I'll proceed with the rest.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 42
Appropriation Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move the Appropriation Act, 2006, Bill 42 as it is otherwise known, on behalf of our hon. Minister of Finance.

I'll just briefly comment that this bill recaps what we have been debating in this House for several weeks now, which in other words is termed the estimates of each ministry. We have gone department by department now for a long time, and at this stage we're simply seeking the consolidation, if you will, of all of that information into the Appropriation Act.

I would hope that with that brief intro and comment we could move through the Appropriation Act debate in the spirit with which it's intended. I'll move second reading now.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Bill 42, the Appropriation Act, 2006, if I could, I'd like to go through some issues with different aspects of different budgets and comment on it accordingly. One of the interesting comments of the Minister of Education when he gave his budget has made my phones ring recently. I've been busy. He called it – and a lot of the superintendents and teachers that have called the last 10 days are referring to the words – “preliminary budget.” That's really had some interesting connotation. Then, as one person who phoned today from Fort Saskatchewan said: “Your remarks, Mr. Flaherty, are inadequate. It's not a hold-the-line budget. It should be called a not-enough budget.” Because it's my area of interest, I'll just start off with the Education budget and try and get some clarification and put some notes on the record as to my feelings about some of the things.

First of all, let me just touch on the area of special education. You know, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to recognize the wonderful volunteer and support groups that we have in this area, in this province of Alberta. There's one operating in Edmonton which is a very profound group. In fact, I believe, if I'm not mistaken, it's called the parent advisory council out of the academy at King Edward. Now, this is a very good group of about I'd say 60 to 70 parents. They've been wonderful to us in the St. Albert constituency because we use a lot of them for workshops and to refer parents who are having difficulty with their kids. They've helped us immeasurably with some of the very difficult problems that parents face with children that have disabilities.

Now, let me just talk about a letter that the chairman of this group wrote to the Minister of Education. She said:

... I highlighted that the current funding formula does not address or does not provide additional funding for children with mild to moderate learning challenges. It has been pointed out to me that my statement on this matter might have been interpreted incorrectly. I certainly apologize for any misinterpretation. I wish to take this opportunity to clarify our concern. Specifically, we are concerned that your Department . . .

That's the Minister of Education's department.

. . . does not provide additional funding beyond that which is provided within the base funding to address the increased cost of educating children with mild to moderate special needs.

Mrs. Burke goes on to say in this fine letter to the minister:

Our parent community is respectfully requesting that your department provide us with an explanation or rationale as to why districts are not provided with additional funding (beyond that which is provided through the base funding) for children with mild to moderate learning challenges. As you might appreciate, we find the lack of financial compensation to districts to be profoundly troubling and inconsistent with the fine Standards for Special Education . . .

which you came out with in June 2004. She's saying that was a wonderful document created by your department to engender excellence in the provision of education for children with special needs. We need to understand with clarity the reason for this policy on the part of your department; our view is that it is a major and serious oversight in the manner in which funding is provided to districts.

So I think we're saying that in the particular budget of the Minister of Education, that seems to be very much lacking in the area of special education with the matter that I just referred to.

Now, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that just today, because of this idea of what he referred to as a preliminary budget rather than the one that we thought was the real budget, I received a very interesting call from the parents of the Catholic school district which is in Elk Island. It's called St. Luke elementary school. They're spending 2.5 hours a day on the bus for a trip that takes about 12 minutes if parents drive their children directly to school.

The concern of the parents' group in that school district is that there are no bathrooms on the bus, and children are not allowed to eat on the bus. This distance is about the same as kids going to Red Deer for school. There's a significant loss of children's time. So little value is placed on the children's time that it doesn't make sense economically to have more buses. Could you imagine an employer that asks workers to travel 2.5 hours a day on the bus without pay every workday?

Now, it's interesting to me that when we met with the Calgary public school board in Calgary, their board was telling us about the issues that they had in transportation. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that in this budget there doesn't seem to be anything that talks about evaluating the bus systems across Alberta and making reforms. I think that we need to look at the whole busing situation in this province and work some guidelines and make sure that children are not having these long periods of time and stressful times on bus transportation. I think that it's a serious problem. I can recall, when I was in the Lethbridge regional office, a Dr. Ed Bardock doing a provincial study evaluating what was happening in the province and making some major changes. Maybe we should be addressing that matter in this particular budget.

Now, let me also just talk quickly if I can about the whole question of infrastructure. We seem to have a lack of a plan that schools can review to see if their school's infrastructure needs are being addressed. I'm encouraged. I believe that the new associate minister of infrastructure, hopefully, is coming out with something on this, I suspect around the end of June, so maybe there's hope for us to make sure that schools get some feedback as to where they're going with the whole business of capital projects and infrastructure needs.

Again, just before we leave education, the question of the unfunded liability issue seems to be there. I'll be spending the weekend in Calgary at the ATA convention, and hopefully I'm going to get some information as to where they're going on that.

The class size initiative across the province seems to be causing some problems. The phone calls to me indicate that, for example, in Edmonton public they're suggesting to me that they are going to be $4 million short in their budget to meet the class size initiative that they thought they were going to have right across the board, from K to 12. They're expecting that there will be cuts and that this will have implications for teachers in their system. There is a great deal of concern there. Stay tuned. I think we're going to hear more about that in the coming weeks.

Seniors. Let me just touch on the whole business of seniors. I commend the government on getting to the question of standards. I think that's a step in the right direction, and I compliment them. Where I have some concern is: why is it going to take so long to implement these across the province? That concerns me greatly. I have a 97-year-old father-in-law in Aspen House in Morinville, and I'm thankful, and I want to say that I'm very pleased at the care he's getting. It's wonderful. He's a wonderful fellow. He's even thinking of looking for a new bride on the weekend or very soon. That's encouraging. He said he'll have to buy a new car if that takes place. So he's being well looked after. But I see that as a pinnacle to aim for, and I'm hoping that these standards can do some wonderful things for seniors in this province, who I believe we owe a great deal to because of the amount of effort they've made in developing our heritage and the contribution they've made. The other thing that bothers me. I wish that we had some independent policing of that whole thing of the standards to report to this House as to what is happening.

Child care. Let me just touch on child care. It's interesting. I do a lot of following of B.C. politics. I think they're making a mistake by following this government in some of their new directions, but Campbell sometimes is not the wisest man in the world. I'm happy to see that the child's advocate in B.C. now will report to an all-party council of the Legislature, and that is to me a very enlightened move. I think that it has some wonderful implications for keeping their child welfare in B.C. up to snuff, and we should take a look at that in Alberta to see if it has any possibilities for us in the way we operate our child welfare services across Alberta.

The question again of AISH. That is to me a matter of concern because in the review I listened carefully – I just want to tell you a story, Mr. Speaker. When I happened to be with the minister of social services and health, Mr. Ray Speaker, I can recall a person with MS who had three kids that we helped. I was aware of this person from being involved in a church group. In fact, he married this beautiful lady that I had a crush on. This is a true story. Unfortunately, she got very ill and committed suicide. He had MS, and because of the AISH program and with his pension from Crane he was able to continue on with a housekeeper until he died at 57. One of his sons – I won't name him – is an outstanding lawyer in the Edmonton region and has a wonderful family.

I think what I'm saying to you is that the AISH program – and I commend the government – is wonderful, but I think that you have to build a good cost-of-living index into it and make sure that it's reviewed on an annual basis.

I think I'm allowed, Mr. Speaker – and I'll ask your guidance on this – to comment on Bill 40. Is that on the table today? Am I allowed to just say a few words about it?

The Acting Speaker: I think that we will be dealing with Bill 40 a little later on today.

Mr. Flaherty: Okay. So I'm not allowed to say anything. I had some wonderful remarks from a beautiful student that I met in St.

Albert the other night. She was a good friend of the president of the university.

Mr. Speaker, I'm searching to see if I've covered all the issues that I wanted to talk about. I think I have. Thank you for your patience, and thank you for allowing me to speak to Bill 42.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to participate in this debate on the appropriation bill. I promise to be brief. I'm building on some of the comments that were introduced on the record by my hon. colleague from St. Albert. Most of them also centre around education and learning. It is sort of an opportune moment for me to put them on the record, and I would appreciate any feedback or response from cabinet and from the hon. minister.

Last fall I started a petition on school fees, Mr. Speaker. What triggered my taking this action was that a constituent of mine from Edmonton-McClung actually called the office and later visited the office crying. She was complaining that she can no longer find affordable the fees that are charged by the school to which her children go. She was finding that expense to be unbearable. She was factoring in costs of, you know, instructional supplies, the fees that are charged for field trips, for example, locker rentals, and so on, and then you add bus fare. With three children she was definitely finding it very difficult.

So what we did was work with her, approach Parliamentary Counsel and approved the language of that particular petition. We tried to make sure that it was actually balanced in that it called on the government to fully and adequately fund the school boards so that they, in turn, can fully and adequately fund their individual schools so that they in turn do not have to resort to charging parents school fees. Now, it is noteworthy to mention that some of the discussions I had with parents indicated that they don't want to pay any fees. They actually want to still participate in the education process. They really quite enjoy being a part of that experience with their children, but they complained about the level of the fees charged, not the actual concept of charging fees for certain things.

So we had the petition. The petition went out to all the parent councils in the province. We received quite a few responses from all over the province, but we made the observation that most of those responses came from rural Alberta, not from the urban centres. That was an eye-opener for us because we thought that people in the cities tend to pay more, but that was not evident in the responses we received.

Further to our petition on school fees, the Edmonton public school board has just recently released their own survey on fundraising. I found it very interesting to read, Mr. Speaker, because they commented on, you know, the expectation now that parents have to fund raise. It is not the case where they actually fund raise for the options or the extras. They actually do in fact fund raise now for essentials or basics. The expectation that they have to participate in fundraising activities is growing, and the level of dissatisfaction with that is also growing. Parents are saying, you know: we're fund raised to death, basically; we have contributed time and time again. And that expectation is rising because they're paying for more and more every day.

Now, I hope that other surveys have been conducted or are going to be conducted in other parts of this province. This is one that I found myself, which was from the Edmonton public school board. I would be interested to see if maybe there's going to be a central survey commissioned by the hon. minister or, in fact, if he can instruct people at the Public Affairs Bureau to maybe commission a survey of that nature. Again, my argument is that the Public Affairs

Bureau should be there to ask people's opinion, to survey public opinion, not to tell people, you know, how to think and what to believe. We would find a survey of this nature very useful. It would offer guidance and direction to the hon. minister and to cabinet based on what people think is necessary and what people think is appropriate in terms of fundraising.

The other issue that I wanted to put on the record today, Mr. Speaker, actually has to deal with the issue of school boundaries. I have not spoken to the minister yet, but I was planning to, and today is a good opportunity to highlight this. There are concerns with the way school boundaries are set in terms of, you know, who can join which school and who cannot. I have three cases in Edmonton-McClung of students who live just a couple of hundred feet away from the particular junior high school that they want to join, but they didn't make the cut. The school has space. It is not an issue of space. They do have space in the regular program and also in the academic achievement program, but they didn't make the lottery because there's a random draw. They feel that it doesn't make sense for them to be asked to take a bus to another school where their friends are not going and that would waste at least 45 minutes in the morning and 45 minutes in the afternoon for them to come back when they could actually walk to the school that they picked and the school where all their friends are going. So the issue of school boundaries I think has to be visited.

Also, I was actually extremely disappointed to find out that there are no waiting lists anymore. We have situations where people actually misrepresent the truth. They give a false address to be able to make the lottery when, in fact, they don't live at that address. They use somebody else's address, a neighbour or a friend, and they don't live at that house and exclude people who are legitimately within the boundaries. Now, with a school that has space, there is no waiting list. I think that maybe in next year's budget it would be wise for the hon. minister to investigate this thing because if a school has space and people are asked to be bused to a different school to even out the attendance, to even out the enrolment, I think it's sort of a fake intervention. We're doing something to make it look better than it is when, in fact, the people who are affected by it are those students in junior high and high school.

That would be a valid expense in next year's budget, to study this school boundaries issue and also, again, to re-emphasize the issue of fundraising in schools because it is a big issue. I don't think it should go unnoticed, and some action has to be taken.

I sincerely appreciate this opportunity. I could go on and on about other things, you know, like health, for example, and seniors, which are dear and near to me, but I choose not to, to allow more members to speak tonight, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you again.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to Bill 42, the Appropriation Act, 2006. This House has spent considerable time over the last six or seven weeks, as it should, on estimates for each department individually, and there have been fairly interesting observations made by hon. members on the department budgets from Community Development to Education to Health to Seniors, Children's Services, and so forth. It is true that this bill now is a final piece of legislation which is there to seek the approval of this House for the overall spending estimates and the budget for next year. This House, of course, takes this business of spending public dollars, taxpayers' dollars, on a variety of programs that this government offers very seriously. So any time spent on debates either on the estimates of individual departments or on the appropriation bill is time exceedingly well spent.

We know that this budget has proposed some overdue increases in spending in some areas, areas which have suffered over the years because of systematic cutbacks, restructuring, or whatever have you. There's a lot of catch-up being done. Infrastructure certainly is one such area.

In fact, I'll be seeing a representative from a large high school in my constituency the day after tomorrow who is seeking to meet with me to express their concern about the 50-year-old heating infrastructure that this big school has. There have been constant complaints. Experts and specialists have been brought in to assess the problems with the heating system. Particularly since we are a cold climate, it's seven, eight months of the year. The problems arise from uneven heating in this school, in various parts of the school. There are over 3,000 students going to this school, and the heating equipment for the school is from the 1950s. Repeated assessments of the performance of the heating plant have suggested that the aging of these structures is creating health hazards and problems for students, not only discomfort but, as a matter of fact, has put their health at risk. This is a high school.

This particular instance in my constituency is merely illustrative of the very large problem of an infrastructure crisis that has developed in this province over the years. Whether it's schools, whether it's hospitals, whether it's seniors' residences, whether it's roads and bridges and whatever have you, there are huge problems arising from the aging of structures and equipment that need to be fixed.

So while on the one hand there's some attention in this budget towards addressing problems related to this very, very profound problem of the infrastructure budget, at the same time there are tax cuts being offered to, it seems to me, the very business entities that perhaps do not need tax cuts at this stage.

An interesting figure, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the corporations and their profits in this country. Corporate profits are very high. There's a period of very high corporate profits in Canada as a whole, and for this last year that just passed, there's quite a startling figure: 70 per cent of all the corporate profits are made by corporations from Alberta. So the Alberta corporate sector is the beneficiary of 70 per cent of all the profits made by corporations in Canada – quite a figure to reflect on – and the very corporations who are beneficiaries of this huge share of national profits made by corporations, 70 per cent, are the corporations which will be receiving a big handout, a big tax cut in this budget, according to our estimates close to $375 million a year in the next coming years, and I think this figure is going to increase as the size of these corporations and the size of their operations grow.

There's absolutely no justification to our seniors who wait before the quality of care that they receive can be improved. There is no justification at all for school boards to have to wait before they can get the infrastructure in their aging schools fixed or have their class sizes reduced while at the same time squandering the stable, predictable revenues, not just for one year, not once in a while but on an annual basis, on corporate tax cuts when, in fact, corporations don't need this kind of help given the economic situation in the country and particularly in this province.

When you take a longer term view, over the next 10-year period, by 2016, this province will have lost close to $5 billion in these tax cuts. It's a cumulative revenue giveaway and loss, revenues that could be invested in our schools, in our hospitals, for our seniors, for our children, for improving the infrastructure, for protecting our environment, for doing just so many things that need to be done that are waiting to be addressed while this budget gives away huge amounts of money.

AUMA, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, has drawn attention to the fact that there's a $12 million funding imbalance, a deficit if you wish, in the budget for ambulances. Twelve million dollars. Yet this year's allocation for the purpose remains at the same level that it was two or three years ago, at $55 million. Again, another area where we could have used the funds that were lost through tax cuts to corporations that didn't need the tax cut and addressed the deficits.

One other example comes to mind here. This year, Mr. Speaker, both in the throne speech and later on in the budget speech there was an emphasis on dedicating funds to cancer research and cancer prevention. At the same time as these commitments are being made by this government both to increase resources for cancer research and thereby for cancer prevention, AADAC's tobacco reduction strategy budget is reduced by $300,000. We know that there are very direct connections between the use of tobacco and cancer, yet we find that AADAC's tobacco reduction strategy budget suffers a cut. So there are facts in this budget that are difficult to reconcile. On the one hand, a commitment is being made to prevent cancer. On the other hand, in fact, monetary or budgetary commitments are being rolled back where they will have the most effect; for example, our tobacco-reduction strategy.

Mr. Speaker, today I and my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood met with an arts and culture group from Edmonton. A delegation of five or six people came to see us drawing attention to the relative neglect and serious neglect over the years on the part of this government in budgeting for promoting arts and cultural activities in this province. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts, we know what happened to its budget. You know, its budget went up by 10 per cent after years of staying at the same stagnant level while the horse-racing industry's budget went up by 40 per cent. Tens of millions of dollars are being thrown at the horse-racing industry while peanuts are being offered as increases for the arts and culture field.

The concern that the members of the delegation shared with our caucus this morning was: why is it that there is no appreciation in the government quarters with respect to the important role that art and cultural activities play in enriching our lives and our communities, both contributing enormously to the quality of the lives of our citizens in small communities, rural communities, or large urban centres and, at the same time, making a huge impact in terms of economic returns and economic activity, especially at the local level, yet they receive very poor attention in this budget from this government? So the question that they are asking is: what is it? What does the cultural and arts community need to do in order to send a clear message to this government when it's preparing its budget to pay attention to this extremely important set of activities, the economic and cultural and social sector – arts and culture, that is – where there's a huge potential for growth both in economic terms and in terms of the cultural vibrancy of our communities and the colour and the texture that they add to our daily lives? A very large number of Albertans, as a matter of fact, work in this field, yet it's an area that suffers from neglect in the budget year after year after year.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on to draw attention to many of these anomalies or contradictions of the budget. The budget decisions are made in such a way that the government seems to be speaking out of both sides of its mouth. It wants to prevent cancer, yet it withdraws money from programs that will in fact lead us to achieve that goal. So the question is: why is it that one finds these kinds of loopholes, problems with the budget?

Another area, Mr. Speaker, that I'd like to take a moment to draw attention to is the area of climate change. We know climate change and its impact. It's now visible. We simply cannot deny that the climate is changing. The connection between the change and the agents of the change is also clear. It is human activity that has the highest impact on or is the greatest contributor to that change. Yet when you look at the budget, the climate change program budget has increased by a miserly 1 per cent. You know what the inflation rate is this year? At least 2.7 per cent to 3 per cent. So the actual dollars available and budgeted for climate change programs have gone down in value. Why is this? We are worrying about impending water shortages across the province, the threat of drought that might arise, our rivers going down, the volume of water that is flowing through them, and the impact of that.

I will close, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand and speak briefly to the appropriation bill, Bill 42. Clearly, the budgetary commitments of the government reflect its priorities and its values, and I would hope that all Albertans would have access to a sense of where the province is going and where the priorities are as reflected in our budgetary commitments through various ministries. Obviously, again, the people of Alberta expect that this resource that is given to Alberta in trust will be used for the purposes of improving health, safety, quality of life, and sustainability of our environment and our economy.

I mention economy last deliberately, Mr. Speaker, because it should serve the people and the environment, not the reverse. Unfortunately, this government has lost its balance in where the priorities should be, and all serves the economy in this province. We have failed to see the importance of the economy serving people and the environment.

There are two people in the Legislature tonight, the Musekamps, who have been here every day for the last few weeks trying to understand why this province fails to place its priority on farm workers and the value that they have to our province. Not only are they the breadbasket of this province, but farmers have been the very lifeblood and historic roots and tradition of this province. These folks are committed to persisting with the various departments in this government to see that farm workers get adequate protection for health and safety and basic human rights, that farm workers fall under the same protection of Alberta labour and the Workers' Compensation Board and other acts that protect workers' health and safety. Fundamentally, they are being denied these. Children and adults are working on farms. They're dying at a much higher rate than in other provinces that have included farm workers under health and safety and workers' compensation. So many of these injuries go unprotected and unfunded, and people are forced into bankruptcy in some cases and forced to take other jobs.

Part of our appropriation bill should really address what the priorities of government are. Why aren't we spending money to assist in a more meaningful way than simply education in the rural areas? Why are we not funding appropriate bodies to assist with the inclusion of farm workers in our labour code, in our workers' compensation? These people are absolutely marginalized and not getting the benefits and rights of all other Albertans. That's one area that I think we can highlight tonight in this general look at where we're spending our money in Alberta and how it's serving the people of Alberta, especially our farmers and the workers on farms. Over 20 deaths last year, Mr. Speaker, of which three were children, and these are entirely preventable if we have the appropriate measures in place and certainly some of the financial support for people who do go through injuries.

I want to switch now to the environment, which I'm most closely associated with: $130 million a year, Mr. Speaker, .5 per cent of the budget, one-third of what we used to spend in protecting our environment. Albertans have said repeatedly to this government that environment is the third most important element in their government services, after health and education. We are still giving a measly .5 per cent to Environment, which is fundamentally responsible for advocating for and protecting the environment and ensuring that it's in a position to support people and the economy. We are neglecting it woefully. It is not stewardship to give this critical ministry .5 per cent of the budget to establish standards, to monitor standards, to analyze the data, to enforce standards, and in fact to clean up some of the contaminated sites that industry walks away from.

Another element of our budget that is sorely lacking is a cleanup fund by industry. This Environment minister has suggested that we Albertans should pay for a cleanup fund, not industry, that we should set up a cleanup fund out of royalties, so essentially asking Albertans to pay twice, once when those responsible companies clean up and get the tax break for cleaning up and then calculate their royalties, and then a second time the public loses money on those companies that default. We are left then to clean up, as he would suggest, through public funds like the royalty, which is due Albertans as a result of the exploitation of our resource.

Again, in relation to our management of contaminated sites there's a serious gap in credibility here when the Environment minister calls for us to spend public funds in cleaning up industry's problems, at the same time calling on industry as the polluter, that they should pay. There's a mismatch between what is said and what is actually happening on the ground, especially with respect to downstream oil and gas and refineries and other industrial sites.

Indeed, we have not been cleaning up sites to equivalent land use, which the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act requires. We are now legitimizing the process of risk management on these sites, which means that we cover over the contamination, put in monitoring of groundwater wells, and if there is migration of contamination off the site into these wells, we say: oh, we've got a problem, and we'll clean it up now. This legacy will be left to our children. For several hundred years, then, we'll be managing these sites and monitoring the groundwater to see if these contaminated sites ever do spill into our groundwater.

This is not stewardship. We need to invest in full monitoring and enforcement of our standards. We have a very conscientious Environment staff, that are totally underfunded and unable to do the job they've been asked to do. It's time we addressed this, Mr. Speaker. I think Albertans know only a small amount about the negligence of our environment today.

On a more fundamental level in our finances, Mr. Speaker, if we're interested in the environment, we would do two fundamental things: we would stop giving incentives for industries that pollute, and we would start giving incentives for clean, renewable sources of energy. Those two fundamentals would go a tremendous amount to serving the interests of the environment and to serving sustainable development in this province. Stop giving financial incentives to activities that damage the environment and begin investing in those activities like renewable energy and energy conservation that will help to sustain the planet and reduce our impact in terms of climate change and greenhouse gases.

Clearly, we as citizens have a role, a serious role and responsibility in changing our ways, reducing our environmental footprint. We need to invest in making the healthy environmental choice the easier choice for people. The climate action fund, which has again received almost no increase this year, was a mechanism for getting people to buy energy-efficient appliances, energy-efficient furnaces, and to retrofit their homes and should be extending into vehicles and public transit. That would be progressive budgetary investment in our future. It would show young people that we have hope, that we have a vision, that we have plans to sustain our environment along with our economy and our communities.

I've talked at length in this Legislature about the concerns about coal-bed methane and the neglect that has happened over five years. We must restore confidence in this department. We must invest, then, in an independent public committee to examine some of the problems with wells and with groundwater, particularly in areas of the Horseshoe Canyon. That's an area that the Alberta Environment department and other departments need to share in. It's going to be expensive. We've done considerable damage there, from what I can assess, and we need to have objective scientific information to decide: where is there real damage from the oil and gas industry, and where is it natural causes that have contributed to groundwater problems? I do not want to impute fault without knowing the science, and we do not know the science today in terms of our groundwater. It's urgent both from the point of view of public trust in our government and in terms of public trust for our industries that we do proper assessment, and we need to invest there.

Industrial development has been massive in this province in the last few years, a fivefold increase in oil wells in the last decade yet no increase, substantially, in Alberta Environment. Alberta Environment, again, is one-third the size it was in the early '90s, and they are expected to do a huge amount of work in terms of the monitoring of these sites, follow-up of complaints in terms of water or in terms of air quality or in terms of soil contamination. We simply don't have the resources to do this.

Why is environment not a priority in this government? Why can we not commit the appropriate investment there? It's viewed too often as an expense rather than an investment. We have a legacy to leave to our children, and we have to invest more fully in the environment. All of us will benefit.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to raise these issues, farm safety and environment, all linked to human health and environmental sustainability and our ability to sustain our economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 42.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 40 Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate May 10: Mr. Herard]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you for taking your time. I was a little tardy in getting here.

Okay. I just wanted to add a few comments, having moved second reading the last time. I just wanted to make a few comments with respect to developments since moving second reading. I've now had the opportunity to meet with CAUS and have spoken to ACTISEC and have written to both of my opposition critics. With respect to CAUS and ACTISEC I've made a commitment that if they give the regulation-making process an honest and fair shake and find that it just doesn't do the job for them, then they can come to SPC to make their suggestions for improvements. They wanted me to say that publicly, so I just did.

With respect to my esteemed critics I've now invited them in writing to participate in the regulation-making process so that they can shape the regulations through the consultation process. I don't know if that's going to make a whole lot of difference. I was hearing my hon. critic from Calgary-Currie. He was warming up a little earlier. I'm not sure that it's going to make a lot of difference, but I just wanted to put that on the record.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to continue second reading debate on Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. I want to start by very briefly referring back to Hansard, to a few exchanges that we have had over the course of this session in question period.

On February 27 I asked the then Advanced Education minister about whether there was a fair tuition policy coming for all postsecondary students in Alberta. He answered: "Mr. Speaker, legislation is not the only way to create a priority. In fact, if you don't need more laws, you ought not to make more laws." That was February 27.

On March 16 I asked the then Minister of Advanced Education: "With the minister's spring deadline for a new affordability policy fast approaching, why are stakeholders still waiting for a draft policy that contains some actual specific details?" His answer was quite simple: "Because it's not done yet, Mr. Speaker."

On April 4 the then Advanced Education minister said:

I've always found it prudent that when you ask knowledgeable people to form a committee and to examine all the possible options that might be available and to make recommendations about which ones are most appropriate for students in our province, to make sure that affordability is key, that every Albertan has the opportunity to access an education and can afford that education, one ought not to make presumptions about the conclusions until they've actually got the recommendations.

Those exchanges indicated that the process of A Learning Alberta was continuing, albeit sometimes it seemed at a glacial pace. The impression that the then minister gave this House was that the process was giving the whole question of affordability of postsecondary education a full and thorough consideration, and – to paraphrase the old wine commercial: we will sell no wine before its time – we would not rush this thing through. Now, it gets a bit difficult at this point, Mr. Speaker, because it has been 16 months. One might say, at least if one is making a Canadian wine, that that's long enough to let it age. Those are the bad wines, the bad Canadian wines. The great Canadian wines take somewhat longer.

On the other hand, though, we have gone through a process that . . . [interjection] No heckling there from the previous minister.

We have gone through a process that has taken its time and I gather from what the current minister has had to say is very, very close to delivering on a recommendation for a new tuition and affordability policy. Suddenly, with mere days left until this Legislature rises for the balance of the spring and the summer and, according to the Premier, the fall – there will be no fall session – and next winter and who knows what beyond that, we're rushing through a piece of enabling legislation supposedly to make this thing work.

If I can just quote the current Minister of Advanced Education, his indication was that this needs to be done. I quote from Hansard again, from last Wednesday. “We need to make these amendments immediately so that government can make true on its promise of a new tuition fee policy in place and working for students by the fall of 2007.” Well, that’s not entirely accurate, Mr. Speaker. There are better ways to go about it.

With that in mind, I would like to move an amendment to Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. I have the requisite number of copies here. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that tuition fee policies for public postsecondary institutions must remain in the statute itself, rather than cabinet regulations, to ensure that any future changes are subject to full public debate in the Assembly.

I will now pass the amendment to the page for appropriate distribution. I look for your guidance, Mr. Speaker, as to whether I should pause until this has been distributed or whether I can continue my argument. Okay, I will continue then. Thank you very much for that.

Bill 40 is a very, very, very simple piece of legislation. I think my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona said today in our joint news conference with CAUS and ACTISEC that it’s barely 60 words long. But it’s amazing: if a picture is worth a thousand words, I guess 60 words are worth a lesson in how to subvert democracy, quite frankly. Look, there is only one purpose to this bill, and that is to take tuition policy, which is enshrined in legislation as we speak, and move it out of legislation and move it under regulations. Now, why would the government want to do that? I think that’s the fundamental question. Well, the minister says that this is what’s needed for flexibility, for continuous improvement, so that this thing can be tweaked as we go. You know, if you don’t get it right, well, you can easily make it better.

I can kind of understand the minister saying that, seeing as how this government has gotten tuition wrong so many times in the past 15 years. This government has had three tuition fee policies since the beginning of the 1990s, and while they all continued to off-load costs onto students, none of them has worked, none of them has lasted. In the ’80s until 1991 tuition was capped at 12 per cent of net operating expenditures. Then till 1995 it was capped at 20 per cent. Then till 2003 it was capped at 30 per cent of net operating expenses. Then in 2003 in the Post-secondary Learning Act the cap became more of a guideline, sort of like EPA ratings on gas mileage: your mileage may vary, kind of thing. Really, it set a couple of different classes. Those institutions that were below the 30 per cent had one set of rules applying to them, and those that were above had a different set of rules, and that is what’s enshrined in legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I’ll be the first to admit that section 61(2)(b) of the Post-secondary Learning Act is a complex and rather convoluted piece of legislation. But we don’t accomplish anything in the interests of the students of Alberta, their parents, their loved ones, anyone who may be helping them pay the freight for their education, or, in fact, the people of Alberta by taking this out of legislation and moving it under regulations. We do accomplish something if we look at a bad piece of legislation and say that we’re going to amend that bad piece of legislation, that we’re going to make it better, but it’s still going to be in legislation.

Now, the minister has dropped a number of hints, pretty broad hints, as to what this new tuition policy is going to look like. We already know, if he stays true to the hints that he’s dropped, that he’s looking at a tuition policy once he sets the new baseline, whatever that will be, whether that’s 2004-2005 levels, 1999-2000 levels, or anything in between. Once he determines that baseline, then tuitions will increase on an annual basis by the cost of living, by the consumer price index.

A tuition fee policy like that is, you know, elegant in its simplicity, so simple, in fact, that I have to wonder why you wouldn’t want to enshrine it in legislation, unless, of course, your intention was not to leave that tuition fee policy in place for very long at all, unless your intention was perhaps to come back the year after next or perhaps the year after that and say: “Let’s move to full deregulation. Let’s let the institutions charge what the market will bear. Let’s move to a situation where the student pays the full cost of his or her postsecondary education.”

Now, models like that exist, except that where they exist and where they work, the high-cost model of postsecondary education is married to a high-aid model. Those two parts of the equation need to be in place. You can do it at a place like Princeton University, which has an endowment fund that produces an annual income of $400 million a year for one university. You can create a lot of scholarships and a lot of bursaries out of that. You can pretty much ensure that if your son or daughter has the academic qualifications to go to Princeton, it isn’t going to cost your son or daughter a thing, quite apart from whether your son or daughter or whether you can afford to pay the tuition fees and the other fees at Princeton University, because the bursaries and the scholarships are in place.

You know, it takes a mighty big endowment fund to produce $400 million worth of income. We have an endowment fund that has only $750 million in it and may some day be topped up to $3 billion, but that’s the cap, and $3 billion is not going to produce $400 million. We’re not in any way ready for a high-cost, high-aid model of tuition, not in any way at all.

The minister seems intent on having all the stakeholders trust him, and having been told loudly and clearly by just about all those stakeholders that, in fact, they don’t—and there’s plenty of historical precedents why stakeholders should not trust this government as far as it can throw this government when it comes to their ability to manage or look after postsecondary education and the colleges and universities of this province and properly fund them and properly manage a tuition policy—his response to that is: “Well, come on in to the stakeholder process. You know, we’ll consult. Oh, by the way,” he likes to point out, “we can’t do anything by order in council without first consulting with the stakeholders and proving that we have consulted with the stakeholders.”

All right, let’s examine that. On one hand, if you do consult with the stakeholders and you prove that you’ve consulted with the stakeholders, all you’ve proven is that you’ve actually talked to them. You certainly haven’t proven that you’ve taken their advice. You know, I could invite the minister out for a steak dinner and then renege on the steak dinner, and then six months later I could come to the minister or his colleague from Lesser Slave Lake—perhaps I could involve her in it—and I could say: “Now, I remember I promised you that steak dinner. Do you still want it?” If the minister said, “Yes, I do,” I’d say, “That’s great, but I have no intention of buying it for you.” I’ve consulted him, and if I document the conversation, I can prove it. It doesn’t mean I have to take his advice. So that’s a problem right there.

Further, though, this government claims that they always consult on regulatory changes, and just over one month ago, on April 5, 2006, they made substantial changes to the student financial assistance regulation, and neither of the major student stakeholders groups, CAUS or ACTISEC, was consulted at the time, nor were any of the stakeholders that we can find consulted about Bill 40 as it was coming down. Oh, there were some exchanges in question period that indicated that some legislation was coming sometime, eventually, but nothing to indicate that there was going to be a piece of legislation designed to take tuition out of legislation and move it under regulations.

You know, I don't trust this government. Well, I don't trust this government on very much, quite frankly, but I certainly don't trust this government given its rather dismal record on tuition or very much at all about how they've managed postsecondary education over the course of the last – what has it been now? – 13, 14 years. So it's not enough for the minister to ask for my trust or my colleagues' trust or the students' trust or college and university administrators' trust or faculties' trust or support staff trust or parents' trust or employers' trust, and it's certainly not enough to be invited into the consultation process as stakeholders when what we're giving up – and by we I mean we the people of Alberta – is the chance to have this debated on the floor of the Legislature if this bill passes. This is where it belongs, and this is where law should be made, and this is where policy should be made, and this is where policy that doesn't work should be amended or changed, right here on the floor of the Legislature, where every one of 3 million Albertans has access to their 83 MLAs who can contribute to the debate.

That is why we say that the tuition fee policies for public postsecondary institutions must remain in the statute itself rather than cabinet regulations, to ensure that any future changes are subject to full public debate in the Assembly. Mr. Speaker, that is the only way to guarantee – I'm not even sure it guarantees. That's the only way to offer any sort of protection against this government pulling the wool over the public's eyes and doing what they want. I can't imagine why they would want to move tuition policy out of legislation under regulation unless they're cooking up something, unless they have something that they want to do to tuition policy that they know students and parents and the public are not going to like, but they intend to do it anyway.

With that, I will wrap up my contribution to second reading debate and let others join the fray. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herard: On the amendment. I don't think the member opposite will be surprised that I won't be supporting his motion and certainly ask all my colleagues to do the same. The member talks about: well, you just made changes to student loan regulations, or something like that, without consulting. Typically, I think, what would happen in a case like that is that, you know, people would be called and told: "We're going to do some housekeeping here and some housekeeping there. What do you think of it?" "Go ahead and do it. Big deal." But this is substantive, you know. This change is going to in fact make it so much easier and better for our Alberta students.

I don't know why the member would prefer to guarantee himself a role in the Legislature that essentially stands there and debates but makes no substantial difference to the outcome, because that's just the way the system works, rather than having an opportunity to make a difference in actually shaping policy through a consultation process that he would participate in, and by golly, if he didn't like it, you'd sure know about it. So I don't know why he won't give it an opportunity. He won't try it. I think all that matters is that people or opposition members be able to stand up and represent their special interests rather than try and balance things on a committee that's trying to do the right thing for all Albertans.

I would urge everyone to vote against the motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this amendment. As everybody here knows, we are strongly opposed to Bill 40 as it currently stands. I think, frankly, that this government and the representations from this minister are completely wrong. What we are seeing in Bill 40 is a continuation of a culture of secrecy and entitlement and control. [interjections]

I challenge the minister who is heckling me now. If he's so confident in what he's going to propose, bring it out now. Do what your predecessors did in the first years of the PC government. They would bring forth the regulations before a bill was passed, and they would consult people on the regulations and say: "These are the regulations that will follow our bill. What do you think?" I challenge the minister to do that. In fact, I challenge the minister, if he thinks his system is so great and is so wonderful, why not build it into legislation, which has been the practice for decades now, instead of pulling it out? One more thing being pulled out from under the purview of the Legislature, from under the purview of the elected representatives of the citizens of Alberta.

It is, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, part of a much broader trend that we were talking about earlier today in regard to FOIP. We're seeing cabinet documents pulled out from public purview. Time and time again, we are now seeing bills come forward which simply defer or refer everything to regulation. So this is an antidemocratic trend. It's a trend to avoid accountability. It's a trend that reinforces the secret, behind-closed-doors approach of this government.

I would like to see a tuition policy, Mr. Speaker – and it would be the kind of policy brought forward if this amendment was accepted – that was up front and that was in legislation and that was based, as this minister has said, on consultation but consultation that leads to legislation, a policy that would provide certainty to students and to their families and to funders paying the freight rather than a bill that will expose students and all their supporters to unknown changes year by year as ministers change and fashions change and experiments are tried at the expense of students. What I'd like to see is a tuition policy that supported merit, period. If you had the qualifications, if you had the merit, then you would get the education on the understanding that that education is an investment, and it will produce benefits not just for the individual but for all of society.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that this amendment as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Currie is well worth while. I know, even as I speak, that this government will vote it down because this is a government of secrecy. Sometimes I almost imagine, and I won't invite a point of order because the hour is late, but sometimes it almost seems to me that this government would like to do all of its business behind closed doors and perhaps reduce the Legislature to nothing more than a ceremonial centre, a ceremonial moment.

Dr. Taft: Four weeks. Oh, I'm sure they wouldn't even like four weeks.

Anyways, Mr. Speaker, this bill is symptomatic of a tired, secretive government. It's bad legislation. It's unfortunate that it's being supported by a minister who could have brought a fresh start to this. It has no legitimacy from the stakeholders. We've seen that today. The students don't like it. The opposition doesn't like it. I can't imagine that the families of students like it. It's yet another sad day for democracy under a government that wants to reduce the Legislature to little more than a vacuum.

I oppose the bill as it stands. I support the amendment as it is proposed, and I would urge all proper-thinking members of this Assembly to stand with us. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, and the amendment that is before us that has been proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. The amendment proposes that the bill not be read a second time to allow more time for full, public debate on this bill outside this House and, hopefully, later on right here on the floor of this Assembly. I find the amendment most reasonable in light of what I have heard from the most important stakeholders in postsecondary education with respect to the tuition fee policy, the students themselves.

As the Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned, we met with the leaders of the three universities this morning – Lethbridge, the University of Calgary, the University of Alberta – the leadership of CAUS, or Council of Alberta University Students, and the ACTISEC, the Alberta colleges and technical institutes' executive leaders, among others. The TV room was packed with students from all over the province, and they were all of one mind with respect to this bill, that this bill at this point must not proceed forward. They want this bill pulled, and there are reasons for it.

They find – and I agree with them entirely – that the existing statute on postsecondary learning that this proposed bill proposes to amend entrenches one fundamental principle, and that is the role of this House, the role of the Legislature in determining the parameters of the policy with respect to tuition fees. That's what the existing law does. It recognizes, in fact entrenches, the role of the Legislature in the determination of tuition policy. That, to my mind, is one of the most fundamental, core principles of democratic decision-making: elected representatives through open, public debate which can be witnessed by citizens who elect us and send us here to make decisions and have the opportunity to watch and witness. It is that principle now entrenched in law which this bill attempts to reverse and kill.

That's the most unacceptable part of this bill to me, that it, in fact, asks the Legislature to sign off its authority to have a say in making that policy and give it to the minister and the council of ministers, Executive Council. It's a strange spectacle that we are seeing here. First, during the elections we all do our very best to get elected to be members of this House, and then some of us begin to proceed to neglect and ignore the role of this House. I'm not going to be an accomplice in supporting a piece of legislation which reduces the ability of this House to have a substantive say in one of the most substantive policies, important policies, that we have the opportunity to establish.

Consultations must happen before a piece of legislation of this sort is brought forward. What's the point of consultations after having already received the authority to exercise your will, which is what the minister seeks to do regardless of what he hears? If he chooses, he can ignore the consultations and move forward, and that's what I find so obnoxious about this bill. I don't think this is a bill that deserves the support.

I'm so very pleased that the students have expressed more than disappointment about this bill, in fact outrage about the fact that they see this bill violating the democratic norms of decision-making that fall within the purview of an elected Assembly such as this. Students are not only now calling for a different tuition fee policy; they also insist on an appropriate democratic process through which that policy should be arrived at. So there are two issues here, a new policy and the process through which that policy ought to be established, and students are in total agreement among themselves and with us that that process must include the ability of the Assembly to debate that policy and vote on it.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment that's before the House now will allow the minister to have an opportunity to go back and engage all stakeholders in serious consultation and then come back to the Legislature with whatever legislation he proposes to bring forward to address the policy. As I think has been argued earlier by one of the speakers, we have legislation in place, the Post-secondary Learning Act, which allows the minister to introduce new tuition policy without asking for a vote on new legislation. The very fact that this legislation is brought before the House is in fact to annul the basic element that is there in the Post-secondary Learning Act which says that this Legislature must have its say. . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

. . . on the determination of the piece of legislation dealing with the policy. The minister has acted I think in a unilateral fashion, and unilateralism is sort of a fashion these days. I hope that he has not tried to seek guidance from a source not far from here. Unilateral legislative action doesn't deserve the support of this House. I think appropriate consultation prior to bringing legislation to this House is important. What the minister is trying to do is sort of get this piece of legislation through, annul the principle entrenched in law as is, and then have his fait accompli. You know, everything is done. Now you can come and talk to me. He's very courteous and nice about it. He says: you can come and give me some advice. Well, if he wants that advice – I'd like that suggestion – please ask me for that advice before you bring this piece of legislation here, not afterwards because then I lose my opportunity to speak in public to the issues that I'm concerned with.

Any decisions made behind closed doors in secret are not showing respect either for democratic decision-making or for this House. As I was trying to make the point earlier, we all try to get into this House, work very hard during the election, and then all of a sudden turn around and begin to be indifferent towards what the role of this House is. That shows to me disrespect, a lack of respect for what this House is about and what it's supposed to be doing.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment before us gives all of us an opportunity to engage in serious, genuine consultation with each other. I'll be very happy to sit down with the minister, and I'll bring some other people to do the same, provided we have a real opportunity to make an input that will be translated by the ministry into a piece of legislation which he'll be, I'm sure, coming to persuade us is needed before he can proceed with this policy. Until then, I will support this motion and hope that other members will do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to rise and speak to the amendment. Members of the opposition would have us believe that the end of the world is near. It's not. This bill should be read precisely for what it is.

It may surprise you, Mr. Speaker. It may surprise members of the House. I don't particularly like this bill. I wish we didn't have this bill in the House. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie through the course of the spring session has been asking: "When is the tuition policy coming? How are you going to make sure that a new tuition policy will be in place as promised for the fall? How are you going to make sure that it's effective?" Now, having been the author of his own misfortune by the minister bringing forward a bill to say that this is how we're going to make sure that the policy is effective in the fall, he says: "The sky is falling. You're taking it all away from the legislative process, and you're robbing us of our democratic right to discuss tuition policy." Well, you can't have it both ways.

The fact of the matter is that under the Post-secondary Learning Act there is a formula with respect to tuition policy. Now, I would have argued and would argue that that piece of legislation could remain in existence and that we could work with postsecondaries with respect to a new policy and perhaps amend the legislation in a year. Ideally, we would be coming forward in the fall with legislation to bring a tuition policy into play. But I can't fault the minister for bringing forward a mechanism this spring, not knowing whether he'll have a fall session to bring forward a tuition policy, not wanting to wait for a year or two to embed in legislation a new tuition policy, a mechanism which allows us to meet the commitment which the Premier and the government made to students in this province, that a new tuition policy would be in place by the fall of 2006, effective for the 2007 school year.

The Member for Calgary-Currie all year has been saying: "Bring forward a policy. You've got to hurry up. You've got to get the policy in place. You'll run out of time for the policy." Wiser heads said: "Let's do this properly. Let's take time to consult. Let's think about it. Let's consult with people. Let's bring forward an appropriate policy. Let's recognize that it's not all about tuition. It's about affordability. But, yes, we promised a new tuition policy, and a new tuition policy will be put in place." If advice suggests that in order to ensure that that happens, that there needs to be a way of embedding that in regulation and that wasn't afforded in the current Post-secondary Learning Act, then I would have to support the minister's efforts to allow proceeding with the new tuition policy by regulation at least as an interim step.

It's not the end of the world, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, tuition policy and the debate of tuition policy in this province is an important issue for students. It's an important issue for parents, and it's an important issue for all Albertans because all of us want to make sure that finances are not a barrier to students getting an education. All of us want to make sure that education is affordable and seen to be affordable. All of us want to make sure that all Albertans have the opportunity to get the knowledge, skills, and abilities they need to participate in a knowledge economy. I think that's a given.

What we're talking about here is a very modest piece of legislation which allows the minister to proceed to bring the tuition policy in, to put it in place, as promised, by the fall of 2007, a promise which the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and others on the opposition benches have been requesting, have been demanding, have been insisting, and have been arguing was necessary to do and necessary to do now. This minister has found a mechanism to do it now.

Perhaps it could have been done collaboratively, sitting down with institutions and saying, "We know what the law is, but you know that the policy is going to be different than the law, and the policy will be embedded next year." That might have been a way of doing it. This is legally the better way of doing it, as is being proposed by the minister. He has chosen to proceed in this manner.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the students of this province having been part of the consultation process over the last year, the academics of this province having been part of the consultation process over the last year, the institutions in this province having been part of the consultation process over the last year, and even the opposition members having been part of the consultation process over the last year should recognize that coming to the conclusion of that process and bringing forward a tuition policy, as has been promised, is best done now, is best done in this manner. When the session comes again and more discussion has been had around the effectiveness of that tuition policy, we can then bring it back and put it back in the legislation if that's desired.

But this bill, this 60-word bill, as the opposition has referred to it, this Bill 40 is not the end of the world. You can't even see the end of the world from there. This is really just about putting in place a mechanism so that the tuition policy that's been promised, the tuition policy that's been demanded by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie can be put in place in time for the 2007 school year so that the institutions in this province, when they do their budgeting in the fall, as they start to do and plan for the next year, will know what the policy is and will know that it has the force of law, that students will know that they can rely on it because it has the force of law, and that parents can rely on it because it has the force of law.

Would it be better to have it in the act? Personally, yes, I agree. It should be in the act, but it's not going to be in the act this spring. There's a likelihood that it might not be able to be in the act in the fall, and therefore affording the minister the opportunity to give it the force of law and give some surety to students, some sense of security in knowing and understanding what the playing field is going to be like, is very important.

So I would encourage people to vote against the amendment and allow this modest amendment to go ahead. It's not going to do all the dastardly things that have been suggested. It's merely going to allow the fulfillment of a promise made by our Premier that Albertans will have the most affordable tuition policy and will go a long way towards ensuring that education is affordable to students and their families.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to get up and speak for a few moments on this amendment to Bill 40. I do appreciate it because I wasn't allowed to get up and speak on Bill 42 due to shortage of time.

First, I guess I'd like to address the hon. past minister talking about that he's been forced into this because they've made a promise to bring this forward. They've had two and a half years to come up with a bill and an act on what their tuition is. Now, because they said that they'd have it before we break for the summer, they have to bring this forward. It's almost laughable to use that as the excuse and say, "We have to do it because it's legal, and it's better to be legal."

Is this just? I say: no, it isn't just. It's not just for those students that are looking for concrete legislation, to know what's going to be there. This is purely getting thrown arbitrarily into the field at the whim of the minister. Yes, he says that he'll make the consultations, and I believe that he will absolutely do that, but the fact is that he can then make an arbitrary decision and say: well, due to fiscal problems this is the way it's going to come down.

We've heard this, Mr. Speaker, for 13 years in health care, that we've got this idea, we've got this plan, that we're going to bring forth this bill, the third-way bill, 13 years of a new way. They haven't. We've listened to this for two and a half years. One has to wonder which is going to have the longest tale by the time we're done. I just don't know.

They've brought in two bills to say that they would just pay the tuition increase. Why couldn't they do that again? They act like they're in this panic. I just for the life of me can't see the panic. They create the crisis, and then they expect Albertans, students to lap it up and say: well, there is nothing left that they can do. I called that poor planning where I conducted business before I came here. [interjection] Pardon me?

Mr. Elsalhy: Just trust me.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It is very much going back to that saying: well, just trust me. That's fine to say: just trust me. It's always nice. History has shown that people always wanted to choose a benevolent king, but when a king passes, the chance that benevolence is passed on is very remote. It's usually a tyrant.

It's alarming to me that they want to put more power into the ministry's office. I am very in favour of this amendment to Bill 40. We know that it's going to get struck down, but I just want it on the record that this is the place to make legislation. This is the purpose of it. Democracy was never meant to be quick and efficient. They certainly can't say that they were quick and efficient on coming up with a policy in two and a half years and saying: "This is the best we have. Now we'll throw it to the minister because he's got the ability to do this, and he's a fair and kind person." As the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has said, "Trust me." That isn't what democracy is about, "Trust me." It's about the ability to bring a bill forward, to have the debate, and to vote on it.

I appreciate being able to debate this, and I very much would like to see this amendment passed. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 40 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to participate in debate on Bill 40 that's before us, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. I've listened with a lot of interest to all the arguments that were made on the bill and then on the amendment that was moved by my hon. colleague for Calgary-Currie, who is the Official Opposition critic for Advanced Education.

One question that came to mind, basically, is: if the argument from this side of the House is that the government is doing something that is antidemocratic, and the argument from the other side, from the government, talks about their needing to do something to offer some direction in terms of the postsecondary tuition policy, why did the hon. minister choose to introduce this legislation in the dying days of this sitting of the Legislature? Why wasn't this Bill 4 or Bill 10 or Bill 14 or Bill 24? Why did it have to be Bill 40, which was introduced just as this session was wrapping up? Could it be an ad hoc decision? Or maybe they decided that there might not be a fall sitting, and they wanted to appear to be taking some direction on a concern that many people have in this province.

Now, we've talked time and time again on this bill and on others that the direction now seems to be to put everything in regulations and remove the meat, if you will, from the legislation. So legislation is becoming a hollow creature, and everything is done behind closed doors and is left to the whim or the will of the minister at the time. There is no scrutiny. There is no debate. Again, as was mentioned – and I sort of agree – it basically amounts to a total disregard for the Legislature and for its role. Basically, it represents an unnecessary concentration of power in the hands of one person or in the hands of a small group of people, in this case the minister or his immediate and close circle of advisors.

Mr. Herard: It's called the government.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, I know.

The hon. minister is saying that this is the government, but I would challenge him to find me another government that does that by removing everything from the floor of the Legislature, where 83 of us were elected to debate ideas and policies, to an inner circle of people that, you know, tell him what they think should be the direction of his ministry, and then this direction is finalized, and it never sees any debate in this House. Where are those checks and balances? Where is the scrutiny? Where is the oversight? Where is the discipline, really?

In my view, this is yet another nail in democracy's coffin. We know that with FOIP and with this government's record of secrecy and now with this example of how things are moved into regulation, away from public scrutiny and public examination, again it offers no consistency because this minister might choose to do something today, and then the next minister might choose to do something totally different the next day. It allows for this flip-flopping, or the 180-degree change of opinion, that happens when ministers change. We all know that ministers come and go, and sometimes changes in cabinet are not forecasted. Sometimes they happen surprisingly quickly.

Now, the issue of consultation with the stakeholders. Any consultation has to be serious, has to be thorough, has to be inclusive. You know, when we're talking about postsecondary education, you definitely have to involve the students. You have to involve their parents. You have to involve the instructors of those postsecondary institutions, the faculty, the administrators. So it has to be widespread. It has to be all-encompassing, and it has to be done across the province.

I noted the minister saying in this House that the students are going to be happy with his plan. I view this as the carrot, basically. He's offering them a carrot to keep them quiet: "Wait. Trust me. I'm going to do something that you're going to like, but to get there, you have to allow me all this enormous power to do things without any scrutiny in this Assembly." Now, I would be interested to find out from the minister or from his staff what the student leaders told him. You know, the student leaders at the U of A, the ones at the U of C, the ones at the U of Lethbridge. What did they tell him? If he would be willing to table those communications here in this House.

Again, I also take issue with the words "enabling legislation." What is this legislation enabling, and who is it enabling? It is enabling the minister, basically, to fiddle with or tinker with the tuition policy at his discretion or behind closed cabinet doors without any chance for public debate. So it's enabling for him, but it is not enabling for the students, and it's not enabling for this Legislature certainly. He also said that the students are going . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. In accordance with Standing Order 61(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a second time]

Bill 40
Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

[Debate adjourned May 15: Mr. Elsalhy speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I can go on and talk about the history of the tuition policy in this province. I can actually go back as far as the 1980s, when tuition was capped at 12 per cent. Then we moved on to the early part of the '90s, you know, with the infamous revolution. Tuition was capped at 20 per cent of net operating costs. Then you move into the latter part of the '90s and the earlier part of this new century, and you have tuition capped at 30 per cent. Although students were outraged at this hike, they took some solace, some relief in that at least this cap was legislated. They felt that although it was exaggerated and to some of them it was outrageous and not affordable, they felt that, okay, at least there is a legislative body that reviews it and that approves it. They took some relief and some solace in knowing that it was legislated by the house of representatives, the house of the people.

Now, in 2003 this cap was removed, and it was replaced by a tuition freeze. Again, it was an act of kindness or an act of benevolence from the minister because they chose to freeze the tuition rather than capping it. Now they're suggesting that they are going to remove this. I think and I argue that it actually basically opens the door to deregulation of postsecondary education. Advanced education will turn into a commodity, and market forces will now dictate who gets to go to college or university and who cannot afford to.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on and on about why we find this bill very offensive and why we are definitely not going to support it, but before I do this, I want to move an amendment. Seeing that the amendment introduced by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie was defeated, I am moving an amendment that basically deletes all the words after "that" and substitutes the following: "Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling
Amendments at Second Reading

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the amendment that has just been moved is a hoist amendment, which is different than the previous amendment that we dealt with, which was a reasoned amendment. So just be aware that this is a hoist amendment being brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

On the amendment, hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, you are wanting to finish your comments?

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this amendment. It's not good for democracy to see a government that is comfortable in justifying taking the decision-making away from the elected representatives of the people and concentrating it, as I said, in the hands of one person, be it the minister in charge. It doesn't speak well for democracy, and it doesn't speak well for accountability and transparency.

In 2004 the Alberta Liberals campaigned for affordable postsecondary education. We came out on the side of students in a way that advocates sustainability and affordability. The PC government rapidly copied some of our policies and introduced their flagship bill in the first sitting of the 26th Legislature. They called it Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. We voted in support of the Access to the Future Act. It created an endowment fund that allowed for money to be put aside to support postsecondary education. In other words, the government heard the plea of the students and either wanted to seriously look at ways to help them or at least wanted to give the impression or the appearance that they did. Now, a year later in this Second Session of the 26th Legislature and in this year's budget not a whole lot of money was added to this endowment fund. One would argue: how serious were you last year, and how serious are you this year?

Why is this discussion important? The discussion is important because it has tremendous impact on students and their families. When we change tuition policy, you have to consult the widest base in this province. You should not consult only with one or two people and then do things behind closed doors. How are we going to change the advanced education climate if this bill passes? I argue that it's going to change it for the worse, and I am talking from the angle of access and affordability.

Mr. Speaker, this government has had many attempts to target or to address tuition policy, as I mentioned, since the '80s, and every time the decision was changed, and it was changed quickly. So what proof does the minister have to convince us that his policy, that he's going to release later this year, is going to stick and is going to be here next year and the year after? We have no proof. You know, it's another sign of not taking this House seriously and not taking the electorate seriously. It's a sign of arrogance because they're introducing a tuition plan that will go up faster than any other place in the country. They should not ram through legislative changes that take away any future legislative oversight.

Remember that in the 2004 campaign, Mr. Speaker, there were many people who voted and had their lawn signs that said: I love

Alberta Education. I remind the hon. members from both sides of the House that in 2004 members from all three opposition parties received 15,000 more votes than the 62 government members. So that was basically people telling them that directions have to be revisited and that decisions have to be reconsidered. I think the wise thing to do for this government is to try to come back to the Legislature more often than not. Obviously, the trend that is evident is that they are trying to stay away from the Legislature and trying to take things away from this elected body, to do things as they please and without any scrutiny, as I mentioned.

I think the minister, when he told the students to be patient and that they were going to be happy with his plan – it actually basically amounts to blackmail, using the prospect of a new policy to convince students, families, and us . . .

Mr. Zwozdesky: Excuse me. Did you say “blackmail?”

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Then I’ll have to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think that it is highly inappropriate under 23(h), (i), and (j) to use the word “blackmail.” I think you’ll find it in Beauchesne also as being unparliamentary. I would just ask the hon. member, who normally presents some reasoned arguments, to just retract “blackmail,” to perhaps substitute a different word, and we can carry on.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to retract that word.

Mr. Elsalhy: I’ll just continue by saying that I would disagree with the hon. minister, who promised the students something that they might find favourable by saying that they would be happy but asked them instead to wait to see what he proposes. Six or seven months after the fact they would have no recourse. They would have no way of affecting any decision that the minister arrived at, and by then it would be too late.

Now, this brings me to the point about user-pay policy. We’ve seen it with power deregulation, we’ve seen it with some attempts to privatize health care, and now we’re seeing it with some attempts to deregulate postsecondary education. Only those who are rich or can afford it will get it; the ones that don’t, then don’t.

I also have to mention student debt because student debt in this province is higher than in most other jurisdictions in Canada. The average student is graduating with a load of shackling debt to the lenders. We’ve received communication from people, particularly in professional programs, that say that it’s not acceptable the way they graduate now. Some of them are married, some of them have families, and the amount of debt that they accumulate is outrageous. It’s totally unjustified.

Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment basically offers the hon. minister and his cabinet an avenue to consult some more and take it upon themselves to ask all the stakeholders what they think about any proposed changes. If, in fact, it was deemed necessary six months from now to do things in regulation to address some of the concerns from the former minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, then fine. Six months from now we will arrive at that decision. But till then, I think the students deserve and the parents deserve and this Legislature deserves more time to consult, more time to consider things before we jam things through. By then it will be too late, and we will have no recourse.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: I’ll be brief, mercifully brief. Of course, I won’t be supporting the amendment, but I think it has to be said for the record that this sort of an amendment is essentially just wasting the Legislature’s time. They stand there and tell us that we’re usurping their right, yet they use a particular mechanism in legislation that, in fact, you cannot bring back legislation six months from now. It’s only happened once in the history of Canada, in the House of Commons, and it was a mistake. So I just want to make sure that the record, at least, stated that what is happening here is just a delaying tactic.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let’s put another record on the turntable, then, shall we? We can have a whole symphony if you want. This is not a delaying tactic. I recognize that the government members opposite are anxious to go home for the night. It’s almost 11 o’clock. They’re getting hungry. They’re getting tired. They’re getting thirsty. They’re getting cranky. I realize that it’s been a beautiful spring. The golf courses are greening up beautifully, and they’re anxious to get out on the courses. They’d like to be gone from this House within the next few days. I recognize what the minister is saying about the impossibility of bringing back this precise piece of legislation six months hence. That is precisely our intention. This is a fundamentally flawed piece of legislation, and we don’t want it brought back.

What we want to offer this government is the opportunity to call a fall sitting of the Legislature. You could even start it earlier, you know. Most of the harvesting can be done in time to get us back in here before November. But come on back in, leadership convention or not, leadership campaign or not. I’m sure your whip will excuse those of your members who are running for the leadership of your party if they can’t be here every single day during the fall sitting of the Legislature. Still, I invite you to come on back, come on down, as Bob Barker would say, and let’s debate a real amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act six months hence. Let’s bring in a bill – what will it be up to? – 44 or 45 by that point, something like that. Let’s bring in a Bill 44 that does it right.

You see, the minister has made the case – and he’s been supported somewhat half-heartedly, somewhat feebly by his predecessor in that argument – that he has to bring forward this enabling legislation to satisfy my incessant demand and that of my colleague from the third party that they bring in a tuition policy. It’s all my fault. It’s all my fault for demanding this, and then when they comply with me because I have so much power – they hang on my every word, Mr. Speaker. They always have, you know. I mean, the responsibility that comes with being me is just so awesome, isn’t it? [interjections] Yeah. Yeah.

You know, now that they bring in this absolutely flawed piece of legislation and I get up in the House and say, “You know what? You’ve got it wrong,” I’m accused of the sky falling. Well, the sky is not falling although I suspect that your popularity ratings are over there on that side of the House. But here’s the deal. Here’s the deal.

An Hon. Member: Seventy-two per cent.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. Seventy-two per cent say: "Here's your hat. What's your hurry?" But we'll debate that another time. I see you've got your website up, hon. member, finally. So you're competitive now.

You know, it's not our fault on this side of the House that the so-called, quote, unquote, wiser minds took this long to craft a good tuition policy. So don't try to blame that on us. If it turns out that the work has been well done, perhaps it was worth the wait, and I would extend that argument to the amending formula for the Post-secondary Learning Act to deal with tuition policy. To do the work right, it's worth the wait. Okay?

The legislative schedule is not at our discretion, Mr. Speaker. It's at the government's, entirely at the government's. You know, we're quite prepared to continue sitting another week if it's that important that legislation enabling a tuition policy be brought forward, till the policy is ready, till you can bring forward an amendment that amends tuition policy within legislation. We'll come back after the May long weekend. We can do that. If the policy isn't ready then, then we'll come back in the fall. That's okay too. The government refuses to introduce the new policy in legislation this spring, so it can finalize the tuition policy and release it to the institutions to guide their planning process, allowing the old legislation to remain in place, until it can be changed in the spring of '07. The previous minister, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, admitted as much not half an hour ago.

You know, if the government wants to pretend or allege that it couldn't prevent institutions from ignoring the new informal policy because they're independent and they could use the existing legislation to impose greater increases or something like that, I'd refer them back to the former minister of learning, the current minister's predecessor's predecessor, who is known to have sent a letter to the institutions before the 2004 election telling them to keep their tuition increases below 4 per cent, and all institutions, Mr. Speaker, complied with that letter. The proposal to leave the legislation and direct the institutions to follow the new policy, notwithstanding the leftover legislation, is, in my view and in our view on this side of the House, more respectful of institutional autonomy and good legislative process than is this pre-election interference. You know, it also ensures that critical public policy issues remain subject to legislative debate and approval.

So, Mr. Speaker, in short, there's a right way and a wrong way to go about this. This is absolutely the wrong way. That is why my colleague from Edmonton-McClung has proposed this hoist amendment, and that is why I'm delighted to support it. Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 10 outstanding individuals who work in the child development branch of Alberta Children's Services. This team was instrumental in conducting the public consultation that Alberta had with families to determine how best to invest in the future of Alberta's five-point child care plan. These individuals are here with us today, and I'll ask each of them to stand as I call out their name and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, starting with Lynn Jerchel, director of the child development branch; Judy Erickson; Ann Jordan-Mills; Murray Kleiter; Laurie Mosier; Diane MacLeod; Lorna Rogers; Bernie Trudell; Leann Wagner; and Linda Yurdiga.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of Assembly seven co-op students from my department who are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. They are accompanied by Human Resources and Employment staff. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is 13 staff members from the personnel administration office. They are located in the members' gallery, and I would like them also to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My final introduction, Mr. Speaker, is 25 seniors, pioneers of this beautiful country, from my constituency. They are with the Smoky Lake Legion. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would also like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six staff members from my Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. All of them work at the Alberta Records Centre, which I had the pleasure of touring last year. We have with us this afternoon Ruben Balanda, Sarah Kuster, Diane Lynas, Jennifer de Boer, Maurice Lafleche, and Tim Burgess. The work that they do is critical to the operations of government. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it's important to keep records safe and secure, and for that I would like to thank them all for their hard work and dedication to my department. I would ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour and a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a very good friend and a very strong supporter of mine from the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills constituency, one who has operated my campaign office in Olds for the last three elections and has been my campaign manager for the last two and a very tireless worker, Linda Bell. She's seated in the Speaker's gallery today along with another person who's been a supporter of mine for over 40 years – and, yes, I still remember our anniversary date – my wife, Janis. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some faces that are quite familiar to most of us. They are the staff of government members' caucus. This group of capable and dedicated employees provides our caucus with quality legislative assistance and research work. I am delighted that our staff of 25, led by director of caucus Jason Zwarg, are able to join us in both the members' and public galleries today. I would ask our staff to rise when I'm done calling their names. The leg. assistants are Jan Aldous, Darlene Beckstrand, Jon Buck, Jordon Copping, Vera Fedor, Carmen Frebrowski, Nicole Guenette, Matt Hebert, Cheryl Lees, Barb Letendre, Theresa Lightfoot, Jeff Trynchy, Lanny Westersund, and Hannah Zacharias. Our research officers, led by senior researcher Mike Simpson, are Sean Day, Elizabeth Jeffray, Tyler Lawrason, Brock Mulligan, Brad Rabiey, and Eric Taylor. Our caucus is delighted to have Andrée Morier join our team for the summer months as a STEP student. Finally, I wish to introduce the staff members of my office: Stacey Leighton, Jeff Kasbrick, and the director of caucus, Jason Zwarg. If they would all stand, I would ask all hon. members to join with me in recognizing these hardworking individuals.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four outstanding Calgarians. Mr. Jim Arthurs is a retired Calgary businessman who also served his country for five years in the Royal Canadian Navy. Accompanying Jim today are three outstanding volunteers who serve on the Calgary-Nose Hill Progressive Conservative Association board. Mr. Ken McIvor is an administrator with a large law firm operating in Calgary. Mr. Earl Rose is a semiretired community volunteer and is known as the éminence grise of the Thorncliffe-Greenview Community Association. Mr. Doug Jeffery is a resident of the Beddington Heights community, and he is a retired bank manager and the president of our constituency association. All four guests are seated in the public gallery today, and I would ask these four gentlemen to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 48 folks from the Sherwood Park and Strathcona constituencies. They are true pillars of our community. They're members of the Sherwood Park Alliance Church Pillars seniors' club. The tour was organized by Mrs. Hope Tupper and Pastor Leighton Gust. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four very special people: my younger brother, Sukhdev Agnihotri, former president of the Bhartiya Cultural Society; his wife, Vijay Agnihotri; his father-in-law, Gian chand Ghandha from B.C.; and his mother-in-law, Asha rani Ghandha from B.C. They are here this afternoon to tour the Legislature. I want to thank them for coming. They are seated in the members' gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe my guest has arrived yet. I don't see him here, so I'll wait.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the mother of one of our pages. The page is Stacy Schell, who is a first-year student at the University of Alberta. Her mother is Jody Schell, and she lives in my constituency. I would ask her to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Marieke Dubé. Marieke has been working for the NDP caucus since February as our sessional researcher. Her work has been invaluable to us, and we greatly appreciate the long hours and dedication Marieke has shown over these past few months. Marieke has a masters in political science from the University of Alberta specializing in political theory. Her thesis was very interestingly called Manufacturing the Enemy: The Discourse of Fear in Democratic Societies. I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Acting Speaker: First Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Government Contracting Policies

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year Albertans were disturbed to learn that Rod Love was receiving very generous contracts from various government ministries with no documentation to justify his paycheque. The 2004-2005 Auditor General's report states, "Treasury Board asked the Office of the Chief Internal Auditor . . . to conduct a detailed review of contracting practices at all departments." To the Minister of Finance: can the minister tell this Assembly when she anticipates this particular review to be completed?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did indicate that we had done an intensive review of our contracting processes and indeed implemented that about a year ago. So we've done that.

On the other matter I will certainly get that information for the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. To the same minister: does the minister support Albertans' right to be informed of these contracting practices given that these contracts are paid with taxpayer dollars?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very clear and open when we contract. Our contract policy is certainly available. I think every ministry's is. I tabled the contracting policy of Alberta Finance. That policy will be audited by the Auditor General on an annual basis as he does the audit to ensure that we are meeting our contract obligations. That is, indeed, part of the work that the Auditor General does. So I'm confident that the contracting policies that have been set out are being followed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Government Services: given the public anger over these contracts and I think the minister's admission that the public has the right to know about this, why is this government proposing legislation to hide it from Albertans until 2021?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mean, clearly another way to get at Bill 20, that we're dealing with this afternoon in Committee of the Whole. You know, all kinds of questions can be raised on this at that time, and we'll give you an insight into what Committee of the Whole answers will be.

I think the Premier wants to supplement this.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm sort of curious why the hon. member hasn't picked up the telephone – I'll provide him with the number, or phone information – and talked to Jack Davis or Rod Love to get the information. He hasn't phoned.

The Acting Speaker: Second Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More budget woes for our local school boards under the vise of this Conservative government's hold-the-line budget. Talk amongst parents is: how much bigger will my child's class be next year? My question to the Minister of Education. Parents want to know, Mr. Minister: will their children be in larger classes next year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've had a very successful class-size reduction initiative over the past two years, and we're going to phase in the third year of it. It might take two years, in fact, to accomplish it. What I want the hon. member and the parents that he alludes to to know is that as a result of this government's funding, which is around the $200 million mark in total so far for the class-size reduction initiative, we have hired over 1,600 new, additional teachers, and because of that significant investment, we have seen class sizes lowered at all grade levels from 4 to 12 across the province on a jurisdiction-wide basis. That's why we are targeting this year's funding toward the kindergarten to grade 3, because that's where we haven't seen that kind of significant reduction in class sizes for all the school boards. It seems to me that 38 have accomplished it, but there are a few that have not yet, and that's where our monies are being targeted.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many teacher positions will be cut, resulting in larger classes, because the school districts will not be able to pay their salaries next year, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the school boards are all going through some preliminary budget discussions right now. By the end of May, as I've indicated in this House before, the school boards, who are comprised of locally elected, good, sound-thinking individuals, just like the MLAs are, will then look at which teachers are retiring, which teachers are continuing on, where their pressure points are, and so on. By June 30 they will submit to me as Minister of Education their requests for the coming September school year, and once we have all of that information, then we'll be dealing with more of the facts rather than just some preliminary projections, be they right or wrong at this stage.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: how many more districts will be in debt next year because you haven't provided them with expected class-size initiative funding in the '06-07 year, particularly for grades 4 to 12?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wish I could be given about five or 10 minutes here to explain how this works because I've tried so hard to explain this honestly and straightforwardly for the hon. member to understand. We had a recommendation from the Learning Commission to meet certain targeted guidelines for average class sizes in the K to 12 system. In kindergarten to grade 3 it was supposed to be 17. In grades 4, 5, and 6 it was supposed to be 23. In grades 7, 8, and 9 it was supposed to be 25. In grades 10, 11, and 12 it was supposed to be 27.

Now, we have met those targets in terms of our two-year benchmark in all grade levels from grade 4 to grade 12, but we haven't yet seen the benchmarks met in kindergarten to grade 3. So we're working on that now, and we are taking the money and channelling it into that area to help out. As a result of that, we are still going to be hiring between 100 and 200 new teachers over and above the 1,680-some that were hired last September and the September before. So I'd be very surprised if the allegations that the hon. member is alleging are in fact going to be true come September.

The Acting Speaker: Third Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

School Fundraising

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent survey commissioned by the Edmonton public school board, 90 per cent of the 154 parent groups who responded said that they did participate in fundraising activities. When asked if the level of fundraising they had to do was appropriate, 29 per cent of them either disagreed or strongly disagreed. Some went on in their submissions to indicate that it is frustrating that a province this rich forces or expects parents to engage in fundraising activities. My questions are all to the Minister of Education. Given that parents now find themselves having to fund raise not only for extras or options but for basics, including computers and learning resources, what does the minister consider appropriate in terms of fundraising, and what are the basics that his government commits to providing?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton public school board will be receiving about $577 million this year, and that is an increase from $560 million last year. Those are the anticipated numbers notwithstanding any changes or fluctuations in class sizes.

Now, what I want to clarify for the hon. member, however, is this. We have a policy in this province where we as a government and we as a Ministry of Education provide the funds necessary for the essentials in K to 12 education, for the basics. Anything over and above that which is determined to be nonessential or extra they are allowed to fund raise for. That would include things like yearbooks or band uniforms or athletic uniforms or perhaps other things that are outside the normal envelope, Mr. Speaker. In that respect, we have a lot of community organizations who want to contribute. We have a lot of parents who don't want to be disenfranchised from augmenting their child's educational opportunities. So we work together with a number of partners to provide the best education system anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Elsalhy: Given that there is growing concern, Mr. Speaker, that fundraising expectations will constantly increase as school buildings and equipment get older over time, is it this minister's position that school councils and parent groups should be prepared to fund raise even more come next year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we had quite a chat about this with the Alberta School Boards Association. They made it very clear that they have a policy that they would like us to adhere to, and that is to not prohibit parents and parent council groups from fund raising should they find it necessary in their community to do so. That formula has worked extremely well. You know what? In terms of the public education dollars that we put in, did you know that Alberta provides the most money per student in K to 12 education anywhere in Canada, and Alberta provides the most money per capita as well, per student and per capita, and $5.3 billion will be going into K to 12 education this year. We're very proud of that, but we don't say no to those who want to augment some special nonessentials or extras for their children.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 44 per cent of those who responded said that the funds they raise are predominantly spent on maintenance and upgrades of playground equipment, does the minister agree that this is an area of responsibility that is more appropriately picked up by his department rather than off-loading it onto the backs of parents who are (a) exhausted from too much fundraising already and (b) may not have the expertise or knowledge necessary to properly look after school playgrounds?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are other programs that can be accessed through the government website other than Education. There are other websites such as the community facility enhancement program or the community initiatives program where playgrounds can in fact be jointly sponsored for funding through our lottery program. That program works extremely well, and we're very proud of it. It provides millions of dollars for community-use playgrounds. The playgrounds that are being referred to are shared by the municipality, by the community, by the neighbourhoods, and by Education. We all have a share in it, and we're very proud of those partnerships. That's why we have such successful students, and that's why our results, be they provincially, nationally, or internationally, are always right at the top because we do care.

The Acting Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Confidentiality of Ministerial Briefing Notes

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The secrecy of this Conservative government has given the province global notoriety. The NDP opposition has asked Toby Mendel, a leading international authority, to review the proposed changes to Alberta's FOIP law. Mr. Mendel is the law program director of Article 19, which is a London-based organization which defends and promotes freedom of expression and access to information all over the world. My questions are to the Premier. Given that an international expert on access to information states that blanket exemptions from disclosure violate international standards on public openness, how can the Premier justify using closure to ram through a blanket exemption for ministerial briefing notes in this Assembly?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Premier, you are aware that we will be dealing with this bill in debate.

Mr. Klein: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: You may proceed.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. I would reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is on the Order Paper, and indeed the New Democrats have promised to make Bill 20 the number one issue until the end of the session.

Relative to the preamble, this is a very narrow point. This isn't a widespread point. This is a very narrow point. Now, the NDP opposition and the Liberals want this briefing book. In the briefing book is advice to the minister; for instance, government appointments to boards and agencies. I've never referred to it, but you're giving me the opportunity now. The opposition says that it will raise the issue of patronage appointments to boards, agencies during the session, and they did. So I have some recommended responses here. I have some recommended responses, which were given to me by my deputy. My deputy.

Mr. Martin: It's not your deputy.

Mr. Klein: Yes, it's my deputy. It's not your deputy; it's my deputy. We are the government. You are not the government. You are the opposition. Your only justification, your only reason for living is to criticize and to seek information provided in this briefing book so they can use it. They are too lazy – too lazy – to do their own research. They want us to do it for them.

Mr. Mason: I'm actually going to miss this, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I want to ask the Premier: why is he ignoring the Legislative Assembly's own Privacy Commissioner, who says that we should not be exempting these briefing books, if not because it's the outgoing government's plan to securely padlock the Tory skeletons in the closet to ensure a trouble-free retirement?

Mr. Klein: There are no skeletons in the closet, Mr. Speaker. This is advice, and it is considered as advice when we develop policy or legislation, or we may ignore the advice altogether. But I'll tell you what these guys would do. [interjections] Are you listening? If they're listening, I'll tell you what they'd do. They would use this advice as a matter of fact. They would say: this is what the government is planning to do. In other words, I say that yes means yes, maybe means yes, and no means maybe. To them everything is yes: yes, this is what the government will do. So we would wind up defending advice that never may see the light of day, that never will become policy. We would end up defending this advice. That's what they want.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if this government has no skeletons in the closet, then why does it classify more information than the CIA?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea what the CIA classifies.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Premier, the CIA is not within the purview of this Assembly, but if you'd like to respond, go ahead.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development in regard to the competitiveness of the forest industry. The increased cost of production, the shortage of employable staff, the transportation to markets, and the rising cost of the Canadian dollar have caused some challenges for the forest industry in regard to competitiveness. Can the minister please tell us what his department is doing in this regard?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The forest industry competitiveness is becoming an increasing challenge for the industry. Certainly, because the industry is so predominant in Alberta, it's a problem for today's economy as well. To answer the hon. member's question directly, we are engaged with the Alberta forest industry to address the whole question of competitiveness in a global marketplace. A competitiveness review has been undertaken by my department and the Alberta Forest Products Association, and it will consider a full range of possibilities that have been outlined by the hon. member.

Certainly, the hon. member has mentioned some pressures that are very real today, and we want to do a thorough examination of those pressures and identify them so that we can have a go-forward plan. The softwood lumber framework will affect each of our producers in different ways, so we must do an entire analysis that takes in all parts of our industry. We are discussing that with the industry. We will continue to discuss the impact as it applies to each member of the industry and try to provide the solutions that they need to remain competitive.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In regard to adding value to product, our government and your department have been very cognizant of adding value, yet in the industry we have people that are closing down their businesses. Could you please tell me which way the government is looking at this?

Mr. Coutts: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, that's a part of our next steps. We'll do the competitive review. We'll look at costs. We'll look at revenue. We'll look at the costs for operations. Then we'll take a look at the marketplace to see how the products that we're producing today might fit that marketplace. As a reverse, we're working with the Department of Economic Development to look at potential for markets elsewhere. If we have the kind of product at our forest floor that can suit that marketplace and then we can adapt our processes here so that that product can be made to fit that market, that will certainly help our situation. This is a joint initiative between industry and the government to go forward so that the competitiveness can be minimized here in Alberta.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: through our negotiations with the United States, could he please tell us how the forest industry is going to become more competitive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I wasn't listening to which minister he was asking.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, as we go forward, the information that we get from this competitiveness panel that has been set up and our association in working with the industry in terms of that pressure, the softwood lumber issue, and the framework that has been set out – the framework provides certainty. That's something that the industry has been looking forward to for a long time. We'll take all of that into consideration as we move forward, but our first premise has got to be to work very, very closely with the industry, which we have promised to do. We will also work with our rural MLAs as a go-forward program to make sure that they're in tune with what the industry wants and needs and what we can deliver together as a government for the future of a very important industry in Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Did the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations want to supplement?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I met with teachers and parents from schools in my constituency that are in the midst of preparing their budgets for the next school year. Their major concern is that as they set aside a big chunk of the money in their budget for teaching, as they should, almost 90 per cent, that leaves only about 10 per cent for services, supplies, and equipment, squeezing that part of their budget. Of course, parents will have to get involved in fundraising to make up the shortfall. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister explain what percentage of a school's budget should be raised through fees and fundraising?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the School Act certainly allows school boards to work with their local schools, presumably through their superintendents, to assess any sort of fees that they feel are necessary, and they want that flexibility at the local level. They want to be able to do that kind of fee levying if they so wish. Now, there's a wide range of application of that particular policy throughout the province of Alberta. I think you would probably see tens or twenties of millions of dollars being raised in that way.

Now, for example, let me just take the issue of fees for school textbooks. It used to be the case years ago where we might have provided those textbooks for free. You know, Mr. Speaker, they went missing. They went mutilated. They went underappreciated in many cases. As a result, a policy came in and said: "Why don't we try and rent those books to students and charge a deposit? Maybe the students and whoever else has them will take better care of them." That has been very successful. In fact, that issue of raising monies is secondary, in my opinion, to the appreciation of the value, if you will, that students are garnering for materials put into their charge. So there's a wide range of application of this policy throughout this province. The act allows it, and school boards appreciate the flexibility.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that schools in wealthier communities may have the resources to do what the minister is saying that they have the opportunity to do, what happens to schools in areas that are poorer, with fewer resources? What about the inequality within the system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. That's exactly why we moved to the system of education we have now, where every student is funded to the same basic level no matter where in the province they live, no matter how much money comes or doesn't come from the education property tax base for that particular area.

What I would like to do is just direct the member and all members to this wonderful pamphlet called the Renewed Funding Framework, which, by the way, is under review as we speak. In it you will find all of the different examples of equitable funding, whether it's additional funding for the daily physical activity program; for mild, moderate, special needs or gifted; for ESL; for enrolment declines; for enrolment growth; for First Nations, Métis, Inuit learners; for francophone equivalency; for francization; for Hutterite colonies; for interjurisdictional. It goes on and on, and it's equal across the board for all.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the hon. minister, given his background as a teacher, whether he's ever been involved in a school's budget process and experienced the pain of having to cut back programs and personnel because of government underfunding.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, when you teach courses like languages – French and Ukrainian – which I taught, when you teach courses like English, when you teach courses like music and drama, you learn very quickly how to fight for dollars in the school system.

At the time that I taught, many of those courses were optional, absolutely optional, which meant that you had to not only struggle to get some of your budget dollars in those days; you also had to struggle to get student enrolments in some cases. We worked very hard at that. But look at where we are today, with the best education system anywhere in Canada and one of the best education systems in the world, with consistently improving results. Our high school completion rates are on the way up, and our teacher level of appreciation and our student and parent levels of appreciation are all on the way up. There is so much good news in education. I acknowledge that there are a few problem areas, and we are working on those.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Alternative Highway through the Rockies

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend a rock slide closed the Trans-Canada highway between the Alberta-B.C. border and Golden. This caused significant delays, long detours, and added a lot of costs for motorists using the Trans-Canada highway. It's the only highway through the mountains in this area. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Are alternate highway routes being looked at so that motorists don't have to be stranded during these rock slides and avalanches?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there is an alternate route that has been looked at for a number of years. As a matter of fact, if you go back and look at the history of the CPR, when they sent the people out from Ottawa to survey, to look at where the best place is to go through the mountains to the west coast, the Howse Pass was identified as the prime route because it's a shorter distance to the coast than going around the way they do through Golden. Also, it is the lowest pass in the mountains to get through. When you think about the grade and the cost of going up and over, it's quite substantial. Not only that, but it is a very easy route to build. Quite frankly, when the federal government announced some years back that they were going to twin highway 1, spending millions of dollars per kilometre because that is an extremely expensive road to build through, we talked to the federal government at that time about looking at the Howse Pass because the cost is considerably less. It would alleviate the problem with rock slides. There would be no rock slides if, in fact, this route was built. I've been through there about three times, and I can assure you that it's not a difficult route to build. So, yes, there are other routes being looked at, and we will continue to look at them.

Mr. Prins: My next question to the same minister: how is the latest set of discussions among these other levels of politicians going to be any different than the ones we've had for the last 50 years?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the most recent study by municipalities in the central area plus the provincial government did do a fair assessment of the cost-benefit analysis. It was determined that for every dollar spent, there would be a return of about $2.14. That is a very good return. I believe that this would be an excellent candidate for a toll road because when you look at the distances, that saves some 75 kilometres, a saving in distance rather than going around through Calgary and through the number 1. So you've got that distance.

Anybody that's really, really concerned about the environment would be supporting this because the fact is that the amount of fuel that is used to go this route is considerably less than going the other routes, where you have to elevate considerably no matter which way you're going. You've got to climb the hills, and that costs a lot of money if you're driving a truck. This route is one that would be good for the environment. When I've been through there, the amount of wildlife is minimal. Of course, there would have to be environmental assessments done before it could be done.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: do you really believe that the federal government and the B.C. government would be willing to spend money for a project that would benefit Albertans?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I shared the information, the study, with the B.C. government when we had the joint cabinet meeting. We've also shared it with the federal government. But I believe that neither government has to invest any money. I believe that this would be just an excellent toll road. We are prepared to assist. If some investor came along, we would be prepared to assist in getting the necessary permits. Of course, there has to be a lot of work done with the federal government because a portion of it goes through the park.

Like I said, if people are really interested in the environment and reducing the CO₂ emissions, they would support this, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Blood-borne and Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the same time that this government complains about spiralling health care costs, they ignore many opportunities to drive costs down by improving and promoting public health. Part of this government's health strategy from last fall, for example, involved launching a strategy to tackle HIV, hepatitis, and sexually transmitted diseases, but community groups are still waiting for the strategy and a funding decision. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the major sexually transmitted diseases and HIV are on the rise – and in some cases the rates are doubling – why is the minister waiting so long to implement the blood-borne pathogen and sexually transmitted infection strategy?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member quite properly identifies the alarming escalation in not only STDs but in all the various things that have been associated. Sexually transmitted diseases are a critical concern. We have been examining not only how we tackle that issue from an administrative perspective with the regions but also looking at some of the other associated issues with mental health and with addictions. In all of these areas we're going to make sure that the programs that we target will have the broadest impact.

I'm going to give a comparator. When we passed Bill 1, the cancer legacy project, we identified that chronic disease management, wellness management between cancer, diabetes, heart and stroke should be packaged in a way that we could maximize the benefit of targeting wellness initiatives so that many of those who would be benefactors of wellness initiatives would be collaborative in their approach. So here once again is an opportunity on STDs to be collaborative because of the target audience.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just make another observation. I think it's really important that we clarify that the kinds of ads, the kinds of initiatives that will target and improve, hopefully, the wellness of those people that might be engaged in risky practices, risky sexual behaviour have not only got the right opportunity to educate and make aware but that we make sure they are contiguous with the morals and values that Albertans hold; in other words, they must be appropriate types of advertisements. I was not satisfied that we were quite ready for that type of exposure yet.

Ms Blakeman: A lot of talk.

When is the government going to validate its commitment to HIV and increase funding for community-based HIV prevention and support? When?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think I've indicated that we will be able to come forward with a program. We've got a lot of work that has been done by our medical officers of health, but in terms of making further announcements, it's premature still at this point. I'd like to say, though, that although we haven't increased or made any overtures on the program in recent weeks, there's been a lot of work that's been done. It does not mean that they are less valid as issues. It means that we must be ready to make sure that the program in place is the one that maximizes the benefit of the dollars spent.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the minister: what assurance can the minister give that the Alberta community HIV fund will remain in place and be community driven rather than taken over by the RHAs?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the tone of the question somewhat puzzles me because regional health authorities have been not only legally obligated but, I think, charged with the responsibility of delivering health care in Alberta. To the greatest extent possible I think that they're doing an admirable job. Co-ordination of these activities is an important thing at the local level so that we focus on the priorities that are most important to the people within a region, and regional priority setting is one of the very best reasons to have regional health authorities. So I'm somewhat puzzled that the question infers that there should not be involvement of regional health authorities. I think, rather, it has to be complementary with Alberta Health and Wellness, those people that are advocacy groups, the regional health authorities, and we're looking to broaden the impact of how we provide these kinds of dollars and advance the policies with all of the partners in place.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The federal minister responsible for the softwood lumber industry gave the impression that the new deal with the U.S. is less than perfect. The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is on record as saying that he is cautiously optimistic. My first question is to the minister. Does the minister still feel that a deal can be moved forward by June in light of the federal minister's comments?

Mr. Mar: I remain cautiously optimistic on this file, Mr. Speaker. But the federal minister is correct. This is not an ideal framework that we have for the settlement of the softwood lumber dispute. It is a compromise. It is not free trade, which would be an ideal framework for Alberta and the Canadian lumber industry, but it is managed trade. Under this framework Canada will get back 80 per cent of the duties that have been paid thus far, and the United States' commitment is that they will not bring forward any more trade actions for the seven- to nine-year period that this framework is set in place. But we still have the possibility of facing potential limits on our access to the U.S. market. We do need to have an end to this dispute. The framework agreement will give us one, and we're working through the details to ensure that our Alberta industry's concerns are expressed as best as we can make them to ensure that the industry continues to be strong in this province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Is there a role for the Alberta industry as our provincial government and federal government work together to a final agreement?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's forest industry has certainly been kept well apprised of our conduct of this file. Both the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and I have made a commitment to the industry to keep them informed. We are working closely with our industry representatives to develop Alberta's input to federal officials as they continue to work on finalizing the deal with the United States. The Alberta government will advocate to the best of its ability on behalf of the industry to ensure that the industry is not unduly disadvantaged. Certainly, the industry in this province has not been shy about sharing with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and myself what their concerns are. We will carry those forward on their behalf. There has been very close co-operation between government and industry on this file, and they can continue to expect that kind of co-operation from the government of Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister explain how your department is working with the Alberta Forest Products Association re the softwood lumber deal?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Forest Products Association is representative of a $12 billion industry in this province. The representatives that sit on the board of directors along with their executive director have worked very, very closely with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and our own department to make sure that the vision that the industry has to expand on that $12 billion industry will continue to thrive even through working out the details on the softwood lumber.

The industry itself has met with us on two occasions, and they will continue to meet with us as these details progress. I can guarantee the hon. member, as I have guaranteed the Alberta Forest Products Association, that we will continue that dialogue because it's so important because of the small operators, medium-sized operators, and the big operators that represent this viable industry in Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are about 50,000 apprentices in our apprenticeship system in Alberta right now. Only about 4,500 will graduate this year. The dropout rate is appalling, and the government would not release statistics on first-year leavers in Public Accounts a few weeks ago. In many workplaces apprentices are being hired to work without journeymen, are not getting proper training, and are let go after a few months even though the contractor is charging top rate for their work. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. What will the minister do to enforce journeyman-apprentice ratios, that are being ignored on so many construction job sites?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the sky is not falling. In fact, this morning there were people that were up pretty much as early as I was to line up to fill our institutions to take apprenticeships.

In relation to enforcing those particular regulations, what we're trying to do is work with industry to find ways of being able to have more apprentices in the system. As you well know, we have shortages of technical folks throughout the province, and we're working with industry to create more spots for these people.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what measures will the minister put in place to end the abuses and ensure that apprentices get well-rounded, varied apprenticeship training on all job sites?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has information that there are jobs sites where people are not getting good, solid training, then I wish he would bring them forward instead of making allegations that are essentially unfounded. So please bring it forward because I think our apprenticeship system is the first and leading apprenticeship system in Canada.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what will the minister do to ensure that temporary foreign contractors that utilize tradespeople on oil sands jobs actually participate in our apprenticeship training system?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member wants to look at the way that these temporary workers are brought in. First of all, they have to all be qualified under the 20 trades that are compulsory trades in this province.

You know, it's interesting. When I found out about this particular issue several months ago, I decided to find out for myself what it was really all about, so I asked some trade union folks to come and meet with me, and I couldn't believe what they were telling me. They were telling me that in the case of one particular trade, they had over a thousand people on the spare board, and in the case of another trade there were 1,200 people on the spare board. I said: well what's wrong with this picture? Well, the problem is that they're only available for closed-shop environments.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Arts Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's only sense of culture is one of entitlement and secrecy. Under the previous Community Development minister the arts community was assured a province-wide arts and culture policy, and there was a legitimate expectation that it would be attached to a sustainable funding model. Instead, what the government has offered are one-off centennial infrastructure projects cast as arts funding. My questions are to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance. Given that Statistics Canada ranks Alberta last for per capita public funding for the arts and given that the entire budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is a third of what the horse-racing industry is getting, will the minister explain why a single industry or enterprise gets three times what an entire sector gets?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta arts and culture community is a recipient of lottery dollars. It comes in a direct grant and is distributed through that. I'm very proud of the arts community in this province. I represent personally a very rural community, all rural communities, and in fact we have cultural experience there that would not be available to us were it not for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. I'm talking about the travelling programs and performers that come to our very fine albeit small cultural facilities. I see every community that puts on a play, whether it's a musical or anything else, across the breadth of this province being supported by the Alberta Foundation for the Arts.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make one thing very clear. The Minister of Gaming has said this, but obviously the member missed it: if you don't put a quarter in a slot machine, if you don't lay a wager on a horse in this province, the horse-racing industry will get nothing.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pride, yes, but where is the change?

To the same minister: given that the Department of Community Development's own business plan states that hundreds of millions of dollars and thousands of full-time jobs are added to Alberta's economy through funding the arts and culture community, how can the minister justify the government's indifference to the arts with bare-bones, short-term funding?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't accept that there's any indifference to the arts and cultural community in this province by this government. As a previous minister responsible for that I could speak with some authority in that area. I can also speak to the fact that about every person in this province would attend about four cultural events, so over 13 million, 14 million in participation. That's phenomenal. But I'm also proud of the private sector and the corporate sector and the volunteer sector in this province, that also contribute to the arts in a big way in all of our communities.

Mr. Speaker, we have a thriving arts community. It will be seen by millions at the Smithsonian in Washington at the end of June and the first week in July. There's not another province in Canada that has had this opportunity. In fact, I don't believe the Canadian government has had this opportunity. That's a pure recognition of the arts community and the value that this government places on that community.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm afraid the minister's answers confirm the fears of the arts community here.

Last question to the same minister: given the skyrocketing utility and maintenance costs of theatres and art facilities, why is this government failing to protect smaller theatres and arts venues from possible bankruptcies or, worse still, having to close down and mothball these vital facilities?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, as I indicated, we have an Alberta Foundation for the Arts that has a long history of supporting the arts in this province. I don't know of another province in Canada that has a similar foundation that is operated by a volunteer board of directors, and they provide funding to a number in our arts community.

Again, I can't stand here and listen to members opposite criticize the arts and cultural community in this province. Go to Washington at the end of June, the first part of July. Try to understand why this province is being recognized at one of the largest festivals in North America for sure. It's because of a wonderful and vibrant arts community.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the first of six speakers for Members' Statements, today's vignette is on the Speakers of the province of Alberta. There have been only 11 Speakers of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta over our first 100 years.

Charles Wellington Fisher, a Liberal Member for Banff, was elected as the first Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on March 15, 1906. Fisher served for 13 years and is the second longest serving Speaker in Alberta history. He died in 1919, a victim of the Spanish flu epidemic.

Our second Speaker was Charles Steuart Pingle, a Liberal Member for Redcliff, first elected to the Assembly in 1913. He was elected Speaker in 1920 and served as the Speaker for only 499 days. He is the second shortest serving Speaker in the Legislative Assembly history.

Oran "Tony" McPherson, our third Speaker, was elected to the Assembly in 1921 as the Member for Little Bow and represented the United Farmers of Alberta. He was elected Speaker in 1922 and served in that capacity until 1926. He was the first Speaker to have attended university and the first to exercise the casting vote. To date, he is the youngest person, at age 35, to hold the position of Speaker in Alberta.

George Norman Johnston, the Member for Coronation, was first elected to the Assembly in 1921 and served as Speaker from 1927 to 1935. Our fourth Speaker was the last member of the United Farmers of Alberta to occupy the role. His rulings declaring certain language unparliamentary were the first to be reported in our parliamentary records.

Nathan Eldon Tanner, the Member for Cardston and representing the Social Credit Party, became the fifth Speaker of the Legislative Assembly in 1936. He presided over only 46 sitting days and 333 calendar days, the shortest tenure of any Speaker, before being appointed as minister of lands and mines. He is thought to be the first member of the Mormon faith to serve as Speaker in the British Commonwealth.

Peter Dawson, the Member for Little Bow representing the Social Credit Party, was elected speaker in 1937, becoming the sixth Speaker of the Assembly. He is the longest-serving Speaker of the Assembly, with a tenure of 26 years, or 9,523 calendar days. He died in office in 1963 while the House was in session and was the first Speaker to lie in state in the Legislature Building.

Arthur Johnson Dixon, first elected as the Member for Calgary in 1952, served in the role of Speaker from 1963 to 1972. He was the seventh Speaker of the Legislative Assembly and the first to have previously held the position of Deputy Speaker. He was the last Social Credit member to hold the office. Mr. Dixon was appointed as a Member of the Order of Canada in 1979.

Gerard Joseph Amerongen, the Member for Edmonton-Meadow-lark, was first elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1971 representing the Progressive Conservative Party. He was elected the eighth Speaker of the Assembly in 1972 and served until 1986, the only member to have served his entire term of office as Speaker. In 1972 he presided over the introduction of both Alberta Hansard and the televising of Assembly proceedings.

David John Carter, the Member for Calgary-Egmont, was first elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1979, representing the Progressive Conservative Party. He became Alberta's ninth Speaker in 1986 and served in that capacity until 1993. He oversaw the Assembly taking responsibility for visitor and educational programs and the publication of the book The Alberta Legislature: A Celebration in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the opening of the Legislature Building.

Alberta's 10th Speaker, Stanley Stanford Schumacher, was elected as the Member for Drumheller in 1986 and was the first Speaker elected by secret ballot in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1993. The first Alberta-born Speaker, he was also the first with previous experience as a Member of Parliament. He served in the role until 1997.

Our current Speaker was first elected as the Member for Barrhead in a by-election in 1979. He was the first Speaker in Alberta whose term was preceded by service as a cabinet minister. He also served as Deputy Premier from December 1992 to October 1994. He was elected Speaker on April 14, 1997, in the first contested secret ballot election for the role. He is the 11th Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the longest serving member of all those serving in the 26th Legislature. As of today, hon. members, he has served 3,319 calendar days, making him the fourth longest serving Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Of current Speakers in Canada he is the longest serving Speaker, with over eight years of service, and has the longest continuous service as a member, approaching almost 27 years. He is the only Speaker in Alberta history during whose tenure the reigning monarch and the Governor General have spoken in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Members' Statements

Prevention of Domestic Violence

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today in this Chamber to recognize the spirit, the dedication, and the tenacity of five individuals who live in my constituency. Domestic violence is a problem which knows no boundaries. People from all walks of life who live in large cities and small towns have been subject to domestic violence.

In order to do something about domestic violence in our province, five ladies from the constituency of Highwood decided to enter one of the most gruelling overland races in the world, the Canadian Death Race. During the August long weekend this five-person team called SLAP, Stop Letting Abuse Prevail, will each be running a leg of this very challenging race. To quote the race organizers themselves, the Canadian Death Race "consists of 125 kms, three mountain summits and over 17,000 ft of elevation change as well as

Heather Boyd, Jessie Anderson, Kim Anderson, Lynne Mason, and Cathy Vickery will be running for two reasons. Firstly, they are hoping that having a team in the Death Race where only one member has had any prior experience in extreme racing will raise awareness of the problem of domestic violence. Secondly, SLAP is using their entrance into the race as a way to raise funds for the Eagle Women's Emergency Shelter, located in the foothills area. This shelter is a short-term facility designed to provide support and lodging to women and children who have been victims of violence.

I would ask that all members give their support to this team and recognize the importance of their goals. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Alberta Book Awards

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Alberta's amazing authors and publishers. Over the weekend I had the privilege to attend the 2006 Alberta book awards. The awards ceremony, which was attended by over 200 members of Alberta's literary community, honoured and celebrated the achievements of our writers and publishers throughout the year. Awards were given in 16 categories, including awards for writers, publishers, and designers.

The evening also featured the presentation of the Alberta government's Grant MacEwan literary awards, which gives $25,000 to an Alberta author and four $2,500 scholarships to Alberta students. The awards were created to honour the legacy of Dr. MacEwan and his legendary love for our province and for the written word. This year's winner of the $25,000 Grant MacEwan author's award was Birk Sproxton of Red Deer. The young writers' scholarships were awarded to Rachelle Delaney of Edmonton, Carley Okamura of Edmonton, Lena Schuck of Calgary, and Jackie Tan of Calgary.

I would like to thank the Writers Guild of Alberta and the Book Publishers Association of Alberta for organizing such an enchanting evening. These two organizations both receive annual operating support from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts.

The nominees and winners for this year's awards are just a sample of the incredible talent of our literary community, publishers and writers alike, and are deserving of our appreciation and support.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the members of the House to join me in congratulating the winners and nominees from this year's Alberta book awards. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

211 Telephone Help Line

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an important service that is hidden from the limelight. This year, 2006, is the first anniversary of the 211 telephone line for information and referral services connecting callers to human services they need.

Just simply dial 211, and a caller gets connected to the complete network of care in Calgary, including more than 4,000 community, social, and government-related services. The line 211 is free, confidential, and multilingual, offering assistance in more than 150 languages 24 hours a day, seven days a week. In its first year it provided assistance for 30,000 callers.

Calgary is a fast daily growing community, reaching a million and beyond. Newcomers do not know where to turn for help before a situation becomes a crisis. It can be very difficult even for long-time residents of Calgary to access the wide range of resources that exist. Sometimes it's hard to know where to start looking or even what's available. Talking to a trained specialist makes it easier to find information, discover options, and deal with problems.

The 211 operation handles an average of 580 callers per week of all ages, backgrounds, and needs. Everyone benefits from 211 from individuals, families, professionals to community agencies and people facing barriers due to lack of knowledge, language, poverty, and personal difficulty. The 211 operation has assisted callers in personal situations.

I would like to ask our hon. members to join me in congratulating those individuals who work in the 211 operation and the organization leaders who initiated it and contribute to the services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Inspirational Poem

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Oilers of the past few weeks have been an expression of pure poetry on ice: the grit, the emotion, the pure fluid movement of released feelings in people that are often not expressed. Last Friday I passed on two periods of a great Oilers game, that I later watched, to witness the poetry, acting, light, dance, and a fine meal at John Bracco junior high school. It is a school with an outstanding and inspiring arts program in northeast Edmonton. Pure delight beamed from the broad and happy smiles on the faces of both the performers and the audience when they gave a standing ovation at the end of the performance of Feeling Groovy.

One of the young actors in Feeling Groovy is a talented young poet who gave me a poem to read. It is called Change, and this is how it goes:

I stared back at what I once was, focused on few now has grew from little to more spread out to a median nearly the same, good at all, best at none one away from allowed so close in all
 no longer alone
 the distinct feeling of my soul lay rest to endurance with time increased speed diminished and a push to retreat
 I continue forth training to the end Pushing,
 Fighting . . .
 Changing.

Alexander John Paul Pacan Pezzutto, grade 9, John Bracco junior high school.

Thank you, Mr. Pezzutto, for your poem, which will be published in Hansard, the official record of our Legislature. Poetry can be inspiring. I will send this statement to the Edmonton Oilers for their inspiring playoff run. I hope the Oilers this week will be pushing forward, fighting in the corners, and constantly changing their game as they work for victory.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Alberta Dental Association and College Centennial

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would take this opportunity to acknowledge the Alberta Dental Association and College's centennial, which marks for this great organization 100 years of providing dentistry to the public of Alberta. On May 9, 1906, the Alberta Legislature voted its approval of the Alberta Dental Association, which later became the Alberta Dental Association and College in 2001.

However, the 1906 approval was not the beginning of dentistry in this great land, Mr. Speaker. The first dentist on record in the area that we now call Alberta was Dr. Frederick Shaw, who was born in Kentville, Nova Scotia, in 1856 and graduated from the New York Dental College in 1878. After joining the North West Mounted Police in 1879, Sergeant Shaw served at Fort Walsh in the Cypress Hills, located today on the border between southern Alberta and Saskatchewan. Likely the most notable patient he attended to was the famous Chief Sitting Bull, who required two teeth to be extracted to relieve pain. This was after the 1876 Battle of the Little Bighorn, which Chief Sitting Bull is often remembered for.

In part to commemorate their centennial, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Dental Association and College is donating $3 million to finance the lifetime endowment for a chair in geriatric oral health and a chair in clinical dentistry research, both at the University of Alberta. The chair in geriatric oral health has been complemented by the recent approval by Alberta Seniors and Community Supports for a pilot program for mobile dental clinics to be used at senior centres. The association has stated that access to quality dentistry care for all Albertans is a prime motivator of this gift. As such, this generous donation of funds will be considered for matching through the Alberta access to the future endowment program.

Mr. Speaker, dentists play an important role in our society, and with representation through the Alberta Dental Association and College and measures such as the recent endowment, it is clear that they are making this province a much better place. I invite all members to join me in commending Alberta's dentists for 100 years of service to this great province.

2:50 Oil Sands Development

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's lack of a coherent long-term plan for oil sands development is causing uncertainty about how important environmental, social, and economic questions will be resolved and how problems in each of those areas ought to be addressed.

The Alberta NDP is suggesting the establishment of a royal commission on oil sands development. The commission would be composed of distinguished Albertans from diverse backgrounds and would undertake broad, public consultation and educational efforts. The primary focus of the commission's work would be to ensure that the oil sands development serves the interests of Albertans, including future generations, ahead of any other considerations. As such, a review of the current royalty regime would be an important part of the commission's work.

Albertans are concerned that the current pace of development is socially, economically, and environmentally unsustainable. Skyrocketing housing prices in Fort McMurray, labour shortages across the province, and the re-emergence of inflation are but a few indications of an overheated economy.

We must also be conscious of the environmental cost of oil sands development and find ways to develop this resource without jeopardizing the value of a clean and well-protected environment. Every barrel of oil taken from oil sands requires at least two barrels of water and a large volume of natural gas. The current gold-rush mentality must be replaced with clear answers for the significant environmental, social, and economic questions facing oil sands development.

A royal commission on the oil sands would be ideal for combining expert advice and popular input to develop a long-term development strategy for the oil sands, which would ensure long-term prosperity and environmental sustainability for future generations of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare. This one has 5,113 signatures. It was signed by people eager to see the end of the so-called third-way health care reforms and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance, to not allow doctors to work in both the private and public system, and to oppose any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act. The NDP opposition has now tabled 14,751 signatures on this petition.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I table the appropriate number of copies of the Northern Alberta Development Council Annual Report for 2004-2005. The NADC is involved with numerous projects on transportation, value-added agriculture, tourism, educational initiatives, and interjurisdictional projects. The work of the council is extremely important as it advocates on behalf of northerners and works with other government ministries to develop and implement strategies to take advantage of economic, business, and social opportunities in the north.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month during Committee of Supply I made a commitment to respond more fully to the questions that were raised, and today I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of that response. Also, for your information, I have circulated this to the appropriate members as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a document on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition. It's a statement, Nine Principles Underpinning Freedom of Information Legislation, prepared by Toby Mendel, the law program director of Article 19, a London-based NGO that defends and promotes freedom of expression and access to information all over the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter dated May 15, 2006, from myself to Mr. Dunn, the Auditor General. In this letter I am requesting that the Auditor General under section 20 of the Auditor General Act investigate the purchase and subsequent sale of surplus ring road lands in both Edmonton and Calgary.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter that was written to me dated May 14, 2006, from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Cheryl Torgalson, who draws our attention to the situation which arises when a student, like her daughter Dana, lives just outside the school intake zone cut-off and gets entered in a lottery even though the school does have space. She also comments that the waiting list mechanism has been cancelled. Her letter raises a few good points, one of which is when people use other people's addresses to cheat the system, and asks: what are we really teaching our kids here?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of Alberta's Provincial Parks and Protected Areas Economic Impact Report 2002. This FOIPed report clearly shows a significant economic return for a relatively small investment. I would urge the new Minister of Community Development for the sake of transparency, accountability, and efficiency to post future reports on his ministry's website.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Dental Disciplines Act the Alberta Dental Hygienists' Association 2005 Annual Report, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses 2004-05 annual report with attached financial statements for the year ended September 30, 2005, and the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta 2005 Annual Report.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with Orders of the Day, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly today a young man, Ian Van Haren. He is working with me this summer as one of my constituency assistants in the Lacombe-Ponoka office in Lacombe. He was born and raised in Lacombe and currently attends university in New Brunswick. I have known this young man for most of my life and look forward to working with him this summer. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Joseph Pitt. He's a decorated veteran who served our country for 27 years, including some time at Normandy. Mr. Pitt is here today to bring attention to the broken promises he has experienced as a result of land expropriation and flooding. I would ask Mr. Joseph Pitt to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly an entrepreneur and a keen observer of all levels of government. My guest today, Mr. Merle Schnee, is from this fine hockey city of Edmonton. Mr. Schnee has served as the president of the firefighters, where he brought their concerns to the attention of the government of the day. I would ask my guest, Mr. Merle Schnee, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four government motions that I would like to deal with this afternoon. With your permission I'll do them one at a time, starting with Government Motion 21, oral notice having been given yesterday with respect to the revised Standing Orders from the Speaker's office.

Revised Standing Orders

21. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, denoted as being effective April 11, 2005, be repealed in their entirety and the Standing Orders tabled in the Assembly on May 15, 2006, and distributed to members be substituted in their place. The revised Standing Orders come into force on the first day of the next sitting of the Assembly following the adjournment of the 2006 spring sitting.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much for the opportunity to speak to Government Motion 21, which is to update the Standing Orders. We have been referring unofficially to these, with your permission, as the Speaker's revisions because a great deal of work was done by the table officers and I think the staff of the Speaker's office to go through and really clean up the Standing Orders, to capitalize things that should be capitalized, to watch for any typos or type case changes, to correct for name changes, et cetera.

We did get an opportunity to review these back last fall and I think again in the early winter. I did in fact go through every single change that was in here, and our caucus did agree to this. Our concern, of course, is always that what we looked at back then is exactly what we have before us at this time, but I'm comfortable if the Speaker is bringing these forward, well, not officially bringing them forward, that what we looked at is what is in front of us.

In context, Mr. Speaker, these Standing Orders are important to every member of this Assembly because they allow us to conduct our business in an orderly fashion. The parliamentary process rules are always slanted to the advantage of government, which allows the business of the day to move forward, but that is always balanced with provisions that make sure of and protect and uphold the ability of the minority and minorities in this Assembly to have procedures that support their ability to have their voices heard.

We know that not all things are equal. As I mentioned, the procedural orders do favour the government. It does favour the majority vote. The majority vote wins, and that's the setup that we work with. Therefore, the government is always going to win on those kinds of motions. Obviously, government bills are treated with preference over the way, for example, private members' bills work, which have a much longer timeline. The private members in this Assembly have to have their bill ideas in back in September, which is a disadvantage if you're trying to deal with current affairs. You had to have submitted your idea a substantial number of months ago. You're not always current. But the Standing Orders, again, give you a way of bringing urgent, current issues before the Assembly; for example, the use of Standing Orders 30 and 40, which give you an occasion to ask the Assembly for consent to set aside the ordinary or scheduled order of business to discuss an urgent matter.

That's what's important in a democratic process, that we have rules that we all know and understand that allow us to move the business forward. At the same time, we protect the minorities that are here and give them provision to have a voice and to be able to bring their business before the House in a timely fashion. Sometimes that means in an urgent fashion. There are rules under our Standing Orders that allow us to insist that respect is shown in the House and to call members to order if they feel that has been violated. We all agree to abide by and work under these rules.

I haven't been directly involved in negotiations to change the Standing Orders. I know from my predecessor that that can be somewhat stressful because, again, we have a majority vote, and even if opposition is not keen on some of the provisions, a majority government can vote and pass the Standing Orders without our acquiescence on this. Sometimes that's a difficult situation, and it's hard to accept, especially if things have been put in place that make it more difficult for us to do our job. For example, Mr. Speaker, prior to when I started, there was unlimited speaking time for members when they were participating in debate. Then there was the 30-minute rule. Then when I first started, there was a 20-minute rule. Now we're down to a 15-minute rule plus a new innovation that was added in that allows for an extra five minutes for a sort of Q and A, a bit of a rebuttal session, at the end of a member's 15 minutes.

Speaking to private members' bills, that time has also been reduced from when I started. This is now my 10th spring sitting. We've gone from 15 minutes, I think, and now we're down to 10 minutes. That was not something that we agreed to, obviously, because that restricts our speaking time in the Assembly and our ability to bring forward the points of view of the people that we represent. So we obviously didn't agree to that, but the majority ruled in this case, and the Standing Orders reflected the changes that the government sought.

Overall, as a House leader I appreciate that the rules are there. I think that in most cases they are done for the best of intentions, although they may not appear to work that way. I am not happy with some of the changes that have come forward in the last couple of years that do restrict the members more, but that is not what is before us in the package contained and which we are asked to approve under Motion 21. Those are strictly what we would call typos and grammatical adjustments, and I appreciate the work that many people put into this. I think it does give us, if I may say so, a more professional looking set of Standing Orders. My compliments to those that worked long and hard on it. It can be I think quite a t tedious business going back and forth. Nonetheless, I think it was worth it. My thanks to those that worked hard to present this.

I'm happy to support those changes in the package that has been set before us. As a House leader I have brought some issues before this House occasionally, most recently, I think, within the last week or so in which in the end result I was asking that changes be made to the Standing Orders in the way we work with certain things, in particular in this instance with private members' public bills. I was asking that rather than it being a decision of the Speaker for early consideration of private members' public bills in Committee of the Whole and third, that those in fact come to the floor for a decision of unanimous consent to proceed. When the House leaders meet again, that's something else that I would be looking at.

The other issues that I had started to explore with the previous House leader – I'm not talking out of school here because this is what I think we should be looking at. We know that we are struggling in attracting women members to run for political office. They don't always see this Assembly or a number of other political institutions as particularly family friendly. I don't think that family friendly should be a matter of men or women. I would look forward to the day when more men are equally involved in child rearing and those kinds of decisions. I would welcome that and look forward to it. But there are choices that we have made in the way we conduct our business that I think ultimately prevent people from considering this as an option.

I would like to be exploring, for example, some of the timing. Could we be looking at sitting for three weeks and taking a week out or recessing for a week out of the Assembly to allow those that travel here on a weekly basis and are away from their constituencies and their families to be back in their constituencies for a longer period of time? We are also one of the few jurisdictions that sits at night. That I think is often considered a hardship. It can also be a tool that is used by the opposition to try and get the government to be more willing to work with what's before us, but perhaps that's also preventing some people from considering running for political office.

I think there are some positive changes that we could work toward in Standing Orders. I look forward to that, but at this time I'm happy to accept the package of grammatical and administrative changes that have been proposed by the Speaker. I will support Government Motion 21. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to go on long because it's my understanding – we had these sent to us earlier on – that there's nothing significant here. They are administrative changes. It probably took a lot of work to go through and wordsmith it, I'm sure. We have no objections to that.

I expect at some point, like everything else, that the House leaders should get together and look and see if there are changes that we can make. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you were involved with this the last time. It was '93 that we reviewed, my recollection. I wasn't here then, of course, but that's the last time it changed. I know that the Speaker has suggested from time to time that we look at changes, but there are perhaps changes that we'd all like to make. The House leader of the Official Opposition has suggested some things. I might suggest some other things, but I think that for what we're dealing with right now, we certainly have no problems with Motion 21. Anything that can make it easier to understand and grammatically correct and administratively correct we would support.

There may be a time at some point down the way that the House leaders get together and look and see if there is any review that we can do to perhaps change things for the better in the future. That's time down the way. Certainly, we support Motion 21. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate on Motion 21 this afternoon. Certainly, I would like to remind all House leaders from each respective party of the new Standing Order 53, which is the public accounts referred. Fifty-three states: "Public accounts, when tabled, stand referred to the Public Accounts Committee."

My remarks are certainly not reflective, Mr. Speaker, of the committee. I'm speaking not as chair but as a member of this House. My views are not to be considered a reflection of the committee. However, after the last election in the middle of February I circulated a letter to the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the House leader of the third party, and I was urging that there be some significant changes made. At that time it was Standing Order 50, but now it is, of course, Standing Order 53.

I think it is time. We may have missed it with this rewrite of the public accounts. We may have missed the opportunity of redrafting our Standing Orders, but I would urge the House leaders to sit down and consider the following. First, I think the Standing Committee on Public Accounts should be empowered to examine and inquire into the public accounts, all reports of the Auditor General of Alberta, and all such matters as may be referred to it by the House; to report from time to time and to print a brief appendix to any report after the signature of the chairperson containing such opinions or recommendations dissenting from the report or supplementary to it as may be proposed by committee members; and except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers, and records; to sit while the House is sitting; to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned; to sit jointly with other standing committees; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by them; and to delegate to subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House. This suggestion could simply be Standing Order 53(2).

Now, if I could talk about another idea, we could call it 53(3). The Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall in addition to the powers granted to it pursuant to section 53(2) of the new Standing Order be empowered to study and report on all matters related to the mandate, management, and operation of all departments of government; the committee shall be empowered to review and report on it; also to report on the statute law relating to the departments in question; the program and policy objectives of the departments in question and its effectiveness in the implementation of the same; the immediate, medium, and long-term expenditure plans and effectiveness of implementation of the same by the departments in question; and any and all other matters relating to the mandate, management, organization, or operation of the departments as the committee deems fit. Now, certainly this has been discussed at the Public Accounts Committee meetings.

I think it would be advantageous for another addition to the Standing Orders on Public Accounts, and this one would be, Mr. Speaker, that within 150 days of the presentation of a report from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the government shall upon the request of the committee table a comprehensive response. Also, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts shall be empowered to retain the services of expert, professional, technical, and clerical staff as it may deem necessary.

The Special Standing Committee on Members' Services shall provide all the funds necessary for the effective exercise of the new Standing Order 53.

It is of the utmost importance, Mr. Speaker, that a review of government operations be conducted by a committee of the Legislative Assembly as opposed to a committee of the government caucus. This is because only committees of the Legislative Assembly, such as the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, can provide witnesses such as ministers of the Crown and senior government officials with the parliamentary privilege of immunity from civil action for defamation arising from blunt and controversial statements made by such witnesses. Only if witnesses enjoy the ability to give their full views to the committees of the Legislative Assembly can public policy be fully considered in this province. This is even more important with the changes we're making with Bill 20 and making the government even more secretive. So if we're going to limit the amount of information that can be provided through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, maybe it's time to give the Standing Committee on Public Accounts the power to look at past expenditures of this government and present policy.

Now, we all know that government SPCs don't have parliamentary privilege, and people who come before that committee don't have parliamentary privilege. Perhaps that's why so many of those meetings have to take place behind closed doors. I would urge hon. members of this Assembly to once again consider the Public Accounts Committee and the improvements that we can make to it, and we can start having a much more open and transparent system. We see the size of government increasing, the amount of money that we are spending increasing. We see over the course of time an average of between 10 and 12 ministries coming to the Public Accounts Committee. So these changes would certainly be better. They would be advantageous. I would urge that the next time we are going to examine and change our Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly to consider what we are now going to call the new Standing Order 53 and implement at least some, if not all, of the recommendations that we have talked about this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to close the debate? The question then?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Question.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

3:20 Select Special Personal Information Protection Act Review Committee

22. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that:

- (1) A Select Special Personal Information Protection Act Review Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed to review the Personal Information Protection Act as provided in section 63(1) of that act consisting of the following members, namely Mrs. Ady, chair; Mr. Goudreau, deputy chair; Mr. Backs; Mr. Johnston; Mr. Liepert; Mr. Lindsay; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Martin; Mr. Rodney; and Mr. Snelgrove.
- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most recent Members' Services Committee allowances order.

- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (4) In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans.
- (5) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly or the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner.
- (6) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (7) The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the act, within 18 months after beginning its review.
- (8) When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I ask if you would like me to read the motion aloud in its entirety at this time as I did yesterday, or can the record simply show it as noted?

The Speaker: I think, hon. Government House Leader and hon. members, the motion was read in its entirety yesterday. We did check to make sure that the wording in Motion 22 as it is in Orders of the Day is identical, and it is. Unless there's an objection from anyone, we will proceed.

[Government Motion 22 carried]

Appointment of Chief Electoral Officer

23. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Lorne R. Gibson be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to support this. I sit on the Legislative Offices Committee and participated in the special committee to recruit and interview and recommend an individual for this position. It was a fairly thorough process, so we did advertise in each electoral office across Canada and in the major newspapers and through the Internet, had quite a few interested parties respond. We did interview several of them, and I'm pleased with Mr. Gibson's track record on working with new technology and his openness to move into the future with the new challenges that we may well be looking at. So I'm pleased to support this government motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. I was also on that select committee that made a decision at the end of a very thorough process of inviting applicants, looking at their applications, and interviewing three candidates, I think. Was it? Yeah, that's right. The committee came to a unanimous agreement and decision to recommend to the Assembly the appointment of Mr. Lorne Gibson as the most outstanding candidate for the position. I'm very pleased that the committee's deliberations were thorough, they were amicable, and we all were on the same page with respect to this recommendation before the House. So I certainly would ask the House to support this recommendation coming from the committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also sat on this committee, and I just want to say that we've picked a very good candidate. I also want to state that with the all-party committee we were very thorough doing the interviews, and I feel that we've got a very good person to be our Chief Electoral Officer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? Shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 20

19. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could exercise now my five minutes as allowed by Standing Order 21. Thank you. We know that this particular standing order allows the government side up to five minutes to explain the need for time allocation, and I would like to start by saying that we have not had to use time allocation in this House since 2003. In fact, during the past five years our government has used time allocation only six times in total.

Also, I think it is valuable to repeat what I said when oral notice of this motion was given Thursday last, at which time I reminded the House that we have already had about six hours of debate on Bill 20 thus far, and we have debated at some considerable length multiple amendments proposed by opposition members.

Bill 20 was in fact introduced on March 7, and since that time it has been debated on nine different occasions so far: on March 14, March 23, April 3, April 10, April 26, May 1, May 8, May 9, and May 10. Mr. Speaker, on these occasions the opposition spoke 30 times. All the New Democrats have spoken. All the Liberals have spoken, I think, with the exception of their leader perhaps, and one other member has spoken, and several of our members have also spoken. Everyone who wanted to speak up until now was afforded multiple opportunities to speak. In fact, according to the records I reviewed, three Liberal members have spoken twice, two Liberals have spoken three times each, and one Liberal has spoken four times, so I think that's pretty significant.

It's always a judgment call for a government of any House to use the time allocation or not. But all reasonable people I would hope would agree that there comes a point when a decision has to be made after a considerable and reasonable amount of time and effort has been expended on debating any issue and in this case Bill 20.

After today's two additional hours of debate at the committee stage and I would anticipate a further one hour of debate sometime later with respect to third reading stage, anyone reading Hansard will know that about nine or 10 hours of so-called debate will have occurred on Bill 20. They will also note the repetitive and/or perhaps redundant nature of many of the comments now being offered.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that they, too, would then better understand the need to conclude this discussion on Bill 20 and to see it move forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under our Standing Orders 21(1) and 21(3) five minutes is provided to a member of Executive Council and a member of the opposition to participate. I take it the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is the member, right?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to respond to this Government Motion 19 for invoking closure or time allocation on Bill 20. Let me start by talking a little bit about this notice that was shared with us by the office of the Government House Leader, talking about the total number of times closure or time allocation was used over the past five years. The hon. minister indicated that it was only used a certain number of times, five or six times, if I remember correctly. I argue that it should never be used at all. So for the hon. Government House Leader to be proud of the fact that it was only used so few times is something I take issue with.

Now, further to this, I am also very proud that two of those six times or two of those five times are on a bill that I'm the critic for, so that tells me that I have done my work as an opposition member who was elected to represent a certain number of voters, and it also shows that the opposition in general, albeit from the Liberal opposition or from the third party, has mounted some formidable resistance to a piece of legislation that we find very offensive. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the government side of the House did not anticipate that it would be met with such fierce opposition. They've actually called it minor housekeeping and, you know, minor amendments to facilitate things when, in fact, it's basically there to restrict access to information.

Today the government is suggesting that we should only allow two more hours in committee, and there's another motion to allow one hour in third reading. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I'm both extremely disappointed and disgusted that I am here witnessing this. I ask: is the government tired of hearing our arguments? The hon. House leader from the government says that some of the arguments were repetitive in nature. I would have to say then that, yes, they were because the government doesn't listen. We keep telling them that there are sections in this bill that are offensive and undemocratic and regressive, but they keep ignoring us. I note on the record that sometimes they vote down the amendments that we introduce without even participating in debate. So it's really something for them to just say no, and they don't even tell us why they're saying no.

Now, are they agitated that the opposition succeeded in bringing this to the forefront? I think they are. Are they concerned that the longer this takes and the more debate it receives, more people would notice the regressive nature of this government and its dangerous turn to more secrecy and opacity? I think yes. Are they impatient to rise and adjourn? We all know they are. I think that part of my disappointment arises from the fact that when I joined this House, you know, I naively thought that some progressive elements of this government caucus would be reasonable and would listen to the voice of reason.

Plus the fact that this is not a government bill; Bill 20 is a private member's bill. Traditionally private members vote their conscience on private members' bills, but instead we see that all members from this government caucus, the ones I thought were progressive and the ones I know for sure are regressive, are all rowing in the same direction, and they're all toeing the same party line. That tells me that they're trained to say no to any idea that the opposition presents. They're trained to say no, and they have been restrained and restricted from speaking their minds. That is a bad day for democracy, Mr. Speaker.

We speak in this House. We tell our stories, and we tell the stories of the people who got us here. This government is not interested in listening. They think they're above the law, they think they're above scrutiny, and there is no explanation why they would cut debate and invoke closure. If they're proud that they only did it six times, I see it happening more often in the future because you will not get an easy ride from this side of the House. I apologize; this is not going to happen.

You know, Mr. Speaker, two more hours: we are going to use them to the fullest. One hour in third reading: we're going to use it to the fullest. Even when the House adjourns, this is far from over. The next battle in this province is going to be a battle fought over democratic renewal, and this is a battle that the Tories have already lost.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 19 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:33 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Government Motion 19 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and
Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak more at length to Bill 20 than I've had the opportunity to do before. I think I'll note, first of all, that we are under a time allocation now according to Government Motion 19, which just passed. So at this point the members in this Assembly are restricted to 120 minutes, two hours, of further debate on the freedom of information bill, Bill 20, before the time allocation has elapsed and the vote will be called, which I think is an ironic statement. Here we have a freedom of information bill that is restricted in how much people can participate in the debate.

To me this casts into relief the larger issues that are at play overall from this government. We're all aware that the public does not view politicians with a great deal of credibility at this point in history. As a matter of fact, I think that a recent poll showed that politicians are ranked above used-car salesmen, with the belief that they are liars and cheats if I'm following on the correct analogy that was made. This was a national poll, I think, that was done and then reported. But I think that when we see activities like we're seeing from this government now, that's what plays into that perception that politicians are taking advantage of the public and doing things that the public doesn't approve of. A big part of that is the public being able to participate in the process and see the government participate in the process. When we talk about transparency, that's what we mean.

Accountability is the ability of the government to account for its actions. If it makes a decision, passes a regulation, implements a policy, starts a program, cancels a program, we should be able to ask the government what its reasons were for doing that and get a comprehensive answer on it. We're not able to do that in this day and age, and particularly in Alberta there's a great deal of difficulty with that.

It's also an irony to me that we set out to establish legislation that was about providing information. It's about freedom of information and protection of privacy, and the privacy to be protected, really, was of individual Albertans, not the government's intentions. That's not what was supposed to be protected here or hidden away. To me it's a perversion of our system and of the democratic process that we come to a point where this is about hiding everything that the government is doing or almost everything that the government is doing.

When we talk about the credibility that a Legislature or a government has with the public and they look at things like time allocation – I mean, I've been out talking to my constituents, and they laugh at the idea that six hours is considered too much discussion on a bill that will now, when passed, limit my ability, the media's ability, and their ability to get information from the government that holds them accountable, that shows why they made certain decisions or why certain information is available or not available. This is not the only example of this that we see from this government. What else challenges credibility with the public than the increasing habits of what we see before us?

We have the whole budget process, where every single year that I've been elected, Mr. Chairman, the government has been off by millions and millions and often billions of dollars in their budget planning. What does that tell me about their ability to actually have control of their finances? Either they're deliberately highballing their expenses and lowballing their revenues to be creating these immense surpluses at the end of it, or they have absolutely no control over how their financial accounting system is working. Neither one of those makes the government look particularly good because one is an incompetence, and the other is a perversion of a system that's in place.

Then we have things like off-budget spending, where, for example, last year we hadn't even completed the budget process and already we had ministers out there on the barbeque circuit talking about how they were going to spend the surplus. Well, there wasn't even a surplus at that point, and they were already talking about spending it. So that strains credibility with the public.

Certainly, the public is aware of the number of sitting days that we have in this province. I think that if you actually consider the number of days, we are one of the least sitting assemblies in the country. Again, people go, "Well, you're all on holidays," or come the end of this weekend we will all be on holidays. Well, I know that I'm still out there working, but for most people that see this as the work that we're to be doing, yeah, we're out of here. We've worked, whatever, 14 weeks out of 52, and that strains the credibility.

We have other systems that this government has become renowned for, like the consultation and the summits; you know, the growth summit and the future summit, the health round-tables, and a number of others. Remember those from back in the early '90s, where groups of sort of hand-picked people are brought together? They're fed a certain formula, and they come out with the expected and anticipated results that the government wanted to see in place to support whatever they'd already decided to do. Same thing with the mail-outs that the Provincial Treasurer who is now a sitting member in Ottawa made famous, all of these very restrictive and coercive questions about how we wanted our money spent. Of course, the answers all came back the way they wanted it, and Bob's your uncle, and they go off and do what they wanted to do anyway. But all of these things start to mount up and create a huge credibility gap with the public.

To me, what I see is that an honourable legacy, a legacy that should be respected from the early days of this administration, never mind the very early days of when this particular government took power, is being overshadowed by these increasingly antidemocratic measures or actions that this government is putting into place. You know, we have the refusal to put a lobbyist registry in place. We have the Wednesday night wine-and-dines in which it is so orchestrated now that you can phone up and find out who's the sponsor for Wednesday night that's going to be taking the government caucus out, feeding them dinner, and plying them with beverages to get their access to the lobbyists so that they can influence government policy. That's integrated now. That's part of what this government does and expects to happen. To them it's normal, but to people out there that's not normal at all, and they expected to see other things put in place to balance that and prevent what they see as something that's undemocratic.

Certainly, more recently the government's refusal to plan on how to save has been another issue. Rather, there's just been this rampant wild spending and sort of announcements off the cuff about: okay, let's give everybody $400 and see how that works out. What we end up with is a public that feels increasingly distant from their elected representatives and particularly from what government is doing, and at what point do the people refuse to co-operate, refuse to play their part in this democracy because we have no credibility with them anymore? I think that we are not approaching that; I think we're right at the cusp of that believability.

When you look at voter turnout, it's dropping every single time. When you look at a younger generation that has no interest in voting, is protesting it, and is not learning to vote as they establish themselves as more mature adults and get married and buy houses, they're still not voting. That's when you usually capture them, when they have something that they now value and want to see the representation about how that's being managed for them. So we have a government that has pushed, I think, the public to the point where they don't have credibility anymore, and those are the signals: when we look at that voter turnout, when we look at younger voters. I think that's going to cause us a real problem.

One of the other issues that occurs to me around this freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation is that if the government has nothing to hide, then why is it going to such extreme measures and working so hard to hide it? What on earth is in that briefing book that makes it so precious? You know, if this is all so above board and everybody is so innocent over there and everybody is so transparent and accountable, then what on earth do you have to hide? Yet there is so much effort and energy being put into making sure that things are hidden not for a little while but for a long while, for either five years or 15 years. That's an indication to me as well. We've entered a culture of entitlement from people that are elected on the government side, and they believe that they're entitled to carry on the business as they see fit, not subject to other rules or even subject to the scrutiny of the public that put them there. So there's one rule for them and a different rule for everybody else, and I think that's problematic as well.

There are a number of tests that I run when I look at legislation. Is there a problem? Do we need legislation to fix the problem? Is this the legislation that will fix the problem? Is what's being proposed the least intrusive amount of legislation required? I would argue that in most sections that are being proposed in this bill, this bill fails that test.

Mr. MacDonald: Pirates of the Caribbean. Do you think that's their favourite movie?

Ms Blakeman: Maybe Pirates of the Caribbean is their favourite movie, yes.

So those are the four test questions, and I argue that this legislation fails on all of them. Is there a problem that needs correction by being able to hide things like a briefing book or the work of the internal auditor for a period of five or 15 years? I would argue that there's no problem that needs that.

Does it need legislation to do it? No, because I don't think the problem exists in the first place, and legislation is not the way to be fixing it. This legislation, again, is punitive, and it goes far beyond what's actually needed. We've even got our own Privacy Commissioner saying that anything that the government wanted to protect right now, in the arguments it's putting forward – you know, internal briefing documents, for example – is already protected and available for the government to use. They don't need to put another dedicated law in place to help them do this.

This is also open to abuse in that I believe you take documents that you don't want out there and that wouldn't be covered under other FOIP provisions, slap them in the back of that briefing book or put a memo on top saying, "This is an internal briefing document to my minister," and that's it. They're covered under this new legislation and unavailable for five years. Is that appropriate? Well, when have we seen reports, for example, that we were waiting for in this Assembly that the taxpayer paid for, and we don't see them? We wait and wait and wait, and we start to make inquiries, written questions, motions for returns, even FOIPs to try and get them. We can't get them.

Well, for most of the ones I can give you examples of, we did get them faster than five years, Mr. Chairman. The Police Act review: yeah, they hung onto it for two and a half, I think getting close to three years, but we did get it after three years. We got a first draft, and then a year later we got a second draft. But at least that was under five years. With the Corrections Act review it was also a couple of years that they managed to tuck that one away. The victims of crime study that was done under the Solicitor General was tucked away for quite a while, and I had to press very hard to get that study to see the light of day. But, again, it was faster than five years.

What they've done is gone through and looked at any report, any study, any material at all that they don't want out there for five years. They just tuck it into the back of that briefing book, and it's covered. That's a perversion of what we expected the FOIP legislation to be, and it is unnecessary legislation. So my fourth question: is this the least intrusive legislation that achieves the aims that they were trying to achieve? Absolutely not. This is going far beyond what was necessary to accomplish what they were looking at. They could already do what they were doing, but we've seen that before.

We ended up with the PCHIP bill. You could already do everything that they brought that bill in to do. And we've just done another one with PCHAD, which was the kids being locked up for crystal meth and detox for crystal meth. You could already do all of that. You didn't need the additional law to do it. In those cases I accused the government of grandstanding around it.

This is much more serious because if you're not doing anything wrong, what is it that you're worried about people seeing? I understand when you're inside your own caucus and want to kind of work stuff out and try some ideas before you have to get them out in the light of day and have everybody take their shot at it, but this is going far beyond that level of privacy to discuss things and to try out a few things. This is seriously restricting the ability of the opposition, of the media, and of the public to see what the government is doing.

Now, this government likes to talk about how nasty the federal Liberals were and how corrupt they were and how much they didn't like them. But you know what? Here in Alberta you would never have been able to dig out that federal Liberal scandal of the Gomery with the FOIP legislation that's in place here.

Mr. MacDonald: Even now?

Ms Blakeman: Even now. And worse. Worse.

That really piques my interest, and I start to think: "Isn't that interesting? What the heck are they hiding over there? It must be a lot, and it must be big." What's being created out there in the public's mind is: "Whoa. How bad is it? Where are the scandals?" We had a former member of that caucus who was asked to leave their caucus, and as he left, he said, "Well, I know where all the skeletons are." Aha. Well, I think that a lot of us felt that there were skeletons over there, but they were very hard to detect, and it was kind of nice to have that confirmed by somebody leaving that caucus, that there were skeletons. Now you start to think: "Okay. Where are they?"

I would argue that some of them, obviously, are probably around land use and the sale of public land. We're still waiting for a land-use policy. It's not coming. That's interesting. Why? What skeletons are rattling over there around that? Electricity deregulation: what skeletons are rattling around over there behind that? Really, just about any subject that this government covers is going to be in those briefing books, so in addition to the commonly used FOIP excuses that the government uses to get out of giving us any information, which was "third party" or "policy advice" or "advice to cabinet members," now we're going to have the briefing book policy on top of all of that. It's really quite unforgeable.

Just in closing, we have this government creating a situation that I think is only going to imperil itself. As we move into a leadership campaign on their side, I hope that people do question those leaders on what their particular viewpoint is around this more inclusive legislation which shields even more from the public view. I'm assuming that following that, we'll be into an election, and I hope that the people press hard. I would be very interested to see the voter turnout on that.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you think the people will ask about the closure motion today in the public debates during the election?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I think the time allocation motions matter to people. They pay attention, and again it raises the same questions. What are they worried about that they have to use such draconian methods to keep everybody in line? What are they trying to hide that they have to bring that kind of thing into play? It signals exactly the opposite of what this government likes to have everybody believe of them.

You know, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, Mr. Chairman, and what we are eating here is rotten, and I hope it makes them all very sick. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, it's rather interesting that in Harper's Ottawa the conversation is all about openness and transparency and ethics and all the things that people were upset about with the federal Liberals. Here in Alberta their cousins seem to be going the opposite way. I see the opposite over here, that people don't seem to care. I expect that if they were Conservative Members of Parliament in Ottawa, they'd be up on their hind feet saying that we've got to do this, that politics is an honourable business, and that we've got to bring back respect to the Parliament of Canada. Here we sit in this Legislature under a one-party rule going in exactly the opposite direction that they are in Ottawa and, I would suggest, the opposite direction that they're going in most other parts of Canada. I mean, this government is known as the most secretive government in Canada, maybe in the world or the universe, as they like to say. Certainly, I would probably agree with them in this particular case.

Now we even go further. I mean, the FOIP Act that we had was a difficult one to navigate to find what you wanted. Even when you got them to okay it, often the departments didn't get the information there quickly or on time. There are no penalties. So it's not that we're the most open. I mean, we've been voted the most secretive government, Mr. Chairman. Now we're going to take this FOIP Act – and it's interesting; they were going to say that it was to deal with the PATRIOT Act. Well, that was just a by-product to probably put a better spin on it, and we're making it even worse. I think it's part of what we face in this province of a one-party rule. You've been in power so long that you figure that you can do whatever you want whenever you want and the people will just say, "Okay, that's the way it is," and it'll be business as usual.

I mean, why we would go to these levels, Mr. Chairman, when we see across the world international experts now saying that this is unbelievable, that this is Third World country material when we're dealing with the freedom of information acts. No other place anywhere is going in the direction that this government is going. Overkill, for example. You know, I quote here from a University of Lethbridge political scientist, Peter McCormick. I thought he put it very well: this sounds like every secretive government's dream. He's talking about Bill 20. He goes on to say: this is a government that always likes to say it is in favour of freedom of information, but freedom of information is always a risk for a government, so what they want to do is look as transparent as they can while being as untransparent as they can, and that way they don't get burned.

Well, it seems to me that that's what this is all about. We bring in Bill 20. It's to do with the PATRIOT Act. They hope that people fall asleep or the opposition falls asleep, and then they bring in all these other amendments that make it totally undemocratic.

Mr. Chairman, we've talked a bit about the briefing notes, but there are so many things wrong with this bill that it's hard to know where to start. You know, the Premier goes on, and I heard him say today: well, don't want our briefing book because there may be some information that we didn't accept in there. Well, you know, that would be fairly easy to see. If the government policy didn't follow those briefing books, we'd know that. It wouldn't take a genius to figure that out. The point is that theoretically the Premier indicates, as he's sitting here with the briefing book, that the answers that they're giving seem to be coming from those briefing books, and that's out in the public. So what is there to hide? What is there to hide?

In an interview Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner said, as we know, that he opposes this proposal to exclude briefing notes because he points out that they already fall under a section of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Section 24(1) allows the government to withhold any records that might contain "advice, proposals, recommendations, analyses or policy options developed by or for a public body or a member of the Executive Council." So they already have protection there. That's the point the Privacy Commissioner said. He said that they've had nine cases that he's had to deal with, and in seven of the nine cases that this issue has arisen, the Privacy Commissioner has ruled for the government. So why are we going through this particular proposal?

You know, the Premier often says – and I heard him – that if something happened in Alberta like what happened in Quebec, Adscam and the rest of it and the Gomery commission and the announcements after – well, I can't remember the exact words, but he sort of indicated that he'd be tarred and feathered or thrown out of town or whatever. Well, the question remains, Mr. Chairman: how would we ever know? And now it will be even harder to find out. It would be impossible – well, with my luck I suppose I shouldn't say impossible; anything's possible. But it would be extremely difficult to find any particular scandal here because we're covering it up. It was hard enough in FOIP; now it will be almost impossible. Briefing notes: five years. Other parts, internal auditor: 15 years. I mean, this is a total and absolute cover-up for this government.

How would we ever have a commission to find out? The last commission we had embarrassed the government. It was the Principal Group back when. We've never had a commission set up to do anything since then. My point is that with this most secretive government in Canada, in North America, the world, the universe, wherever you want to stop, Mr. Chairman, it's very difficult. The government likes it this way, and they don't think that people care. But people are starting to care, they're starting to take notice, and they're going to demand better from this government. They're not there by divine right. Some of them believe that they are, that they don't have to be accountable to anybody. The reality is that they've had nothing but one-party rule in this province for so long that they forget that these things are important in a functioning democracy.

Now, I point out, Mr. Chairman, that five years is an interesting time for the briefing notes. We can't look at those briefing notes for five years, even though we're told that there's not that much in them. That's what we're told. Now, that's an interesting length of time, isn't it? That takes you into the next government. Anything that comes out then is ancient history. We hear that in this Legislature: well, that was then, and this is now; we're much better now.

Mr. Elsalhy: There might be a new minister.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, it's a new minister: we can't go back on that; if that happened, well, there's nothing we can do; it's ancient history.

Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of cabinet ministers that are going to be retiring. We know that the Premier is going to be retiring. But even the new ministers that come in in those five years or those that stay with the government will be in different portfolios and all the rest of it. So it's a deliberate – deliberate – attempt by this government to keep hidden anything that's there.

I don't know if there's anything in those briefing notes that would cause them to be embarrassed. But the Member for Edmonton-Centre was correct: because of this fight bringing in a bill like this, one certainly has to wonder what's in there. You know, if you didn't wonder before, you have to wonder now. Does the Premier not want to be embarrassed or the cabinet ministers? Some of them that will retire after or before the next election don't want to be embarrassed. The people that stay on don't want to be embarrassed. There has to be a reason for this, Mr. Chairman.

The government, I know, says: well, we'll listen to the opposition yak away, and we'll bring in closure, and everybody will go to sleep, and nobody will care. That's what they're counting on. I guess that's the record. They've been elected no matter what they do for so long that they think this will go away.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that people are starting to take notice of what's happening here. There was a culture of entitlement that they talked about with the federal Liberals. Now, as I said, when we see a new government, Harper and the new people coming in, their cousins, saying that accountability and openness are really what we have to shoot for and we see this government going opposite to the way their federal cousins are, then something doesn't ring right, whether we agree with everything they're doing or not.

When governments start to act this way, Mr. Chairman, even in Alberta they eventually get kicked around a little bit. The last time even the city of Edmonton told them that they were not happy with the way they were acting. I would suggest that with more bills like this and some of the things we're doing, other parts of the province are going to send them the same message. You can hide from these sorts of bills, you can bring in lack of freedom of information acts, you can tie it together with a little red ribbon called the PATRIOT Act, but people in Alberta know what this is all about.

You know, I think there are some good people opposite there, and I don't understand why they would put up with this. Hopefully, with a new leader coming out at some point in December, whenever the case may be, surely they're going to see that this is not good policy on their part. I think you are going to see changes here one way or the other.

Mr. Chairman, this is just too convenient for the government to hide information, and it's not democratic. There are all sorts of democratic deficits in this province, but this makes it even worse. The government will get away with this because they have the majority. It's the tyranny of the majority. They'll get away with it because they can, because they have the numbers now. Is it the right thing to do? No. Will they pay a price down the way? One can only hope. Hope springs eternal that some of them might see that this is wrong but obviously not by the vote that I've seen so far. We will certainly make sure on the opposition side that people do remember what this government is doing with this particular act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak today. However, before I begin my remarks, let me first thank the Member for Red Deer-North, who sponsored the introduction of this important piece of legislation, and also the previous minister for introducing this legislation to her. I really thank him for that. As the newly minted Minister of Government Services I have relied on her commitment and enthusiasm to steer this bill through the Assembly to this point and will no doubt benefit from her wise counsel as it proceeds.

This bill proposes a number of amendments to the FOIP Act. Perhaps the most important amendment sets higher penalties for disclosing the personal information of Albertans to a foreign court. But, Mr. Chairman, we don't hear about those comments, do we? If an individual or a corporation discloses personal information pursuant to a subpoena, a warrant, or a court order when a court does not have jurisdiction in Alberta or pursuant to a court order that's not binding in Alberta, that person would be guilty of an offence and would be subject to a fine. The proposed fine for corporations could be up to $500,000 to deter such disclosures.

Let's not forget that the FOIP Act itself contains provisions for fines up to $10,000 for anyone convicted of trying to thwart the intention of the legislation. Despite what the leader of the third party said in this Chamber the other day, this legislation is anything but toothless. I can assure you of that. Protecting people's private information is one of this government's top priorities.

We are also exploring other solutions to address the potential for American authorities to view the private information of Albertans without proper authorization. Our goal is to ensure that the personal information of Albertans is protected from unauthorized access. The USA PATRIOT Act – which many of you probably don't know, and I didn't know until I was advised, stands for Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism – is of particular concern to this government, but the legislation will apply to any foreign government that seeks to obtain that personal information of Albertans without permission. This is a concern nation-wide, and we continue to work with other jurisdictions on a common approach to ensure that the issue is raised at the national level.

A related amendment would further enhance the security of Albertans' personal information. Currently, the act allows a public body to disclose personal information to comply with a subpoena, warrant, or order of a court. However, it's not clear which court this provision refers to. This amendment clarifies that a public body may disclose personal information only if ordered to do so by a court with jurisdiction in Alberta or in accordance with a rule of a court binding in Alberta. This will make Albertans' personal information less vulnerable to the collection of foreign agencies, Mr. Chair.

Another amendment clarifies the existing limits on access to ministerial briefing materials. The FOIP Act already allows ministers to refuse disclosure of advice to ministers, as was previously stated. This amendment will clarify that briefing books prepared for a new minister and session briefing books prepared for ministers will not be disclosed for five years. Mr. Chair, most of this information is confidential background material on issues that might be raised during the course of the Legislature sitting. You know, we're not going to do the opposition's job for them by sharing the information that might be of interest to them any more than they plan to share their confidential background briefings with this side of the House. The Premier has said: they didn't get this information before these amendments were introduced, and they're not going to get it now.

This is the only change to a time period of limitation, and it only applies to ministerial briefing books. This will ensure that ministers receive candid advice from senior officials. Applicants may request other briefings for a minister and any briefing materials in a briefing book not created solely for one of these purposes. The five-year period was chosen to coincide with the life of a Legislature, which is five years at most.

The third most important amendment limits access to working papers related to an audit by the newly created office of the chief internal auditor of Alberta for 15 years. This will encourage ministers to seek the chief internal auditor's advice on how to improve the quality of government programs. An individual can still make access requests for records about a program or service of a ministry but not for records about the audit. The Auditor General continues to have access to all records of the chief internal auditor.

Another proposal would suspend the processing of an access request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner consults on the application, on how a public body is handling the FOIP request. Mr. Chair, the amendment is purely administrative. Since the commissioner's consultation takes time, typically a decision comes after the legislated 30-day deadline for the response has expired. This amendment would allow the 30-day processing timeline for a FOIP request to stop while the commissioner makes a decision. These requests are rare, reflecting this government's commitment to the openness and transparency of access to information.

Of 3,168 FOIP requests received in '04-05, 94 per cent were completed by government public bodies within 60 days or less. You ask me to repeat that? Ninety-four per cent were completed by the government public bodies within 60 days or less. Mr. Chair, that confirms that Albertans have effective and timely access to information. This represents a significant achievement given that the complexity and number of requests received by the government continue to increase annually. The number of FOIP requests received in '04-05 increased by 27 per cent over the previous year. Preliminary figures suggest that the experience during '05-06 will be similar.

Of the 3,168 FOIP requests received in '04-05, 95 per cent were handled without complaint to the Information and Privacy Commissioner. You ask me again: how many?

Some Hon. Members: How many?

Mr. VanderBurg: Ninety-five per cent were handled without complaint to the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This demonstrates the success of Alberta Government Services' efforts to support FOIP staff throughout government public bodies. The Information and Privacy Commissioner has said that he would take a dim view if the number of requests for extensions suddenly spiked.

The commissioner has the ability to order the public body to resume processing of the request immediately.

Mr. Chair, another amendment will allow newly created government boards and committees to be brought under the FOIP Act more quickly.

There are a couple of other amendments, but I think that I've touched upon the most significant proposals in the legislation. As I mentioned earlier, protecting Albertans' personal information entrusted to the government and public bodies under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is a key priority for us in government.

To address another comment made by the opposition last week, costs are not a barrier to access to government information. Since FOIP legislation was first introduced in 1995, we have collected $535,000 in fees.

Some Hon. Members: How much?

Mr. VanderBurg: Since 1995 we've collected $535,000 in fees. That's less than $50,000 in fees in any given year.

An Hon. Member: How much did we spend?

Mr. VanderBurg: You ask: how much did we spend? Well, during the same time we spent $59 million. That's more than $5 million a year. Do the math.

An Hon. Member: Spend, spend, spend.

Mr. VanderBurg: Yes. You're right.

Administering the act, Mr. Chair, will continue to be an important function of the Ministry of Government Services. I'm proud to have this opportunity to speak to this important legislation.

With that, I close my remarks and specifically invite the previous Minister of Government Services and the Minister of Justice to make comments on this as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A very interesting afternoon indeed. Part of my response would be in response to the hon. Minister of Government Services, but before I start, I want to say that there is a real appetite out there for a stronger democracy. People want clear government and improved transparency and accountability, but unfortunately there is a group of government MLAs that do not want to satisfy this desire and are okay with further famishing the same people who voted them in and entrusted them to represent them fairly and openly.

The minister on a previous occasion, when challenged about a time allocation and invoking closure, said that the time spent already on Bill 20 was enough. I take issue with this. Today he was talking about the opposition not talking about the good things in the bill, and again I beg to differ because at the very beginning, at the outset, we actually stood in this House and commended them on the 50 per cent of this bill that we found very favourable. We said that we are truly in support of the good elements in this bill, but then I remind you, Mr. Chairman, and I remind my hon. colleagues that I also mentioned that packaging bad legislation with good legislation doesn't make the entire package good. I said that it was like sugar-coating rat poison, and I know that this comment was picked up.

I feel that this is intentional, to actually give us the carrot basically, if you will, Mr. Chairman, and tell us, "Here is some good stuff that you asked for and that you support," but then also to show us the stick, where they actually put us in a situation where you either accept it all or reject it all. I think that we're inclined to reject it now because our amendments keep being defeated in this Assembly.

The minister mentioned that 94 per cent of applications were completed within 60 days. Now, that's a good figure. But he fails to mention: is it 94 per cent of all applications, or is it 94 per cent of the ones that were accepted? It is no secret, Mr. Chairman, that many of the applications are rejected right there at the source, and they don't progress. They don't go forward unless the person challenges the body and goes to the Privacy Commissioner, and indeed sometimes they go to court to seek the information they were after. So 94 per cent of what? Is it 94 per cent of the ones that were allowed, or is it 94 per cent of the total? Even so, of that 94 per cent how much information is blacked out or omitted or severed?

You know, since I became an MLA I started learning about the language that is used. Sometimes when they reject an application for access to information, they call it nonresponsive. So you're asking for a certain thing, and you get a package of 100 pages, 90 of which are blacked out. They're totally white. There's nothing on them because it is deemed nonresponsive.

Sometimes you're asking for information on a government contract or a grant. You get the information, and two-thirds of it is not there, and they say it's because it's information on a third party. Well, yeah, it is information on a third party. You're giving them money. I need to know why. They say: well, it's nonresponsive, it's third party, and we need to maintain that third party's confidentiality. I find that very objectionable.

I'm going to use a quote that I received, Mr. Chairman. It was a quote by a person by the name of Dag Hammarskjöld. Talking to the government, the quote reads:

You are the lens in the beam. You can only receive, give, and possess the light as the lens does. If you seek yourself, you rob the lens of its transparency. You will know life and be acknowledged by it according to your degree of transparency, your capacity, that is, to vanish as an end, and remain purely as a means.

This is the definition of government. Government is a means for the people. It's a tool for the people to use. It is not the end result, and it is not the target or the goal.

This government, however, has lost that definition and has deviated from it. Now they have turned from a lens that passes light through to a black hole that sucks light out of everything that gets close to it, and things enter to be lost forever or, more accurately, hidden forever. This information that the government is trying to withhold or seal forever is not theirs. It is information that is owned by the public that got them there in the first place.

Now, it was mentioned by members of the third party that this government is hypocritical. They don't borrow a page from their federal cousins. Stephen Harper came, and his flagship bill was the Federal Accountability Act. Some of the elements of that Federal Accountability Act would be very useful in this province, Mr. Chairman, some of which are to end the influence of money in politics, toughen the Lobbyists Registration Act, make qualified government appointments, ban secret donations to political candidates, clean up government polling and advertising, clean up the procurement of government contracts, provide real protection for whistle blowers, ensure truth in budgeting with a parliamentary budget office, strengthen the power of the Auditor General, strengthen the role of the Ethics Commissioner, and strengthen access to information legislation. Novel ideas. What wonderful ideas. But we don't see this government adopting any of them. In fact, they're moving in the opposite direction.

I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that democracy is ill in this province. By that, I mean that we have all these areas, and they're not separate or individual – they're all together – where we see a government that is totally disinterested. They're totally not interested in allowing the Legislature to do what it does. They're not interested in answering to the people or answering questions posed to them by the media, and this is only bound to get worse.

Today somebody e-mailed me, and they said: ask your colleagues on the government side what would happen to the statute of limitation if things are sealed away from public scrutiny for five or, indeed, 15 years? What will happen if somebody wants to take this government to court? The statute of limitation in most cases is two years. I don't have a law background, but I know some members of the government side have a law background. How would they answer this question? If this government commits a crime, and some citizen, some Albertan, wants to seek legal remedy, what recourse would they have then, after five or, indeed, 15 years have passed?

What's in those ministerial briefing notes, for example, that the Premier vows to keep secret and off limits to opposition members? He accuses opposition members of wanting to use the "sensitive information" contained in such briefing documents for political gains. Isn't that what he and his cabinet are doing? Isn't it political or partisan that they want to seal public documents and prevent legitimate access to information? Are they not interested in protecting their own seats, Mr. Chairman? That is the question.

Who does this government think it is? Who do the Tories think they are, Mr. Chairman? Are they above the law? Are they above scrutiny? Do they not answer to anyone? That is the question today. Being accountable to the House and to the people is something that we need right now, today, and right here, not many years from now, when governments have changed and ministers have either left or died or moved on or vanished somewhere. They have to give those answers right now and answer to the people.

As I mentioned earlier, the next battle in this province will be waged over democracy and the need to restore openness and transparency. People do remember, and again I emphasize that this is a battle that the Tories have lost.

Now, before I go on any further, Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to introduce yet another amendment to Bill 20. I will first ask the pages to distribute it, and then I'll talk some more.

Thank you.

The Chair: We'll refer to this amendment as amendment A5. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung may proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. So basically this amendment that I'm moving, amendment A5, proposes that Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, be amended in section 9 as follows: one, in clause (a) in the proposed section 94(2) by striking out "or the Minister"; two, by striking out clause (b) in the same section.

Now, what am I trying to do here, Mr. Chairman? Basically, in light of all the arguments about how this government is becoming more secretive and less transparent – for example, they're restricting access to the ministerial briefing notes, they're restricting access to findings of the chief internal auditor, they are allowing an indefinite period of time for applications to be considered for dismissal, and all that stuff. Here, this section 9 proposes to give a lot of, to some extent, new powers to the minister in charge, and in this case it's the Minister of Government Services.

So the difference between this amendment that is before us, Bill 20, and the existing legislation is adding the words "or the Minister," basically allowing the minister and/or the Lieutenant Governor in Council to delete a body designated under the act only if the commissioner is satisfied. So now you have this new tool at the minister's disposal to remove bodies at his or her whim, basically. Yes, the commissioner has to be satisfied, but what are the chances that the commissioner will not be? That is the question here. I think that in light of all this regressive direction that this bill is taking us, the minister does not need nor, to be blunt, deserve to have this extra power at his disposal. This amendment basically offers that balance to take this extra and new power away from the minister.

Now, there is no justified reason to extend it, and the minister did not provide any adequate explanation why. As a matter of fact, this is a private member's bill, and the sponsor of the bill did not tell us why the minister needs all this extra power. It's really alarming, and we find it very objectionable. On the one hand you give him a lot more discretion, and on the other hand you deny outside groups like the opposition, like members of the public, like members of the media access to the information that he has control over now. It's basically contradictory and hypocritical.

I wanted to speak a little bit on this whole issue of skeletons. People want government to be transparent and open. People expect it. I think that contrary to what this government believes, it's almost like a pressure cooker. You know, Mr. Chairman, you've got one of those pressure cookers, and pressure inside it builds up, but all of them have a little hole or a safety valve or a pressure release vent that allows this pressure, when it reaches a critical point, to vent out and basically prevent it from exploding. I think that people are starting to pay attention, and they're approaching this boiling point if you will. What this government is proposing now is removing or sealing that little hole that vents that pressure out. We are actually approaching a critical moment in this province's history where people are going to revolt, and they will say: "Enough is enough. We don't like the direction this government is going."

In terms of the skeletons, knowing my pharmacy background, Mr. Chairman, I was thinking about bone density scans. I thought that if we were going to perform a bone density scan on this House, and notwithstanding the fact that we have 62 government members versus 21 opposition members – you can factor that into the formula – you would notice that the bone density measurement from the opposition is a lot lighter than the bone density scan from the government side. That doesn't mean that the opposition is prone to developing osteoporosis, but I think what it means is that those skeletons are buried really deep in those closets and in those graves, and it's not funny. It sounds funny, but it isn't really.

Again, I mention that it's also disheartening that even some of the progressive members of the government caucus do not seem to appreciate the seriousness of this issue and do not feel the urge to speak their conscience even though this is, again, technically a private member's bill.

So I don't think there is a lot to lose by removing this extra power from the minister's hands. If the government side found some of the arguments before repetitive or if they didn't want to just vote yes to an opposition amendment, at least this one here is the least contentious, and I would hope that most of them would find it easy to swallow. It's a challenge to them, and it's a challenge to the few of them who are seeking the Tory leadership because they keep bragging about wanting to be more transparent and accountable, and it's a new way of doing things, and "Vote us in because we will clean up the act," and so on and so forth. But it is hypocritical when we introduce amendments in this House that would actually take them that way, and they vote against it.

So this is a challenge not only to the backbenchers from the government but also to those of them that are seeking the Tory leadership and, actually, the couple or three of them that are on the outside now. I'm counting Mr. Preston Manning as well. That would be very interesting.

Back to the Federal Accountability Act. In terms of improving access to information, the federal Tories wanted to implement some reforms to the Access to Information Act. They wanted to "give the Information Commissioner the power to order the release of information." Not the power to sit on his hands indefinitely and not the power to agree to dismiss applications but the power to invoke the release, to force the release of information.

"Expand the coverage of the act to all Crown corporations, Officers of Parliament, foundations and organizations that spend taxpayers' money or perform public functions." Now this is a big net. They're trying to capture everything under this net. This government, however, is trying to eliminate things. One of the tools that they're going to use is for the minister to be able to delete public bodies from the register at his own discretion, and I totally disagree.

"Subject the exclusion of Cabinet confidences to review by the Information Commissioner." We're not talking about briefing notes here; we're talking about people. So people who are giving advice that the Premier finds too sensitive to share: two cabinet ministers will now be forced to co-operate and to release the information. What great ideas.

"Oblige public officials to create the records necessary to document their actions and decisions." Again, this government is doing things verbally now. They're paying people for verbal advice. We seek information from them, and they say: we don't have written records, and sometimes it's verbal communications. They pick up the phone and talk to each other. Employees have been instructed to try to do things verbally, or if they absolutely have to put it on paper, they're very careful about the language they choose. The federal government is trying to tell people to keep a paper trail, which is the right thing to do. This government, however, doesn't think it's interesting or important.

"Provide a general public interest override for all exemptions, so that the public interest is put before the secrecy of the government." This is great. I mean, I wish some of those MPs would pick up the phone and talk to some of those MLAs here and give them a piece of their mind.

"Ensure that disclosure requirements of the Access to Information Act cannot be circumvented by secrecy provisions in other federal acts." So access to information is paramount, not restriction of access as seems to be this government's direction.

Mr. Chairman, I can go on and on. Yes, they'll find some of the arguments repetitive. Well, that's the way it has to be because you don't seem to be listening to us, and you basically don't get it. I think we'll just keep going on and on until some of you see the light.

I'm going to end with a quote again, Mr. Chairman. This one is from Otto von Bismarck, and we all know who Bismarck was. He says: "Laws are like sausages. It's better not to see them being made." This is exactly what we're trying to do here. We're trying to ascertain what's inside that sausage that the government is trying to shove down our throats. This is the least that we can expect, and this is the bare minimum that the public expects from their government.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on amendment A5.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will try to be brief because I know that the opposition members would like to speaking further on these issues. I was on the last FOIP review. By the way, FOIP does get reviewed every five years, and there were opposition members on that latest FOIP review. I was very interested in that legislation because what we were trying to do with that legislation from the beginning and again – we’ve reviewed it twice – is to try to get that balance between privacy and access, and I know that that’s sort of generally what we’ve been doing. So when this legislation came through, that was one of the things that I looked at with it.

I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is obvious that we have been talking about this too long, or at least the opposition has been talking about it too long. They have stopped looking at the actual legislation and are just referring back to the rhetoric. So instead of actually dealing with what we have in front of us at any one time, they seem to have forgotten entirely what it is that we’re talking about.

I would like to say a little bit about this amendment. This, again, is very typical of what’s been happening here, and that is that they’ve looked at one clause here that says that “the Minister may delete a body designated under subsection,” et cetera, et cetera. Well, the et cetera, et cetera has all the controls in it. Okay? That’s the part that says that the body can only be deleted if it

(i) has been discontinued or no longer exists.

I mean, there are really strong controls put on this whole thing.

(ii) has been amalgamated with another body, and use of the name under which it was designated has been discontinued.

I mean, this stuff is really clear and simple. There is no need to remove the words “or the Minister” because “or the Minister” is controlled not only by all of these clauses but also by the commissioner.

I would also like to say a few words about the briefing books. There’s been all this concern, and it was actually stated flat out: oh, well, you could take another document and slip it into the briefing book, and because it would be put in the briefing book, we wouldn’t be able to see it. Yet if you actually read the legislation before us, which I encourage the opposition to please do, under (4) it says that these are the rights of access, and it does not extend

- (a) to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in respect of assuming responsibility for a ministry, or
- (b) to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in preparation for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly.

So could you please try to remember what it is we are talking about and that we are in committee and that we are supposed to be dealing with the actual legislation rather than rhetoric that has been said before and spinned and spinned until you have pretty well forgotten what this bill is all about?

The Chair: Hon. member, could you keep your comments pertaining to the amendment? You were talking about the briefing book, and I don’t see that in here.

Ms DeLong: Oh, sorry. Yes, I was referring to the actual clauses that were suggested in the amendment, but I do also want to mention the circular arguments that I’ve heard today. When you say that the Privacy Commissioner has looked at this bill and said that it simply clarifies the situation that is already there – in other words, this doesn’t change it – then you can’t say at the same time that this legislation makes things more secretive. Sorry, it just does not follow. I really would appreciate in this House if people would try to be logical in their thoughts every now and again.

Those are my comments, but again I’ve got to say that in terms of this possible amendment, you have to read the whole clause. You can’t just take one word out and think that that’s what they’re trying to express here. It isn’t: the minister decides this. The minister with the commissioner and guided by this, this, this, and this, four specific things – okay? – can remove a company from the list. So please read the whole legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Minister of Justice on amendment A5.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. It’s a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak on amendment A5. Listening to the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary–Bow, I too served on this committee. In the summer of 2004, when I introduced a solution to the problems surrounding the PATRIOT Act, the government members on that committee wanted no part of that. We’ve since had ample opportunity to deal with the issue of the PATRIOT Act and our Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This government at the time had their heads in the sand, and they did nothing and now throw the PATRIOT Act into this legislation when you are trying to make everyone comply to bad legislation.

Now, the Member for Edmonton–McClung with amendment A5 is trying to do some repair work to this very, very bad bill. This bill is all about the protection of an old, tired government. It has nothing to do with freedom of information. It is a bill to hide the many skeletons of this government.

What will A5 do? Again, it’s a modest attempt at a repair job, but when you look at this and you look at the briefing notes, how this would affect the briefing notes, the hon. Government Services minister is inaccurate, to say the least, when he states that briefing notes now are exempt. I received briefing notes in an access to information request in regard to Enron, and I did receive notes that the minister had access to. The hon. Minister of Government Services may be very interested to know that the Sundance B power purchase arrangements are among some of the lowest cost power purchase arrangements with all-in costs of less than 2.5 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity. Deregulation and the cost of electricity is a big issue in his constituency. Mr. Chairman, we would not receive this information now if this legislation was to pass without dealing with amendment A5. Amendment A5 will at least improve it, but it will not repair it to the extent that I could support it. No way.

We look at the entire history of Enron and their involvement with this provincial government, and the hon. government members put their heads down, and they work at their keyboards, or they themselves read their own briefing notes.

Chair’s Ruling Relevance

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Chair: We’re speaking on amendment A5, and there’s more to speaking on the amendment than just mentioning it by title every so often.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Chair: Comments should be about the amendment, not just mentioning it by title while you’re speaking about something else.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I can't hear you with the conversation in the background.

The Chair: Comments should be restricted to the amendment, not just talking about something else and then referring to the amendment by title occasionally. We're debating the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Okay. Certainly. Thank you for that guidance, Mr. Chairman. It's interesting to note that the Minister of Energy is the loudest one over there when we're talking about electricity prices and Enron's involvement with this government.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, in regard to A5 we look at what's being attempted here by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, and we look at the information that he's trying to administer and whether it would be subject to another act of Alberta or of Canada that provides for access to information or protection of privacy or, in this case, both.

Certainly, when we look at this and we look at the information that's provided in the briefing notes or the information that may or may not be provided in an internal audit, provided by our own version of the CIA, the chief internal auditor, what information may be excluded? What information may be included? What information may be hidden from public view? We all know the importance that this government is now putting on this office of the chief internal auditor.

Some Hon. Members: Lots.

Mr. MacDonald: A lot. You bet.

I would say that the office of the chief internal auditor should be eliminated and more resources and more scope, more authority be given to our Auditor General.

Now, it's not so long since we talked in this Assembly, Mr. Chairman, about the role of the chief internal auditor and some of the individuals that are on it and the fact that some time ago a group of individuals, including one Gary Campbell – I don't know if it's the same Gary Campbell that is involved in the Internal Audit Committee or not – speculated on land. They purchased a property for around $400,000. Six or seven years later, even though all of it was not designated as land needed for the ring road, this government paid $6.2 million for it, and then these individuals counted their money, their significant profit. What did the government do? Well, as time went by – almost 20 years went by – they sold that land at a significant loss to the taxpayers. Land that they paid $6.2 million for they sold to Lehigh Inland Cement for $1.8 million. Now, will the chief internal auditor look at that?

5:00

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: This is quite relevant. I'm sorry, hon. member, but this has a lot to do with amendment A5 because we will not see that information.

If the chief internal auditor was to audit this deal, the same party that was involved in the money, in the profit is now not only sitting on the Internal Audit Committee but sitting on the fundraising committee, as I understand it, for the Progressive Conservative Party. That's not a family compact; that's a Conservative compact. That's what that is. That's symptomatic of a government that has been in power too long, 35 going on 36 years. Now you need this Bill 20 to work as a simple form of political protection because you don't want the public to know.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Chair: Hon. member, I've been reading amendment A5, that pertains to section 94 and to section 9 both by deleting the word "minister" and section (b), by deleting clause (b). I see nothing in there that refers to the auditor. If you want to restrict your comments to the amendment, that would be very, very helpful.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, when we look at (2)(a)(iv), this information would be subject to another act. I would be referencing the government services act, which is used to give the chief internal audit office autonomy and authority through Executive Council. Now, we need to have a good look at this. I know that that's a sensitive topic for government members, but this is the reality. If we don't remove this section through this amendment, audits can be just swept under the carpet with this section.

Mr. Lund: You're so far off base.

Mr. MacDonald: Hon. member, I am not far off base. It is this government that is way, way off base with this entire legislation. No, I'm sorry. I cannot accept that.

Let's have a look at the Energy department and how this legislation and this amendment will affect the Energy department. It certainly will, and I know that government members are not going to want to hear about this. Let's say, Mr. Chairman, that we have a request this time on TransAlta Corporation and their involvement with electricity deregulation. Now, we know that we have a leadership race going on there, and one of the leading candidates was a former executive of TransAlta after he left this House. The minister says: oh, no, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has made an application for the same information on TransAlta that we received on Enron. But, again, TransAlta's role in all of this may be sensitive to the leadership aspirations of some politicians, some former members of this House, some current members of this House who may be supporting that candidate. I don't know. I don't know what kind of support that candidate has. I know it's a race between that candidate and Preston Manning, and I would have to put my money on Preston Manning.

Anyway, the minister wants to have a look at this FOIP request that is initiated by this member. Now, I can tell all members of this Assembly that I got about 1,400 pages on Enron. There were over 5,000 pages on Enron. I'm sure there would be boxes and boxes of documents on TransAlta's involvement with electricity deregulation because certainly they've come out of this deal with a very solid bottom line.

Mr. Chairman, that's an example of why we have to support the hon. member's amendment A5: because the minister has no right to even toy with any part of the application. I know that with the legislation now they certainly can. There are many, many different exemptions that can be used, and that should be good enough. Whether it's section 24 or whatever section they want to use, there are enough loopholes in the legislation already.

Now, in conclusion, I would like to urge all members to support amendment A5.

Mr. Chairman, I would also request to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 32(2), whereby should a division be triggered this afternoon, we would shorten the duration of time from 10 minutes to just two minutes. There are many people on both sides of the House who have expressed an interest in not only debating this amendment but perhaps other amendments or perhaps the bill itself. It is quite odd that in a democracy we would put a time limit on free speech, but this is exactly what we've done with these closure motions. I must say, in conclusion, that I'm very, very disappointed in the government at this time.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Chair: Before I recognize the Minister of Justice to rise on A5, I'd like to remind everyone of Standing Order 23, which says:

- (b) speaks to matters other than
 - (i) the question under discussion, or . . .
- (c) persists in needless repetition.

If we could keep our comments on the subject of the amendment if you wish to speak to the amendment. Otherwise, maybe keep your comments until we get back to the bill.

Debate Continued

The Chair: I suppose the Minister of Justice wants to speak on the amendment. The Minister of Justice, followed by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the admonition with respect to relevance, but I am hoping that it's as a result of what has just transpired as opposed to what you anticipate to come in the next few minutes.

I want to start out by, of course, commenting on amendment A5 to Bill 20.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister. I apologize. On the motion by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for unanimous consent for shortening the division bells, is there anyone opposed to that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung was commenting on a lot of different things, and I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow was absolutely correct when she said that it's important that when one looks at the amendment, they have to read the section being amended in order to make accurate and relevant comments with respect to the amendment. I know that the hon. Government House Leader, in making some comment regarding the necessity for time allocation earlier today, talked in terms of repetition and redundancy and was charitable in not mentioning irrelevance, which certainly could have been mentioned then and now.

What I want to do, Mr. Chairman, essentially is go through the purpose of the section of the amendment that is proposed because it is important to recognize that the hon. member who put forward amendment A5 ignored salient points in the section, and for the people who, I'm sure, will be reading the record at a later date, it would be unfair, in fact it would be unfortunate if they read the hon. member's speech and were left with the impression that he was accurate in his description of what this particular section does as amended.

As the Member for Calgary-Bow accurately indicated, this is a situation where any deletion that is proposed either by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or the minister can occur only if the commissioner is satisfied that the deletion "is not contrary to the public interest." I believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung completely missed that particular point.

Deleting a body from the list does not necessarily mean that it is no longer under the FOIP Act. If the body operates as part of a ministry or as part of a local public body, that act still applies. A body can only be deleted from the list if all of the conditions outlined in this particular section apply. They are that the government of Alberta does not appoint a majority of members to the body, that the government of Alberta does not provide most of the funding, that the government of Alberta is not the controlling shareholder, or that one of these circumstances exist: (1) the body has been discontinued; (2) the body has been amalgamated; (3) the body is a local public body, not a government public body; and (4) there is a more appropriate act that should apply to the body, for example the Personal Information Protection Act or the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

Also, Mr. Chairman, the minister will be able to delete public bodies from the list under the same conditions in between updates of the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulation.

Those are the circumstances of this particular provision of the bill. The comments of the proponent of amendment A5 I think need to be read in light of the reality of the provision.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on amendment A5.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, but I wanted to speak on Bill 20, not on the amendment.

The Chair: Okay.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation on the amendment.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I don't have a lot more to add because the Member for Calgary-Bow and the Attorney General just made the comments that I wanted to have on the record: the fact that some members have been very selective in what they've read and how they interpret what is in the bill, what is the law, and what exactly the amendment is doing.

To suggest that there's going to be a wholesale exodus of public bodies and/or bodies that would fall under the act if we don't amend the section as was proposed in amendment A5 – the fact is that that is just not going to happen. There are all of these conditions that have to be met. The commissioner has to approve it. Mr. Chairman, the commissioner is not an employee of the government; it's of this Legislature. As far as having influence on the commissioner, that would be totally inappropriate, and that is not something that happens. In many cases when people have taken a decision to the commissioner, the commissioner has overruled the head of the public body. That's why the commissioner is totally independent, and that's the way it has to stay. It says that the commissioner has to agree. I don't know what all the fuss is about because the commissioner is the person who has to agree. Quite frankly, why would you want to have a body that has been discontinued? Why would you want to have them still listed? Why would you want to have a body that's covered more appropriately by some other section or some other identity?

For example, we had a corporate body that was in fact looking at gaming. It was really housed at the University of Alberta. Why would we have that identity as opposed to under the secondary institution that it was housed at? So the information that anybody wanted to get from it, they go through that process. They don't go through this process.

I think there's been a whole bunch of to-do for nothing with this amendment, and I would highly recommend that we do not support it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Yes and I will be brief. I'm not sure that the word "selective" is properly being used. What we're trying to do here is take the words "or the Minister" out because I'm not sure that on this side of the House we totally understand the rationale of why the minister was being put in in the first place. So, in fact, what we're trying to do is keep it at the status quo.

With that, I'll sit down.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief speaking to amendment A5. A5 deals with one of the nine different amendments this bill attempts to make in the existing piece of legislation. It's the last of the nine amendments proposed here.

Looking at the text on both sides dealing with that section, it's right, as the Member for Lethbridge-East has indicated, that the change from the language of the legislation as it presently exists to the one that's being proposed in the amendment is the addition of "the Minister" in the language. The Lieutenant Governor in Council already has that right. Now that right is being given to the minister as well.

That I think is an important point. No satisfactory explanation has been given here as to why this double check, another check where the ministry has, in fact, to justify to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that some organizations should be deleted and should now be dropped from the act. It is true in both cases. The commissioner's satisfaction that it is not contrary to the public interest, that condition remains the same in both pieces of the legislation, the existing legislation and the amendment proposed. So I don't think that should be used. That is not therefore a justifiable explanation for why the minister now is given the same authority as the Lieutenant Governor in Council already has. I think it should be obligatory for the minister to go to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to seek endorsement of whatever he or she proposes to delete.

The other change that the amendment proposes is adding in section 94(2)(a)(iii) and (iv). That changes the situation. The first two subs, (i) and (ii), are exactly the same as in the existing legislation. So there are some changes. Some additional entities have been added to the list which can be deleted while they exist. Now, they haven't become nonexistent. These entities do in fact exist and operate, and the minister is being given the authority to delete them from the obligations that the existing piece of legislation imposes on the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Given that, I think the proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman, is entirely appropriate. It deserves the support of the House. I certainly support it.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the provision which is (2)(a)(iv), that "would more appropriately be subject to another Act of Alberta or Canada that provides for access to information and protection of privacy or both." It's a matter of which piece of legislation should take precedence. That's the real issue here.

I think that any law on freedom of information should require that other legislation be interpreted as far as possible in a manner consistent with the provisions of the freedom of information legislation. Only where that's not possible should other legislation dealing with publicly held information be subject to the principles underlying the freedom of information legislation. So the regime of exceptions to the freedom of information legislation should be comprehensive and other laws should not be permitted to extend it. That's the key here. In particular, secrecy laws should not make it illegal for officials to divulge information which they are required to disclose under the freedom of information laws.

Mr. Chairman, I think amendment A5 speaks to the very fundamental principles underlying any good, sound piece of legislation which deals with freedom of information. I fail to understand why there is a whole series of objections raised from the government side to this amendment by making reference to those elements that already exist in the other piece of legislation that's in existence. So unless some relevant new information is provided as to why the minister should now have the same powers as the Lieutenant Governor in Council heretofore has, this amendment should stand and should be supported by all members of this House. I certainly do.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe the Member for Edmonton-McClung may have had very good intentions in putting amendment A5 forward; however, I believe that he may not have fully comprehended the purpose of this section.

The FOIP Act applies to public bodies, and under this section a body can only be removed if the commissioner is satisfied that deleting it is not contrary to the public interest. Deleting this body from the list does not necessarily mean that it's no longer under the FOIP Act. If the body operates as part of a ministry or as part of a local public body, the FOIP Act will still then apply.

A body can be deleted from the list if all of the following apply – the government of Alberta does not appoint a majority of members to the body, the government of Alberta does not provide most of the funding, and the government of Alberta is not the controlling shareholder – or if one of these circumstances apply, and I think that these are important circumstances: the body has been discontinued.

I can't understand why anybody would argue about a minister or the Lieutenant Governor in Council deleting a body from the list if it has been discontinued or if the body has amalgamated – so in other words, instead of having it listed twice, it will only be listed once under the new amalgamation – or if the body is a local public body and not a government public body. So a local body. There is a more appropriate act that should apply to these bodies, and that's the PIPA act, the Personal Information Protection Act, or the PIPEDA act, which is the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act. So it could apply under both of those acts.

Also, the minister will be able to delete bodies from the list under the same conditions in between updates of the list of the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulation.

Because I think that's pretty straightforward and I think that those are very good reasons for deleting a body from the list, I don't think that amendment A5 is appropriate.

The Chair: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, promise to be brief to stand and conclude debate on amendment A5, but I have to note two things. One, earlier this afternoon this government and this House passed a motion to invoke closure and bring a time limit on debate on Bill 20. If they had this much to say about Bill 20, why did they invoke closure? They could have actually extended the debate, allowed the debate to progress on its own and as per the usual and customary rules of this House. Now we see at least three or four members from the government side, two of which are cabinet ministers, standing up and speaking on this amendment, which is a good thing. It's actually a positive and welcome change from the typical routine where they just vote us down every time without debating, but if they had so much to say on Bill 20 and if they feel so strongly that it should progress the way it's proposed, then maybe they shouldn't have invoked time closure and time allocation.

I'm going to end, Mr. Chairman, with a quote again, so this will be my third quote for this afternoon. This one comes from George Washington. "Government is not reason, it is not eloquence, it is force; like fire, a troublesome servant and a fearful master. Never for a moment should it be left to irresponsible action." I think that giving more powers to a minister and to his close entourage of advisers is not the right way to go, and that is why I think amendment A5 should be accepted by this House.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: On the bill the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's quite a challenge to be able to be heard, and I guess that I, too, would like to start off my comments that I'm disappointed that time allocation has been moved on this with Motion 19. My question to the minister on that would be that perhaps this government has another solution for the democratic process because what I understand is that there are only two ways that a government can and should be stopped. The one is by the opposition being able to filibuster and to speak on something that is not understood by the people and, according to this government, not understood by the opposition. Perhaps, then, the debate should go on.

This afternoon Calgary-Bow, the Minister of Justice, and the hon. Member for Red Deer-North all put forth some good points that we could listen to, which is to me what the debate should be about in this House, that we want to study it, the science of good government, and be able to come to a solution. But we haven't been able to do that, Mr. Chairman, so why would one want to invoke closure on such an important issue?

I'd also like to make mention that because the debate hasn't been centred around the protection of privacy information, the government should realize – and it's been stated many times, and I'll state it again – that we understand that part, and we're very much in favour of protecting the information of private people in this county. But we have to also realize that we're living in a time when the government is probing more and more into the private lives of individuals in the province and in the country, and that's very concerning because that information can and probably is being used against many citizens in the province. So we're very much in favour on that side of the FOIP legislation, and that isn't what this debate has been going on about. It's about the freedom of information for the people of Alberta.

I can't help but think – and I believe I mentioned this the other day – that we had a Prime Minister who said that Canadians weren't smart enough to understand the issues and to trust us and not worry about it, and that was the demise of the Progressive Conservative Party federally down to two seats. I think that what we have happening here is that we have higher walls being built. They become thicker walls . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee stands recessed until 8 this evening.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 16, 2006 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 06/05/16
 head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The committee has been discussing Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner still has 17 minutes.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Blues aren't back, so I don't know where I finished. Maybe I'll be a little bit repetitive here, and I apologize for being redundant.

We were talking, though, about a castle and about building the walls higher, the walls thicker, the moat deeper, and more water. I think the problem that they're looking at, Mr. Chairman, is that they don't realize that this castle that they're building doesn't include all Albertans though I believe they truly think that it is protecting all Albertans. So as they build their castle, there are more and more that feel outside, and they can't get through. They're being pushed away and are wondering: "What kind of government is this? They don't even let me inside the castle, and the walls are too high to see over." They definitely feel pushed to the outside.

The Chair: Hon. members, I know that the committee is a less formal part of the process, but we still need to keep our side conversations down so that we can hear what the speaker is saying. Right now the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: As I started out, what I was looking at, Mr. Chairman, was the fact that the House leader explained about democracy and the importance of it. I guess I have to wonder: if we can't filibuster in here and we don't have recall, how could the people ever possibly stop a government from doing something that they don't go along with? They seem to have a divine right to rule for four or five years and then can never be stopped. This isn't in the interest of the people.

But what I find really interesting and curious about this: though this government says that recall is wrong, I definitely remember that in November 2004 the people gave a mandate to the Premier, who was very much up front and open in saying: I'll be here for three-plus years before I step down. Yet he's been recalled by his own elite members of his party and turfed and told to leave. If you don't believe in recall, why do they allow their own leader to be attacked? So there are some questions that need to be answered there for the people of Alberta because they voted him in with a three-year mandate, yet he's not going to be able to complete what he promised to the people of Alberta because of his own members.

You have to ask the questions, you know, on private corporation versus a public corporation, and what openness should be there. We understand very well the difference in what's allowed. The House leader, I believe, was the one who spoke and said that we didn't understand and that they've got to be repetitive and go over and over it. I guess I just want to point out to the House leader – and I don't know whether the hon. member was lazy or whether the reporter was lazy – that we have almost the identical, the same words talking about:

The subtler problem is that the legislation could give the government the power to append other important documents to the formal briefing notes – and by doing so, put them off limits, too. In other words, a ministerial assistant could potentially take an embarrassing internal memo or departmental report, put it into the same binder with the briefing notes as an appendix and suddenly make it a classified document.

So I think that not only do you need to say to the members of this opposition that we don't understand. I think it's more important that you get out and tell Albertans because I think a lot more Albertans read the Edmonton Journal than they do Hansard. It's not a secret that's inside this House and what's going on there. That's what's being reported in the papers, and they would do well to follow that.

Paula Simons comes forward with some more interesting points that I'd like to read into Hansard.

Internal financial problems the government doesn't want us to know about? They'll be top secret until it's far too late to raise the alarm or fix the problem.

So why should you care?

After all, you're probably not an investigative journalist . . .

An Hon. Member: Is this on the amendment?

Mr. Hinman: We're long past the amendment. You should keep up on things.

. . . just an ordinary citizen. The May sun is shining, the Oilers are leading the Sharks three games to two. Perhaps you'd prefer the government get on with doing its job efficiently, without nosy reporters poking into private matters that don't concern them.

Except that everything our government does is a public matter – and your direct personal concern.

We don't work for Ralph Klein and his crew. They work for us. Every cabinet minister is your . . .

I apologize. I'm sorry. I was reading the news clipping. I'll retract that.

We don't work for [the Premier] and his crew. They work for us. Every cabinet minister is your employee. So is every civil servant. We hire them with our votes . . .

The Chair: Hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I don't mind him making a speech per se, but Beauchesne is very clear in cautioning members from quoting extensively from public documents. So perhaps we could just be reminded of that and ask the member to stop and carry on with the rest of his comments.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader is absolutely right, and I was on the verge of bringing that to your attention. So if you would please carry on.

Mr. Hinman: I thank the hon. Government House Leader and the chair for reminding me of that. I didn't think it was long. I thought it was short. So I apologize. I wasn't trying to just use up time. I would highly encourage the government members to read the article. It puts out some very good points.

The secrecy that goes on isn't good. I talked earlier about a past Prime Minister who was saying that the electorate wasn't smart enough to understand. This is very much the same problem. We've tried to reform health care, and I think everybody in this House agrees on that, that we need to reform it, but secrecy hasn't worked, and it's been brought forward three times. What are the briefing notes that go in there?

I would put forth to this government that they might be amazed if those briefing notes and those opinions were there and we were to educate the electorate rather than smothering them with smoke and trying to flash them with fancy mirrors so that they can't see it. That's what good government is: it's leading the people. I don't believe at all that it's an incompetent government that, after it puts out its ideas and listens to the people, retracts them and says: gee, we've got to rethink which pathway we're going down here. The Premier has been very good, when he's floated ideas in the past and then found them unpopular, at retracting them and going back on it.

We're very much in a position where it seems like we're in a small town and there's only one restaurant, and that restaurant says, "Everybody has got to come and eat what I'm going to feed them." They're not even allowed to know what's on the menu. They say, "Oh, we wouldn't feed you anything that isn't for your good health," not realizing that there might be allergies and things, and saying, "No, what we have is good."

The people will reject this. It is a bad thing if Bill 20 passes. They're not going to be pleased with it. As they push forward, it will be to their detriment after the detriment of Albertans, unfortunately. [interjection] Are you whining or someone else? I'm not sure.

Mr. Chairman, there are many aspects of Bill 20 that have been brought up that Albertans are upset with, that opposition members are upset with. I even had one person from this House talk to me that isn't in opposition, and he said: "Maybe what we need to do is amend the name. It should be perhaps the respect the dead and protect the skeletons bill. That would maybe be more appropriate."

Graham Thomson in his article recently said that the best thing to happen would be for the House to recess tonight. [interjections] I'm not reading anything. You guys, pay attention. It's unbelievable. Moaning and moaning. You'd think you were a Canadian Tire advertisement as soon as someone says something they don't agree with.

The Chair: Hon. member, could you please direct your comments through the chair?

Mr. Hinman: I'd appreciate that, Mr. Chair. I can't even hear myself think. There's so much moaning and nah, nah, nah that I thought it was a Canadian Tire advertisement. They're still continuing.

Anyway, Graham Thomson, who says that he's always complained how short the House has sat, is now saying that the best thing that could happen would be to shoot the old nag before she reaches the finish line on Thursday. I'd have to agree. It would be to the benefit of Albertans.

An Hon. Member: Is this on the amendment?

Mr. Hinman: Where has everybody been, Mr. Chairman? Maybe you need to tell them that we're on Bill 20 and that they've invoked time allotment. [interjections]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor, and we are speaking on Bill 20. The amendment was dealt with before recessing at 5:27, so we are now on the bill, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. If the member would please continue and if the rest of the Assembly would please allow him to do so, we may make some progress.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We only need to look at the voter turnout to see how it went down the last time. It's been brought up many times that actually the 21 opposition members have more votes than the government members, but we realize it's 21 to 62.

We only have to look at the latest report that ranks different professions and how they're trusted, and we realize that being a politician is ranked at the bottom of some 20, 29 things. There's a reason for that, Mr. Chairman. It's because of past behaviour, but we could change that with future behaviour and raise the standards. One has to wonder if that's going to change. It doesn't make one exactly excited to say that you're an elected representative when one reads and thinks of such thoughts when you talk about government.

The Chair: Hon member, we're speaking about Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, not electoral reform.

Mr. Hinman: I realize that, Mr. Chairman, and I thought that the two were directly related. When the secrecy is there so much, it's a problem. But I will try and get back more on track then.

The bill brings up many points that are good, and it does protect the privacy of individuals. No one in this House has been arguing or debating that. The debate has gone on and continues to go on about the things that can be buried for five or 15 years, and they seem to miss that point. That's what we've been trying to bring up. There were some excellent points brought up by the Member for Calgary-Bow and other members, and that's the type of debate that we need to be able to push through and to understand this thing. But to bring in the time allotment has not been helpful to this House, and it's certainly not helpful to the democratic process.

Basically, to wrap it up, Mr. Chairman, the public perception, the opposition perception is very much that this is about secrecy. This is not a bill that's in the interest of people. The people have no way of stopping this bill. The opposition now is left with no way of stopping this bill because of the time allocation that's been given to that. It's wrong.

But I will comment on the $59 million that the hon. minister says has been spent on this and the $550,000 collected. Yes, money is very much a major factor in this, but I don't know that it's a bad factor. We don't want to have to spend $120 million, but on the other side, when something is reasonable – I spoke with one reporter who said that it cost him over $3,000 to access the information, to get to it. It's very difficult to get to those things, but I don't know that that's totally bad.

Mr. Herard: What did he get for his 3,000 bucks?

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education wants to know what he got for the $3,000. I'll refer to him later, maybe this evening, if he wants to talk on that subject. But, yeah, he got some interesting things, and there's lots more there.

As was mentioned earlier, maybe we need to amend it to respect

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 38
Livestock Identification and Commerce Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act.

It's an important bill to the livestock industry, Mr. Speaker. It does consolidate and revise three existing acts. I'd just like to clarify a few things before we move forward. There seems to be some confusion regarding the regulation of livestock products. I'd like to clarify that the regulations addressing eggs, honey, and poultry that exist today under the Livestock and Livestock Products Act will continue under that act.

Returning to the subject of Bill 38, it will better address the regulatory requirements relating to commercial transactions of the livestock industry. This is an industry that has changed substantially over the past few decades, and we do need to ensure that the legislation reflects our modern realities. The bill clarifies that the purpose of a livestock inspection is to confirm that the person possessing the livestock is the owner or the owner's agent and that the sale proceeds are flowing to the correct party.

Bill 38 sets out a mandatory requirement that sellers disclose security interests in the livestock they are selling. This provision supports the statutory bar to conversion actions that protect buyers who follow the requirements of the act, pay in accordance with the manifest, and otherwise engage in bona fide transactions.

In the end what we've designed is legislation that will facilitate fair commerce, protect personal property, and promote the integrity of marketing within the livestock industry. These are important policy goals that Bill 38 certainly achieves. No single group, be it lenders or producers, has achieved their utopia under this, but Bill 38 is a compromise that respects the goals of a diverse industry. It's a balanced bill which I believe will be beneficial to everyone in the livestock industry.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many have stood in this House and spoken about their concerns on this bill but have also expressed their support to see it pass. I appreciate the support that has been received from many members in this House and anticipate their support at third reading. So I'm very pleased to move this bill at third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to speak on Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act. The Canadian Bankers Association has expressed an objection to section 18, statutory bar to conversion, and section 18(3), to extend protection to agents of the seller, of Bill 38.

The new section 18, statutory bar to conversion, protects cattle buyers by limiting the ability of creditors to collect from the current owner; that is, pay twice for the cattle. In a typical sale cattle are trucked to a large packer who purchases 40 truckloads of cattle a day. Payment is due within two days, so the buyer is typically unable to check for liens. A good analogy is buying and selling used cars. Following the car analogy, the buyer checks for liens before purchase. This cannot be done with cattle as there is no mechanism to search cattle by serial number, that is VIN. The cattle industry relies extensively on lending and borrowing.

The Canadian Bankers Association concerns are this. The lending institutions currently have the ability to collect monies owed by the seller from the future owner of the cattle. Lending institutions will lose this ability in Bill 38. This change may allow auction marts to not take the task of evaluating the risk as seriously. The agent for a seller or buyer, such as an auction mart, is well positioned to evaluate title or security interests in cattle.

Mr. Speaker, for example, they can get to know their regular clients and only search or assess security risks from unknown clients. The banks have not used their ability to sue future owners of the cattle for lost funds; however, they argue that the ability to sue provides a safety valve which keeps buyers and agents conducting due diligence in checking for security interests.

These changes will have two effects, Mr. Speaker. First, these changes could effectively stop farmers from getting credit for livestock as banks will not be able to collect on their collateral. Two, this will increase the cost of borrowing for farmers as it increases the risk associated with lending money to farmers or ranchers.

The bankers propose two solutions. First, the bankers propose repealing section 18(3) and substituting a section that would require auction marts to perform due diligence in checking for security interests. Two, when an auction mart is the financier of cattle, the auction mart and seller should be considered associated or not at arm's length. See section 1, definitions. As such, the statutory bar to conversion would not apply.

The statutory bar to conversion provides protection to buyers who purchase large numbers of cattle, mainly the big three meat-packing plants. They argue that they need this protection because it is not feasible to check every animal.

My questions are to the minister. How does the minister plan to resolve the legitimate concerns of the Canadian Bankers Association? Does he have any intention to amend the bill to include these concerns? Why were these concerns not addressed prior to bringing Bill 38 to the Assembly?

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, might I ask consideration of the hon. members for unanimous consent to doff our jackets for the long line of third readings that we have tonight due to the wonderful Alberta day that's sharing its warmth in here with us?

The Deputy Speaker: There has been a ruling on this on the past. I will accept the motion. Are there any opposed? That's apparently carried. So we will allow the jackets to be removed on this very hot evening.

Hon. members, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to close debate.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie basically repeated the same concerns and pretty much the same speech as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought forward.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, this act will continue the major security that banks have under the Canadian Bank Act. Indeed, I'm a little surprised that the Liberals are supporting the interests of the bankers here and not the industry, which is who we're supporting. I am surprised that they've taken the side of the big banks.

To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, we do not do amendments in third reading. Amendments are done in Committee of the Whole, as I'm sure the hon. Speaker could probably let you know about. It's certainly something that by now we should all know in this House. So, no, I will not be introducing any amendments in third reading.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the industry, after three years of consultation, has been looking at compromises with not only the banking industry. As an ex-banker I understand the banking industry. I understand the security that they take in agriculture. I believe that this bill is a very good compromise and will serve our industry very well. I ask all hon. members to support it.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a third time]

Bill 34

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to move third reading of Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few specific concerns raised during the Committee of the Whole debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford asked for an elaboration on the reimbursement of the Crown charges and to provide an example of when this would apply.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, a private member cannot move a money bill on behalf of a minister. It has to be moved by a minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Does the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon wish to speak on the motion?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My apologies for my lapse of memory.

Mr. Speaker, again referring to the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, section 12.1 provides that where one party reimburses another under the terms of a contract for Crown royalties paid, the reimbursing party is trusted as having incurred the royalties directly for income tax purposes. These arrangements are common in the oil and gas sector.

This member also questioned why Alberta is not paralleling the federal transition period for resource tax changes. The federal government, Mr. Speaker, is phasing out the resource allowance and returning to royalty deductibility over a four-year period from 2003 to 2006. Alberta reviewed its royalty tax policy in 2003 and decided not to parallel the federal phase-out to ensure that no Alberta taxpayers were adversely affected during the transition. As the federal government revises its Income Tax Act to implement the phase-out, Alberta has to ensure that the Alberta Corporate Tax Act does not parallel that transition. Effective January 1, 2007, the resource allowance is eliminated for both federal and Alberta purposes, and royalties are then fully deductible.

This member also queried the treatment of income versus mutual fund trusts in section 7. Mr. Speaker, this provision parallels federal rules that describe how corporations must calculate their income when they receive a distribution from a mutual fund trust.

The member also asked if the minister or ministry has ever used the power to waive penalties or interest owing allowed under section 10, and if so, the member asked for a list to be made public. Since the time that the provision came into force, Mr. Speaker – and that was 1992 – interest and/or penalties have been waived for corporations which cannot comply with the Alberta Corporate Tax Act due to extraordinary circumstances. Tax and revenue administration, Alberta Corporate Tax Act, information circular CT-5R3 provides information on what are considered as extraordinary circumstances and how corporations apply for the waiver. The information circular has been made available to the public since 1992, when this provision came into force. In terms of providing a list, as the information requested is tax information specific to particular corporations, in accordance with section 77 of the Alberta Corporate Tax Act we must keep this information confidential.

Finally, the member questioned why section 106 is being substituted. This section provides the definition of the Alberta crown royalties paid by an individual that qualifies for the Alberta royalty credit, the parallel program to the Alberta royalty tax credit for corporations. In fact, you will notice that the same amendment is being made in section 26 of the act, which provides rules for the Alberta royalty tax credit program. These are technical amendments to the act itself, Mr. Speaker, to clarify its interpretation rather than a policy change.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that these responses clarify the concerns raised by the hon. member.

To review, Bill 34 will reduce the corporate income tax rate to 10 per cent from 11.5 per cent. This reduction will save Alberta businesses $265 million in 2006-07. This reduction is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to maintain Alberta's competitive advantage as Alberta is not just competing within Canada with other provinces but in a much larger global marketplace. Enhancing the Alberta tax advantage for business helps attract investment and encourages entrepreneurship, meaning that Albertans will have more jobs and stronger communities and a better quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Legislature to give their support to Bill 34. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, should be better titled the Alberta corporate gift. We've said this before, and we'll say it again: in an overheated economy, when we already have the lowest corporate tax rate in the country . . .

Mr. Mason: In the universe.

Mr. Martin: In the universe maybe. Yes. I forgot about that.

. . . and you move it down to 10 per cent, and you're talking about 8 per cent down the way, what is the economic sense of that, Mr. Speaker? The money will be going. It's $370 million lost revenue. The point is: how is that going to help the Alberta economy? These global corporations can take this money and say thank you very much and invest it anywhere they want in the world. Who's to say that it will even trickle down, the old trickle-down theory? Not many people have felt trickled down upon recently. It doesn't even make sense here because it can trickle down somewhere else. That's the point. Why would you do this, especially at this time? There might be some logic to it if we had an economy that was staggering and we needed some investment. If we didn't have an overheated economy, I might be able to understand that, but I see this economy, when we theoretically can't get labour, we have jobs going wanting, we have the corporate sector with the lowest tax rate, and we're going to lower it more. One can only believe that this is an absolute gift to the people that support this Conservative government.

Mr. Eggen: It's a payback.

Mr. Martin: It's a payback. Exactly. It's a $370 million gift to the wealthiest people at a time when we're going to be facing some difficulties in schools. We've talked about rising health care costs. We've talked about the problems. We don't have enough money to index AISH people. We don't have money for this, that, and everything else. But for the very wealthiest people in society here it is, $370 million: "We don't care. You can have it. Do what you want with it." It's going again, most of it, to an energy industry that's already making more money than they've ever made before, Mr. Speaker, in an overheated economy.

We add that on in this budget. Even this government admits that we're losing $400 million in income trusts, probably to the same group of people, Mr. Speaker. So there it is, a loss of some $700 million. Eventually the problem with this is that when the Premier handed out the dividend funds, he said that it would be one time because we don't want to get obligated into a taxation rate for people, like taking medicare premiums off, which would have been $800 million for everybody. We don't want to do that. We just want to do one-time things. Well, now we're taking the corporate tax rate, and we're going to live with that for how long? And you're talking about lowering it even more down the way. This makes absolutely no economic sense at all other than what I said, that it's a gift to their friends who pay the piper for this particular government. They're clinking champagne glasses in downtown Calgary, I'm sure, at the generosity of this government.

Meanwhile, what are we going to do down the way if the economy changes, Mr. Speaker? Now we've promised them 8 per cent, 6 per cent. Maybe eventually we'll have to just hand out the money to them without any taxation rate at all. It seems to me, when this government pleads poverty over so many other things and calls people irresponsible because they want money for certain programs, that this is the most irresponsible act that I've seen.

As I say, I could understand it – maybe not agree with it but understand it – if the economy was in recession to some degree and you wanted to stimulate investment. What does this stimulate? It stimulates money going outside the country. That's all it does, Mr. Speaker. As I say, it's not just a one-time gift like the dividend funds were to ordinary Albertans. This is a gift that keeps on giving year after year after year. Just to show you how generous we are, we're even talking about lowering it to 8 per cent. I find this particular bill the most offensive thing that they've done this time, and there have been a lot of offensive things that we talked about in Bill 20. This is costing the taxpayers a lot of money. Eventually it is going to have an impact on the programs and the things that we can offer Albertans down the way, and we will regret this particular Bill 34.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any doubt about how I feel about this particular bill, but we always try to help this government out because Lord knows that they need the help.

Mr. Knight: Thanks, Ray.

Mr. Martin: You're welcome. You're very welcome.

I want to move an amendment here, Mr. Speaker. I'll send it up.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, an amendment is not in order.

An Hon. Member: A reasoned amendment, is it?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

An Hon. Member: Well reasoned?

Mr. Martin: Well reasoned.

The Deputy Speaker: Apparently it is in order because it's a reasoned amendment, so I will accept it.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, do you want me to go ahead or wait?

The Deputy Speaker: Just wait a moment until it's circulated to all the members. It's now fairly well distributed. You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion reads that Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by striking out the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 34, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, be not now read a third time because the reduction in the corporate tax rate contained therein shifts the tax burden onto individual taxpayers and narrows the provincial tax base, thereby posing a threat to stable and predictable funding for core programs.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to us, as I said, folly to be moving ahead in this direction, especially when we don't know what the future holds. As I said, the Premier said that the reason he was doing the prosperity bonus is that he wanted this to be one-time funding. Now, here we go to the corporate sector, the wealthiest people, and say that we're going to permanently lower their taxes and even more so down the way in the future. We think it's time to put a stop to it, and this amendment would do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this amendment, just a couple of comments, if I might. The reason given for the amendment before us is that the reduction in corporate tax rate contained shifts the tax burden to individual taxpayers. Nothing could be further from correct. Individual taxpayers in the province of Alberta are also seeing a reduction in their tax rates. Again, it does not narrow the provincial tax base because, in fact, increased activity in our economic realm, that we have done very well with in the province of Alberta, will actually increase the tax base, not decrease it. So I would suggest that we're not posing any threat whatsoever to the stable and predictable funding for core programs in the province of Alberta, all of which have increased dramatically in the last number of years.

Thank you.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and support this amendment to Bill 34. This bill is nothing but to cut the corporate tax from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent. Alberta Liberals always stand for the health care premiums being cut before any corporate tax, but this bill is totally helping the rich people. "The reduction in the corporation tax rate contained therein shifts the tax burden onto individual taxpayers." I absolutely agree with the hon. member who proposed this amendment. Nobody is against the reduction in tax, but our first priority is to eliminate the health care premium tax. Alberta Liberals would prefer to cut the health care tax and some other user fees before we cut any corporate tax.

That's all I have to say. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this reasoned amendment. I would point out to the House that this reasoned amendment would have the effect of defeating a government money bill and therefore is a motion of confidence. It's our intention that the government should in fact be held accountable for its stand on corporate taxes.

This corporate tax cut is unnecessary. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it's part of a program of the government to cut corporate income tax in this province from 15 per cent to 8 per cent, a promise that was made by Steve West a number of years ago, about six years ago, when he was the Provincial Treasurer. As far as I can tell, that comprises the entire and complete rationale for these corporate tax cuts.

As my hon. colleague has said, this shifts the balance towards the personal income tax, and the proportion of funding of government operations that is borne by individual taxpayers is increased in proportion to that of corporations. At this time Alberta corporations, like corporations across North America, are earning record profits. They are earning higher profits than they ever have before. So to cut their taxes at this time is completely unnecessary, yet it cuts into the ability of the province to finance on an ongoing basis its programs.

I will quote from the government's own documents. The government's own budget documents state that with no general sales tax, payroll taxes or capital taxes, Alberta's tax base is relatively narrow compared to other jurisdictions.

Rev. Abbott: Right on.

Mr. Mason: We're getting applause over there for having a narrow tax base. I think the hon. member needs to talk to his Treasurer because she addressed this the other day during her estimates.

It goes on to say that while this is a benefit to Albertans, it also comes with some risks.

A broader range of taxes means more stable revenues. With relatively fewer revenue sources, predictable funding for key public services is at more risk in the event of an economic slow-down. Consequently, it is inadvisable to eliminate or dedicate more taxes.

That comes from Alberta Tax Advantage, page 134.

That is exactly what the government is doing. They are narrowing the tax base, reducing their source of revenues which come from renewable sources as opposed to nonrenewable sources. The amount lost in this year alone is over $265 million.

Cuts to corporate income taxes started in 2001, and will save Alberta corporations about $435 million in taxes this year. These savings are on top of the savings from cuts to other corporate taxes, such as the elimination of the financial institutions capital tax and the drop in the railway fuel tax.

That was Budget 2004.

In two years alone, then, the cuts from 12.5 per cent to 10 per cent will have taken by a conservative estimate more than $700 million out of government revenue. The $700 million could have paid three times the amount urged to increase and improve on seniors in long-term care throughout the province. That $700 million alone – remember, that's just what was saved in two years, not all five that have seen cuts in rates – would pay more than twice the amount of new schools being sought by the Calgary board of education.

How can the government constantly applaud itself as having one of the best education systems in the world and announce that its strategic plan is to prepare students for the workforce and citizenship when it denies both the building of new schools and the repairing of old ones? How can this government face its citizens with such pride when it is denying children their future in order to pay for tax cuts that aren't needed and are so damaging in other ways?

Mr. Speaker, it's not just a matter of shifting the balance toward personal income tax. It's not just revenue loss. It's economically ill advised. At this time small business and the public sector are having a hard time competing for labour, in particular, and materials as well. So in this kind of situation it will become even more difficult. With a large tax cut for big corporations, small business will have a more difficult time competing for scarce resources in this economy. So in a word this tax cut is inflationary.

The Auditor General has repeatedly asked the government to provide rationale for its tax cuts and particularly for its corporate tax cuts. In other words, it's seen as an expenditure item, a policy question that requires some sort of rationale in order to be justified. The government has not provided any justification other than an old promise made by Steve West.

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly nothing but a gift to corporations. I was interested to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie speak in favour of this because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the Finance critic, has spoken in favour of this tax cut and on a number of occasions. So I don't know where the Liberals stand on this, but I do know what the government is benefiting by this.

I have in front of me, Mr. Speaker, the 2005 corporate donations to the Conservative Party of Alberta. The Conservative Party in 2005 from the oil and gas sector received $223,460.27. From financial management and insurance they received $150,385. From the construction, development, and real estate sector they received $232,408.94; from the engineering, consulting, and professional management firms, $148,000; from utilities, $65,000; from the health care sector, $62,000; from the mining, forestry, and agribusiness sector, $125,900; from professional corporations, $29,000; and from all other corporations, $333,828.19 for a grand total of $1,370,433.12 last year from the corporate sector in donations to the Alberta PC Party. We see why they support this government. We see the symbiotic relationship between corporate donations to the Conservative Party and cuts to taxes for corporations. That really is the only economic explanation that I can see for this corporate tax cut.

Needless to say, we urge all hon. members to vote in favour of this motion of confidence in the government on this budget. This corporate tax cut is irresponsible, unnecessary, unjustified, and frankly completely unsupportable, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and speak to this amendment on Bill 34. I'm opposed to this amendment, and I just want to go over a few points that the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky shared with us. There's this notion that there's a direct relationship between lower taxes and lower revenue, and quite the opposite has been shown time and time again. When you actually lower taxes, you often increase the government's revenue. We're grateful here in Alberta for the number of corporations that have relocated here, and as I've spoken before, I've urged this government to follow up on their commitment to go to 8 per cent. They said that. Corporations have moved here, and we should be good to our word in Alberta.

The hon. third-party leader has talked many times about pharmaceuticals. Wouldn't it be a great blessing to Alberta if our corporate tax was a drawing card and we would actually get a pharmaceutical corporation to come into the province and want to produce those pharmaceuticals here in the province? We want to attract business. We want to be progressive and moving forward, be very diversified. We've gone to a flat tax of 10 per cent. That's helped professionals to come back to Alberta, doctors and researchers, because they know that they're not going to be penalized and treated unequally.

So I am very much opposed to Bill 34 and hope that we'll continue to lower taxes here and increase the revenue for the benefit of all Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Others?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:01 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 34 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to shorten any future division bells for the remainder of the evening from 10 minutes down to two, and I wonder if the rest of the members would consent to that unanimously.

The Deputy Speaker: Now, on Bill 34 does anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Backs: I'm very pleased to rise to speak and say a few words in favour of this bill, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are some very positive things here. The initiative to share tax info with the Chief Electoral Officer I think brings about some certain degree of accountability on that financial information. It ensures that all insurance companies are paying tax. I think that's good.

I'm disappointed that it doesn't have removal of health care premiums in it. I think that there would be a greater efficiency for government in general in removing that bureaucracy and removing that payment. I don't think that that particular bureaucracy has any real value to Alberta and that it should be just rolled right into the tax. I think there is a need to reduce taxes not only in this area but in a number of areas. We will be having to prepare for what happens after the high oil price boom. If we can begin to attract and hold businesses in Alberta at least because of the taxes, if not because there are some problems in some other areas, it would do great good for the future of Alberta and Albertans.

I'm sometimes very disappointed in what the New Democrats seem to have in their view of taxes. They always seem to think that money grows on trees, that all business is bad, that any sort of profit-making mechanism, any small business is somehow a difficult thing for our economy. I don't know what would make the economy grow or go at all if the New Democrats had their way. Many people are saying that they've given up on labour in the last three or four years. They hate business. They hate profit. I don't know where they seem to be coming from or seem to be wanting their support. You know, they seem to love their ivory tower sort of ideas and all the rest of it. I don't know if they have any idea of where we would actually make an economy work with the ideas of the New Democrats.

With that I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There seems to be an awful lot of chatter. Please, if we could keep it down, the Speaker would be able to hear the hon. member that has the floor.

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

Bill 10 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 10, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciated hearing the many thoughtful comments and discussion on this bill. Bill 10 will clarify and strengthen the engineering profession by allowing registered professional technologists to sit on the council of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, known as APEGGA, and vote on the association's new and amended regulations and bylaws.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure again to rise and speak to third reading in support of Bill 10, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006. This bill allows registered professional technologists in engineering to vote and be elected to the engineering council of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta. It's called APEGGA. RPT engineers will have an increased opportunity to participate in the governance of APEGGA.

ASET supports this change as registered professional technologists, RPT engineers, have been part of APEGGA since 2001. They feel voting privileges should have been in place since then. This bill allows them to have the right to vote in the governance of their professional association.

Mr. Speaker, in the year 2001 the act was amended to include registered professional technologists in engineering as Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, APEGGA, members. They were not, however, granted voting or council membership rights in the association at that time. There are currently about 150 RPT engineers in Alberta, but the number is growing from 135 in 2003.

Some members of APEGGA are not in favour of the change as they would prefer to keep the governance of APEGGA in the control of traditionally qualified professionals. The practice of engineering, geology, and geophysics in Alberta is governed by the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act. APEGGA is mandated to administer the act as a self-governing body on behalf of the Alberta government, all in the interest of public safety and well-being. It has about 43,000 members. APEGGA is governed by an elected council of 19 members, including three public representatives appointed by the government, and directs the association's affairs.

APEGGA's regular activities include registering and licensing qualified members, establishing practice standards, administering a complaint and discipline process, encouraging professional development, reviewing member and corporate practice, stopping those not qualified from practising and using the title.

Mr. Speaker, within a clearly defined scope of practice registered professional technologists are permitted to independently practise engineering, geology, or geophysics in Alberta within a narrowly defined scope of practice and to take responsibility for that work. This category recognizes that certain qualified individuals can be permitted to independently carry out certain specific functions, normally within the definition of professional engineering, professional geology, or professional geophysics, without the supervision of a professional engineer, professional geologist, or professional geophysicist. An RPT engineer is licensed to independently practise engineering in Alberta within a clearly defined scope of practice.

A registered professional technologist must be registered as an RET with ASET and be nominated for registering as an RPT engineer by ASET, have at least six years of experience in work of an engineering nature that is acceptable to the APEGGA board of examiners, be of good character and reputation, demonstrate knowledge of law, ethics, and professionalism by passing the national professional practice examination, and meet the English language competency requirements as well.

I support this bill. This is a good bill. That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Mr. Backs: Just a very brief couple of comments to speak in support of Bill 10, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, and reluctantly in support because I don't think it really accomplishes a whole bunch. The nature of giving a vote to a group of registered professional technicians, which will amount maybe to 150 in a membership of 40,000, is not giving a likelihood of a whole bunch of folks getting elected from that group.

In many ways I think what we've done with this is really struck something that the two groups have agreed on, and because of that I support it. But I don't really think that it accomplishes much of anything, and we'll be back in this Legislature down the road dealing with the nature of the conflict or the nature of the necessity of coming up with something that will better deal with the demarcation lines, the ways that the professional technicians and technologists deal with the actual engineers, geologists, and geophysicists.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to close debate.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I rise just to ask everyone to support this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Bill 14

Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to third reading. Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, makes amendments to the Health Professions Act that respond directly to issues raised by professions being brought under the act. The Health Professions Act is nearing full completion. There will be 28 regulatory colleges established under the act and governed by regulation when it is fully implemented. Currently there are 16 colleges regulated under the act. The regulations for six more colleges are being finalized this spring. The amendments proposed in Bill 14 will strengthen the Health Professions Act and respond to issues raised by individual colleges and by the federation of regulated health professions.

Mr. Speaker, the key amendments to Bill 14 include clarification respecting receipt of complaints, the application of continuing competence programs, adding flexibility to the process for considering applications from professions to be governed under the act, enabling councils to regulate the title of specialist with respect to their profession, the addition of several protected titles, an amendment by the practice statement for opticians to allow the regulatory body to regulate its members who are performing refractions and conducting assessments.

During debate on the bill issues were raised with respect to two of the proposed amendments. One issue is related to opticians performing refractions and eye health assessments. The issue respecting eye health assessments was addressed through a House amendment agreed to by the regulatory bodies for optometrists and opticians to remove the reference eye health. The reference is now to conduct assessments.

I want to assure you that the amendment respecting the performance of refractions, which is not a restricted activity, only ensures that what opticians are currently doing as part of the practice of opticianry will be subject to the regulatory control of the opticians college. It doesn't change the scope of practice for opticians, nor does it permit them to perform the restricted activity of prescribing corrective lenses.

The second amendment that generated much discussion during debate on the bill relates to applications by professions who want to be regulated under the Health Professions Act. Instead of having to establish that there is support from the majority of practitioners, the minister will now be able to refer the application for investigation as long as it is in the public interest. It's important to emphasize that the minister is not being given the authority to choose who is regulated or recognized. That decision rests ultimately with the Legislature. It requires an amendment to the Health Professions Act. Professional self-governance is not a right but a privilege which is delegated to professions only when the public interest is served by doing so and when the advantages clearly outweigh the disadvantages.

In conducting an investigation, the Health Professions Advisory Board would be expected to ascertain such factors as what constitutes the practice of a profession, whether the profession is distinct and identifiable, what risks there are to the public of incompetent or unethical practice, and the qualifications and minimum standards of competence that are required for a person applying to the practice or profession.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill is an important part of the journey in having the Health Professions Act fully implemented, and I ask the hon. members for their support of third reading of Bill 14.

Bill 25 Securities Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to move third reading of Bill 25, Securities Amendment Act, 2006.

We had excellent discussion on Bill 25 during Committee of the Whole two weeks ago, and I'd like to take an opportunity to respond to a couple of questions that were raised in committee. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked how the revenue from fees collected by Alberta Securities Commission is used. The Minister of Finance was correct when she responded that the revenue goes toward the commission's general operation.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Securities Act requires that revenue from administrative penalties be used for investor education and to enhance the knowledge of the securities market operation in Alberta.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning also asked a number of questions, and in response to his queries about the proposed new sections 33.1 and 76 of the Securities Act, these provisions reflect the streamlining initiatives with other jurisdictions for interim orders and registration process by the executive director. Section 33.1 amendment streamlines the process to make a permanent cease-trade order against issuers failing to file required disclosure. This is based on a similar provision in British Columbia. The section 76 amendment, Mr. Speaker, streamlines the conditions of registration.

The hon. member also asked about sections 184 and 192, which deal with the appointment of independent review committees for investment funds. Answering this question will require some context. Canadian Securities Administrators have developed a proposed rule, or a national instrument, as it's called, that sets out the structure and functions of the committee. The proposed national instrument 81-107 requires that all publicly offered mutual funds have an independent review committee charged with reviewing any conflicts of interest that may arise out of the management of the fund.

The committee would also provide recommendations to the manager to fairly resolve these conflicts. Mr. Speaker, the proposed rule would also establish firm guidelines to determine who could be appointed to an independent review committee. I should note that the rule is still only proposed and following two public consultations has yet to be adopted.

Previously the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had asked whether we could provide an indication to the Assembly on how the passport system is working. The instrument that facilitates the passport system is a multilateral instrument, 11-101, principle regulator system. The instrument provides issuers with exemptions in nonprincipal jurisdictions from continuous disclosure and most prospective disclosure requirements and exemptions for registrants. In Alberta 12 per cent of applications from issuers regarding the continuous disclosure filings have been made under the passport system. I grant you that it is not a large number; however, keep in mind that the system has been in place less than one year. These early indications are promising since it takes time for market participants to become acquainted with the passport mechanism.

Finally, I note that some of the opposition members again repeated the argument for a single securities regulator. I've given the same response in the past, and even if provinces and territories were to change direction and pursue a common regulator, we would need to harmonize and simplify our securities laws. The changes to securities legislation set out in this bill are required regardless. It's important we ensure that our securities legislation remains modern, streamlined, and harmonized with other jurisdictions. This is essential not just for Alberta but for Canada to compete in the global marketplace.

In closing, I hope my comments have helped clarify any outstanding questions, and I urge members to support Bill 25. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Bill 28 Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased tonight to move third reading of Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006.

The Local Authorities Election Act describes the process for the election of municipal councils and school board trustees. It is an important piece of legislation that sets out how our leaders are elected at the local levels. Bill 28 will promote integrity and confidence in the election process by setting election standards that result in more secure and transparent election procedures.

The amendments will endeavour to acknowledge and encourage the public's role and participation in the election process. Bill 28 will also ensure that small and large jurisdictions can respond to their specific needs by permitting some discretionary procedural options within the legislation's framework.

As previously noted, these amendments were developed through consultations with municipalities, school boards, and the public. They deserve the support and approval of all members of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, 2006.

The six amendments in this act provide clarity to industry for emissions reduction, remediation of contaminated sites, and reclamation of coal and oil sands mines while upholding the principle of polluter pays. The bill also allows for expansion of the network of Alberta Environment's partners, supports the use of tools such as codes of practice, and makes access to environmental information easier for Albertans.

I urge support of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill has had extensive debate in second reading and in Committee of the Whole, led by our Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and we are against this bill. It's not going to have the effect that it intends, and I'm not going to go through all the points of debate again. Just to register our opposition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are some things to be said for some of the companies that do so well in reclaiming some of our oil sands areas and some of the ways that this bill will move towards helping them. I think that we have to have some justifiable pride in some of the companies that have been able to develop some of the practices that have brought forward some great strides, I think, in ensuring that the land is reclaimed. If anybody goes near some of the areas in the oil sands and sees some of the little parks that are being developed, some of the buffalo paddocks, some of the other areas, I think that they will agree that there are some great efforts being made in some of the ways that some of the mining reclamation companies have come forward in the way they deal with soils, in the way they stockpile their muskeg, in the way that they handle some of these things. I think they're laudable, and I hope that this legislation will help to provide for ensuring that their work goes forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to be very brief in voicing finally. We've gone through a lot of debate in regard to Bill 29. As often is the case, I'm finding that when a bill tries to bite off more than, perhaps, it can chew, you end up with some parts that are quite laudable, in fact, but others that require amendments. We were unfortunate in not being successful with those amendments. So I just wanted to stand in opposition to this bill this evening.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Bill 31
Health Information Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West of behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill I'm pleased to move third reading today of Bill 31, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006.

Amendments proposed in this bill will better address provincial electronic health record requirements, co-ordinate the retention periods for health records held by professional bodies, and clarify disclosure rules. The amendments are a culmination of stakeholder feedback, input from the all-party Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee, and analysis by Alberta Health and Wellness. Amendments promote patient safety, enable better tracking of drug trends, facilitate greater accountability in how funds are spent, allow for more accurate patient drug histories, and guard against health system fraud.

Regarding the additional disclosure provisions that generated much discussion during the bill's debate, the goal is to balance the privacy of individual's information with access to protect the public and manage the health system.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 31 and ask for support from members.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is an important bill because it deals with an important ethical issue; namely, the right of individuals to privacy and confidentiality about the information about their health. Of course, because of the public interest and the public need for safety and against fraud and so on, we've had a thorough debate about that, and I think that this bill really does manage to strike a balance with the protection of an individual's privacy and confidentiality on one hand and access to health information by various public bodies on the other. It's kind of an interesting Canadian compromise because, as a matter of fact, we don't prize individualism as much as we do the needs of the community as a whole, and I think this bill is directed to those needs of public security and public safety.

So I think that the stipulations in this bill, the protections that are in this bill are adequate, and I think we will vote in favour of this on third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Bill 32
Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 32.

This act updates the tissue and organ legislation. It will become more inclusive and explicit about the process of donations. Clarity will assist the public and the medical professionals who deal with organ and tissue donation on a regular basis. This legislation and associated regulations will require tissues and organs being transplanted in Alberta to be from safe sources, thereby protecting the health of Albertans receiving transplants. This legislation also includes mandatory consideration and the subsequent required reporting of potential donors. This will further increase donation and benefit the people of Alberta and Canada who are in need of life-saving and life-altering transplants.

Mr. Speaker, we still need Albertans to sign the universal donor card on the back of their health care card and talk to their family about their wishes to donate. While this legislation will work to reduce the wait-list for transplantation, our next task will be to reduce the number of Albertans who need to transplant. Factors such as high blood pressure, type 2 diabetes, burns, alcohol abuse, and tobacco use can all contribute to the need for transplants, so we need to do whatever we can to be healthy and prevent injuries. Being physically active, eating healthy foods, and living a healthy lifestyle can all make a difference. Combining this new legislation with people making their wishes known and good prevention will eventually lead to a reduced need for organ and tissue transplants.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act and ask for the support of all members. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's just tremendous – I'm giving out bouquets here – to see the progress beyond the private member's bill to this very solid bill, Bill 32. All the questions that I was really concerned about in discussing the private member's bill have been pretty well answered. This is a very important bill in terms of providing the organs for people who need them, and I support this bill wholeheartedly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise tonight and move third reading of Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

I think everyone is well acquainted with this bill and the advantages that it will provide on the taxation front for Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. members opposite for their support of this legislation throughout the process. I'd like to also address a few concerns raised during Committee of the Whole debate. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford questioned why the legislation used $12,900 as the basic spousal and eligible dependent amount instead of $14,523, that is used in the 2006-07 fiscal plan. The member suggested that this was due to the indexing that has come into effect since the last time this bill was amended. In fact, he is correct. The amount of $12,900 was the basic spousal and eligible dependent amount for 2001, the year we switched to the single rate tax system. Due to inflation-proofing this amount had grown to $14,523 by 2005.

There was no need to update the legislation each year to account for these inflation-related increases. However, since we are adjusting the amount by an additional $100 this year, we need to update the legislation. The easiest way to update the original $12,900 to $14,899 is to start the inflation-proofing process again from scratch. The hon. member also wanted to know the effect of the starting date of July 1 on the fiscal plan. When indexation occurs partway through the fiscal year, as it does in this case, the part-year effect is in fact built into the fiscal plan. I hope that these responses clarify the member's concerns.

To quickly review, Bill 33 will increase the basic spousal and eligible dependent tax credit amounts by $100 on top of inflation-proofing for a total increase of $376. With this change, Mr. Speaker, more low-income earners will be added to those shielded from provincial income taxes. Our basic personal and spousal amounts will be $14,899 in 2006, over $6,000 higher than the province with the next highest amount. This means that you can earn more in this province than anywhere in Canada before paying any provincial income tax. This means that more than 1 million of Alberta's 2.36 million tax filers pay no provincial income tax.

Mr. Speaker, this strengthens the government's focus on building Alberta's tax advantage as Albertans continue to pay the lowest overall taxes in Canada. I urge all members of this House to support Bill 33.

Thank you.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill again, albeit reluctantly. It's much ado about nothing really. I think the average for an individual taxpayer that will come out of that cut there will be about 35 bucks. It's important; a tax cut is a tax cut.

What I think is more important is what it doesn't deal with. It doesn't deal with things like my private member's bill both last year and this year that call for a recreation tax credit to help with some of the things that were talked about in the previous bill, looking for greater physical fitness, greater ability for children to access all sorts of recreation. We've seen some advances in some special programs in northeast Edmonton and other areas. We've seen some volunteer programs that have been doing it in many, many areas for a long time, but that could be improved.

The income tax cuts certainly could be much greater if the health care premium wasn't there. I mean, it's just totally inefficient in terms of any essence of looking at economics or anything. It's surely a political tax in its worst form, and if that was not there, it could actually give a much more substantial income tax cut if we had that in place.

There's no relief in the personal income tax area on things like credits for working in the oil sands, a travel area, things that could be put in place to attract people to Fort McMurray and other oil sands or northern remote areas to ensure that we're actually pulling workers from Alberta and from Canada.

I speak in favour of this bill, but I'm again reluctant because it is much ado about not too much. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the mover wish to close?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

Bill 35 Fuel Tax Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance, with kudos to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 35 will replace the existing Fuel Tax Act, which is outdated and no longer reflects how the tax is charged and collected. This bill is largely mechanical and technical in nature and does not change the fuels that are taxed nor the tax rates.

There were some questions brought up during Committee of the Whole, so I'd like to take a few moments to provide responses to those questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford wanted some information about the international fuel tax agreement. This is essentially an agreement among 48 American states and 10 Canadian provinces that enables uniform collection and distribution of fuel taxes paid by motor carriers transporting among jurisdictions. The agreement not only saves the trucking industry from having to file a fuel tax return in each jurisdiction travelled through but also significantly reduces the paperwork and compliance burden for fuel tax reporting.

The hon. member also inquired about section 13 of the bill, and asked how many of the accounts referred to in that section actually exist. In fact, no special accounts have been required to date. Section 13 is fundamentally similar to section 6 of the current Fuel Tax Act and provides that such accounts might be required where the financial stability of a remitter may be in question.

There was also concern about the prohibited sale provisions in the bill. Section 18(5) prohibits farmers from selling marked fuel for farming operations in Alberta at the reduced price to anyone other than another farmer for use in farming operations. Mr. Speaker, this section is very similar to section 14(5) of the current act. It essentially allows two farmers who are both authorized to purchase fuel at the reduced price to sell fuel to each other. The act does not govern the sale price.

The hon. member's final questions were regarding the duty of vendor section and whether anyone had contravened section 13(1), which is the similar section in the existing act. We are not aware of anyone being charged for an offence for contravening that section in 2004-05.

Regarding questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. He asked about marked fuel and what happens if a vendor is not passing savings on to the consumer. Mr. Speaker, section 10 provides that if the vendor does not pass on the benefit of the tax exempted on the marked fuel, the vendor is liable to pay to the Crown an amount equal to the benefit that has not been passed on. This is a penalty on the vendor. Whether the benefit under section 10 has been passed on will have to be determined based on a review of the facts of each case. Since marked fuel does not include tax and the consumer who purchases the marked fuel has not paid tax, there is nothing the consumer can recover from Alberta Finance. As previously discussed, section 13 of the existing act requires the tax and farm fuel benefit to be passed on to farmers. Section 10 expands that requirement to all tax exemptions.

I'll just reiterate, finally, that the principal goal of this bill is to provide the overall framework on how the fuel tax is applied and collected, and the bill provides for a multistage direct tax, meaning that the person who is highest in the supply and distribution chain will pay the tax to the Crown. Every person in the chain would pay the tax but would later recover the tax from the next person in the chain. In the end it is the end-user, or consumer, of the fuel that ultimately pays the tax.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I would just like to simply say that Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act, will make the administration and collection of fuel taxes easier for everyone involved. On that basis, I would urge everyone to vote in support of it at third reading.

Thank you.

Bill 36 Securities Transfer Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 36.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we've heard some excellent discussion on this bill both during second reading and in Committee of the Whole. I commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He took the opportunity to learn about the legislation from government staff and clearly did a lot of research on his own. The concerns and questions he raised demonstrate his understanding of the Securities Transfer Act's significance, and I thank him for speaking in its support last week.

Mr. Speaker, stakeholders have urged prompt uniform implementation of securities transfer legislation in Canada. The Securities Transfer Act represents an important example of interprovincial co-operation in responding to the needs of Canada's capital markets. It will provide a single, uniform source of rules for transferring and holding securities and interests in investment properties traded in Canada and elsewhere.

Ontario has recently made amendments to its Securities Transfer Act, making its bill virtually identical to Bill 36 in Alberta. Other provinces plan to introduce a securities transfer act in 2006. Once implemented, Mr. Speaker, Canada's securities transfer laws will become more closely aligned with the Uniform Commercial Code in the United States, and this is essential to ensure that Canada remains competitive not only with the United States but also in the global marketplace.

I urge all members to support this important legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 37
Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer)
Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 37, the Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

As previously noted, Bill 37 is basically a housekeeping act that fundamentally allows changes in legislation with references to "Provincial Treasurer" to be replaced with the phrase "Minister of Finance" or the minister responsible. It's simply updating legislation that aligns other legislation with the current title and responsibilities of the Minister of Finance and other program ministers.

I would urge everyone's support in that regard. Thank you.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 43
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 43 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 42
Appropriation Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments pursuant to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Bill 42, Appropriation Act, 2006, and to speak to the expense and equipment/inventory purchases that may apply to some of the $26,748,531,000. A lot of coin, a lot of money, a lot of budget there. Yet, you know, we get to see time and time again that there really isn't much of a budget in place when we vote for a budget and for the monies that run the government in this province. It seems that time and time again we will be seeing supplementary spending in the billions, and I'm sure that it will be coming forward. It doesn't seem to matter when it comes forward. The budget doesn't matter, and we will be looking out.

Nonetheless, there are a number of areas where obviously very quickly after this budget has come forward there may need to be something: in education, of course, where we're seeing layoffs and problems with class sizes. The amount that was put forward and originally budgeted is not looking to handle what is necessary as schools and boards look to the necessary monies that they have to run this so, so important area of our economy and of our culture and of our system. You know, if we could be looking toward some different ways of dealing with some of the monies that are spent there, if we could be looking at ways to ensure that families, children are not spending all their time raising extra money over and above what they have budgeted for the schools for things like textbooks and trips and just all sorts of small things, school lunches and things like that, we would have a much more efficient system and actually provide education and experience for our young people.

If we look at Advanced Education, you know, there are many areas of Advanced Education that seem to be very problematic right now. In the last report I had seen, there were 5,000 spots left wanting for apprentices to get into this year in northern Alberta, 5,000 apprentices in southern Alberta, people who are dying to work in the trades, who want to learn, to move ahead in their trade, to get into their trade, to try to find out how to make their way in a new career, yet they are not able to because those resources, those spots are not available.

We look at, you know, Economic Development. My gosh, in Economic Development we don't seem to be doing much of anything. We seem to be going back in many sectors. In terms of real agricultural development in new areas, in nutraceuticals and things like that, we haven't seen a whole bunch. We haven't seen a lot of development in many, many sectors as the nature of our economy seems to be driven more and more by oil and gas and not expecting more and more in other areas.

I was actually pleased to see the bill passed earlier this evening to ensure something of a tax cut because I think that may help somewhat for economic development, but we're not, you know, looking to training. I mentioned earlier under Advanced Education that the spots aren't full. We're looking to bring in temporary foreign workers, temporary foreign contractors who will not train apprentices that will be needed in the economy as we approach the demographic time bomb of the retirement of the baby boomers, and that's just coming up in a few years. These things aren't at all addressed.

We look at, you know, the many areas in Finance where we haven't really looked at, I think, tax cuts that would help to ensure that our economy is working more efficiently, that we are training more people, that we are developing our oil sands in a meaningful way and not just in a pell-mell, confused way.

You know, I look at some of the ways in Gaming that our lottery fund payments are disbursed, and I really wonder how that makes a whole bunch of sense.

I look at some of the things in Health and Wellness, and I very much am distressed at what has been happening with our seniors and the difficulty for them to have a decent retirement with just the few resources that so many of our seniors have to deal with.

I look at the nature of Infrastructure and Transportation, and I didn't really see, you know, some things that may help with aboriginal development and the provision to the aboriginal workforce of training for them and things like the east-west connector, things like some provision for the Peavine-McLennan road, more monies to ensure that highway 63 could go even faster. Some of it is very good, and I appreciate some of the spending that is there. I think that was necessary and should have been looked at over the long term.

In transportation we look at, in spending on road building and other similar types of infrastructure spending, a difficulty in the long term. I think it was not too many years back that the budget was cut very severely, and half of the people who work in that industry were lost. You know, it's very difficult to bring them back, very difficult to reinstate their training very quickly, and now the industry is having a huge problem bringing people up to speed. Their efficiency is not as good as it was, and I think that somehow that that has to be looked at as being an area where we have certain of these programs which are assured certain spending on a regular basis, that there be some type of a fund in place that ensures that this capital investment would continue in good times and bad, and that we would have that carry forward and not lose the contractors, not lose the people who work in that industry, not lose the ability and the capability to work on that and just throw money at it in a much, much bigger way in good times. That's what we're seeing. We're spending a whole bunch more because we didn't deal with it correctly in the past.

I look at the Solicitor General and the problems that we have in Edmonton in not taking care of the Remand Centre and ensuring that spending was put in place a long time ago to ensure that the proper facility is in place. I hear candidly and privately, to be truthful – they don't want to be public – from some of our police officers in north Edmonton that people are not being charged, that JPs, or justices of the peace, are not putting people in because they cannot honestly put some of the guys who should be put in the Remand Centre there because there is actually no space.

Under Seniors and Community Supports, the PDD. Gosh, I hope there's something that happens in that in the next few weeks. The people in Edmonton that I've talked to, the hundreds and hundreds of people that were at some of these meetings and demonstrations that looked to the real effect of what have in reality become cuts in a number of areas – the layoffs that have already happened in some areas are affecting people that are some of the least able to defend themselves in our society and are looking to so very little. Yet there was a cut in the Edmonton area of 3.5 per cent, I think, in some of these areas, in a system that does not make a lot of sense, quite often, in the number of providers and the way that some of these providers are controlled and administered, in some of the standards that are set for them. It's very, very questionable.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Sustainable Resource Development. When we look at the nature of ensuring that our forestry resources, our sustainable resources are coming forward in a much better way, I'm fearful of what may happen if we see the pine beetle coming through into Alberta in the same way I've seen in travelling through B.C. what has happened there. I'm not actually very, very encouraged by what I've seen.

The whole nature of the budget, though, I think leaves some room open for some other spending. I hope that in some ways there could be some cuts in some areas, but that won't happen.

With that, I end my remarks. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise again and speak to Bill 42, Appropriation Act, 2006. The government has spent a huge amount of money, no doubt, but the money, I think, was not spent wisely.

I start with the Department of Community Development. The overall ministry expense for Community Development for the year 2006-07 is $242 million, a 14 per cent decrease from the 2005-06 forecast. The 2006-07 expense and equipment/inventory purchases estimate is about $229.7 million, a 5 per cent increase.

I just want to make some comments. After spending a huge amount of money, why is this department so far behind compared to the other provinces in Canada? I was surprised when I was listening to question period. Somebody asked a question of the Deputy Premier, and she was quite happy with the way the government is handling community development. Still, I think of major concerns like the sports plan. I think the government was talking about the sports plan for a long, long time. I still have a copy of that, and they have not implemented the sports plan so far. A cultural policy is not there yet. A former Minister of Community Development promised to implement a cultural policy during this session, but I haven't seen any policy yet.

The minister of health talked about active lifestyles and giving some incentives to recreational facilities or maybe a tax rebate. She was going to implement that. Some good ideas which everybody appreciated, but it's not happening so far. After spending so much money, so much discussion, it's not in progress yet.

The human rights commission. Still I'm receiving lots of complaints from my constituents. Some people are waiting a long time, and the cases are still pending. I don't know where we're wrong, but if after spending a huge amount of money and the problems are still there, what's the use of injecting money into certain departments? Libraries, yes. The government gave a $20 million lump sum of money, but if you compare the per capita funds to the '80s, still we are behind compared to any other province in North America.

We don't have any plan to prepare athletes for the Olympics. I talked to somebody who manages and looks after top athletes not only for Alberta but for the country, and according to him Alberta has some really good athletes that can shine in the next Olympic Games. This job is part of the federal government as well, but still the Alberta government is not doing anything to help the Olympic department to produce some more athletes for the next coming Olympic Games.

The Alberta sector, as I've said many times during question period and during the budget debates, creates about 3,500 jobs, and the revenues are coming approximately the same as – the government gives them grants. It's not fair with this sector. I know that today the Minister of Finance didn't agree with this, but I still think this sector needs some more funding. I mean, the money was spent like horse racing or some other departments' money. I'm not saying that the money was not spent. Even this government has broken all the records. This Tory party is, I think, the most spending party ever in the history of Alberta. They should take a lesson. I mean, they should spend money very wisely.

Another thing. I hear lots of complaints about the WCB. The people on low income, contentious files, long-term – they are struggling. Some people believe that the government is like a private department. The government is totally trying to, you know, back off from this department, and they are not listening to individuals.

I'm glad that the government is giving some money to AISH after a long time, but still the people are complaining that every year there should be an evaluation, at least after one year, so that they can get a raise according to the inflation rate.

The PDD were protesting just a couple of weeks ago outside this Legislature, and they were given a 2 per cent raise. If you work it out, it's less than the inflation rate. They are people. Somebody said, you know, that the necessity of life is three things, Mr. Chairman: food, clothes, and shelter. I mean, a car, holidays, gambling, or if you do something else is a luxury. Those people with the low incomes are vulnerable people. They don't begrudge the big corporations if they are making profits in billions, but they do begrudge if they don't even get the basic necessities to live a reasonable life.

Every time we ask a question to the minister, they say that we are number one or number two. Nobody ever said that the art sector is number 10. I mean, how can we believe that? I suppose the health care system is number one. How can we believe it's number one when every time the minister compares it with Europe or somewhere else, with the other states. We will believe this health care system is number one or number two when we don't get any complaints. The people are suffering. There are long queues in the emergencies. I know that the department is working hard. Fifteen years ago we had a rally of about 15,000 people in Mill Woods, and at that time the waiting time was only four hours. Now it's nine hours' waiting time. We are not going forwards. We are going backwards.

I'm not talking about only health care. Every time you ask the Minister of Education, they spent that much money, in the classroom there's no problem, the classroom size problem is fixed, but when you talk to the students, the problem is still there.

I just want to know where we went wrong, and what we can do. I think the main reason is because we just throw money when we see a problem. When we see a problem, throw the money, and that problem is solved for a while. Then after some time the problem starts again.

Another thing, the long-term care centres. I know that in spite of the Auditor General's report – and they found out that in one-third of the facilities their standard of living is low, and every time we ask a question, the government is not listening. The government always answers very tactfully, but I don't call them answers. Yes, we ask them questions. We ask questions about the long-term care centres, but we don't get the proper answers that we actually asked for. But they always answer tactfully.

Drug abuse, crystal meth. In my riding crime is the major issue. Here's the report. We spent an 11.8 per cent increase on policing programs. If we spend that much money, why? Every time I read the newspaper, there is a stabbing, killing, kidnapping. In my riding recently two or three girls were just kidnapped, or nobody knows where they are. The bus incidents happen during the nighttime, and people are so afraid that they don't walk after 9 o'clock. I mean, I respect the people working in the police department. I know that they are working hard. They always take risks to save our lives. I'm not criticizing them, but my question is: where are we wrong? We can spend money – and the government is spending money – but the money is not well spent. It's not spent wisely.

My suggestions and my comments are that before we put some money in, we should have a proper policy. We should have proper discussions. Maybe we should have all-party discussions, case by case if they want. I think the NDP, Liberal, Alliance, or any independent person would love to sit with them because we are here to serve the people, to serve Albertans. Okay? I mean, I'm sorry to say it, but if everybody thinks this way, I don't think we will have a problem. The problem is that, first of all, we don't admit that there's a problem.

We can't solve problems just by throwing money, giving grants to the different communities. We gave $20,000 to Applewood community in Calgary, and the Auditor General's report found that the money was misused. We still can't find out why the government is not giving us the document through FOIP, which is 719 pages. That document contains the secrecy of that Applewood community, and we can't get it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: How do you know what's in it?

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, we want to find out. This is our job.

Mr. Lukaszuk: But you know what's in it.

Mr. Agnihotri: I'm saying that I want to know. Why is there secrecy? This is the point. You guys don't admit that. Through the chair. Sorry about that.

Deregulation. When it was regulated, the people were happy. They were paying less than $5 a gigajoule, right? Now they are paying three times more. If we come back to regulation, anybody here can guess how much we lost, why we lost because of a lack of long-term sustainable policies. At this point everybody, all the scholars agree that we are receiving royalties in billions and billions of dollars. Where's the policy? Nothing. And nobody wants to hear.

Anyway, if we can give a 40 per cent, 60 per cent increase in grants to horse racing, what's wrong with the arts sector? What's wrong with them? I was in Fort McMurray two weeks ago, and there is only one theatre. I talked to the manager, and she said: if we had three theatres like this, they would be full for seven days, and it cost them $1.8 million. Do you know how much the Alberta government paid them? Only $50,000. One million dollars comes from next door, a college, and the college gets the money from three big companies, Suncor, Syncrude, and some other – I don't exactly know the name of the third company. It's a shame. I mean, we are not spending money where the money should go. That's my comment on that.

I met a group of people from the university, Mr. Chairman, and I'm sorry to say that they said that sometimes they don't even see the teachers. There are over 550 students sitting in the classroom during lectures. Can't we do something? Can't we make their lives a little bit better? Of course we can if we admit that there's a problem or if we spend money wisely, but we don't.

Everybody sitting here knows that we have a lack of doctors, we have a lack of nurses, nursing staff. Just talk. They all talk. But, I mean, there are 4,000 foreign doctors doing ordinary jobs. If they get a little bit of training, we can send them to rural areas, and we can solve the problem easily. But, no. If they cross the border, go to America, those doctors get a licence. They can work there, but they can't work in Canada. This is a problem.

Training centre. I mean, if we know we have shortages, there's a problem. I'm dealing with one person. I'm meeting tomorrow morning with the minister of human resources. I told that party, I said: why don't you talk to the minister directly? I appreciate that the minister agreed. He said: okay, you bring them here. He will listen to them.

There's one of the big companies here. Their workforce is 300 people, full-time workers, and they need 25 workers right away. He said: "I don't care where you guys, you know, import those. Bring them from any country."

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to say a few words about, first of all, the process in terms of the budget process. I hope that all hon. members will read the Parkland Institute's publication Fiscal Surplus, Democratic Deficit: Budgeting and Government Finance in Alberta. It's an excellent document. It raises issues about how the whole budgetary process takes place, especially in respect to the involvement of opposition members, that there are no open, public, prebudget consultation hearings across Alberta.

For example, the House of Commons has a budget committee that travels across the country and listens to public input. I think that that kind of process should happen provincially as well. I remember when the committee came to Edmonton from Ottawa. I had a chance to address the committee on behalf of Poverty in Action, which was a group trying to deal with poverty here in Edmonton. It was a very important moment for this group to be able to speak to and to be heard by politicians coming from Ottawa. I think that kind of involvement is certainly important in terms of the public having a sense that they have input into budgetary discussions.

I mean, actually, school budgets seem to have a better process in terms of involving the public than this government. I spent some time in a school recently. They are in the process of looking at budgets now, and they invite parents to come and be involved and to look at the whole budget and to provide input before it goes to the school board. I think that that's important to have that kind of input.

Well, Mr. Chairman, just looking at this whole budget, I only have one issue. I mean, like my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie I could raise lots of issues about different parts of this Appropriation Act, but in looking at the whole document and all the different increases that there are in all the departments, the one area that I'm really concerned about is Human Resources and Employment and the continuing low rates for people unable to work or expected to work and so on. The basic welfare rates haven't changed very much in about 12 years. Twelve years ago I helped to actually form a group called the Quality of Life Commission in order to deal with the cuts to social services that affected poor people in this province. It was our privilege, in forming that commission, to actually invite high-profile people to be on the commission such as the Hon. Lois Hole and the Hon. Doug Roche.

They went into the inner city and listened to people living in poverty. After hearing the stories, they were convinced that people living on SFI then – it was called SFI – didn't have enough money that could amount to a living wage. That's why we have so many people going to food banks. That's why we have churches opening their doors to provide meals for people in this city and throughout this province. The money that people get on welfare is just not adequate to live. It is just deplorable that in this rich province here, 12 years later, the rates are the same.

So in this budget under People Expected to Work – Income Support it shows a decrease of $10 million from last year. Under People Expected to Work – Health Benefits, there's a decrease of almost $3 million. Under People Not Expected to Work – Income Support there's a decrease of over $5 million. Under the People Working – Earnings Supplement there is a decrease of over $3 million, or 19 per cent, from last year, and health benefits has also decreased by almost $1 million. So I think that in a rich province when we have so many billions of dollars and a huge budget like this, it's deplorable that those rates still are so low.

Now, I'm not of the school that thinks that income is the only issue because I think that also there need to be social supports. There needs to be a social support system for people who are living in poverty. I deplore the approach that's so prevalent that treats people just as individuals, and then the individuals come with their needs, but they're not even told what they're entitled to get in terms of social services. What we need is to revamp, completely change the whole welfare system so that it appreciates people holistically and provides the adequate social support system in the community.

But income does mean a lot. People cannot get out of poverty, they cannot live day by day without having adequate income. So if these rates continue this way, we're just going to have a situation in this province where the rich get richer, because there's so much opportunity for people in this province to improve themselves, and the poor get poorer, so the gap between the rich and the poor increases more and more. That will lead to social decay, lack of social cohesion in the society, a lot of fragmentation, a lot of despair on the part of those who have very little. I don't think that's the kind of Alberta that we want in the future.

So I would hope that as we move into the future, we would be wiser and put our money into providing for the people who have the least. I think it's a measure of the morality of a government how we treat those who are the poorest in society. I think every budget is a moral document. It tells us what kind of priorities a government has. Budgets, even for families, are an indication of what priorities a family has. In this case because there's so little money supporting people who need it the most, at the very bottom of society, I don't find this a moral budget. I think it's deplorable that we can't have more compassion for those who are desperate and those who are in need. With that, I'll take my seat.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

10:40

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 42 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we as a committee now rise and report Bill 43, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, and Bill 42, the Appropriation Act, 2006, and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills:
Bill 43, Bill 42.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 40
Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I have some very brief comments in regard to Bill 40. Quite frankly, if I had my druthers, I wouldn't be less inclined to look for ways to somehow improve this bill through amendment, but my very honourable and thoughtful colleague has done so. My feeling, just before I do bring forward the amendment that I have here for my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona, is to mention that I find it deplorable that we are moving these sorts of decisions from this Legislature to regulation. I think that it goes against every sort of better judgment. I know that we've been studying this for the last two and a half years, and then to make this move I find a bit difficult to swallow. Nonetheless, I do have an amendment for Bill 40, and I'd like to distribute that now.

Thank you.

The Chair: We will call this amendment A1. We'll just wait another moment to have them distribute it.

Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you may proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. As I had previously stated, I'm finding it difficult to try to amend this bill, but if there is one place where it can be done, I would suggest that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has hit on it. Basically what he's trying to do here is to place some reasonable control on how these regulations might be unfolding in the coming months and years.

The biggest concern that I think postsecondary students have is to be able to budget reasonably for tuition. I'm suggesting through this amendment that the tuition must not be increasing more than the Alberta consumer price index for the previous calendar year. That way people can make budgeting decisions that are reasonable, and in fact we can maintain a reasonable structure for public funding for postsecondary institutions as opposed to, let's say, allowing one or more or many or all of our postsecondary institution tuitions to run out of control and, thus, compromise the ability for all Albertans to access postsecondary education here in the province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's an interesting amendment. It's too bad they didn't bring it to me before now. One of the things that I've been able to do in the last few days was have a nice, long talk with students in the organization called CAUS. As you know, they're currently changing their leadership with new presidents and vice-presidents and so on taking over the helm of the organizations. One of the things that I did commit to them is that if they give the regulation-making process an honest shake, in other words an honest try, and if for some reason it doesn't work for them, then they can come to SPC and tell us what didn't work and how we should fix it or make the suggestion that it go back into legislation. They've asked me, you know, would I make that statement publicly, which I did last night and again tonight. I've also offered my two critics across the way to participate in that same process.

With respect to this amendment, as you can probably appreciate, there are three steps that we take in order to approve policy, and that's SPC, cabinet, and caucus. It would have been interesting had the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona approached us with that, and we might have had a discussion. As it is, I can't on behalf of government accept this amendment because it would be a policy that has not gone through the process.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in support of my colleague from Edmonton-Calder's amendment to Bill 40 and to perhaps poke one or two holes in my hon. colleague the minister's argument against it. Hole 1 would be this, if I'm quoting accurately, and Hansard will determine when the Blues are printed whether I got the quote exact or not: it's an interesting amendment; too bad it didn't come forward until now.

Mr. Chairman, the minister was I believe first elected to this House in 1993. That's a long, long time ago, certainly long enough ago to read the Standing Orders, learn the rules about how this process works. If you have respect for what is supposed to go on on the floor of this House, where duly elected representatives of the population of this entire province meet to debate legislation and policy, you'd realize that this is the way that it works, that bills are introduced, and at various stages, as appropriate, amendments are moved. Now, if the minister wants to say that he can't support this amendment and members of his caucus can take their direction from that comment or not as they see fit or as the whip allows them to do, that's fine, but to suggest that things would have been different if those of us on this side of the House had jumped through this minister's hoops is disingenuous at best.

You know, I too met with the outgoing and incoming leaders of CAUS this morning, so they were able to report to me on the meeting that they had with the minister yesterday. In fact, the offer was made, although they weren't 100 per cent clear on whether the offer was made as a sincere and binding commitment or whether it was more along the lines of: well, if you guys have some problems with this, come on back to my office and see if you can convince me to do it differently.

Yes, I assume that my counterpart in the third party, the Advanced Education critic, has probably received the same letter from the minister that I received today, and the minister will be getting a written answer, I would assume tomorrow, to his offer. I will say publicly right now that it is my intention to take the minister up on his offer, and if I have any influence whatsoever over the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I'll try to persuade him to do the same thing.

I will do this on my terms, and my terms are simply this. Number one, understand that in my role as the Official Opposition Advanced Education critic I will continue to exercise that role, and I will not be co-opted by being brought into the consultative process. [interjections] Laugh if you will, jackals, but if you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen, and I'm giving the minister the opportunity to withdraw the offer now if he's not up to the challenge.

Secondly, my agreeing to take part in that consultative process, as specious as it is – because, of course, consulting with stakeholders is something that happens at the very beginning of the process, and there's absolutely no guarantee that having been consulted with, the stakeholders' opinions will actually be taken under consideration and acted upon if they happen to contradict what the government has already made up its mind that it wants to do. So understand as well that my agreeing to participate and take the minister up on his offer in no way construes any kind of approval for Bill 40 and its undemocratic attempt to take tuition policy out of legislation and put it under regulation, where cabinet can mess with it any time it so feels and stick the students of this province with any old tuition policy that it would like, and there's not a darn thing that they could do about it. Bill 40 is called the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. It perhaps should have been more accurately titled the denial of democracy amendment act, 2006.

I'm going to support my colleague's amendment because it is, I suppose, in a way an attempt to take something, which is so fundamentally flawed as to leave us on this side of the House shaking our collective heads, and try to fix it. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I doubt that a bill of 60 or so words that seeks to do only one thing, which is to undemocratize the process further, can be fixed. Perhaps this bill should have just been drowned at birth, but I will vote in favour of the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think there are a couple of points that have to be made with respect to what we just heard. Number one, I think that the hon. member across the way probably doesn't realize that if you want to get an amendment approved at this stage, you have to have the approval of the process: standing policy, cabinet, and caucus. To stand there and say that you can have approvals of amendments made in this House without going through process, sir, is just an admission that you don't know how it works yet. Maybe you'll need to learn that.

To suggest, sir, that I did not make the offer that I said I did is absolutely wrong. One thing I do not do, sir, is come here and cast false witness. I made the offer, and the offer will stand.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I only report what I'm told. I've always done that, and I will continue to do that. The fact remains that the minister can talk about the process all he wants, but the process that he's discussing is a process that happens within the government side of the House, within the government. The minister is very fond of saying – I've lost count of the number of times that he has said it during debate on this bill – that the government is the government as though the government is some high priesthood.

Mr. Herard: No. It's elected to govern.

Mr. Taylor: The cabinet was selected by the Premier to govern, but the cabinet, I would remind the hon. minister, his oath to do good work notwithstanding, is answerable to the Legislature, which in turn is answerable to the people.

This goes to the fundamental problem that we deal with not only in Bill 40, Mr. Chairman, but every day in trying to deal with this government – we the people of Alberta, not we the opposition – that it has been in power so long, it is so arrogant, so complacent, so corrupted by power that it has utterly lost touch with the people of Alberta and has no understanding whatsoever – and this, I think, is personified in some of the comments that the minister has made – of the relationship that is supposed to exist between a duly, democratically elected government and the people who put it in office. I will remind the minister yet again that the opposition parties in the last election got 15,000 more votes than the Conservatives did. The Conservatives would be well advised to listen to their stakeholders on matters like this.

Thank you.

The Chair: Just a reminder to everyone that we are discussing amendment A1.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be brief. I just wanted to comment. I appreciate that we're on the amendment, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has raised an issue with respect to the process of the amendment. Having had the benefit of spending some nine years as deputy House leader or House leader, working to make sure that this Legislature has an effective process for creating public legislation for Albertans, I can tell the hon. member, who doesn't perhaps have that same level of experience, that this Legislature works best when we work collaboratively on public laws. We have done that, and we have done that with members of the opposition.

There are two roles that an opposition has, and I appreciate those two roles. One is to improve public legislation by offering positive amendments, and the other is to point out a different perspective when they have no appreciation that the amendment will be passed. When they want to improve public legislation – and I will indicate that in the past when working with opposition members, there have been improvements to public legislation because an amendment had been brought forward which raised a concern or an issue that hadn't been understood or discussed before or brought to light a different way of doing something, and we had the opportunity to discuss that.

The offer has always been open to bring an amendment of that sort to our attention so that we could discuss it, raise it through the caucus process so that we could make sure that everybody was comfortable with it so that we could actually then improve public legislation. But if, in fact, it was an amendment that was being brought forward for, in essence, political purposes – and I don't use that in any derogatory way but just respecting the fact that one of the roles of the opposition is to point out a different philosophy or different perspective – then there was no need, of course, to bring it forward ahead of time because they had no intention for anybody to look at it seriously.

Now, for the hon. member to say that when an amendment is dropped on the floor of the House with nobody having had an opportunity to previously see it, it is better than what they complain about if you ever introduce a bill in the House and expect to debate it immediately, which they would raise up holy terror about, is ridiculous. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie shouldn't get on his high horse about the idea that the hon. minister might suggest that the practice that we've had in this House – and it's my understanding it still continues – is that we are always prepared to consider an amendment that would perhaps improve a bill, and if there was an intention to bring forward such an amendment that would improve the bill, if it was brought forward on a timely basis for the members of the House to see and for caucuses to discuss and see whether it could be supported and see whether it could be fit into the policy objective of the bill, that would be considered in that manner. If it was a political amendment designed for them to put forward their point of view, then there was no need for that consultation.

I just wanted to take the opportunity on this particular amendment to point out that the process they followed was the latter and not the former. Therefore, they have no real reason to object to the hon. member's comments.

The Chair: Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The fact that a process has been going on for nine years or more and that it is a process behind closed doors and sometimes brings about changes still does not get away from the fact that it is undemocratic and fundamentally arrogant and is fundamentally not acting quite often in the best interests of the people.

I speak against the amendment to Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. With respect to the mover, I'm sure his reasons for moving it are laudable and correct, but I think that even having an amendment to this legislation implies some degree of acceptance of this odious legislation that shouldn't be passed in any way.

I think that in reality what we should be looking at is not even, you know, the sort of fake freeze that really was not a frozen tuition increase but just something that was covered by the government for a couple of years to look like a freeze. To be truthful, we should be looking to ensure that there is not just a cap in terms of percentage but that tuitions do not increase. By not increasing over time and by the fact that this would be seen as an investment – and I'll get into that later when I speak to the bill – and by looking at education as an investment in the future of Albertans and Alberta, we would be looking to ensure the prosperity of the province in the future.

I cannot support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment that's currently before us. I want to respond directly to some of the comments that the Minister of Advanced Education made. He indicated that he sees some benefit to the intention of this amendment and that had he had some more time to take it to his government caucus, he might well have been in favour of this amendment.

My question is: what the heck are we in such a hurry for? Everybody in this House knows that we can pass a bill through committee and third in the same day. That means that we've got all day tomorrow to do this. If there's benefit, if there's value in this particular amendment, let's adjourn tonight and allow the minister to take this amendment to his government caucus, share with them his views on the fact that it might actually have some merit, and bring it back to the House tomorrow afternoon. We can deal with the remaining issues tomorrow in committee, pass it through third, and at least we'll have something that is somewhat better than what we currently have in front of us.

Now, I'm not suggesting that I'm in favour of the bill, but I'm also a realist. I know that the government has a big majority, and they're going to get this piece of legislation, whether the opposition likes it or not. If the minister is suggesting that there's some merit to this particular amendment, I say let's work together and make that happen instead of the partisan politics that are taking place right now. I really would like to see that happen.

If it's appropriate, Mr. Chairman, I would move adjournment of debate at this time and ask for it to come back to the House tomorrow.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you. I'm disappointed to see that the government has chosen not to support the motion to adjourn and give themselves a chance to look at this amendment a little more carefully. Given that that's the case, I would like to just touch on a couple of further points that the Minister of Advanced Education made in his comments earlier.

He talked about the offer that he made to the student association when he met with them. He said to give it a chance, and if it doesn't work, bring it back to the SPCs. Well, those on the other side of the House will know better than I do, but I have heard varying accounts as to how long it takes for a group to get in front of an SPC. It can be anywhere from a year to three years or longer is what I've been told. Now, I don't know if that's a fact, but I certainly heard it, and I know that there are a lot of groups that want to get in front of an SPC.

Perhaps the minister could elaborate on his comments and make a firm commitment that if they want to get in front of an SPC, it would happen within, say, two months or one month or three months. I don't know. But give us some assurance that if, in fact, the student associations do end up with the same concerns that we have – well, they already have the same concerns that we have – after a bit of experience with this bill having been passed, then I think that we should have a commitment from the government and the minister, in particular, that he will get them in front of an SPC forthwith so that they don't have to wait a period of time to raise their concerns.

The other comment that I would like to make is that there have been many comments in the House this afternoon and this evening as to the effectiveness of all-party committees working together. There was a comment earlier about the search for a new Chief Electoral Officer, and I heard a number of members tonight talking about success in other areas with all-party committees. If the minister is really serious about his offer to include the Advanced Education critic from the Official Opposition and the Advanced Ed critic from the third party, then let's get serious about it and open up the standing policy committees to all-party committees like they do in every other Legislature in this country. Then we'll be doing something. Then you'll have a process that would have some legitimacy to it. You know, the lip service or the hollow words that are often thrown out by this government aren't good enough. Let's put our words into action. If you're really serious about allowing input from other parties, let's legitimize that by establishing all-party committees. Then I would have some faith in the process. As it is right now, I really, really don't.

My final comment on this particular amendment, Mr. Chairman, is that the way we're going, I can see a day when we might just as well not have a Legislature. I've said this time and time again, but every single time I come in here, it seems that there's another bill in front of us that's taking legislation and turning it into regulation. Pretty soon we won't have any legislation at all any more. It will all be empty frameworks that allow Executive Council to do whatever they want, when they want, consulting with whom they want, without ever being debated in public in this Legislature.

Frankly, all 83 of us, or at least the 58 of us that are not on the front benches of the government, our jobs will be redundant. We might just as well not be here if all we're going to do is debate an empty framework and not have any legislation with any teeth in it for us to debate for Albertans to follow and for Albertans to search on Hansard. What's the point? Ultimately, what's the point if everything is going to be moved into regulation and allow cabinet ministers to make the decisions behind closed doors?

That's just not good enough. It's not why I came here. I don't believe it's why any of you guys came here either. I really don't think that your intention when you ran for public office was to pass blanket legislation that would allow the cabinet to pass orders in council without input from legislators. That's not the reason why we ran for public office, and it certainly isn't what the people of Alberta expect. It's not what they deserve.

I do believe today is a sad day for Alberta, with this particular bill being pushed through the House, with Bill 20, the FOIP amendments, being pushed through the House. I think that we as a province will suffer for the decisions that are being made in this House today, and I don't doubt that a period of years down the road many of us, including many on the government side, will look back on today as a black day for Alberta. I'm actually very, very ashamed to have been a part of it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to stand up on amendment A1 on Bill 40. My basic comment is that I believe in the KISP principle, keep it simple, please. This is certainly a simple, understandable bill that the students would know is concrete. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford just took some of the comments I wanted to make. As we see Bill 20 and it is being put into the minister's hands and a special group to listen to the so-called desires of the students and Albertans to make the wise decision, I have to ask the question: well, should we not maybe just have a test put together and find the wisest person in the land, and he can become our benevolent ruler to decide all of the good things? It would be far more efficient than what we're doing, and it's much speedier as well, and it wouldn't cost us near the dollars.

I think it's disappointing that after two budgets we still don't have concrete legislation so that students can know what their tuition fees are going to be or the framework on how it would be decided. I think that the students and educators and people have to look at the budgets for the secondary schools to know what that is going to be, and they could plan on it instead of year to year wondering what the arbitrary decision of a minister might or might not be and have to adjust according to that.

I would be in favour of this, what I consider a not perfect amendment but one that is understandable. At least the people would know where it's coming from, and that's an important part, that we don't do well when we have arbitrary laws that are going to change or arbitrary decisions by a minister that could change mid-season because it's easy to do and efficient to do, which is the argument that I'm hearing.

I'm disappointed in how it has been going on Bill 40.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to speak on amendment A1, Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. I have a few comments, a few reasons to support this amendment. First of all, if this bill is so good, why does this government keep on rushing? Why don't they give the opposition enough time for discussion? If we discuss more and more, after some amendments we can make this bill better for a long, long time. We had experienced this, you see, in 2003. The last time, in 2003, the tuition fee, the cap, the annual increase – I mean, we have to change the legislation again and again, but the reason is because the government doesn't give enough time for discussion.

Another thing is that this bill is not democratic. I mean, if we give all the powers to the government and the government makes all the decisions through the back door, this is not democratically right. Giving more powers to the minister alone and not giving powers to the Legislature, this Chamber – the people sitting here are elected by the people. If we decide something, that means that the total population in Alberta is involved in that decision.

If the government really believes in transparency and accountability, they should make the decision here in the Legislature instead of giving powers to the ministers. But I still am surprised why this government is rushing and not giving enough time to the bill. This bill is a fundamentally flawed piece of legislation . . . [interjections] Excuse me? What's going on?

The Chair: We are speaking on the amendment.

Mr. Agnihotri: Oh, I see.

As happened with the FOIP bill, that bill, Bill 20, passed, but there was lots of criticism. This is another one, and I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that if we rush and pass this bill, this will be really, really a sad day for Alberta. I'm sure that the majority of people sitting here will listen to the voices of their own constituents and give sufficient time to the opposition for more discussion, and then it will be good for everybody.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chair, you know, I look at this bill, Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, and I look at it as being another nail in the coffin of democracy in Alberta. You know, if I look back to the 1930s and the governments that were in place in some parts of the world at that time, they would have been proud of this legislation, looking at taking another thing away from this Legislature. I remember that just not too many weeks ago the former Premier was speaking of the need for this government to look at what it has been doing, to look at how it's been taking things away more and more and more and more from this Legislature.

You know, this government doesn't trust Albertans. It doesn't trust democracy. What it has been doing and what it is doing, I think, is tantamount to what would have made the Nazis proud in the 1930s, would have made fascists proud . . .

Mr. Zwozdesky: A point of order.

Mr. Backs: . . . would have made any sort of the nature of these types of government very, very proud at that time, and this is the type of thing that is happening at this time.

11:20

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. I'm so grateful that the Member for Edmonton-Manning went rambling on and on because it proves my citation in Standing Orders of 23(h), (i), and (j). If he were to continue with those improper and absolutely incredibly silly remarks, he would indeed incite disorder through the avowing of false motives against hon. members of this House. I realize that that's not his characteristic nature, by and large, but making those kinds of allegations or imputing those kinds of false or unavowed motives or using insulting language such as references to Nazis is totally uncalled for in this Assembly. I'd simply ask the hon. member to retract that comment, and then we'll move on with the rest of his eloquent debate.

The Chair: Anyone want to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Backs: I will not retract those statements, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The term "fascist" has been ruled out of order by previous Acting Speaker Clegg on March 19, 1996, so I will take it that it was out of order and ask the hon. member if he would like to respond once again.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chairman, the nature of what this law is about is odious. I think that that is what it means. I meant what I said.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to remind the hon. member that under Beauchesne 489, "since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions." When you turn the page, on page 146 the letters N-a-z-i appear, which I read to be Nazi. So I would ask the hon. member to carefully reconsider his response to this point of order and simply withdraw the remark, and we will then be allowed to carry on.

The Chair: The term "Nazi" has also been ruled out of order on March 3, 1994, on March 26, 1990, and on August 14, 1989. I would give the member one more opportunity if he would like to respond to the point of order. It is out of order.

Mr. Backs: Upon advisement, I withdraw the word "Nazi," Mr. Chair.

The Chair: I accept that.

Debate Continued

The Chair: Now, does anyone want to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure once again to rise and speak to Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006. I want to add more comments on this bill. Given this government's clear policy failure on tuition, what makes them think that they have a mandate to take future decisions on tuition behind closed doors? I doubt that this is what all those voters in and around postsecondary institutions had in mind when they rejected Tory candidates and voted in Liberals. This bill is just another sign of Tory arrogance. This government presided over, even caused tuition to go up faster than in any other place in this country. They should not ram through legislative changes that take away any future legislative oversight. The idea of trusting them to manage tuition policy without any opposition input is ridiculous, particularly when the public overwhelmingly rejects the Tory position on tuition. The government's claim that this change is a necessity is false. In the past they have requested that institutions temporarily ignore legislative provisions for setting tuition policy. They can easily do so here until the policy is ready to be legislated. The new tuition policy may very well be better than what we have, but this is not saying much.

Mr. Chairman, previous tuition fee policies haven't lasted very long. As I mentioned before, the last time was in 2003. In fact, the tuition policy established in 1991 was sold as the policy for the '90s. It only lasted until 1995. Are we prepared to hand all future decisions over to the Tory cabinet simply because this latest policy may be a small improvement? Who knows how long this one will last? That's why I'm asking for more time. The government should give sufficient time to the opposition for more discussion. Making small improvements to a record of abject failure is not enough to warrant handing over all this power to the Tories. This is akin to blackmail, using the prospect of a new policy to convince students' families and elected representatives to give up the right to be heard.

The Chair: Hon. member, please sit down.

The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Zwozdesky: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). We had a ruling on this just last night from the chair. The term "blackmail" doesn't belong in this discussion either, hon. member. If you could just withdraw it, and then carry on with your other remarks, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Agnihotri: Temporarily I withdraw the word "blackmail." I'm sorry.

The Chair: That makes my job easier. Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Agnihotri: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With this government's record with this ideological preference for user-pay policies, allowing this government to move future decisions on tuition policy behind closed doors, not subject to public debate, is a nonstarter. The best predictor of future action is past performance. This government's record on tuition is abysmal. There is no way that good, conscientious, responsible legislators can agree to hand over this kind of power on such a critical issue to this Tory government.

Mr. Chairman, the members of the opposition parties got more votes in the last election than this Tory government. This bill represents the Tories saying that they do not need to hear or heed the views of the opposition members who represent more Albertans than they do. It is profoundly antidemocratic. This government claims that regulations are the same as legislation. This is not true. If it were, why would they be so insistent that tuition policy be moved into regulation?

This is not about enabling a better tuition policy. It's about removing the barriers to future changes, including the barrier of public debate. This government claims that they always consult on regulatory changes. This is false. Just over one month ago substantial changes were made to the student financial assistance regulation OC 139/2006, and neither of the major student stakeholder groups, CAUS or ACTISEC, was consulted. Not only does the government not consistently consult students on regulatory changes affecting them, but they did not even consult on this legislative change. Students had to hear about it through the grapevine and then immediately sent a letter objecting to the change to the minister.

Mr. Chairman, this change is not simply about enabling a better tuition policy. If this was true, we would be the first ones supporting it, but this government has wanted to take tuition controls out of legislation for a long, long time. They are doing it now because they think the new tuition policy provides them enough political cover, enough leverage with the students to do it. This is akin to – sorry; I can't use the word. Using the prospect of a new policy to convince students, families, and elected representatives to give up the right to be heard on this topic is yet another sign of Tory arrogance. As I said before, this bill is not democratic in giving powers to the minister. This is not fair. We should discuss this policy always in the Legislature, not behind the back doors, and I urge the government again to give more time to the opposition for more discussion. Maybe it takes one month, maybe two months, but more and more time, deeper and deeper discussions. As I said, this is a fundamentally flawed piece of legislation. This is not acceptable to me, this is not acceptable to my constituents, and this is not acceptable to Albertans. So I urge everyone to not support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of the Whole now rise and report Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 40. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move third reading of Bill 20.

At this time I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day of outstanding progress and something like 19 bills addressed this evening alone. In spite of a few rough spots along the way I think that says a lot for the ability of the House. On that note, I would move that we stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:35 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 17, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 105 visitors from Spruce Grove, from the Greystone Centennial middle school. I had the opportunity to visit with them a little bit in the rotunda at noon today, and this really is the future of our province. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Lonnie Granley, Mrs. Shireen Mohammed, Mrs. Lila Befus, Mrs. Tracy Lachman, Miss Robyn Currie, and parent helpers Mrs. Colleen Wallace, Mrs. Sandra Christiansen, Mrs. Susan Cherkas, Mrs. Pearl Young, and Mrs. Lauri MacKinnon. I believe they are in both galleries. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. the Premier, did you have an introduction?

Mr. Klein: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce Ryan Wells, who's here today with his two sons, Dylan and Eric Wells, and his uncle Wahab Ali. Ryan is an oil field supervisor, and his sons attend school in their hometown of Drayton Valley. Ryan's wife bid and won a lunch for four with me through the 10th annual Western Mardi Gras, an auction put on by the Chrysalis foundation.

Now, the foundation's auction raises funds in support of persons with disabilities and helps improve their lives in many ways. The Chrysalis foundation is a cause that's near and dear to Ryan, his sons, and especially his Uncle Wahab, whose daughter was born with a disability. I had the pleasure of enjoying lunch with the group of four this afternoon, which was once again a gourmet meal of sandwiches.

Some Hon. Members: Egg salad.

Mr. Klein: Egg salad, yes.

It was a special treat to talk with Ryan's sons, who at ages 11 and 12 are already like their father and uncle very community-minded Albertans. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask the Assembly to please join me in giving them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce a very special group called the CCAF, who are sitting in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. They are participants in a nine-month international fellowship program based in Ottawa and are visiting us today as part of a western Canadian tour. The fellowship program is a collaboration between the office of the Auditor General of Canada, the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation, and the Auditor General of Quebec. The program is sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency and is designed to expand knowledge and understanding of public-sector accounting and auditing as practised in Canada and help fellows address auditing issues in their home environment.

With us today is Mrs. Pauline Kane Fortune from Cameroon, Mr. José Alpizar Fallas from Costa Rica, Ms Grace Mugyabuso from Tanzania, Mr. James Ryoba from Tanzania, Mrs. Sirin Phankasem from Thailand, Mr. David Sohinto from Benin, Mr. Benoît Azodjilande from Benin. They are accompanied today by their hosts Ms Donna Bigelow, program co-ordinator of international affairs at the office of the Auditor General of Canada; Mrs. Antonine Campbell, principal of international relations at the office of the Auditor General of Canada; Mrs. Caroline Jorgensen, manager for international business at the CCAF in Ottawa; and Ms Lori Trudgeon, communications co-ordinator with the office of the Auditor General of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, they are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House the mother of one of our pages. Stacy Schell is the page. She's right over here. Apparently, she sprained her ankle, so we're happy to see her in the procession walking. It's rough work being a page. We're happy that Stacy's mother is here in the House, so it gives me great pleasure to introduce her, Jody Schell. She is in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I invite her to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First of all, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and members of the Assembly some 20 active seniors from Beacon Heights seniors' club, led by their leader Mrs. Vickie Drewoth. I've been over there a couple times, and they are active. They wanted me to play bingo with them, but I watched a couple games where they were covering eight or nine cards. I wouldn't have kept up with the one, so I wisely declined. They are in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction. I'm also very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Janet MacNeil. She is also the mother of one of our hard-working pages, Desirée MacNeil. Janet worked for the Multiple Sclerosis Society for eight years as a presenter for the MS readathon, educating and informing students about MS in schools around the city. In the process of changing careers, she continues to help with the MS Society. Janet is also a creative and dedicated mother to her four children. Janet is seated in the Speaker's gallery. I now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions this afternoon. The first is a duo of constituents from Edmonton-Rutherford, Scott Reith and his father, Bruce Reith. Scott is a 14-year-old who has a very keen interest in politics. He has visited the Parliament buildings in Ottawa and wanted a chance to experience a question period in our Legislature. He tells me that someday he wants to be Prime Minister. We had an opportunity to have a brief visit outside before the proceedings today, and his father, Bruce, informed me that he was once a page in this Legislature, in 1979. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second set of introductions, Mr. Speaker, three staff members from the Alberta Liberal caucus. I would like to introduce Jill Roszell, who is our outreach co-ordinator. She comes to us from the arts community and has done a bang-up job, if I may say so, this spring. Christel Hyshka is a caucus STEP student for the summer and previously worked in the office of the Member for Edmonton-McClung as a STEP student. She just completed a degree in political science and I understand will be beginning her master's work this fall. The third would be Kelly FitzGibbon, who is an administrative assistant extraordinaire. I can attest to that because at the last minute I had her prepare tablings for me this afternoon with very short notice, and it was a lot of work. So I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Anna-May Choles. Anna-May is a proud Edmontonian and is planning to enter her third year of honours in political science at the University of Alberta and will be providing her valuable assistance to the constituency office of Edmonton-Manning this summer. Please rise, Anna-May, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have two. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three guests who have already travelled over six hours to be here today. My guests are concerned citizens from the Clear Hills area and are here today to hopefully get some direction on how they can protect their community and their quality of life. They feel that confined hog feeding operations could have a detrimental impact on the future development of the region. I would ask my guests Terrie Wayland, Becky Montpellier, and Lee Svederus to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also privileged to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three guests who are visiting here from the Eureka River area. They have also travelled over six hours to be here. My guests Linda Basnett, Dave Larsen, and Herb Bean have come to the Legislature to promote responsible animal husbandry and land stewardship as they relate to confined hog feeding operations. They feel that this could have a negative and divisive impact on their community. I'd ask my distinguished guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms

Glynis Dorey. Ms Dorey is a member of the Strathcona composite high school parent council. She's a graduate of the computing science program at the U of A and holds a master of political economy from the London School of Economics. Glynis is here today about her concerns regarding insufficient heating and infrastructure problems at Strathcona high school. I'm very pleased to have Ms Dorey join us here today, and I would please ask her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sarah Crummy. Sarah has been volunteering in my constituency office of Edmonton-Centre all year and is now going to continue her work with us over the summer as our summer student. She has graduated with her degree in political science, and we're very honoured to have her join us and bring her perspective to our office. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the House.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Confidentiality of Ministerial Briefing Notes

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than a decade ago the Premier introduced a bill that was aimed at making the government more open and accountable to Albertans. The Premier intended to give the people of this province real power to see into the workings of government, stating, and I quote, that there is a public expectation that we must be more transparent; what you see is what you get, end quote. Now, upon his departure, the Premier is pushing legislation that effectively states to taxpayers: you can't see, and you can't get. To the Premier: given that in question period yesterday the Premier waved his briefing binder for the public to see, why now can they not get?

Mr. Klein: Well, I'll wave it again, and you aren't getting it. You are not getting it. It contains advice to the ministers. You can wait five years. Some of that advice the opposition will use for sure. This individual will use it for sure to interpret this as government policy when, in fact, it has not become policy. Some of it may become legislation; some of it may become policy. But this is fundamentally advice to the minister to answer questions, and we have no idea where they're coming from. No idea where they're coming from. But these are anticipated answers to questions. You know, they go to great lengths – that is, the members of the administration – to provide intelligent answers to what sometimes are very stupid questions.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, there are no stupid questions, just stupid answers.

Is it still the Premier's position that there exists a public expectation for greater government transparency in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's amazing when he talks about transparency. I had a conversation with a gentleman just a few days ago. He was a supporter, as many Albertans are, and he said that this is one of the most transparent governments he has ever encountered.

Transparency goes far beyond what's in briefing books. It involves attending media scrums almost on a daily basis. I know that the Leader of the Opposition is usually at those media scrums not to participate but to find out what I say so they can use it in question period the next day. Relative to transparency we use the website, we use communications as much as we possibly can. All of our ministers are accessible and open and accountable to the public through the media. So this is a very accessible and transparent government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the Leader of the Opposition usually takes the podium after the Premier leaves the room.

Given the Premier's apparent – to me, anyway – total flip-flop on transparency and accountability, what has happened under the Premier's watch that is so bad that it needs to be concealed?

Mr. Klein: Nothing needs to be concealed. This is totally consistent with the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. The information contained in this briefing book is already privileged and is already protected. Bill 20 simply takes it out for an extended period of time. After five years they can have it. They can have it then, not now and not to use for purely political purposes.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Gasoline Taxes

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've already had it.

Mr. Speaker, it comes as no surprise to motorists that as this long weekend approaches, gas prices begin to soar at the pumps again. While this government collects millions of dollars in extra revenue, our drivers continue to get hit with high provincial fuel taxes. This doesn't just affect Albertans hitting the highways for the long weekend. This is thousands of Albertans running small businesses dependent on vehicle fleets. To the Premier: given that for every dollar increase in the price of a barrel of oil the Alberta government reaps more than a hundred million dollars in extra revenue, why won't this government consider reducing the gasoline tax so that ordinary Albertans can benefit from soaring resource revenues?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, our tax on gasoline is already the lowest in Canada. It is a flat tax; it doesn't rise and fall with the price of gasoline. Basically, the producers are responsible for setting the price of gasoline. We have a tax, which, as I say, is the lowest in Canada, plus we rebate 5 cents a litre off gasoline back to municipalities. So I think that our policies relative to gasoline and the sale of gasoline, notwithstanding the revenues we reap from the oil industry through royalties, are very reasonable indeed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a two and a half dollar a barrel increase in the price of oil would cover any revenue that this province would lose from cutting the gasoline tax, why won't this government consider reducing the tax to 5 cents a litre so that municipalities continue to benefit, and now so do drivers as well?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we use the tax on gasoline to build roads and other needed infrastructure. If the hon. member is willing to forgo these very essential infrastructure projects, then I invite him to stand up and say so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then, to the Minister of Economic Development: what assessments, if any, has his department done to determine the effects of high gasoline prices on small Alberta businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. acting minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the department has done a lot of work on the feasibility of doing business across a number of different areas in North America. Quite recently there have been a number of reports that have come out that would indicate that Alberta is one of the best places to do business in all of North America. In fact, we rank very highly across a number of jurisdictions. So to look at only one piece of the whole puzzle really isn't responsible when you're talking about total business. We rank very well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government stated yesterday that they are processing over 10,000 temporary foreign workers for our oil sands. They say that these applications are approved by this Alberta government and will work under the oil sands temporary foreign worker memorandum of understanding initiated by this Alberta government. Yesterday in this Legislature the Minister of Advanced Education admitted that there are thousands of union tradesmen unemployed in Alberta. The minister said that they are unemployed because they want to work closed shop, which means that they want to work with a real union. My question is to the minister of human resources. Will this government stick to its often-repeated statement of hiring Albertans first, Canadians second, and work to rescind, to cancel, these applications for thousands of temporary, indentured foreign workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes only to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker. Yes, our top priority, of course, is to hire Albertans first, hire aboriginals, persons with developmental disabilities, and older workers that are displaced. That is our top priority.

I mentioned in this House earlier that we are working with some of the federal ministers already. I met with the federal minister of immigration already to talk about various issues that related to needs in Alberta. I'm meeting soon with the minister of Indian affairs to talk about the issue of aboriginal unemployment in Alberta. I've said before that there are over 200,000 aboriginal youth between the ages of 15 and 25. A lot of aboriginal youth still live in poverty. There's a lot of work to be done, but we are definitely working in that direction to ensure that they have the same opportunities as anybody else.

Mr. Backs: Let's get them working. They would make good workers.

A supplemental to the same minister: will the minister investigate whether restrictive contract terms by oil sands owners on union contractors are resulting in Albertans and Canadians being unemployed and replaced by temporary, indentured foreign workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I've said before in this House that with temporary foreign workers their immigration to Canada is completely under federal jurisdiction. This member knows that and still asks the same question over and over again. Call the federal immigration minister. You might get a different answer. In the meantime, our priority is to look after Albertans. Our job as a government is to create the environment for private industry to create the jobs and the wealth, and there are lots of job opportunities out there.

Mr. Backs: They're quoted publicly as saying that they're approved by the Alberta government.

A supplemental to the minister of human resources. Will the minister be working to ensure that temporary foreign workers are not displacing qualified Alberta tradesmen in oil sands work just because their employer will not employ union trades, which are the bulk of industrial tradesmen in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, like I mentioned earlier, we do as a government try to create the environment for private industry to create the jobs and the wealth in Alberta. It's up to the unions, individuals, non-union members that are interested in work to negotiate with the companies themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Political Party Donations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Unite the Right became a slogan with new meaning last night as the Liberals and the Tories joined forces to vote down an NDP amendment that would have cancelled the fiscally reckless corporate tax cut in this year's budget. Since we know that 73 per cent of PC Party contributions and almost half of Liberal Party contributions came from the corporate sector, while 99 per cent of NDP donations are from individual Albertans, it's clear who is paying the piper. My question is for the Premier. Will this Premier commit, before he leaves office, to taking big money out of Alberta politics by restricting donations to individuals only, as Quebec, Manitoba, and the federal government have done?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure, but I think that that is a matter for the Legislature. We have no control over who gives to this party, the Conservative Party, or the Liberal Party, nor do we have any control over who gives to the ND Party. You know, the New Democrats are supported in large part by the unions. Now, I don't know to what extent they get donations from the unions either individually from union members or collectively through the union organizations, but I would bet that they get a significant amount from unions and union workers.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we're pleased to give up union donations if you'll give up corporate donations.

Mr. Speaker, given that the corporate sector gave $1.5 million in 2005 to the Liberal and Conservative parties and received in exchange a $250 million tax cut, will the Premier admit that it's corporate donations that are driving the tax cut agenda of his government?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. It's the economy that's driving everything really. You know, the income tax laws are there for everyone. They're there for the NDs as well. It doesn't matter. The 90 some-odd per cent of the individuals who donate to the ND Party get a very handsome tax receipt and tax break, as do corporations, as does everyone and all bodies, corporate or otherwise, who donate to political parties.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this is a serious question, and other governments have taken it up. Will the Premier commit, before he leaves office, to taking big money out of politics?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is entirely up to the donors, whether they donate to the NDs, the Liberals, or the Conservatives. We are not a top-down government, you know. We are not a top-down government, and we don't interfere like the NDs want to interfere. They want to control every aspect of everyone's life all the time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Confined Hog Feeding Operations

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many feel that it's the responsibility and duty of government to strike a balance between individual rights and a community's will. It is often stated in law that one's individual rights end when you encroach on other people's quality of life or property. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What can municipalities do if they do not want confined hog feeding operations in their jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question. Municipalities do have the ability through their land-use planning to set aside areas they consider not appropriate for confined feeding operations. Certainly, under AOPA, the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, and the Natural Resources Conservation Board approval officers cannot approve applications if they're not consistent with the act or with the land-use provisions in the county's municipal development plan. I can assure this hon. member that this government is committed to ensuring that our legislation and the regulations are fair to the communities, to the operators, and to the environment.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is there anything residents who are against the confined hog feeding operation can do if their municipal government is pursuing it?

Mr. Horner: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, they can make representation to their municipal governments. When the NRCB receives the completed application for these proposals, the public is notified by ads in the local paper and courtesy letters. They usually have 20 working days to submit their concerns. It's my understanding that the CFO this member is speaking about in northern Alberta has really only submitted part 1 of the application process. Part 1 of the process is essentially just informing the NRCB that there's something coming. Most confined feeding operations in this province are family operations, and our producers are good stewards of the land, and we're very proud of that.

I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that it's my understanding that the county council in this instance has actually put a hold on any permit issuances at this point in time to ensure that those residents' concerns are heard, that the environmental issues are heard, that the regulations are followed, and that they're doing what they need to do as a municipality and as duly elected officials.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question will be to the minister of health. Does the province have any studies – and if not, will they undertake to do one? – to determine the effect that confined hog feeding operations have on the health of the workers, the neighbours, and the surrounding environment?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's more appropriate for the minister of agriculture, and I will ask him to respond.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you. We do an ongoing scientific review of confined feeding operations. The NRCB consults the latest data that is out there. We have had extensive consultation with the industry, and the Department of Environment is also well informed of any of these things.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate when a development like a hog operation threatens to split a community, and that's exactly why we've developed these processes. That's exactly why we've developed the regulations. That's exactly why we base the decisions on science in consultation with Environment. The NRCB actually reports to Sustainable Resource Development, and that balances the interests of agriculture and the environmental concerns.

I do find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the member whose constituency actually contains more than 126 confined feeding operations would be quite interested in limiting that. Our policy is to build agriculture in Alberta, not dismantle it. Our policy is to build jobs in rural Alberta, not move them out of rural Alberta. Our policy is to develop the value chain of agriculture that the primary producers can earn their dollar from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government recently announced that it is deferring collection of overpayments under the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, commonly referred to as CAIS. But that deferral applied only to the provinces where the federal government administers the CAIS program. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Because CAIS is handled here by the province, is that putting Alberta producers at a disadvantage?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to clarify this situation as there is a little bit of confusion out there. Yes, the federal government did defer collection of any CAIS overpayments until it has had a chance to work out details on an additional one-time funding arrangement which they've announced, which we're still waiting to hear the details on. The federal government did say that they were going to delay interest on those overpayments until January 1 of 2007.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the federal government is following our lead. We introduced a similar measure in February of this year, and in consultation with producers last fall we informed every producer who has been in an overpayment situation under the CAIS program that no interest would be charged until the end of December. As well, we also added some much-needed flexibility to the producers in the sense that we informed them that they could convert any money owed to low-interest loans, to long-term repayment under CAIS program payments that were coming to them. This week we are actually calling or writing to every Alberta producer who has an overpayment under CAIS, and we are recommending that they hold off any business decision on the overpayment until we've had a chance to see what the federal changes will do to the overpayment situations in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then my only supplemental to the same minister is: what is he or his department doing to ensure that the changes the federal government is proposing are the right ones for our Alberta producers, that will help us?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've talked about in this House a number of times, we are part and parcel of the National CAIS Committee. We are working through that committee to try and understand better what exactly it is that the federal government is going to do in terms of this retroactivity that they've announced, in terms of how they're going to calculate this payment. Until we know that, until we actually know what procedure they're going to follow and the calculation that they're going to use, it's a little difficult for us to understand how that's going to impact our producers in the province. We are lobbying a certain amount to have a set approach taken that we think will benefit, certainly, our grains and oilseeds producers who are the most dramatically hit.

It's interesting to note that of the 36,000 producers who are under our CAIS program, our overpayment situation is just a little bit over 10 per cent. In the total realm of things that's not to say that it's not a serious situation, Mr. Speaker. We believe it is, and we're hopeful that this one-time payment will help that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans have lost trust in the ability of this Environment minister to protect groundwater and their safety. Growing rural concerns about increasing gas migration into water have been dismissed as fearmongering by this minister. One week ago in Spirit River a private well exploded, burning and hospitalizing three men. Alberta Environment has been investigating and receiving complaints about this well for over three years. To the Minister of Environment: can the minister confirm that this private well which exploded in Spirit River was being investigated by Alberta Environment?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, this was, as the hon. member has mentioned, a very unfortunate occurrence. In fact, one of my own Environment staff is the son of the family who owns the well. Of course, I wish his father and the other two involved in the incident a speedy recovery as I'm sure all members of the Assembly do. My ministry was on-site very shortly after the incident occurred, and we will continue to be involved until this issue is resolved.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this hon. member has been in here talking about coal-bed methane drilling. There is no coal-bed methane drilling going on anywhere near what is happening up there. I want to say that at this time we have no reason to believe this is related to industrial activity. There is simply no coal-bed methane in this area at all.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, after two years of complaints from people like the Zimmermans, Ernsts, Lauridsens, and others, how can we believe this department is protecting their health and doing a proper investigation of the complaints?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the inferences that he is making against me personally I find unacceptable. I accept them but as a public official because my passion and my interest is protecting the land, air, and water of this province to every citizen, all 3.2 million.

I guess I'd best describe it as almost as if I don't have a heart. All I can say to you is simply this. Albertans are very caring people, and I know that this government reflects that in how we protect the environment. I think, based on some of the inferences that you have made against me, based on some of the unsubstantiated facts that you have made, I can assure all Albertans that we will do what is right in protecting their interest.

Let me end by saying this. I think there's only one quality that is worse than the hardness of the heart, based on the kind of comments you're making, and that is softness of the head.

Dr. Swann: Three years this man waited for investigations. He still has no explanation of why his water exploded.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment has not met the mark in protecting our most vital resource.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I appreciate that there's a synergy that goes on in here, and I also appreciate that there's emotion, but it's question period. Let's get to the question, okay?

2:10

Dr. Swann: I ask the Minister of Environment to resign.

Mr. Boutilier: Not on your life, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I have had many constituents visiting my office to talk about the services their loved ones receive from the community-based programs funded by PDD boards. Even though they are satisfied with the quality of the programs they and their loved ones receive, they are concerned that the recent increase in funding will not enable these programs to maintain these services at current levels. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Is the minister committed to ensuring that funding levels are maintained at adequate levels to ensure that there are no cuts to community services of PDD programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. member because I know, too, how important this program is, and I have been paying close attention to the concerns of the people in the community. There is substantial funding in the PDD program, and I am committed. The hon. member has asked that. I am committed to ensuring that the substantial funding remains in place for the services, but I want to tell you how. This is a top priority for my ministry and there are two ways. One is the bill that we have here in this session, which I hope will pass soon and be proclaimed, and that legislation will change the governance, and it will also change the way that the program is administered. Along with that, I am currently reviewing the funding and the eight steps the funding goes through before it reaches the individual in the community. I believe there is a disconnect there. I will find that. I expect to have answers within the next two months, the next eight weeks, and I hope that satisfies this member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: will the minister commit to monitoring the funding situation closely and make sure to address any shortfall in funding to these community groups which negatively impacts services provided to recipients? If she doesn't, will she resign?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, I can't even believe you said that.

Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness this is very important, about communication with the community. I can assure the member that I have met with the regional boards, the regional board chairs in the past two weeks. I've also met with the regional CEOs. We've discussed the monitoring, the accountability. I am meeting with the families, with caregivers out in the community, and even this Friday I'm meeting at the Disability Action Hall in Calgary, and we are discussing this very issue. This member is more than welcome to be there, and I will be there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Provincial Campgrounds

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the Minister of Community Development would agree that this weekend officially kicks off the 2006 camping season. Where we may disagree is on the ability of the park system to keep Albertans healthy, happy, and safe over the long weekend. My questions are all to the Minister of Community Development. How many conservation officers, permanent and seasonal, will be on duty this long weekend to ensure that Albertans have a safe visit to our approximately 500 parks and protected areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 278 permanent park staff, and in the summer we nearly double that number, by another 300. Of those, there are 68 permanent conservation officers and 91 seasonal for a total of 159 conservation officers during the summer seasons. Two hundred and seventy of our parks have camping facilities; therefore, that gives us approximately one conservation officer for every two parks.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, the conservation officers are responsible for public safety, resource management, heritage appreciation, park administration, and enforcement of the various legislation that we have. Our interpretive staff manage heritage appreciation activities, including interpretive programming such as special events, guided walks, publications, environmental education, and public inquiries and complaints.

Mr. Speaker, our goal is to ensure that Alberta's provincial parks are safe and enjoyable for families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much. I very much appreciate the minister's response to the questions I sent to him previously.

Given that two popular campgrounds, Miquelon Lake and English Bay, will be closed this weekend, has the minister evaluated which nearby parks are expected to take displaced visitors, and if so, what steps were taken to plan for these extra displaced people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for asking this question. Just to reinforce again that at Miquelon Lake provincial park there will be approximately $5 million of upgrading that will be taking place this summer to make our camping experiences that much more enjoyable for Albertans and visitors to this province. There will also be approximately $700,000 in upgrades that will occur at English Bay this summer at Cold Lake. There was a public service announcement that was released on May 16 advising Albertans of this, and there are certainly opportunities in the surrounding areas where other camp facilities will be available for them to go out and camp this weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My final question to the Minister of Community Development: now that Wal-Mart is officially sponsoring Alberta's park system, can the minister confirm whether there will be greeters in blue vests and yellow buttons welcoming campers to Alberta's parks this weekend?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I think the situation in regard to Wal-Mart has been a little bit exaggerated. I can tell you that we do have a brochure that goes out advertising the campgrounds that we have available in our province, and that is done through various groups that take advertising space. Wal-Mart happens to be one of those. They also have links that have been established to our Gateway website that people have been able to go through. What we have done is we've informed Wal-Mart that there has been a little bit of negative reaction in regard to them linking themselves to our Gateway website, and we've asked that they redirect their page to describe the environmental initiatives that they do providing funding to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Postsecondary Education for Rural Students

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Alberta jointly launched a new bursary program with the Canada Millennium Scholarship Foundation to enable rural students to pursue postsecondary opportunities. Statistics show that fewer rural students complete postsecondary studies compared to their urban counterparts. My first question today is to the Minister of Advanced Education. What is the value of this new bursary, and will the bursary make it easier for students to complete a program in Alberta's postsecondary learning system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was greatly honoured this morning to be in Red Deer at Red Deer College along with Mr. Norman Riddell of the millennium foundation to announce the new rural incentive bursary. We know that postsecondary students from rural Alberta face unique challenges when furthering their education. In fact, 15 per cent fewer rural students enrol in postsecondary than urban students. So this bursary will help to assist with these challenges, in turn increasing the number of Albertans from rural communities pursuing and completing postsecondary education. We estimate that about 8,100 Albertans will be eligible to receive this $1,000 bursary, and we hope that each and every one of these adults will make good use of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you. My second question is also directed to the Minister of Advanced Education. Which students will qualify for this rural scholarship?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, this bursary is available to students studying in an approved Canadian institution who are enrolled in their first or second year of a postsecondary program of at least two years' duration. Students applying for the bursary must have attended high school in rural Alberta or lived in rural Alberta for 12 months prior to starting their studies. In addition, to qualify, the students also have to be eligible for at least $1,000 in student loan assistance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:20 City Centre Early Education Project

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city centre early education project is an award-winning collaborative effort among seven inner-city Edmonton schools to overcome challenges related to poverty and lack of opportunity. One of their most important successes has been the junior kindergarten program in three of these schools. The program was funded on an interim basis by Children's Services, but the funding will be eliminated for September of this year. The success of this program is well documented, and its jeopardy is a serious reversal for high-needs students. My question is to the Minister of Education. What is the minister prepared to do to save junior kindergarten in the city centre project?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the hon. member is referring to the so-called AISI projects or not, but if he is, it was made very clear to the Edmonton public school board – and he would know this because he may have been there when it started three years ago – that the funding was provided on a one-time basis and that funds that were to be used out of that funding pool were not going to be repetitive in nature. They were not going to recur.

Now, if that's the fund he's referring to, then those particular programs will have to be adjusted for by the school board in its budget by the end of June. Alternatively, they'll have to look for other sources. The nature and extent of our AISI program is that we provide those monies, about $71 million a year across the province, for specific innovative projects that typically have a beginning, a middle, and an end.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not talking about the AISI programs. I'm talking about junior kindergarten, which was paid for by Children's Services, and they're eliminating it. My question is again to the minister. What is the minister prepared to do to save junior kindergarten, specifically junior kindergarten that was financed by Children's Services before?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I apologize to the member. There were some kindergarten programs funded out of AISI as well. At least that's my understanding.

Now, I'm not aware of the particular junior K program specifically that is being referenced here, but I'd be happy to take a look at that and speak with Children's Services and see what it is that the public school board has in mind because this is, after all, a local decision by the local board.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a local decision if they get the funding cut from the provincial government.

My question again is to the minister. Is the minister prepared to step up? This is well documented that this is doing good work for high-needs students. Is the minister prepared to continue with these programs in the three schools in the city centre project?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'm at a disadvantage because I don't know which specific schools are being referenced or which specific programs, but if the member would be so kind as to send me over the information, I'd be happy to take a look at it and see. Maybe something can be done, maybe not. I don't know on what basis Children's Services might have been funding which programs. Was it one-time funding, or was it some pilot funding, or something other than that? I'd be happy to take a look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Applewood Park Community Association

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta Auditor General's report has led to the Ministry of Community Development demanding that the Applewood Park Community Association repay its $20,000 grant. The minister has asked the Crown's debt collection to collect the money. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: why has the Alberta debt collection taken so long to collect any of the missing Wild Rose funds from the Applewood community?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's true that Restructuring and Government Efficiency does look after debt collections for the province of Alberta, and I can tell you that the overall success rate of Restructuring and Government Efficiency's Crown debt collection unit is very high. From 2003 to 2004 we went from $4 million in collections to $9 million today.

On this particular issue, Mr. Speaker, we have passed this over to Justice because we believe that this case may be going to court. Justice is determining the strength of the case and doing a cost-benefit analysis to determine whether to proceed with this collection or not. Once we hear the advice from Justice, we'll work with Community Development, who will determine whether or not we are going to proceed.

Mr. Agnihotri: I don't know when that time will come.

My next supplemental, to the Minister of Justice: why does the government take legal action against Albertans that do not pay their health care premiums yet takes this soft approach to Applewood?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, Alberta Justice provides legal services to each of the ministries, and if the ministries ask us for assistance in that regard, we provide it. The hon. minister indicated that he has asked for assistance from my department. That assistance is being provided. I don't know exactly what the current status of it is, but I'm sure that when he receives the advice from Justice, appropriate action will be taken.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next supplemental, to the Minister of Government Services: why is access to information refusing to disclose the Department of Justice's 719 pages of records pertaining to Applewood Park Community Association?

Mr. VanderBurg: I have no idea on the particulars of this, and I'll get back to him in writing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Alberta in Washington, DC

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Legislature rotunda is featuring many colourful banners depicting Alberta's participation in the Smithsonian's Folklife Festival in Washington, DC, this summer. A number of my constituents were interviewed to be a part of this festival. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Can he tell us who was selected and how?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 21 I was pleased to announce along with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations the names of approximately 150 Albertans that will be in Washington, DC, at the Smithsonian. These Albertans will showcase urban and cultural diversity. Our creativity, entrepreneurship, and can-do spirit will all be on display. This is a curated event. Participants were chosen by the Smithsonian Institute in consultation with staff from my department. The participants are listed on the April 21 news release or can also be found on our website at albertaindc.com.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What other activities does the government have planned, and was Alberta's business community given the opportunity to participate?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we're going to help tell Alberta's story in a lot of different ways at a very, very important place. There are going to be economic forums featuring people speaking in the areas of energy and agriculture, innovation and science. Our postsecondary institutions are going to be featured with a concert at the prestigious Kennedy Center. There will be receptions held by the city of Edmonton, a Stampede breakfast hosted in Washington.

We're going to tell people in Washington about the integration of our ag sectors in both countries, we're going to educate Americans about the largest energy supplier to the United States, and we're going to promote Alberta as a tourism destination. We certainly have involved people from organizations and businesses throughout the province's municipalities. Many of them have come forward to us, knocking on our door and asking how they can help, how they can participate. As an example, Alberta beef producers are donating Alberta beef. Caterpillar and Finning are donating a giant oil sands truck to be on display at the festival. Suncor is supporting the energy forum. So there's been a great deal of involvement from many different sectors. We've got a great story to tell. We're going to do a great job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Regulation of the Legal Profession

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The legal profession in Alberta is extremely important, and it is imperative that lawyers remain independent and impartial. These same values must also apply to the Law Society of Alberta in dealing with public complaints in order to increase public confidence in the justice system. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that transparency and accountability are vital to increase public confidence in the system, how can a system for complaints against lawyers run by lawyers themselves achieve public confidence?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Law Society of Alberta is a self-governing body. It is pursuant to an act of this Legislature. Indeed, from my observation in the few years I've been here, this is a trend we have, that there are more self-governing bodies. My recollection is that the benchers, who are the group that are elected by the lawyers, ultimately include among them lay benchers who are put there by appointment. These are people who are not lawyers but who participate as full benchers along with the other benchers. My memory is that they participate in the discipline hearings. The discipline hearings are also, to my understanding, very public if, in fact, they proceed to a discipline. The process itself is one where a complaint is made. If there is some substance to the complaint upon initial review, it goes to a hearing. If there is not, it ends at that time. If it goes to a hearing, it is a matter of public record. I know of nothing that is more transparent than something that is done in public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just one supplemental question: given that reform of the legal profession from professional self-regulation to a more open and transparent system has been conducted in the United Kingdom – and I'll table the Sir David Clementi report later; good summer reading, by the way – will the minister commit to a similar review of the Legal Profession Act in Alberta to make the system more responsive to public concerns?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the Clementi report, and I think the hon. member, if he was in fact holding up what he is going to file, is not going to be filing the entire report because when I got it, it was a full binder as opposed to just part of a binder.

Nonetheless, the fact is that the United Kingdom has in fact approached this in a different manner. There's absolutely no doubt about that. But I can tell you, on the basis of the information I have, that the circumstances we currently have in Alberta – indeed probably across Canada but certainly in Alberta – are different than the circumstances that were present in the U.K. when this particular matter went forward with the Clementi report and the changes following.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that's fine?

Then the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Accessible Outdoor Recreation Facilities

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans have asked about the status of Blue Lake centre, located in William A. Switzer provincial park near Hinton. They believe that the Blue Lake centre would make an excellent location for a fully accessible facility similar to William Watson Lodge in Kananaskis Country. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Has the ministry assessed the demand for an accessible facility more easily reached by residents of northern or central Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Blue Lake centre offers significant opportunities for a wide variety of outdoor activities. The Alberta government has retained a consultant to investigate future options for the Blue Lake centre, including the possibility of a facility for persons with disabilities. We've also received indication from the disability association that converting the Blue Lake centre into a disability accessible facility would be encouraged. Once we've reviewed the consultant's report, we'll have a much clearer picture of what we have to do forward in order to meet all these needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you. It's complete.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'll call upon the first of six to participate in Members' Statements today, but a historical vignette. [interjection] I want to put a disclaimer on what happened yesterday. I had nothing to do with that. Nothing to do with that.

Back to the business today. Four hundred and fifty candidates from nine different political parties contested the November 22, 2004, Alberta election. Prior to the implementation of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act of 1978 candidates could run under any banner that they chose. Starting January 1, 1978, political parties and independent candidates were required to provide appropriate registration information to Elections Alberta. This registration information has to be in place before a candidate's nomination papers are accepted and the candidate is allowed to participate in the election.

In Alberta's electoral history 62 different political affiliations or parties have had candidates run in our elections or by-elections. In our first election, held on November 9, 1905, the political affiliations or parties were Conservative, Liberal, and Independent with a capital I. In the election held November 22, 2004, the political affiliations or parties were – and there are currently nine registered political parties in Alberta – the Alberta Alliance Party, the Alberta Greens, the Alberta Liberal Party, the Alberta New Democrats, the Alberta Party, the Alberta Social Credit Party, the Communist Party of Alberta, the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, and the Separation Party of Alberta.

During the Social Credit era coalitions between Liberals and Conservatives were created in an attempt to defeat the government. These coalitions failed, and failed miserably. In the 1955 provincial election the Liberal Conservative political affiliation received only 1.1 per cent of the vote. In the 1963 provincial election the Conservative-Liberal affiliation received .3 per cent of the vote, and in the 1967 election the Liberal/Progressive Conservative Coalition received only .1 per cent of the vote. The support for candidates running under the Conservative banner or Liberal banner fared much better in these three elections.

In terms of political affiliation or party identification the name "Liberal" was not to be used by any candidate in the 1944 election whereas the name "Conservative" was not to be used by any candidate in the elections of 1940, 1944, and 1948. Liberal and Conservative candidates have run in all other Alberta elections.

The New Democratic Party name was used for the first time in the 1963 general election. The Alliance Party of Alberta name was used for the first time in the election of 1993. The Conservative and Liberal names were used for the first time in 1905.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great hope and great pleasure that the gentlemen I wish to introduce today are present in the Assembly. Mr. Peter Snyder from Allentown, Pennsylvania, is with us. He's with Air Products, and they have just completed a plant in Strathcona county and have received permission to construct a second facility. Accompanying him today is Mr. Ian Murray of Edmonton. The great enthusiasm they display for locating Air Products in Strathcona and in Alberta is indication that Air Products, as the world's largest supplier of third-party hydrogen, has recognized the advantage of locating in Alberta as the best place in North America to do business. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm applause of our members. At least one is still here.

Thank you.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Calgary Police and Community Interactive Fair

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a great pleasure for me last weekend to attend the police and community interactive fair. The purpose of the police and community interactive fair is to heighten the awareness for residents within district 4 about the various policing, community services, and available programs.

Mr. Speaker, the event was organized by Sergeant Gord Renke of the Calgary Police Service, and he put together an outstanding list of community organizations that are committed to serving the citizens of northeast Calgary. Some of the organizations that attended this weekend's event were the Parent Link Centre, Patch project, northeast Crime Stoppers, Block Parents, Greater Forest Lawn Seniors, Rainbow Lodge transitional housing society, youth alternative programs, Wal-Mart Walk for Miracles, the CHR, Sunrise community link, Wood's Homes, Families Matter, Calgary Family Services, and the city of Calgary. They all participated and on a daily basis work in my constituency and in many others to provide programs and services to people from all walks of life.

Mr. Speaker, while it's not possible to mention all of the great things each of these organizations do, I would like to recognize them and make the Assembly aware and all of my constituents aware that these programs are available for them to make use of. They can contact my office any time to get information on these valuable services provided to the community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Tribute to Fathers

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today in recognition of Father's Day. While Father's Day will not be taking place until the third Sunday in June, June 18 this year, I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the importance of our fathers a little bit early. We recognized Mother's Day in the Legislature last week, so I think our dads deserve the same recognition.

Father's Day offers us a wonderful opportunity to celebrate fatherhood and honour our fathers. It's a time to recognize the important roles that our fathers play in our lives and the lives of our families. Fathers are vital. The benefits of engaged fathers are obvious. Children are healthier, happier, and more productive when their fathers are active in their lives. Kids do better in school, are less likely to drink or use drugs, and are less likely to be involved with delinquent behaviour. The inverse, unfortunately, is also true. When a father is absent from a child's life, there's an increased likelihood of behavioural problems, depression, and health issues. Simply put, children are generally better off when both parents play an active role in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, children learn a great deal from their fathers. Dads play a vital role in the development, growth, and maturation of their children. Fathers teach their children how to play, how to learn, and how to work. They are there for wisdom, advice, and affection. Father's Day offers us a chance to let our dads know just how much we love them and how important they are to us and to remember our dads who have passed on.

I would like to acknowledge this important day a little early this year and wish dads across Alberta a happy Father's Day. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Bow Habitat Station Aquatic Ecopark

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend plans were unveiled for Alberta's first aquatic ecopark, the Bow Habitat Station. Over 4,000 Albertans participated in the Wild Thing celebration organized by Alberta fish and wildlife and the Livingston Fish Hatchery.

The Bow Habitat Station, scheduled to open in the spring of 2007, will include displays and interactive exhibits that will help teach visitors and students how everything in our environment relates back to freshwater. The Bow Habitat Station will be a world-class visitor centre. It's located in the heart of the city of Calgary and is sort of an oasis surrounded by the city's major transportation thoroughfares. It includes the Sam Livingston Fish Hatchery and the Pearce Estate Interpretive Wetland. It is expected to attract 100,000 visitors and students each year.

This $20 million project is made possible through a partnership between government, industry, and stakeholders. Together the government of Alberta and more than 100 businesses, corporations, nonprofit organizations, and granting agencies from across Canada have contributed to this project. Major partners and exhibit sponsors include the city of Calgary, BP Canada Energy Company, Ducks Unlimited Canada, HSBC Bank Canada, and the Sam Livingston Fish Hatchery Volunteer Society.

The long-term vision of the Bow Habitat Station is to promote awareness of the connections between water and the rest of our environment and to encourage Albertans and visitors to discover what each of us can do to sustain the province's natural resources for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Go Oilers Go!

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about team spirit, spirit that is growing in numbers and in followers. This spirit has not only gripped the hearts of the young and old but that of a city, not just any city but the City of Champions, home to the Edmonton Oilers, five-time Stanley Cup champions.

Once again Edmonton has the opportunity to advance to the western conference final in front of the loudest crowd in the National Hockey League. You need only look around to see how much support is behind the Oilers. Flags fly on almost every vehicle, posters on windows and doors. This town is alive with passion about the team, the Oilers.

Tonight an entire city, province, and country will be watching as the Oilers are the last remaining Canadian team in their quest for the holy grail of hockey. Tonight the victory will be on the steps of the Oilers, one step closer to that particular piece, and shark bait will be on the tables in the restaurants.

Go, Oilers, go.

The Speaker: And some people still have their game beard on. It's my sincere hope that all Members of the Legislative Assembly will be able to watch all of the hockey game this evening.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Calgary Meals on Wheels

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 30, 1965, Calgary Church Women's Community Care was incorporated, and in 1976 the name was officially changed to Calgary Meals on Wheels. In addition to the United Church the Anglican, Baptist, Catholic, and Presbyterian churches supported the movement while interested volunteers and service clubs answered the call for help and proved to be the backbone of the fledgling organization. The United Way and the city of Calgary have also played a vital role in the success of this social service. At this year's Cuisine et Concours d'Élégance fundraiser last Saturday night at the Roundup Centre the Ismaili community, a silver cloud sponsor, teamed up to announce a very special 2006 Stampede parade float project that will highlight for millions of viewers the significant community contributions of Calgary Meals on Wheels.

From January to December of 2005 Meals on Wheels delivered some 400,000 meals, 1,650 meals per day, to clients at their place of residence, enabling them to stay at home, to retain their autonomy and dignity, and to receive fresh, nutritious food. Meals to these seniors, convalescents, veterans, and persons with disabilities consist of one hot meal, one cold meal with a heat-up soup, and snack. Fifty-two per cent of the meals are special diets. In addition, Meals on Wheels delivers 215 bag lunches daily for the working homeless at the Drop-in Centre.

Through its duck soup program 960 servings of hot, hearty soup lunches were delivered to seven high-risk elementary schools twice weekly to some 600 children, who, as noted by their teachers, would not have a meal due to living conditions, financial conditions, and/or social circumstances. Seventeen schools are currently on the waiting list for this donor-based service.

Meals on Wheels offers culturally appropriate meals through its chopsticks on wheels and reaches further out into the Calgary community with programs like food and fellowship, food and caring, as well as offering five-pack magic meals.

Unfortunately, the growing demand for services is far outstripping Meals on Wheels' kitchen capacity. Therefore, a new facility is desperately needed to carry on the 41-year tradition of outstanding outreach. Hopefully, the Alberta government will recognize Meals on Wheels' history of giving and provide sustainable financial support to help keep this program on the road.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary-Fort Constituency Decennial

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the great constituency of Calgary-Fort on the 10th anniversary of its creation. Due to the fast population growth in Calgary the constituency of Calgary-Fort was created in 1996. Its name was based on the historical landmark in the riding, Fort Calgary, which is the birthplace of the city of Calgary. The Calgary-Fort constituency now includes the hard-working residents in the communities of Inglewood, Dover, Forest Lawn, Erin Woods, Millican, and Ogden. It covers the largest manufacturing and industrial park in Calgary, from which products and services are exported to the world and other parts of Canada.

The residents and businesses of the Calgary-Fort constituency have been contributing a great deal to the robust economy of Alberta. The two main rivers of Calgary meander through the riding of Calgary-Fort, which is also the source of the irrigation system that brings abundant agricultural life to the district east of Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, in 1996 I had the honour of being nominated as the PC candidate for the riding of Calgary-Fort, and the following election I had the honour of becoming the first MLA for the riding. Hard work is just part of it. The electoral successes are thanks to the great team of the Calgary-Fort constituency. My constituents are very smart in their choice of support and decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on with hundreds of names of people who are my respectful constituents and dear friends and strong supporters. For the last 10 years I can say with confidence that we have worked very well to establish a tradition of political integrity and honesty in the Calgary-Fort riding.

On the anniversary of this occasion, representing my constituents I want to express our sincere thanks to Premier Klein for his dedicated public service to bring outstanding success to the province, the city, and the constituency. Our constituents wish the Premier all the best in his next, deserving chapter of life.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 2:50

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly a privilege to introduce to you and through you 47 concerned and dedicated citizens from the Clear Hills area. They've travelled over six hours to share their concerns and are thankful for the guidance that they have received from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and hope to be able to continue to protect their quality of life and their community camaraderie. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, then Edmonton-Centre, then Calgary-Currie.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this afternoon and present a petition on behalf of 197 Albertans from various communities: Grande Prairie, Sexsmith, Edmonton, Calgary, and many, many others. This petition urges the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms. I think it's been read into the record many times, so I don't have to read the entire thing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to submit a petition with 103 signatures of Calgarians urging the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present almost 4,000 more signatures, 3,921, which is bringing the total petitions against the third way that the Liberal opposition has presented to over 20,000 signatures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition sponsored by the Alberta Social Credit Party. It has 1,058 signatures. The petition calls for the Assembly to urge the government to "introduce legislation to increase Alberta's share of oil and gas revenues to pay yearly dividends to Albertans."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I talked about Liberal/Conservative coalitions, but never in the history of Alberta have I ever found anything that suggests a Social Credit/New Democratic Party coalition. This is another historic first.

Mr. Flaherty: I'd like to table a petition from 116 people from across Alberta regarding the third way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a petition from 40 residents of Grande Prairie, electors of the Peace River constituency, to the House of Commons, requesting that the federal government "provide the provinces/territories with annual funds of at least $1.2 billion to build a high quality, accessible, affordable, community-based child care system."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and present the required number of copies of a letter from a constituent of mine, Barbara McNamara, a parent at the Western Canada high school, urging the provincial government to get on with the reconstruction or modernization of the Western Canada high school, which was built in 1928 and increasingly, as she says, consumes more time, energy, and school budget on behalf of the administrative and custodial staffs patching roofs that leak, asbestos ceilings that have been damaged, and so on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the report I referred to during question period, Review of the Regulatory Framework for Legal Services in England and Wales, the report of Sir David Clementi.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, two documents that resulted from a meeting and correspondence between the parent council representative from Strathcona composite high school in my constituency and my meeting this morning with that representative, Mrs. Glynis Dorey. I received a letter from her last week in which she drew my attention for the first time to a shocking problem at the composite high school with respect to health safety related to heating problems in the school. That problem was in fact identified by Alberta Infrastructure in '99 but has not received the attention that it needs. She's sitting in the public gallery and would like me to draw the attention of the House to this very serious problem.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of a letter that was sent to me by 17 land agents and interim land agents dated April 12, 2006, all of whom are stating their opposition to any consideration of the removal of section 1(c)(ii) of the Land Agents Licensing Act. They're questioning why our government would want to undermine the requirement currently in place that requires land agents to have certain qualifications before they're able to represent their clients. The names are Matt Martel, Leon McNamara, Darcy Harty, Phil Becker, Darrell Goruk, Elliott Friedrich, Jason Svenningsen, Tyson Zack, Diane Perrin, Harold Lema, Ron Bodnar, Bernie Tchir, Dennis Worobec, Joey Andries, Dennis Cochrane, Ken Curley, and Wade Pruett.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings here of photos that show the environmental impact of careless off-road driving and random camping in the Willow Creek forestry area. I'm submitting these on behalf of Sheena Reid of Nanton, Alberta, which further highlights the need for a land-use policy in these areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to table five copies of a response document to Written Question 14 as asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling responses to questions raised during Finance's estimates on May 10. The members to whom the responses are addressed received a copy in their offices this morning.

Additionally, I'm tabling the annual reports of the provincial judges and masters in chambers pension plan for the fiscal years ending March 31, 2004, and March 31, 2005, as required by legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of letters that I sent to the Leader of the Opposition as well as to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview answering questions that were left outstanding following Committee of Supply for Municipal Affairs held on April 11.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of responses that I made a commitment to during estimates, that I would make sure that we addressed the concerns if I didn't address them in my answers. I also sent copies to those members who I didn't answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table the required five copies of the 32nd annual report of the office of the Farmers' Advocate of Alberta. The report reflects the past 16 months as the agency has changed its reporting period to align with the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Highlights include the details on 1,500-plus client inquiries, 19 water well hearings, eight wildfire hearings, two Farm Implement Board hearings, and the increase of 84,000 additional hits to their online obsolete parts directory. The increased energy activity and changing dynamics of rural Alberta have led the agency to pursue a renewal initiative, which is covered in the report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

3:00

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to file a petition from staff and students from Next Step outreach school in Sherwood Park. They're asking for concerted government action to address the reported rise in teen smoking in Alberta.

Also, I would like to table five copies of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities annual report 2004-2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Finance minister for her very rapid response to the questions that were asked in supply last week.

Mr. Speaker, I have several tablings this afternoon. The first is two separate reports that were prepared by Kathryn Burke on behalf of community workshop participants in relation to children who suffer with learning challenges. Both reports were prepared in response to an EPSB review of programming for children with learning disabilities. They were completed on a volunteer basis. The workshop report represents the collective voice of 48 stakeholders, and the survey report represents the collective voice of 102 parents.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from a constituent, Art Dyer, who is a retired Alberta civil servant and is very concerned about two aspects of Bill 20: that, in fact, they serve to erode the fundamental principles that the act was founded on, namely public business should be done in public, and his main concern specifically is the 15-year blanket thrown over internal audits.

Another concern is being expressed by a constituent, Butch Whiteman, regarding Bill 20, and this is actually a copy of a letter that he sent to the Premier of the province of Alberta. He indicates that he feels that "Bill 20 is something that should not even be given a second thought let alone be sanctioned as progressive legislation and passed in this legislature."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter which details 20 farm-related deaths in Alberta last year, marking an unacceptable upward trend for farm fatalities in the province in recent years.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Ducharme, Minister of Community Development, response to Written Question 16, asked for by Mr. Miller on behalf of Mr. Agnihotri on May 8, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Fritz, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, pursuant to the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Alberta Provincial Board annual report 2004-2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, responses to questions raised by Dr. Miller, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, on May 3, 2006, the Department of Justice and Attorney General main estimates, 2006-07, Committee of Supply debate.

Responses to questions raised by Dr. Pannu, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on May 3, 2006, Department of Justice and Attorney General main estimates, 2006-07, Committee of Supply debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Energy, response to Written Question 19, asked for by Mr. MacDonald on May 15, 2006.

Speaker's Ruling
Member's Apology

The Speaker: Hon. members, last evening, late in the evening in committee and during debate, an hon. member used certain words in the House. Today I would like to offer that hon. member, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, an opportunity to hopefully retract and apologize for the usage of those words.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In all humility, sincerity, and with a sense of contrition I rise to withdraw three words, namely Nazism, fascism, and Stalinism or any variance, which were mentioned in debates last night around 11 o'clock. These words are unparliamentary. I sincerely apologize if any member took these to mean practices which were committed by any enemy force or government in the Second World War.

My extended family was severely affected by that war. Some were lost in the defence of our country and great democracy. Some were lost fighting for our armed forces. Some were subjected to terrible times in the Netherlands and fought there or suffered there as well. I do understand those feelings, and I know that they do not subside over the decades. We do remember. That inference was not intended, and if any member felt that, I must say that this was not the intent, and I sincerely apologize.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That concludes that matter.

Time Allocation on Bill 20

20. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that when an adjourned debate on third reading of Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration at this stage of the bill, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have permission to exercise my five minutes of explanation.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I believe I indicated yesterday, but I'd like to just reiterate today that time allocation motions are very rarely used by our government. In fact, they were not used at all last year, nor were they used at all in the year before. Over the last five years I think only four or five bills have had time allocations ever put on them for just and reasonable cause. Nonetheless, I want to reiterate, too, that Bill 20 has now come up 10 times for debate in this House since March 14.

Now, why does it sometimes become necessary for a government to bring in a time allocation or a closure-type motion? Typically, Mr. Speaker, as most members here would know, it happens because of the clock, so to speak, having moved on and a number of repetitive debates starting up, perhaps some redundancy starting up, perhaps in some cases even some irrelevancies coming up.

No one that I know really likes to use a time allocation motion to bring an end to a discussion. However, in the same vein that one of opposition's tools is the legislative power to speak virtually endlessly to a bill at committee, so, too, is it one of government's tools to use responsibly and to exercise good and sound judgment when sufficient time, in the opinion of the government, has taken place for the debate on any particular bill. Mr. Speaker, I would submit that with respect to Bill 20 that time has now come.

With about 10 hours or so of debate and/or question period time consumed on this one bill or on FOIP issues in general, it's important to note that rarely does any bill receive more than about an hour and a half to two hours of debate unless there's something really controversial, obviously. So 10 hours, or five times more than the two-hour general practice that I just mentioned, is certainly enough and ample time for members to have voiced their opinions. In addition to that, we've also, I think, received and debated approximately five amendments.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that we have met in this House on 41 afternoons. We have met in this House as well on 27 evenings during this spring session so far. That's 68 times. During those times that we have convened in this House, at least 10 of those times we have referenced debate on this particular Bill 20, so it has come up a number of times.

With that, I would also just conclude by saying that I think every opposition member has now spoken to Bill 20 with the exception, I think, of the leader of the Liberal opposition, who still has an opportunity, obviously, this afternoon, and several government members have also spoken now to Bill 20 in debate or perhaps in response to questions in question period.

I will just conclude, then, by saying that the time has come to now resolve the final vote on Bill 20. With that in mind, I'm looking for the support of the House for the motion so that we can conclude this matter of business this afternoon with one final hour of exhilarating debate.

Thank you.

3:10

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 21(3) I'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education spoke about how many times, in fact, to his memory they have used the time allocation to put closure on the debate in this House. Well, from the years 1992 to 2005 that has been exercised 32 times to force closure – and I'll use that word “force” – on a democratic process in this House.

In the Speech from the Throne this government assured people that transparency and accountability first and foremost will be used to address Albertans' concerns. They wanted to be the government that was leading the way in this particular act. So far, when they put in something like this, this couldn't be any further from the truth.

Mr. Speaker, when we adjourn on Thursday afternoon and Friday and through the weekends to be able to touch base with our constituents, Bill 20 is becoming more and more relevant in the coffee shops or in the homes, in the newspapers because Albertans are just starting to wake up as to what is actually happening in this Legislature. Secrecy is now becoming more and more of a topic in the homes and on the doorsteps of Albertans. They're becoming concerned, and because they're becoming concerned, I think that this is unfortunate that we are only allowing another 60 minutes to take place.

You have immigrants coming to Alberta from other countries, wherever they may be, who in fact are trying to flee this sort of undemocratic way. I'll use my words carefully, noting debate . . .

An Hon. Member: Yeah, I hope so.

Mr. Bonko: Listen, that's enough of that already.

. . . noting the debate of last night. I know that people are tired, people are wanting to get out of this House, but unfortunately there's a lot of work that still needs to take place.

This is a legacy that needs to be talked about. It's the legacy of one person, perhaps the Premier. Only at this time has this ever come into effect. Other Premiers have had this open and transparent and accountable attitude. Now one Premier comes in, and suddenly we have FOIP. We have more and more secrecy because the individual says that they do not want anyone to have that type of record. They don't want speaking notes; they want briefing notes.

Well, it's not just for the opposition. It's for all Albertans to ensure that this government remains accountable and transparent and answerable, above all things, to those that elect them. It's the Albertans, the 3,500,000 Albertans that reside in Alberta. There are more and more that are coming all the time, and they, in fact, expect their government to act honourably. They expect their government to act with integrity. When you put through a motion that adjourns debate, that ends the ability for opposition and Albertans to have an opportunity to speak to something that is near and dear to their hearts, which is basically democracy, then there is no democracy that remains.

Mr. Elsalhy: What signal are we sending?

Mr. Bonko: Yeah, exactly. What signal are we sending, Mr. Speaker? That we want to remain more and more secret.

It came out in a poll a little while ago that people do not trust politicians. They came behind used-car salesmen. I shudder to think, but the fact remains that that was the poll. This leads exactly to that particular point. If we're hiding something, then why are we hiding something? It's censorship right through and through. The fact remains that Albertans deserve answers regardless of who is asking. That is a democratic right. That is the ability that we all, in fact, have.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning talked about democracy and how only 60 years ago people fought for that right. This is exactly the right that we're debating here this afternoon. We debated evenings, 4 o'clock in the morning, 2 o'clock in the morning for the right to have that democratic process continue. When you're invoking closure due to time limits or people being tired, 10 hours, 20 hours: who's to say it was too long? If we're prepared to sit here and talk about it, then obviously we still want to have the ability and the time to discuss the concerns of the citizens that we represent. It limits freedom of speech. It limits democracy, which is all the more reason why we need more opposition in Alberta to continue to ensure that accountability remains. Now, I know there are only 16 elected Liberals, and there are four NDs and an Alliance, but that's certainly not enough, so the next election I think people will certainly be considering as to where they're going to mark their X along the ballots. Are they going to mark for democracy, or are they going to mark for a dictatorship, which is apparently what's happening here?

Mr. Speaker, I would seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 32(2) to shorten the division bells from 10 minutes to two minutes this afternoon should a standing vote be triggered.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, before that, we have some business we have to conduct. We have to deal with this particular motion, and I have to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 20 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:16 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

For the motion:

Amery	Haley	Pham
Boutilier	Herard	Prins
Brown	Horner	Renner
Cao	Jablonski	Shariff
Cardinal	Liepert	Snelgrove
Evans	Lougheed	Stelmach
Forsyth	Mar	Strang
Goudreau	McClellan	VanderBurg
Graydon	McFarland	Zwozdesky
Groeneveld	Oberle

Against the motion:

Backs	Flaherty	Miller, B.
Blakeman	Hinman	Miller, R.
Bonko	Martin	Pannu
Eggen	Mason	Taylor
Elsalhy	Mather	Tougas

Totals: For – 29 Against – 15

[Government Motion 20 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move to the next segment and ask the Clerk to identify the first speaker, we have two brief bits of information to deal with.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, as you were wrapping up your comments on your participation, you asked for consent of the House to reduce the division bells from 10 to two minutes should that be appropriate. I didn't allow the vote because we had a superseding motion. So if you want to proceed now, I'll let you do it, asking the Assembly.

Mr. Bonko: Do you just want me to go through the whole thing?

The Speaker: No. Just very briefly, unanimous consent.

Mr. Bonko: I'm just seeking unanimous consent, then, that if in fact opportunity does arise, we would revert from 10 minutes to two minutes.

The Speaker: Okay. All hon. members understand that? Should the opportunity arise for division bells to be rung, the normal time would be reduced from 10 minutes to two minutes.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Okay. That's done.

Now the hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would cite Beauchesne 489 again with respect to unparliamentary words and phrases. Dictatorship as referenced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore I'm sure was an unfortunate slip. I would just ask that he please retract that word from his final comments just before the division bells rang and apologize, and then we'll move on.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, I would retract the comment of dictatorship, then, if that would be pleasing to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. We've heard that. The matter is closed.

Third Reading

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and
Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate May 16: Mrs. Jablonski]

The Speaker: Okay. I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. When she begins, 60 minutes begin.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, in third reading. It would be good to know and to remember that this bill proposes eight amendments to the FOIP Act.

Perhaps the most important amendment sets higher penalties for disclosing the personal information of Albertans to a foreign court, a very serious move to protect the privacy of Albertans. If an individual or a corporation discloses personal information pursuant to a subpoena, warrant, or court order when that court does not have jurisdiction in Alberta or pursuant to a court order that is not binding in Alberta, that person would be guilty of an offence and would be subject to a fine of up to $500,000.

Anyone thinking that this legislation is toothless is not reading this carefully. The FOIP Act itself contains provisions for fines of up to $10,000 for anyone convicted of trying to abuse the intention of this legislation. It is a top priority of this government to protect the private information of Albertans. Other solutions to address the potential for American authorities to view the private information of Albertans without proper authorization are being explored. Our goal is to ensure that the personal information of Albertans is protected from unauthorized access. The USA PATRIOT Act, which is a very clever acronym that stands for Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism, is of particular concern to this government, Mr. Speaker, but the legislation will apply to any foreign government that seeks to obtain the personal information of Albertans without permission.

A second amendment further enhances the security of Albertans' personal information. Currently the act allows a public body to disclose personal information to comply with a subpoena, warrant, or court order; however, it's not clear which courts this refers to. This amendment makes it clear that a public body may disclose personal information only if ordered to do so by a court with jurisdiction in Alberta or in accordance with a rule of court binding in Alberta. This will make Albertans' information less vulnerable to collection by foreign agencies.

Mr. Speaker, another amendment clarifies the existing limits on access to ministerial briefing materials. This is the only change to a time period limitation and only applies to ministerial briefing binders. The FOIP Act already allows ministers to refuse to disclose advice to ministers without this amendment. This amendment will clarify that briefing books prepared for a new minister and session briefing books for ministers can be disclosed after five years. This information was not available at any time prior to this amendment act. The five-year period was chosen to coincide with the life of a Legislature, which is five years at most.

A third important amendment limits access to working papers relating to an audit by the newly created office of the chief internal auditor of Alberta for 15 years. Fifteen years is the same period of time for other financial records until now, and this hasn't been considered a problem previous to this because the Auditor General has free and timely access to these records. An individual can still make a request for records about a program or service of a ministry but not for records about the internal audit. I will state that again. This information is always available to the Auditor General of Alberta, who does an excellent job of representing the people of Alberta.

Another amendment suspends the processing of an access request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner consults with an applicant on how a public body is handling a FOIP request. This amendment is purely administrative. Since the Privacy Commissioner's consultation takes time, typically a decision comes after the legislated 30-day deadline for a response has expired. Now, the opposition members have consistently expressed a deep respect for the opinions of the Privacy Commissioner. I would expect that if they respect his opinions in one area, they could respect his decisions in other areas. This amendment would allow the 30-day processing time for a FOIP request to stop while the Privacy Commissioner makes his decision. These requests are rare, reflecting this government's commitment to the openness and transparency of the access to information process.

I would like to repeat a fact that was stated by the hon. Minister of Government Services as I'm sure that some members did not hear this fact the first time it was stated. Of 3,168 FOIP requests received in 2004-05, 94 per cent were completed by government public bodies within 60 days or less, confirming that Albertans have effective and timely access to the information they seek. This represents a significant achievement given that the complexity and number of requests received by government continue to increase annually. Of the 3,168 FOIP requests received in 2004-05, 95 per cent were handled without complaint to the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This demonstrates the success of Alberta Government Services' efforts to support FOIP staff throughout government public bodies. The Information and Privacy Commissioner has said that he would take a dim view if the number of requests for extensions suddenly spiked, a statement that should be respected by all Albertans. The Privacy Commissioner has the ability to order the public body to resume processing the request immediately.

Another amendment in this amendment act will allow newly created government boards and committees to be brought under the FOIP Act more quickly. As I mentioned earlier, protecting the personal information that Albertans entrust to their government and the public bodies under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is a key priority for this government.

Mr. Speaker, costs are not a barrier to gaining access to government information. They are in line with other jurisdictions. Since FOIP legislation was first introduced in 1995, we have collected $535,000 in fees. That's less than $50,000 a year. During this same period we have spent $59.3 million to collect and distribute the requested information. That's more than $5 million a year in support of transparency and openness.

Administering the act is and will continue to be an important function of the Ministry of Government Services, and I'm proud to have this opportunity to speak to this important piece of legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Edmonton-McClung had the opportunity to quote three historical leaders in the last few days. So I, too, would like to quote a well-respected leader, my husband, who always says: happy wife, happy life. This is very good advice. Now I will be happy to take my seat and listen to the comments of others of integrity and honesty in third reading of Bill 20.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure how I follow that. Well, with respect to the Speaker, I'll try a vignette of my own. I used to work indirectly with a guy who was in management in radio at another radio station in our company who liked to say that he operated his department on a need-to-know basis: he told his staff everything and let them decide what they needed to know.

Mr. Speaker, we are but a mere province, one of 10 in this federation. We do not have the authority to commit the rest of this country to war or to go to war ourselves, and short of wartime, although I'll give you cold or hot, I can't really think of a reason why you need to keep anything secret for 15 years. I really can't. I mean, a year perhaps. A couple of years perhaps. Maybe there's some justification for that. But 15 years for documents created for or by the chief internal auditor? Five years for briefing notes and papers? No disrespect, but I don't think that there's anything quite that valuable in that briefing binder that the Premier has been waving around the House in question period for the last few days.

I'm going to refer back to the opening questions that I asked this afternoon in question period, when I referenced something that the Premier said more than a decade ago, that he intended to make government more open and accountable to Albertans, that he intended to give Albertans real power to see into the workings of government, stating: "There is a public expectation there that we must be more transparent. What you see is what you get." He made that comment. Presumably he made it on December 23 because it showed up in a media account on December 24, 1994. Here we are 11 and a half years later, discussing a bill that does precisely the opposite of what the Premier, towards the beginning of his – I was going to say reign, but that's not the appropriate word – tenure, said he was going to do.

Now, I understand that one of the reasons why our trust level is 16 per cent among the general population in Canada, one of the reasons why people distrust us so much is because we make an awful lot of promises that we don't keep as a species, if we can be classified as a species. I understand as well that sometimes there are very legitimate reasons for not being able to keep those promises. You make a promise on the campaign trail that you fully intend to keep if you're elected to government. Once you are elected or re-elected to government, you discover that circumstances have changed or circumstances are different than you understood them to be, and in fact as much as you would like to go ahead and do what you said you were going to do, that just isn't possible. But I don't think that happens all that often. I don't think it happens nearly as often as the number of times that we as a species collectively break our promises.

We sometimes talk about looking for ways to re-engage a cynical, jaded, apathetic populous that likes to come out in droves of less than 50 per cent of eligible voters and cast their ballots on election day. I think the single best thing that we could do is actually deliver them a couple of terms of office consecutively where the government of the day actually keeps the vast majority of its promises.

Now, there are a number of ways that you can take that approach. One way, I think, is being attempted by the federal government right now, and that is to make very few promises. The fewer promises you make, perhaps, the fewer you have to keep track of and make sure that you're keeping. There is a certain sense in that. But I think, you know, within the context of no matter how many promises you have made, when you make a promise to the people of your political jurisdiction that you are going to make your government more open, more accountable, more transparent because you acknowledge that there's a real expectation on behalf of the people for that, and you go the other direction, I think that is more than breaking a promise. I think that's breaking a trust with the people.

There is, of course, under the U.S. style of government, I think, more ability to do certain things – and one of those things is to place term limits on how much time you can serve at any particular level – than we can do within the concept of the British parliamentary model. In fact, we may not ever be able to achieve term limits under this model, but there is a good reason, in theory at least, and I think as practised in the United States in some jurisdictions, in some areas, for supporting term limits, and that is because it tends to keep people from staying in the job past their best-before date.

I'd like to think that whatever we're doing in whatever field of endeavour, whether it's public life or private life that we're involved in, we all kind of come to that job with a best-before date stamped on our foreheads. You know, that best-before date represents the point at which we are going to run out of anything meaningful that we as individuals can contribute to the process. If we've done our job up to that point, we will have made our contribution, and it is at that point time for us individually to move on and go do something else where we get a brand new best-before date. But there's no way of enforcing that best-before date, and, you know, when the milk of a career politician has gone over, there's no way of pouring it down the drain unless, of course, at the next election the voters throw the guy out.

Dr. Morton: Make cheese.

Mr. Taylor: I'm sorry. What was it that the Member for Foothills-Rocky View said? Make tea?

Dr. Morton: Cheese.

Mr. Taylor: Cheese. Well, he'd know about cheese.

Anyway, the point here is that we're seeing in Bill 20 ample evidence that this government has passed its best-before date because this government has forgotten, obviously, if it believes in this bill that it's bringing forward, the fundamental tenet of democracy, which is this. In a democratic country or a democratic province or a democratic jurisdiction of any sort those people who are elected to take a seat in a Legislature, whether they get appointed to cabinet or not, are the servants of the public, the employees of the public. We work for them, not the other way around.

A bill that supports this much secrecy purports to upset the apple cart, purports to have the inmates running the prison, purports to have the people of this great province, the 3,500,000 of them, working for the 83 of us. You can even carve off the 22 opposition members. Heck, you could even carve off the government backbenchers, who aren't actually part of cabinet. So all of us work for – how many people are in cabinet this week? It keeps changing – 25, 24, 26, that bunch. This is fundamentally wrong. Fundamentally wrong.

It is unfortunate that both opposition parties proposed at various stages along the way a number of amendments to this bill and found it impossible or virtually impossible to engage government members in debate about that. That, I think, speaks to the lack of interest in openness, accountability, transparency, and the democratic process that has developed from too many years in power. There's no possible way – there's no possible way – that I can support this bill in third because the effect of this is to deny information that should be readily available to the people of this province to those very people. The effect of this bill if passed, the effect of this law once it becomes law is to set the government apart from and above the people, and we must never do that.

We may get outvoted on this one, as we so often do, but we recognize on this side of the House that we are to be servants of the people. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when we are elected government, whatever happens today, if this bill is passed, we will throw it out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise at third reading of Bill 20 under the intolerable conditions of closure in this House. One of the most far-reaching bills in its impact on the government of this province, and we're allowed one hour to debate this in third reading. I just want to indicate that despite our best efforts to process a number of amendments in committee stage, we still have four amendments that we have not had a chance to put forward in debate in this House. So people can see for themselves the impact of closure on the democratic process, or the lack thereof, in dealing with this issue.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is just the most recent example in a long trend towards secrecy for this government. No other government in Canada is so careful and so calculating in its management of information. The watchword of this government seems to be: what they don't know can't hurt us. The NDP opposition has attempted on a number of occasions to obtain information, as have other groups and individuals in our society, only to be misdirected and given selected information which has been filtered for political expediency, and this is under the act even before these amendments are included.

One example, Mr. Speaker, is that we recently FOIPed information relating to the study commissioned by the Minister of Health and Wellness and undertaken by Aon insurance company. We were interested in this information because there was a clear attempt on the part of the government to sell their third-way privatization schemes to Albertans. They knew the schemes were not workable, so they had to manage the information which was given to Albertans. Our request was plagued by unnecessary extensions and ultimately was not fulfilled until nine days after the final deadline that was set by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Not surprisingly, we received the information only after the minister had had time to put it through the government's messaging filter and it had been properly sanitized.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to note that even though the government failed to meet the deadline set by the Information and Privacy Commissioner, there was no penalty for their noncompliance. This is intolerable, and if the government was really interested in improving our FOIP legislation, this would be one place to start.

Mr. Speaker, there's a clear pattern. The opposition party asked for information to be tabled in the Assembly and then were told to FOIP for it. When we do FOIP it, we are met with delays and exemptions. When the information is finally released, it has been nipped and tucked into government spin. But now we have a situation where the Premier is retiring. In all likelihood several senior ministers will retire with him. They will no longer have control over the Public Affairs Bureau, and they will have no way of ensuring that their successors don't open the doors and let the skeletons out of the closets.

We have a bill that does two things, Mr. Speaker. It provides for more exemptions, and it provides for more delays. It allows heads of public bodies to stop the clock while seeking permission to disregard a request entirely. But worse, it seals the vault on ministerial briefing notes and internal audits for five years and 15 years respectively. Now, the Premier has talked repeatedly about how we're not getting his briefing books, but the Information and Privacy Commissioner has indicated that in most cases requests for information relating to briefings from ministers have been disallowed by his office but that in certain cases they have been allowed and that adequate protection is already in existence.

Furthermore, the internal audit branch of the government is what is responsible for making sure that money is spent as it is supposed to be and that there is no fraud and there is no theft of public money. To seal their audits for 15 years is, in our view, inexplicable since they are in the forefront of protecting the taxpayers against fraud.

To keep their audit secret for 15 years represents, in our view, a really grave threat to public accountability.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a red flag for members of the opposition but also for Albertans generally. We need to ask why this information is so sensitive and what secrets are being kept. This government took great pleasure in watching the federal Liberal government flounder after Auditor General Sheila Fraser started revealing scandal after scandal about misspending and misuse of public dollars. The Premier boasted that such scandals could never happen in this province because Albertans would run him or any tainted minister out on a rail. But the reality is that if such scandals could never happen here, it is because Albertans might never find out about them in the first place. Members of this government flaunted the authority of our Auditor General by prematurely releasing damning reports. Again, this was a calculated political move designed to manage the release of information.

Ministers make deals with the likes of Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois for so-called strategic advice in which no documents are produced and for which there is no accountability. On this side we are left wondering just how politically partisan such strategic advice is or what advice was received at all. Are taxpayers footing the bill for strategic advice to ministers on how to best ensure re-election? How much time is being spent crafting workable public policy? How much time is spent crafting marketing strategies for bad policies based on ideological biases and rewards for well-connected donors?

You know, whenever this government seeks to restrict civil liberties – and it happens from time to time in this province – they tell us that if you're not doing anything wrong, you don't need to worry. Well, Mr. Speaker, what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If ministers aren't receiving partisan strategic advice as part of their briefings, if they're not cooking up side deals and rewarding friends, fine. Show us the books. If you're not doing anything wrong, you don't need to worry.

The disregard for basic tenets of democracy shown by this government is astounding. We recently released an analysis of Alberta's information laws that shows that they are among the most secretive and regressive on the planet. Even worse, we are now facing closure on the bill. Why? Apparently because members opposite don't want to sit following the long weekend. Well, I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to either, but it's not really a good reason to foreclose debate on this bill.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the NDP opposition will not be supporting this bill, and we will continue to challenge the ever-increasing secrecy this government is pursuing. An Alberta NDP government will open the curtains on government secrecy and let the sun shine in on the closets of the most secretive government in Canada. An NDP government will ensure that the public information is available to those to whom it belongs, the public.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

There being none, the chair will then recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. If anybody else wants to participate, send me a signal, please.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a difference a decade makes. Alberta was a leader among Canadian jurisdictions when it first introduced its Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act on June 1, 1994. The act was the child of the new and now retiring Premier, who liked to point out that he personally had been FOIPed a number of times.

Access to information and privacy protection was and still is a significant next step in democratic empowerment. Democracy cannot work without informed citizens. Choices made in ignorance may be democratic, but they can also be prejudiced and persecuting. There's nothing quite as unanimous as a lynch mob. For democracy to work, there must be due process, a pause to reflect, and knowledge to reflect on. For citizens to function on a jury, they need instruction and clarification on the facts of a case before rendering a verdict. For the electorate to function as a jury on the government, the citizens must have a factual basis to assess the government's performance. Sometimes those facts come forward in the government's own announcements. Sometimes they come forward in response to questions by the opposition and media.

The FOIP Act can assist both media and opposition in gathering facts on government, but it can also be used by the ordinary citizen pursuing a matter of either public or private interest. This was the intention of the freedom of information part of the act.

Bill Gates' replacement of John Paul Getty as the world's richest man illustrates that knowledge has replaced earlier forms of capital, such as land, as a means of power. While all persons may not be equally endowed, all persons are entitled to equal access to law and equal access to information on their governments. By protecting citizens' privacy, including their private information, and simultaneously giving them access to information on what their governments are doing, it was hoped to restore a balance, to make the state the servant of the citizen rather than the reverse. This was the intent. Unfortunately, a growing culture of secrecy has offset these gains, and democracy has moved to the back burner.

With the current bill a backward step is being set in law, and two parts of FOIP legislation are being reversed. Freedom of information was intended to give citizens greater freedom in gathering information on their government. Privacy protection was intended to stop the flow of information on citizens to the state and to other interests. In our sister state to the south the war on terror has been used as an excuse to reverse the flow, for the state and corporate interests to gather information on citizens. This past week we have learned that American telecommunications companies have been passing information on their customers' calls to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. In Ottawa Canada's own Privacy Commissioner, Jennifer Stoddart, was recently shocked to discover that a list of her telephone calls could be bought on the Internet.

The U.S. State Department recently complained that Canada has not been doing enough to share information on our citizens with U.S. security officials since the Maher Arar case. The fact that this report was released the morning after the announcement of the settlement of the softwood lumber dispute suggests that there is a cost for the free movement of our commodities, and this cost may be information on Canadians. It was ostensibly for this reason that Alberta's FOIP Act is being amended: to strengthen the hand of Canadian companies in resisting the provisions of the USA PATRIOT Act. This is especially important when governments are outsourcing services to foreign subsidiaries and information on the health and private lives of our citizens is available to these enterprises and may be demanded under U.S. law. This was the stated intent of this bill.

There are other provisions that have more dubious effects: the protection of government from the prying eyes of citizens, the reverse of what the FOIP Act intended. It's a 400-year leap backwards in parliamentary tradition before Legislatures won control of the public purse. In the 1600s the word "privacy" in government was more apt to refer to the Privy Council and the King's right to privacy of the information from his ministers. The divine right of kings has now become deference to Premiers. With the exception that a first minister or Executive Council can no longer send a citizen to the block, the government power now concentrated around a leader is as great as it ever was.

In Britain in the 17th century it was a king's ignoring and curtailing a government which he had called that led to his fall and a revolution. In Canada in the 21st century Legislatures have become so controlled by the government that when the leadership is in transition, everything comes to a halt. In Alberta's history when change has not come about from inside government, it has come about in an avalanche from outside. This has happened three times.

Freedom of information has become the government's freedom to control its message to the public, and privacy protection has become the preservation of government secrecy. I am sure that this is not what the hon. Premier intended when he first introduced the FOIP Act in 1994.

In conclusion, I cannot support this amendment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm still trying to grasp the relevance of the "happy wife, happy life" line. Maybe we'll get an explanation for that at some other time. It's one of the more interesting things I've heard in this debate over the last few weeks.

You know, Mr. Speaker, much has been said about Bill 20. In fact, of all the bills we've seen in here, large and small, that we've dealt with in this long and sometimes tedious session, no single piece of legislation has been more carefully scrutinized, analyzed, and criticized than Bill 20, and with good cause. As has been mentioned many, many times in this Legislature, Bill 20 is roughly 50 per cent progressive, intelligent, and worthwhile legislation and 50 per cent regressive, secretive, and uncalled for.

The government is to be commended for protecting the people of Alberta against the prying eyes of the United States government, or any foreign power for that matter. Raising maximum fines for individuals and for corporations for breaches of the act is to be applauded. The public must be assured that breaking this law in this province will be dealt with seriously. This is what a bill is supposed to do: provide a tangible benefit to its citizens.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the good news of Bill 20 ends there. Secrecy is a hallmark of this government. I guess that comes from a sense of entitlement that a political party feels after decades in power. The party in power begins to see itself not as a political party but as the natural governing party, much the same way the federal Liberals used to be called. This creates an us versus them mentality, a conviction that government documents are the property of the party in power and not intended for the prying eyes of the opposition, the media, or even the lowly taxpaying Albertan.

Under Bill 20 we'll see more documents than ever before – documents and research paid for and concerning the people of Alberta – put under lock and key for five or even 15 years. I ask: to what end? I've read and heard multiple explanations from the government, and none of them hold water. In defending the bill, the Premier has brandished a briefing book during his question period theatrics without giving any legitimate or reasoned defence of Bill 20 aside from saying that the opposition will play politics with the information or that the information may or may not become policy. Well, I think that the people of Alberta have enough good sense to know the difference between the two, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

This bill, in fact, Mr. Speaker, speaks volumes about how little respect this government has for the people of Alberta, the people it claims to represent. Public and expert opinion on Bill 20 has been virtually unanimous in opposition. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation has called the bill a huge step backward. An expert on information law has called it unacceptable, while another has called it noxious. Now, why does the government stubbornly push forward with this bill in spite of unanimous public condemnation? Well, perhaps we'll only know in five or 15 years when these supposedly sensitive documents are finally unsealed.

The irony of the controversy surrounding Bill 20 is that it is an entirely self-inflicted wound. Government briefing documents and government internal audits were never a concern to the public before. Now, thanks to Bill 20, everybody wants to know what's in a briefing book or an internal audit, and more importantly, everybody wants to know what the government has to hide.

Mr. Speaker, any time a government moves to limit access to documents, access to information, the public has a right to be alarmed. The Official Opposition has proposed amendment after amendment to improve this noxious bill, and each one has been tossed aside with barely a moment's consideration by the government. This is a truly sad end to the career of a so-called populist Premier, who rode to power as a friend of the average Albertan but who ends his reign overseeing a secretive government that doesn't trust its own citizens.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 20 in its third reading. This is one of the bills that I'll remember. I think it's one of the most memorable bills in my last nine and a half years in this Assembly. It's a bill that really is an attempt to roll back the ability of Albertans to get information, to get the government to disclose information that they think is related directly to public interests and their interests. For the government to invoke closure on the debate on this bill is deeply deplored by me, by many members of this Assembly on this side of the House, and by a very, very large number of Albertans and the media in this province. Rightly so.

The existing legislation on freedom of information and protection of privacy is not very good as is. Alberta's government has been able to achieve the status of the most secret government in Canada and in the universe, perhaps, in spite of that legislation being in place. To speak against this bill, to speak against the amendments to the existing legislation that are proposed in this bill is not to support the existing legislation. It is weak legislation. It is flawed legislation. What these amendments do is to make it far worse. Far worse.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I'm opposed to this bill. I join with many of my colleagues in my own caucus and other members of the Assembly on the opposition side in opposing this bill.

This bill, any bill that deals with freedom of information, needs to meet certain tests. It needs to be based on certain principles. The leader of the NDP opposition made a document public yesterday, or the day before, which outlines the principles that must be the basis on which any such legislation should be drawn up. Those principles are outlined in a document by Article 19: Global Campaign for Free Expression. Article 19, Mr. Speaker, takes its name and purpose from article 19 of the universal declaration of human rights. The Article 19 organization is a nongovernmental organization based in London. It works to engage people across the world in debate on how to make our governments more democratic, how to achieve good governance. What this Bill 20 does is to offend every one of the nine principles outlined in that document, principles on freedom of information legislation. If we haven't already tabled this document in the House, I will be certainly doing it tomorrow.

I think it's incumbent on the members of the Assembly and the people of Alberta to pay attention to what kinds of rules and principles are needed to be followed when either drafting legislation on freedom of information or amending existing pieces of legislation. It's an outrage that Bill 20, in fact, makes a bad piece of legislation – which has not worked in this province to make it easier for people to force the government to disclose information that they need – far worse.

That's why this bill has received such strong opposition from broad-based public opinion: in the editorials, in the letters to the editor, in the letters that we have received as MLAs. It's a bill that must be – must be – condemned for what it does. It offends democracy. It offends the obligation of governments to disclose the information that's in the public interest. What this bill does is simply put that information out of the reach of Albertans. That's why this bill should never have come before the House. It is there. It's sponsored and put forward by the government side. Certainly, we in the opposition will stand with Albertans to oppose this bill and will continue to voice our concerns about the secrecy, deepening secrecy, of this government when it seeks to amend legislation to protect, perhaps, its misdeeds.

People are beginning to ask questions. What is the government trying to hide? What is this Premier trying to leave as a legacy? The legacy is more secrecy, more ability on the part of the government to deny Albertans, who elect us to come here, to have access to information that they consider widely impinges on their rights and their interests.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this bill and will vote against it in the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that we only have about 15 minutes to oppose this particular bill. That's the last opportunity for real freedom of information until this next thing comes about. It's unfortunate that this wasn't, in fact, an election promise or as highly regarded or as highly spoken about like the third way because when Albertans heard no particulars about the potential tampering with our health care, they were alarmed and they were armed. They were armed with petitions. They were armed on the steps. They were fearful of the change that they had no information about.

I think that if they had heard this particular piece, amendments to the FOIP Act, they would have been alarmed, they would have been armed, and they would have been on the steps as well. Unfortunately, it's come too little too late, the news, the media, that people's interests are suddenly being piqued. Like I said, it's unfortunate that it's this late in the session because I believe that they would have been giving more calls to their MLAs – to the rural MLAs, to the city MLAs, to all MLAs – expressing their outrage and concern. Particularly, if you would have asked Albertans or ask anybody, "Do you think any government should be more secretive?" – and it doesn't matter what government you're talking about – I'll tell you that the answer probably 100 per cent would be: absolutely not.

The people are elected to represent their constituents. You have to remember that we all come from communities that we represent. We all came to be accountable, to be transparent, to give to the best of our ability, to represent all of the constituents who elected us. Now, when you put through something like this, it certainly doesn't allow us to be that much more representative, more accountable, because if we're asking information on behalf of a constituent, we now are blocked access just like the individual we were asking for, or if they wanted to have the notes, they are in fact blocked.

This again begs the question: how is this part of the democracy of this government when they talked about being leaders in transparency and accountability? How is this leading into the Speech from the Throne? It is a slap in the face to those who, in fact, trust government. People ask so little of their government. They ask them to be accountable and to be trustworthy. In turn, we ask the people to vote for those who they feel will be the most representative of them.

I think people will certainly think twice, as I said previously, as to who they are prepared to elect because when we have a standing vote, which I imagine we will, people can in fact ask: how did you vote? Did you vote for more secrecy, or did you ask for less secrecy? I think people have to realize that when they are going to be voting, this government and the members of the government asked for more secrecy.

It begs the question: what are you hiding? Not just for five years, 10 years, but up to 15 years. That is four governments, four elections is worth hiding something for. It really, really does have a hard time, you know, justifying it. We can come up with the fact about the PATRIOT Act, and we can come up with the other spins that we can put on it, that it's secrecy for the benefit of all Albertans and their information, and it's for their benefit. But, really, when you talk about 20 years, give me a break. I don't think anyone buys 20 years of secrecy that's worth, you know, that particular piece.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I reiterate the differences between a new Conservative government in Ottawa and an old Conservative government in Alberta, the different directions. The ethics and transparency and accountability is all the rave in Ottawa right now. Frankly, to some degree they get it. They get it because, I guess, going through with what happened with the federal Liberals, people are expecting a different way of dealing with government at the federal level. Here we are going the other direction. The differences right now must be obvious to people: a new Conservative government and what they believe in and an old Conservative government and what they seem to believe in.

The one-party rule seems to be that the longer we're here, the more paranoid we get, the more we have to cover up the information, the more we can't let the public in on what's going on. Contrast that with the new Conservative government. Well, obviously, we don't agree with them on everything, on a lot of things, but at least they have an idealism that they're there elected by the people to be accountable and opened up the books to some degree, Mr. Speaker. I think the contrast is a wonderful one that we can take a look at here.

You know, this whole FOIP thing doesn't make any sense to me, why we're doing it. I mean, we're told that the briefing notes aren't that important. Let's go on that. We've got to put them away for five years, but they're not really that important. They just tell us how they answer questions from the opposition. Well, we see the answers to the opposition. It's in the public; it's in Hansard. So what's the big deal? The more you try to cover up things and the more you try to hide things, the more the people are interested.

What's there to hide? What's it all about? I've been trying to figure out why they're going in this direction. Then we have the internal auditor. For 15 years we can't even look at the audits that they do with this government. Fifteen years. What's that all about? What's that all about, Mr. Speaker?

The big question is simply: why are they going to all this trouble to do this? People in the opposition, perhaps the media, and others knew that FOIP was not the easiest thing to deal with anyhow. It's costly, time consuming, and it didn't work that well. Imagine our surprise when they want to tighten it up even more. They've created an interest in it. Probably most people didn't give two hoots about FOIP and these things before, but now they're certainly interested, much more interested, Mr. Speaker, because they're saying the question that we're asking: why are they going to all this trouble to hide things like briefing notes that the Premier and others tell us are innocuous? Then they say: gee, people might get the wrong impression because we may not have accepted that advice. Well, I think it would be pretty clear if they didn't accept the advice. We can certainly see that.

Internal audit within the government for 15 years. Why? Why? I just don't understand. I mean, when I was first elected, the government hadn't been in power that long, the Lougheed days. I doubt that they would have done this. I'm sure that if Premier Lougheed had been there, he'd say: "No. We won't go this direction. This makes no sense at all." There was an idealism when they first came in just like there is some idealism with Harper and people like that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here we are, a government – I don't know how long they've been here.

Mr. Mason: Thirty-four years.

Mr. Martin: Thirty-four years. It seems like forever.

Mr. Mason: Since I was in grade 11.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, since you were in grade 11.

Now, as I said, Mr. Speaker, the longer they're here, the more paranoid they are. You know, the little bit of information we got from FOIP, "Well, we better cover that up because knowledge is so important." Knowledge is power, Mr. Speaker. "We better cover this up and not let anybody know what's going on."

Well, I don't know. I know they believe that they can do whatever they want in this province. After all, they've been here 34 years. They believe that people accept them no matter what they do, but the point is that even last time they should have got a warning. Whether they like it or not – and it's been mentioned many times in this Assembly – more people voted for the people on this side of the House than voted for that side of the House. That should have told them something from the heady days of the past, but no.

It's interesting that when I notice leadership candidates being put on the spot about this, they're certainly not jumping out and supporting this legislation. Do you notice that? Do you notice that, Mr. Speaker? They're not jumping out. They don't want to be hung with this. I don't see them saying: oh, boy, this is the greatest legislation in the world. A number of them outside this House have actually spoken against it. Now, that should tell the members here something. The leadership candidates don't want to be tarred with what we're doing here.

How come they don't get it? How come they don't get it, Mr. Speaker? What does it take to get through to the sick, hidebound government that's been here too long?

Now, one can only hope that the candidates for leader, who automatically becomes Premier, whoever they are, would say that this is wrong and would come back and change this and become concerned about ethics and transparent government, Mr. Speaker. One can only hope.

Mr. Elsalhy: They talk about it only, but they don't understand it yet.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Exactly.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I say, I suppose there could be a deathbed repentance here in the waning minutes of the Legislature, but I've been around this place too long. I'm not going to hold my breath waiting for a miracle to happen, but time will tell.

The next government is going to have to deal with this. I'll tell you that ethical issues, transparency, democracy – these issues are not going to go away for this government because people in Alberta and across Canada are demanding more accountability from their politicians. They've started to realize that it's the people that elect the government, not the government that tells the people what to do, and it's happening now in Alberta too. There'll be a time at some point down the line where this government will pay a price.

Thirty-four years maybe just makes you this way. Maybe if you were a bunch of saints – I'd never accuse the government of being a bunch of saints. But even with a bunch of saints, if they'd been in power that long, this tends to happen. I don't know. I doubt that any other government will ever get 34 years of power to find it out. That's probably a good thing, Mr. Speaker. It's probably a very good thing.

I just say that it's interesting to see this particular bill, to see the government in action somehow justifying this when everybody in Alberta, even their leadership candidates, media people, everybody else, international experts are saying that this is wrong. But, oh, no. They know best. They know best, Mr. Speaker. "We'll ram this through. We will go back to our closed ways and think that the people of Alberta will say, 'Good job, boys. I'm glad that you're thwarting democracy. I'm glad that you're becoming more secretive. We really appreciate that. That makes us proud of our government.'"

What more can be said about this government, Mr. Speaker? They should be ashamed of themselves, but they're not. Hopefully, down the way they'll pay a political price for this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my first opportunity to stand and speak to Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. I, too, in the short time left to me would like to express my deep concern about the lack of openness and accountability of this government. It's clear that Albertans are increasingly aware of this lack of openness and accountability and that the restriction of access and increased ministerial powers will come back to bite this government.

People are increasingly concerned about everything, how we're making decisions of land-use issues, how we're protecting our environment, how the water is being abused and industry is calling the shots, doing the investigations on its own right, how industry itself is monitoring our very groundwater, and we can't get access to any of that information even though this is of vital public interest, the very groundwater that we depend for life and livelihoods on.

So this particular bill is a step backward. It's classical George Orwell doublespeak and talks about information being accessible but, in fact, will step back years in terms of people's opportunity to know and to be empowered to speak to and effectively influence some of the key decisions in this province.

From a public trust point of view we are not helping things here, and when we reduce the level of trust in our public servants, we reduce the level of civil discourse in our society, we reduce the level of social stability, we reduce the level of community, and all of these lead down a dark path towards more division, anarchy, violence.

I dare say that some of the longer term impacts of this are being reflected in our health care system today, Mr. Speaker. Among the highest rates of depression, family violence, suicide, and alcoholism anywhere in Canada are found here in Alberta. I have to think that to some extent the attitude of closedness and mistrust is being fostered by these kinds of policies and practices by a government that says the opposite.

People out on the Legislature steps today came all the way from northwestern Alberta concerned that they've not had reasonable input into an intensive livestock operation, a big hog operation, that is already marching its way through the steps that seem clearly to be excluding people from decision-making that does not respect the regional plans of an area. Without an integrated land-use plan for the province, they indeed are left absolutely at the mercy of industry, who not only do the applications but do all of the environmental impact assessments in the absence of a department that will stand up for people, stand up for the environment, and take an opportunity to balance our development with the public interest and the social needs of people.

Information is power, and every time we make a move to restrict access to information, we are restricting people's sense of power and freedom. Indeed, that's what this bill ultimately will result in.

So, Mr. Speaker, I definitely will not be supporting this, and I know all Albertans are going to be dismayed as they learn more and more about how this government is trying to restrict opportunities and access to information and decision-making, subverting the democratic process.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, but pursuant to Government Motion 20, agreed to on May 17, 2006, I must now put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Bill 20 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:31 p.m.]

[Two minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

For the motion:

Amery	Haley	McFarland
Boutillier	Herard	Morton
Brown	Horner	Oberle
Cao	Jablonski	Pham
Cardinal	Knight	Prins
Evans	Liepert	Renner
Forsyth	Lindsay	Snelgrove
Goudreau	Lougheed	Stelmach
Graydon	Mar	VanderBurg
Greeneveld	McClellan	Zwozdesky

Against the motion:

Blakeman	Mason	Pastoor
Bonko	Mather	Swann
Elsalhy	Miller, R.	Taylor
Martin	Pannu	Tougas
Totals:	For – 30	Against – 12

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: Before we proceed with the next item of business, hon. Government House Leader, you wanted to rise on a motion?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with the indulgence of the chair and all hon. members to seek unanimous consent to present the following motion for resolution at this time. I would move that pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) at today's hour of 5:30 p.m. or shortly beyond 5:30 p.m., should a decision at third reading of Bill 40 be reached at that time, the Assembly will stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

I say it that way, Mr. Speaker, because clearly we have bills 43, 42, and 40 still on the Order Paper to be dealt with today, and we anticipate getting to Bill 40 very soon.

Thank you for your anticipated unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just for your information Standing Order 4(3) indicates that if at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday or Wednesday, the business of the Assembly is not concluded, the Speaker leaves the Chair until 8 p.m. unless, on a motion of the Government House Leader made before 5:30 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned until the next sitting day.

The hon. Government House Leader is seeking unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 43

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Zwozdesky: I would simply move third reading of Bill 43, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

The Acting Speaker: Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a third time]

4:40

Bill 42

Appropriation Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 42, the Appropriation Act, 2006.

I urge all members to support this bill. There have been many comments made, some questions for clarification, and the commitment is that I will write to the individual member that may have had a question of clarification in any of those areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Raising the bar or holding the bottom line? On opposite sides of the opinion pages in yesterday's Edmonton Journal were two contrasting views of the task of the next leader of the province. One by two researchers of the Canada West Foundation focused on studies that showed that two-thirds of Albertans want to see greater protection of the environment and elimination of poverty as provincial goals. The other, by management consultants, said that the next Premier must teach Albertans to live within their means by cutting spending and raising taxes in readiness for when the oil runs out. In essence, these two views are not utterly opposed.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Economy and ecology are not poles apart. They both come from "ecos," a word that means management of a household. Smart capitalists realize this. That's why Henry Ford supported welfare and higher wages in the 1930s as this meant that people could buy his cars. That's why Conrad Black wrote a biography of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, subtitled Champion of Freedom. At the height of the depression Roosevelt introduced the measures that later became the basis of the welfare state. Without these people supports capitalism would not have survived.

A society that ignores the environment and accepts poverty is not business smart. It is bad business, bad ecology, false economy, poor politics, and misguided governance. It makes about as much sense as a patient who puts off going to the doctor with a pain or cough because he doesn't want to be a sissy and because he can live with it. Such ills and unacknowledged and untreated problems can endanger the society and kill the body politic.

While the two opinion pieces in yesterday's paper both have messages we cannot ignore, they do offer different approaches to our future, different in tone if not in content. The one sets priorities that focus on our potential; the other, on our limitations. One calls us to raise the bar; the other, to remember the bottom line. It is no accident that the language of accounting is showing up in areas other than financial. We now talk of the social and democratic deficit and doing an environmental audit. This is a recognition that these factors that we used to overlook as intangible are every bit as important on a balance sheet of our state of being.

Seventy years ago William Aberhart's message on poverty in the midst of plenty led to a revolution in Alberta politics. There may have been some excuse for poverty in the depression of the 1930s. There is none today. Let us try to recapture what he was offering without being distracted by old party labels or monetary theories. He said that those who are in need and cannot support themselves for whatever reason must be extended the benefit of the doubt, what he called credit. He was saying that in a civilized country – he probably would have said a Christian society – their support needs to be underwritten by society as a whole; the social aspect. At that time some skeptics discarded his ideas as unrealistic. We are in a better position to achieve that dream now than we were in 1936.

Three times in Alberta's history as a province when the government inside this House has not listened, the people outside have heard, and it was their hearing and acting that changed the day. The message of William Aberhart comes to us again. We live in a very different world, but Albertans are still not prepared to accept poverty and injustice when we see an alternative. The only question that remains is whether that change will come from within the government or from outside it.

One of the concerns I have, obviously, is about poverty. I want to extend that to looking at the provincial government, indeed, having many policy levers that it can pull in an effort to reduce poverty, from the tax system and social assistance to funding for nonprofit organizations and access to education. Many of our nonprofit organizations, which are designed to support a quality of life for the needy, work under a tyranny of uncertain funding. They do not have predictable and sustainable funding. They depend on volunteer help. They deserve recognition and certainty of financial support. This is one tool for helping to reduce poverty, a tool that is already in place, just needing support. Nothing prevents that support but attitude.

I've got a number of areas I'd like to talk about today. One of them, of course, is education. I've received some correspondence lately from people in the city who are dismayed about the Minister of Education's comments in the Legislature in response to questions regarding the class-size initiative and overall funding. He said that he would have the final budgets submitted to him by the end of June and that he would be looking at that then.

The reality in the school systems of this province is that by the end of June the budgets and staffing are set. We may have achieved some crude averaging target for grades 4 to 12, but because of the underfunding of education those numbers are going to change next year. Principals in some of the high schools are talking classes of 38 and 39 to even come close to balancing the budget. Some high schools in Edmonton will be losing seven or eight teachers for the coming school year. This is not because of a dramatic drop in enrolment. The enrolment is roughly the same. There simply is not enough money to retain the staff complements they have.

The excuse that those are site-based decisions doesn't cut it either. The reality is that there is simply not enough money in education. Education should not be funded on a business model, because it is not a business. It is a tool whereby a society assists as much as possible future citizens in becoming contributing, active, and moral members of society. We see it as an investment. Because human growth and development cannot be legislated, automated, or regulated, funding schools as though they were factories creates the groundwork for a dysfunctional system and produces not only poor results but a liability in the future.

The way schools are funded contributes enormously to the problem of providing appropriate education for all students. I talked about this before, especially the funding based on course completions in high school. Funding is only received for actual courses completed. That means 50 per cent attendance and a minimum mark of 25 per cent. Yet a great deal of staff time, smaller classes, aide time, calls to parents, conferences, tutoring, and planning for students at risk will be done to try to assist reluctant learners or students with difficulties learning. If the student is not successful, the school doesn't get any funding.

Schools need to be assured of an adequate block of funding each year. Stable and adequate funding allows schools to function whether they serve the academically elite population or a population comprised of less able students.

I want to again mention the unfunded liability. If not a debt to the province because we are debt free, what budget does the money come out of to pay the government's share, approximately two-thirds each year? Is the $44 million stated in the newspaper that's going to the unfunded liability new money or simply what the government would have been paying anyway this year? The unfunded liability is placing a financial burden on all teachers regardless of whether we were part of that deal in the early '90s or not. Alberta teachers pay the highest percentage of salary into pension, higher than any public sector. What is equitable about that? I have to ask: what are the plans to address and resolve this contentious issue in a fair and equitable manner?

Again, I also have concerns about mandating second-language learning. There's not enough staff to do it. There are not enough trained teachers to be implementing this. What is going to happen about that mandate?

We need to have more help with getting students with special needs the resources that they need to help them complete high school, but funding for special-needs students remains inadequate. An aide costs the school close to $40,000, yet funding directly from the province is about $20,000. So that remains a concern to me.

I'm also frustrated with the government's unwillingness despite record revenues to finance the new schools in my constituency area, the Meadows, and the modernization of older schools that are urgently needed. The upcoming budget will of course be very important for the operations of schools. They're headed into contract negotiations. Staff groups have seen salary increases elsewhere of over 3 per cent, so likely we'll expect the same. If grant increases are any less than that, that will result in staff reductions.

Again, I want to mention that fine arts do two important things, both of which are hard to measure: they feed the soul, which we desperately need in an increasingly secular world, and they make us more creative. Even with all our advances in technology we are still in need of creative minds. Unfortunately, with funding problems often the options – fine arts, any of them, counselling, and librarians – are at risk. I can't stress too much how much we need all of those.

I want to talk about AISH funding and PDD funding too. There's been a lot of discussion on these, but I want to add a request for indexation. If we can index MLAs' salaries, why don't we do the same for the most vulnerable in our society? Why do they have to wait for reviews? Indexation should be automatic in terms of people on AISH and people requiring PDD funding.

I also must mention the concern about individuals who have come from Children's Services care and must move to PDD when they are 18. There's a lot of uncertainty about the transition in terms of funding and what is available in programs. This creates unnecessary anxiety. This transition needs to be supported with communication and assistance to dispel these worries and simplify the process and make it client friendly.

Building Better Bridges is a report on programs and supports for persons with developmental disabilities, and it was released in March 2000. It contains 10 recommendations directed toward improving the governance and service delivery of the PDD programs. But this review did not recommend eliminating the provincial board, and I'm still wondering how that decision was made and what groups were consulted. Again, we need to work toward inclusion, equality, and quality of life for all types of disabilities.

Another area of concern for me is continuing care. The Auditor General's report of May 2005 was a wake-up call alerting us to the realities of long-term care facilities in this province, alerting us to the fact that many facilities were not complying with basic standards. Seniors are a vulnerable people. We need to take responsibility to put in a system with clear standards that are enforced and with a system that handles complaints effectively. Alberta could be a leader with increased accountability and transparency in regard to seniors' care. We should have the best care possible with adequate staffing and adequate hours of care per resident. There have to be standards and enforcement. Monitoring must be evident so that people of this province can be assured that we are doing what is in the best interest of each resident.

We are still waiting for the provincial standards that will give us consistency throughout the province. Bill 205, sponsored by my colleague from Lethbridge-East, could have made a huge difference for us. We need an independent central enforcement body, a continuing care commissioner. Why aren't we legislating those standards now that we've been talking about? Why are we waiting till next spring? Seniors need the protection now.

It's also a crucial time for the environment. Global warming is no longer a possibility; it's a present reality. The earlier springs and later falls we experience each year are welcome, but they come at a cost. Desert areas are reaching northward and glaciers are receding. As a major producer of the world's energy Alberta has vowed to be a world leader in sustainability and conservation. This is a noble objective, and it needs to be more than that. Our government needs to send the signal clearly to the energy sector that economy and ecology must be balanced as joint responsibilities of a well-managed household. With only .05 per cent of the provincial government budget Alberta Environment does not have the manpower to monitor industry and our environment. The power of industry and the weakness of the Department of Environment have led to a lack of confidence that this government truly values the protection of the environment and truly understands the impact of failed action on the future of this province.

I've got concerns, of course, about coal-bed methane. We've heard a lot about that this session, and I still feel that we're not paying the attention that is due these people who are expressing concerns about the dangers of coal-bed methane.

I think I'll leave it at that.

The Speaker: Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called then.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a third time]

Bill 40
Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to stand and move third reading of Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006.

After all is said and done, I think that, essentially, what this will do is create an opportunity for continuous improvement with respect to tuition policy, and I urge all members to vote in favour.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise on third reading of Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, and acknowledge the Minister of Advanced Education for wanting to do the right thing by students; however, the fact remains that we on this side of the House believe that he's going about it in the wrong way.

Now, this is as was indicated in second reading and in Committee of the Whole, where this bill has gotten significant debate, full debate I think, as full a debate as a bill of about 60 words can get. It is a very short bill, and it seeks to do one thing and one thing only; that is, to remove tuition policy from legislation and move it under regulations. The minister very much thinks that is the direction that he wants to go. On the opposition benches we think very much that that is the wrong direction to go. I don't think that there can be any meeting of the minds on this. I don't think there's any room for negotiation on this one. It's just a black-and-white issue.

So, with that in mind, I would like to move an amendment that the motion for third Reading of Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 40, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence." I have the requisite number of copies here for distribution.

I don't intend to spend a great deal of time speaking to this because, as I said, I think this bill has had a pretty full debate in second reading and committee stage. I think the merits or drawbacks of this bill now should be self-evident to anyone who has followed the debate. I think the positions are pretty well laid out on this debate, and of course it is our position that this is a bad bill, a bad piece of legislation, fundamentally flawed, should not go ahead. There are better ways to accomplish the same end, and we have been urging the minister to pursue some of those ways. He seems not interested in doing that. Thus, I move this amendment. I don't know how much appetite there is on either side of the House to debate this amendment, but I think it's fairly self-evident. I will take my seat now and allow the debate to go where it will.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do I take it that that was your participation on the amendment?

Mr. Taylor: On the amendment, yes.

The Speaker: Okay. So we have debate now on the amendment. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education on the amendment.

5:00

Mr. Herard: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess it won't come as a large surprise to my friend across the way that I don't support his motion.

Essentially, I'll just say this. We typically, I think, are into an area of whether or not democracy works the way democracy works. Now, it is what it is, as imperfect as it is, but at some point you have to come to the realization that you can only do what you can do.

So I would urge everyone to vote against the motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the motion before the House, which is to hoist the bill. I think there are very good reasons why this bill should not move beyond the stage it's at now and very good reasons why it shouldn't be approved by the House. We are trying to bend over backwards to give this minister the opportunity to do what he claims he wants to do. He throws up his hands in despair and disbelief that this side of the House is not willing to go along with his proposal to take the matter of establishing tuition fee policy off the floor of this House. Rather, it should be done, he thinks, behind the closed doors of his office.

Last night the minister expressed interest in the motion that my colleague for Edmonton-Calder brought before the House on my behalf to amend the legislation. The minister said that it sounded like a good amendment, a good idea, but why didn't the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona bring it to me through my office? Well, there's an established procedure here. The minister brings the bill to the floor of the House. We debate it here. We draw attention to what we consider are seriously flawed portions of the bill. As I said, the bill is less than 60 words, and we still are trying to improve it so that the minister would have some room to manoeuvre yet respect the democratic traditions of this House.

He said that although he seems to like the idea that my amendment was proposing, he couldn't support the amendment. Very strange. I think that it's incumbent upon the minister, if he in fact found the ideas proposed in the amendment to be to his liking, to in fact implore, to try to appeal to his colleagues on the government side of the House to support the amendment. What he did, in fact, was quite surprising, quite strange. He stands to say that he cannot support the amendment.

What this hoist motion does, Mr. Speaker, is give this minister another chance to take the ideas that were proposed in that amendment last night back to his office, back to his colleagues in his caucus, back to the standing committee that deals with this matter, and seek their approval for it. The hoist motion comes, I think, at exactly the right time to rescue the minister from the difficulty that he finds himself in, that he didn't have enough time to consult.

This hoist motion does give the minister time to consult – to consult with us, consult with his own caucus, consult with the standing committee – to take the whole matter through the black hole that I talked about, but the minister doesn't seem to be serious about doing everything that he can to prevent this matter from slipping into the black hole. That's what's going to happen. That's what's happened with respect to the recommendations of the subcommittee on transforming the system, that I helped the minister to release to the press and the public. We don't know what's happening to those 37 recommendations. Now we won't know what will happen to the issue of tuition fee policy if this bill passes in the House. That's why I think it makes a great deal of sense from the point of view of the students, who have worked over the years long and hard, to put the matter of determining the parameters for the tuition fee policy back into the legislation.

Last night's amendment, that was proposed on my behalf to the House, was another attempt to help the minister to move the matter back to the floor of this House and put the issue of tuition fee policy and the framework which would guide it in the legislation that he proposes. He likes the amendment, yet he expressed his disapproval of it. I simply can't understand the logic of it. You can't be in favour of something and then say, "I'm opposed to it" in the same breath, within minutes. I read carefully what the minister had to say about that amendment in the Hansard last night, and I was quite puzzled how the minister can be on both sides of the issue. He's for the ideas in the amendment, yet he is against the amendment.

Mr. R. Miller: Then he wouldn't accept adjournment so that we could let him take it back to his caucus and discuss it.

Dr. Pannu: That's right.

Mr. Speaker, the hoist amendment that's before the House gives the minister yet another opportunity so that he can get things straight in his own mind first, and then he can get it right. That's what the students would welcome. Students have been imploring this minister and this government to take another look at their concerns, and they've expressed these concerns in no uncertain terms. I hope the minister understands students' concerns. I hope the minister has been listening to what I have had to say about this matter. I hope the minister has been listening to what my hon. colleagues on the Official Opposition side responsible for this have been saying. Yet he seems to be turning a deaf ear to all of this.

Minister, you offered us an opportunity to be consulted. We are willing to be consulted, provided that you give us the opportunity. You vote for this amendment and ask your colleagues to vote for this amendment, which is a hoist motion. It really is not an amendment, Mr. Speaker; I'm sorry to confuse the two. This is a motion before the House to help the rookie Minister of Advanced Education to have time, to have the benefit of advice from this side of the House, from student organizations. I can see that rookies fumble the ball, and he has clearly done that. He has clearly done that. But we don't want to embarrass him. Mistakes are made, and then they can be fixed.

This motion gives the minister one last opportunity to say: "Mea culpa. I made a mistake." He can tell the House and his own colleagues on his side of the House, "I have been given this golden opportunity by way of this motion to take the matter back." Then he can consult with the opposition critics on this issue, to whom he wrote a letter two days ago, which was gratefully received, I want to tell the House. Yet I want to hold the minister to his word. If he's serious about consulting with us, then here is the chance. Here is the opportunity. In the dying hours of this spring session we are gracefully giving him the opportunity to fix his mistakes. Nothing is hard. If there's a will to do it, nothing is hard, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore urge the minister to change his mind on what he had to say. I know that he sometimes acts rashly. He doesn't give himself enough time to consider the merits of arguments, of motions before the House. What I've done now is provide the minister with some chance, some opportunity, a few more minutes of reflection on the issue. I know that the minister wants continuous improvement, as he says, in setting tuition fee policy. I hope that he is also committed to making continuous improvement in his own performance in the House. It's a very, very important piece of legislation, and the minister is committed to the principle of continuous improvement, I presume, including his own performance and judgment.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has the opportunity to in fact admit that he made a mistake, that there are good ideas on this side of the House that he's willing to look at, and that in fact in his own mind for some reason – maybe his political reasons are different from his convictions, but for political reasons he's digging in his heels. He's saying no, that this hoist amendment is something he cannot vote for. But I appeal to his good judgment and say to the minister: you will win lots of friends, if not on this side of the House, at least among the students. And there are over 200,000 students in the postsecondary system. So here's an opportunity to stand up and ask for a special chance from the Speaker, to be able to have a second go and speak to the amendment and say to the House and to the Speaker that you have indeed changed your mind because the power of persuasion is there. Our job is to persuade, and I hope that I have persuaded the minister and the House that he should in fact stand up and say: "Yeah, I changed my mind. I'm going to vote for this amendment."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the amendment.

Mr. R. Miller: What he said.

The Speaker: Are there others who would like to participate in the debate on the amendment?

The question is being called then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:13 p.m.]

[Two minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: Hon. members, what we have before us now is a division on the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Before I ask for the vote, I just want to remind you of the procedure that we use with respect to this kind of an amendment, known as a hoist amendment. If the amendment is carried, then this is the end of the matter, and the bill disappears from the Order Paper. If this hoist amendment is defeated, then I will immediately put the question on the motion for third reading.

For the motion:

Bonko	Miller, R.	Taylor
Mather	Pannu	Tougas

Against the motion:

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a third time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we now have a problem. A few minutes ago by resolution of this Assembly unanimous consent was given to rising at 5:30 or beyond. In this unanimous consent nothing was said about rising prior to 5:30, so now I must call on the hon. Government House Leader for a motion with respect to that.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is yet another vignette moment for us but a good one.

However, on a serious note, in view of the hour and in view of the progress made on the bills debated today and in view of the government's business being quite completed at this point, I would now move that we call it 5:30 and that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:26 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 18, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/18

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my summer student, Kelsey Roos. She is attending Concordia University and working on a bachelor's degree in management. She's seated in I think the public gallery, and I'd ask that she stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several introductions today, and they're all seated in your gallery. Today marks the last time that hon. members in this House will see three Legislative Assembly security service staff in uniform for they are retiring at the end of May. Dedication, loyalty, and good humour are the qualities these men have so capably given to this House. We are most grateful to them for all that they have given in support of our provincial parliamentary process. In your gallery are Ben Walker, Nick Kutash, and Bob Baker. I ask them to rise and receive the much-deserved thanks of this House.

Also in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are spouses of some of our MLAs. They are Mrs. Shirley Johnston, the wife of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, and Mrs. Liz VanderBurg, the wife of the hon. Minister of Government Services. I'd ask them to rise at this time and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Last but certainly not least, Mr. Speaker, is a young lady who on May 26 will be celebrating 20 years as the executive assistant of Mr. Speaker. She's also seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask Bev Alenius to rise and receive the very warm thanks of the Assembly.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have an angel among us today. Her name is Ellen McGregor. She's here with her mother and her grandmother Jean Fraser. Her mother is Mary McGregor, and when Mary found that she had MS, Ellen undertook to not only raise money for multiple sclerosis but as a 12-year-old sacrificed her birthday presents to make sure that fundraising was done for the MS Society. She is, indeed, a young lady that we could all model ourselves after. I'd ask that Ellen and her mother and grandmother, who are seated in our members' gallery, please rise so that we can applaud such generosity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 33 grade 6 students from Tempo school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Tempo school is a private school in Riverbend. I've had the privilege of visiting the school on a number of occasions, and I can say without a doubt that this school is gifted with extraordinarily intelligent and inspiring students and staff. The Minister of Education and myself last attended the school last fall when we were honouring a young lady, Aysha Wills, who organized a tsunami relief effort. She was a student at that school.

The Tempo school students are seated in the members' gallery and the public gallery, and they're accompanied by parent helpers Mrs. Rosa Ziegler, Mrs. Shadia Fares, Mr. George Kuhse, Mrs. Lorraine Verbeke, Mrs. Kate Freeman, Mrs. Sandy Redmond, Mr. Ireneusz Mackowiak, and by their teacher, Ms Cathryn van Kessel. I believe this is the first visit of Tempo school to the Legislature. Just one more second, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to draw to your attention that Mrs. Kate Freeman and her daughter Emma Freeman, who is one of the students there, are direct descendants of the first Premier of this province, Mr. Alexander Rutherford, and are proudly wearing his campaign pins. I'd ask all members of Tempo school to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful, wonderful person who served 15 years in this House as the MLA representing the fine people of my fine constituency of Calgary-Foothills. Mrs. Patricia Nelson, or Pat as we call her, served under our beloved Premier, served in many portfolios, including Minister of Finance, up until her retirement in 2004. We love her in Calgary-Foothills, and we thank her for her many years of service to Albertans. Pat Nelson is seated somewhere in this House; I'm not too sure where. I ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. As the first one, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Pam Barrett. Pam served as the New Democratic MLA for Edmonton-Highlands from 1986 to 1993 and from 1997 to the year 2000. She won the leadership of the Alberta New Democrats in 1996 and was the party's dynamic and dedicated leader until 2000. Before her first term as an MLA and during her break from politics in the 1990s, Pam was an active public figure in Edmonton, with newspaper columns and regular political commentary and talk show slots on television and radio. Though retired, she continues to work as a freelance journalist. Throughout her career Pam has been dedicated to social justice issues, financial responsibility, and the maintenance of strong public health care and education. She is fiercely passionate in her beliefs and as a politician was consistently committed to standing up for the underdog. As a public figure Pam's charisma and dedication inspired the love and respect of the people of Alberta. We're very pleased to have Pam join us today. She's seated in your gallery, and I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'm delighted to also introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Julianna Charchun. She is the summer STEP student assistant for the Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood constituency. She is currently a master's student in family studies in the department of human ecology at the University of Alberta. She's been working on evaluations for Mother Earth's Children's Charter School in Wabamun and on Health Canada's Nobody's Perfect parenting program. Mr. Speaker, we're looking forward to having Julianna work with us for the summer. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Lyndsey Henderson. Lyndsey is the summer STEP student assistant for my constituency. Lyndsey was originally born in Fort McMurray and came to Edmonton to pursue her bachelor of arts at the University of Alberta. She volunteers for the Centre for Equal Justice and has a keen interest in Canadian history. I'd ask Lyndsey to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you three people today. The first two have actually just arrived here from Perth, Australia, and they're my niece and her boyfriend. Evy Hoge and Ivan Denys have recently come from Perth, Australia, for a visit. Ivan has been very acclimatized in that he's already wearing an Oilers jersey today. The third person is my lovely wife, Evelyn, who is well known to the Members of the Legislative Assembly. I'd ask them to all rise to receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Barb McLean. Barb is the summer STEP assistant for the Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency. She will complete her combined honours degree in political science and women's studies next year at the University of Alberta. Barb is also one of the recipients of the Lois Hole humanities and social science scholarships awarded earlier this year. She plans to continue researching aboriginal women's issues. We are delighted to have Barb join us for the summer and would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my extreme pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Barry Cavanaugh, who's the chief executive officer of the Alberta Pharmacists Association, which acts as an advocacy and representative organization for the thousands of hard-working pharmacists throughout this province. Barry's growing and ever-evolving role includes making presentations to government and liaising with both sides of this House, and he's here to observe democracy in action. I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Dashiell Brasen. Dashiell is a summer STEP assistant for the Edmonton-Strathcona constituency. He is currently a student at Grant MacEwan College and will be attending the University of Alberta next year. Dashiell has lived in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona his whole life.

His parents live in the same area. We are excited to have Dashiell work with us for the summer, and I would now ask Dashiell to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to echo the comments of the Minister of Health and Wellness. We do indeed have an angel among us today. We have with us a lady who literally glides through a room full of people with grace and dignity. She oozes caring and compassion. She's been known to make chocolate cake for hungry MLAs in the middle of the night when they're working a late session, and we found out this morning that she is in possession of one of the most amazing recipes for cinnamon buns. She is indeed the first lady of the Official Opposition, the partner of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I would ask Jeanette Boman to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've arrived at a portion of the Routine where we have certain rules associated with ministerial statements, the length thereof and who can participate as well. Today I intend to exercise my authority as the Speaker to waive that, and I'm going to call on three individuals to participate. I mean waive by way of time. First of all, I'll call on the hon. Deputy Premier, then I'm going to call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and I'll call on the hon. leader of the third party. At the conclusion of that, I'll invite the hon. the Premier to participate as well.

Tribute to the Hon. Ralph Klein Premier of Alberta

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's with enormous pride and, I must admit, some sense of sadness that I rise today to speak about a great leader, an outstanding Albertan, and I believe the most popular Premier in Canadian history. That, of course, is our very own hon. Premier of Alberta.

As this session of the Legislature moves to completion, my caucus colleagues and I are very much aware that the next time we gather in this Chamber, we will do so without the guidance and wisdom of this man to my right, a man who has held the Premier's chair in this Assembly since 1992. This is, of course, because of our Premier's announcement earlier this spring that he will be stepping down as our Premier later this fall. It was an announcement we all knew would come some day but always hoped would be some time in the very distant future. But the time has arrived, and we now prepare for the departure of a man who has dedicated 17 incredibly productive years to the service of his province, almost 14 of those as Premier.

Our Premier's list of accomplishments is very long, distinguished, and historic. It was our Premier's personal vision and leadership that led to the elimination of Alberta's deficit and then Alberta's debt. Mr. Speaker, today, with our fiscal house in order and a robust economy that leads the nation, it's easy to forget how difficult the early 1990s were for Alberta and for our Premier personally, but as a government and a province we were incredibly fortunate to have had at the helm a man of courage, a man of vision, and a man of conviction.

Albertans recognized a man of honesty and sincerity and believed our Premier when he spoke about the importance of getting rid of the deficit and debt, and Albertans trusted him to deliver on his promise that the tough decisions would lead to benefits in the future. As all Albertans know, our Premier lived up to his word. It was his strength of vision and his natural leadership that helped create the prosperous and growing province that we enjoy today.

Even with the debt and the deficit gone, our Premier indicated that there was still work to be done. He always said that there was a greater purpose to achieving fiscal responsibility than simply showing balanced numbers on a budget spreadsheet. The tough fiscal work was just a prologue to bringing to life his vision of a strong Alberta for the future, a future with a world-class heart centre in Edmonton, a state-of-the-art bone and joint centre in Calgary, being at the forefront of medical research and, perhaps, Alberta being the home of a cure for cancer; a future where children would be protected from the violence of prostitution and the nightmare of crystal meth; a future where Alberta's economy would be strengthened by diversity and the entire province would be brought closer together by SuperNet; a future where postsecondary education would be accessible to any Albertan with a desire to improve themselves; a future where Albertans would pay far less overall taxes than all other Canadians; a future where the family farm would remain an enduring symbol of Alberta; a future where jobs would be plentiful, giving Albertans the opportunity to achieve their dreams. Mr. Speaker, thanks to the drive and determination, the persuasiveness and the dedication of our Premier that future envisioned by one man has already become Alberta's reality today.

It's been those kinds of accomplishments that led our Premier to being named Calgary's outstanding citizen of the century in 1995, a B'nai Brith citizen of the year in 1994, an honorary chief of the Blood tribe in 1996, an honorary degree recipient from Olds College and from Kangwon National University in Korea. Mr. Speaker, I've only scratched the surface of our Premier's many, many accomplishments.

One other I must mention, however. Our Premier has distinguished himself and our province for his wise counsel to fellow Premiers and championship of Alberta's interests at first ministers and Council of the Federation meetings. However, beyond the public awards and achievements beats the heart of a man whom I have admired and respected since the first day I met him. What an incredible honour it has been for me to be a part of his team.

Throughout his public life our Premier has embodied the very best characteristics of this province. He has shown integrity. He has been open, honest, and accessible, slow to anger, quick to forgive. His staff know him as a boss who treats them with kindness and friendship. I am so delighted, Mr. Speaker, to see so many of them here today and so many other familiar faces from around the Legislature Building and Annex to witness this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, his caucus colleagues know him as a leader who respects their views and their goals for their constituents, and of course Albertans know him as Ralph. Above all else it's been his incredible connection with ordinary Albertans that has defined this man and his career and made him the most unique political leader of his time. No matter where you go in this province, the Premier is known for being just Ralph. Our Premier has always been a man of the people in the truest sense. He is Ralph, a man whose words and vision reflected the dreams and aspirations of Albertans from all walks of life. This is not simply a skill he worked on developing or a technique that he learned from a book. It's who he is. He is a man with true interest in every person that he meets.

Today as all Alberta tries to imagine a province without Ralph as Premier, I know I speak for everyone in this House in expressing my deepest thanks to our Premier for all that he has done. Premier, thank you for bringing integrity and honour to this House and to the world of public service. Thank you for your countless unsung acts of kindness and humility, that touched the most cynical among us.

Thank you for the friendship that you have shown in the toughest of times and the dedication you've shown in the most trying of times. Thank you for always being Ralph.

As you prepare for retirement in a few short months, I hope you will always be inspired by the love and admiration that are in the hearts of all of us on your caucus team and in the hearts of millions of Albertans.

You've been so fortunate to have beside you a supportive wife, who has also brought honour and distinction to our province. Colleen Klein has been a caring mentor for thousands of Alberta children and a shining light for thousands of Alberta women. I hope that you and Colleen enjoy the peace and good fortune that you've both so richly earned. I hope that you achieve many new goals and dreams in the next chapter of your life, and of course I hope you have some time to golf and to fish. I hope that I may always have the honour and pleasure of calling you friend. Your voice, your spirit, and your laughter will be missed in this Chamber and across the province.

Mr. Speaker, when the Premier was asked on many occasions what he would wish for his legacy, he has always said, and I quote: to leave this province in better shape than I found it. Mr. Premier, you have accomplished this in spades. What you've achieved on behalf of all Albertans will never ever be forgotten.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Premier. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that today marks the last time that this Premier will sit in this Assembly as an elected member of the House, so I would like to offer a few words of acknowledgement and thanks to a man who will long be remembered, no doubt, as one of Canada's most dynamic public figures.

Life is full of irony. It folds and curves and loops on itself in the most unexpected ways. Nine years ago, after I had continuously challenged the policies and actions of his government as a member of the public, this Premier, I think in sheer exasperation, issued a challenge to me. He said: if you think anyone agrees with you, you'd better run for office. Well, I had never even considered the notion, but four years later I did run for office, and now here I stand today as Leader of the Official Opposition, with a great team around me, rising to wish the Premier well in his retirement.

One of the things about this Premier is that you never quite know what he's going to say next. The media loved that, of course, and so did many in the public who saw it as a refreshing contrast to the usual drone of politicians. I got my fair share of those unexpected moments, more numerous than we can talk about. I do still remember a Saturday morning in 1997, long before I ever considered running for office. It was a day after a book I wrote was published, and I'll admit that it was a book that was pretty critical of this government. I was having breakfast in our kitchen when I glanced at the morning newspaper and nearly choked on my coffee. There was the headline: Premier accuses Taft of spreading communism. [laughter] Well, I've never thanked you for that, Mr. Premier. Though it was completely untrue, it was the best publicity a book could ever have.

The Premier's career has been remarkable. There's no doubt about it. He served the public as an elected representative of one kind or another for nearly three decades, including almost 14 years as Premier. That sort of electoral success speaks to the connection the Premier has enjoyed with the people of Alberta. In fact, he is rare among Canadian politicians in that more people refer to him by his first name than by his title. Most of us who have chosen careers in public life would love to have the same kind of rapport with the people that our Premier has.

It takes a lot of courage to pursue a career in politics, particularly a job as important as the Premier's, which places huge demands on the man and his family. The scrutiny is constant and intense, and the pressure is unrelenting, coming from all directions day and night. Anyone who can bear that kind of pressure for as long as this Premier has is clearly someone to be reckoned with.

Mr. Speaker, we should also acknowledge the strength and support of the Premier's wife, Colleen, and the rest of his family. Though they have lived on the verge of the spotlight cast upon the Premier, they have shared the burdens of his position, and in that sense they are as much servants of the public as the Premier himself. They are equally deserving of our gratitude.

I must also, if it's all right, make particular mention of the Premier's father, who is a constituent of mine. I'm pretty sure he's never voted for me, but we do often meet at events, and we chat and we joke. Many a time he has said to me, "You keep Ralph on his toes." Well, Mr. Klein Sr., I have tried. Believe me; I have tried.

In an age when many Canadians are cynical about politics, the Premier has shown that it's possible to maintain a real connection with the public while at the same time making the difficult decisions required by the office. The Premier has never been afraid to wear his humanity on his sleeve, and I think everyone sitting in this Legislature and in Legislatures across Canada should learn from the Premier's example. To serve the public good, you must risk your health, your reputation, your family life, and so much more. It's a risk taken on behalf of your fellow citizens with no guarantee of thanks, no guarantee of remembrance. The Premier took the risk because he wanted to help build a better Alberta.

So, if I may, to the Premier, on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus you have our thanks, our best wishes, and our sincerest hopes that you will enjoy a fulfilling retirement and many, many happy years with your wife and children and grandchildren.

May the golf balls fly and the fish bite. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what can you say about this Premier? It's almost hard to know where to start. I guess you might go to the front of any given parade – well, almost any parade – and you'll see the Premier happily out front. It's hard to think of any personality that has dominated Alberta politics as thoroughly as has the Premier.

For the Premier politics has always been deeply personal. He showed an almost unique ability to relate to the average Albertan, and they relate to him. It's an important quality because it makes politics more relevant to the average person in Alberta.

Getting out from under the dome has become part of the thinking of any successful politician in Alberta. Martha and Henry have been the symbols of this populist approach to politics. They have arguably become the most famous fictional couple in Alberta's political folklore. Looking at an issue the way Martha and Henry might look at it before opening your mouth has become standard operating procedure for us over here and I'm sure in other political parties in this province as well. The result, and a very positive one, is that everyday people are more engaged in politics and feel a greater sense of ownership of their government.

We all like to believe that a person of humble beginnings can rise to any office in the land. The Premier has inspired many people by demonstrating that this is possible. One such person, Mr. Speaker, is me. When I first considered running for Edmonton city council, I wondered whether or not a bus driver could be elected. But when I heard the story of the TV reporter who took on the Calgary political establishment and won the mayor's chair, it really helped me to make up my own mind to throw my hat into the ring.

The one aspect of being an opposition leader that I've enjoyed perhaps the most is taking on the Premier each day in question period. He's a formidable adversary in these exchanges. I've looked forward to the daily matching of wits, and I can tell you that nothing feels better than to score a couple of good points, causing the Premier to launch into one his tirades about how bad things are in socialist Manitoba. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the converse is also true. Nothing is more discouraging than to have him blow a carefully crafted question out of the water and have to sit down to the hoots and thumping of the Tory caucus.

Ultimately, though, I think all members here can agree that the Premier's most significant accomplishment has been his single-minded determination to pay off the debt. I know that he will take pride in this accomplishment. While we may disagree on many things, I will say that this opens up many wonderful opportunities for our children and our grandchildren.

I hope the Premier gets all the fishing and golfing he wants, but I know he has lots more to contribute to this province. It's been an honour and a privilege to work with him. I wish him and Colleen all the best.

With the indulgence of the Speaker I want to say that it won't be the same around here without you, Ralph. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, those were three very wonderful statements.

We're now in the 100th year of democracy in the province of Alberta and the 101st year in the history of the province of Alberta. To the hon. the Premier and to all of you, hon. members, we have designed a very special new Mace pin. It's a Mace pin of the province of Alberta, and it has the number 100 on it. I am now going to ask my head page to take it and deliver it to the hon. Deputy Premier, who I will ask to pin it on the Premier as the first recipient of this Legislature.

Mr. Klein: Oh, isn't that beautiful.

Mrs. McClellan: It's gorgeous.

First they should have explained how to get it out of the box.

Mr. Klein: There are two pins.

Mrs. McClellan: See. I needed my boss, as always.

Mr. Klein: Isn't that nice.

Mrs. McClellan: It's beautiful.

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, may I call on Alberta's Premier in its 100th year, the hon. Premier for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To say that I'm overwhelmed would be an understatement. I really am, and I'm honoured that you would allow me this opportunity to respond to the very kind words of my Legislature colleagues, including members of the opposition. I really do appreciate them.

I would first like to thank my friend and colleague the Deputy Premier for her remarks. Her words mean a lot to me because they come from a loyal and trusted friend – and I mean that – a friend who has stood by me through good times and bad. She's brought tremendous strength and integrity to the government and to this Legislature. She is, in short, a great Albertan, and it's been a pleasure to serve with her on the same team.

I would also like to thank the members of my caucus both past and present. You've been absolutely wonderful throughout the years. The things that have been achieved during my time in government were only achieved by their collective efforts. The will was theirs, the faith was theirs, the hard work was theirs, and the credit is theirs.

I would like to thank members of the opposition parties, both those who sit in the House today and their predecessors with whom I've crossed swords in the past. In fact, one of their predecessors, my friend Pam Barrett, was introduced earlier in the Speaker's gallery. I really enjoyed sparring with Pam. I really did.

Now, philosophically I haven't always agreed with the opposition points of view, as many of you have noticed, but I've never questioned their commitment and the commitment they bring to their jobs, the energy with which they serve their constituents, or their dedication to this province and its people. So I would especially like to thank the leaders of the Liberal and New Democratic caucuses. They are men and women of conscience and honour who bring a great deal of fire and passion to their work, and Alberta is a better place for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the team that has stood behind me all the way. My wife, Colleen, who has been mentioned by all three parties, has been a steady source of comfort, friendship, support, strength, and love. Without her I could and would have achieved absolutely nothing. I can tell you that for sure. To my staff in the Premier's office, who have handled more mail, phone calls, crazy schedules, and pressure always with grace, I know that every single detail of every single thing I do as Premier is always taken care of. I learned a lot from you, Mr. Speaker, about how to be organized. Before I met you and before coming into this office, I was totally and absolutely disorganized. Making this all happen, of course, is a huge undertaking that requires a very capable, dedicated team. In fact, my staff are more than staff. They've become like family.

Finally, I also want to thank all the Legislature staff who keep this place running. I know there are lots of things they do that I don't know about. They just seem to happen as if by magic, but I know it's not magic. It is hard work. I know that everything they do to support members of this House serves the people of this province.

Those of us who have enjoyed the privilege of working here know that the Legislature is a very special place. As much as I've often talked – and it was alluded to – about being out from under the dome, there hasn't been a single day that I've walked into this building when I haven't felt that I'm blessed to be here. Important work takes place in this building, extremely important work. Whether you're sitting in these Chambers or you're one of the dedicated people that take care of this magnificent building, you're all a part of it. You're part of a team that has been given the privilege of serving Albertans in a unique way. At least that's how I've always felt. I've felt blessed to be here, privileged to be part of this team, and honoured to serve the great people of this great province.

Thank you. [Extended standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Premier. I thank those who participated today, and I thank the response from all the members in the public galleries, the Speaker's gallery, and in the media gallery as well. That's a remarkable form of love.

Now I'll call on the Clerk to take us to the next point of the Routine, called the Oral Question Period, so may I ask for 50 more minutes of love?

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Premier Klein's Advice for His Successor

Dr. Taft: I'm sure we all just feel the love, Mr. Speaker.

Well, last round. This Premier's legacy and the legacy of the 35 long years of Tory rule in this province will in fact be mixed. Great credit is taken by this Tory government for paying off the Tory debt, and indeed this was an important development. It was important enough to have been the central plank in the Alberta Liberal election platform of 1993. The real credit, however, belongs more to high oil and gas prices than to sound fiscal management or a real vision for Alberta's future. My questions are to the Premier. Given that Alberta's economy is more reliant on nonrenewable resource revenues now than it has ever been, what advice does this Premier have for his successor on how to build a genuinely sustainable economy?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Klein: Actually, it is a very good question, and we have been going through this as a caucus. That's why we have developed a plan – and it may change at the next caucus planning session – to not get ourselves in the situation where we have to finance on an ongoing basis programs that might not be affordable in the future. That's why we adopted a program of spend some, but spend it on capital projects, needed infrastructure, that won't result in substantial operating expenses down the road; give some back, which we did in the form of rebate cheques or, as some people like to call them, Ralph bucks; and save, and we have done that through investments in the heritage savings trust fund, investments in various endowments. So, Mr. Speaker, that is the policy and that is the advice that I would have for whoever succeeds me: do not get yourself into a spending problem.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the democratic deficit in Alberta is bigger now than when the Premier first became leader, what advice does the Premier have for his successor on how to make Alberta truly open, accountable, and democratic?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, I really do think that we are open, we are accessible, and we are transparent. I can't think of a Premier or ministers who make themselves more accessible anywhere in Canada. Now, relative to the FOIP legislation, Bill 20, which I know has been the topic of a lot of discussion both within the Liberal caucus and the ND caucus, I would like to remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that the very briefing books that are in question and the briefing books that they have been railing about have always been protected. As a matter of fact, they have been protected indefinitely, forever. Now we're saying that we want to amend the legislation so that at least they can have them in five years. I don't see what is wrong with that. They would never, never, never in their lives prior to this amendment get these briefing books. Now at least they can get them after five years. There is a reason for everything. One of the reasons might be – and now they'll really be scrambling – maybe the Minister of Gaming has the 6/49 numbers in his book. Ho, ho, ho. Who knows?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: given that Albertans' reliance on food banks has soared across the province – there are now over 75 of them – what advice does the Premier have for his successor on how to make the Alberta advantage, as he calls it, apply to everyone?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, my advice to my successor, whoever he or she might be, would be to be compassionate and to remember that while there is a responsibility on the part of government, there also is a responsibility on the part of society to look after those who are less fortunate in society.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, as the spring session comes to a close, educators and parents across the province are frustrated that this government has still not addressed their concerns. School administrators have notified us and the Liberal opposition that they simply won't have enough money in their budget next year to keep all their current teaching staff. My question is to the Minister of Education. Given that school administrators and the Edmonton public school board have indicated that they are expecting teacher layoffs next year, what will the minister do before school budgets are set to ensure that this doesn't happen?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful for the question because it will give me a chance to again emphasize that the school boards will submit their budgets to me on or before June 30, and at that time, as is customary in this tradition we have, I will spend a considerable amount of time with my staff reviewing those numbers and seeing where some of their pressure points stand and looking at things like shifting enrolments or declining enrolments or increasing enrolments, infrastructure needs, busing concerns, the numbers enrolled in ESL, the numbers of FNMI students. The list goes on and on to about 35 or 40 different categories. Once that review is completed and once the populations of students settle down, we will come up with a final budget with those school boards to be in effect as of September 30, which is the ultimate cut-off day. So with respect to the hon. leader's question, which is a good question, we will have to just wait until those budget numbers come in, and then they'll be reviewed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister is implying or, in fact, stating in his response that the budget may be adjusted through the summer, yet we just voted on the budget. Is this minister saying that the Education budget may be changing before the fiscal year is out?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. We have a fixed amount of money, which is a provincial budget, but it gets apportioned to school boards on the basis of things like, for example, base funding on a per capita basis. Obviously, the more students you have, the more funding you would get. What I'm simply saying is that there are shifting dynamics that occur over the summer. July and August tend to be the largest migratory months for families who want to be in a fixed location so that when school starts up, they're ready to go, so you see some shifting demographic information such as population counts and enrolment counts. Secondly, we also have a similar formula, albeit on a per-credit-taken-and-completed basis, and we'll know that count, at least the number of students enrolled in high school, very soon as well. All I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that when you take those two factors plus the factor of May 31 being the cut-off date for teachers to let others know whether they're retiring or not, those are some of the factors that determine final budgets on a per-jurisdiction basis.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that teacher layoffs will mean fewer teachers are paying into the teachers' pension fund, what effect will layoffs have on the unfunded liability of teachers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, if memory serves, we will be contributing for both the unfunded pension liability of teachers and the current pension of teachers an amount over $300 million, and about $153 million of that will go to the unfunded portion. So teachers who are active – and there will be approximately 33,000 to 36,000 of them come September, I expect – will be contributing on an active basis in accordance with the agreement struck in 1992-93 between the government and the Teachers' Association.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta/Montana Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night in Lethbridge citizens from throughout the province gathered to discuss this government's electricity transmission policy. Both farmers and environmentalists want a public hearing at the National Energy Board before the export line for electricity is constructed between Lethbridge and Montana. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister on behalf of the government and the citizens of Alberta ask the National Energy Board for a full public hearing before construction of this line is to go ahead?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this is a merchant line being proposed by the Montana/Alberta tie-line group, and it will primarily be in Alberta and then crossing into the United States, into Montana. Jurisdiction, really, initially will start with the Energy and Utilities Board, and I think that's appropriate, to start there and let the process take its due course.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: will this government act as an intervenor if there is a public hearing at the National Energy Board in regard to this export electricity line?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, at this stage that's far too hypothetical as to what we might do in the future if some things might happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the minister: given that under the Hydro and Electric Energy Act before a transmission line is even contemplated to be constructed, it must receive a permit under section 14 of this act, can the minister tell the citizens whether or not a permit has been granted to the Alberta/Montana tie-line from the EUB under this act?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the specific details with respect to the permit. They have to go through all of the permitting and regulatory requirements. Transmission is a very important and key ingredient to ensuring that we have reliable power available to us as needed, but this will have to follow all the regulatory processes.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta teachers and school boards are sounding the warning that once again funding for education is inadequate to sustain teachable classrooms and quality education. In fact, the ATA said today that “it has become clear that Budget 2006 does not provide adequate funding . . . resulting in larger class sizes or running deficits – all of which are completely unacceptable in a province having successive multi-billion dollar surpluses.” My question is to the Premier. Given the financial wealth of this government, what excuse is there for program cuts and teacher and staff layoffs in Alberta schools?

2:30

Mr. Klein: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I guess I have a difficult time understanding where these particular complaints come from because we have increased funding to school boards and to education generally, K to 12, by $330 million. There are no cuts. There haven't been cuts since 1993-94. It's been more and more and more and more each and every year. So $330 million is a lot of money. That's just for operating, and that's in addition to all the dollars we've poured in for capital construction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Premier will not be surprised when teacher layoffs and bigger class sizes occur, because he's been warned.

I'd like to ask the Minister of Education: given that school boards and the ATA are sounding the alarm acknowledging a looming education deficit, when will the minister also acknowledge the problem and do something to prevent these layoffs and increases in class sizes?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be providing approximately $126 million in the forthcoming budget for the class size reduction initiative. With those monies we will be able to help school boards retain all 1,688 teaching positions that were funded in September of '04 and September of '05, and we hope to see another 100 to 200 brand new teachers over and above that added in this coming September school year.

Mr. Mason: That's great, Mr. Speaker, but will the minister promise here and now in this Assembly on this last day of the spring sitting that when children return to school in September, they won't be once again sitting on windowsills and sitting in overcrowded classrooms?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be very surprised if we had students in that situation. But if the hon. member is aware of some of those circumstances, he can certainly let the local school board know that, or he can let my office know that, and I can assure him that we will follow up with it. We have $5.3 billion with which to work. We portion out 98 or 99 per cent of that money to the school boards. They make the local decisions. For the most part things are going extremely well in kindergarten to grade 12, and we wish them great success in their budgeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Statement of Appreciation

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My comments today are to the Premier. On behalf of the constituents of Strathmore-Brooks I simply want to say thank you to the Premier for 14 years of great government. And from me personally: thank you for giving me the impetus to run for political office.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Farm Safety

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All congratulations to the Premier, but the business of Alberta must go on, and this is a serious question. Over two-thirds of Alberta farm deaths last year were aged over 60 or under 20. Many would say that Alberta has the worst farm safety record in Canada. Economically stretched farmers cannot afford expensive new insurance programs, but their taxes provide little in terms of government support for safety. The cost in death and injury is large to farmers, their families, our health care system, and our Alberta economy. My question is to the minister of agriculture. What will the minister be targeting? What will the minister be doing to try and reduce that death rate, and hopefully to zero this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, that is an excellent question because it's an excellent opportunity for us to talk about an issue that is very, very important in agriculture, and that is deaths on farms, not only deaths of farm workers or the owners of those farms but also the tragic occurrence of children who meet a tragic end on farms. There are a number of educational components that we have in the schools today. There are a number of educational components that we have at all of the farm fairs. There are a number of educational components that we have with the 1-800 line about chemical mixtures, about utilization of equipment. In fact, in this House, I believe it was a couple of weeks ago, we also had a question on this where we were talking about ensuring that equipment guards were in place and that we need to make sure that we have a communications program to producers that teaches them that it is a dangerous place. The problem is that it's also a place of residence. It's also a place of recreation. We need to be cognizant of that when we're talking about putting in rules and regulations. Our goal is to ensure that the producers in the province are educated about safety around equipment, chemicals, and their operations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The next question is to the minister of human resources. Just to diverge a little bit, I had a short chat with the minister as we came in this afternoon, and the minister informed me that this could very well be the last question to him in this Legislature.

The Speaker: Is that the question? There are no preambles, hon. member. Come on. Let's go. We've got lots of members here.

Mr. Backs: I'd just like to congratulate the minister.

When will the minister's department move to have our Alberta safety legislation cover agricultural businesses with more than three nonfamily employees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question because agriculture continues to be very important in Alberta and has been for a long period of time. It's part of our overall economic diversification plan. In fact, I believe agriculture creates more jobs than the oil industry itself, so it is very important. Unfortunately, agriculture continues to face many challenges due to the fact that we have to export most of our agricultural products. Therefore, when it comes to agriculture, agriculture cannot afford at this time, because of the status there, to have too many standards imposed on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has been a great role model for many First Nations people in our province.

The second supplementary to the Minister of Finance: given the need for sound finance but understanding the potential for savings in health care and other areas, can the minister find money somewhere in the Alberta treasury to provide occupational insurance coverage and better safety for all Alberta farmers and their farmhands for the next three years?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not about finding money. It's about the producers' desire. I know that if the producers, in their wisdom not ours, were to come forward in a majority view to the minister of agriculture, he would bring that forward to this table. He represents them extraordinarily well. But I must inform the hon. member, being a part of the agricultural community myself, that they are very independent thinkers, and they like to make their decisions and ask us to carry out policy they believe is in their best interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Elimination of the Provincial Debt

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fourteen years ago a brave and courageous leader, our Premier, embarked upon one of the toughest challenges, to eliminate the provincial debt and to bring our financial house to order. I'm sure that he received a lot of advice on how to spend taxpayers' dollars, and some may even have questioned how he arrived at those decisions. At this juncture as we evaluate how far we have come, I wish to direct my questions to the hon. Premier. Mr. Premier, how do you justify the fast-track elimination of debt when there were other priorities that could have used some of those needed dollars?

Mr. Klein: You know, you have to hearken back to '92-93. The hon. leader of the Liberal Party at that time was also concentrating on eliminating the debt and fast-tracking it. It was: who could do it better? Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental principles of economics is that you don't have unsupported debt and that you get rid of that unsupported debt as quickly as you possibly can. In the case that existed in 1993, we had $23 billion in unsupported debt that had accumulated through deficit financing; in other words, using the credit card to pay the light bills and buy the groceries. So we had to get rid of that, and our first act was to eliminate the deficit, then the net debt, then the gross debt. We achieved that 20 years ahead of schedule.

2:40

Mr. Shariff: On behalf of the people of Alberta who have benefited from your sound policies I wish to say that Alberta is a better place because of you, Ralph.

Confined Feeding Operations

Mr. Bonko: Confined feeding operations continue to concern rural Albertans. The ministers of Sustainable Resource Development and Agriculture, Food and Rural Development will claim that their policies and standards are excellent, but manure from sewage holding ponds has made water at Harnack Ranch near Airdrie undrinkable by people and livestock twice in the last three years. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given that flooding has caused manure to enter the surface water two times in the last three years, can the minister tell us whether regulations are too weak or if the NRCB is failing to enforce the regulations?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, when we have situations that are reported to the NRCB and to our enforcement people and our compliance people that are in place to operate under the AOPA legislation, those calls are taken seriously. We have compliance people that go out and check on the complaint. They try to offer suggestions. We have a process in place through AOPA, through the legislation, as well as through the NRCB to make sure that when there is a breach of the act, when there is a breach of any regulation, there is a process in place to make sure that that is looked after. The hon. member mentioned one specific instance, but I could cite many more specific instances across Alberta where we've had breaches, and our enforcement staff have gone in there and properly looked after the situation in view of the public interest. We will continue to work through that.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: given that there are 50 staff in the entire NRCB and no new staff in this year's budget, can the minister explain how he plans to enforce the regulations then?

Mr. Coutts: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker. We've just gone through a governance review with the NRCB. We have just put in place a very qualified, very knowledgeable individual who will be the chief operating officer that looks after the development of applications, the process that applications go through, the compliance and the enforcement as well. That particular individual will make sure that the proper staff is in place to look after the demands that are driven by a very hot economy and an industry that's thriving in Alberta.

Mr. Bonko: My last question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Will the minister review the one in 25 years flooding guideline in light of the increasing rates of flooding identified by the water researchers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure of the exact circumstance that the hon. member is talking about. But as the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has advised, if he has some particulars that he could send over to me, I'd be pleased to give him a written response to that in view of the circumstances in flooding we had last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Importance of Postsecondary Education

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to be able to rise and ask a question of what I think is the greatest Premier in the history of the province of Alberta today. Advanced education has been a top priority for this government. When our Premier did his television address last year, he did it in a brand new high school that, interestingly, was nestled in the heart of the Calgary-Shaw constituency. The name of that high school is Centennial high school after and in honour of the centennial year. In that televised address he was gathered with a group of grade 11 students. Now, in their minds he was such a great man that they were surprised that he was not taller. That was their first comment to me. He spent the day with them, and he was focusing on postsecondary education in that speech. One of the highlights of that was access to the future.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you should have a question.

Mrs. Ady: My questions are to the Premier. If those grade 11 students were in front of you today, what action would you tell them that government is taking today to ensure that they can pursue a postsecondary education?

Mr. Klein: Well, shortly after that taping, Mr. Speaker, at Centennial high school in Calgary-Shaw, we introduced, of course, in the spring session as Bill 1 the Access to the Future Act, which will allow for the creation of some 15,000 immediate new learning opportunities. In addition, 7,000 new apprenticeships were added to the system, bringing the total number of apprentices in Alberta to 47,000. Our overall objective under the Access to the Future Act is to create 60,000 spaces by the year 2020. This is all part of Alberta's efforts to give students the best access to postsecondary education in Canada.

The Speaker: I did recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but did the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford want to proceed? Proceed.

Constituency Association Offices

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After 35 years of Tory rule the line between partisan party politics and legitimate government business is becoming more and more fuzzy by the day. My questions are for the Premier. Is it this government's policy to allow government members to have their partisan constituency associations share addresses with their taxpayer-funded constituency offices?

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. To share what addresses? I really don't know. The hon. member is not quite clear.

The Speaker: The question should not be directed to the government. It has nothing to do with the government. If such a situation exists, it should be directed to the office of the Legislative Assembly, in this case the Speaker, but you can't do it in question period, so you'll have to do it later.

Do you have another question? Is there another question, sir?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Provincial Land-use Strategy

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's seemingly open prairies are rapidly becoming overcrowded. As oil development, intensive livestock operations, industrial development compete with residential expansion, Alberta's health, water supplies, and quality of life are being jeopardized. We're rapidly losing agricultural land, and rural communities and towns and cities are in conflict. Despite this, the province has presented no land-use management strategy to ensure orderly and sustainable development. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Will the minister acknowledge that the lack of a land-use strategy is creating friction, pitting, if you like, cities and towns against rural municipalities and that this is not a healthy situation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in 1995, when the Municipal Government Act was rewritten, it replaced what was in place at that time, regional planning commissions, with natural person powers in the hands of municipalities. It created an environment where municipalities for the very first time were able to negotiate win-win situations and allow for development of both urban and rural areas in a manner which served the interests of both.

Mr. Speaker, in the ensuing time – and the member is absolutely right – there have been some problems that have arisen. Those problems are precisely the target that is under discussion by the minister's council at this time. One of the working groups is dealing with relationship issues, and we expect to have a very thorough and full discussion on ways to deal with that in the ensuing few months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:50

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From what we're hearing, people are not seeing it as a win-win situation.

Given the strain placed on urban infrastructure, public transportation, water supplies, what is the minister doing now to promote smart growth for cities and to protect agricultural land in rural communities?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the answer to the first question, I'm working with municipalities to put together a new strategy for long-term planning. One of the things that's under discussion is whether or not the intermunicipal development plan, that is now optional under the act, should at some point in time be made mandatory. That's one of the issues.

With respect to infrastructure and that kind of thing there are opportunities where municipalities could work together, and in fact we encourage partnerships. We encourage intermunicipal partnerships and have a limited amount of funding within our ministry to assist those partnerships in their developmental stage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister would be aware that the longer this problem grows and festers, the worse it's going to get.

To follow up, then, my question to the minister is: when can we expect a comprehensive land-use strategy to specifically address constraining urban sprawl, protecting agricultural land, and sustainable industrial development?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the members of the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability to have their final recommendations in place so that the government can deal with them in the government planning process by this fall. That's not to say that all of the answers will be there, but that's to say that we should be able to begin a very meaningful discussion with municipalities and other stakeholders as we address this very difficult situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Achievements in Health Care

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my tenure in the Alberta Legislature certainly the biggest issue and probably the issue facing most Albertans and the one they care most deeply about is their health care. My mother is currently in continuing care. Both my parents are near 80. I have four children, and someday I hope to have grandchildren. We're a typical Alberta family with typical Alberta family concerns about their health care. Faced with the rapidly changing nature of health care delivery and health-related technology, sustainability and innovation are probably now more critical than ever. My question to the Premier: under his leadership what has the government of Alberta done to ensure that all Albertans continue to receive world-class care not just for today but, more importantly, for the future?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, indeed, we didn't address the question of long-term sustainability, but that will have to be dealt with down the road, believe me. But that's not to say that we haven't accomplished a lot relative to health care. The Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute will open very soon, and this institute will play a prominent role. It will be a centre of excellence for heart treatment and surgery. We have the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. That fund is now worth well in excess of a billion dollars, has attracted top researchers from around the world. We have instituted the electronic health record. We have instituted through the AMA the bone and joint surgery initiative. Plus, there is the centre of expertise for bone and joint surgery in Calgary. The Edmonton protocol was developed to transplant healthy islet cells into people with type 1 diabetes. We were the first province to launch a wait-list registry so that Albertans could view waiting lists for surgical and medical procedures. We eliminated health care premiums for senior citizens in this province. Just this session, of course, we passed the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. The Stollery children's hospital has become a global leader in pediatric care, as will the new Children's hospital in Calgary.

So the list goes on, Mr. Speaker. It's not as if we've been standing by idly. We've been making some tremendous innovations and improvements in the health care system.

Mr. Snelgrove: My second is to simply wish the Premier and his family many, many wonderful years of health and happiness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the same time that this government identifies wellness as a priority, they invest almost $34 million in tobacco-based companies through the heritage savings fund. Interestingly, Tory members have been presenting petitions throughout the spring session from Albertans urging the government to take action on teen smoking. It is clear that the priorities of Albertans and the priorities of this government are at odds. My first question is to the Premier. How does this government reconcile cancer prevention initiatives, like the cancer legacy fund, with continued investment in tobacco companies?

Mrs. McClellan: There is no tobacco investment allowed in that, Laurie, and you know it.

Mr. Klein: Well, I don't know. The hon. Minister of Finance is speaking to the hon. member, so I'll have her respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that the cancer legacy fund does not permit investment in tobacco companies. Let's make that very clear in this House.

On the issue of the heritage fund I was requested for this information by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and I provided it to him by tabling it in the House yesterday. To refresh your memory, it's about a $33 million investment in companies that are associated with or are tobacco companies. It's .25 per cent of 1 per cent of a $49 billion investment: $33 million.

Now, we talked about this and said that in some cases in investment, Mr. Speaker, there are conglomerates, investment structures so that it may not be a direct investment. This government does not interfere with investment. We charge an investment management group to provide the best return. However, I repeat: on the issue of the cancer legacy fund there was an amendment in this House that this government agreed to, and there is no investment in tobacco companies in that fund.

Ms Blakeman: Still $34 million invested.

To the minister of health: has the minister conducted any studies on whether the profit made from investing in tobacco companies outweighs the health costs associated with treating smoking-related illness?

Ms Evans: No, Mr. Speaker, but on the last weekend at the discussion with other ministers from across the country while we looked at pandemic preparedness, we had a conversation between the western ministers of health about what we could do to look at some common elements of a tobacco tax so that we could do whatever possible to discourage smoking. We looked at the tax per carton. We looked at the research from the University of California on effectiveness of increasing tobacco taxation. Although we didn't examine profitability on investment, we did look at other ways to look at deterrents for smoking, particularly targeted at youth and those that might be most vulnerable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the minister of health: given that Tory backbenchers and I have both been urging the government to introduce legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, will the minister join with other provinces and develop legislation to ban power walls?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful for a better understanding by this Legislature about power walls. I would just simply say this. We are making some progress. We are spending a considerable amount of time with the AADAC board, as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, that is working in concert with the advisory committee chaired by Mrs. Colleen Klein and Dr. Bob Westbury. Stay tuned for more recommendations that will target addictions and will target the broader scope of how we manage those that are most vulnerable that have been affected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta's Environment

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are truly fortunate to be living in a province with the most robust economy in North America, but at the same time we're fortunate to have a government and a Premier who value Alberta's natural environment. It's an environment that provides Albertans with fresh air to breathe, clean water to drink, sparkling rivers and lakes for fishing and other recreation. My question is to the Premier. Can he tell us how Alberta came to be in such an enviable state of affairs?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, it started many, many years ago, indeed when the hon. Speaker was Minister of Environment. I can recall that when I was honoured to have that portfolio, the recycling program, deposit for return: one of the only programs of its kind in North America. That was expanded to the tire recycling program, now to computers and television sets and other electronics. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act provides for some very strict enforcement measures against those who would pollute and violate our environment. More recently, of course, we've had the Water for Life strategy, Climate Change Central. The list goes on and on. So we have not been idle relative to issues facing the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Applewood Park Community Association

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we learned that the province's Crown debt collection was unable to collect a $20,000 grant from the Applewood Park Community Association. As a result the file was transferred to the Department of Justice for possible legal action. My question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Why did your department fail to collect funds from the Applewood Park Community Association?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, we looked at it. It looked like it was going to be possibly a court situation, so we referred it to Justice for them to do an analysis and get back to us with advice on which way to go.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next supplemental is to the Minister of Justice. If the department's cost-benefit analysis fails to warrant taking Applewood to court, what is the department's plan?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Agnihotri: My next supplemental is a repeat of yesterday's question. To the Minister of Government Services: why is access to information refusing to disclose the Department of Justice's 719 pages of records pertaining to Applewood Park Community Association?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I didn't make it clear yesterday. You know, Government Services is responsible for this legislation, but the Privacy Commissioner does not work with me every day on the 3,168 inquiries that they had last year. He works independently. He does not report that information to me directly. I'm sorry that I don't have the specifics that you'd like, but that's not how this legislation works. He works completely independent of the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Alberta's Energy Resources

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's energy picture couldn't be brighter, but there are critics who say that our resources and the wealth that we derive from our resources come about more as a result of luck than by design. My question is to the Premier. In the past 14 years under his leadership what has this government done to ensure Alberta's place as a global energy leader today and in the future?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that our province is blessed with natural resources, and indeed energy revenues have helped to pay down Alberta's $23 billion net debt.

Mr. Speaker, we are wise stewards of our natural resources through the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Our energy sector is attracting attention from all over the world now that synthetic crude has been recognized as real oil. We've been featured on 60 Minutes, 20/20, The West Wing, and the French, Australian, and Chinese television networks. We're deemed to be the safest, most secure and viable place to invest, and the world is interested indeed. Energy investment in the next couple of years alone is in the neighbourhood of $100 billion.

Mr. Speaker, it's where we are going tomorrow that concerns me the most because the oil and gas will run out. Therefore, we need to develop an integrated energy policy, which we are developing now, to look at how we generate electricity through clean burning coal to make sure that coal-bed methane is extracted safely, coal gasification, hydropower, wind power, biodiesel, biogasoline. That is the future: an integrated energy policy.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Premier for his answer. I wish to ask him: does he see a future, then, where Alberta is a leader not just in conventional energy but in alternative energy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's what I was talking about. That's really what tomorrow is all about. That is the next step in our energy policy. I would encourage all of the energy companies to join with institutions like the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, the Alberta Research Council, the Coal Research Centre, and all of the agencies involved in research to develop these integrated forms of energy to make sure that we remain the energy capital of Canada, certainly, of North America, and of the world.

Spring Session Statistics

The Speaker: Before calling on a number of hon. members to participate in Members' Statements, a bit of history today. Most of what we'll talk about today are statistics associated with the Second Session of the 26th Legislature; in essence, the session that began February 22, 2006, to the end of yesterday, Wednesday, May 17, 2006, except for the first item.

This session of the spring Legislature has sat for 42 days, including 28 evening sittings. That is the identical number to last year, 2005: 42 days, including 28 evening sittings. The number of minutes that you have sat to nearly 5:30 yesterday afternoon is 14,198 minutes. This compares to 13,394 minutes in the spring 2005 sitting. In terms of the number of hours that you've sat this year compared to last year, this year you sat 236 hours, 38 minutes. Last year you sat less time: 223 hours and 14 minutes.

Now, what is really significant – and you might want to know how we come up with these numbers. Well, we get up very, very early in the morning. The number of words spoken by members to adjournment yesterday afternoon was 1,827,493. That compares to last spring, which had 1,800,176 words. Now, we've had some longer speeches this spring, it seems, but we may also have had the shortest speech ever in the history of Alberta too, yesterday afternoon from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. We're checking that for verification.

In terms of Oral Question Period, for those days on which we had more than 14 sets of questions – that is, when the Speaker had the privilege of recognizing 14 or more members – this spring we had six occasions when there were 15 sets of questions asked and two occasions when there were 16 sets of questions asked. Now, compare it to last spring. Last spring hon. members spent less time asking their questions and less time answering their questions than they did this spring. Last year we had 14 occasions when there were 15 sets of questions, 10 occasions with 16 sets of questions, eight occasions with 17 sets of questions, and on one occasion we were able to get in 18 different members to participate in question period.

Government bills that received royal assent or third reading this year is 41, compared to 40 in 2005. Government bills left on the Order Paper this spring is two, compared to four in 2005. Private members' public bills that received royal assent is one in 2006, compared to two in 2005. Since 1993, when we started this policy associated with private members' public bills, there have been 40 such bills that have received royal assent.

This spring we had more tablings than we had last year. We had 633 in the spring session of 2006, compared to 516 in 2005. The total number of members' statements this session not including the ones later this afternoon is 231, and if we have six more today, that will be 237. Last year we had 168, but we changed the process and eliminated recognitions last year and then moved to the two-minute members' statements.

Hon. members, just to conclude the statement for today with respect to the historical side of it. Earlier this year we published one book, entitled 100 Years at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta: A Centennial Celebration. I've indicated to hon. members that we've been working for nearly four years on a four-volume set of books that weighs a tonne. There are nearly 2,200 pages associated with those four books. They will be published, and we'll make them available to the public in the fall of this year. They will be called the Legislative Assembly of Alberta Centennial Series. Title 1 is On Behalf of the Crown. Title 2 is The Mantle of Leadership. Title 3 is A Higher Duty. Title 4 is A Century of Democracy. This has been four years in the making.

In addition to that, three additional books are being worked on, and we will have them done, hopefully, by the end of this calendar year. Because of a number of petitions from members with respect to this, one will deal with the historical vignette series. Two volumes will be associated. Then I intend on taking all members' statements made last year and this year and having them published in a book. It's called the historical vignette series: the statements of members, 2005-2006. Hopefully, by the end of the calendar year, at the latest the spring of next year, we will have concluded this.

I wanted to bring you up to date in case somebody wants to know what I'll be doing this summer.

Contributions to Alberta's Youth by the Kleins

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely honoured and privileged to rise and make a statement on this very significant day to make special recognition of what our hon. Premier and Colleen Klein have done for Alberta's children and youth. Our Premier established the Ministry of Children's Services, which has led the way to the creation of similar ministries across this country, created the Great Kids awards program so that the contributions of our children and youth do not go unnoticed. Our Premier established both the Youth Secretariat and the Youth Advisory Panel to make sure that the voices of our children and youth are heard. The Premier does everything he can to give children and youth the attention and focus they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, he doesn't do it alone. With him, working just as hard every step of the way, is Colleen Klein. The Children's Forum, youth forums, Children's Cottage, the Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, and most recently the Crystal Meth Task Force: behind each and every one of these initiatives is the dedication to and the genuine love of Alberta's youth. Colleen has made incredible strides bringing communities together to engage, listen to the voices of our children and youth, and take action on many issues that they face.

What sets the Premier and Colleen apart is the personal touch they bring to everything they do. They truly take their work to heart. I can say with confidence that there are no others who do so much. The Premier and Colleen want more for Alberta's children and youth, and when these two put their minds together, their dreams and visions become realities. They are tireless champions for their cause. We the Alberta government and Alberta's children and youth are very fortunate to have the Premier and Colleen on our side. Their legacy is one that will never be forgotten.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Larry Fleming

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak about an extraordinary coach and mentor, Larry Fleming. Larry has recently been inducted into the Canadian amateur Boxing Hall of Fame. Through his years of involvement Larry has coached such names as Scotty "Bulldog" Olson, Jason "the Troll" Adam, Jalena Mrdjnovich, and Amanda "Bone Rack" Bonko. The minute you meet Larry, you can tell that his heart and dedication are making a difference for all kids. Larry teaches life lessons and the power of positive thinking. He reminds kids that they can do anything they want if they put their mind to it. Larry is always in the corner cheering them on and encouraging them regardless of their ability or experience.

Larry has recently been diagnosed with terminal cancer and may not have many rounds left, but his devotion and dedication to the sport, to Cougar Boxing and the kids it trains, is amazing. Larry continues to make a difference. We all strive to lead our lives and hope that we make a difference, but Larry has touched the lives and enriched the world around him one fighter at a time. "You can make a difference," Larry says. "You just have to try." Larry's money often is used to continue to operate the Cougar Boxing Club and continues to provide youth with an experience, giving them confidence and a unique experience by a unique individual. A community at large is grateful for your dedication and commitment. Thank you, Larry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

1988 Calgary Winter Olympics

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to reflect on a vision cited by our Premier which resonated with many of us nearly 20 years ago. I wish to share with you what then Mayor Ralph Klein told the world in his letter to the official report to the International Olympic Committee at the completion of the 1988 Winter Games.

They were the 15th Olympic Winter Games. They were the Calgary Games. But aside from the official titles, the 1988 Olympic Winter Games in Calgary will forever be remembered as “the people’s Games,” for it was the people of Calgary who gave so willingly of their time, and of their community, that made the Games a success.

Mayor Klein then shared what makes a success of an international sporting event such as the Olympics: the fair competition, the financial balance, the artistic and cultural celebrations, the technical and organizational precision. He reminded us: “Above all, they must be a success of, and by, and for the people who open their city to the world.” That, Mr. Speaker, was what really counted to this man, to our Premier.

I’d also like to share from this letter what Mayor Ralph Klein predicted that we would have today as a result of the 1988 Winter Olympics: “A legacy of spectacular winter sports facilities, roads and transportation systems, parks and pathways, and endowment funds for future Canadian athletes.” Nowhere more than in my own constituency of Banff-Cochrane, Mr. Speaker, is the truth of this vision more truly seen by the thousands who continue to use Kananaskis Country and enjoy the spectacular and challenging facilities of the Canmore Nordic Centre on the shoulder of the magnificent Rundle Ridge. The mayor of Calgary told the world in 1988 that the legacy of those games would live on “in this great city, in the foothills of Alberta, in a nation called Canada.”

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the legacy of this man, Premier Ralph Klein, will also live on in the great communities of Alberta, across our prairies, foothills, and mountains, and indeed throughout a nation called Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta Society for Pension Reform

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fair play is one of the values that Albertans hold dear. We believe in honesty, justice, and the value of deals that benefit all parties involved, but fair play is not always a matter of course when it comes to deals between Albertans and the government that serves them. That is why I rise today to recognize the hard work and dedication of the members of the Alberta Society for Pension Reform.

In April 2001 a small group of retired and working public servants sat down to address an issue that they felt was unfair. Essentially, they feel that they were promised a much better pension deal by the Alberta government than what they received. In true Alberta spirit they decided to tackle their issue head-on. Led by the founding president, Mr. Ken Smith, they’ve shown what a group of hard-working Albertans can do when they believe in a principle strongly enough to fight for it.

In just four short years they’ve managed to assemble a membership 8,000 strong. They have held annual general meetings to discuss the issue and earned significant donations from a concerned public to fight for this cause. Unfortunately, this group’s voice, like a growing number of others in Alberta, is being shut out by this Conservative government. Rather than having their issue dealt with properly by the province, the society has had to collect significant donations from its members in order to take the province to court. During the course of the last several months it has become more and more evident that seniors are being ignored, neglected, and marginalized in this province. Where is the Alberta advantage for men and women who built this province? This government doesn’t seem to know, so seniors have to go after it themselves.

I can attest from attending this society’s annual convention last fall that this group will not back down. The members’ commitment and determination truly represent what this province was built on, and I give them my full respect for fighting for what they believe in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Contributions to Alberta’s Youth by the Kleins

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there is no greater legacy one can leave than to make a lasting commitment to the children of our great province. From the beginning the hon. Premier has made the future of our children and youth, the next leaders of our province, the government’s highest priority, and it’s no surprise that his wife, Colleen Klein, has been a visionary and driving force behind many initiatives undertaken by this government to improve the lives of the youngest Albertans.

Alberta’s Promise is just one example of the legacy they will leave for our province’s children. Our Premier made Alberta the first jurisdiction in Canada to enshrine the initiative in legislation, in 2003 through Bill 1, the Premier’s Council on Alberta’s Promise Act. This innovative initiative has created opportunities for children and youth by encouraging the corporate sector, communities, not-for-profit organizations, and governments to increase resources for programs benefiting the youngest Albertans. They committed to making every Albertan aware of Alberta’s Promise and that the little red wagon is pulling for our children.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta’s Promise has been an overwhelming success. Since it was introduced in 2003, more than 400 corporations, agencies, and communities have been inspired by the Premier’s and Colleen Klein’s vision. Through Alberta’s Promise they have made a marked and meaningful difference in the lives of our children. Their work has helped ensure that children and youth have the skills and support they need to reach their potential and lead healthy, happy lives. Their tireless advocacy has fostered an incredible commitment to our children and to the future of our province.

The hon. Premier and Colleen Klein have truly helped make Alberta the best place to raise our children, a place I call paradise and where my five grandchildren and all children have the chance to grow up to be the best that they can be and to have the real opportunity to make their dreams come true.

Thank you, Premier. Thank you, Colleen. Thanks to you our hope for the future and for our children is bright and exciting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Democratic Reform

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is long overdue, but democratic reform is finally starting to get the attention it deserves. Alberta has struggled with declining participation rates in elections and a general dissatisfaction with politics among many Albertans. I’m deeply troubled by this trend because there are important decisions to be made that will affect the future of our communities, and all voices need to be included in wide-ranging debates on this issue.

The NDP has put forward numerous proposals for improving our democratic institutions. My colleague from Edmonton-Calder has been fighting for improvements to the Public Accounts Committee. My colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has proposed legislation to examine the potential for proportional representation in this province. We continue to call for a citizens' assembly, similar to the one that reported in B.C. in 2004. Such an assembly should carefully examine the many ways which our electoral system can be improved.

There is one piece of electoral reform that we should address immediately. Last year the Liberals and PCs accepted a combined $1.5 million in donations from corporations. This week the two parties joined together to defeat an NDP amendment that would have cancelled $370 million in a corporate tax cut. The NDP believes that cutting corporate taxes shifts the tax burden onto individuals and jeopardizes stable funding for core provincial programs. We live in a world where he who pays the piper calls the tune. Last year the Conservative piper received 73 per cent of its payments from big corporations while the Liberal piper got half of his pay from big money. It's no wonder that they were playing the same corporate-friendly tax tune.

Reforming rules around election donations is not a radical proposal. Manitoba and Quebec already prohibit donations from corporations and unions, as do the federal election rules. The only thing stopping such reforms in Alberta is a lack of political will.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to the next item of the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very hard working members of the society that I referred to in my member's statement a few minutes ago. Representing the executive of the Alberta Society for Pension Reform, we have with us today Mr. Ken Smith, a retired power engineer, who serves as the president of the society. We have with us Mr. Bill Robertson, who is the secretary, and he is also a retired power engineer. Also with us today is Mr. Barry Richardson, a retired teacher, who serves as the membership chairman of the society. I would ask all members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. I have a couple of introductions, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Rose and Edward Yanitski. Rose has colon cancer, and she and her husband have been fighting to get the cancer medication Oxaliplatin covered by Alberta Health. Although the drug is currently covered in jurisdictions such as British Columbia and Quebec, Albertans are left paying thousands to access this medication. The Yanitskis have been residents of Alberta all their lives. Edward is a retired mechanic, and Rose worked for CN Rail for 25 years. They currently reside in Beverly. We are honoured to have this courageous couple join us today. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure today to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly Michael Marlowe and Albert Opstad. Mr. Marlowe is a former president of the Alberta Retired Public Employees Society and the former vice-president of the Alberta Council on Aging. Mr. Opstad is the former president of Seniors United Now. Both are active advocates for seniors' issues in Alberta. Mr. Marlowe and Mr. Opstad are seated in the public gallery. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a young lady who is serving as an apprentice to the executive assistant to the Government House Leader, David Gillies. Michelle Zolner is a constituent of Edmonton-Whitemud, a very strong and active member of our political community down there, and has been learning well at the hands of the dome gnome, as he's affectionately called. I'd like Michelle to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's final report, which contains its recommendations regarding the Conflicts of Interest Act. This completes the committee's mandate. Copies are also being circulated to all members.

I want to take this opportunity to thank members of the committee from all three parties for their co-operation in completing the committee's work over the past year.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: These are petitions now. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, and then Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from a number of concerned Edmontonians calling on the government to "prohibit two-tier medicare."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am presenting a petition signed by 68 concerned Albertans from throughout the province but mostly from St. Albert petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to take measures that will require school boards and schools to eliminate all fees for instructional supplies and materials and general school services, including textbooks, musical instruments, physical education programs, locker rentals, lunch hour supervision and required field trips, and to ensure that schools are not deprived of the resources necessary to offer these programs and services without additional charges to parents or guardians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate tablings on the same subject. They urge the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to oppose any action that would contravene the Canada Health Act, basically to oppose a two-tier health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a petition with the names of 44 people from the Edmonton area asking that the government "amend the Gaming and Liquor Act to provide for harsher penalties where liquor licensees allow activities that may be injurious to the health or safety of people," urge the government to "implement policies that will enhance the safety of staff and patrons at licensed premises," and urge the government and the city of Edmonton to "improve the enforcement of any regulations or by-laws governing occupancy limits in licensed premises."

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that should the House be sitting on Monday, May 29, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 28, 30, 31, and 32.

I'm also giving notice that should the House be sitting on Monday, May 29, I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 27 through 35.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Would that be the list of them?

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Bill 215
Labour Relations Code (First Collective Agreement)
Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 215, Labour Relations Code (First Collective Agreement) Amendment Act, 2006.

The purpose of Bill 215 is to provide for first contract collective agreements to avoid labour relations situations such as arose in the Lakeside Packers UFCW strike of last year. This bill represents an idea supported by prominent members on both sides of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 215 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to have three tablings. The first is a letter from the Hon. Jean Charest, Premier of the province of Quebec, thanking Sustainable Resource Development, under the mutual aid and resource sharing agreement, for our assistance in the 1,250 forest fires and the 400,000 hectares of forests that were destroyed last year during the summer.

The next one I have is from the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association to our department thanking us for the leadership shown in standardizing and improving practices in Alberta's zoos.

The last one I have is the appropriate number of copies of the annual report 2005 of the Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table Breakfast for Learning, an assessment of provincial/territorial government support for school food programs as of May 2006.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table 1,117 health care petitions that did not pass parliamentary approval to recognize every effort of the individuals that took action to try and prevent this Legislature from passing anything that would expand private, for-profit health care in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters from Michael Marlowe. Mr. Marlowe is with Seniors United Now and wants to ask the Premier why he "failed to keep his promise" made in 1993 to the effect that universal seniors' support programs reduced or eliminated at that time would be returned to seniors after the province was out of debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is actually a letter from Edmonton-McClung constituents Donna and Randy Kormos. They're basically talking about the arbitrary school boundaries issue, and they highlight some of the unfairness when only one lottery draw is conducted and the practice of a waiting list or a backup list has been stopped. They also talk about how people register invalid addresses for their kids to be able to make that draw.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is actually a copy of a mock invoice by the Windsor Park Fundraising Society from Windsor Park school issued to the attention of the Minister of Education in the amount of $51,651 for items they fund raised for, including classroom computers and computer desks, library computers, music room computers, physical education equipment, and volunteer services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today, the first being a letter from a constituent, Terry Neraasen, writing about Bill 20, the FOIP legislation. He expresses that he would like to see "openness and transparency in government," and he's concerned that this particular piece of legislation that was "pushed through is completely unacceptable."

I also have some more photographs, Mr. Speaker, of government backbench MLAs presenting cheques. In this case they're all community facility enhancement program grants, CFEP grants. There are three separate ones, each with the name or signature of the MLA written on the signatory line as if to express that the money was actually coming from the MLA.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings here from John and Lori Harnack, who are concerned about protecting springs, streams, waterways, and groundwater around confined feedlot operations. The letters were to the Minister of Environment, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, their MLA, and the MD of Rocky View.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of my letter with some attachments to the Ethics Commissioner regarding Applewood Park Community Association and the Member for Calgary-Montrose.

head: 3:40 Projected Government Business

Ms Blakeman: Well, I invite the Government House Leader to rise and share with us any projected government business we might expect for next week.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, and thank you to the hon. Opposition House Leader for that especially good question. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond in this way: should the House be sitting, we would proceed with the only two remaining pieces of government business that I see. That would be Bill 39 and Bill 41.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, I would just like to acknowledge the presence of and acknowledge the departure of a number of our pages who are retiring as of today. There are actually a number of them. I'm going to read their names into the record, and then I'm going to read to you a very delightful letter that they sent to me as a message to all of us, to all of you. So to Janiesh Bali, Elaine Hoekstra, Daylan Hoffman, Desirée MacNeil, Chelsea Mitchell, Mikkel Paulson, Jenelle Pederson, and Stacy Schell, this is their last day. They're retiring. They will be retirees as of tomorrow. [applause]

You should all know, hon. members, and they should know as well, that in the fall of this year, in the month of November, I will be hosting a special dinner for all former pages in the history of the province of Alberta. So there's a great big test right now to try and locate these people. Somebody who may have been a page in 1921 may be just a little long, but, yes, we're advertising. Here's their letter, dated May 16, 2006.

Mr. Speaker,

As the days of this session come to a close, we have had a chance to reflect on the past couple years of paging. It goes without saying that an interest in politics, the parliamentary system of democracy and a desire to learn more drove us to seek out this job, but we leave with far more. We leave not only with a superb understanding of politics, parliamentary procedure, pomp and ceremony, but of the lesser known side of politicians and those who support them, the human side.

The ability to see through our own impressionable eyes, the parliamentary process at work, has changed our perspective dramatically. Being in this environment has expanded and deepened our awareness and appreciation for politicians, their hard work, and the true passion that drives them all.

We have worked with members and their staff, our fellow

Legislative Assembly Office employees and members of the public from all walks of life. Every person we encountered in our time here has taught us something and has enriched every moment of being a Page. We would especially like to thank the Legislative Assembly Security Staff, including Nick Kutash, Bob Baker, and Bennett Walker, who will be retiring this year.

The enriching experiences and the knowledge we have gained over the past years will forever be entrenched in our memories and will surely shape our lives and dreams for years to come. This has been memorable, inspirational, and a true privilege! For this, we thank you!

It was signed by the names that I mentioned. That's wonderful.

I'd now like to call on the Deputy Speaker to make a recognition for our pages.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Chair of Committees and myself, it has been a pleasure getting to know these wonderful young people. I recently was part of the group that judged the pages' speech competition, and although there were some absentees that haven't yet made their speeches, I can tell you that the competition was extremely close and very difficult to judge. I can say that if any of these young people decides to take us on in the next election, we will have our work cut out for us.

On behalf of all the members – page Janiesh Bali is here – I'd like to give each retiring page a gift with our best wishes to each and every one. We're honoured to have had you all work for us and with us this last year, and we'd like to thank you very much. [applause]

head:

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This spring session will truly be recorded as one of the most historic and most memorable sittings of the Alberta Legislature, and it's so fitting, in this 100th year of democracy, to be saying that. I say that not only because of the more than 40 bills debated and passed and the hundreds of questions asked and answered and so on but also because it may well be the last sitting for our hon. Premier, as we've heard. Therefore, on behalf of our deputy House leaders from Calgary-Glenmore and from Medicine Hat, and I am sure I would echo the sentiments of the opposition House leaders from the Liberals and from the NDs, we want to thank all the members for their co-operation during this particular session.

On a personal note I, too, would like to extend the very best to our Premier and his lovely wife, Colleen, for a very successful retirement.

On that note, and in thanking all the members yet again for the inspiring debates that occurred, I would now move that pursuant to Government Motion 14, agreed to on March 20, 2006, the House now stand adjourned.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House is adjourned. The Government House Leader can't do that, by the way. The Speaker can do that. The House Leader can't.

So the House is adjourned pursuant to this particular motion. Have a very safe – underline safe – summer, and until we meet again, all the best.

[Pursuant to Government Motion 14 the Assembly adjourned at 3:47 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, August 24, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/08/24
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back. I would ask all hon. members to remain standing after prayers so that we may pay tribute to our former colleagues who have passed away since we were last in this Assembly.

As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, we ask for divine guidance so that our words and deeds may bring to all people of this great province hope, prosperity, and a vision for the future. Amen.

Mr. Roy Alexander Farran
January 2, 1921, to June 2, 2006

The Speaker: On Friday, June 2, 2006, Roy Alexander Farran passed away. Mr. Farran was first elected on August 30, 1971, and served until March 22, 1979. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Calgary North Hill for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Mr. Farran served in cabinet as minister of telephones and utilities and Solicitor General. Mr. Farran served on the standing committees on Public Accounts; Private Bills; Standing Orders and Printing; Law, Law Amendments and Regulations; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education.

Mr. Randolph Hugh McKinnon
July 22, 1917, to June 10, 2006

The Speaker: On Saturday, June 10, 2006, Randolph Hugh McKinnon passed away. Mr. McKinnon was first elected on June 18, 1959, and served until May 23, 1967. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Strathcona West for the Social Credit Party. During his term of office Mr. McKinnon served in cabinet as the Minister of Education. Mr. McKinnon also served on the select standing committees on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; Private Bills; Standing Orders and Printing; Public Accounts; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education; and Railways, Telephones and Irrigation.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families who shared the burdens of public office. Family members of Mr. Farran and Mr. McKinnon are with us today in the Speaker's gallery. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask all members to remember hon. members Roy Farran and Randy McKinnon as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Mr. Lorieau, of course, comes off a very, very successful spring nine weeks, and I would ask all to participate today so that in the event that Mr. Lorieau does what he did this spring the place will not become stone deaf.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.

God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's an honour for me today to rise to introduce to you guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These guests are family members of our former colleagues, and I would ask them to rise as I introduce them. The family of Mr. Randolph McKinnon, former MLA for the constituency of Strathcona West, represented by Randolph's brothers Bert McKinnon and his spouse, Janice, and Dick McKinnon and his spouse, Lorraine McKinnon. The family of Mr. Roy Farran, former MLA for the constituency of Calgary North Hill, is represented by his daughter Sally Gregg and son-in-law Tim Gregg. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two distinguished members of Alberta's postsecondary education community who are seated in your gallery. Dr. Ron Bond is the new chair of the Campus Alberta Quality Council, appointed in July. During his 33-year career at the University of Calgary Ron was a professor of English, head of the department of English, dean of the Faculty of Humanities, and most recently provost and vice-president academic.

In addition to his work at the University of Calgary Ron has a long track record of serving the national postsecondary community. His positions include terms as vice-president of the Social Sciences and Humanities Federation of Canada, president of the Canadian Association of Chairs of English, and president of the Canadian Conference of Deans of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences. He is a strong advocate for quality education programs, making him an ideal choice to lead Alberta's agency for the quality assurance of degrees. His impeccable academic credentials and reputation precede him in this very important work, which bodes well for the quality of postsecondary programs in this province.

Ron is joined today by Marilyn Patton. Marilyn is the director of the secretariat for the Campus Alberta Quality Council. She is a respected member of the advanced education team and I'm told does a terrific job.

I'd ask Ron and Marilyn to please stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour today to introduce two groups, one group from Strathcona county and their proud partners in an FCM and CIDA program from Vung Tau City, Vietnam. They are linked in a municipal partnership program. They hope to work in co-operation. This delegation here will stay for at least two weeks. They will be with the Strathcona officials and focus on areas of co-operation and look at new steps that they can take to advance that co-operation. The officials from Vung Tau are Mr. Long, who is vice-chairman of the People's Committee of Vung Tau City; Mr. Soan, vice-chief, administrative office of the People's Committee of Vung Tau City; Mr. Dieu, head of population, Families and Children's Department of Vung Tau City; and Mr. Cong, deputy principal, Vietnam National Administration of Tourism, who accompanies the delegation as an interpreter. The Strathcona county officials with us today: Kevin Glebe, who is the manager of corporate planning and intergovernmental affairs; Russ Pawlyk, manager of recreation, parks, and culture; Kristen Schindel, the strategic initiative assistant; and Alf Cunningham, the community liaison officer. I would ask them now to please rise and for the Assembly to give this special group a warm welcome.

My second group, Mr. Speaker, are representatives of a company that many of the hon. members of the Assembly are familiar with, Janssen-Ortho Inc. We are privileged today to receive Mark Fleming, who is the national director of government and community relations for Janssen-Ortho. He is based in Toronto. He has held a number of senior leadership positions in sales, marketing, and health economics. He is accompanied by a person who is very familiar to this Assembly, Mr. Michael Lohner, who is the regional director for western Canada – we congratulate him on his position – and a well-known favourite Brent Korte, who is the regional manager for Alberta. I'd ask those guests to please stand and for us to honour their presence here with a round of applause.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two of my dear friends who are here in the House today, Rick and Rose Lundy. Rick and Rose live in Calgary and have recently joined a patient experience committee to help improve patient care in the Calgary health region because of a recent personal tragedy that took place at the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary. Rick and Rose are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the St. Albert Lilydale White Sox slo-pitch ball team, who are joining us here today along with representatives from Lilydale. The White Sox competed in the over-60 age division of the 2006 national slo-pitch championship which was held August 3 to 7 in Moncton, New Brunswick. In a thrilling final the White Sox captured the championship by defeating a team from Brantford, Ontario, by a score of 4 to 3. In total the White Sox have now won six national championships and are on their way to the Worlds next year. The members of this team are truly positive role models for the community and have demonstrated what can be accomplished with a positive attitude, determination, and teamwork. The White Sox success would not have been possible without the generous support of Lilydale. I would like to thank this company for its strong community spirit and many contributions to worthwhile causes. They are seated in the public gallery. Once again, congratulations. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Mandrusiak family, who are celebrating the 100th anniversary of the arrival of their ancestors Ivan and Wasylyna Mandrusiak and their two sons, Dmytro and Mike. Ivan and Wasylyna emigrated from Galicia in 1906. They settled on a homestead near Musidora, where they raised 10 children: Dmytro, Mike, Bill, Annie, Nick, Pearl, Alex, Steven, Helen, and Walter. Bill and Pearl are in attendance today. I'd also like to introduce Rose Herard, the spouse of the hon. Minister of Advanced Education, who is also a descendant of the Mandrusiak family. The members have travelled here from various locations in Alberta to be with us in the Legislature today. They celebrated their 100th anniversary on Saturday with 180 descendants, and it was reportedly a fantastic event. Located in the members' gallery and the public gallery, if I could ask the Mandrusiak family to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a couple of representatives of the Williams corporation out of Tulsa, Oklahoma. The Williams corporation is currently here, like many businesses throughout the world, continuing to look at Alberta for further expansion. With us today we have Lina Taylor, who is the manager of government affairs for Williams and is from Tulsa, Oklahoma. With her is Ken Faulkner, who will be known to Members of this Legislative Assembly and who is with Global Public Affairs in Calgary. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the members of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jonathan Sharek. Jonathan is a musician, he's a music educator, he's a teacher, he's active with the ATA advocacy, and most importantly to me, he is a constituent. I would ask Jonathan to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Joe Fallwell and Tim Martin. Joe is 13 years old and is entering grade 8 at Wilma Hansen junior high in Calgary, and Tim is 15 years old, entering grade 10 at Father Lacombe high school also in Calgary. These two bright and intelligent individuals, surprisingly, are the grandchildren of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and are seated in the public gallery. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It indeed gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Maureen Hindman and Susan Evans. Maureen and Susan are constituents of mine and are here to watch the proceedings of the Legislature. Maureen has been an active volunteer with the Highlands United Church and is presently active with the Stollery children's hospital. Susan Evans has been working with ATCO Gas for the past 26 years and has two children and two grandchildren, with another grandchild on its way. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Today I have the honour of introducing to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to members of this Assembly two very special and important people who have been an inspiration to me throughout my life. Both are registered nurses, and both are from St. Catharines, Ontario.

First, I would like to introduce my sister, Nicola Kalagian-Sider, who has been a very active community volunteer, a Sunday school teacher, a major fundraiser for her church, the United Way, the March of Dimes, and the Kidney Foundation. Nicki has also been a board member for Canadian Mental Health for eight years. Nicki suffered a stroke in the year 2000 and is now a motivational speaker for stroke survivor groups.

Donna Mallette has also been a very active volunteer in her community as a Sunday school teacher and fundraiser for the March of Dimes, the Kidney Foundation, and the Kinsmen fundraiser for the Special Olympics. Donna is a degree RN in Ontario, working for the past six years as a clinical research co-ordinator, specializing in cardiology, diabetes, and stroke prevention and studies. She was also my campaign manager for the nomination.

They are both seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that Nicki give us a wave and Donna stand to receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Brian Rozmahel and Len Legault. Brian is an active member in his community of Viking and helped to found a student organization called Augustana Against AIDS. Brian also organized a charity hockey game in Viking to raise funds for the Stephen Lewis Foundation. Len Legault is a community activist in Chauvin and has run for the New Democrats in Battle River-Wainwright. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure whether my guests have arrived yet, but with your permission I would like to proceed with the introduction. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my son Chris Miller, who, along with a number of his friends, is celebrating his 19th birthday today. If they're here, I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to have with us today my son Taylor Abbott visiting from Drayton Valley. He's in the public gallery. He's here this week playing with the NAIT Oaks conditioning camp for hockey, hoping to make a triple-A team this year. I'll ask Taylor to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House. Also, sitting with him is my Leg. assistant, Theresa Lightfoot, and I'd ask her to stand as well. If you could all welcome them, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a second honour today and the pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly employees from Advanced Education, strategic corporate services division, human resources. They're doing their public service orientation here today, and they are Lisa Urwin, Maegen Beattie, Salha Moloo, Kate Annis, and Connie Scott. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the Leader of the Official Opposition, just let me note again that I sent a note to all hon. members a couple of days ago that basically indicated that as a result of changes in one caucus membership, the rotation of the question period now will revert to where we were when the spring session began.

First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Services

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An unexpected pleasure to be back for all of us, I'm sure.

While this government preoccupies itself with its own leadership issues, Alberta's health regions are facing a crisis. This summer the hospital in Grande Prairie, for example, was forced to repeatedly fly patients to Edmonton for emergency surgery, while intensive care beds, operating rooms, and emergency rooms in at least five health regions had to shut down due to acute staff shortages. The people of this province are being seriously and sometimes catastrophically affected. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the crisis at the Grande Prairie hospital has been boiling for years, why has this government completely failed to sort it out?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there have been many things done throughout Alberta to address the needs of the health regions. Earlier this summer I visited with the doctors in the health region and had an extensive period to meet with the board. I think it boils down to a couple of things. In North America there is a phenomenon of a lack of a qualified workforce to address the needs of a population that is booming, particularly in Alberta, with some 92,000 people here over and above what we had previously. The other thing, Mr. Speaker: we have had such an influx of people who, as our Premier often references, come without their schools, their hospitals, their families to support them. It adds an extra burden and strain to the region.

So I would contend that, for the most part, there have been excessively effective measures in managing the health of Albertans. In some cases, yes, we've had some strains.

Dr. Taft: Pure excuses, Mr. Speaker. Pure excuses.

Again to the same minister: given that the Grande Prairie region is now without a fully functioning hospital so often, including most of this month, what contingency plans are in place for something like a major bus crash or a major industrial accident?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member in the preamble for his first question noted, the Capital region predominantly has taken off some of the burden by airlifting patients here. Other contingency and disaster plans exist in every region for that hoped never-to-occur tragedy. Disaster planning is part of what every hospital region does in order to get its circumstances in order, and I can confirm that that's happening because every single region is prepared with its own particular plan for the pandemic. It would not be unlike a plan for any disaster such as the bus accident or something that would be catastrophic that has been cited by the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Advanced Education: given that Alberta needs more doctors, more nurses, more physios, OTs, lab techs, more health professionals of every kind so desperately, why are institutions under this minister's jurisdiction turning away fully qualified applicants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very interesting to look at the numbers that have been published recently with respect to the turnaways in postsecondary. As I recall reading, 13,000 qualified entrants into postsecondary have been turned away, but when you really look at the numbers, you find out that one-third of those were not in fact qualified and therefore were rejected because of their lack of credentials and marks and so on. One-third of those were from outside of Alberta, and another third had applied to a number of different postsecondary institutions and were accepted by some and rejected by others. So it's impossible to tell. You're just a bit early to cry wolf with respect to this. It's too early to tell exactly how many students have actually been rejected.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Low-income Albertans

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the National Council of Welfare released a provincial comparison of welfare incomes, and the results were absolutely scathing for this government. The report ranks Alberta as the worst province in Canada for the level of support provided to low-income residents, particularly single parents with little kids. This is a dismal portrait of how this Tory government treats low-income people, particularly little children. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that Alberta ranks last in the entire country in welfare income for single parents with children, can the minister tell us how these people are supposed to enjoy the Alberta advantage receiving only $12,000 a year? I'd like to see the minister survive on that.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I just received the report, actually, about an hour ago, and basically from what I understand, the report mainly concentrates on the income support rates rather than results. Here in Alberta we try to do the results because – and this is very, very important for everyone here – when you go back to '92-93, the welfare caseload was 97,000 cases, with 180,000 individuals on welfare, with 5,400 social workers working out there, and 80 per cent of the people on welfare were single people or couples without children that had no business being on welfare. When we changed the system, that 80 per cent has gone now into the workforce. Today's welfare caseload is down to 25,000, and only 13,000 of those are going through some challenge. The other 12,000 are people that are able to work and will get back into the workforce because there are a lot of jobs out there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister can't explain away the treatment of little children here.

Again to the same minister: will the minister admit, given the clear evidence in this report, that the Alberta Works program doesn't work?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, according to the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, a welfare caseload over 200,000 is probably the thing they'd want to do. On this side of the House, we provide top-notch services. In fact, going back to the day of the welfare reforms – this is so important to the public out there and to the opposition – when I was minister of family and social services back in '92-93, the four departments that are here today were under one ministry: children's services, persons with developmental disabilities, aboriginal affairs, and of course family and social services. Part of the reforms were to have better services for those people in need. Today there are four ministries with big budgets that look after all those high-needs areas. Those are results that Albertans want.

2:00

Dr. Taft: It's disgraceful, Mr. Speaker.

My question is to the Premier. What explanation can the Premier give to the thousands of parents and especially to their children, Mr. Speaker, struggling to survive in the richest province in Canada for the treatment this government provides to them, forcing them into the lowest income levels of any welfare program in Canada? This happened on his watch. How does he explain it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition I wasn't looking forward to being back here, and I'm even looking forward less after that question, but I will attempt to answer it.

The hon. minister pointed out – and you have to understand historically what happened. Every week the minister of social services was coming in with requests for special warrants to accommodate welfare recipients. We changed the tone, and we said to the minister, who was the same minister that we have right now, that the emphasis should be on finding work for the employable to instill within those people a sense of dignity and a sense of hope, and he did that. But he also said: for those who are employable and don't want to work, here's a bus ticket, and, you know, you can find welfare someplace else, but for those who really want to work and are employable, we will assist you in every way, shape, or form. In other words, rather than a handout, we gave a hand up, and that is the philosophy of this government.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's inability to plan for the future, manage our resources, and govern the health system has resulted in what physicians throughout the province consider a crisis. Five health regions experienced unexpected closures this summer, impacting patient safety and quality of care, including Rose and Rick Lundy's tragic experience in a Calgary emergency room. My questions today are to the minister of health. Given that physicians have always taken holidays during the summer and we haven't had the same problems with closures in the past, why has this government failed to anticipate and cope this year?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would contend that this government has coped very well with the emergencies and other things throughout Alberta this year. We have had a very solid track record throughout the province. To generalize based on a few particular circumstances would be an error.

Now, I must say that I felt it was tragic and very regrettable that the Lundys experienced what they did, and I mention that because the hon. member has referenced them. Let's just talk about what happens when something goes wrong in an emergency situation or in any other situation. The Calgary health region has undertaken not only to review that but to meet with the Lundys and discuss the issue and look at the issues that surrounded triage and all the other kinds of circumstances. They have finally this week announced the opportunity not only for Mr. Lundy to serve on the patient experience committee but for the Health Quality Council of Alberta to do a thorough assessment as an independent body of the emergencies and to see whether or not there is a crisis.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would contend that everything that we've done, including absorbing 1,200 more patients in the emergency departments in Calgary, has been on the track of supporting patient health and patient safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that physicians from throughout Alberta but particularly Grande Prairie and Capital have lobbied the minister specifically with their arguments that the system is on the verge of collapse, why has the minister failed to take action? [interjections]

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the echo and din of all that let me just say that we have taken action, and we are working with the staff in those areas. We are working not only on the plans that they have provided us but looking at complementary services in other regions to provide assistance. In the north the Capital region has involved particular staff members not only to liaise with Northern Lights but with the Peace Country. We have provided locum programs. We have increased the dollars, doubled in this year's budget, for primary care. We have increased the dollars for the ARPs to support the physicians. I should highlight that if you look at the number of doctors and nurses and other health care professionals that we have added this year, it's considerably more than many of the other jurisdictions. We're funding at the highest rate per capita in Canada, and I contend, despite the cries of anguish on the other side, that we have the best health care system in Canada.

Ms Blakeman: Don't diminish Albertans' experience.

Back to the same minister: why would the minister spend time visiting other countries to learn more about their private health systems when Albertans were experiencing closures in surgical, ICU, renal, and mental health units here in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's not one shred of evidence that I went exploring private care systems. Prove it, and then we'll talk about it.

But let's talk about what we've been doing here. We have been taking every effort with our health business plan, with our policy framework, with Getting on with Better Health Care, to look at practical ways to improve the system. To the largest extent we have been successful.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's long history of guesstimate budgeting has finally come back to bite them, forcing them out of their country clubs and fishing lodges. At the end of the spring sitting the members across were watching the clock like grade schoolers before summer vacation, completely neglecting to adequately budget for things like education, health care, and infrastructure. So here we are in summer session, doing remedial lessons on budgeting. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. To the hon. minister: despite the fact that parents, school boards, the Alberta Teachers' Association, and the Alberta NDP repeatedly raised the alarm about crumbling schools, school board deficits, and growing class sizes during the spring budget debate when the Education estimates were being discussed, how is it that the government still failed to remember to adequately budget for Alberta's 600,000 grade school students?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, the hon. member might be interested to know that there was a hailstorm at my country club last night, and that's where I've been enjoying the country clubs.

There is going to be an opportunity over the next several days to debate the merits of all of the expenditures that have been brought forward before this House. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think that Albertans appreciate the fact that when there is necessary spending coming forward, we attend to it in a timely fashion. We are able to do that thanks to the prudent and conservative budgeting process that we use. Most governments in Canada would really appreciate being able to deal with some of those issues.

On the particular issue of the timeliness on the education funding, I think it would be appropriate to have the Minister of Education, who has been dealing with this issue, as he explained over and over again in the House, with all of the school boards that came up with this plan.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Minister of Finance: did the minister know that school board budgets were inadequate when she brought forward her spring budget, and if she didn't know, why wasn't she listening to us? Because we told her exactly that.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. leader of the third party researched a little bit, he would know that we don't even get that information from the school boards before the end of June. So, obviously, had I known, more importantly had the minister known, it would have been attended to in the budget that was presented in this House much earlier in the year.

Mr. Speaker, again I would like the Minister of Education just to very quickly explain to the hon. member how it works.

2:10

The Speaker: Sorry. The hon. leader, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister must have a hearing problem because we all heard the school boards.

Why didn't the minister acknowledge that there was a severe shortage in the Education budget at the time, and will she table all of the correspondence she received from school boards, teachers, and parents before the development of her budget to show that she didn't know about it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wish to undertake that question on behalf of the Minister of Finance because I think what has to be clarified here is exactly how much money is already going into this system, the best education system in Canada. That's undisputed. We also have the highest funded education system, the highest paid teachers.

Now, we want to even go further and make it the best education system in the world, and that's what we're planning to do. In order to help get that done, we're going to be spending close to $5.6 billion this year, which comes out to about $27.9 million each and every school day. Twenty-seven point nine million dollars each and every school day is what we're spending on the education system. We're working with the school boards, we're working with the superintendents, we're working with parent home and school councils, and we're working as hard as we can on behalf of the future of this province, our students, and we are getting the results we seek.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports indicated that the mountain pine beetle has spread as far north as Fairview and as far east as Fox Creek. Over the past few years we've seen the mountain pine beetle spread across British Columbia and devastate their forests. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is your department doing to address the spread of this destructive pest, and especially what are they doing to help our forest industry withstand the impact of this rapidly developing situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. We do have 6 and a half million hectares of mature pine forest that are at risk because of the mountain pine beetle. We have been extremely proactive in our efforts to get rid of the mountain pine beetle since it was first detected in 2002. We survey our forests, and we will continue to survey our forests and absolutely burn each and every single solitary tree that we know the mountain pine beetle has infested.

A couple of weeks ago, it is sad to say, with strong prevailing westerly winds the mountain pine beetle came over into the Peace Country. No one could have predicted that, Mr. Speaker. However, we are being very proactive in dealing with that as well. Our strategy has not changed. We will continue to survey, cut, and burn. We will make sure that our forest industry is engaged in that as well because what we're doing is looking at resequencing harvest plans so that we can harvest the most vulnerable trees possible. We're receiving plans as we speak to make sure that we deal with them promptly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What is being done to determine the extent of these new infestations?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, it's going to require all Albertans to help us with this. Our forest health officers will conduct examinations based on reports that we receive from staff in the field as well as industry players and the public at large to spot infestations of trees.

We're looking to make sure that we plan to retain and train our seasonal firefighters so that they can help us with these surveys and do the cutting and burning that is required.

We're also asking all users of the forest, Mr. Speaker, and particularly our oil and gas industry, recreationalists, and survey companies to make sure that if they find trees, they will identify them for us. All Albertans need to take part in identifying these trees, particularly where they show signs of sawdust around the base or if we have a crystallized honey that is on the surface. Anyone who spots trees with those signs is asked to mark that location and call us at 1-877-927-BUGS.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Will the government's comprehensive strategy put an end to the mountain pine beetle in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, scientists have told us that we're doing absolutely the right thing. As well, British Columbia, from their experience, has told us to be very proactive, and that's what this government is doing. By hitting the beetles hard, we think that we can try to prevent them from spreading any further. But the pine beetle is a natural phenomenon, and basically the best thing to get rid of them is about minus 40 degree weather. Nature is a formidable force, and under the right conditions the pine beetle infestation could travel across Canada into the boreal forest if we don't get that cold weather. There are 6 million hectares of pine forests in Alberta. Those 6 million hectares are roughly the size of New Brunswick, and to put it in perspective, the tremendous social and environmental and economic loss that would happen to this province is one reason why we cannot give up the fight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the year 2001 only 11 per cent of the school boards posted a deficit. In the year 2004-05 this figure skyrocketed to 43.5 per cent. This is an increase of 300 per cent – 300 per cent – and clearly indicates the failure of this government to adequately fund the education system at a time of great prosperity. Even with the announced increase in spending it's a drop in the bucket. To the Minister of Education: given the fact that Alberta's school boards requested over $2.5 billion of capital funding in 2005, how many school boards will still be shortchanged despite this increase in funding that he proposes?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think any school boards are going to be shortchanged, and I don't think that the member has properly concluded his question in the way he might have wanted with that word. Let me just say with respect to the overall capital plan that we do have a significant injection of money being added to the K to 12 system, and since having inherited that particular budget from the infrastructure ministry, I should tell the House that we have increases of about $177 million this year coming for the school capital funding initiatives. That will take funding from $195 million previously up to $372 million this year. That will, for example, this year see the completion and the opening of about 13 brand new schools right now and the commencement or continuation of another 51 over and above that, and that's even before we bring forward the plan for the next five years in the next few months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister finally stop blaming school boards for the government's failures and take responsibility today for the lack of schools in places across the province, particularly in Calgary and Edmonton, and do something about it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one on this side is blaming anyone. I don't know where the member is getting that from, and if he wishes to blame the school boards, then he can do that because it seems like he's accusing them of a lot of wrongful things. We're not blaming or accusing anyone. I'm giving you some straightforward facts.

What I would encourage the member to do, which clearly he hasn't been able to do over the summer, is to take a look at school capital plans such as the ones put out here by the school boards just a few months ago, last spring, and he will learn in there exactly which schools are already being funded, which ones are opening, when they are opening, and where some of their additional needs are because of dramatically shifting and dramatically changing population numbers and school enrolment numbers. It's pretty flat province-wide, Mr. Speaker, but in certain spots they are experiencing enrolment increases. I should point out that Alberta is only one of two provinces in Canada that is experiencing that sort of sharp incline, an increase in student populations, and we're dealing with it.

Mr. Flaherty: Talking to school boards, they're not saying that.

Does the minister intend to provide ongoing funding for school maintenance, or is he content to just throw money at the problem each time a crisis like that in Calgary develops in some of the schools across the province? What's he going to do about it?

2:20

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure why the hon. member is trying to be so inflammatory in his comments. He knows full well that we've increased operations and maintenance support to school boards by about $28 million. That's about a 7.5 per cent increase. That's just in these last few months. It's going up to $404 million. That's the largest amount they've ever had for operations and maintenance.

With respect to infrastructure and maintenance renewal programs, which maybe he's mixed up between the two, that is going up from $48 million to $200 million this year. From $48 million up to $200 million. The hon. member should have done some homework over the summer to know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Programs

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of Energy announced amendments to a number of royalty regulations in Alberta. As we know, the energy industry is Alberta's main economic engine, and Albertans want to be assured that when changes are made that affect the industry, they are not mere tinkering. My question to the Minister of Energy: is this a conclusion to the royalty review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said on numerous occasions, this is part of the ongoing review that the Department of Energy does with respect to royalty programs. This isn't just an event. We're constantly monitoring changing circumstances, be it here or throughout the world, to make sure that we have the best structures to ensure that Albertans get their fair share of the ownership of that resource to which they are entitled.

I'd like to mention that even the tinkering kinds of questions – the royalty programs are going to bring back an additional $186 million to Albertans. I don't know about in your books, but that's still a fairly substantial amount of dollars that come back into this province that will be there for the future. Those are made in adjustment to changing circumstances.

I'd also like to make one comment about a fair share question. It's true that the industry is making substantially greater profits today. In the past we made $3 billion to $4 billion off royalties from the province, this past year just under $15 billion, well surpassing anything that we've ever had in that range. As Albertans we, too, are benefiting substantially from the increased profits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many producers, large and small, would be affected by these changes. My question to the same minister: can he provide the rationale for his decisions?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we will be bringing forward additional information to the public with regard to these programs and the royalty review in due course. But with respect to the four programs in particular the highlight of some of those is the fact that the price has been part of the question, the horizontal re-entry program. For example, technologies have vastly improved on horizontal well drilling versus the past. It used to be a very new, innovative technology. Now it's very commonplace. That was reflected in the change.

The deep gas royalty program. That's to reflect that today where it's in Alberta's interest is to help explore the vast resource, and it is a vast resource in the tight sands and shales, substantially or potentially more resource in gas in that than all of the other gas that we have, including the coal-bed methane. So it's in that respect that we continue to focus our efforts in getting the best value and the most recovery of that resource for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. He has suggested that the Alberta royalty tax credit might be terminated. Why has he not done so?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we have also mentioned that it has been the intent in our review to eliminate the Alberta royalty tax credit effective January of this coming year. We have undertaken with industry to give them through the end of this month to provide us with any solid economic reasons or business reasons for the people of Alberta why we should continue that. We are just waiting for the last of the process, which we continue through the end of this month, just another weekend. It still is our objective once we get that information, unless there's something substantively new, that we will work towards elimination of that program.

Electricity Generation

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the failures of electricity deregulation along with the total incompetence of this Progressive Conservative government were exposed a month ago today when the Alberta electricity grid was in complete chaos and crisis. Electricity was in very short supply and prices were very high, and Albertans were forced by this government's flawed policy to endure an electricity blackout. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Where was all the extra electricity generation capacity this government continually brags about when during afternoon rush hour on July 24 we were at least 250 megawatts short in our electricity supply?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I am thrilled that he chose to bring up this instance as how they continually mischaracterize and misrepresent and actually I would say falsely portray to the public that this was a result of market design, i.e. deregulation. This had nothing to do with generation. It had nothing to do with market design under any model. If this was under the old regulated model . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor. Carry on.

Mr. Melchin: If we went back to what they would propose, if we had a fully regulated model, I would be interested how it is that they think they could control three different strikes by lightning, different times, different places, that destroyed the network of transmission, and get the generation available for supply to the consumers. I'd be interested in how they're going to regulate lightning.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Under the regulated system whenever an operator pushed the button, a generating station would start, but it doesn't anymore. Given that the market surveillance administrator's report lists 265 megawatts as being unavailable on that afternoon for the following reasons – "unit failed to start," "unit is inoperable," and unit "not generally available to the system" – can the minister tell us this afternoon if this is the extra electricity capacity generation that the Premier and this Progressive Conservative government continues to brag about? If you push the button, it won't work?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, first off, I'm glad that he highlights that we do have excess capacity of generation. It's been a complete success of the market design that we have. A complete success. You know, sometimes equipment needs to be brought down for maintenance. Surprisingly, that happened with the old model too. Sometimes, as in this instance too, there's a mechanical failure. I'd be delighted to see how they'll regulate that in the future there'll never be a mechanical failure. Sometimes the wires, which are still regulated today, which are the highways to get that electricity from that plant to you and I as users, break down. In this case they did. So it doesn't matter how much electricity generation you have if it can't get there through the highways, which are regulated today and under the old model. It won't make any difference.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why are these generation stations counted in our overall Power Pool capacity if they will not start when they're needed to provide electricity during an emergency?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there was plenty of generation available to get to the market. The reason was that the tie-line between Alberta and B.C. was out because of a lightning strike. Sheerness 1 and 2 were off because of transmission wire facilities that were not available to give that generation. They put off the generation. It takes time to bring those coal-fired plants back on to stream.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Labour Supply

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Alberta's hot economy has created a number of challenges, and when I travel around my constituency, the most proliferating sign is Help Wanted. The Alberta government has recently released its long-term labour force strategy. Mr. Minister, isn't this plan just a little late for the challenges that are already being faced by Alberta's businesses?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have a booming economy in Alberta thanks to this good government. Our diversification plan is working. In fact, within the next 10 years we are going to create over 400,000 new jobs, and with all the training programs in place and other programs we will only be able to supply 86,000 workers. So it's a challenge. It's a problem, but many jurisdictions in North America would love to have the problem we have. We are doing many things. In our recent release of our 10-year strategy our first priority, again, is to train and hire local people, Albertans, and then the ability of other Canadians to be able to move to Alberta and work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the hon. minister. It's been reported that the Alberta Federation of Labour was not consulted on this strategy. If this is true, can you explain why?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addressing the labour force challenges and opportunities we have in Alberta, the provincial government alone cannot resolve the challenges and the problems in that area. This is why, in fact, in order to develop the plan, we consulted with industry, education representatives, aboriginal groups, to get their input in this process. In fact, we met with the Alberta Federation of Labour on February 17 to address and get their input on the strategy that we developed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is for the Minister of Advanced Education. The report sets targets for meeting the number of apprentices. Mr. Minister, can you ensure that your department will see to it that the postsecondary sector can meet this need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The good news is that we currently have over 53,000 apprentices in this province, and I'm very pleased to say that we have more than 1,400 aboriginal apprentices, which is a growth of about 200 just in the last couple of months. I want to commend employers for really stepping up to the plate because in the last number of months we've been registering over a hundred new apprentices per day. That's because the employers in this province recognize that they need to step up to the plate, and they need to be commended.

We're doing a number of other things also, Mr. Speaker. We continue to offer technical training through distance delivery, mobile delivery, SuperNet delivery, and other methods. We recognize apprentices from other parts of Canada at the same level that they are in their own territory. We promote the registered apprenticeship program, RAP. We recognize tradespeople from other jurisdictions through the red seal program. We're working very closely with our aboriginal community, because I think that's our biggest opportunity in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Budgetary Practices

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to failing, this government deserves an A. This government has failed to plan affordable housing in Edmonton. They failed to plan hospital sizes in Calgary. They failed to plan infrastructure in Fort McMurray. But worst of all, yesterday the Finance minister admitted that this government doesn't even have a plan to manage Alberta's massive surpluses, billions of dollars of surpluses. To the Minister of Finance: given that Albertans across this province are asking for a surplus plan, where the heck is it?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I guess the only person who has kind of missed this is maybe the hon. member and maybe some other members of his caucus. We've repeatedly discussed what the surplus plan would be and said very clearly that we had to change our plan for unbudgeted surplus because there was a very important event that occurred in this province that changed that. Previously, unbudgeted surpluses could be used for putting money into the sustainability fund, for debt repayment, and for capital. Well, of course, Alberta being the only jurisdiction in Canada and probably North America that is debt free, we no longer have to do that. So there is an adjustment to the plan that has been in place. The real people that fail in this room are those people over there that fail to listen.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister admitted that she has no plan for the budgeted surplus, and she admitted that there's a $6 billion deficit, or debt, to the teachers' pension fund. Will the minister please tell us how much more of the surplus this government plans to blow before the year is out?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again a failure, and it has to be a hearing failure or else the member failed to be in the same scrum I was because, frankly, the only question on pension that came up at all was in reference to a document from Standard & Poor's, who happens to be one of our rating agencies, who I met with in Toronto in June. On August 22 Standard & Poor's – it's very timely – released their rating of the province of Alberta, where they said: triple-A ratings affirmed on extremely low debt. The question came in the scrum: "Well, then, do they consider pension debt in that?" which is off line for us in our budget because there's a long-term plan to address it. I should say, though, that the tax-supported debt as a share of GDP is 1.6 per cent, which is very low, which is expected to go to 1.3.

Mr. Speaker, I will table this document because I should table it. But there's one line, if I could have your permission to quote it:

The provincial government's conservative and prudent budgetary practices, which seek to protect Alberta's strong financial performance against potential volatility in resource revenues, through the use of its fiscal sustainability fund and the capital account, which is where we deal with surplus dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance again: given this government's complete inability to manage the province's surpluses, why doesn't the department do the responsible thing and adopt the Alberta Liberal surplus plan? We have one. We've done the work for you. Why don't you adopt it?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very good question. [interjections]

The Speaker: Question period is about government policy. It's turning into a bit of a debate here in the last question and answer. If the minister wants to proceed.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, a very good question. Frankly, if we had adopted that plan from the opposition, we would not have put $1.3 billion into health facilities last year. We would not be building the number of schools that we are. Their plan limited the amount of capital expenditure that you could have in one year. We did not do that because we recognized that there was a requirement for more capital, and while our savings are very close to what their plan wanted, our spending on schools, hospitals, and other government infrastructure is higher. I rest my case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Rental Increases

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a severe housing crisis in the province of Alberta. Working families and students find themselves in increasingly precarious housing situations, and the number of homeless people in the province has doubled. It doesn't matter whether we hear from Calgary, Edmonton, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, or other centres. This crisis, frankly, is a predictable result of this government's own reckless, growth at all costs, short-term thinking and lack of planning. As an example, I received an e-mail last week from a single mother living in Edmonton whose rent has increased 33 per cent, $300 per month, in just the last few months. My question is to the Minister of Government Services, who's supposed to be looking after the renters. To the minister: what do we say to this woman and other hard-working Albertans who are spending over half their income on housing in this overheated economy and cannot even afford the basics?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know, the member opposite is absolutely right. We are facing unprecedented growth in this province. In areas like Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, and Fort McMurray we hear from people that are faced with rental issues. I'd ask this member to provide me with the name and the circumstance. We have landlord/tenant protection in this province. Give me the circumstance, and I'll take care of it directly. We'll do it tomorrow. We'll do it today for you.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's one person. I'd be glad to send it over to the minister, but the reality is that there are thousands of Albertans facing this situation. What's he going to do: look after all of them? I want to be specific to the minister. What is he prepared to do with these exorbitant rental increases that are occurring over the province, that are coming about not just for one person but for thousands?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, we do have legislation in place to protect renters, but if this member is asking if I am going to introduce rent controls, the answer is no.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that all the renters in the province will be glad to hear about that. I would ask the minister: why is he not prepared to look at caps, as is done in British Columbia, as is done in Ontario, where it's basically to the cost of living? Why is he not prepared to look at that? There are thousands of people being impacted in this province.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, we've been through this in this province before. You know, there were rent controls at one time throughout this country. It proved not to work. There were people who wanted to invest, and they said that they're pulling back that investment money and they're not building those rental accommodations. I don't want to go back to a situation where we prove that it did not work. We have to look at other options. I will assure this member and all Albertans that I will talk with my colleagues in cabinet. I'll talk with them seriously to find a way that we can find more housing, more land to develop. We'll do that quickly.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the first of six, a little historical vignette for the day.

A number of Alberta MLAs have had a town, village, or post office named after them.

Boyle is named after John Robert Boyle, a Liberal, who served in the Alberta Legislature from 1905 to 1924 representing the constituency of Sturgeon. Mr. Boyle was a leader in the revolt which ended Alexander Rutherford's service as Premier.

Holden became a village in 1905 and is named after James Bismark Holden, a Liberal, who represented Vermilion in Alberta's first two Legislatures, from 1905 to 1913. Mr. Holden also served as the mayor of Vegreville for various terms between 1914 and 1945.

Jean Côté was named after Jean Leon Côté, a Liberal, who represented the constituencies of Athabasca then Grouard between 1909 and 1921. He was appointed to the Senate in 1923 and died in 1924.

Douglas Corney Breton served in Alberta's sixth Legislature, from 1926 to 1930, as the United Farmers of Alberta MLA for Leduc and saw Breton named in his honour in 1927. He served in India and Afghanistan during World War I.

George Hoadley served as a Conservative MLA from 1909 to 1921 representing Okotoks, from 1921 to 1930 as the UFA MLA for Okotoks, and from 1930 to 1935 as the UFA MLA for Okotoks-High River. The post office in Haverigg was renamed Hoadley in 1924.

Vernor Winfield Smith served as a UFA MLA from 1921 to 1935, representing the constituency of Camrose. Smith was Alberta's Minister of Railways and Telephones when the Lacombe and Northwestern Railway named the siding of Winfield after him.

Henry Elbert DeBolt represented the constituency of Spirit River as a Social Credit MLA from 1940 to 1952. He had become the first postmaster in an area known as American Creek in 1923, and in that year the post office became known as DeBolt.

The first member of Ukrainian heritage elected to this Assembly was Andrew Shandro, who represented the constituency of Whitford from 1913 to 1926 as a Liberal. The locality of Shandro is named after him.

Some members might remember Henry Mancini's music about Peter Gunn. The hamlet of Gunn bears the name of Peter Gunn, the Liberal MLA for Lac St. Anne from 1909 to 1917. Gunn was the sheriff for Athabasca and Peace River districts.

In the fall of 1947 residents gathered in the Notikewan River Valley to discuss a new name for their area. They endorsed the name of Manning for their post office after Ernest Charles Manning, Alberta's Premier. In 1951 Manning became a village, and in 1957 it became a town.

A number of Alberta recreation areas, streets, and roads also bear the names of former and current MLAs, as do a number of Alberta constituencies.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of six members.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Rick and Rose Lundy

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in the members' gallery we have two people whom I introduced earlier today. Like all people they have experienced many difficult challenges throughout their lives. Recently they have been caught in a media spotlight surrounding a deeply personal tragedy at the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary. Few of us here today can imagine the challenge faced when one faces a miscarriage. I know that the deepest sympathy of all hon. members goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Lundy on their loss and the difficulties surrounding that night at the hospital.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Lundys face new challenges and old ones, the questions of why and how and what types of services and steps could have been taken to alleviate their discomfort and what were the appropriate procedures that could have been in place to assist them, the questions of a process-oriented nature. No process, no review, and certainly no remedial action by anyone will ever truly make up for the situation that they confronted that night. For the Lundys it cannot be a matter of simply the process and procedures of our health care system. It is to be, however, about a system that must become more responsive to the needs of individual Albertans in crisis.

We as Albertans expect things of our health care system, expectations that are not always easily met, and when they are not, we need to ask the question, "Why not?" not just with the interest to define right and wrong but to define the appropriate course of action in the future.

Mr. Speaker, during this terrible ordeal the Lundys have shown a lot of courage, and their strong character has been prevalent throughout this situation. I'm glad that they have accepted the appointment to the patient experience committee. I know that they will do their best in making an ongoing contribution to produce better patient care for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Alberta Summer Games

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people said that they were the best Alberta Summer Games ever. From July 27 to the 30th 3,100 coaches, athletes, and officials gathered in Red Deer for the largest ever Alberta Summer Games.

At the games Alberta's youth were given the opportunity to compete in 17 different sporting events as well as cultural events, including a legacy sculpture and a downtown street gala. Congratulations to the city of Red Deer, the Red Deer county, and the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation for hosting the 2006 Alberta Summer Games.

The Summer Games were made possible by the hard work and dedication of 2,600 volunteers. These volunteers worked tirelessly to prepare meals, provide transportation, and deal with a massive array of logistics related to hosting an event of this magnitude. This hard-working group of volunteers was led by the tireless effort of the chair, Lauralyn Radford, and the board of directors: Cheryl Adams, Patti Anderson, Greg Atkinson, Debbie Bonnett, Darin Doel, Carol Dyck, Carrie Farnell, Bob Grainer, Hugh McPherson, Marg Phelan, Rinn Purnell, Jared Sayers, Ron Schuster, Greg Scott, Rick Tofani, Rob Willms, and Fred Zucker. The board also had a great supporting team and wished to express their huge thanks to games manager Barb McKee and her staff members.

The Summer Games allow the youth of Alberta to showcase their various talents, to form friendships that will last a lifetime, and to learn the value of sportsmanship, teamwork, and fair play. Those who exemplify these values are recognized with the spirit of sport award that was won by zone 4, Parkland. Congratulations to zone 6, Edmonton, on winning the minister's cup for the most points overall, and zone 4, Parkland, for winning the Alberta cup for most improved zone. Congratulations to all those who participated in Alberta Summer Games. Win or lose, everyone who participated should take pride in their accomplishments and cherish the many memories that they'll take home with them.

Alberta wishes Medicine Hat all the best in hosting the 2008 Summer Games.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Westbourne Place

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a unique senior citizens' institution in my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill. Westbourne Place is a senior citizens' apartment complex with a warm Christian atmosphere situated on the hill above 64 Avenue N.W. It's adjacent to the Westbourne Baptist church, with which it is connected by a walkway and a multipurpose room. The residents also enjoy amenities including a social room, a pool room, a gift store, a garden, and an outdoor barbecue. The residents receive home care and daily health care services.

I can truly say that Westbourne Place is a friendly and welcoming community. It's much enjoyed by the residents who live there and by those who come to visit. A unique feature of Westbourne Place is the individual style and artwork that many of the residents bring to their own apartments and their doorways, which adds to the cheery and homelike atmosphere.

Reverend David Ferguson is the administrator of Westbourne Place, and I want to take this opportunity to salute him and all of his staff as well as all of the residents of Westbourne Place for making this complex in my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill a great place to live and a great asset to our community.

Canadian Forces Mission in Afghanistan

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, today I address this House in order to recognize and celebrate the loyalty, the dedication, and the heroism of our men and women in uniform. To date over two dozen Canadians have lost their lives while serving in Afghanistan. These heroes died to protect Canadian freedoms; they died to extend those freedoms to the people of Afghanistan. They gave their lives as ambassadors of goodwill and Canadian values. Thousands of other Canadians continue to put themselves at risk on a daily basis to ensure that our mission in Afghanistan succeeds. Their loyalty and their commitment to the ideals that made our nation great are cause for celebration.

We must continue to give all of the support that we can to our men and women in uniform. The yellow ribbon that many Canadians wear to show their support to our troops is a powerful symbol of our respect and gratitude to these exemplary human beings. With courage, compassion, determination, and hope they have ventured into the world's most dangerous places at great personal risk. They do so because they are willing to put their lives on the line for the highest ideals of humanity: peace, freedom, and our ultimate goal, universal understanding and brotherhood.

The families and friends of these brave and loyal soldiers are dealing with great loss and sorrow, and while no words of mine could possibly ease their suffering, I hope that this acknowledgement of the heroism of their loved ones will at least serve to let them know that the people of Alberta and Canada are profoundly grateful to the lost ones.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I was advised by way of request from the hon. member's office several days ago that the hon. member was going to be making a member's statement today. He sought permission to provide all members of the Assembly with two cobs of corn from his area, which I presume is what the subject matter of his statement is, and I gave such permission. However, I did not give permission for him to circulate to all hon. members vanity fridge magnets with his name on them. So if you want to send these back to me, I will have them recycled with my name on them.

Taber Cornfest

Mr. Hinman: It was there for a good idea, so I hope you all do that.

Mr. Speaker, today is a special day as it marks the beginning of the annual Taber Cornfest. Cornfest is a celebration of more than just the corn harvest. It is a celebration of the hard work, dedication, and vision – which, by the way, is the variety of corn which you received today – of countless Alberta families.

Today's bounty would not be possible if not for the innovation of irrigation, transportation, and processing. In 1915 the area landowners voted to establish the Taber irrigation district. Soon after constructed dams, canals, and reservoirs became the backbone of the needed infrastructure. This is an example of how wise use of our resources is paramount to our present and future economy.

The railways were used to bring machinery and equipment into the area to attach southern Alberta to world markets for their harvest. It is a shame today to see these great assets of railway lines being demolished rather than remaining a vital link for our rural economy.

Current crop and forage production in the area consists of sugar beets, corn, potatoes, beans, wheat, canola, alfalfa, and timothy, just to list a few. Before oil and gas this province's economy was based on forestry and agriculture. Even today agriculture continues to contribute greatly to our economy. Many of the oil and gas workers are farm grown. It will be detrimental to the future of Alberta to have our economy based and focused only on one sector. Ours is the responsibility to ensure that our economy continues to be diversified.

Mr. Speaker, for the members of this House who have not had the opportunity to sample fresh Taber corn, I feel privileged to provide samples for all the members. It was picked fresh this morning at 4. I request that all members of the House eat their fresh Taber corn. It will add sweetness to their soul, and they'll have a tender heart for at least 10 minutes.

As the harvest continues throughout the province, I pray that we can all remember to thank our farmers and ranchers. Corn does not grow in a can, a carton does not produce milk, and beef is not produced behind the beef cooler.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I don't know; I've got eight magnets now. If anybody has some corn they don't want to use, I'm going home later this afternoon, so send it up as well.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Montana First Nation Satellite RCMP Station

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently attended the opening of the Montana First Nation satellite RCMP station on the Hobbema First Nations reserve. Led by Chief Carl Rabbit, this event was met with much support from the community, as was demonstrated by both good attendance and celebration throughout the day.

By introducing an additional satellite RCMP station, the community will benefit from crime prevention associated with an additional nine RCMP officers in the community. This presence within the community will help ease the community's law enforcement challenges. The new satellite station marks the fulfillment of the signing of the community tripartite agreement this past March between the federal and provincial governments and the local reserve.

During the opening ceremonies of this event, I was impressed with the prominent and conspicuous role the Hobbema cadets played. One year ago the RCMP began a comprehensive crime prevention initiative aimed at disrupting gang activity. Following this, the RCMP formed a partnership with the Hobbema community to implement the First Nations Community Cadet Corps program. Today the cadet corps has more than 650 members from Hobbema's four bands. These cadets, aged eight to 18, have decided to proactively shape their community's future. Not only is this movement giving these young people a sense of strength and solidarity; it is engaging the community against crime. The Hobbema cadets reflect the inspirational direction of the community.

I am pleased to see Hobbema's youth actively seeking to secure both their future and the future of the following generations. I commend Hobbema First Nations reserve for their initiative in crime prevention through the new satellite police station and the cadet corps movement, which will enhance the quality of life and safety of this community.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 271 petitions today urging the government "to move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road south of the current proposal" to reduce noise, increase safety measures, as well as "minimize the environmental impact of the road."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I'd like to give notice that I will be rising at the appropriate time to move that ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned to discuss an urgent matter; namely, the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the failure of the government to provide the resources required for Alberta's health regions to operate essential health services.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time I will be rising to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly [of Alberta] does not have confidence in the government because it has failed to adequately plan for the infrastructure, housing, education, health, and environmental needs of the province in a period of rapid growth.

The Speaker: A notice of motion, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Yes. One notice of motion. I just want to give oral notice regarding the following motion.

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the summer sitting of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Government in Council.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table five copies of the Campus Alberta Quality Council's second annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of a letter from Arlene Stephen. Ms Stephen is a single mother whose rent has recently increased by $300 per month. She's asking for a limit on how quickly rent can be increased and other strategies for affordable housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon, and it's in regard to the questions I asked earlier in question period today. This is the Market Surveillance Administrator's report on the events of July 24, 2006. Further to my questioning, it certainly indicates here that a unit owned by ATCO in Rainbow Lake failed to start. It's an old unit. Another ATCO unit was unavailable as the unit is inoperable, and the Rosedale generation stations 8, 9, and 10, owned by EPCOR, were not generally available to the system slow-start units. Then there's another unit here that also failed to start as it is an old unit. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a look at this document.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table an e-mail from my constituent Bev Burgess, whose daughter was bleeding for nine hours while she miscarried at the Grey Nuns hospital. It's a very similar story to Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table a copy of a letter from a constituent, Daniel Langdon, to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Mr. Langdon was employed over the past year by a PDD-funded organization and is expressing his concern that the government hasn't recognized the severity of the situation faced by such organizations. He's urging the government to increase funding and conduct a full review of PDD funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm tabling with the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2004. The report includes this office's financial statements for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2004.

Before we move on to the next segment, might we revert to Notices of Motions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Notices of Motions
head: (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, and my apologies. I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to give notice that on Monday, August 28, I will move that written questions 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35 be dealt with that day.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday, August 28, I will move that motions for returns 27 through 36 be dealt with on that day.

There being no additional written questions or motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. McClellan, Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Government Accountability Act the government of Alberta 2005-06 annual report; pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2006; pursuant to the Securities Act the Alberta Securities Commission 2006 annual report, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund financial statements dated March 31, 2006, the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund financial statements dated March 31, 2006, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund financial statements dated March 31, 2006, the ATB Financial annual report 2006, the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2005 annual report.

On behalf of Mr. Liepert, chair, Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund 2006 annual report for the year ended March 31, 2006.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I would ask the Government House Leader if he could rise and share with us the projected government business for the week beginning the 28th of August through the 31st of August.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday afternoon we'll deal with private members' business. On Monday evening from 8 to 9 we'll deal with Motions Other than Government Motions. There is one, Motion 512, scheduled. At 9 p.m. we will proceed to Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, in anticipation of that being day 2 of 2, and we will seek to revert to Introduction of Bills, assuming that everything goes okay, and hopefully ask for first reading of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2).

On Tuesday afternoon we will proceed, we hope, with second reading of that particular supplementary supply act. On Tuesday evening second reading again. Should it be necessary, we'll continue on the supplementary supply act and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon Committee of the Whole is anticipated on the supplementary supply act, and, if necessary, Wednesday evening we'll continue with Committee of the Whole on the supplementary supply act.

On Thursday, August 31, we should have third reading of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2).

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, before proceeding, we have to deal with the application re Standing Order 30.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the failure of the government to provide the resources required for Alberta's health regions to operate essential health services.

That motion has been distributed, I believe.

In my arguments on the urgency of this issue, Mr. Speaker, I reference Marleau and Montpetit 584, which is requesting that the issue be specific, that it be urgent and important, and that it be a "matter requiring urgent consideration." I would argue that when a citizen's access to health care is imperilled, it is urgent, and it requires the immediate attention of this House.

Since April the health system in Alberta has experienced a progression of crises with closures of beds, both in-patient and in surgical, renal, and mental health, plus a reduction in diagnostic services and in beds in one particular ICU. This has affected five health regions, Mr. Speaker: Capital health, Calgary region, Aspen, Peace Country, and Palliser.

I note that Marleau and Montpetit 585 also supports an urgency argument and asks that issues be "immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation." We know that the issues around access to health and wait-lists and provision of resources, planning, and policy is a matter of discussion that is arising in a number of places.

To the argument on urgency I refer to the parameters set out in Beauchesne 387 to 398 on emergency debates. I note that this issue is not currently before the courts. If I look at a number of the other tests that have been either noted in those sections in Beauchesne or in precedents in this House, that would include the throne speech as an opportunity to explore a subject. Well, the throne speech was some time ago, and the timing of the next one is unknown but would not likely be before another six months have passed.

I have examined the Order Paper, and there is no bill that would address this issue on the Order Paper or, indeed, outlined in any press release or media release from the government regarding this fall session or generally. We are scheduled for a supplementary supply budget, but I note, Mr. Speaker, that we have a total of 210 minutes in which to debate some 15 ministries and almost $1.4 billion. That's 14 minutes tops if we divide every ministry into equal time, and I would argue that at a rate of $6.6 million a minute and 14 minutes a ministry, that is not a sufficient amount of time to debate a complex issue like this. Fourteen minutes is not conducive to a thoughtful debate on access and waiting lists and the closure of a number of different units in health regions across the province.

There is no other reasonable opportunity for debate, Mr. Speaker. Oral Question Period is not enough time to debate a complex issue, and the Speaker is often admonishing us not to create debate during question period. We did indeed ask our primary and our third-position questions today on exactly this issue but were not able to get satisfactory answers from the minister.

I've looked at the written questions and motions for returns that are on the Order Paper and were just noted by the Government House Leader, and these do not cover the subject that I am seeking debate on. There are no private members' bills on the Order Paper on this issue, and there are no motions available on this issue, either a government or a private member's motion. The Premier blew off this opposition's request for an independent inquiry, and we note that Calgary health has teamed with the Quality Health Council for a report which would possibly be released sometime after May next year, which is not immediate enough given the issues that have arisen in the last five months.

I would argue, using the arguments in Beauchesne 389, that this issue is "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." Indeed, we have people that have been brave enough to join us in the gallery and to travel some distance to bring their story to light and to try and work beyond that to improve the situation so that others do not have this same experience.

Under Beauchesne 390 "the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately," and I think a number of us or all of us can attest to a demand from our constituents that this issue be addressed. I argue that the government's failure to provide planning, policy, and resources required to operate Alberta's health regions is posing an imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans. I argue that our Standing Order 30 request meets the tests that are set out, and I urge the Speaker to rule in favour of our request.

Thank you for the opportunity to present the argument.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 30(1) and (2) the chair will allow for brief arguments from additional members. The chair will recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on this procedural point.

Anybody else? The hon. House leader for the third party, and then we'll just proceed.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would appreciate the opportunity to respond to the motion that has been raised, and while it would be tempting to cite the number of accomplishments that would in fact show that we have been improving the system for the future, I will just focus on the need for the emergency debate.

Mr. Speaker, I would entreat you that while this is an important issue, an emergency debate would just serve to lengthen the time before we could table our supplementary estimates and get on with the debate relative to the funding and the important work that would be done in providing additional funding for the health system. I think this debate in the Committee of Supply will be an appropriate time for us to discuss the issues, and I would hope that the hon. member opposite would be patient with us and find the patience to help us go through the tabling of the supplementary estimates, indicating what sorts of plans we have in place to accommodate funding issues, workforce shortages, and the other kinds of things that have been identified in previous questions today.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I think this debate would only delay a session in which we could more expediently move forward with the supplementary funding that is needed by the regions and will enable them to get on with their job.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I strongly contend that this matter, while important, does not constitute an emergency debate today.

The Speaker: Just for clarification and the elucidation of the chair, is the hon. minister saying that when an estimate is submitted to this House, there are dollars for health in it?

Ms Evans: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief, but it seems to me that there's a lot of crisis developing in this province right now. Certainly, health care is a serious matter, and I'll speak to the urgency.

I mean, the reality is that we've seen the Sturgeon hospital in St. Albert close its surgery room August 5 to 6. That could be very serious. As already mentioned, this month the Queen Elizabeth hospital in Grande Prairie closed its intensive care unit for a week. The Foothills hospital has closed beds due to nursing shortages, and of course we're familiar with the sad experience of Rose Lundy, who miscarried while waiting for a bed in the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary. So this is very serious, and I would argue that we really don't have a good opportunity to debate this issue. The minister says: well, we can talk about it during supplementary estimates. Well, we have 15 departments to go through – 15 departments – and only two days to debate them. It seems to me hardly reasonable to grapple with an issue as complex as health care reform in such a short period of time.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that if nothing is done, these shortages in these hospitals are not going to get better; they're going to get worse. We've already seen some serious problems develop, and I would say that supplementary estimates in two days – I would argue that probably not even if we were doing it on the regular basis, but with 15 departments in two days it really does not give us the opportunity to fully debate these very serious matters.

So, in conclusion, I would urge you to rule the motion to be in order and hope that we can have an opportunity to thoroughly debate this health care crisis. Nothing bad could come from debating this, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the representation came from three different sections. I presume that that is what it is then.

The chair is prepared to rule on the request for leave for this motion to proceed as in order under Standing Order 30(2). First of all, I would like to confirm that the Member for Edmonton-Centre has given proper notice of her intention to bring a motion under Standing Order 30. Notice was received by the Speaker's office on Tuesday, August 22, at 1:43 p.m. The subject matter was provided at that time. Therefore, the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met.

Secondly, before the question as to whether the motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." The member's proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on "the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the failure of the government to provide the resources required for Alberta's health regions to operate essential health services." The relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debate are Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 398, and House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589.

Albeit that the debate with respect to this particular motion was rather short, the chair has listened attentively to the submissions from all of the members participating in the debate, and after hearing the arguments before it, the chair does not believe that this request meets the requirements under the standing order for emergency debate to proceed. One reason, the principal reason, is that the urgency stressed in the standing order is "urgency of debate." As pointed out and indicated by the Minister of Health and Wellness and in the question period today as well by the Minister of Finance, the main reason that the Assembly has been reconvened is to debate supplementary supply, which, according to the Minister of Health and Wellness, will contain a request for additional funds for the Department of Health and Wellness. These would be the additional resources that, presumably, the Opposition House Leader refers to in her request for leave. Furthermore, while the chair is aware of the importance of this issue, it is difficult to conclude that there is something so extraordinary as to constitute a genuine emergency as required under Standing Order 30(7).

To reiterate, while the member raises a serious matter – this is a serious matter – the chair does not consider it to be of such urgency to warrant postponing the business of the Assembly this afternoon as it appears that the business of the Assembly this afternoon will be exactly what the motion is all about.

So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a Standing Order 42 application.

head: 3:20 Motions under Standing Order 42

Motion of Nonconfidence

Mr. Mason:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta does not have confidence in the government because it has failed to adequately plan for the infrastructure, housing, education, health, and environmental needs of the province in a period of rapid growth.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An SO 42 application allows a motion in case of urgent and pressing necessity to be made without notice under Standing Order 39. To proceed, the motion must receive unanimous consent of the House.

I believe that this is an urgent and pressing necessity. The government has failed to provide even a minimum level of governance to this province. Its competence is also extremely minimal.

The government seems genuinely surprised that there are pressures created by economic growth in this province and has not taken adequate steps to prepare the province and protect the people of this province from those pressures.

Many Albertans have been put into an extremely precarious position because on this government's watch Alberta has been burdened by a growing infrastructure deficit, economic distortions which threaten housing supports, and the government has played politics with our health care and our schools. From Fort McMurray to Medicine Hat working families and municipal leaders have been warning of impending crises in our environment, our school boards, and our hospitals.

In the area of infrastructure the lack of adequate planning is evident, particularly highway 63 and highway 19.

Earlier this week in the area of housing, mayors from seven communities made a plea for housing support. They identified a need for $20 million to resolve the crisis. Mr. Speaker, just last year the count of homeless persons found 3,436 homeless people in Calgary. There have been rental increases as high as $1,000 per month in Calgary, and the average rent in Fort McMurray is $1,500 per month for a two-bedroom apartment.

The Alberta School Boards Association in the area of education estimates that base funding to accommodate salary increases for teachers has fallen short by $48 million over the last three years and $13 million in the last year. The ASBA estimates that $1.2 billion...

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. With respect, the purpose now is to seek the approval of the members, not to give the debate. Once you get the approval of the members, then we'll recognize the hon. member to really give it the shot. So brevity right now is kind of important.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in the area of health, wellness, and environment I would argue that the situation that has developed in our province requires a debate on this issue. We need to see whether or not the people of Alberta support this government or whether this House supports this government. In my view we ought to have the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the house to agree to debate this motion because in this very short session there will be no opportunity to thoroughly consider the major public policy issues facing this province. Indeed, with the exception of some private members' business on Monday, the only matter the government is bringing forward to debate is a patchwork budget designed to cover over the lack of its vision. There is no real opportunity for debate on a wide range of issues facing the people of this province. The shortcomings of this government are increasingly evident to all people.

To conclude, I would argue on behalf of working people and their families that there is a very urgent need to find out what, if any, plans this government has to ensure orderly and reasonably paced long-term growth and that this remedial sitting of the Assembly will not permit any other opportunity to have such a debate. Mr. Speaker, it's my submission that we need to debate this motion. This government has lost the moral authority to govern. It has abjectly failed to provide for the needs of this province, and it ought to have done so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The chair would like to acknowledge to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that he provided adequate notice, which was very important. It's a courtesy and appreciated.

Hon. members, under Standing Order 42(1), unanimous consent of the Assembly is required in order for us to proceed.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary supply estimates, I wish to remind the House that I provided the government's 2006-07 quarterly budget report for the first quarter to all MLAs yesterday morning. I also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

I now wish to table the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates. These will provide additional spending authority to 15 departments of the government. When passed, the estimates will authorize approximate increases of $1.37 billion in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $149 million in voted capital investment, and $16 million in voted nonbudgetary disbursements.

Mr. Speaker, when a second or subsequent set of estimates is tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires an amended fiscal plan. The quarterly budget report serves as the amended fiscal plan.

I'm also tabling the first-quarter activity report describing the major achievements of our government during that period. Also being tabled is the first-quarter update for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

head: Government Motions

24. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

25. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be two days.

The Speaker: This motion is a nondebatable motion.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

head: 3:30 Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Health and Wellness

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Today I'm here to request additional support for our health regions in providing essential services to Albertans. While we've made great improvements in providing a quality and effective health care system, there are many pressure points facing us, some that have been mentioned today.

Before I discuss the specifics of supplementary estimates, I would like to provide an overview of the state of our health system, including some of our challenges and innovations that we're employing to be proactive and forward thinking as we address them not only for today but for the future.

For the first time ever this past spring the Alberta Health and Wellness budget surpassed the $10 billion mark. The approved health budget as it exists for 2006-07 is $10.3 billion, an increase of $735 million, or 7.7 per cent, over last year. Today's supplementary estimate will put us over the $10.5 billion mark. We've the highest per capita spending of all the provinces. Today Health and Wellness spending accounts for 36 per cent of the government's total expense in 2006 and '07.

Nearly two-thirds of the Health and Wellness budget is being provided in operating grants to health authorities, and that is a good thing, Mr. Speaker, because it means that Albertans are benefiting directly from health service providers, technology, and treatments. Every hour we spend more than $1.2 million to operate Alberta's health care system.

In our budget this year health authority funding was allocated to address population growth and annual inflation costs ranging from 4.9 per cent for Chinook regional health authority to 8.3 per cent for Northern Lights health region.

We're investing in the right places to meet our growing and changing population, and we're excited in the province about Calgary's new Children's hospital, which is the first built in Canada in over 20 years. We're proud of the Mazankowski Heart Institute, which holds great promise for improving health outcomes and is attracting interest from top health professionals.

Infrastructure is important to building a strong public health system. Seven hundred and forty-eight million will be spent on health capital this year, including $672 million in capital grants to health authorities.

Spending on the 2006-2009 capital plan will increase by 74 per cent over the previous three-year plan, to $2.9 billion. This includes $2.5 billion for health facility projects, including the Alberta bone and joint institute in Calgary, the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton as well as health facilities in a number of communities. These projects will add an estimated 2,000 new beds, which by increasing capacity increases access. We recognize that the additional beds will mean additional operating costs. For 2006-07 the additional cost is over $14 million, and this additional funding will help address that.

We have allocated $1.88 billion to physician services. This allocation includes $75 million for alternate payment plans to allow academic physicians to focus more time on research, education, and delivering speciality care to Albertans and $70 million for primary care initiatives. Now, Mr. Speaker, the primary care initiatives as they grow are a very strong example of how we're stretching resources, improving scope of practice and the quality of care Albertans receive.

If you've read our recently updated health policy framework, you'll be surprised to see that there are now 26 primary care networks operating in Alberta communities, involving 550 physicians and providing services to more than 700,000 patients, over a quarter of Alberta's population. The primary care initiative has led to 24/7 access to primary health care services and will be a new model to lead the future of primary care in Alberta.

That health policy document also identifies that 800 physicians practise under the ARP agreement, allowing for flexibility and improved service. We're being innovative in this province to attract and retain health care professionals and are reaping the benefits. Over the past five years we've had the highest net increase in physicians, 800 in all, more than any province in Canada.

Of course, I must also mention the hip and knee replacement project, which decreased wait times for orthopedic surgery from 47 weeks to five weeks and will be a model to reduce wait times for other surgeries and procedures. We're doing a lot of things right.

However, we must continue to invest in other improvements. We've approved regulations to allow pharmacists to prescribe some drug treatments. Mr. Speaker, something they will be looking at modifying and accommodating as much as possible are the regulation requests, as they table those later this fall, by the addition of other health professionals to assist in the definition of the final standards. These regulations fall under the Health Professions Act, and overall it's a strategy to make the best use of health professionals.

We'll continue expanding our electronic health record so that patient information will be available to health professions by 2008 from all health authority regions. Regional health authorities will also be required to report how their mental health plans are addressing mental health services.

We've set priorities to address other demands. Managing growing costs in emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals, we're working with our partners to ensure that we have the right mix of providers to meet our system needs.

What are our system pressures? Well, we're blessed with a healthy economy, and that's attracting people from all over the world. Recent numbers suggest that 90,000 people have moved to our province in the past year, a huge increase from the mid-90s. Our prosperity, though, remains a challenge to the quality of our health system. With changing demographics, people bringing their aging population with them to accommodate the needs of grandparents and great-grandparents, currently 10 per cent of Alberta's population is 65 years of age and over, and this percentage is expected to increase to 13 per cent by 2016 and to 20 per cent by 2030. The province's population continues to shift from rural to urban centres, with one of the highest population growth rates in Canada at approximately 1.5 per cent per year.

Other challenges include the cost of emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals, workforce shortage expectations, increased health spending, broad public health risks, mental health issues and challenges, and addiction issues. I can't stress too much the fact that Albertans expect a high quality of health, and it is one of the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, we spend more on health than any other province in the country.

Over the next 10 years regional health authorities will be required to recruit 54,000 new workers. The Alberta Medical Association recently reported that the health system needs 1,100 more physicians right now, and this summer we've seen health regions struggling to maintain service in the face of staff shortage and increasing demands. The Northern Lights health region continues to cope with more than 150 staff vacancies caused by a highly competitive job market in the Fort McMurray area. Some regions have temporarily closed emergency rooms, ICUs, and surgical units to deal with staff shortages. This week the Calgary health region announced that it'll be conducting an external review of its emergency care services, which are seeing huge volume increases year over year. We are concerned, and we need to take even more action.

There is no question that we face enormous challenges. We are fortunate here in Alberta to be in a position to address these challenges. Health and Wellness is requesting $262 million in supplementary estimates for 2006-07. Additional operating funding totalling $112 million will go to the nine regional health authorities and the Cancer Board to address cost pressures and the impact of the licensed practical nurses' mediated settlement. In addition, funds totalling $150 million will be used by the RHAs and Alberta Cancer Board for diagnostic and medical equipment. The operating funding represents an additional 2 per cent budget increase, bringing the overall operating increase that the health authorities will receive from an average of over 6 per cent a year to just over 8 per cent, for a total of $6 billion to the health authorities.

Approving this supplementary funding will help ensure that Albertans continue enjoying the best health system in the country and give confidence to health providers that we are indeed not in crisis.

The RHA deficits that have been projected. Well, Mr. Speaker, business plans for 2006-07 revealed that a $210 million deficit was projected for 10 health authorities, the exception being the Cancer Board, which projected a balanced operating budget. Even with the additional funding of $112 million, only Chinook, Aspen, and the Cancer Board are projected to be in a surplus position at the end of the year. I should point out, however, that even if the health authorities' operating budgets are increased to an average of 8 per cent, the allocation is still below what the health regions have requested for this year. The overall average increase requested by the health regions was 16.5 per cent.

Operational funds will be used for such things as recruitment and retention, utility expenditures, and other general operating expenses. Funds have been assigned to the regions on a population-based formula, so you'll note that the Northern Lights health region, which includes Fort McMurray, will receive the largest percentage, 10.5 per cent in 2006-07, with the rest receiving between 7.4 per cent and 8.8 per cent in total operating funds for 2006-07.

Questions about the shadow population in Fort McMurray are not relevant when we're talking operational dollars because as people receive health care services, whether they are in Fort McMurray or in Calgary or if they live in Red Deer, the money follows them. There are transfers between regions and indeed between jurisdictions beyond our provincial borders.

The additional operating funding will mean that the nine health regions receive an average increase of 8.1 per cent, which will go a considerable distance in helping them address their financial challenges.

Thirty-one million will be provided to RHAs and the Alberta Cancer Board to address the impact of the LPN mediated settlement. The new collective agreement is retroactive to April 1, 2004, and extends to March 31, 2008. The allocation is based on the number of LPN FTEs reported in each health authority for 2004-05. There are 2,900 LPNs registered in Alberta, and this is an important part of our health professional delivery system as the LPNs are recognized for their ability to make a valuable contribution to the changing needs of Albertans, particularly in long-term care.

The capital funding of $150 million will be distributed to the nine health authorities for medical equipment. The health authorities will use the money for the capital priorities. This money is earmarked to purchase a range of diagnostic and medical equipment which will include MRIs, CT scanners, nuclear medicine equipment as well as surgical, patient, and safety equipment. Each RHA prioritizes their region's equipment purchases. The funding will then help overall access to new or replacement state-of-the-art diagnostic imaging, laboratory, medical, and surgical equipment that can result in reduced wait times, earlier detection, and more effective treatment outcomes. The capital funding will ensure that health authorities continue replacing medical equipment that has reached the end of its useful life.

When we visited the Children's hospital, we noted how much efficiency can be gained by diagnostics that reach all parts of the hospital through new and updated medical technology. This will save time. This will save money. This will save patients. This will save emergency capacity. This equipment can also be purchased any time with this money in the fiscal year. Accounting for the funds that will be spent under the grant is part of the quarterly financial reporting.

Eligible equipment is in four categories: diagnostic imaging, diagnostic and therapeutic, medical/surgical, patient safety. Not only is equipment important in improving access and outcomes; it's a very visible outward sign of how we put patients' needs at the centre of our health system. This capital funding is also important because new technologies can enhance efficiencies in the health system. The regions will be able to use this money to both replace existing and purchase new technologies they don't previously have.

Mr. Chair, this government wants to strengthen our public health care system, and that takes investment. While we face many challenges and cost pressures, we are in a position, a delightful opportunity here, to fund solutions and to find solutions. The supplementary funding for the health authorities will help fulfill this goal and will help Albertans to be assured that they have the strongest health system possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity, the very brief opportunity, I'm going to get to speak to the issue of the supplementary supply health funding in the province of Alberta.

Let me start by saying that I appreciate what the minister is saying, that the government intends to do well and that they are looking at investment, but from where I'm sitting, that's not good enough. This is the same government that ramped up the economy, that fired everybody on go, that whipped everyone into a frenzy, that doesn't seem to be able to cope with any kind of a planning process on any level. As a result of that, we now have an overheated economy, that the government now admits is overheated, and I maintain that there is a mismanagement of the growth in this province. Yes, we've had an enormous number of people move into the province, and some of them have been health professionals. But let's remember where we started from. This is the very same government who spent most of the '90s cut, cut, cutting in health care, blowing up hospitals, selling hospitals, particularly in Calgary. Now what do we have in Calgary? A capacity problem. Now we're trying to build new beds and get new spaces in there.

I look at this and say: where's the planning? Where's the forethought? Where's the foresight in this? If the government, with all of the resources at their disposal, cannot figure out how to plan in advance on this, we are truly sunk, and that does seem to be exactly what the situation is. They lay off all the nurses. They tell them rudely to leave and to go to the States and to get out, and then we're paying signing bonuses to get them all back because we can't get enough health professionals back into our system right now. So it's a situation of money, but more than that, it's a situation of planning. It's possible that in this resource-rich province we could get enough money back into the system. It's still not going to solve our problem because we haven't done the appropriate planning that goes with it. You need to plan for growth as well as planning for a reduction. I don't see that kind of consciousness coming from this government.

There are a number of issues that come up continually here, and I'm still not seeing them addressed by way of planning and policy from what the minister has just said. I took notes on a number of things, and I'll refer as I go along.

We have a huge problem with health workforce, and I remind everyone that that is not just about doctors and nurses. It's also about technicians. It's about physiotherapists. It's about speech therapists. It's about counsellors. It's all of our health professionals that make our system work. We particularly have enormous pressures in Medicine Hat, in Grande Prairie, in Peace River, in Westlock. All of those have cited very specifically health workforce problems, and that has led to closures of various units and various beds in the locations that I just mentioned.

I've talked about the huge infrastructure capacity problem in Calgary but also a workforce capacity problem. Over the summer what we had happening in Calgary was operating rooms were left vacant. There was no business going on there because of staff nursing shortages. Fifteen beds were closed at the Foothills hospital renal unit from June until mid-September, the entire summer. Also, we were cut back by diagnostic procedures. About a thousand exams were not proceeded with because of a reduction in hours due once again to staff. We had mental health beds that were closed for a month over the summer: all of this in the Calgary region. It's not just about pouring more money in there because, frankly, there aren't the health professionals to hire if we had all the money in the world right now.

Again we look to the government and say: where's your planning on this? How many spaces are you going to open up? Questions today for the Minister of Advanced Education saying: where is this plan of how we're going to get these people on stream? I want to also look beyond that and go: okay, if we get enough health professionals in here within, let's say, five or six years, which is what it's going to take, what is your planning for year 10, for four or five years beyond that? Do we need to keep increasing at that same rate, or should we be starting to draw back? Government is the only one that can do this kind of planning. Private health delivery services are not going to do this kind of planning and thinking. That's not their job. They're there to make money. It's for the government to do, and frankly the government hasn't done it.

The other big issue we hear is wait-lists, wait-lists in ERs, which I still refer to as the canary in the mine shafts. If we've got trouble in our ERs, we've got serious trouble because that for a lot of people is the entry point into the system.

We've got some advocates that are here with us today that have been generous enough to bring their own stories forward. I'm referring to the Lundys, who stayed with us through question period. They're still here in debate. That's darn hard to do, to put your personal life on display to make a point. And this is far beyond their personal situation. They're trying hard to make sure that this is going to improve the system and move beyond them, and my thanks to them for that work.

We've got wait-lists in the ERs. We've got wait-lists in things like surgery. I mean, when we're closing surgery units because we don't have enough staff or enough beds to do it, that's going to back up everything else that's happening. That's why we end up with people in the hallways in ER. We can't actually get them into a surgery ward and fix whatever their problem is if we take them through ER.

Lastly, I want to talk about primary care and family doctors, which is still a huge area of concern. All these new people that are coming can't get primary care doctors, family physicians. That does put them into the ERs, and we've already discussed the problem of there not being enough capacity in our ERs to handle that.

You know, I've been health critic now for just about two years, and I'm still hearing the same problems today that I did almost 24 months ago, and I don't see great solutions in place. I'm hearing the same problems. I'm hearing that there's a crisis. I'm hearing that there's not enough health workforce people. Twenty-four months later I'm hearing exactly the same things. I'm not seeing solutions to the problems. I'm not seeing the action that's going to move us past that.

The minister mentioned electronic health records. I'm concerned that we're falling behind on that. I know that the Premier attempted to sort of artificially jump-start that and put a new deadline in mind, but I'm really wondering whether we're going to be able to achieve it.

I would ask the minister to please not blame the seniors anymore. I'm really tired of hearing about how our health care system is going to be brought crashing down by the fact that we've got a bunch of people turning 65. That's a really cheap way out. It's blaming the victim, and it's simply not true. As a matter of fact, if you look around this room, I would bet you money that there's a number of people approaching 65 or, in fact, over 65 who would argue very strongly that they're not going to cost the health care system any money at all. They try hard to look after themselves, to be fit. We should be in better shape: we've had the advantage of nutrition, we've had the advantage of housing and heat in our houses, and we've had the advantage of medications and medical treatment to get us past things that would have killed our parents' or our grandparents' generation. Please quit blaming the seniors for this.

I find that it's the choices of this government that have created and caused the shortages and the pressures, and I don't find it acceptable that the delegated administrative organizations that are in place here, which is the health regions, are supposed to shoulder the burden for this. You have a health region like Calgary that says: "This is what we need. It's a very good argument. We're dealing with all of the back-capacity that was taken away from us plus the influx of new people. We need an 11.2 per cent increase." I would like an explanation from the minister why the government gives them 6 per cent and something. Why? There was no explanation from the government as to what the missing money was supposed to do. I say to the government: tell me why. What are they supposed to do with that difference? You just say no, but you give them no explanation for that. At least it's not a public explanation, and I think it should be. I want to know why that's happening.

Specifically, I'd like a breakdown from the minister on how the money for medical equipment will be spent, and she of course can provide that in writing. I'm wondering what equipment is required and, specifically, if she can give me that breakdown by region. Also, an idea of when this new equipment would be in operation. If we're buying it now, will we see it in place within three months, or are we on some kind of a waiting list and it's two years from now? With that, of course, do we have the professionals that are required to run $150 million worth of new equipment, or do we get that equipment in place, and once again, like the unused operating rooms, there's nobody to run the equipment and it just sits there? What's the plan? Let me see how that's going to work hand in hand.

I'm also wondering why this money wasn't included in the spring 2006 budget. This can't be new news, and if it is, I've got to question where the government is getting their information. What were they hoping for, this kind of windfall money that they were then going to use to fund the system? It's that kind of stop and start that's creating the inconsistency in planning that we have here.

I would really like to see a very detailed plan about how the health workforce training is going to work out. I'd like to see how many new spaces are going to be created in dentistry and pharmacy and in training LPNs, PCAs. I want to see all of this laid out and exactly where those spaces are going to be created and when, at what facilities, and how they're going to be funded by the government. We just get this vague stuff but nothing specific. We must know how many people are needed. Health sciences can tell you. AMA can tell you how many docs. They want 1,100 docs. You know, those numbers are out there. How is the government going to meet that, and how long is it going to take to meet it? What are we looking at in terms of scope of practice? The Liberal opposition has been suggesting that you look at things like nurse anaesthetists to help out in the operating rooms to be able to move some of that surgery. What kind of training programs are available there? How fast could we move people through? Can we fast-track that?

I mean, this is what Albertans cannot understand. How can we be so wealthy – the money is just spurting out of the ground, you know, and the government is hiding it all over the place in all kinds of special funds, and they've still got a four point something billion dollar planned surplus that's coming – and Albertans can't get in to see a doctor in the ER for 10 hours? That simply does not make sense to them. What is it that we want for our people in Alberta? If we want that kind of excellent system, then let's do it. A big part of that is the training. It's possible to fast-track training. Why aren't we doing it? Why aren't we attracting people from across the country to come here and do a fast-track training program? I can't get numbers out of people. I can't get an indication of institutions. Why? If you're really thinking about it, you should have that stuff.

I would like to know how the $31 million for auxiliary nursing salary adjustments is being allocated.

The minister talked a little bit about LPNs. I'm wondering if this could have been planned for earlier, or was it in the pipeline already, and now that you've got the money, you can do it? What if you didn't get the money? What was going to happen then?

I'm very much aware of the very short amount of time that's available. We basically have two hours today to debate, and there are some five or six ministries up. In consideration of my colleagues I will take my seat, most reluctantly as I would have liked to go through in detail a number of the health regions that are experiencing severe pressures. They've been in touch with me. They'd like questions asked. I'm going to have to look for another opportunity in order to give my ND colleague and, indeed, my Liberal colleagues an opportunity to debate other issues. I'm most angry about that, actually, because I don't think it's serving Albertans well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Just on one point. It's my understanding that the debate on Health is not just simply for this two hours. It will go on at the pleasure of this Assembly over this next week. I just want to make that observation and say that, in deference to the hon. member, many of the points that the hon. member has raised will be things that we will provide commentary in writing as she has requested and in order to make sure that we properly follow through.

I'd just like to make one observation. When we account for changing demographics and note the increase in the band of population that is over 65, we do so prudently because we want to acknowledge that on an annualized spending, they spend more. We spend more as we get older. It's a simple fact of life. So acknowledging that is not blaming those individuals. It's celebrating the fact that we have them here but also recognizing the need to fund that. The Aon report in its content identified quite clearly that that is prudent to do because the aging population will begin to catch us as early as 2015. We have to be planned and prepared for that, and I know the hon. member would want us to do that.

In deference to the members opposite and others in the Assembly who may wish to raise questions or ask for clarification, I will sit down and allow them to come forward with their points of view.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's interesting that we're here in this session, and again I would like to talk about what I call bad budgeting. Think about it, to this minister and to others. We bring forward a budget in March. We pass it in June. Here we are in August, you know, passing another budget, a funding increase of $262 million. Now, I'm not suggesting that the money isn't needed. It is needed. But for the life of me I cannot understand why we couldn't be doing these things when we brought our budgets in in March. Our budgets that we bring in the spring now, Mr. Chairman, basically mean nothing. It means nothing. You know, when we bring in – what? – $1.3 billion in capital funds, this is more than some provinces' budgets, and here we are dealing with this in two days.

I would just say to this government and to this minister specifically about this $262 million, putting $150 million to medical equipment: couldn't we possibly have foreseen that back when we were passing the budget? Eighty-one million for health authority operations. It's like the schools. They were saying: we've got a problem. Why couldn't we have seen it back then? And $31 million for auxiliary nursing salary adjustments. Why could we not have foreseen that these things were occurring, Mr. Chairman?

You know, the reality is and the government's excuse is that the economy is booming and all the rest of it. Well, that's true, but it's this government's economic strategies that are pushing that. They want to get in the tar sands as fast as they can, rip it out as fast as they can, and get into the American market. Well, it shouldn't surprise us under those circumstances that we have people moving here. They talk about 90,000, but surely that should have been part of the planning in health care – I'll talk about health care specifically – when you bring in an economic strategy. That's what you plan. You plan for the infrastructure: the social infrastructure, the health infrastructure. All these things should have been part of it, but this government seems to just sort of move ahead and say: "Well, good. We're planning. Go in and do what you can in the tar sands, and we'll see what happens after that."

We're starting to see what's happening in health care. We mentioned in the emergency debate that we've got serious problems. They're not going to get that much better, even with this money, unless we change some things around. That planning should have been done before, and I think the minister knows this. Now we're playing catch-up, and it's more expensive, and we're trying to play catch-up in our capital costs. With an overheated economy we're paying a lot more. So when we're going to have an economic strategy, the economic strategy should include the social infrastructure and the physical infrastructure. It hasn't been done, and now we've got serious problems.

Frankly, to the minister: all the rose-coloured glasses in the world can't take away this particular problem. Yes, we're spending more money. Yes, we are, but the reality is that the province is growing that much faster. It's like we've talked about in housing or education, the rest of it. So it doesn't matter what numbers you give us and say that we spend the most in Canada. That's irrelevant. It's how we begin to adapt and whether we need more money or not and how we adjust it. I think the minister knows this.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, we have some very serious problems in health care. I noticed that the minister in her remarks alluded to all the doctors and how things were coming along and that we're getting more doctors moving into the province. Well, I just noticed the president's letter from the Alberta Medical Association – I'm sure the minister has looked at this – that just came out on August 16 from the president, Dr. Lee, and what he is saying is very scary in this particular documentation. They're saying that in the first report in 2000 they predicted "an immediate shortage of 333 physicians and predicted a shortage of 1,329 physicians by 2005." Now they're saying that "the current estimated shortage is 1,088 physicians with a predicted shortage of 1,541 by 2010."

The minister says that there are more doctors moving here. That's true, but we're falling behind, and more of these doctors are retiring. So we have serious problems here, and the president's letter has indicated that. They go on:

Alberta has an average net increase of just over 200 doctors annually for the past five years. Even with this level of growth continuing, and all other factors remaining the same, Alberta will still be 1,500 physicians short by 2010. If we hope to address the predicted shortages, Alberta will [have] to add 500 new physicians per year for the next five years.

That's the result of a boom economy, and that's why we had to plan this to go along with it. That's the AMA saying that; it's not me. So that's the reality of what we're facing.

I would just like to say very quickly, Mr. Chair – and I won't go on long – about the framework that was announced on the website. Now, most of it, good. Primary care, fine. We've talked about this before. But you can understand our skepticism when we see on page 21 an expanded role for privatized surgical facilities. How will that make the system cheaper, when we put the profit motive in, rather than the alternate?

The other things you talk about, great. Communities and different delivery systems, great. But we always worry, because we know where it's coming from, that this is another move in a stealth sort of way to move into private health care. Why would we even mention that? Get on without doing it. The public told us very clearly: "I'm glad that we backed off on the dual systems. I'm glad we backed off on the so-called private insurance." But I also notice that on page 23 that could include the delisting of future medical services that may be medically necessary. I know it's going through a process, but excuse me if we're skeptical because we know where this government has been coming from, that that could lead, again, to more private insurance.

I recollect the minister saying that she would bring this new framework to the Legislature in the spring and that there would be full public consultation. There wasn't even a press release. We happened to catch it because of somebody from the nurses' union telling us that we should be concerned about this. All of a sudden it was on the website. I think that we deserve better than that in terms of bringing this forward.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of good things in that framework. The minister talked about primary care. Excellent. I think we have to go further in primary care to more of the community clinics, health professionals working much closer together. There are all sorts of things we have to look at there.

Mr. Chair, there are some other things – I'll be very quick about this – that we have to do to bring more physicians on. We could eliminate differential fees at medical schools. Certainly, we need more educational institutions. Alberta lags behind the national average in postsecondary spaces. We have to target rural shortages by creating a provincial work experience and internship program in rural areas. We can encourage recent graduates to practise in rural Alberta with expanded student loan forgiveness. We have to do something about more foreign doctors, especially in rural areas. There are all sorts of things that we can do, but it has to be done within the public system.

The things that the minister brags about are correct. She's right to brag about the changes to knee/hip, but that was done through the public system, as the minister is well aware. We should be concentrating on doing some of the things that are being done, but concentrate on those and not get carried away again in this whole privatization. It doesn't work, it's more expensive, and the minister knows that.

I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, that we are going to be playing catch-up, like we are in so many areas, because of the economic strategy, the way it is right now. These problems that we've talked about, the hospital closures and the serious things that are occurring in the hospitals, are going to continue even with this amount of money going in because, as predicted in the thing, we have 90,000 more people. We'd better do some things fast. It may require more money, but it's not just money. I think that rather than worrying about privatization, getting into that whole debate, we should start to fix the problems in the public system and look at some innovative ways that are occurring in other parts of the world. I don't know where the bulk buying of prescription drugs is that we've talked about compared to New Zealand. I know that the minister said in the past that they were looking at that. Where is that and a number of things that we have to do?

Rose-coloured glasses aren't going to solve this problem, and talking about how much is being spent is not going to solve the problem. It may be that we need more. When you've got 90,000, as in I think the Minister of Finance's press release, when you've got the size of Red Deer moving into Alberta all the time, then it's not relevant to compare what's happening in Saskatchewan or Manitoba and the rest of it in terms of numbers.

I would just conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I believe that there is a crisis not only in health care but in other areas, and this government is playing catch-up. The fact that we're having this session shows it. You know, as I said, bring in a budget in March, pass it in May, and here we are back asking for $1.3 billion in August. That's some way to manage the farm.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, I am tempted to reference a very old movie where the hon. member opposite and myself were part of the same organization, and I remember the school board one day examined a budget. I was part of the board at the time, and they looked at an allocation that was provided by the superintendent of schools that everybody questioned. They said: what is this amount of money? He referenced a conversation I've never forgotten. He said: "Well, you know, it's like if you have a tractor that you hope will get you through the season, but it might not get you through the season, so you put a little money away in case that tractor breaks down sometime during the year and you have to spend the money. So it's just there as a safeguard, so that if you need it, you can spend it."

What he was really referencing was an allocation that was provided for collective bargaining increases but wasn't necessarily identified for collective bargaining increases. It was some type of contingency. I have long rued the day that I moved away from places that had the capacity to put contingencies in. Health ministers across this country will tell you that the blood, sweat, and tears that go into getting a health budget allocation which they truly believe will fit that cloth that they have to provide for their constituents and their constituencies is just a battle. I look at the percentage increases all across this country. They range from 3.5 per cent, 5 per cent, 7 per cent. Somebody got 12 per cent, but the way they calculate their budgets is different than the way that we do, and you have to take a look at what base it's building on. I can assure the hon. member opposite that if we were able as health ministers to budget what we define as our list of wants, we may still not accommodate what we've had this year in the growing population and some of the particular challenges in some of the regions.

I also reference from my own constituency the boom/bust that happens in an economy, where all of a sudden when it's boiling, you need things now, and you may not have had the capacity to provide them in time to get those services there for when you see the whites of the eyes of the people. That is a very big difficulty that I think we have to wrestle with and hopefully overcome in the best way possible.

But your remarks on those points are both understood and empathized with, and as a health minister, if I was any other health minister in the country talking to you, I would probably say the same things. I would only rue the day, if I was in another jurisdiction, that I didn't have the ability to pump up the economy, if you will, for health care services like we are in Alberta. So we're truly advantaged.

I do want to make a couple of observations about the health policy framework, which has been referenced. Now, in April, when we made the announcement that we were not going to proceed with private health insurance, that we were not going to allow doctors to work in both systems, we emphasized that the workforce was one of the issues we wanted to both attract and retain. We took Getting on with Better Health Care, the existing health policy framework, and put it in one document, and we made this as an editorial release of something we had announced back in April. We announced this, Mr. Chairman, because we knew that Albertans wanted to find out what we were going to do. So this framework document is not a drastic departure from anything we've said. In fact, we listened to Albertans, explained our ideas, and released a document that was the response to theirs.

On delisting services, as mentioned by the hon. member opposite, there's not one mention of delisting services. What it does describe to Albertans is the decision-making process that's been in place for over a year and helps ensure responsible spending, particularly because of the use of the Alberta health technology decision process. That decision process is important to do the clinical and scientific review we need.

One of the hon. members opposite in the spring raised Enterra Therapy, for example, as one of the things to deal with gastroparesis, and I was overwhelmed by the petitions that I received and the letters: oh, please, relieve us with this electrical stimulator to look after persistent nausea and vomiting. In actual fact the health technology group with a group of experts was not able to validate that the scientific evidence was there to prove that this would be a valid type of technology to deploy. In fact, nowhere else in Canada do they fund this particular device.

So I'm saying that this identification of a process for a proper review of drug evaluation and therapeutics was inserted into the health policy framework to give Albertans an assurance of how the process would work when they ask for new drugs, new technologies. There has to be a process so that it can't be something that could be whimsical or political in evaluation.

The second point on the use of private surgical facilities. Well, it's common knowledge that HRC has been providing services to Calgary for hip and knee procedures, and a number of procedures are performed in a private facility but publicly funded. Once again, on page 21, for the use of those facilities we wanted to make sure that we identified precisely that they must be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, must have ministerial approval, and have a contract with a regional authority to be valid. We spent a lot of time working on that and felt that the insert of this was important because on an almost weekly basis people discuss this kind of procedure.

Now we'll be able to reference a document that points out what the lay of the land is. Hopefully it won't change that much, at least in my tenure, but I note that the new president of the CMA has already raised the spectre that there may be changes that will be contemplated by doctors across the country, so we'll see what debate follows through. But I intend to do nothing of the sort with the mandate we have in this government, and we certainly don't intend, as the member hinted at, that we might govern by stealth. I'm much preferring us to be open and declare our intentions, and hopefully we are doing that this afternoon.

The Chair: Does anyone else wish to participate in the discussion? The next issue for consideration is the Department of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I think we would proceed with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development instead at this time.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development I will just indicate the following. There is a need for an additional $715,000 to defend Alberta in aboriginal litigation matters. Alberta has been named a defendant in aboriginal lawsuits containing claims of more than $125 billion in damages. I'm not sure if that reads billion or million; I can't quite tell from the note here, but we'll clarify that quickly. It does say billion, quite clearly, from one standpoint.

In any event, this litigation is not reflective of the relationship between Alberta and First Nations, which is both positive and very much strengthening. However, three actions are being pursued actively by lawyers for the plaintiffs, and in these claims two attempts are there to set aside treaty land entitlement settlements and to challenge the validity of Treaty 8. Also, there's one attempt to challenge the validity of both Treaty 7 and the natural resources transfer agreement. Now, in addition to claims for monetary damages from Alberta of approximately $35 billion, which, I guess, jibes with the $125 billion I referenced earlier, these active cases claim aboriginal title to the entire province and challenge the validity of every resource disposition issued in Alberta's history.

Over the past seven years expenditures in defending litigation have been contained within the ministry's budget. The combined cost of fees and disbursements for outside counsel and the cost of research, document collection and management have averaged about $500,000 per year, but the increased pace of the three active cases has increased expenditures for 2006-07 quite substantially. These developments are either mandated by the courts or they are in response to initiatives by the plaintiffs, and the result is an increase in litigation costs from $500,000 to more than $1.2 million.

Alberta Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development as well as Finance, Energy, Sustainable Resource Development, and Justice are co-operating in the preparation of a longer range plan to resource aboriginal litigation issues. This proposal will be presented as part of our 2007-2008 business planning process, and accordingly the request is for one-time funding of $715,000, which I would on behalf of the minister request favourable consideration thereto.

Thank you.

4:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In light of the fact that I have a number of questions which, it's unlikely, would get answered in this situation right now, I would like to submit some questions to the minister in writing at a later date and hope I will get a response to them. In light of the fact that we have many, many more millions of dollars to debate before 5:30, I will just submit my questions in writing later on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am just again going to be somewhat brief as my colleagues have suggested that we have lots of things to do and a very short period of time in which to do them. However, I don't want to pass up the opportunity to just make some brief comments on this situation.

It's unfortunate that the scope of these lawsuits has embraced basically almost all of the land area and resource base of the province, but then I believe and I think that it's increasingly obvious that due to improper planning by Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development over a long period of time, things have come to this crisis situation where people are seeking recourse in the courts to provide for basic services for aboriginal people across this province.

I've expressed the same sentiments in the past, and I will again, that we only have to look as far as the terrible overrepresentation of aboriginal people in our prisons in this province, look at the overrepresentation of aboriginal people on the rolls of our social service programs and health care, low success rates in education, and so on and so forth, to see that we are living still in the direct shadow of the mishandling and mismanagement of aboriginal affairs in this province and across western Canada for these past hundred years.

So living within that larger shadow of history, I think that it's appropriate that this ministry might use this opportunity in the supplementary estimates to in fact try to address more directly these glaring and embarrassing and tragic problems that we see in our aboriginal community in regard to overrepresentation in the prison population, the health issues, high unemployment, et cetera.

I just wanted to be on the public record, and I will have questions specifically for the minister, when she is available, in regard to this court case, but I do want to be on the record and say that, you know, this unfortunate court case is a direct result of mismanagement of aboriginal affairs in this province. Until we address these injustices in a comprehensive and honest and thorough way, then we can only see the problems getting worse and the solutions becoming more complex.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would just say on behalf of the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development that answers will be provided either in writing or later during the debate during Committee of Supply or perhaps during the anticipated second reading, committee stage, and so on of the actual Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act once it is tabled.

Community Development

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we do have one of our ministerial colleagues who will address the issue of supplementary estimates on behalf of the Minister of Community Development. I see that he is prepared to do that, so I would cede the floor to him for that purpose.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Minister of Community Development I just thought I would comment a little bit on the supplementary estimates of his department, just a few comments. They're receiving 15 and a half million dollars "to fund site reclamation at various historic sites and provincial parks related to environmental liabilities and expense."

Some of this funding will be directed to historical sites. For example, it will help construct a new site protection and containment system at the Turner Valley gas plant. The health and safety of the people of Turner Valley continues to be a priority for the department. They are committed to funding this new system to prevent hydrocarbons and other contaminants from moving off site to allow for their removal. They received construction tender bids on August 11 and are currently evaluating them, and they'll have a better idea of the cost once they have finished reviewing the tender submissions. They continue to monitor and work with Health and Environment and other experts to make the site safe.

With regard to provincial parks I'd just add one comment. The additional funding for parks is required for reclamation of some abandoned wells, old sewer systems, abandoned mine shafts, and old garbage sites.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on the supplementary supply estimates for 2006-07. On page 24 I can see that the government is asking for an additional amount of 15-plus million dollars. Some of the money is – there's a breakdown, but it's not all of it. I can't see a clear statement here of where they are spending this money, but I have a few questions about these supplementary supply estimates.

First of all, we don't know where this money is going exactly because we don't have anything in writing, a breakdown of which department this money is going to, and why this department has failed in finding out the cost for different departments. The Community Development department this time again has failed to give us proper plans. I want to know why this department has failed in finding out, you know, any specific amount of money at budget time. No formal confirmation of purpose of monies. The first-quarter document suggests that some of the money is for acquisition of aboriginal artifacts.

This money, $15,537,000, is a huge amount of money, and this is nonbudgetary disbursements. Will any of this money go towards better supporting the Alberta Foundation for the Arts? Book publishers in the province are being driven out of business due to this government's lack of support, so it would be nice to hear that some of this money is going to support the arts and cultural community in Alberta. It's missing again. I know that the previous ministers keep on promising that they will give us a proper policy on support of cultural facilities. I haven't seen that so far in any of this money.

I want to know if any of this money is going towards the recently announced Glenbow ranch provincial park. I don't have the breakdown. I know the money is going towards provincial parks, but which provincial park the money is going to I don't know. I want to know if the minister can give me the breakdown on this.

Will any of this money go towards sports and recreation?

I can see on page 23 that close to $14 million is going to cultural facilities and historical resources but not in detail which cultural facilities, which town, whereabouts. It's not clear. I would like to know where the government is spending this huge amount of money. Also, I'm interested to know because last time we saw the Alberta sports plan was in 2003, and every year the minister keeps on changing. They keep on promising that we will give to the Alberta sports plan, and so far we haven't seen any.

Once again I request the government, through Mr. Chairman, that in the future if the government is spending a huge amount of money, the priority should be sports because sports in Alberta are very much concerned with the health department. If Albertans are healthy, we will spend less money in the hospitals, so it's very important. I'm sure the government will consider this very seriously.

This year the budget has zero dollars allotted for cultural facilities and the historical resources grants. I'm really glad to see that the intention of the government in this supplementary is really good, but how do they spend money? If they just throw the money at the problems, like they did in the past in a different department, that's not acceptable to me, and it's not acceptable to my constituents. I hope this government listens and that they do the needful and give this department of cultural facilities and historical resources, you know, the money they need so that they can help Albertans to get proper attention on this matter.

I hope they are not spending money on horse racing. Last time they spent quite a huge amount of money on horse racing. I'm glad this time the government's attention is cultural facilities, parks, and protected areas as well as various historical sites and provincial parks related to the environmental liabilities. This is a good thing.

I hope the priorities of this government are more funding for the arts and humanities, the Human Rights Commission. They should promote and support Alberta sports, Olympic athletes for the year 2010 for the winter games, the Alberta comprehensive sports plan, which is due for a long, long time.

Some of the members sitting here have been Minister of Community Development some time ago, and they should make a note and suggest that the present minister initiate this matter as soon as possible and make Alberta active and healthy. As I said before, if the money is going to recreational facilities, that will help to make Albertans active and healthy and reduce the load in the hospitals and save some dollars from Alberta health care. I hope the priorities of this government are also an Alberta sports plan in the coming year.

I want the government to begin to develop a strategy that will promote and support Alberta sports as well.

I just want to know why they can't have long-term economic priorities like long-term, sustainable funding, to spend money wisely. When they make a budget, they don't show us where the money is after the budget is done, and then they always ask for an additional amount of money. This is surprising to me. I don't know how the other members feel, but this is mismanagement, I would say, and it should not be happening.

Every time the members remind them that they should mention during the budget time. We discussed the budget three months ago, and now again we are discussing here additional billions of dollars. Okay, $1.2 billion or whatever. This is a huge amount of taxpayers' money. We should at least listen to the people who elected us. This is mismanagement.

We should improve every year, but since I was elected, I see the same routine keep coming, the same thing this government is repeating again and again, and nobody listens. I hope that if I say something, somebody listens, and they act on this and make this money useful for Albertans. [interjection] I don't know. I am just requesting everybody to listen and act accordingly because it's a huge amount of money. You're not buying a suit or socks for yourself. You're talking about billions of dollars, and, no, I don't think a majority of the members sitting here take it seriously, and they should. I read one big booklet for the last, say, 20 years, the same routine budget after budget. They keep on asking for an additional amount of money.

Mr. R. Miller: What happens if you go over budget in your constituency office?

Mr. Agnihotri: The constituency budget. Yeah, the same thing.

My question is: when will that time come when the elected officials start listening to their constituents and act accordingly? At least save some dollars for the people who elected them, who put faith in them. It's not happening.

Another of my questions is the social priorities. All socio-economic groups get benefits from Community Development, and I hope nobody is left behind. If we have an Alberta advantage and Community Development is giving grants to different communities, it's a very good idea, but I want to make sure that that advantage is for everybody. Everybody. Not a few people. It should be for everybody. I want to see the balance, which has not happened in the past. All Albertans worked hard in the past, and they deserve to be treated as anybody else. So I request once again that there should be a balance. All communities should be served properly and . . .

Mr. Bonko: Fairly.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yes, fairly because the gap between rich and poor is increasing in Alberta. I was door-knocking last month, and the majority of people are asking – some people are not fortunate enough, and they are asking me: “Where is the money for this purpose? Where is the money for this purpose?” Some people are getting the major share, and some people are unfortunate and are not receiving enough funds. How this system works I don't know. I request the members sitting here that they should take it very seriously.

We have no problem. I mean, we will sanction this additional amount of money once again. But I warn and request the Assembly to please consider that if this is happening, say, in the last 20 years, let's pledge that it should not happen next year.

Thank you very much. God bless you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just very briefly want to augment the comments that have been made by my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. Thank you to him for being an excellent advocate for the quality-of-life areas that we find under the Department of Community Development.

No surprise to you, Mr. Chair, my advocacy and strong ties to the arts and cultural sector. When I look around at some of the other ways that this government is choosing to spend money in this province, I continue to argue for an investment in the arts for job creation but also for job retention. We have a lot of people moving to this province. We want them to stay here and become part of a stable community, to put down roots, buy houses, participate in their communities. An integral part of that is the arts and cultural sector.

We, as you have heard me say many, many times over the last 10 years, are appallingly bad at supporting our arts and culture sector in this province. I mean, essentially we're giving it the same amount of money today that we did in 1988. It hasn't been adjusted for inflation. There's a little, tiny increase that happened in the budget this year of $3 million, but, you know, we need to go big on this one, not to double the budget to the arts but triple the budget to the arts or maybe quadruple the budget to the arts, which still isn't going to bring it over $100 million.

When I look at how much we're subsidizing the horse-racing industry, which is a for-profit industry – yes, it employs some people – and when I look at the cultural sector and the approximately $20 million that it's getting right now, if we turned that into $60 million or $80 million, the number of people that would benefit, I would argue, would far exceed that that benefits from the subsidy of the horse-racing industry, which in an annual budget from this government is now running at about $66 million a year. I notice as part of this supplementary budget that we're talking about an additional amount not to exceed $8.3 million. So at $66 million plus the $8.3 million we're well over $70 million a year this year for the horse-racing industry, which is a private-sector industry. It's a private corporation. This government is not out of the business of being in business at all.

In comparison to that, we've got a not-for-profit sector that actually retains people and particularly those people the government professes that it's interested in retaining with education and ties to the business community, et cetera, et cetera. A couple of the things that we're really starting to hurt from in this province because of the underfunding of the arts are things like our publishing industry, our recording industry, our film industry, and our fine crafts. All of those help us to get our artwork out to others. We also need to look at touring dollars if we're trying to get our stories out and bring other people's stories back to us. We need to invest in the touring of our arts and culture sector around, both in the province and outside of the province.

So, you know, I continue to hear mouthings from the other side about how important the arts and culture sector is with absolutely no real support for it. How about the report that was done by the HRE a couple of years ago on cultural industry workers? It went nowhere. A very strong report that had all kinds of great things to say, got no support, and it just died.

There's a lot this government could be doing. I appreciate my colleague's efforts in trying to encourage the government to do that, and I will answer that as well. This is our future. This is a knowledge sector. We want to invest in arts and culture. This is going to continue to pay back for us. It's renewable, it's people centred, and it makes Alberta a much better place to be. So not just $20 million a year, but let's take that horse-racing money and put it in there. We could have 90 million bucks a year into the arts and cultural sector. Now you'll see something very cool happen.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make some brief comments on the supplementary estimates for Community Development. This is one of the ministries where the original budget was I think grossly undervaluing this particular ministry at least by half. I know for a fact that the minister responsible for it at the time was very, very disappointed to see this important cultural ministry undervalued, essentially, in the spring estimates.

So when I saw that we were going back to Community Development, I did flip with some anticipation to see if our arts and culture and parks sector wasn't going to be finally belatedly rewarded. But I see that, in fact, where this money is being spent is in sort of peculiar areas: where the Community Development ministry has inherited some structural problems on sites they have rather than actually on investing in human cultural development in regard to the arts and provincial parks. So I confess that I was a bit disappointed to see where the money actually went.

Also, I just wanted to make a comment briefly. Specifically, having to spend millions of dollars on the Turner Valley site I think is part of a long legacy of how we ended up picking a real lemon here with this site. The owners of the site knew that the Turner Valley historical site was in fact terribly contaminated from long use as an energy plant, so I believe that when we picked this up for a dollar or whatever the deal was, the people were happy to unload it. Now with the contamination of the Sheep River from this area we're obliged to clean up probably a very long and complicated mess that someone else made. I mean, it seems, of course, as though we are left holding the bag with this. What a shame that Community Development is having to spend such significant funds on something that otherwise could be money put to better use.

Also, when I heard that provincial parks were part of this budget change, again I was anticipating with some hope that there would be some investment in the infrastructure in regard to actual campgrounds and redeeming some recreational areas that have been left in quite significant neglect over the last 10 or 15 years. I received a number of complaints in regard to people finding campgrounds that are in obvious states of disrepair and neglect. Again, we're not seeing that money going directly to those places that need that assistance. Some areas are being fixed up, but others are being left to go to seed.

At this juncture of rapid economic development, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this is the chance we have to increase the amount of park space that we have in the province. I believe that, you know, at least 10 per cent of the province should be with some degree of protection for recreational and wilderness areas. Otherwise, we just can't do it. The time will pass very quickly, and with each month and year millions of acres of land are being redeveloped for industrial and mixed use. Now is the time for us to invest in our provincial parks system so that we have a legacy of wilderness and recreational areas that we can be proud of for the future. We need to put the money into this department, so here's the chance with our surprise summer session.

We're not meeting the needs of this ministry at all, I would say. This budget is grossly underfunded in regard to arts and culture, and considering the rapid urbanization and immigration to this province, I think it's a crying shame.

Thank you.

4:50

The Chair: Anyone else wishing to participate in this discussion? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I apologize. I've got too many things going on. We have such a short session that it's hard to keep up, but I have a couple of questions. It says here that it's requested for site reclamation and related to environmental liabilities. I wasn't sure: are these overruns, or have we found more things that we need to update? Are these reclamations? Have we been aware of them? I don't understand why they weren't in the budget at the start of the year. All of a sudden we have $15 million worth of expenses that have been added on. So I'm somewhat surprised at that amount.

As some of the other members have said, though, that the parks are very much enjoyed by Albertans and Canadians and visitors from around the world, that they are getting to the point where they're very costly. I just had two people comment to me in my own riding about Waterton national park and the cost of $80 to get in now even for seniors for a year's pass. The prices are going up and up, and it just seems like we're passing on the bucks to the few users that get in there, and we're discouraging more people from going into our parks and recreation areas.

I hope that this money is well allocated and that it's not because of the rush to try and get the job done in one year that the expense has gone up so much because we're paying a premium in order to get the work done. I would appreciate seeing a more even-handed budget, where this would occur over four or five years rather than just one year, if that in fact is happening. But I'll wait to hear and find out more later.

Thank you.

Economic Development

The Chair: The Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to bring to the attention of the Legislative Assembly that we're asking for some additional funding, and this basically and primarily is to assist us in our provincial nominee program, to help us seek out and find and recruit immigrants to Alberta that will help us with the labour shortages we have, and that would be in the skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled categories.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I'd like to say welcome back to the hon. member. It's a pleasure to see you here. I will continue on with some of my other comments then. First of all, I think we realize that there has been a labour force shortage for some time, not just six months. It has been coming for about a year. I mean, we can see the times, and we can recognize some of the obvious signs out there. This government is one that's pro importation of temporary foreign workers, so to request the monies that are being sought here, the $2,235,000, is perhaps a little bit premature because the request for this could have been and should have been handled in the spring budget. I know that it's not a lot of money, but in the big picture it's a lot of money. It could fund schools or hot lunch programs or hospital beds. Instead, we're dealing with labour shortages that we knew about as well as the importation of foreign workers.

Some of the specifics. Given that the additional money requested is for funding, is this a policy change from the business plans that were given in the springtime? That would be one of them. I also thought that immigration was a federal issue, unless we're trying to have the same sort of deal that Quebec has, which is to be able to directly manage and determine the amount of immigration into our province. I don't know if that's the case that we have here before us today.

Is any of that money being used for hosting in the future to try and attract solid business venture or skilled workers or immigrants? How much money is going to be required for travel to fill this request as well? Like I said, we have a labour shortage here, and we're going to go throughout other provinces in Canada trying to take their labour shortage woes and compound them just to fill our need. I'm not sure.

Is any of this money being used to cover any of the costs of the Smithsonian festival down there in Washington? I know that we had a number of people from Alberta to host and highlight some of the activities and the experiences that we in Alberta sometimes take for granted. We're trying to bring that much more travel there. Is any of this to cover the hosting expenses of the individuals as well as the MLAs that were down there taking in some of the activities? As well, has the department done any cost-benefit analysis in relation to the money that was spent down at the Smithsonian? I'd look forward to seeing a breakdown of that.

How can Albertans be confident that the money is going to be used wisely? Like I said, with a $33 billion plus budget that we have, how can $2 million adequately address the labour shortage? I'm not sure. Are we just putting up bigger billboards? I don't know. The big one is: how will the money address the labour shortage?

Those are just some of the specifics with regard to this particular request. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dunford: Just a couple of things to make sure that we're on the record. This is not a Quebec-style type of immigration policy. The member needs to be aware that in agreements with the federal government each province was able to have a provincial nominee program, and certain parameters were set upon the particular agreement as it was developed and signed. We are planning to expand the provincial nominee agreement in two ways: one is to increase the numbers, and the second is to shift the focus from solely on skilled labour to, as mentioned, categories of labour that could also include semi-skilled and unskilled.

Also, this money will be used in the future rather than the past. So it will not be used in any way, shape, or form for any outstanding obligations that there might be from the Smithsonian.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I'd like to thank the minister for clarifying that a little bit. I guess my question, to go a step further, is that the federal immigration program isn't working as well in Alberta as we would like. So I would encourage the minister to continue looking at perhaps having our own plan that works for Alberta, as Quebec has for their interests.

I appreciate that we're going to unskilled labour because the small businesses are the ones that, as I'm sure everyone in this House is aware, are going around looking for workers. Last year we were debating about having to raise the minimum wage. Well, it's standard now. You go around, and they're advertising $9, $10, $11, $12, up to $15 for unskilled work. So it's great to see the minimum wage issue being eliminated. But it's very frustrating for the small business owners that I've gone and talked with in that they struggle a great deal with trying to bring over people that want to come and that they know from the countries they've immigrated from, yet they can't get them here.

So I would encourage the minister to look at making a made-in-Alberta policy and perhaps taking immigration into our jurisdiction, which we have the jurisdictional right to do, to benefit the workforce and the businesses here in the province. Like I say, I'd encourage him to continue to aid businesses in being able to get foreign workers into the province and not just as temporary but as full-time.

Thank you.

Human Resources and Employment

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment I would ask for favourable consideration of the supplementary estimates as indicated in the supplementary estimates table earlier and also undertake on his behalf that questions asked, should there be any at this time, will be answered in writing by the minister, or they will be answered verbally in debate later on during this discussion or once the actual estimates culminate in the presentation of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, which is anticipated next week.

Thank you.

5:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that these amounts in the whole scheme of things are not a great deal, but I look at the whole scheme of things too, and I see, you know, a billion and a half dollars being spent in hardly any time. We're all kind of rushing through it in order to give everybody a bit of time to address these estimates. It's bizarre that we keep on doing this time and time again, that we can't have a budgetary process that will fully plan for many of these types of items.

I look at this item and I see that it's something that should have been, I think, in the budget in the spring, and I wonder why it's missed. We see this billion and a half, and it sort of reminds me of, say, looking at somebody playing the VLTs in our province, and they're running out of money and then running to the cash machine. You know, we've got a few hours to debate a billion and a half dollars. It's like myriad and many millions a minute. That's not democratic accountability, and that's not really responsible government.

A few questions just to be brief. Why was this amount not foreseen in our original budget? The second question is: why is this being funded from general revenues, and why is this particular disability income continuance plan for that bargaining unit not fully funded? A third question is: what is the estimated long-term liability for long-term disability in this unit, and is there a plan to pay down and fully fund this liability? A fourth question is: are there any other unfunded liabilities of this nature in the public service administered by the public administration office? Those are the four questions directed at this particular supplementary supply estimate, and I would appreciate those replies in writing when they do come.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and again I'll be brief. I have certain questions that I guess we'd at least throw out. We've been told that there is an ongoing – it seems to be ongoing – labour standards review, and we're never sure where that's at. It was supposed to be last spring, and now it got into the whole debate about child labour and the rest of it. I guess that with the minister not here the question I would ask is: where does that stand? Is the actual review coming, and when is it going to be made public so that we can take a look at it?

The other discussion I've had with the minister – and I won't go into the broad aspect of labour laws, but certainly the one that created the problem in the Brooks area with the Tyson strike was the idea of first contract bargaining. That was something the minister has said in the past in this Assembly that they were still looking at whether they were going to do it. There are only a couple of provinces that don't. We think it's self-evident that they should be doing that. Again, I'd like to know where the government stands with this very important issue.

Mr. Chairman, the other area that I've raised in the past has to do with the Appeals Commission with the WCB. We're talking about increasing persistent delays. We go back to the report, the earlier recommendations from when the government looked at this. They made it clear that appeals should take no more than 90 days, and this should be in regulation. Well, their own report that just came out shows that the wait time for WCB appeals now is at least 218 days and up to 280 days. Something has to be done. Now, maybe this is part of the same old problem with the booming economy: we're having more people getting injured or whatever the cause is. But we're not even close to what the government laid out back in the reports five years ago. As I said, justice delayed is justice denied. I'm sure all hon. members would say that in their constituency offices problems with the WCB and specifically the Appeals Commission take a great deal of our time. So I'd like to know what we're going to do about this delay. It's been raised before, and I'd like to raise it again.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the other part was brought up today by the Leader of the Opposition, and it has to do with Alberta Works. When we think about being a disadvantaged person in this society, we're talking about the housing crisis, we're talking about all the other things that are occurring. We talk about Alberta always being the greatest. We sort of laugh about it: it's the greatest in Canada, the greatest in the world, the greatest in the universe. The National Council of Welfare says that Alberta has the second-lowest for single employables, and there are a lot of people coming into this province thinking they're going to find jobs that they aren't. That's not something to be proud of. We have the lowest for persons with disabilities, and that's the lowest in the country in a very rich province, the lowest for single-parent households with one child, mid-range for a couple with two children. Now, this is in an overheated economy in the richest province. With the amount of money rolling in here, we're probably the richest place in North America.

There was a small increase, I think, back on May 1 but not nearly enough. Really, it should become clear to this government, and I guess this is the question that I would ask: why are we not moving towards a market-basket measure for social supports? This is particularly important in municipalities like Calgary, Fort McMurray, and Edmonton now, which are seeing increased housing costs and overall inflation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would take the hon. House leader at his word, and we would expect a reply to these important questions in this department. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you again, Mr. Chair. You know, I was very interested a little earlier in the estimates that were brought forward by the Minister of Economic Development. He mentioned some of the monies that are being spent by his department for the provincial nominee program and seeking out skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled individuals in other areas. It's an area that I think is of particular concern to many Albertans, especially those who run small businesses because those are the people that have been stressed the most in this labour market.

The labour market, of course – everybody can see it – is being incredibly affected by the conventional oil and gas industry and will be increasingly affected by the oil sands industry. The oil sands industry, of course, has been moderately booming for about seven or eight or nine years, and we'll see a huge increase in the number of employees that are required there. But the real increase has been spurred on by $75 a barrel or more oil and the conventional oil and gas industry that is punching holes everywhere it can and trying to take advantage of a commodity price that is at its zenith.

How long will this last? How long will we see the American economy continue? Many people are forecasting that it will begin to see some serious downturn in the new year. We're into the 58th month of a commodity boom right now. The last longest commodity boom in many generations, to be truthful, was 28 months. This is fuelled, of course, by some of the foreign policy of the Bush administration in the United States and the transfer of the manufacturing capabilities, quite a bit of them, largely from North America to China and the needs of growth there.

A lot of the things that we see are not just shortages in labour. There are shortages in various things like concrete, cement, gravel, steel, and many, many other things that are components of construction.

Another question that would be going to the minister of human resources, and I would like a reply in writing: what are the projected increases that the provincial government and his department will be seeking in terms of numbers for the provincial nominee program, and can those numbers be directed to help small businesses with the great problems that they're having right now in maintaining their businesses? We may be seeing constriction. We may be seeing businesses closing. I've got a restaurant in my area that's not doing its lunch trade, for an example on a small basis. There are many restaurants having that problem. I had a bank manager just a couple of blocks from my constituency office quit his job here a couple of weeks ago to go work the rigs. You know, we're seeing odd things happening, and how long this boom will last, how long we'll see this keep going like this is a real question, but how it is affecting those small businesses is real. We sure would like to see them maintain themselves here in Alberta and maintain employment from people who could come under that provincial nominee program.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The next item we will go back to is Health and recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health and Wellness (continued)

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm really glad that we've been able to get a bit more time on Health. I appreciate my colleagues' co-operation in that, at the same time recognizing that likely we did not discuss everything that had been brought to our attention as we tried to truncate everything and get it in.

I'd just like to go a bit more in depth in the notes that I have accumulated since the break and particularly talk about the health region deficits. I went back through the notes I took while the minister was speaking, and I apologize: I heard her say something and I didn't write it down, so I will repeat a question. On the $81 million that is set aside for the health region deficits, the way it's written up on page 38 of the supplementary supply estimates book is that there is "$112,000,000 for additional operating funding to health authorities, including $31,000,000 for the anticipated cost of auxiliary nursing salary adjustments," which in my calculations is leaving us about $81 million beyond that. Will that be covering all of the deficits from all of the health authorities? I know the minister said something about that, and I'm sorry that I missed it, so I'm just asking about that again.

I've done some research about what's out there, and I know that with the Chinook health region, for example, they have a current-year operating deficit of $2.4 million, but they have a $9.6 million total deficit accumulated from the previous year. I don't know how much of that might be taken care of or, indeed, any of it. Certainly, the top three issues that they're concerned about are, number one, human resources and recruitment of health professionals, a huge issue for them, and with that comes providing access to all of the health services. They have an extra concern there that the funding formula is based on population with adjustments taking into consideration both age and gender. It's no secret to any of us in this House that pockets of southern Alberta have a higher percentage of seniors than other parts of Alberta. Although I have argued before that I don't feel that seniors are necessarily going to cost the health care system more, there can be a diversity of services that's required. Certainly, that's the feedback I'm getting from people in that health region. If we included long-term care costs in there, that may well be the case.

As a part of this supplementary supply and my continuing questioning of the government around their planning and policy development process, we have to bring up once again: where are we with long-term care? We had the first anniversary last May of the Auditor General's special report on long-term care, which certified what residents and their families and their friends and advocacy groups in the community and, indeed, the Official Opposition and this member had been saying for many years: that long term care was beyond in a crisis, that in some cases it was downright dangerous, and it was being appallingly managed.

So we've had the anniversary of that report. We've had the minister or ministry officials agree that it would be a certain amount of money to sort of come up to speed. I think the amount that was said at the time was $250 million, and we've had a fraction of that that's actually been brought forward. So is any of this money that's being pledged here today to address specific concerns in long-term care, which I think is behind what's being brought forward by the Chinook health region?

There also seems to be a desire to move to expansion of the Lethbridge regional hospital, especially to include more space for outpatient programming, and I think that's including radiation therapy. That area also has some special considerations for First Nation and aboriginal peoples. With that is a focus on preventing and managing diabetes in particular but also obesity and the complications that that brings with it. So that's around a focus on education on the risk factors for diabetes and early testing and diagnosis but also, as we know, really good chronic management of diabetes. If you can manage those chronic diseases well, then they don't escalate into a need for the more intensive and therefore more expensive health services that become required in others ways, like use of an ICU, for example, if they end up with real foot problems or eye problems, kidneys, et cetera.

There is an identified need in Chinook region for new technology and operating room design and equipment. They believe that this would shorten the lengths of stays and increase the surgical capacity and would also likely help them recruit and retrain specialists, obviously. They're looking for $1.5 million there for two operating theatres, so I'm wondering what's going to happen with that request. Is any of that money going to be included in the $112 million? Perhaps it's part of the $150 million that's additional capital grants for the medical equipment that's being offered.

You know, I find this government that talks about accountability and transparency very frustrating when you're talking about $262 million and there are basically two sentences that describe everything. We're constantly having to go through and say: "Well is it going to cover this? Is it going to cover that? What about this? What about that?" I don't understand why we can't just get a listing of what the money is supposed to cover. You know, if they know that they need $150 million for additional capital grants to support medical equipment, what's the medical equipment? For whom? For what? Why can't it just be printed out instead of this constant sort of teasing out of information? The minister tries very hard to answer the questions on the spot, but again we're time limited. Then some months down the road there's something that comes in writing which doesn't completely answer the question. So it's a very frustrating process.

The other place where we're seeing pressure around long-term care and home care specifically is the David Thompson health region. I haven't been able to find out what the deficit is in that region, so I don't know how much money would be going there to deal with that, but our research has shown that they seem to feel that there's quite a bit of pressure on home care.

We do end up with a patchwork of services across the province with the health region structure. That's one of my concerns about having it all divvied up like that. Each health region is supposed to try and deliver services to their people. You do end up with checkerboarding. You don't get the same kind of health care resources, you know, in Edson as you do in Edmonton. You just don't. Are Albertans willing to accept that? I don't know. I would say that they would argue not, that they should be able to get the same thing that you can get in the city. But here we have home care. There are also increasing wait times for long-term care beds in the David Thompson region. So is any of that going to be addressed with the money that's coming here?

Now, we've had admissions to one of the continuing care centres, called CollegeSide, curtailed back in the spring because they didn't have enough staff. Has that situation been alleviated? Are they able to move on from that? Is there enough staff there now? Is this money going to help with that? Same issues around the shortage of physicians: both recruiting and retention, problems with people having to work through their holidays, not being able to get enough locums, all of those. We've heard all this before.

The other area that has specifically come before me was Peace Country health region. The staffing shortages there are really critical. This is one of the areas that had to close off access to some of the emergency departments in that area. They seem to be looking for a lot of money for capital upgrades as well, but on the closures, the Leader of the Official Opposition spoke in question period today about the number of people that had to be flown from that area into Edmonton to be looked after. I'm looking also at 10 psychiatric beds that were closed and some problems with surgery and ER and that they had a critical shortage of physicians so that patients had to be sent to Edmonton. So, you know, how are they finding some relief there?

There was a request to the infrastructure minister back in April that they needed new acute care facilities in High Prairie and Grande Prairie. Has that been addressed by any of this money? There is a deficit there, and the argument is that the deficit would be even larger if they actually had the staff to be able to fully deliver all of the services. If they were able to deliver all of the service that they normally do, the deficit would be even larger: that is the argument that we've got coming from them. This is the location where the ICU was closed during the first week in August.

I've spoken to some of the doctors up there, and they are beyond frustration. You know, if they could have, they would have sent some people here during this short sitting to try and underline their concerns with what's happening there. Of course, they can't even take their holidays, never mind come here to lobby. You could just hear the stress in their voices. It's really critical.

One of the other areas that I've been watching really closely and that I've spoken a bit about is the Aspen health region as well. That's where we had the in-patient beds closed. All the other ones that I've talked about have been surgical beds, ICU for example, some renal-care beds, but this is in-patient beds for the whole month of August. This isn't just a week because you're trying to cover, you know, somebody that's out on holiday and there's nobody else to cover for them. This is a whole month. That's a fairly central region, so I suppose the idea is that they can just come in to Capital. But we had closures in the Sturgeon hospital, which is part of Capital region, so in putting all of the load on Edmonton – yes, they're able to carry it right now, but how long are they expected to carry all of that? Sure, they're paid for people that come from other health regions – they get reimbursed for that – but they still have to have all the doctors and nurses and bedsheets and gowns and all of that here to be able to accommodate those people. So this is no small thing.

I've talked about David Thompson. I've talked about the Peace Country. I've talked about Aspen and Palliser and Chinook. I mean, these are issues in almost every single health region in the province. This isn't small stuff that can be dealt with easily and will go away. You know, people are feeling that it's critical, and they can't seem to get the attention of the government long enough to get any sort of relief from them that there's going to be an end to it all, and I think that's what is causing a big part of why we're having such a hard time with physician retention in the rural areas. They just don't see where it's going to end. Why would you bother trying to tough it out another week, another month when, in fact, you could be toughing it out another two, three, four, five years?

An awful lot of this goes back to: where are we going to get the health professionals from? Where are the real concrete steps that are being taken to fast-track, to open those new spaces? You know, I'm now hearing in Calgary, just as we're about to try and get new spaces for health professionals, that people are being told to hold off because it's too expensive to build the new facilities that would create the new spaces, which would house the new students I guess is a better way to put it, because the inflationary costs are just too high. So there's a lack of overall planning and forethought from the government, and I don't see any improvement.

You know, I talked earlier about being 24 months, and I'm hearing the same things, only worse. I don't see the big steps that are being taken to solve this except keep going back to: well, we'll get the private sector to look after this. But the private sector really does not help us, especially around workforce problems, and it really doesn't help us around training because they in the past have been very reluctant to take residents into their operating rooms and let them do that period of their required training. Certainly, we saw that around the ophthalmology clinics and surgeries that were so much in the limelight back in the late '90s. You know, there was the comparison that the Consumers' Association did between the private, the contracted, and the completely public, and the best deal was in the public, and that was the shortest waiting list as well. My neighbour at the time was studying to specialize in that field, and he was immensely frustrated because there were only so many residency spots, and with all of these surgeries at that time going to a private provider, he couldn't get into the residency program.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but pursuant to Standing Order 61(1), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration of estimates, I would now invite the Government House Leader to move that the committee do now rise and report.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would at this time move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2006-07 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That being the case, I would move that we now call it 5:30 – I see we're almost a minute away from that anyway – and stand adjourned until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 5:29 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, August 28, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/08/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together in a minute of silence and personal prayer as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian police officers and military personnel lost in service to their countrymen. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless.

Hon. members, today we'll be led in the singing of our national anthem by Colleen Vogel. I would ask all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to be able to introduce a guest to you and through you to the Assembly. This gentleman is known to many of us for his years of dedicated volunteerism for many organizations. He has served as a board member and president of the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club, the Christmas Bureau of Edmonton, and ABC Head Start. He was a board member of the Edmonton Boy Scouts and the Grant MacEwan foundation. As well, he was a founder of the Trying for Kids triathlon event and is a supporter of Junior Achievement. On top of that, he has been an active fundraiser for numerous community organizations. We know him better as the former Member for Edmonton-McClung and the previous Minister of Economic Development. I've always enjoyed his great enthusiasm and passion for life and am delighted that he is pursuing an ongoing interest in our Conservative Party. He is seated in the Speaker's gallery. I am proud to introduce my good friend Mark Norris. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Julius Yankowsky, the former MLA who served the Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency for three terms, from 1993 through 2004. Julius is accompanied today by his wife, Katherine, and their grandson Brenden Steemson. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a very long list today, so a little patience, please. The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff from Children's Services governance services branch. Branch staff provide consultation, co-ordination, and facilitation services to assist child and family service authority boards, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee as well as the Children's Services appeal panel with their legislated responsibilities. They do a great job, and I'm extremely proud to be their minister. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome. They are Beverly Sawicki, Blair Addams, Laurie Anderson, Laurie Kehler, and Kris Loranger. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shad Valley is an organization that promotes interest in science, technology, and entrepreneurship to students in grades 11 and 12. Students who are accepted into this program attend a month-long program in July at one of the 12 universities across Canada. Many of the students then continue with a paid internship program. Two of these students are currently working with Alberta Innovation and Science. Jacinta Yeung and Brandon Evans are here today to be introduced to all of you. Jacinta has completed grade 12 and will be entering university this fall, while Brandon will be entering grade 12. They are accompanied by Lisa Bowes of the department. I'd ask them to rise and be greeted by all of you here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, capital planning.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a personal friend and young constituent, Mr. Adam Zaroni from Coaldale, Alberta. Adam is currently finishing his degree in accounting and financial management at the U of L. He has met today with our colleague the MLA for Battle River-Wainwright on some rural youth development issues. I think it's of some significance that Adam has recently been nominated for the CEO of the year award scholarship, a national award competition, by the University of Lethbridge. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. I hope he is up in the members' gallery. I can't quite spot him.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I usually rise to introduce guests who have travelled a fair distance to visit us, but I'm surpassing all my records today because my guest has travelled from Canberra, Australia, to visit with me. He is a branch on the family tree, I'm proud to say. He worked for the Attorney General's office in the government of Australia, and he is now visiting Canada and getting a real view of Alberta. He worked for a week at the Calgary Stampede and a week at the Edmonton Fringe, so he is really getting an experience in Alberta. I would ask that Matthew Granlund stand and receive our welcome, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in your gallery are five bright and talented high school students who will be joining us here in the Assembly in the upcoming year in their new capacity as pages in the Alberta Legislature. These individuals were hired over the summer after a successful application process and will be joining their fellow pages for training this fall. They're already here to observe the proceedings of the Assembly today. If the following pages could please stand up when I call their name: Nancy Easton, Victoria Micek, Nicholas Mickelsen, Kaley Pederson, and Helena Zakrzewski. I'd invite all members to join in extending a very warm and traditional welcome to these new pages.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Duncan and Allie Wojtaszek, who are seated in the members' gallery. They're here to observe the discussion on Bill 208. Duncan, you may recall, has been introduced to this Assembly in the past as the executive director of CAUS, and I'm pleased to say that Allie is gainfully employed in important political work this summer and this fall. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this fine Assembly Mr. Michael Farris. Mr. Farris is the executive director of E4C, which is an Edmonton organization founded in the 1970s that runs 16 different programs for people of all ages who are in financial need. Among them are a couple that are well known to you: the Women's Emergency Accommodation Centre and the Kids in the Hall Bistro at Edmonton city hall. This organization and Mr. Farris have made a long-standing commitment to our city and our needy. I would like to ask Mr. Farris to rise and accept the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and introduce to you a recent immigrant to Alberta, Canada, from Ukraine. He is a professor and a doctor in Ukraine who has established some roots here, and we welcome him sincerely. He is currently teaching part-time at the Minerva Senior Studies Institute, located at Grant MacEwan College. He has also taught for some time at NorQuest. He is a definite credit to our teaching profession. Accompanying him is well-known Edmonton lawyer Helen Tymoczko, who is no stranger to members of this Assembly. She is a good friend of the community, a good friend of mine, and she is also a very involved community activist and volunteer, particularly in the arts. I would ask Helen Tymoczko and Professor Walter Yahnishchak to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an education advocate from Calgary who is sitting in the front row of the public gallery. Her name is Tianna Melnyk, and she has travelled up today to see how the Legislature works. She is a tireless worker for public education and an outstanding teacher. I'd ask Tianna to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. In the first I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Zyp family. This is a very active family. Some of you in Edmonton will be familiar with their letters to the editor, and they certainly keep me informed of their opinion. I would ask them to please rise as I call their names: John Zyp, Bettie Zyp, their daughters Danielle Zyp and Cynthia Prefontaine, and her 12-year-old son, Jonas Coyes, who wants to be the Premier of the province. I would ask you to please join me in welcoming them.

For my second set of introductions I would like to introduce several members of the activist GLBT community. Please rise as I call your names: Julie Lloyd, who is a lawyer that argued on the Vriend case and several precedent-setting legal judgments to her credit; Kris Wells, who is an educator; Ken MacDonald, the president of the Edmonton Pride Centre; Ron Rowswell, Rob Wells, and Elisha Andrews, who are all constituents of Edmonton-Centre.

I also have a number of artists in attendance in support of action against Bill 208. Please join me in welcoming Annie Dugan, with Firefly Theatre; John Ulyyat, who is a pre-eminent actor in Edmonton and throughout Alberta; Roger Schultz, a theatre designer; and Ryan Sigurdson, who is an emerging and very talented young musician and composer.

Please join me in welcoming these individuals to our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of introductions today as well. The first of those is a special introduction for somebody who's been introduced in the Assembly before. Daniel Langdon has worked as a constituency manager in my office for the last year and a half. Unfortunately, we're losing him to McMaster University, and Friday was his last day in the employ of the Alberta government. He is also here to watch the proceedings today regarding Bill 208. I would ask Dan to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, several other constituents from Edmonton-Rutherford who are here today to watch the proceedings regarding Bill 208. I would ask them to please rise as their names are read into the record and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly as well. We have with us today Geraldine Young and a whole group from the Southminster-Steinhauer United Church: Patricia Seale, Dawn Waring, Sandra Lockhart, Thais McKee, and the Power family – Chris, Kathleen, and their children Aaron, Allandra, and Brayden.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the following guests who are here to show their objection to Bill 208: two from my constituency, Marc Trottier and Joseph Hachey, and also Jeffrey Coffman, Luc Drapeau, Jose Untalan, Jo Nicholas, Doug Dorward, Nick Green, and Barry Richardson. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two people without whom I would not be able to do my work as an MLA: Jan Millson, my constituency office manager, who's just done a tremendous job for me – and I'm proud to introduce her – and Peter Marriott, my summer STEP student. I would like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful people from my constituency, Mick and Bernice Rempel. Mr. Rempel spent 26 years in the Canadian air force. Mrs. Rempel is very well known to many members of this House, being a former mayor of Leduc. She spent 13 years as senior co-ordinator for family aid services, four years as director of parks, planning, recreation, and culture. Both are now enjoying their retirement. They are seated in the public gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Allison Mullen. Allison is a constituent of mine. As well as a student entering grade 12, Allison has honours and is very involved in the student council at her school. Allison was a new addition to my office as a summer STEP student, and it has been great having Allison in the office. I wish her well in her final year at Archbishop O'Leary high school. I'd ask Allison to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise here today and to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an outstanding young woman who is a credit to her family, her school, and her community. Desirée Ho is on student council at Archbishop O'Leary high school. This coming year she's going into her final year, and she's been a great help as a summer employee in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. Desirée, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly Sheryl Pearson. Sheryl Pearson is here with her husband, Vik Maraj. They live in the Kenilworth neighbourhood in the Edmonton-Mill Creek constituency. Sheryl and Vik recently had their first child, named Evan, in March of this past year, and they enjoy parenthood very much. Sheryl is a lawyer for the Alberta Law Reform Institute, although she is currently on maternity leave, and Vik is a human relations expert with his own consulting practice. This is their first visit to the Legislative Assembly as adults, although they both recall visiting during elementary school with their grade 5 class. They have just entered the Assembly, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the following guests who are here today to show their objection to Bill 208. Please stand to receive the traditional greeting of the Legislature when I call your name: Tony Sware, Larry Jewell, Jeff Bovee, Jason Bodnariuk, John Grindrod, Helen Lees, Michael Schaffer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My guest is not here.

The Speaker: Are there others? Did I miss anyone? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House today the following guests who are here to show their objection to Bill 208. If you would stand, please, as I call your name: Kayla Larson, Lana Phillips, Erika Lund, Cindy Walker-Watson, Craig Stumpf-Allen, Scott Graham, and Rheanna Sand. Please show them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of introductions today, and I'll ask people to stand at the conclusion of all of them. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Neal Gray. Neal is here today to show his opposition to Bill 208. He was the federal candidate in Edmonton-Mill Woods-Beaumont for the NDP and is an active board member of the Woodvale Community League in Mill Woods.

My second introduction is Linda McLennan. Linda has been an Alberta resident for the past 30 years and has been a teacher since 1967, specializing in literacy and working with special-needs students. She is currently teaching at the Glenrose hospital school, and she is here to show her opposition to Bill 208.

My next introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Junaid Jahangir and Drury Straty, and I apologize for the pronunciations. Junaid and Drury are active members in the LGBT community and are here today to show their opposition to Bill 208.

My fourth introduction is Lois Evans. Lois was born and raised in Edmonton and has two wonderful children and six grandchildren. She is an active member in the Southminster-Steinhauer United Church and in many social justice groups as well here in Edmonton, and she is here to express her opposition to Bill 208.

I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Robert Smith. Robert is a community development educator and a researcher with HIV Edmonton. Robert is here today to express his opposition to Bill 208.

It gives me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to introduce my next guest, Murray Billett. Murray is a well-known and prominent human rights advocate here in Alberta and is here today to express his concerns and opposition to Bill 208.

Christina Gray is a lead software development instructor at DevStudios. She also serves as chair of the Edmonton Transit system advisory board and volunteers with the Support Network's distress line. Christina was born and raised in Edmonton and currently resides in Mill Woods. She is here today, Mr. Speaker, to show her disagreement with the introduction of Bill 208.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to introduce my former colleague and good friend Michael Phair. Michael, as many of you know, is a tireless advocate for the LGBT community and has been for many years. Michael was elected to city council in 1992 and is considered to be one of the most respected politicians in the province. He is here today to show his opposition to Bill 208.

I would ask that they all now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a number of guests to be introduced. All of them are here because of their concern about Bill 208. First of all, I'm delighted to introduce to you and to others in the Assembly Arron Kardolus-Wilson. Arron is a transgender activist and same-sex married man. I'd ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and the Assembly Debra Morris. Debra is the president of the United Church Women of Edmonton presbytery. Debra is an activist in the community, particularly on issues related to women and social justice. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my third introduction today is Colin Simpson. Colin is a community activist and is here to express his opposition to Bill 208. He is currently compiling stories for a book on gay youth. I would ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Glynis Thomas, Karen Smith, and Mike Haworth. Glynis is the executive director of the St. Albert Community Information and Volunteer Centre, Karen Smith is the executive director of the Sexual Assault Centre, and Mike Haworth is a student at Grant MacEwan College here in Edmonton. They are also here about Bill 208. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my next guests are Scott Hlad, Maggie Lockwood, Jay Smith, and Gil Charest. Scott Hlad and Maggie Lockwood are the co-chairs of the NDP LGBT caucus while Jay Smith and Gil Charest have been ardent activists in the LGBT community for a number of years. They're also here, of course, about Bill 208. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask if they'd now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a number of guests today to introduce. I believe all of them are seated in the public gallery. They are here to observe the proceedings of the Assembly this afternoon and also to express opposition to Bill 208. I'll start with my first guest, who is Kyle Toles. Kyle is entering his first year at Grant MacEwan College and is working towards his office administration degree. He is here, of course, to express, as I said, his opposition to Bill 208. I'll ask Kyle to please rise.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Andrea Enes and Geneva Harwood. Andrea and Geneva are University of Alberta students, with Geneva working towards her bachelor's degree in human geography and Andrea working towards her BA in political science and economics.

My fourth guest, Mr. Speaker, is Jennifer Dailey-O'Cain. Jennifer is a professor in applied linguistics at the University of Alberta. She has recently received Canadian citizenship. She is originally from the U.S. She is also the president of the Edmonton-Strathcona federal NDP riding association.

Next, Mr. Speaker, is Erica Bullwinkle, Miriam Weinfeld, and Daniel Weinfeld. Erica, her daughter Miriam, and her son Daniel are here today to show their opposition to Bill 208. Erica is an education advocate and serves as a vice-president of the Alberta NDP. Miriam is entering her first year of university at the Faculté Saint-Jean here in Edmonton while Daniel is in grade 10 at Strathcona composite high school.

Next, Mr. Speaker, is Brendan Van Alstine. Brendan is an active community member and a registered social worker. He is here today to express his opposition to Bill 208.

I'm also pleased to introduce to you and to all of my colleagues in the Assembly Dr. Brian Staples. Dr. Staples is the chair of the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team, or SALT, and previously worked as a civil servant for the Alberta government in the department of learning.

2:00

My last introduction, Mr. Speaker, not the least but the last, is Reverend Charles Bidwell. Reverend Bidwell is an active member of Southminster-Steinhauer United Church in south Edmonton, which has been publicly declaring that it has welcomed gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered people for the last seven years. Reverend Bidwell is licensed by the government of Alberta to conduct marriages, and he has performed several same-gender marriages. He received the Michael Phair man of the year award in 1994 for his ministry to AIDS victims in the 1980s and his ministry to the gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered people during his 11 years as pastor of the Metropolitan Community Church of Edmonton.

I would ask all of my guests to please rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Managed Growth in the Oil Sands

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer from Athabasca to Lac La Biche to Fort MacKay and especially to Fort McMurray I have visited with public officials, service providers, small-business owners, and citizens of all kinds who increasingly feel overwhelmed by the challenges of growth. They can't find workers, housing costs are beyond reach, public services are overloaded, and infrastructure is inadequate. Studies such as the government's own 1997 growth summit and the 1999 housing symposium predicted these problems, yet this PC government, openly boasting about being on autopilot, failed to anticipate the obvious. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier has said that this Conservative government does not want to intervene to manage oil sands development, is it the Conservative government's position that managing growth is not their responsibility?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I was also in places like Eaglesham and through Falher and Donnelly and Girouxville and Forestburg and Slave Lake, of course, Foremost, High Level, and I heard the same concerns expressed. I'm so happy that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has characterized these as challenges because that's what I see them as, not problems. Problems are what other jurisdictions are facing in terms of deficit and debt and how to deal with the rising costs of health care and just operating on a day-to-day basis. We're faced with challenges, the challenges of growth. The Leader of the Opposition is absolutely right. They are challenges. There are challenges related to labour, there are challenges related to infrastructure, there are challenges related to the rising costs of construction, and so on, but it remains true that the market must prevail. If we tamper, as the Liberals and the NDs like to do, with the marketplace, it's so hard, so difficult, to undo what has been put in place through legislation or policy or government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Overwhelming challenges become problems, as the Premier well knows. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that this government's failure to manage growth has contributed significantly to the huge cost increases of the oil sands, which are then directly deducted from royalty payments, can the minister tell us what is the current hit to the Alberta treasury in cost overruns at oil sands plants?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that it's my responsibility to talk about cost overruns in oil sands projects.

There is no question that the buoyant economy here, the vibrant and growing economy, that's probably the envy of Canada and much of North America, has caused a lot of pressure in a number of areas. There are shortages in some areas of concrete, steel, rubber. That's what a demand situation does. It does affect our capital buildings on the public side, but that's about 10 per cent of the capital that's occurring in this province.

Certainly, we will have an opportunity to address the issue of capital overruns on public buildings, that we fund through the estimates, because we have recognized it and, in fact, have funded it to ensure that our school projects, our health facilities, and all other public projects will not be in jeopardy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Environment, Mr. Speaker. Is it this minister's position that the proposed rate of expansion of oil sands plants is in the interests of the residents and the environment of the Wood Buffalo municipality?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, allow me to reflect for a moment, having had the honour of sitting as a mayor and on city council. Did the opposition member, through the chair, know that the government of Alberta built a bridge to nowhere? Actually, we had streets paved, with fire hydrants and street lamps, where everyone used to teach their kids how to drive, but we didn't have any homes on them. We had a water treatment plant built for 75,000 people, but – you know what? – there were only 30,000 of us paying for it.

In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, the over $750 million of infrastructure projects that are going on demonstrate clearly that we are listening to the people in Fort McMurray, Wood Buffalo, or in Cold Lake or in Peace River or in southern Alberta or central Alberta because we care, and we are dealing with issues that are important to a growing economy in a growing province.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Infrastructure Needs in Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Large-scale oil sands development in Alberta has rapidly increased, as we all know, causing the population of Fort McMurray to double in the last decade. The provincial government has allowed this development to occur without any sense of a long-term plan, as the minister just illustrated.

The situation has become so dire that both the municipal council and the regional health authority have been forced to intervene at the EUB with major oil sands projects because hospitals, roads, schools, and all kinds of other programs can't keep up. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. I drove highway 63 just a few weeks ago and was surprised to see no sign of twinning. Why not?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what he was looking for because, in fact, I was up there just a short time ago, and driving south from Fort McMurray for many miles the right-of-way is all cleared. They will be constructing there immediately. If the member had gone north of Fort McMurray towards Fort MacKay, he once again would have seen activity. Last winter – and this is some of the forward planning that we're doing – we had a contractor come in and move a huge quantity of dirt in order that we didn't have to do it in the summertime. He moved it over frost. It was sitting there. They were spreading that out. That's just a bit of it.

Now, had he gone up 881, he would have seen that, in fact, this year we're completing the paving on 881. There's surveying going on as we speak on the La Loche road. Mr. Speaker, if he goes up there this winter, he will see that, in fact, we're starting on the hundred million dollar bridge across the river. We put in a bypass. We're improving the intersections within Fort McMurray.

So I don't know where he went, but certainly he must have had his eyes closed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that an average of 30 people a night were turned away from a Salvation Army shelter in McMurray last winter, what steps is this minister taking to ensure that emergency housing will be adequate there this coming winter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, as well, was in Fort McMurray. It's a high-growth, high-cost area, and if you'd met with the mayor of Fort McMurray, you'd know that we're working together. We're determining how we can assist even further than what we are now with the funding that we're providing for emergency and transitional housing. One of the areas in the spectrum of housing is this in Fort McMurray: the rental subsidy program that we have for residents in Fort McMurray. As I said, it's high growth, high cost. We take an average of the rents of apartments in Fort McMurray. We then subsidize people at 30 per cent of their rent. In Fort McMurray that's a subsidy for a cost of housing at $70,000 per resident. So we are doing some good work in Fort McMurray.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. Has the minister been vocal in cautioning the Minister of Energy and others that hospitals and health care services in Fort McMurray cannot – cannot – keep up with the growth that's occurring there? Has she been speaking out?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, for the last several months I have been part of a special group that has been discussing the issues of the north. It was chaired by the Minister of Energy; it is now chaired by the Minister of Justice. I think any of my colleagues would be able to identify that I've been speaking up. More than that, I have met not only with the people in the region but with the industrial representatives, the CEOs of the region, talking to them about what kinds of services they're providing on plant sites. I've talked with the local elected officials in Fort McMurray.

I think that while a lot of people look at the challenges, they fail to look at the fact that Alberta has attracted more physicians than anywhere else in Canada. We have attracted 800 more physicians in the last five years, and many of them are choosing to locate in the north.

One more thing. We have put in aboriginal scholarships, and last fall with Health and Wellness and Advanced Ed we added 10 other scholarships to make it available for rural people who wish to take up health as a profession.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform Public Consultation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over and over we've listened to this government claim that health care spending is out of control. This weekend we learned that this government wasted another 1 million taxpayer dollars on their third-way propaganda campaign to convince Albertans that they are not entitled to public health care. It is the government that is out of control, not health care spending. My questions are to the minister of health. Why did the minister begin designing glossy brochures promoting the third way to be sent to every household when promised consultations with Albertans had not even been completed?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways that I should approach this. First of all, a million dollars was not spent on glossy brochures. A full $220,000 was spent on paper, and that paper is currently being used by Health and Wellness and other government departments. So that was not in any way, shape, or form a consumable that wasn't used. We spent another $200,000 on ads to Albertans, letting them know how to get involved in discussing the third way. When we first went out with consultations, focus groups and other work done by the consultants advised us that at least half of Albertans had no familiarity with the third way. So we believed that it was important as a government to provide them information.

Now, this particular spring if we had only advertised and done nothing else, people over on the other side might have a legitimate concern that we weren't listening, but we took over 6,000 submissions from Albertans. I listened personally to over 400 Albertans who gave me their views directly on the third way. We did a number of things to make sure that we not only took into account their concerns, but we actually had a way of addressing those concerns had we moved forward with the legislative amendments that were implicit in our discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: as she has pointed out, given that the million dollars was strictly the cost of the prep work, what was the final budget once the cost of purchasing radio and television time and printing and mailing all of these brochures is factored in? What was the total budget if a million was just the prep work?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, a million dollars was the total. I believe it may have been $1.12 million. The implicit and explicit detail I can forward. It was a whole contract that dealt with production of television ads, and those two snapshots I gave on consultation focus groups and paper were a part of it. I mean, implicit in the criticisms of the opposition is that we just blew a million dollars on a campaign, and that is not correct. I have identified what we've done with the paper, and even with the adverts . . . [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, while we have done those advertisements, the mock-ups for the television advertisements – there were to have been five ads that dealt with the Alberta Hospitals Act, the Alberta health information and protection act, and the health insurance act. While we had those framed, it's obvious that they were not going to proceed because we chose not to table legislation. We believed it was prudent to be ready for legislation that could have been tabled this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question, again to the minister of health: given that the million dollars could have been used to pay the salary of 20 registered nurses for a year or up to 60 personal care attendants to help out in long-term care, does the minister still believe that Albertans got value for their money? All that help in long-term care.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, you'd be damned if you did, and you'd be damned if you didn't. If I had tabled on behalf of this government legislation with no explanation to Albertans, nothing to go into the householders' hands, no TV ad, which is almost all of the way that some people in remote areas believe they get information – they don't always see that householder that comes. If we had done that without advertising, we would have been criticized. Today we have in the archives of Health and Wellness some materials that would be available should we proceed with legislation. By the very fact that that legislation is outdated and needs refurbishment, I would suggest that we will.

And may I make one additional remark? The opposition compels me to do this. So much misinformation goes out on behalf of the opposition that it behooves us to tell the story.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Policy Framework

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine what we'd do if we had a million dollars to get our message out?

My questions are also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. On April 20, the Minister of Health and Wellness committed to ongoing consultations with Albertans about their plans for health care in this province, yet just two weeks ago a new health framework quietly appeared on the department's website, and that proposal continues down the road of two-tier, private health care. Now, they've spent a million dollars on a propaganda campaign that never appeared, but they still can't consult with Albertans. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that Albertans vocally rejected this government's third-way proposals in the spring, why did the minister then quietly present a framework that represents government policy which includes expanded roles for private surgical facilities and future opportunities for delisting of services?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I truly wish that the hon. member from the third party had listened to a local radio announcer in Calgary talk about the fact that there were a whole lot of allegations made by the third party about delisting, about government by sleuth, about the fact that the sky was falling. They read that report, and they saw that it was exactly what we announced in April. The report, Getting On with Better Health Care, contained eight of the 10 original policies, all public information, all posted on the web, all things that were retrievable. The only addition, the only punchline in this that hadn't been emphasized in previous documentation, was the work that we would do on workforce. In the area of delisting services, page 23, he cited, and I quote: the health policy framework does not even include any mention of delisting services.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what they're talking about, but that's old news. It was already out there. It's repackaged so that Albertans have both the Getting On with Better Health Care and the health policy framework in one document.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't know why the government spends a million dollars on propaganda when they've got Dave Rutherford to get their message out.

My question then is why the government, in fact, did pay a million dollars on a propaganda campaign which never saw the light of day and then surreptitiously posted the government policy, which includes two-tier private health care, on a website that most Albertans will never see.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think all of us do our best to get the message out in government. We did our best to anticipate that there was a need for new legislation in health care. We put together a package of materials that would inform Albertans about that. All of the work that we had done reflected on a couple of things: number one, that Albertans were not sufficiently familiar with the third-way initiatives, and, number two, many people after consultation said that they needed more information. They needed more detailed information. They needed to understand, for example, if doctors were working in two systems, how that would work. What would it mean in their community? So we did our best to get that ready. We chose not to table that legislation and to give it further study. We listened to Albertans, and that's not a bad-news story. We pulled back on submitting anything to Albertans until such time as government in the future may choose to table legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister gave $1.5 million to one of the largest private insurance companies in North America to consult for a pointless private insurance study and a million dollars to ad firms, Tory-friendly ad firms, for the campaign that never was, when will this government stop wasting Albertans' time and money on selling them on unwanted privatization and start investing in the public system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if you were anyplace in Canada outside of Alberta, looking in, you would say: we wish that our province could afford and could do what Alberta is and spend more per capita than anywhere else in the country. We are now spending $10.5 billion. We are spending almost $1,000 a year on capital projects alone for every man, woman, and child in this province. There's nowhere that they're investing as much in public health as we are in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The last few years have been extremely difficult for Alberta's grains and oilseeds producers, who are facing increasing pressures on their livelihood. Producers taking off their crop this fall have to deal with lower than expected yields, depressed prices, and high input costs. This led the Alberta government to recently issue a disaster declaration in relation to this situation. My question is to the Deputy Premier. While this is a positive step towards supporting our producers, what constitutes a disaster declaration?

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, interpretation of statutes is not part of the purview of question period. There's a statute. We'll have a page provide the statute to the hon. member. He can study it.

Second question.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister, and it has to do with the CAIS program, which is selected using the 2004 basis for compensating producers when, in fact, the input costs are soaring dramatically for the past two years.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's no question about it. The agricultural producers in the grains and oilseeds sector are facing a very, very serious situation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you would be looking at what could be called a perfect storm: you've had a very good beginning to the year, you've had extreme heat in July, you've had low precipitation in 70 per cent of the province, you've got input costs of fertilizer and fuel skyrocketing, and you've got a dollar that is appreciating in a significant way, which affects exports.

So how do you respond to producers in a timely fashion? The decision was made to use the CAIS program because it is the safety net program. It was decided some time ago that that would be the safety net program for the province. Producers knew that. Many of them are enrolled in it. The decision on using 2004, Mr. Speaker, was that the information is in and complete. If you used 2005, there are a number of producers who have not filed 2005, and you would be going into a long period of waiting. The problems that we have out there, as shown by declaring a disaster, are imminent. Producers need help now. They need to know what they can expect.

The CAIS program was used with two adjustments. Quickly, those adjustments are a 15 per cent adjustment in the reference margin – the reference margin has changed by 15 per cent – and a 25 per cent change in the margin used on fertilizer and fuel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. My supplemental is: will all producers affected by this disaster receive support?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I should just add one thing on the first one. Maybe not everyone understands what the reference margin is. A reference margin is the producer's income minus his eligible expenses, just to put that into context.

All producers that are enrolled in CAIS in 2004 will either receive assistance or not depending on their CAIS situation. If they were not enrolled in 2004, they would not. There are about 60 per cent of some 20,000 producers that are CAIS participants. They will all have their support levels increased on that 2004. They do not have to apply. These calculations will be automatic. There will be no additional costs in accounting for these producers, and it is expected, anticipated, and the people at the CAIS program are working hard to ensure that those payments are out this fall, when they're needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Employment Strategies

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With high prices Alberta's oil industry is pulling workers from everywhere in Canada and from all occupations. The labour market is distorted and is hurting small business in particular. Some firms are delaying expansion, others may close, and some economic sectors look to shrink, and the boom will not last forever. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister ensure that the provincial nominee program, which fast-tracks new immigrant employees, be directed to small business, where this program is needed most urgently?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course we'll do everything we can as a government to meet those challenges head on and provide the employees that are drastically needed out there, but the particular program that the member is referring to is under another ministry.

Mr. Backs: The second question is to the Minister of Advanced Education, Mr. Speaker. With a small minority of employers training the vast majority of apprentices and less than 10 per cent graduating, will the minister ensure that more long-term apprenticeship spots are opened in the workplace so that young Albertans, women, aboriginals, and our shrinking farm population get a chance at the good jobs while they last?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Quite frankly, we have created over 4,000 new spots with respect to apprenticeship. The member will know that our employers are really bellying up to the table, if I can use that expression, to the rate of about a hundred a day. We are now registering over a hundred new apprentices every day. I have said many times that our aboriginal community is one area that I want to particularly work with because I think they're certainly one of our biggest opportunities.

2:30

Mr. Backs: To the minister of human resources again, Mr. Speaker: what contingency plans does this government have in place to deal with unemployed workers and professionals when this boom ends, as boom times always do?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, only the opposition Liberals would start thinking what may happen down the road which may never happen.

Managed Growth in the Oil Sands

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the pressures, challenges, and opportunities we face as a result of oil sands growth is one of the most important issues confronting this province not only in the future but right now. It is my understanding that the Minister of Justice will be chairing a committee that aims to look at addressing some of these short-term pressures; therefore, my first question is to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister please shed some more light on this new committee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the premise behind the hon. member's question is quite correct, but I must say that this committee is not a new committee; it's simply a new chair of an old committee. It's the oil sands ministerial strategy committee. The Premier had the wisdom and foresight some many months ago to establish this particular committee under the chair of the hon. Minister of Energy. I've been asked by the Premier to chair it to provide some neutral oversight and to continue the good work of the committee and the good work of the hon. Minister of Energy as chair.

Generally speaking, this particular committee has been identifying issues with respect to oil sands, and that particular general work will continue. But what we are doing is that we are adding additional resources to it in the form of a co-ordinator and additional resources for that co-ordinator. The co-ordinator has been hired. It's somebody familiar to government, somebody familiar to this particular Assembly, at least many of the people in this Assembly, someone who has 35 years of experience with this government, a former Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs, a former Deputy Minister of Agriculture, a former Deputy Minister of Environment, Mr. Doug Radke. He will be starting at the end of this week, and his full-time job will be to provide co-ordination with respect to matters associated with oil sands growth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us how this committee will go about its work now?

Mr. Stevens: Well, the committee in large measure will continue to do what it has done, and that is that you look to the particular ministries to identify issues, and you look to the particular ministries who have the expertise to provide the potential solutions. So in that sense, matters will very much remain the same.

One of the issues, however, has always been to ensure that you get accurate information with respect to the growth associated with oil sands. We're talking about realistic, accurate information, and one of the things that our co-ordinator will be doing is developing a realistic growth forecast for the oil sands in the relatively short to intermediate term. Once that particular work has been done – and certainly that involves gathering all of the information and perhaps some additional information that's currently out there to develop that forecast – he will be working with the ministries to review the plan that we currently have in place, establish where there may be gaps, and provide some advice.

I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it's our intention to continue what the committee has been doing, and that is taking a look at what I would call short-term wins. Those are issue and solution identification that can be done very, very quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. I realize that he has partially answered this question but just the same: how will this committee's work differ from the work of several other existing committees looking at the various challenges in northern development brought on by the oil sands growth?

Mr. Stevens: Well, that's an excellent question because there is a lot of good work that has been identified and will be ongoing by various committees. There's a land use committee under, I believe, the auspices of Sustainable Resource Development, there is an oil sands consultation committee under the auspices of Energy, Environment, and Sustainable Resource Development, I believe that there's an aboriginal consultation committee associated with much of this very issue, and so on. All of that work will continue to go on.

It is anticipated that Mr. Radke's involvement with this committee will be relatively short term, something in the order of five or six months. Much of the work that he is going to do will in fact be complete by year's end.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Softwood Lumber Trade Policy

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta lumber producers are under fire from the federal government to sign on to their softwood lumber deal. Many tell me that this deal is not in their company's interest, their workers' interests, or for the good people of Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. If the majority of Alberta's lumber producers withhold their support for this deal, will the minister support Alberta's interest and stop going along with that of his federal cousins?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the industry has already indicated what their position on this is. Minister Emerson indicated federally that they wanted the response by industry by the 21st of August. On that day individual companies within the softwood lumber industry in the province of Alberta and across Canada indicated their support for the deal. So we've worked hard in the negotiations, working with the federal negotiating committee, headed up by His Excellency Michael Wilson, the ambassador to the United States from Canada. Minister Emerson has worked very, very hard on this deal.

It is not an ideal circumstance, Mr. Speaker. This is not free trade. It is managed trade. But our focus from this point forward should be on how the industry should organize itself to take best advantage of the deal that will now go before the House of Parliament in Canada.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: if large amounts of lumber have to be cut because of the mountain pine beetle, will the minister bring in measures to ensure that producers are not penalized under the federal softwood lumber deal?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Coutts: We were thinking far ahead when we talked about mountain pine beetle well before they even knew that it was happening.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement has been a compromise solution that provides more predictable terms of access to the U.S. markets. You know, we continue to work with our industry within the confines of the agreements that are put forward and represent their interests both internationally and nationally. We have a very good relationship with our industry. They've talked to us about the impact of mountain pine beetle. They've also talked to us about the impact of what would happen in terms of the market price going down and how that would affect their industry. We talked to our industry at length about some of the competitiveness problems that they have. So I can tell you that the Alberta Forest Products Association and this government and particularly our ministry will continue to address those things in the future.

Mr. Bonko: To the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: does the minister support the termination clause, where Canadian producers have to pay by giving up their lawsuits and the Americans can walk away after three years?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the agreement that's struck is much more complex than has been indicated by the hon. member. The purpose of the stand-still clause that he referred to is to say that when the agreement comes to an end, there's a 12-month period during which there cannot be any actions commenced by either side, by the United States or by Canada. The term of the deal is seven years. There is a renewal period that is permitted for an additional two years. The stand-still period will apply to the end of the agreement. So the seven-year agreement in pith and substance would become an eight-year deal, and if it's renewed, then the nine-year deal becomes a 10-year deal.

It is a very, very complex matter, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the overall package of commitments that were made by both sides, negotiated in a very, very difficult set of circumstances. I would only say this: if softwood lumber were an easy thing to have resolved, it would have been done 20 years ago, not today. But the deal is one that provides certainty. The side letter that has been provided by the United States trade representative should go a long way to demonstrating that the United States has real and demonstrable good faith in this and that they are not simply going to terminate the deal after a limited period of time.

Standards for Secondary Suites

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is thriving. With more than 90,000 people moving to this province every year, our municipalities are now facing enormous pressures in finding places for people to live. One option is to rent basement suites, but there are no standards for these types of suites. My questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Could the minister please tell the House where his department is at in legalizing these basement suites?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right that while all of us are familiar with basement suites in one form or another throughout, well, certainly my lifetime, the fact of the matter is that the building code under which we operate does not recognize something called a basement suite. We have single-family residential, and we have multiple family.

The building code itself requires significant standards if you have what's called a duplex. I think we're all familiar with a duplex. It requires separate furnace and ventilation systems. It requires the necessary windows that you would have in a building code in a home. It requires complete and total fire separation between each side of the duplex and, in fact, in many cases could be divided up and given title to each side.

So in recognition of this and in recognition of the need for accommodation like a basement suite, the government undertook a number of months ago to review the whole situation, consult with the public, consult with municipalities, with tenants and landlords, and come back with some recommendations on what we could do to develop a code specifically for secondary suites or basement suites.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Yes. Does the minister feel that these secondary suites will assist in alleviating the pressures on this affordable housing issue?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think that it will. The reason I say so is because in not requiring the standards that are there for a duplex and still maintaining safety as the primary overriding factor, there will be some opportunities for individuals who have perhaps in the past been hesitant to rent their basement, develop their basement as a basement suite, to do so. We also have the ability then for that to be a safe environment for the tenants when they move in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us when we can finally expect to see these standards in place?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report of that committee that I referred to earlier has been circulating throughout the province over the past couple months. Overall, the overwhelming feedback that we're getting is positive. It's my intention to move forward with the necessary amendments to the building code either later on this year or as early as possible in 2007.

I need to put one cautionary note in place, Mr. Speaker, and that's to note that at present while we don't have building code that refers to basement suites, neither do we have zoning regulations that deal with basement suites. We have R1 and R2, and everybody knows that R1 is single-family residential; R2 is multiple family. We really are going to need something like a one and a half to completely legalize basement suites. So once the province is in a position to set the standards – the building code standards, the safety standards for basement suites – municipalities are going to have to determine in which neighbourhoods they're going to allow them to develop.

Spray Lake Sawmills

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Water is the issue of the decade, particularly in southern Alberta, where, even this government has admitted, current water licences exceed the capacity of the Elbow, Bow, and Oldman systems. The Spray Lakes forest management plan, over 3,300 square kilometres of cherished public lands near West Bragg Creek, will adversely affect the drinking water of 400,000 Calgarians as well as disrupt animal habitat and a prime recreational area. To the Minister of Environment: will he be supporting Spray Lake Sawmills in clear-cutting or protect this critical watershed and water source for Calgarians?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, protecting the land, protecting the air, and protecting the water is my job. I am the Minister of Environment, and I will carry out that responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also say that very near to this area, in fact, the province of Alberta, the only province in Canada, will be hosting the first international water forum. Experts from 20 countries all over the world are coming to Banff. . . . [interjections] Well, I'm glad to see that the members opposite are very impressed by the fact that Alberta took the initiative to host such an important Water for Life strategy, that we will excel at, be proactive on, something the opposite side really has no clue about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the minister place water at the top of the priority list and press this government to buy back this critical watershed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. That's a very good question. Not only shall we say that we will put water at the top of the list of priorities; it is at the top of the priority list for this province and this ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will this minister at least act to delay approval of this forest management plan until a land-use plan is available in this province?

Mr. Coufts: Mr. Speaker, Spray Lake Sawmills has been operating in Kananaskis Country in a multi-use area for the past 60 years. In order for them to get the forest management agreement on that particular multi-use area, they have to come up with a detailed forest management plan. It's a 20-year plan. It is not just a short-term plan.

The department is being responsible in asking the company to come forward and update their plan, which includes wildlife and water mitigation as well and the effects that resource extraction has on those two areas. It's part of the detailed forest management plan that we have asked Spray Lake Sawmills to come forward with. That detailed forest management plan will be reviewed by government and sometime within the next three months will be either accepted or rejected, depending on the regulations they have followed, which, by the way, are endorsed by Canadian regulations on forestry practices.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have a process to go through with Spray Lakes, and we will continue to do that in order to do as the Minister of Environment wants to make sure that watersheds are protected not only for the immediate people but for people downstream as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Energy Forecasting

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, since this remedial summer session is all about backpedaling to fix a myriad of budget problems, I think it's an opportune time to perhaps cast a critical eye on energy forecasting. Alberta's NDP opposition has determined that since 2002 this government has on average miscalculated crude oil revenues by 80 per cent and natural gas revenues by 65 per cent each year. Maybe the Minister of Finance could explain whether this state of affairs is a long-standing problem with her energy-forecasting department. Or is this government deliberately piling up unbudgeted surpluses year after year, keeping billions of dollars away from the democratic oversight of this Legislature?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've explained through the budget process the process that's used for energy forecasts. The member opposite is suggesting that he has a better handle on this than eight private-sector energy consulting firms. I find that quite astounding, but then I have always found that people with hindsight have better insight when it comes down to the time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not apologize for having more money at the end of the year than less. That is considered prudent forecasting and budgeting. In fact, I referenced last week in a question Standard & Poor's. I'm sure that even the NDP opposition would recognize that Standard & Poor's is one of the top bond-rating agencies. Their comment, and I'm going to table it at the appropriate time today: "The provincial government's conservative and prudent budgetary practices, which seek to protect Alberta's strong financial performance against potential volatility in resource revenues, through the use of its fiscal sustainability fund and the capital account," accounts for Alberta enjoying the highest rating in this country, the highest rating that we can achieve. No, I will not apologize.

The Speaker: And we will have the document tabled at the appropriate time.

Mr. Eggen: Those funds have nothing to do with forecasting. It's a question of budgeting.

Again to the Minister of Finance: given that in the 2002-2003 budget the government miscalculated crude oil revenue by 150 per cent, in 2004-2005 off by 127 per cent, how can Albertans trust a government that allows such wide miscalculations and misrepresentations of revenue?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, you know, we use a very wide variety of forecasts by people who spend all of their time determining this. I find it interesting that the hon. member is being very specific to oil. Very specific to oil. In fact, when I did my first-quarter forecast, one of the first things that was said by a reporter was: well, Minister, I don't think anybody's going to talk to you today about lowballing gas prices. Isn't that interesting, how gas prices are lower? We're not talking about that. Oil prices are slightly higher.

The other thing the hon. member should understand is that that is why we do a quarterly update. We adjust those numbers, and we share them publicly. They are so transparent on a quarterly basis. Again, prudent fiscal management works, and we are the envy of this country for having dollars at the end of the year.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that this minister since 2002 miscalculated the natural gas revenues to the tune of $10.4 billion, how is it possible, then, for ministries to make meaningful budget decisions when the amount of money available to this government goes up and down like a roller coaster within each financial year?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I think that maybe I misunderstood the hon. member or he misspoke because it wasn't this minister that made that forecast in 2002. That's first. I like the results of 2002, but I can't take the credit for that.

Again, I've had the same opportunity that all members of this House have had since we left the Assembly earlier and now return. I do not find criticism from the public on prudent financial management. In fact, the public supports having a surplus. You know, an unbudgeted surplus is saying that in excess of the needs of servicing your services, you put that money aside, which we do in a capital account and in a sustainability account. Mr. Speaker, that's what every person strives for in their household. That's what every business strives for, to have more money than they need to spend at the end of the day. I don't think that Albertans are going to swallow what they hear over there, which is spend, spend, spend at any cost.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'm going to call upon the first of six to deal with Members' Statements today, but first of all a historical vignette.

Today's subject is the Mace. The first Sergeants-at-Arms were the bodyguards of King Richard I, and these soldiers were each armed with a spiked club called a mace. Over time the mace was no longer used as a weapon but, rather, became a symbol of the authoritative power of the Crown as exercised by Parliament. Over time and by tradition the Assembly cannot sit without its presence.

The formal procession to bring in the Mace and announce the entrance of the Speaker was introduced in the 1970s by Alberta's eighth Speaker, the hon. Gerard Amerongen. The Mace is placed on the Assembly table with the head toward the government side of the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms, who is the official custodian of the Alberta Mace.

Alberta's first Mace was constructed for the First Session in 1906 out of plumbing parts, old shaving mug handles, butts of an old bedstead, and scraps of wood and covered by a coat of gold paint. For today and today only, it is displayed on the Assembly table in the centre of this Chamber. Normally it rests in the display case on the third floor of the Legislature Building. This makeshift Mace was used for 50 years before being replaced on February 9, 1956, when the Civil Service Association of Alberta presented the Legislative Assembly of Alberta with the new Mace.

The design for the new Mace, our present Mace, was done by Lawrence Bonheur Blain, an Edmonton watchmaker, patternmaker, and employee of Irving Kline Limited. The final design was done by the firm of Joseph Fray of Birmingham, England, and is the Mace, again, that allows this Assembly to sit today.

On top of the Mace is the figure of a beaver mounted on the traditional crown, representing the connection to Canada and the Crown. Both the royal coat of arms and the Canadian coat of arms are displayed on the ball of the Mace. Sheaves of wheat, representing Alberta's prairies, and wild roses, the floral emblem of Alberta, are engraved alternately on the crown. The headband of the crown is adorned with a ring of seven gems and semiprecious stones. They have been chosen in part because their initial letters spell out Alberta – amethyst with the A, lazurite with the L, bloodstone with the B, emerald with the E, ruby with the R, topaz with the T, and agate with the A. Two bison heads are positioned just below the bowl. The shaft of the Mace is decorated with wild roses and is capped with a sheaf of grain. The current Mace is three feet long, contains 5,669 grams of silver, and is overlaid with gold to weigh a total of approximately 11 kilograms. The total cost of the Mace in 1956 was $3,000.

As part of our 100 years of the Alberta Legislative Assembly commemorations we have designed a special 100 years Mace pin, the first of which was presented to the hon. the Premier on the last day of the spring sitting. Today I'm pleased to provide all members and table officers with a 100 year Mace pin. One will also be provided to all former members, the Sergeant-at-Arms, and members of the Alberta Legislature press gallery. I hope that all will wear the pin with pride.

Protection of Individual Rights

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Democracy has flourished in Canada for nearly 140 years and in Alberta for over a century. Our democratic system has ensured peace, prosperity, and progress. The Canadian democratic system is built on a foundation of rights, including freedom of religion, freedom of expression, and freedom of conscience. These rights, that are enshrined for every single Canadian regardless of their race, religion, colour, or sex, require constant vigilance and diligence on the part of all Canadians, particularly on the part of those who have the honour of serving as representatives in a Legislature body.

Specifically, I am talking about the issues that have arisen from the legalization of same-sex marriage. This is a practice that contradicts the faith beliefs of many, and while it is important to protect the rights and freedoms of same-sex couples, it is also important to protect the rights of others. It is a matter of balance. We must ensure that rights are protected for all Canadians and not simply those who are the most vocal or organized. By insisting that all Canadians are guaranteed the basic right to express themselves and act according to their own values, beliefs, and religion, we are sending a message to the world that Canada is serious about protecting human rights for everyone.

I wholeheartedly support the efforts of the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View to ensure that the basic rights of every Canadian that are enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are protected. By ensuring the basic rights of all, we are ensuring the democratic freedoms of Canada for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

CFB Suffield

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For more than 35 years British Armed Forces have been using Canadian Forces Base Suffield, located 50 kilometres northwest of Medicine Hat, as a military training ground. Two hundred and fifty thousand British soldiers have gained mechanized warfare training at the CFB Suffield site, and at 2,690 square kilometres the base is one of the largest military training grounds in the western world. CFB Suffield is larger than all five other British training grounds in the world put together.

This summer, on July 24, a signing ceremony between Great Britain and the Department of National Defence Canada was held to mark the British Armed Forces' training in Canada agreement. The signing recognizes the renewal of the exchange of notes allowing British Armed Forces' training to continue within Canada and, in particular, CFB Suffield. This agreement is unique in that it does not require periodic renewal and is therefore to remain in force indefinitely. The signing is beneficial not only in showing Canada's support for the NATO Alliance and its members but also in its economic applications.

The continuation of British training in Canada, including training done at CFB Suffield, ensures economic gain for the constituents of Cypress-Medicine Hat, Medicine Hat, Albertans, and all Canadians. Not only are jobs created within and around the Suffield base due to the military's use of these grounds, but infrastructure and general spending provide economic benefits both to Canada and Alberta generally. Approximately $90 million is gained in economic benefits by Canada every year from allowing the British military to train their soldiers within this country.

Mr. Speaker, the continuation of British Armed Forces' training in Alberta has numerous economic benefits for the province and for the people of southeastern Alberta. The July 24 signing ceremony was a positive one for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Canadian Derby

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Northlands for its successful hosting of the 77th Canadian Derby this past Saturday. I had the pleasure of attending the derby, which is one of the richest and most prestigious thoroughbred races in all of Canada, attracting many of the best three-year-old runners in the country. At $300,000 in purse money for the second year in a row the purse was the highest it has ever been.

This year's Canadian Derby offered one of the strongest fields of horses, featuring such notable favourites as Edenwold, the Queen's Plate champion from Ontario; Shillelagh Slew, the Prince of Wales champion from Ontario; Halo Steven from California, who entered the derby on a winning streak; and Bear Character, who was a contender for running in the 2006 Kentucky Derby. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, it was Shillelagh Slew who took home the winner's share of the $300,000 purse, nearly $190,000.

But the Canadian Derby is more than just a horse race, Mr. Speaker. It is also about celebrating a deep-rooted tradition. With over 12,000 people in attendance this past Saturday the racetrack was reminiscent of the Royal Ascot in England or the Kentucky Derby in Louisville. Women sported their most elegant derby hats, and the event was as much a social event as a sporting one.

I would encourage all members to join me in saluting Northlands for hosting another great Canadian Derby.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Progressive Conservative Leadership Campaign

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new vision for Alberta. In November 2004 over 200,000 Tory party faithful, disillusioned by this government's lack of vision and accountability, stayed home. While government MLAs were basically banished from Edmonton, four rookie Liberals running in constituencies with postsecondary connections were embraced in Calgary and Lethbridge. You'd think this wake-up call would have shaken this government out of autopilot, but this wholesale majority rejection of the status quo came close to repeating itself when Conservative insiders failed to wholeheartedly endorse their leader at this year's spring convention. As the Friends of Ralph Klein, the FORKs, and knives clashed, former and at that time current government ministers tripped over each others' ambitions in a race to distance themselves from their past policy failures and collective guilt by association.

In the most recent poll the front-runner in the Tories' desperate race to reinvent themselves was only three percentage points ahead of the second-place contender, who in turn was only eight percentage points ahead of the pack of other has-beens and wannabes who were tied with 5 per cent each.

The passage of years has not dulled the memories of Albertans who remember all too well how the race's current front-runner forced hospital and school closures or how this parade of wannabe Premiers helped create today's vast infrastructure deficits, falsely justified in the name of debt reduction. The so-called short-term pain has yet to materialize into the long-term gain the front-runner and other Tories promised. Devoid of policy visions themselves, Conservative contenders are attempting to co-opt long-standing provincial Liberal policies such as fixed elections, all-party policy committees, royalty and deregulation reviews, and land-use strategies.

Simply transplanting another old face onto a tired Tory body will not result in the substantive changes Albertans are demanding. Albertans want more than watered-down, warmed-up status quo leftovers. They are hungry for real change, ready to order from a full course, all-inclusive Alberta Liberal government menu.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I hate to interrupt this interesting conversation here, but I believe there are some regulations relevant to members' attire in this Chamber, and my previous speaker seems to be missing several important components thereof.

The Speaker: So I take it you're raising a point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Correct.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it at the conclusion. We'll also sanction the hon. member for using the name of an hon. member in the Assembly when he clearly knows that he's not supposed to do that. Right? He knows that? The member knows that he's not supposed to do that?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you.

The Speaker: So you did it deliberately?

Mr. Chase: No. I referred to the Friends of Ralph Klein.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Early Childhood Education

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that many people still see publicly funded child care and early education as unfriendly to families, the state meddling in the nurseries of the nation. The history of early childhood education shows us something quite different. Italian pediatrician Maria Montessori founded schools for children whose families were challenged in providing the basics, and Friedrich Froebel, the founder of kindergarten, recognized that poverty could be emotional. His mother died when he was an infant, and his father was unable to provide the nurture Friedrich needed. Froebel developed the children's garden where education, care, and a constructive approach to life went hand in hand.

The city centre education project is an initiative of this kind. Funds from Children's Services supplemented Alberta Education in a three-year pilot for inner-city schools. These unique efforts have been very successful by all accounts. The city centre education project has become a national model for the power of education to positively transform children, families, and communities. It won the Premier's award for excellence in 2004 and was recognized in the magazine Today's Parent for providing effective and creative solutions to the complicated problems of inner-city children.

I know a man who taught in one of these schools. He told me of children who arrived with hands chapped and bleeding without mittens in subzero weather. He talked of the importance of a breakfast program for children who had none. It is essential that we do not see children's needs in isolation. Care and education are part of an inseparable whole, and I commend the ministries for working together here.

Now the funding from Children's Services has run its term but the program and need have not. There is no funding in place for the prekindergarten programs at Delton, Spruce Avenue, and Norwood schools. Now is the time to think beyond targets, deadlines, and deliverables to something larger. It is 180 years since Friedrich Froebel said that early childhood should be a garden. It is time to allow those seeds that he planted to grow and blossom.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was proud to join members of the Harvie family, my colleagues, and the Minister of Community Development to announce the preservation of a valuable part of Alberta's natural landscape. The new Glenbow Ranch provincial park west of Calgary will encompass over 3,200 acres and 14 kilometres of the beautiful Bow River shoreline. This area is a treasure of rolling grasslands which includes the Glenbow quarry, from which the sandstone for this very building was mined, as well as ranchlands that have been in use for over a century.

The park was made possible thanks to the Harvie family, who had the vision to conserve this property and who took the initiative to ensure that their father's dream became a reality. This incredible stretch of land is an important part of our natural and our cultural heritage, and the new park will ensure that future generations of Albertans will have the opportunity to experience and enjoy our history and our diverse landscape.

As Tim Harvie stated in his address, anyone who . . . ventured the length of the valley to witness the fragile biodiversity, the sharp coulees, the sandstone outcroppings, the fresh water springs, and the wildlife that inhabits this land, has seen the value in ensuring this natural beauty remains intact.

I am sure that all members of this House agree, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask that they now join me in thanking the Harvie family for sharing their dream and allowing the province to invest in a property that will well preserve and protect a part of our Alberta history.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 218 petitions today urging the government to move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road south of the current proposal to reduce noise, increase safety measures as well as minimize the environmental impact of the road.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to submit a petition signed by 196 concerned citizens from the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, which reads, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to take measures to control unacceptable increases in rent."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a petition from a number of Albertans that reads, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on a proposed Standing Order 30.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 30 I wish to give notice that at an appropriate time I intend to move that the ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned in order that we may hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the mounting risk to pending and future investments in Alberta oil sands, the potential loss of public royalty revenues, and the diminishing ability of local authorities to cope due to the failure of the government to plan and provide funding for the necessary public infrastructure and community services in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

The Speaker: Okay. We will deal with it at the conclusion of Routine.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I want to bring in for this debate:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely that the failure of the government to develop an affordable housing strategy has exacerbated housing shortages, causing rapidly increasing rental rates, homelessness, and unsafe tenancies across Alberta and that the Assembly should urge the government to immediately create a ministry of housing to address this crisis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. It will be dealt with at the conclusion of Routine.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I rise to table five copies of the Standard & Poor's document that she referenced during question period today while responding to questions from one or more hon. members opposite regarding budgetary practices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling today is a handwritten letter dated August 21, 2006, from Edmonton-McClung constituent Ms Sherry Eastwood, recounting her experience with Alberta Blue Cross in transporting her father to Norwood extended care, which is across the street from and linked with a tunnel to the Royal Alexandra hospital, and having to pay for the ambulance drive because Norwood is not considered an active treatment facility. She asks how those rules are arrived at and urges as much attention to seniors as is afforded other sectors, especially in these boom times.

My second tabling is an e-mail dated August 17, 2006, from Dr. Chris Evans, who is an emergency room physician and another Edmonton-McClung constituent, talking about some of the homeless patients he sees who can definitely work but feel that potential employers get turned off when they find out they have no place to live. He also talks about social services and that we should be looking at ways to help these guys get roofs over their heads so they can focus on going out and looking for work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I have on my list Lethbridge-East, Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Ellerslie. Are there more? Okay, we'll go up and down the line then.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre first.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. They are all in opposition to Bill 208. The first is from David Cournoyer, who voices his opposition and notes that nothing is acceptable to him in this bill.

The second is from Jason Rumer, a constituent deeply opposed to Bill 208, who would like to see the bill defeated.

Finally, from Gary Simpson, who is also very opposed to the bill and goes into some detail on the arguments against it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a letter to myself from Kent Cameron expressing concerns about the funding of the city centre education program and explaining his views on the considerable value of early intervention programs like this. I have the five copies with it.

My other letter is from constituent Matthew Tang, asking that I table this letter, where he is expressing concerns about the possibility of Bill 208 passing. He is concerned that this bill does nothing more than protect discrimination.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the leader of the NDP I would like to table a document referred to in question period today. There's an article by Michelle Lang in which she writes, "The minister said the province would run the risk of criticism by introducing the complex act this late in the spring session of the legislature."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling 18 letters in the required five copies. They are from Burke Babki, Wayne Dudley, Rodney Barrows, Kara Koop, Boyd Sorrel Horse, Kent Pedersen, Billy Wolf Child, Shannon Kehler, Daniel Wright, Melody Scout, Leah Williams, F. Torrento, Joe Groeneweg, Meghan Mulloy, Colin Gray, Donna Tarnava, Danielle Petersen, and Kelly Shaver. They are or work with persons with developmental disabilities. They are asking this government to please raise their wages because they are losing their staff to the local doughnut shop. Their question is: which is more important, doughnuts or vulnerable people?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the residents of Alberta I would like to table a petition which has been disallowed by Parliamentary Counsel for some reason, urging the government of Alberta to "establish a system whereby the housing development in Edmonton includes one and two bedroom bungalows or apartment complexes with elevators so that seniors or war veterans can either buy or rent at affordable prices." Many low-income seniors and veterans "have some medical problems and want to maintain their independence."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others, hon. members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today, and they're all in relation to the upcoming debate on Bill 208. The first is from a constituent, Julie Chow, asking me to convey to this Assembly her support of Bill 208.

All of the others, Mr. Speaker, are asking that Bill 208 be defeated. They are from Nancy Steeves, Mrs. Mieke Wharton, Lesley Mitchell, Pat Seale, Thais McKee, Bob Hetherington, Chris and Kathy Power, Anne McCracken, Steve Cymbol, Dawn Waring, Gerri Young, Lois Evans, Daniel Langdon, Margaret Hetherington, and Claudette Esterine.

I'd just like to point out a couple of concerns from that last letter by Claudette Esterine. She indicates that she is also a person of colour and a person from an identifiable cultural group, where she has suffered discrimination for those two conditions, if I can call it that, and is concerned that if Bill 208 were to allow discrimination based on her sexual orientation, then where does it stop, and would it not also extend to those other conditions?

Thank you.

head: 3:20 Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, pursuant to the Agriculture Financial Services Act the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation annual report 2005-2006.

head: Statement by the Speaker
Committee of Supply Voting

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a point of order, we have two Standing Order 30s, and we have one procedural matter that I have to clarify with the House. On the assumption that, in fact, a Standing Order 30 might actually get approved today, that would negate, then, the opportunity to deal with the point of order or the little draft ruling. So I think we'll deal with the draft ruling, then we'll deal with the point of order, and then we'll go to the first Standing Order 30.

Government House leaders, in fact, I would specifically draw this matter to you. If you would take a look at Standing Orders 61(1) and 62(1) and (2), that would be helpful in terms of what I'm going to say because this is a situation that to our knowledge has never been the subject of a ruling by the chair before.

Under Standing Order 2 the Speaker is to decide upon the procedure in all unprovided for contingencies. The chair is making a statement at this time under this standing order so as to remove any uncertainty about the proceedings in committee this evening. Essentially, the chair must find a way so that there is not a conflict between two standing order provisions that come into play because we are considering estimates in Committee of Supply on a Monday night. Under Standing Order 61(1) for consideration of estimates to constitute a sitting day, the Committee of Supply must consider the estimates for a minimum of two hours any afternoon or any evening. Under Government Motion 25, that was approved by the Assembly last Thursday, the number of days that the Committee of Supply is being called to consider supplementary supply is two days.

Under Standing Order 62(2) the requirement is that on the last day of estimates consideration by the committee the chair is to interrupt 15 minutes before the normal adjournment hour and "put a single question proposing the approval of all matters not yet voted on." The normal adjournment hour tonight according to Standing Order 62(1) is 11 o'clock. So the chair should interrupt at 10:45. The problem is that this would mean there would not have been two hours spent on the estimates, so it wouldn't qualify as a sitting day.

This issue has never arisen before. In an attempt to interpret the Standing Orders so that there is no contradiction, the chair has spent some considerable amount of time looking at this in the last several days and interprets them so that at the conclusion of two hours or if there is no member who wishes to speak before that time, the chair will put a single question on the supplementary supply estimates as required under Standing Order 62(2).

Now, all of this is premised on the fact that the Committee of Supply will start its consideration after 8:45 this evening. If Committee of Supply somehow were to start by 8:45, the two-hour thing that would come up by quarter to eleven would not be a consideration. But one is assuming that the full 60 minutes will be spent on the motion and that the Assembly in committee will not deal with this matter until at least 9 o'clock to 9:05 o'clock, which if you meant 120 minutes later, then in essence you have to deal with the vote between 11 and 11:05, and you could not apply Standing Order 62(2), which says it would come in by 10:45 to preclude the full two hours. Clear? Okay. Very good.

Point of Order
Dress Code in the Chamber

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the drafters of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms were kind to us and have provided for the situation where at times when we can't listen to each other, at least we can look at each other and have mandated all male members of this gallery to be wearing a jacket and a tie. I'm referencing section 330 of Beauchesne's. As I attempted to listen to the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I know that either his necktie appears to be absent or is covered by a shirt which may be wearing a slogan. I would like a speaker's ruling on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Yes, I would like to respond to the point of order that's been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I note that section 329 of Beauchesne does set out what a member must wear, and that is a jacket, a tie, and a shirt.

That again is referred to in section 330. Now, it does specifically in section 330 indicate that a turtleneck is not an acceptable upper-body covering, that the shirt and tie are obviously required. But what Beauchesne does not lay out are additional garments that male members of this House may choose to wear. For example, it doesn't include a prohibition nor does it specifically ask that members be wearing a vest, which is quite a common garment that many gentlemen wear with a three-piece suit. It's also silent on, perhaps, a scarf. It gets a little chilly in here at nights, and I myself sometimes add a scarf or a shawl to what I'm wearing. So I don't believe this member has raised a valid point of order.

My hon. colleague for Calgary-Varsity has, in fact, a shirt, a tie, and a jacket on today. He has an additional piece of clothing on, but that is not prohibited by the Standing Orders and by the rules of Beauchesne under which we're operating. So I would argue that there is no point of order here.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, these are rather sexist Standing Orders and Beauchesne rulings that we operate under in that they are silent on the apparel of women. They are specific to the apparel of men. In this case we are talking about a man, and he has met the conditions that are set out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does anybody else want to participate on this point of order?

Hon. members, let me make this very, very clear. For 10 years now this is one subject that this Speaker has consistently avoided making any comment on, and there's a reason for that. If hon. members would look at the letter dated February 15, 2006, to all Members of the Legislative Assembly dealing with decorum in the House, there is one line that says, "suitable dress is always the order of the day and traditional practices will be continued." That pretty much clears the air on everything.

We may have Beauchesne, and we may have everything else in there, but traditional practice for gentlemen is generally a jacket and a tie. Listen, I've had notes from people telling me: you can't allow her – now, that's certainly sexist. "That skirt's way too short. She's not wearing a bra." I've had women send me notes saying: that member isn't wearing a bra.

Well, let me tell you that I'm not touching any of this stuff, okay? I refuse to touch any of this stuff. I'm not going to give a ruling on any of this stuff. I just want you to be neat, attentive, with proper decorum, that your mother would be proud if she saw you here and that she would expect. Talk to your mother about what you should wear, not to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly.

As far as I can see, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity does have a tie. It may only be an inch and a half. I have no idea what other insulation he has with respect to himself. If he finds it cool in the Assembly, so be it. Please, I'm not getting involved in this. If you want to have a committee of this Legislative Assembly to deal with the dress code, I'd be happy to secure names from all parties to deal with this.

You all look very, very nice. Thank you very much.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Infrastructure Needs in Wood Buffalo RM

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your wisdom and those comments. Nice move.

I'm rising today to propose the following motion under Standing Order 30.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30, be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the mounting risk to pending and future investments in Alberta's oil sands, the potential loss of public royalty revenues, and the diminishing ability of local authorities to cope due to the failure of the government to plan and provide funding for the necessary public infrastructure and community services in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

3:30

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm well aware of how carefully you attend to these arguments, and you've pointed out many times that Beauchesne 387 and 389 indicate that the primary issue is the urgency of debate, specifically whether there is another opportunity for debate. But briefly establishing the importance of the underlying issue must certainly be part of the argument in favour of the request for leave as envisioned by Standing Order 30. So while the test for the motion is primarily procedural – namely, whether there are other reasonable opportunities for debate – the motion must also pass this basic test of importance, and I want to speak to that briefly. Marleau and Montpetit 584 also comment on this.

Basically, I want to demonstrate that this is a matter of urgent public importance. This is an emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. This is a specific issue within the administrative competence of this government. This is not a chronic issue unless a failure of the government to address the issue is chronic. This is something specific, something that can be solved with an immediate commitment from this government.

I want to show that the public interest will suffer if it's not addressed. There is a risk to billions of dollars in investment and royalty revenues, and there is a risk to local authorities who are by their own admission in a crisis mode in relation to hospitals, mental health services, education services, water treatment, transportation, and infrastructure, and the list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, this issue is immediately relevant and of concern throughout Alberta and even beyond, throughout the nation. The recent EUB hearings and associated media coverage, which was very extensive, demonstrate this.

So, first, perhaps most importantly, let me say that this issue is critically important to the citizens of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. The actions and inactions of this government have produced a crisis situation for that community. The municipality's intervention, unprecedented I believe, at the EUB hearings in Fort McMurray indicates that very clearly.

The local authorities, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, and the health authority, and the school boards simply cannot continue to provide the necessary public services, including health care, education, policing, and other human services as well as water, roads, housing, recreation, et cetera. They cannot support existing or new projects without immediate action by this government. Last-minute, politically driven rhetoric will simply not suffice. The municipality says that public facilities and infrastructure are under, and I quote, severe strain. There's a serious, profound infrastructure deficit, something that makes it impossible to support new expansions. Numerous new projects and expansions are planned over the next few years, possibly a hundred billion dollars or more over the next decade, and the strains as a result will only grow.

The rate of growth in Fort McMurray is so serious that, and I quote here, it puts the corporation at risk. Those are the words of the regional municipality. Now, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is already $263 million in debt, I believe, per capita, the most deep debt of any municipality in Alberta and way beyond, and it needs at least $2 billion to expand city services. The government's commitment to date is simply insufficient.

Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Government Act states:

- 3 The purposes of a municipality are
 - (a) to provide good government,
 - (b) to provide services, facilities or other things that, in the opinion of council, are necessary or desirable for all or a part of the municipality, and
 - (c) to develop and maintain safe and viable communities.

Those are the purposes of a municipality in law. The municipality feels that it may not be able to continue those. This is not the fault of the regional municipality. They are struggling to fulfill their legislative responsibilities by insisting on adequate support.

The negative impact of growth is something that Suncor acknowledges, and it further acknowledges that these problems may worsen without immediate action by the parties with direct responsibility. The municipality there further claims that there are, quote, insufficient mechanisms available to provide for the municipality's needs in a timely fashion. End quote. In other words, we need to take extraordinary measures now to solve this problem.

The municipality also notes that prior approvals granted on the basis of promises to mitigate negative socioeconomic impacts have not been followed through by adequate action by government. They have not lived up to their promises. Current funding formulas are obviously and painfully inadequate. In short, there is currently no regular process or mechanism to solve this situation. We need, in other words, emergency action. The fact that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo has openly challenged the new proposal before the EUB indicates that the funding and infrastructure crisis has tipped the scale away from the public interest. Other communities, from Cold Lake to Grande Prairie, may well follow suit. The stakes are, Mr. Speaker, very high.

Another urgent reason is the threat to both the loss of investment and the threat to the provincial royalty revenue stream. This government has charted a budgetary course that has increased Alberta's direct dependence on nonrenewable resource revenues and the investments that drive them. Essential programs across this province depend on a stable investment environment, including the assurance that the host community can support these long-term projects.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I've worked hard here to establish that essential services across this province are dependent, indeed disturbingly dependent, on these revenues from the oil sands. Secondly, we've established that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is in a crisis situation that requires immediate and urgent consideration if future oil sands developments are to go ahead. This government is pitting the health and well-being of the community members against the public interest to find more and more development and investment. The EUB hearings clearly show this conflict is unsustainable.

So, Mr. Speaker, we've established that this is a critical issue, an emergency requiring urgent consideration. It's a specific issue within the administrative competence of this government, and the public interest will suffer if the issue is not addressed. Finally, it's immediately relevant and of concern throughout the whole province. The Minister of Environment's unprecedented intervention at the hearings, though he apparently only appeared as a local MLA, is itself evidence of how crucial the issue is.

As Beauchesne 387 and 389 indicate, the most critical issue is whether we are to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly and debate this. The key tests are whether the rules of the House provide another opportunity. Well, Mr. Speaker, first, there are no government bills on the Order Paper that deal with energy issues. In fact, there are no government bills relevant to this at all. The only private members' bills do not address the issue. There are no private bills that touch on this, and the only motion being debated has nothing to do with energy or oil sands development. There are no written questions currently due for discussion that deal with this issue. There are no motions for returns requesting information that may help this issue move forward. We are receiving no committee or government reports that provide an opportunity to debate the issue, and any other tools, such as private members' statements or other debates, are not available.

As Beauchesne 387 says, the test is whether there is, quote, another opportunity for debate. End quote. Clearly, there isn't. Beauchesne 390 says that the test is not whether the issue can be raised but whether it can be discussed, and it clearly can't be unless we have an emergency debate, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period is also clearly not a proper forum for discussion. Finally and most critically, the supplementary estimates before this House do not specifically address the funding and infrastructure crisis facing Fort McMurray. Given the recent EUB hearings and the calls for action by local authorities, this is indeed troubling. Where is the government's action?

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Assembly needs to send a clear signal to the citizens of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, to Albertans, and indeed to other Canadians and investors from around the world that the fears already being voiced by industry will not necessarily be realized because this Assembly, this government is prepared to act. I would love to see this government act.

I've demonstrated, I believe, Mr. Speaker, both the significance of the issue itself and the urgency of debate. I would therefore ask you to find that a prima facie case for urgency has been made and that you put the question of whether to proceed with the debate to the Assembly as called for in Standing Order 30.

Thank you.

3:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30 provisions allow for the chair to recognize participants, so could the chair get an idea – the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, and that's it then? [interjection] The hon. leader of the third party and the hon. Minister of Environment. Okay. Remember now that urgency is the only subject the chair is prepared to entertain. This is not a debate on the motion.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your words of wisdom with respect to the nature of the debate regarding the motion at this particular point. The hon. Leader of the Opposition did however spend some considerable time outlining his idea of the substance of the importance of the debate per se as opposed to the procedural situation. I would with your indulgence make a couple of comments with respect to that, but I would certainly agree that the fundamental issue with respect to this particular type of motion is whether or not there are other reasonable opportunities to address the debate. So what I will do is make a few comments on the former and then finish with the procedural side of the response.

First of all, I would agree, Mr. Speaker, that issues relative to oil sands, issues with respect to Fort McMurray and the growth associated with all of that are indeed very important. Indeed, they are a very large part of what Alberta is about today in terms of revenue, in terms of where dollars are expended, so there is no doubt about the importance of the matter. I would however disagree with respect to the critical and urgent need to have the matters set aside this afternoon for a discussion.

There is a great deal that is going on relative to this. There were questions today posed by the opposition which provided answers, to the extent there were questions, as to what is in fact being done by this government with respect to the points raised, but there's a great deal more than that. For example, in terms of infrastructure there is some $680 million that has been budgeted for the work with respect to highway 63. There's an additional $225 million, I believe, that has been budgeted with respect to highway construction in the Fort McMurray area other than highway 63 that is either being done or about to be done this year. So those are large sums of money, and I throw that forward as part of the matrix simply to indicate that here is a substantial amount of money in one particular ministry that is already committed from a budgeted perspective. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is an additional $260 million that is committed but not yet budgeted; in other words, to be done, say, next year in the next budget period.

We talked about the oil sands ministerial committee today in question period. We talked about the work that other committees are doing relative to consultation for land use, oil sands consultation, and so on and so forth. All of those things are being done, and they are going to be done in the fullness of time.

As it relates, however, to the procedural aspect, Mr. Speaker, this particular session is all about supplementary estimates. The debate on Thursday afternoon in large measure turned around that. Tonight it will turn around that. Tomorrow afternoon, tomorrow evening, Wednesday afternoon, Wednesday evening, and Thursday afternoon we are going to be debating the supplementary estimates. There are 15 ministries that are associated with that, not all of them ministries, but the fact is that it embeds within that discussion the revenue assumptions of this government. It embeds where the money should be spent, where the money is not being spent. It embeds in that a certain portion of money that is being spent in Fort McMurray. Given the nature of relevancy in this Assembly – that is, that it is a flexible term, which the opposition fully understand and use at every opportunity – I would respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition have the opportunity and indeed will take the opportunity this evening, tomorrow afternoon, tomorrow evening, Wednesday afternoon, Wednesday evening, and Thursday afternoon to debate this issue should they wish.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party and the hon. Minister of Environment, briefly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I note that an SO 30 application allows for a debate on a matter of urgent public importance, and the Speaker must rule that the debate is in order and put the question to the Assembly, so I ask that you do that.

The point, I think, that is made by this resolution is that the government does not have a strategy for the orderly growth of our province. It talks specifically about Fort McMurray, but in doing so, it talks about the orderly growth of the province as it relates to oil sands development. As a result, there are a number of interrelated crises which are emergent, which warrant urgent consideration by this Assembly and, in our view, are certainly a matter of urgent public importance.

The NDP opposition has called for a government commission to be established to look at all aspects of the tar sands. We've got no response from the government on that.

The MLA from Wood Buffalo himself appeared before the EUB in an unprecedented appearance to call for additional funding for infrastructure for his constituency, notwithstanding the fact that he'd been a part of this government for a number of years.

The procedure, Mr. Speaker, at Beauchesne 387 says that a debate under the standing order must deal with a specific question that requires urgent consideration. It must be "within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate."

The Minister of Justice and House leader has argued that the supplementary estimates provide that opportunity. It's our submission, Mr. Speaker, that they do not. They are fragmented, piecemeal program funding that do not address the fundamental question of the government's support for the growth in the oil sands and specifically the question of oil sands development. This is within the competence of the Minister of Energy broadly, but it also has important considerations in Health and Wellness, Municipal Affairs, and Infrastructure and Transportation. Those supplementary estimates do not provide a reasonable opportunity to deal comprehensively with this issue and specifically on the focus of Fort McMurray.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to refer to Beauchesne's 391 and note that this question is not under adjudication in a court of law. Marleau and Montpetit on page 587 and Beauchesne's 391 tell us that the matter should not be elsewhere on the Order Paper. It is not. It is a recurrent theme that we are here to debate some very specific estimates, but there is very little time even to do that.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the mayor of Fort McMurray has been very clear in her position that the current pace of development in the oil sands is completely unsustainable. If there is no strategy put into place, Alberta's fastest growing city could crack under the strain.

Further, the economic distortions being caused by the government's cowboy economics are causing significant ripples throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that the New Democrat opposition is in support of the call for a debate on this issue. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the issue of urgency and also under Beauchesne 387 and 389, which has been referenced by the third party as well as the Leader of the Opposition, I came to Alberta almost 30 years ago, and under this urgency I came and made Fort McMurray my home. In fact, I have the honour and privilege of saying that I was the first mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, with the support and the privilege that the people of Wood Buffalo offered me.

Mr. Speaker, on this issue of urgency I just remind the hon. members that close to a billion dollars, which is not in supplementary estimates tonight – in actual fact . . . [interjections] I'd ask the hon. members to please listen through the chair because I'm trying to make important points representing my citizens, no different than what you do representing yours.

But the relevance to this is simply the urgency in terms of what we are doing. Under urgency, a citizen said to me the other day: Guy, there is not one piece of road in Fort McMurray that isn't being ripped up by the province of Alberta in its money in terms of the billion dollars that's being spent there.

Is this an urgent issue? No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I do not support under urgency what is being suggested here this afternoon.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, it's Monday afternoon, generally allocated for private members' day, so I appreciate very much receiving a copy of this notice of Standing Order 30 a number of days ago. It certainly allowed us an opportunity to review where we were. So I am prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion of receipt is in order under Standing Order 30(2).

First of all, again to repeat that the Leader of the Official Opposition certainly gave proper notice of intention to bring a motion under Standing Order 30. Notice was received by my office last Friday at 10:24 a.m., so it gave us plenty of time, and that certainly met the requirement.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relates to "a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." The member's proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on the following:

The mounting risk to pending and future investments in Alberta's oil sands, the potential loss of public royalty revenues, and the diminishing ability of local authorities to cope due to the failure of the government to plan and provide funding for the necessary public infrastructure and community services in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

Again, very correctly the relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debate are Beauchesne's paragraphs 387, 398 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice pages 587 to 589. The key principles are that the matter must pertain to a genuine emergency and there must not be another opportunity for members to discuss the matter.

The chair also listened closely and attentively to the submissions made, and there's no doubt at all in the chair's view that this is considered by some to be a very serious matter. It's also true, though, that we will have a bill during this session called the Appropriation Act, that is scheduled for consideration, scheduled for discussion, and there will be opportunity – whenever there's a bill before the House, the bill provides for the greatest latitude with respect to debate and discussion. It even affords for amendments. So there is that one issue.

The chair is also just a little concerned about a couple of other things. The hon. leader of the third party is quite prepared to waive his Standing Order 30 by making an argument that this Standing Order 30 is much more important. So we'll await with considerable interest to see what the hon. member will be saying with respect to the next urgent matter, which is housing, when the arguments were made very, very enthusiastically for this one to be of greater concern.

Secondly, virtually all members of the Official Opposition today – and today was an abnormal day in terms of introduction of guests and visitors – said that they were introducing visitors who were present to hear debate on Bill 208. Well, the chair is perhaps a little confused, because under Beauchesne 387 it says, "In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate." Well, if so many members were here today to introduce guests who apparently were invited to see or hear a debate on Bill 208 and then members would come in with an emergency motion for debate, that would preclude an opportunity for this emergency debate. The chair is sometimes a little unsure of what he really hears.

So the ruling is very clear. The request for leave, despite the fact this is an interesting subject, is not in order, and the chair will not put the question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton Beverly-Clareview.

Affordable Housing Strategy

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the point is that Bill 208 is to be opposed no matter how.

I would like to move the following:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely that the failure of the government to develop an affordable housing strategy has exacerbated housing shortages, causing rapidly increasing rental rates, homelessness, and unsafe tenancies across Alberta and that the Assembly should urge the government to immediately create a ministry of housing to address this crisis.

Mr. Speaker, you've already indicated that we distributed this order to your office about 10, well before the prescribed deadline of 11:30, as laid out in Standing Order 30(1).

Beauchesne 387 says that a debate under the Standing Order must deal with a specific question that requires urgent consideration. It must be "within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate." Mr. Speaker, we're calling for a very specific action in this motion; namely, the creation of a ministry of housing. This is clearly within the administrative competence of the government. In fact, it's entirely under the prerogative of the Premier and Executive Council. Because creating ministries is undertaken by the government and not the Assembly, we have very little opportunity other than a debate such as this to discuss why such a ministry is so important.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to refer to Beauchesne 391 and note that housing crisis is not under adjudication by a court of law, and I would stress that there is no other opportunity to debate this matter. Marleau and Montpetit suggest the same criteria on page 587. In particular, although we are here to spend over $1 billion in the next few days, not one red cent has been allocated to the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports or to Government Services, the two ministries best positioned to address housing issues.

Marleau and Montpetit 588 also set the following criteria: the motion cannot "raise a question of privilege." Clearly this motion does not. The motion should not be of regional or local interest or related to only one specific group or industry. This crisis is affecting Albertans across the province, Mr. Speaker.

I think we've met the procedural requirements on this motion, so the question, then, is whether it is a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Speaker, over the summer we have heard of people living in tents in places such as Canmore and Fort McMurray because housing costs are grossly disproportionate to their wages. Earlier this week mayors from seven communities made a plea for housing support. They identified a need to deal with the homeless, for $20 million to resolve this crisis. The 2006 count of homeless persons found 3,436 homeless people in Calgary. There have been media reports of rental increases in Calgary as high as $1,000 per month. Average rent in Fort McMurray is $1,500 per month for a two-bedroom apartment.

In the city of Edmonton the Boyle Street community services centre began a program to reach out to the estimated 200 to 600 people living in the river valley, many of whom are working but cannot afford housing. I have received heart-wrenching letters from constituents who are in very precarious housing situations. We mentioned that one Edmonton woman, a single parent, has been given rent increases of $300 in just a few months.

Just today we heard from Reverend Keith Loewen, who works with CUPS Community Health Centre in Calgary. He is seeking help for a 63-year-old man who is disabled and living on a fixed federal pension and provincial social services. His rent is increasing almost a hundred dollars in one month. That means almost 90 per cent of his income must go to paying rent.

Mr. Speaker, we have a crisis in this province, and I can't think of anything more relevant than to debate the lack of a housing plan in this province. I would remind that after this session we probably will not be back here until February, and things are going to get worse before they get better. There's absolutely no doubt about that. So I would suggest to you that I think that this is a prima facie case of something that is urgent in all aspects, because we can't afford to go the way we're going. Thousands of people are suffering.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Is there a government spokesman on this particular thing? The hon. minister, the Official Opposition, and then shall we bring it to a head? Okay. The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports on the urgency.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to respond to the motion pursuant to Standing Order 30 that has been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. This is a very important issue, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for housing programs for low-income Albertans – and that's this ministry; there is one: Seniors and Community Supports.

In responding to the issue of urgency, I know, as we said earlier, that there is unprecedented growth in Alberta. It's increased the demand for housing throughout the province. I'm hoping that you'll consider that the motion should have accurate information in it if it is going to be addressed on an urgent basis. I'd like to just let you know that it's inaccurate to suggest that the government is somehow responsible for increasing rents and the demand for housing in Alberta, and it's also inaccurate to suggest that we do not have an affordable housing strategy. You're absolutely right, Mr. Speaker, from your previous ruling. The substance is inaccurate in this motion. I was a backbencher just recently, and I know how important private members' day is and how important it is that we're allowed as private members to put our information forward. This takes away from that for private members today, especially to base it on inaccuracy.

We do have a strategy in our business plan, Mr. Speaker. We have two goals, nine strategies, and five performance measures in our plan. It's available on the website. We continue to develop those strategies to meet housing. We have 113 staff members who work very hard, using their annual budget of $171 million, to implement the strategies to address homelessness and affordable housing. Our efforts include what was mentioned as the whole continuum of housing, from homeless shelters to rent subsidies and affordable housing for low- to moderate-income people. We care deeply about looking after that area for Albertans.

So I'm going to submit that this debate, I think, should be dealt with, hopefully, in your ruling as was the previous motion 30 for the same reasons that you outlined in your ruling. I don't think that this motion really deserves to be holding up the time of the Assembly for what's been put forward today because it can be debated further this week as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the point of urgency.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking in support of the Standing Order 30 that has been brought forward on developing an affordable housing strategy, particularly around rental rates, homelessness, and unsafe tenancies. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has gone through some of the arguments. I think we're always looking at two things in these arguments. One is the importance of the issue, and the second is the urgency of debating it now, today, as compared to some point in the future, what makes it an urgent debate now.

There is no question that the issue of housing and homelessness is rising up both on the actual thermometer of dire circumstances but also in the public's perception, who are becoming more concerned about this, and the increasing calls from the public to do something about this even if they are not personally involved, and that's reflected in increasing newspaper articles and letters to the editor. The point I'm trying to make here is that there is a progression of the issue.

Is the issue important? Yes, of course, especially when we look at some of the numbers that are coming forward to us. Fort McMurray: we've already mentioned that the Sally Ann shelter there was turning away around 30 people a night last year in the fall, and that's up considerably now. So how many people could they be turning away this October or November? That becomes a very important issue, both for the individuals who are facing that particular situation themselves but also as a larger issue for the municipality there and, I think, for the province overall.

In Edmonton our homeless count went up from the one that I did in 2000, which was around 1,100 people. The last time it was done, in 2004, it was over 2,000. So it pretty much doubled in four years. Again, we're seeing a progression there. Lethbridge: in their Women's Emergency Shelter they were turning away as many women and their children as they were able to offer shelter to. In Red Deer the People's Place shelter experienced an increase in both length of stay and number of guests and, again, turning away people at an unprecedented number. My colleague has already talked about Calgary numbers. In Grande Prairie the street outreach and support van assisted 20 to 25 individuals per night last year, and 20 to 25 camps are assisted each night this year. So that's going from an individual to a collection of individuals already. So I argue that the tests for importance have been met.

Are there other opportunities for debate? The minister in charge has indicated that there are, but again, Mr. Speaker, we are charged in this particular sitting – the only business in front of us is that of Committee of Supply and then an appropriation bill in which we are debating some 15 different ministries, each requesting varying amounts of money to a total of $1.4 billion. The concentration and the focus there is on the expenditure of money for specific requests. It's not an open debate on housing and homelessness in Alberta, and neither would the Speaker be very pleased with us if we turned that debate into such a thing. There is a time and a place for everything, and we are not being offered the opportunity to debate this issue during this sitting, which is why you have a request for an emergency debate in front of you.

Certainly, there's no throne speech that we could look upon, no government bill, no private member's bill, no private member's public bill or private bill, no government motions, no motions other than government motions. So our opportunities for debate are nonexistent on this issue. Oral Question Period, as the Speaker has often pointed out, is not an opportunity for debate. The written questions and motions for returns that we are looking forward to being able to put forward later this afternoon: none of them at this point are anticipating the issue of homelessness and housing and shelter because, of course, those written questions and motions for returns were submitted somewhere back in the spring. Any motion for a return or written question submitted today would not come up for three weeks if we continued to sit. So our opportunity to debate this issue as compared to actually just raising it is severely limited, and that's why I'm supporting the request to follow through.

Now, taking into consideration the Speaker's careful consideration of the previous request for an emergency debate and his reasoning against it, you know, I do defend my colleagues because I did listen carefully to the introductions of people that were with us in the gallery. In fact, a number of my colleagues said that people were here in opposition to a particular bill that was named but did not specifically state that people had come here to watch a debate. They said that they were opposed to it. They said . . . [interjection] Well, check the Hansard. Be specific about this. Check the Hansard and see what people actually said. Don't assume these things.

So I think that for clarification purposes I'll add that in as a defence of what we're trying to achieve with this Standing Order 30. Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: The chair has already made comments earlier with respect to the previous Standing Order 30. One is the recognition of the hon. member for providing the standing order application within the time frame that was required. It was very much appreciated.

The chair recognizes that this is without any doubt a considerable matter. The chair is not sure that he can distinguish in his mind if it's more important than the situation last Thursday or three months ago. However, there's one thing in the motion that is rather interesting. It's the last number of lines in the motion: "to immediately create a ministry of housing to address this crisis." Yet Standing Order 30(6) indicates that "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." There is a decision being requested. It's a serious matter. Standing Order 30 says a certain thing. The chair's conclusion, very briefly, is that the request for leave is not in order, and the chair will not put the question.

head: Statement by the Speaker
Private Members' Business

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, I would like to make a couple of comments. I have observed with a great deal of interest what is happening on private members' day. The chair has indicated on numerous occasions in the last number of years that the chair would do everything possible to protect the integrity of private members and private members' day from a tyranny that might come from the government. Such has not been the case. It may be a tyranny of the Assembly against private members. There is a very limited amount of time in this schedule that we have in this Parliament in the province of Alberta that is allocated for private members' business. It has been relegated now to one day per week, and it's Monday.

To me one of the outstanding positives about this Legislative Assembly which makes it so different from every other Legislative Assembly in the British parliamentary mode – when members go and meet with other parliamentarians from other countries and other jurisdictions, even in Canada, they can't believe the opportunity for private members to actually stand up and advance something and do something. When the reforms were made in 1993, they were governed to providing this opportunity for private members to basically advocate for something. In fact, if you were to go and ask the citizens of Alberta, if they elected an MLA, most of them would say: we encourage you to go to Edmonton and introduce a bill and try and get it through.

Now, in that short time frame that we have, there's only so much time allocated. There's no hope in hell this afternoon that any private member's bill is coming up. Right after I call Orders of the Day, we have 16, 17 written questions or motions for returns, and even at five minutes for each one, it'll be after 5:30. I know what has transpired in the last Monday allocated for private members' day. I know what's transpired today. I applaud all the parliamentarians in the room for knowing the rules, applying the rules, and using the rules. I applaud you all for that. But just remember what the future will be for private members because I think that the new system now is that no private member's bill will ever be dealt with on any Monday in the future, period, and that to me is unfortunate. I couldn't care less what the subject is. That's totally immaterial to me. It's the principle of what Parliament is.

So I'm now going to call Orders of the Day, which means we can now have a cup of coffee, and we'll be here at 5:30 still dealing with motions for returns or written questions.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would do well to heed your words.

Proper notice having been given on Thursday, August 24, it is my pleasure to move that written questions 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35 be dealt with today. There being no additional written questions appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places hereafter.

[Motion carried]

Illegal Drugs, Alcoholism, and Workplace Performance

- Q28. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.
What consultations, studies, research, or other information-gathering exercises pertaining to the impact of illegal drugs and alcoholism on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism are currently planned or under way under the auspices of the Ministry of Economic Development?

[Debate adjourned May 15: Mr. Ducharme speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Community Development, do you wish to continue? You adjourned it last time.

Mr. Ducharme: I answered my questions.

The Speaker: Are there additional members? Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you wanted to participate?

Mr. Chase: Yes, I did, sir.

The Speaker: Please.

Mr. Chase: On behalf of Mr. Bonko.

The Speaker: No. You can conclude on your behalf.

Mr. Chase: Oh, thank you very much. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Decore, who proposed this written question, and closing the debate, as a member of Public Accounts and having had an extraordinary session in the summer, out of the usual legislative session, his concern is that a tremendous amount of money is being spent on the tail end dealing with the effects of alcoholism and drugs. Instead of the 10 per cent that's being spent on dealing with drug addiction, we'd like to see that money turned around and the majority of the money spent, and that is why we've asked this question. If the minister is prepared to respond, we would be very appreciative of his answer. If he prefers to do that in a written format, that's great. We can save further discussion.

Thank you, and I close debate.

[Written Question 28 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Divorce and Workplace Performance

- Q30. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.
What consultations, studies, research, or other information-gathering exercises pertaining to the impact of divorce on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism are currently planned or under way under the auspices of the Ministry of Economic Development?

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The reason for this question being asked has to do with our frequent trips up to Fort McMurray, where we learned that a variety of reasons – the isolation, the conditions of highway 63, the stress – has caused one particular trades group to have a divorce rate of over 82 per cent. The stress of life in Fort McMurray and in a number of distant regions is causing a great deal of upset and disunity in families, and that is the reason for our question. I would encourage the Minister of Economic Development to either respond to the question orally or in writing. It's a major concern, especially in the boom town of Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to indicate that we will be rejecting Written Question 30 on the basis that my department is not currently planning nor has under way any consultations, studies, research, or other information-gathering exercises pertaining to the impact of divorce on workplace performance, productivity, and absenteeism.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make some brief comments. Certainly, if the ministry is in fact not conducting these research consultations and other information-gathering exercises, they're not capable of providing that information, but perhaps this is a reasonable opportunity for us to look at this very issue in the future in regard to productivity and effectiveness and the overall human quality of life for workers in this province. We're creating a situation in this province where so many workers are compelled to be working far from where their place of residence is and where their family is as well. This creates an unstable environment for not only where usually the gentlemen are working, in camps, but also back in our cities where, mostly again, fathers and it's certainly not uncommon for mothers to be away as well for extended periods of time, causing undue stress. It would be useful, I think, for our provincial government to look at this as a study but certainly also to look for solutions for this problem.

Thank you.

4:20

The Speaker: Others?

I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Beyond a doubt our most important resource is our people. When parents are basically exchanging goodbyes and hellos and are so busy working trying to keep a roof over their children's heads, which is very much the case in Fort McMurray where two parents are employed there as well as those who by separation are trying to eke out an economic existence, the calling for a study is hardly an expensive or intrusive request. For the sake of the people in Alberta who are forced to take on numerous jobs at the expense of both their marriage and their family's quality of life, I would urge the Minister of Economic Development to undertake such a study. Thank you.

With that, I close debate.

[Written Question 30 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Education System Improvement and Reporting Branch

Q31. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Flaherty that the following question be accepted.
What measurable impacts do the activities of the system improvement and reporting branch of Alberta Education have on enhancing teaching and educational outcomes for students?

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The reason for this request is multifold. With education dollars coming at such difficulty, especially when it affects infrastructure and classroom reduction, it's extremely important that every dollar spent on education is accounted for. What this question is calling for is that kind of accountability. What exactly does the system improvement and reporting branch of Alberta Education do, and is there any evidence that it is actually directly related to either enhancing the teaching or educational outcomes for students? Education is a major draw on the province's revenue, as is health care, and it's absolutely essential that the money that's being expended be accounted for.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written Question 31 I want to advise the Assembly that I'm prepared to accept this question on behalf of the government, but I want to just point out a couple of things very briefly. Number one, the system improvement and reporting branch should properly be noted as being a division because there are three other branches within that particular division: the learner assessment branch, the performance measurement and reporting branch, and the system improvement group, which is also a branch. It's just a small editorial thing but just for the members present to know that. It's being reorganized, actually, to become the accounting and reporting division.

However, with respect to this question in particular and understanding that what the member is really seeking is something to do with our outcomes or our performance measures, Mr. Speaker, the measurable impacts are actually provided in our business plans and elsewhere. Whatever we can find in that regard, I'll be happy to provide to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, I appreciate the minister saying that this information is available elsewhere, but I would argue that it is not, in fact, completely available for us elsewhere. I appreciate that you're going to give us the information that you have.

The issue here is that we seem to have this section – now reorganized, you tell us, but nonetheless we've been operating under that system for some time – in which the system improvement and reporting branch seems to be there really to give information to the minister to make policy by or perhaps even budget decisions, but it really didn't enhance any kind of report back to either the parents or the staff in the school, which are the other two parties that need to have information about education and the impacts and the outcomes of how our system is working on students. It appeared to me that what was going on here was a bit of empire building because under the previous minister it did involve additional staff that were being assigned to the department, yet we weren't getting additional information that was coming out to the parents. This whole sort of accounting report-back system didn't really give the parents or, in fact, I would argue the schools information to make decisions on. It seemed to be information that was of most interest and usefulness to the minister.

I support my colleague from St. Albert on this motion, that was brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-Varsity, in attempting to dig out exactly what it was that the department thought this reporting branch was doing. We would argue that it's not giving information to the parents or the students. What was it doing in giving information to the minister, and would he like to expand on that and give us some good reason why all that money was going in there? It wasn't going to any of the other groups that are of interest. I'm looking forward to the information that's forthcoming.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're looking for accountability. We're looking for value. It was in that direction that that question has been asked. I look forward to whatever direction the minister can provide us that will answer the questions we have with regard to the relevance of this particular department and how its relevance translates directly to outcomes either by enhancing teaching or improving the educational learning possibilities for students. I appreciate the minister's willingness, as indicated, to provide some of that information. It will be received with great appreciation.

Thank you.

[Written Question 31 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you wanted to make a procedural proposal to the Assembly?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In deference to the issue of time and the possibility of division bells ringing today, I would ask under Standing Order 32(2) that when a division is called, the time interval between division bells be shortened from 10 minutes down to two minutes. The understanding typically is that the bells ring once for 30 seconds, then there's a two-minute interval, and then there's another full minute thereafter of the bells ringing.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Education System Improvement and Reporting Branch

Q32. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Flaherty that the following question be accepted.

For fiscal years 2000-2001 through 2004-2005 what are the total expenses broken down by project or function in the areas of system improvement and reporting within the system improvement and reporting branch of Alberta Education?

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, what we're seeking is basically the spreadsheet information, the amount of money that was spent in this particular branch of the Department of Education. We are asking for the figures so that we and the public have a sense of the organization's value, hence the request.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written Question 32 I want to indicate to the hon. member, who I hope will indicate to the originator of the question, that I'm prepared to accept this question on behalf of the government. I just again will point out, as I said in the previous motion, that there are three branches within the division of system improvement and reporting, and that should be noted.

However, with respect to the issue of the parents getting or not getting information, I think it should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that this information is publicly available, and I would have assumed that through the Alberta Home and School Councils' Association, AHSCA, the information requested in the previous motion and perhaps in this one as well would be provided through that mechanism. Alternatively, it should also be available on the website. We'll just check into that to make sure that it is, just to help this along. Nonetheless, I will provide the information to the best of my ability, as requested.

4:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I appreciate that the minister is going to give the information that the Member for Edmonton-Decore was asking for, but I think it misses the point, the point in the system improvement reporting branch. I think it's a broader problem we're facing here in terms of what we're testing. Clearly, there are many people that are expressing concerns – I know the minister is aware of it – on the preoccupation with standardized testing for the sake of ranking schools, for the sake of whatever. I think even in the Department of Education's curriculum they admit that standardized testing only measures a narrow six out of 20 broad outcomes that students are expected to learn.

I'm sure that the minister has heard this, but there's some worry that we've become preoccupied with standardized testing. Not to use in a diagnostic way to help kids; that's where standardized testing is obviously beneficial and desirable. But the fact is that it's being used now for reasons that have little to do with a good education. The fact is that perhaps the department should be looking at how to broaden the outcomes. If standardized testing only measures a narrow six out of 20 broad outcomes, then I think we have to look at this a little differently. How do we begin to measure those sorts of things? I'm wondering if the department is going to spend some time with that.

I think that we all know the problems with standardized testing when we are, you know, ranking schools for that reason because standardized testing, it's clear, Mr. Speaker, is not adequate. They're not good for immigrants who don't understand the language. They're certainly not good for aboriginal students. We believe that some of the standardized testing allows us to brag about how well we're doing on standardized tests as compared to other provinces and other countries, but that's actually irrelevant. The important point for standardized tests is simply that they should be used for diagnostic reasons to help kids learn, not to rank schools, not to rank provinces and all the other things that we're doing.

I believe that interschool comparison and ranking promotes shaming and blaming while masking important problem areas and important economic and social realities. People say on standardized tests – I know the minister's aware of this – that the biggest indicator of how well you do compared to other provinces is what your socioeconomic status is. That will determine how well you do in standardized tests. So we can't always take the credit. I'm sure that the minister should take a look at this if he's not aware of it. But that's the reality.

What are we going to do about the other broad outcomes that the department talks about, when only six of them are being measured, and we're taking that as the Holy Grail, Mr. Speaker? So I suggest that in this department we begin to look at standardized tests differently, more diagnostic rather than for ranking, and begin to work on the 14 other broad outcomes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, and thank you very much for the words of the preceding speaker. He outlined things very nicely, and I don't have to go over the same ground. So thank you for that.

My concern, aside from that that's already been outlined by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, is that we're seeking to see how the dollars that are assigned into this area are actually enhancing learning for kids. That's not the information that we've been able to get from any other source. Indeed, as the previous member pointed out, what's being measured here is fairly narrow and, again, doesn't really give the information in a usable form. So the minister said: "Oh, all this information is available in other places. Parents should be able to have this through the home and school association." Well, it may be out there in statistics or in a very technical form, but it's not out there in a way that is usable information to parents and, I would also add in, the staff at the school. So I think it's important.

We know that there have been six staff added into this division that report directly to the minister. So I think I'm looking forward to seeing the enhanced information that we're able to get through the provision of information in response to this written question coming from the minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I want to thank the minister for his willingness to at least provide the figures and his suggestion of putting it on the website, where it is available for all to see and to examine. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, sort of beyond the raw data, explanations as to how that money translates directly to outcomes would be much appreciated.

As a teacher of 34 years and as a member of both school councils and as a council of schools representative this kind of information is extremely important because schools and parents are always penny-pinching, forced into fundraising, and they want to know that their government is putting the money where it's going to have the greatest impact at the classroom level.

Thank you.

[Written Question 32 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on behalf.

Alberta Health Care Insurance Act

Q33. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that the following question be accepted.

For the fiscal years 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006 what was the total cost of administering the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act broken down by costs associated with provision of customer services, registration, and benefit processing?

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point about this is that we are one of the few provinces that charges premiums, and fairly significant premiums. In doing that, there is a cost. Of course, it's well documented that we believe this is an unfair, regressive tax and shouldn't be there, but the government says that they need the income. I think there are other ways they could get the money. Even on this there are administrative costs, and we're trying to figure out how much it's costing us to administer this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 33.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will look forward to this co-operation. Maybe we can have co-operation in the future when they get rid of medicare premiums. We can all sit there and bring this forward, and the minister will stand up and say that she supports it, and it will happen.

Thank you.

[Written Question 33 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Health Insurance Premiums Act

Q34. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that the following question be accepted.

For the fiscal years 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006 what was the total cost of administering the Health Insurance Premiums Act, and of that total what percentage was attributable to administering premium subsidies and what percentage to collecting overdue accounts, including payments to collection agencies?

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are attempting to get more specific information about the cost that it takes to administer the premiums. It's not all profit, as we know. This government that calls itself conservative would surely want to cut down on these sorts of, you know, extra money that we don't have to spend.

Mr. Speaker, the minister was very co-operative in Written Question 33, so I'm looking for the same response to Written Question 34. Thank you.

4:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 34.

Ms Blakeman: That's excellent news. Thank you, Madam Minister. I'm looking forward to that information because it's always struck me as a great irony that we do tax our people through this health care premium, and then we have to also figure into all of that a certain amount of money to chase down the people that don't pay that tax which is administered as a premium. Certainly, I think all of us who answer the phone in our constituency offices have had people phoning up, and they're baffled because they're now getting calls from a collection agency.

Part of what I'm looking to understand is: when a person falls into default with their Alberta health care premium bill, it does get sent to a collection agency. Usually when that happens, it's a matter of the originating group selling the debt for whatever: 10 cents on the dollar, 20 cents on the dollar. So if the debt was $800, they might sell to the collection agency, and the collection agency would pay them, whatever, a hundred dollars. Then the collection agency would attempt to collect the whole $800, and whatever they can get out of that is how they make their money. I'm wondering if that's the process that's used by this government, that they in effect sell the debt to the collection agency, who then attempts to recoup more than what they paid for it.

I'm interested in the wording of this particular written question, which seems to indicate that somehow there's a percentage to collecting overdue accounts and that they're paying a collection agency to just chase down the money for them, which is a different scheme than the one that I believed was in play here. So I'm looking forward to how this is administered. I think that in the end we are supposed to be providing health care to people regardless of their ability to pay or their economic status, so the fact that we, in fact, have to get involved in all of this chasing people down to get this money owed is because this government refuses to give over this archaic and, I think, ideologically driven idea of a health care premium, which is a tax. It's not a premium. It's a tax.

An Hon. Member: A head tax.

Ms Blakeman: It's a head tax, yeah. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the minister for accepting the question. The information that is being sought by way of this question that the minister has agreed to provide is, I think, of critical importance, this matter of health care premiums as a tax and not only a tax but a very regressive tax regardless of income levels. Some of those who pay this tax can afford it, others cannot.

Ultimately, I think once the minister provides this information – and I hope this is provided with some dispatch – it will first of all give the minister and her staff, I hope, good, compelling reasons to simply get rid of this unfair and regressive tax. It really does lead to great hardship for lots of Alberta families to find money to pay this regressive tax but also leads to considerable wastage in addition. In terms of the money that is spent on collecting the overdue premiums, I have received in my office information from some of my constituents, who have continued to receive letters for overdue payments and have come and asked us to plead on their behalf so that they can buy some more time to find a little bit of money to pay at least part of what's overdue. Looking at those letters that they receive, I wonder how much time is spent just on getting that correspondence out, how much time the staff spends on getting those letters ready, putting them in the mail and all of that stuff. So there's quite a bit of wastage right there.

Then the worst part, of course, of having this tax is the use of collecting agencies to collect the overdues that people are never able to pay in addition to harassment, intimidation that Albertans are subjected to as part of this process. Just the amount of public money that is lost in the process I think needs to be brought to the light of day so that we and the minister in a sober way can assess why it is really important. In addition to reasons of fairness toward all, there is no need for extra revenue for this government to generate through this unfair tax. It intimidates people, takes their dignity away when collection agencies are after them. All this information is available. I hope that the minister will come forward with a decision that leads very quickly to just getting rid of this unfair tax, which is also very, very wasteful.

I thank the minister for accepting this question, but I hope that she will take a close look at the information in addition to maybe providing it to us and come to the decision that some of us in this part of the House have been urging this government to do for at least as long as I've been in this Assembly, which is nearly 10 years now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. The irony of this particular tax is that it causes sickness instead of eliminating it. The people who are least capable of paying, who live from paycheque to paycheque, are stressed not only by the tax but then the follow-up collection agencies who come knocking on their door when they're unable to pay the tax.

I do credit the minister for having recognized the hardship of this nonprogressive, wealth-based tax on seniors. I'm very pleased that the minister saw fit to eliminate the tax for seniors, and I am aware that people at the lowest level of what this government determines poverty are also exempted. But the day-to-day pain that it causes people who are trying to get ahead is unjustifiable, and I look forward to the elimination of the tax.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm in almost total shock. That's two questions in a row that have been accepted. I'm almost tempted to write one out quickly and get rid of medicare premiums right here, but I thank the minister for agreeing to that question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The vote hasn't come yet, hon. member.

[Written Question 34 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Choice Matters Campaign

Q35. Mr. Martin moved that the following question be accepted. What is the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on the Choice Matters and related campaigns promoting marketing choice for each of the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, 2003-04, 2004-05, and 2005-06, what is the estimated amount to be spent in 2006-07, and for each of these years what portion was spent or will be spent on paid advertising?

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe now that it's in my name, it might have a little more trouble. I'm not sure.

Mr. Speaker, this goes back to the spring sitting of the Legislature. On April 12, 2006, the agriculture minister told the House that he would get the NDP opposition all the figures related to the Choice Matters campaign. He said: "Our Choice Matters campaign is in our business plan, and it is located in our budget estimates. I don't have the number right in front of me, but we'll get that for the hon. member."

4:50

Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid that the hon. minister was mistaken. The total dollar value of the Choice Matters campaign is not in the business plan or the budget estimates. We had the Legislature

Library look into the minister's statement, and they couldn't find the information in the business plan or budget estimates. The best the Legislature librarians could find was the purpose of the campaign as outlined in the first issue of the campaign's newsletter, issued in April 2004. In that newsletter the previous minister of agriculture stated:

The Alberta government sees the great potential of this industry, but we also see what stands in the way. For the agriculture industry to grow into the future, the Canadian Wheat Board should be one option for marketing wheat and barley – not the only option.

The first issue of Choice Matters is about the Alberta government's vision for the future of the grain industry, a vision shared by many Albertans. We see a marketing system where innovation, entrepreneurship, and risk [management] are rewarded . . . where individual producers decide what is best for their individual operations.

Mr. Speaker, when the NDP opposition staff members contacted the minister's office, his staff seemed unaware of the minister's pledge to get these numbers on the Choice Matters campaign. The NDP opposition is concerned that the Choice Matters campaign is a tax-funded – and I stress: Alberta taxpayer-funded – initiative to undermine and eventually destroy the Canadian Wheat Board.

It is well known that the single-desk marketing of grains results in higher prices for farmers. There are faults with the Wheat Board, and the board has shown some willingness to be flexible and to work with farmers to iron out the wrinkles and assist them. In fact, the Wheat Board has announced intent to seek some changes from the federal government recently, and they've sought new powers that would include the ability to invest in grain-handling facilities and other enterprises now forbidden under federal legislation. The board needs these powers to return more money to the farmers, who, as we all know, have been struggling to be profitable in the wake of skyrocketing costs and relatively low commodity prices.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board spans three western provinces and is within the federal jurisdiction. The province of Alberta should not be spending Alberta taxpayers' money in trying to undermine something that has generally been proven effective and, I stress, is not within the provincial government's jurisdiction. The minister of agriculture stated that the Alberta government did not want to abolish the Wheat Board, but the fact that they're spending this money and some of it in advertising in, clearly, a jurisdiction that they shouldn't be in indicates that they aren't serious about protecting the Wheat Board even if they make changes.

Mr. Speaker, I'd be very interested to find out where it now stands and whether we're going to get this information. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development we will respond and indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 35.

The Speaker: Three for three, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm very much pleased that the minister has accepted providing the answer in terms of the amounts of money being spent on this particular program.

The federal government has also been making rumblings about the Canadian Wheat Board and, I'm sure, expending taxpayers' money in a similar fashion to undermine it or weaken it despite the service it has provided for farmers and continues to provide for farmers throughout the prairie provinces.

I know that there have been various end runs made by this province in terms of trying to load trucks down and head across the border and sell it privately, and people have ended up in jail as a result of breaking the federal laws. My hope is that neither the federal laws nor the provincial laws will allow individuals to try and end run the value that the collective policies of the Wheat Board provide in terms of ensuring income to farmers through a large representative base.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Now you may have to carry me out, Mr. Speaker. I think that I'll quit while I'm ahead and thank the minister for agreeing to at least take a look at this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I may have made a mistake here. Did the hon. Member for Highwood want to participate?

Mr. Groeneveld: You bet.

The Speaker: Well, okay. Please, go ahead. That was an error. My telephone here, which only rings once every 12 years, was just ringing at the same time, so I wanted to put it away. Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do realize that you were standing on your head on the throne there, so you couldn't see me.

I guess I would just like to take issue with some of the things that were said. Certainly, I don't want to get into a big debate here. [interjection] We might as well perhaps. I don't know.

The Canadian Wheat Board certainly is not serving all the farmers of Alberta, and I'm one of them. If you think that we're using taxpayers' money to knock down the Wheat Board, I don't think that's exactly the issue. I've discussed this with the minister, and we've heard it said before. It's not the Wheat Board that we object to; it's the monopoly and the single-desk selling. The last time that I checked, this was still a free country. Alberta maybe stands alone – I don't know – but perhaps we should look at this situation. I don't care whether it's a majority, a minority, or one person that doesn't want to deliver to the Wheat Board. That one person has his rights, and I don't think he should be forced into that situation. So perhaps with a little bit of luck we can maybe deal with this in the coming year.

I certainly am not in favour of this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to now close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I like that argument that the member just said: if one farmer wants to do whatever he can, he doesn't have to go along with the board elected throughout the province, that they can decide to do whatever they want. That's interesting because less than half of the people voted for this government, but the people in the province still have to go along with what they decide. I wish they'd be a little more consistent in terms of what they see as democracy. A little more consistent.

Mr. Speaker, the point still remains that they do not have the jurisdiction over the Canadian Wheat Board. It's okay if the Conservative Party wants to spend that money, but it should not be up to the taxpayers of Alberta to spend money organizing a propaganda campaign on something that's not in their jurisdiction. That's wrong, and it's wrong no matter how you cut it. For people that are supposed to be concerned about the taxpayers' money, I would think that the member would not be very happy about that. Would he be crying if the government was spending money on things that he didn't agree with? No, it's only when it works for him. So their idea of democracy is very interesting. Very interesting indeed.

Thank you.

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, August 24, it's my pleasure to now move that motions for returns 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 be dealt with today. There being no additional motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of Edmonton-Decore.

General Revenue Fund Grant Details

M27. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents related to the $150,800 grant provided to Maskalyk Miles as described in the 2004-2005 general revenue fund details of grants, supplies, services, tangible capital assets, and other payments.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To give the House somewhat of a break, I'm going to put forward the arguments, which I will not then repeat for 28 and 29. I'll give you the gist of the argument. It's an argument on accountability.

We're presented in this House with budgets that have very few lines. It's next to impossible for us as members representing our constituencies to try to get any idea where the majority of the money is spent. The government has indicated that any expenditure over $100,000 must go through a bidding process, but the government can avoid this by simply cutting down the amounts and doing, basically, one for $50,000, one for $70,000 and another one for $35,000 awarded to the same company in a piecemeal fashion, therefore avoiding the transparency of a bidding process.

Each of these motions for returns is for a large grant provided by the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. All grants are listed in the general revenue fund details of grants, supplies, services, tangible assets, and other payments 2004-2005. This grant as indicated is for $150,800, a sizable sum of money provided to a single contractor, Mr. Maskalyk. It's a large sum of public money with no supporting documentation. This is one of the largest grants paid to individuals in this ministry this year. In the name of transparency and accountability we're hoping that the answers and the fine print details will be provided.

The public does not know what services this individual provided. The public does not know what common good or what public value was obtained for this expense. What was the justification for providing grants to these people? The public has no idea why these individuals received public money. The public is unable to evaluate whether these individuals followed proper channels in applying for these grants. There could be perfectly good explanations. These people could be doing great work and helping many Albertans, helping the environment, protecting endangered species, helping with a solution for the mountain pine beetle problem, but we don't know. This government obviously has a justification for the hiring of these individuals. We would please ask them for an explanation so that we can see that this was money well spent and that outcomes were achieved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to accept Motion for a Return 27.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank my colleagues for bringing forward the question and the minister for agreeing to supply the information because I think there's an underlying issue here around accountability and transparency of what the government does. It's extremely frustrating operating from the opposition side, trying to get information from the government. You know, there's often a reference: "Oh, it's in our business plans. It's in the budget documents." No, actually, it isn't. It's not broken down. We get a one-line rollup.

It's the same thing when we're looking at the end of the fiscal year. The annual reports from the various ministries contain a great deal more information about what they believe they achieved, but for breakdown of actual information of each program they had and how much money was spent and how many people were assigned to it, that's for the most part a mystery. That's when we have to start digging to tease apart what's actually going on in the government.

If you go back and look at what the budget document and the reporting documents looked like 15 years ago, you get a much more detailed picture of what the government was doing. Rather than becoming more open and accountable and transparent, this government has become less open and accountable and transparent. We've had to go through a number of layers to get to this point today where the minister has said: yes, I'll provide the information to you. That takes place over a very long period of time, while we try to dig out a very simple thing. This could be perfectly acceptable and done annually or whatever. There's probably a very good reason for this, but we have to go to extraordinary effort to try to get that information out, right down to being here on private members' day, using our private members' privilege to ask this question of the government.

The second part of this is that while we cherish the role of the Auditor General in this Assembly and the work that the Auditor General and his staff do, I think that sometimes we come to believe they are all powerful and that in fact they're auditing every single receipt of every business transaction that the government makes. That's not possible. We really would be giving the Auditor General and his staff superhuman powers if that were the case. They have a general look, and some departments they concentrate on in a given year, but in other departments they have a general look at what's going on to see if the recommendations that have been made in previous years have been adhered to, check a couple of things by way of sample, and then they move on. In fact, it's quite easy to overlook something that may well have been improper. The idea that the Auditor General is out there checking every single thing is not true.

It's well within our duty as an opposition to be asking questions such as: what is this $150,800 for? There is no supporting documentation to it. We've pulled this out of what's commonly called the blue book, which just lists the department, the individual, and the amount of money, but there's no supporting information. I'm very glad that we're going to see the information coming from the minister. I think we have a couple of other questions that are very similar, so in all likelihood I don't need to repeat my argument, but it's part of a context.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to thank the minister for his openness and his willingness to provide details.

I want to extend another bouquet to the minister because I was extremely impressed having had my first opportunity to attend PNWER, the Pacific Northwest-Economic Region's conference. I was privileged, I would say, to be a part of a presentation that the minister provided on a variety of topics, including information that was provided, basically co-chaired with Dr. Brad Stelfox, at the University of Calgary. I also want to credit the minister for seeking information from a number of very informed individuals. The beauty of Dr. Brad Stelfox's presentation, as the minister recognized, is that he doesn't draw conclusions. He presents information. He presents projections, and with those projections we are able to form our own advice.

I also want to give the minister a bouquet for his explanation of how the province is undertaking the attack on pine beetles. What I'm very pleased about in this specific part of the attack is that at this point in the presentation the minister acknowledged with government biologists that the pine beetle is being attacked tree by tree. The minister pointed this out in question period last week, and the fact that clear-cutting is not the justifiable response for infestation gives me great hope. By singling out those trees, dealing with it tree by tree instead of clear-cutting massive areas of forest and threatening the watershed, I think the minister is dead-on in his one tree, one solution process.

Thank you very much. I close debate, and I appreciate the minister's actions and openness in providing answers to this request.

[Motion for a Return 27 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

5:10 General Revenue Fund Grant Details

M28. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents related to the $188,000 grant provided to Jean Henry Paul as described in the 2004-2005 general revenue fund details of grants, supplies, services, tangible capital assets and other payments.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I promised that I wouldn't go into lengthy argument. What we're looking for is transparency and accountability. Any information that any ministry can provide directly to this House or by posting it on a website saves a FOIP request. We all know how expensive and how frustrating those FOIP requests are. So if the minister and all ministers, following his example, would provide that information rather than forcing us to seek it through other methods, it would be a great change in transparency and accountability that all Albertans would appreciate.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I'd like to thank him for his comments about a very successful PNWER meeting. Certainly, the working group that he participated in produced some very good information, and that's what PNWER is all about. So thank you for those very nice comments.

With regard to MR 28 we are also prepared to accept this one on behalf of the government.

The Speaker: Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate?

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the clarity. I appreciate the transparency. I appreciate the collaborative work that this House is demonstrating this afternoon.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 28 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

General Revenue Fund Grant Details

M29. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents related to the $103,000 grant provided to Lefebvre Edmond as described in the 2004-2005 general revenue fund details of grants, supplies, services, tangible capital assets, and other payments.

Mr. Chase: Thank you again. Without going into detail, the work of Public Accounts and the debate in the Assembly – so many of these other avenues for achieving accountability could be speeded up if the information was clearly expressed and pointed to. Again I would encourage ministries to post information and explanation rather than strictly dollar figures on their websites so that the public has the ability to judge the value for money that was received. I am hoping that we're in a 3 for 3 circumstance, and I look forward to the minister's reply.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion for a Return 29 will also be accepted as presented. We'll provide that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate, or should I call the question?

Mr. Chase: I would like to call the vote, sir.

[Motion for a Return 29 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Proposed Police and Peace Officer College

M30. Mr. Taylor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to studies, reports, submissions, and correspondence, regarding the design, cost, location competition, and curriculum for the proposed Alberta police and peace officer college.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This 3 for 3 act times two will be a tough act to follow no doubt.

Now, I recognize that this has been an issue largely under the purview of the Solicitor General as opposed to the Minister of Advanced Education, but it does involve, obviously, Advanced Education. Therefore, on behalf of my colleagues and on behalf of the people of Alberta I have an interest in this. So I move Motion for a Return 30.

One of the key things that we're looking for here, of course, is the location competition because we really are in a vacuum, as the opposition finds itself so frequently in with this government, in terms of understanding the nature of that competition. You know, I can't comment on whether decisions that were made were based on merit or not – I don't know – or whether it was all based on politics, but the competition seems to have pitted one small community against another against another against another against another.

What this motion for a return really does, among other things, is seek the reason why for that, the reason why that kind of a competition was necessary. We need to know whether the competition, the curriculum, the design, the cost of this proposed Alberta police and peace officer college is going to deliver what this province so obviously requires on a going forward basis, and that is the issue of consistent training for police and peace officers. I would look specifically at the increasing use of special constables, sheriffs with – what? – one month's training, I believe . . .

Ms Blakeman: Four weeks.

Mr. Taylor: Four weeks of training.

. . . going on duty here very shortly to enforce traffic regulations. While I suppose it doesn't take a degree in advanced mathematics to learn how to operate a radar gun and determine whether someone was in fact doing 120 in a 100 kilometre an hour zone or something like that, there's a need to know that the training has been consistent and will continue to be consistent.

So with that, I'll take my seat now and look for a response from the government benches, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll be rejecting Motion for a Return 30. This motion requests copies of documents relating to the proposed Alberta police and peace officer training centre. As the member opposite knows, we are currently in the process of a request for proposal for the training centre, and the rules governing RFPs prevent the public release of any information that would undermine the process. This includes not releasing any of the information requested in the motion, so therefore we must reject Motion for a Return 30.

Mr. Chase: I just have to rise to suggest that that's the weakest excuse I've heard in some time, and the reason I say that is that nowhere within Motion for a Return 30 is there a time or date; you know, Mr. Minister, we want it by 5:25 on the 28th or there'll be trouble. There is no time requirement. What has happened is that this competition for the college has become almost like an international competition for the Olympics, where what has happened is that a number of communities who have restricted cash flows are hoping to make it big by having a college in their area.

I know that when I travelled last spring – that's the spring of 2005 – to Drayton Valley and I talked to the mayor and councillors there, they were looking for economic opportunities. They were thinking, possibly: "Could we have a satellite college like Athabasca University? Could we have aboriginal apprenticeship training offered in Drayton Valley?" I'm sure that Drayton Valley was probably one of the towns that was asking for this kind of a possibility because it would bring individuals into the community. They would be shopping at the local stores. It would add infrastructure, obviously, in the way of either dorms or off-campus housing. So it's a large concern and would be a large benefit to whichever lucky municipality received it.

However, what has happened is that trying to put forward the best bid possible involves money, and that's money that a number of these municipalities don't have. So they have to decide: "Do we go all out, and do we spend several thousand dollars? Do we create a PowerPoint program? Do we elicit support from MLAs in other jurisdictions? Would they give it up in order for us to have this jewel in our own location?"

If this process isn't an open and transparent circumstance, then a variety of municipalities have possibly been led down a very expensive government garden path in terms of trying to put forward a successful bid. Nowhere – and I repeat as I began – is there any call for a certain time period for this information. I would look forward to the minister saying: well, possibly I can't give you such and such a study or report submission at this particular time, but when the decision has been made to award the college to whatever municipality, I will be glad to provide you with the specific details that you've requested, realizing, of course, that because the competition is still on, I can't provide you this information at this particular time. We would understand that time limit. We would embrace it. But we're looking for transparency and accountability that previous ministries have demonstrated and we will hopefully find soon within this ministry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have from the beginning, when this initial proposal for an Alberta police and peace officer college was presented, been supportive because I think there's a real need in Alberta to have the training for our police officers under one roof so that municipal police departments would not be all training their own recruits with standards different from other municipal police departments. So I think we've been supportive of the idea.

What this particular motion for a return asks for, simply, is more information about that. It's difficult even on this side to begin to provide our support if we don't know all of the studies, the studies that were engaged in to come to the conclusion that this was a good idea. So asking for such studies and reports and submissions seems to be just the sensible thing to do to have transparency, to have all the information necessary.

My hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity has raised the issue about the cost to municipalities. From the very beginning that has been a real concern. Having talked to people in different municipali ties who submitted a proposal, I think that it's cost a lot of money for municipalities to put in their bid. I don't know to what extent municipalities have been helped in that process. I hope they have. But we don't have any information about that. We also don't have any information about the current process of determining the location. So it's all about transparency and getting the right kind of information so that we can even begin to support a government position that we might want to support.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to just make some observations on the minister's decision to reject MR 30 and the information requested therein. I find the minister's decision both disappointing and baffling. I know that he has spent his life in very important positions where he has learned to handle information in confidence, and perhaps the reasons for secrecy were obvious. He is now in a different arena. He's in a public arena, where he's expected to live by different norms, norms of openness, transparency, and providing the information to this House. It's very important for all of us to make judgments about whether or not decisions being made by the government and by ministers such as the Solicitor General here are worthy of our support.

For the minister to reject this request out of hand without saying: "Well, look, there's lots of information here. It seems to me as the minister that these pieces of information can be released now. There are others which are so sensitive, of a contractual nature, that I can't do that now, but once the time is right, I'll be very happy to share that information with this House" – that's why I use the words "disappointing" and "baffling." It's disappointing that the minister didn't find some obligation to share information asked in good faith with the House and baffling because I thought he was very much committed to principles of openness and transparency and accountability.

I still think that there's an opportunity for him to rise in the House and say that he does subscribe to these fundamental principles of openness, transparency, and accountability, that he has had time to have second thoughts about the decision, to perhaps change his mind and say: here are the following pieces of information that I willingly will share with you on such and such a date, and there are other issues on which the information will be made available once I've come to the conclusion that there's no longer a need to keep them secret and inaccessible to Albertans and this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there is only one taxpayer, and numerous communities spent what we can only assume were considerable amounts of taxpayer dollars preparing their submissions. We can only assume it because the information won't be shared with us. Whether or not that involved expenditure by this particular level of government or those particular levels of government – at the town level, at the municipal level – the taxpayer is still out of pocket for the money that was being spent, so the taxpayer has every right to ask for an accounting of the spending of that money. Since this was the level of government that required the competition, this is where the accountability should happen.

We need greater details as to why the government chose to put the location for a public institution out to a bidding war between communities. We need to know how much it was going to cost the communities. We need to know why the provincial government did it that way. We need to know whether there could have been a better way, whether there could have been a better process, or whether there was just kind of a desire on the part of government MLAs to use up some of their travel per diems and go on a government road show.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, no. Extra. This is above and beyond. This is more money.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. I suppose it is. You're right.

You know, it may also cause some problems. I don't know. It may not. But it may cause some problems for institutions and communities where colleges and institutions were already offering some version or portion of this curriculum. I'm thinking about, for instance, Lethbridge Community College. Does the weakening or the loss of this program from LCC have a significant impact on that institution? We need to know. Therefore, it's critical to know who the MLAs consulted with while they were on their road show, where they drew their ideas from.

It's critical to know whether high-ranking friends of the government, such as the Premier's former chief of staff, Rod Love, might have been acting as a paid lobbyist for any of these communities. I mean, we don't know. We know that he has acted as a paid lobbyist in the past. We don't know whether he was involved or not. We don't know whether there was any connection between who lobbied whom for which community and which community was or was not in the running for this police college.

We need to know, in short, Mr. Speaker, that this was a fair and open competition, that it was not about who you know, that it was not about who you could afford to hire, that it was about who was going to do the best job. Given that it was put out to competition, who was going to do the best job of educating the future police officers and peace officers of the province of Alberta?

The citizens of Alberta are entitled to nothing less. The citizens of Alberta are entitled to demand that. The citizens of Alberta are entitled to demand accountability from their police officers, from the government that sets in motion the process of training their police officers.

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, August 28, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 20060828

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, the Government House Leader moved a motion earlier on this afternoon, and I believe there was unanimous consent given that should there be any division, the bells be reduced to two minutes. We just want to make sure that that motion applies for the evening as well.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. So the motion as passed earlier this afternoon applies for the evening too.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Cattle Health and Slaughter Protocols

512. Mr. Groeneveld moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with provincial governments and the federal government to standardize health and slaughter protocols for cattle across the country, thereby increasing interprovincial beef trade.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members in advance for their participation in this evening's debate. I look forward to hearing your comments shortly. Before we begin debating this motion in earnest, I would like to begin by discussing some of the reasons for bringing forward Motion 512.

Mr. Speaker, it was three years ago, on May 20, 2003, that a case of BSE was discovered in an eight-year old cow within the province. The ramifications of this discovery were far reaching, and the toll of the closure of the international borders, and particularly the United States border, to live cattle and beef products was devastating to cattle ranchers.

As most of you are aware, the agriculture industry is a major contributor to Alberta's economy, and when our cattle producers were hit by the cut-off of trade from the United States, all Albertans felt the impact. The United States is our largest trading partner in terms of beef exports, with somewhere around 80 per cent of the province's beef exports destined for that country. No longer being able to export beef and beef products to the U.S. had a huge effect on the beef industry, as we are all aware.

As an MLA with constituents who suffered during this time period and also as a beef producer myself, I witnessed first-hand the effects that the border closure had on beef producers. In 2002 Alberta's revenue from beef and veal exports was more than $1.6 billion. By 2003 this figure was closer to $1 billion. Such a significant decrease in the revenue generated by beef goods cut into beef producers' bottom lines considerably.

Improving the ease with which Alberta beef is traded within the country will ensure that our beef trade remains strong, which is a benefit to all Albertans. Currently meat being traded interprovincially must be processed in a federally inspected meat facility. Beef cuts that are being shipped solely within the province can be processed within the province at a provincially inspected meat processing establishment. At both levels meat is inspected to make certain that it is safe for consumption. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency is responsible for enforcing the food safety standards created by Health Canada, and our own provincial legislation, such as the Meat Inspection Act, ensures that our Alberta beef is safe for consumption by Albertans and individuals worldwide.

Although Alberta has high standards for provincial meat facilities, meat inspected at these establishments still is not eligible for shipping interprovincially. Mr. Speaker, the requirement that meat shipped to other provinces be processed in federal meat establishments impedes many Alberta beef producers and small companies who sell meat products from shipping their goods between provinces with ease and efficiency. For example, in my constituency in the village of Longview there is a beef jerky producer who is hindered by this current system. Many of you may recognize the name of Longview Beef Jerky. This is a company with great product who has enjoyed a good deal of success within the province. The company uses a provincially inspected plant in creating their product. Were the system more flexible and this company able to ship the meat inspected at the provincially inspected meat processing facility interprovincially, the possibility for them to expand their business would be much greater.

Another incident where the lack of unified standards across the provinces has hurt Alberta companies was the incident of Blue Mountain Packers. This was a group of Alberta ranch investors who refurbished a mothballed packing plant at Salmon Arm, B.C. They did not set up in Alberta because of the fact that they could not export out of the province. Ironically, you can send live cattle province to province quite easily, but you cannot send meat or meat products unless they have been through a federal meat establishment. The cost of shipping live cattle and the unanticipated fact that all waste products had to be shipped back to Alberta proved to be too great a financial burden, and the plant went into receivership after just 16 months of operation.

Were we able to trade beef products between provinces using our provincially inspected meat facilities by standardizing our health and slaughter protocols across the country, Alberta would be able to further increase our interprovincial beef trade. Companies such as the ones I have just described would be free to ship their beef products across the country using a more common-sense method. Standardizing would be an efficient manner of increasing such trade and also benefit the country as a whole, not just our own province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has high standards for its meat processors as well as provincial cattle producers, but standardizing health and slaughter protocols across the provinces and territories would demonstrate to other countries how vigorous our standards truly are when shipping beef and beef products within the country and abroad. It also presents a great opportunity for Alberta to assist producers in diversifying their markets. If producers can easily and efficiently export their beef between provinces while still maintaining animal health and food safety, they are more likely to take advantage of this fact.

Mr. Speaker, this government has done a great deal to support the beef industry after the occurrence of BSE caused markets to close to live cattle and beef products. With Alberta's six-point BSE recovery strategy the industry has been able to recover most of the trade and to look forward to the future, when we can increase our exporting to even greater levels. Motion 512, standardizing health and slaughter protocols, will help to further this goal and build on the BSE recovery strategy.

Easing the trade between provinces, thereby increasing Alberta's interprovincial beef trade, will benefit Alberta's beef producers, the beef industry, and, indeed, all Albertans. Therefore, I hope that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly will support Motion 512 this evening.

Again, I look forward to the rest of tonight's debate and thank all members in advance for their comments regarding Motion 512. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise in this Assembly in the month of August and discuss Motion 512. I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing this forward. It certainly is a very good motion, and I think that all hon. members of the Official Opposition would be interested in supporting the member's motion.

Now, this motion certainly reflects one of the Alberta Beef Producers' carried resolutions. This was decided upon late in 2005. If you have a look at the resolutions of the annual general meeting that were published in the Alberta Beef Producers' newsletter, you will see where there is a similarity.

This motion encourages the provincial government to work with other provinces and the federal government to standardize cattle health and slaughter protocols nationally. It aims, of course, at increasing interprovincial beef trade. I would like to know from the hon. member – and perhaps in the time that we have someone else can inform everyone in the House – just exactly what sort of consultation process has gone on not only with other provinces and the federal government but with the Americans, if any. The hon. member pointed out quite accurately the significant export trade that we have in beef and beef products with the Americans, but it is certainly in that market that we need to restore one hundred per cent confidence. Whenever the American consumers buy our beef and our beef products, they should know that they can have all the confidence in the world in that product.

According to the Alberta Beef Producers, producers are able to trade beef within their own province, which inspects beef according to their provincial standards. When beef, of course, is traded interprovincially, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is responsible for inspecting the beef, and again it's according to federal standards. In Alberta the meat inspection regulation sets provincial guidelines in the area of animal slaughter and handling.

I would like to know at this time – and if I could get an explanation, I would be very grateful. We have HACCP in Alberta, which is the hazard analysis critical control point. When I look at this in the Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development annual report from 2004-05, I'm looking at some of the performance measures. The hon. member talked about our vigorous standards, and I would like an explanation from the hon. member in regard to this performance measure from the annual report, which indicates that as a "per cent of Alberta-licensed food processing plants that have implemented appropriate food safety process control systems" for meat, the target is 6 per cent, and then it's going to increase in leaps and bounds to 20 per cent in the next year.

Now, there have been no draft annual reports of any respective departments released by the government. I don't why. Usually in other years, Mr. Speaker, there is a complete list of draft annual reports presented to the standing policy committees and through the standing policy committees to the Official Opposition and to the public, the taxpayers. But this year – I don't know whether it's because of this session or because the government is lacking focus and direction because of the leadership race – there have been to date no annual reports, the draft form, presented through the SPC process. Perhaps I could have my question answered, but in light of the fact that I don't have the annual report in draft form for 2005-06, the hon. member could let me know for meat products just how we're doing so we can make sure that we are restoring confidence in our meat processing industry.

Federally, Mr. Speaker, there is the Meat Inspection Act, an Act respecting the import and export of and interprovincial trade in meat products, the registration of the establishments, the inspection of animals and meat products in registered establishments and the standards for those establishments and for animals slaughtered and meat products prepared in those establishments.

Well, I would also like to ask if in the research leading up to this motion the hon. member had contemplated the manufacturer of the beef jerky in the constituency perhaps being interested in making a presentation to the committee that I understand is meeting regarding red tape or, as I call it, blue tape – there was supposed to be a reduction in blue tape by this government; in all regulations and all rules and laws there was a supposed to be a streamlining, a look at that – and if this is perhaps a place that individual or that enterprise could go and have their opinion heard.

Now, when we look at this, Mr. Speaker, we already know the importance of Alberta's cattle trade. The interprovincial cattle exports certainly fluctuate, but they've been as high as 350,000 head in 2002. Since BSE that has dropped significantly, but hopefully it's going to recover, and we are going to once again have a very important and healthy and prosperous industry.

I'm certainly willing to support this motion. The purpose is to increase interprovincial trade, and we on this side of the House certainly support the hon. member's initiatives. The beef industry, as we've said before, is very important to Alberta, and we are happy to support any measure that will facilitate increased interprovincial beef trade. I think this is a good idea, and I know that it's something that would and should get a lot of support here in this province.

In conclusion, in due time can we hear from the hon. member: has the member spoken with any groups either in Alberta or elsewhere who are opposed to this idea? If anyone is opposed to it, if he could elaborate why, I would be very grateful.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Motion 512 is a good first step in terms of going to work on this issue. I'll come to some problems, but I think it's certainly reasonable that we in the Assembly support this.

I think there are some danger signs, and I don't know if this has turned around yet. I notice from the daily livestock estimates that the national cattle herd has declined for the first time in three years since BSE. They had an estimated 14.8 million head on the farms as of January 1, a drop of 233,000 head. Now, I'm hopeful that if we move on this motion, that will solve some of the problems, that it would get the herd back up. Clearly, the member talked about the reasons, BSE, and certainly, Mr. Speaker, there have been attempts in Alberta – I don't agree with all the attempts; I think some more could have been done – to increase packer capacity within Alberta. We have, I believe, nothing to lose, nothing to lose at all from a comprehensive nationwide strategy.

I'm sure the minister is aware of this. Last year in May 2005 – I'm not often a great Senate person that advocates a Senate, but every once in a while they stumble in and do some reasonably good work, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about the interim report of the Senate Standing Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. There are a number of recommendations, but I think it's important that they make recommendation 6.

The Committee recommends that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency immediately undertake a legislative review, in consultation with the industry and the provinces, and with due consideration of all trade implications, to propose changes to the relevant acts and regulations in order to implement a domestic standard allowing establishments that comply with this standard to trade with other provinces without being fully registered to trade on the international market.

It seems that what they're recommending in 6 is certainly in the same spirit as the motion that the member is bringing forward. Though it is important, it's not quite as simple – I'm sure the member knows this – as just saying that we're all just going to get together and agree to do this. It's important to note that this is a matter requiring thorough negotiations and quite likely legislative changes at both the federal and provincial levels.

The Senate report does note that there is currently an agreed-upon meat code which reflects basic minimum food safety standards for a meat processing plant. It also cautions, however, that if this code is enshrined in legislation, it might have unintended consequences in terms of the standards Canada would request of foreign countries shipping meat to Canada. So they're saying that there could be some problems here. To quote the Premier – I can use his quotes every once in a while – for every action there is a reaction. They're saying that could create some problems there.

I think that on the whole this motion is a good one in that national standards would be an initial step toward improving interprovincial trade barriers, particularly as it relates to beef. Clearly, though, there is more work to do. The point I want to make is that this is probably much more complicated than we can just put in a motion, but I think this motion is worth supporting as an initial first step.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise this evening to join the debate on Motion 512. Motion 512 proposes that the government work with other provinces and the federal government to standardize health and slaughter protocols across the country with the objective of increasing interprovincial beef trade. I'm confident that this idea has the potential to achieve not only its intended objective but to have positive effects on Alberta's international standing as well.

To understand the positive effects this proposal will have on the future of our beef industry, it is vital that we consider it in light of the past. Three years ago our beef industry was brought to its knees by BSE, bringing with it a multitude of other trades and occupations that depend on its well-being. Borders were closed, profits fell drastically, and the future of the beef industry in Alberta looked very grim indeed. Thankfully, it seems as though we've managed to weather the worst of the crisis.

Because we survived, however, doesn't mean we can rest easy. We need to take steps to protect ourselves from another such crisis. How will Motion 512 accomplish this? I think the encouragement of standardized slaughter protocols will inspire two very different yet equally significant and positive effects.

First and most obvious is the economic benefit that will be realized from easier interprovincial trade. Adopting a universal standard would make provincially licensed facilities able to export their products to other provinces, something currently prohibited under federal law. In this day and age I think it's totally ridiculous that trade of not only beef products but also most agricultural products and commodities is still prohibited unless federally regulated and licensed. As the lion's share of Canada's cattle are in Alberta, I think that expanding market share within the country would provide a good deal of opportunity for our beef producers, slaughterhouses, truckers, and all those whose financial security depends on the beef industry. Opportunity aside, it would also provide protection in the event that foreign borders were once again closed due to BSE or any other form of crisis. Having an easily accessible market right next door would make things easier should that ever – and let's hope it doesn't – happen again.

Which brings me to the second benefit that I believe could come about from this proposal: increasing confidence from our international trading partners. Our handling of the BSE crisis was absolutely beyond reproach, as have been the measures we've taken here in Alberta to prevent another outbreak. While other provinces may be equally vigilant, they do things slightly differently. If their procedures are perceived poorly by a foreign trading partner, the consequences for Alberta could be disastrous. Even though exported beef is governed by existing federal standards, this still doesn't change the perceptions surrounding provincial protocol. A nationwide standard would show a unified front to the world, benefiting Albertans and Canadians by increasing international confidence in the safety of our beef.

The ideas proposed in Motion 512 have been a subject of discussion for quite some time now. In fact, the new federal government has indicated that it may be enacting legislative changes in the very near future. Does this make support of this motion redundant or unnecessary? Not at all. I've spoken this evening of the importance of presenting a unified front, Mr. Speaker, something our support of Motion 512 would be instrumental in doing. Additional encouragement never hurts and serves to illustrate Alberta's commitment to the ongoing health and well-being of one of our oldest and most valuable industries.

In conclusion, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Highwood for bringing forward a very useful, thoughtful, and constructive proposal. I'm pleased to offer Motion 512 my support, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to join me in doing so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also appreciate the opportunity tonight to stand before the Assembly and share my views with regard to Motion 512. The issue of health and slaughter protocols for cattle is certainly something that is important to the producers of livestock in Alberta as well as the industries that buy and sell the products that come from these livestock.

However, as seen in the BSE crisis, this industry involves a much larger circle of people than just farmers. The cattle industry includes farmers, auctioneers, truckers, slaughterhouses, food processors, feed producers, and a variety of businesses that support these ventures such as local hardware stores, veterinarians, and machinery dealers, et cetera. The list goes on and on. This web of economic interdependence proves that we as legislators of this province must do everything we can to ensure that the entire sector is healthy and strong. Creating a governing framework that solidifies the cattle and livestock industry has been important to this government, especially over the last few years. It is great to see that just because we survived what was possibly and hopefully the darkest years of the BSE crisis, we are not happy with just keeping the status quo. Motion 512 is another example of this.

At a time when we are looking to expand and secure trade as well as improve the margins of our livestock and agricultural operations, investigating the costs and eliminating the inefficiencies and barriers involved with multiple jurisdictional standards seems like a logical step. Producers and consumers both deserve our support in the realm of slaughter protocols. If we consider the number of Albertans that are involved in the cattle, hogs, poultry, or any other livestock industries, including elk, deer, or bison, and combine that with all of the citizens that consume our Alberta meat products, that figure translates to a huge majority of our constituents.

The effectiveness of slaughter protocols is a concept that makes sense on a political, social, and even personal level, as I'm sure most of us also enjoy a good steak from time to time. After all, if you eat, you're involved in agriculture, and that pretty well takes in all of us.

The tricky part for us is deciding what the best approach is for supporting the industry and protecting Alberta consumers. As most of us know, there's always a positive side to creating localized procedures and regulations. The standardization outlined in Motion 512 would likely save the province money, time, and red tape by creating a made-in-Alberta solution to health and slaughter protocols for cattle.

There appears to be great potential in standardizing health and slaughter protocols for cattle mainly because it would allow for easier interprovincial trade, opening up a greater market share for Alberta producers and the sector as a whole. If you consider that in 2004 Alberta beef exports made up 79.8 per cent of the Canadian total, which is about 80 per cent of all the cattle in Canada, it would make sense that we make the process as smooth as possible to ship beef to our interprovincial customers.

Mr. Speaker, currently if an animal is slaughtered in Alberta in a plant that is only provincially inspected, that animal or its products can only be sold in Alberta. If that same animal had been slaughtered in a federally inspected plant, it could be sold interprovincially or even exported outside of Canada. Yet if a farmer wants to, he can take a live animal from Alberta to Saskatchewan or B.C. or anywhere else and have it slaughtered there. Similarly, if a consumer from Alberta or Saskatchewan or B.C. or any other province comes to Alberta, they may buy products here, carry them back, and consume them in their home province, but they can't resell them.

Other provinces have standards, and we have standards, and we all seem to believe that our standards are adequate to protect our own consumers in our own provinces. It is clearly time to harmonize these standards across the country, to remove barriers to trade and prosperity. If we had the same standards at all slaughter plants in all the provinces, then products could cross any border without these barriers.

Earlier I mentioned the other species, Mr. Speaker: elk, deer, and bison. Currently there's only one plant in Alberta that slaughters elk and bison for export. This is not good because that plant can just set their own prices for the live animals, and they can ruin the market for the producers of these products. There is another plant being built right in Lacombe. This is good for the economy in these industries, in the elk and bison industries. This plant will not be operational for a few months, but I'm hoping that when it comes on stream, we'll improve markets. As well, that plant in Lacombe will be federally inspected and EU inspected, so it will be able to ship product from Alberta to any other province and any other country.

It is my understanding that work is being done already to standardize these protocols, but pushing the envelope with these discussions or giving someone a nudge from time to time in order to get things moving can be a positive step in the right direction. Considering all the issues and intricacies that have been brought forward here tonight, I feel that at the very least this motion has yielded constructive discussion to work from. As such, I would like to commend the efforts of the Member for Highwood in bringing forward this proposal on standardizing health and slaughter protocols for cattle. Once more I say that this is not just for cattle, but it would be for the elk and bison as well.

I support Motion 512 and encourage other members to do so as well. I'll cede the floor and listen eagerly to what other members might say or to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak in support of Motion 512, cattle health and slaughter protocols. I was noticing a billboard on the drive up to Edmonton last night – I think it's for a credit union or a small regional bank or something like that in and around Bowden – that says: common sense should be more common. I think there's a lot of common sense in this motion.

You know, I viewed the mad cow crisis, the BSE crisis, at its height perhaps a little differently than a lot of my colleagues in this House. At that time I was still in the media and talking on a regular daily basis to a number of people both directly and indirectly involved in agriculture and beef production who were badly harmed by the crisis. One of the things that became clear to me over the course of the first few really critical months in that crisis was that we need to a greater extent to be masters of our own destiny, I guess is the best way to put it.

One of the problems, of course, that we ran into was the fact that we not only could not get our beef products across the line to the United States or other countries in the world; we couldn't get our live cattle across the line either. If I understood correctly what I was being told over the course of really the first year, I guess, of that crisis, it became fairly clear to me that one of the ways that we can be masters of our own destiny is to take every opportunity. This not only applies to beef production or the raising of elk or bison. It applies to the oil industry. It applies to the petrochemical industry. It applies to virtually every endeavour that we undertake in this province. One of the best ways to be masters of our own destiny is to add value at every step along the way that we possibly can.

I don't want to get myself in too deeply here, because I profess to be a city boy through and through to the core. But, again, if I understood what farm people and rural people were telling me, it certainly does make sense from time to time to export live cattle and import live cattle because you're improving the gene pool, but to ship live cattle across the border holus-bolus to have the cattle slaughtered somewhere in the United States and the beef shipped back to us dressed and finished doesn't make nearly as much sense as doing it ourselves and selling the finished product across the border for a good deal higher profit margin.

I think that as a relatively small player on the global scene one of the ways for Canadians, whether that's Albertans or people of any other province, to do a better job at being masters of their own destiny is to break down the walls between the provinces, the interprovincial trade barriers, the regulatory barriers that exist and to build the strongest possible domestic markets at home, realizing, of course, that a nation of 32 million, 33 million people is a small player compared to nations of 300 million or 400 million, but it's a bit of a cushion when unforeseen circumstances and tough times are visited upon us from external sources. If for no other reason, I would support Motion 512 and what it proposes and what it urges this government to try and work on so that we break down barriers, break down walls, allow for the freer movement of beef interprovincially, across provincial borders, so that we are stronger right here at home at our base.

As has been alluded to by at least a couple of members before me, if our protocols for health and slaughter are standardized across the country, across Canada, then that improves our position when we do go to export, whether it's a live animal or whether it's finished product, whether it's to the United States, Mexico, Japan, Korea, whoever our customer is on that particular day. If we pass this motion and our government acts on it and works with other provinces and with the federal government to standardize cattle health and slaughter protocols nationally, I think that as well as increasing interprovincial beef trade, as well as making it easier to set a made-in-Canada standard for our exports to the world, a standard that speaks to the highest quality in health and safety, it will allow us the opportunity to tap into markets both domestically and around the world that perhaps we're not really making much of an effort to tap into at this point. Usually when you break down barriers like this, it opens up new opportunities, some of which we can anticipate, many of which we can't. Perhaps it gives us an opportunity here in Alberta to lead in the field of kosher and halal meats and the new markets we can tap if we recognize this as a growth opportunity.

We have a long heritage and a long history in this province of being entrepreneurial, taking advantage of opportunities as we recognize them. Let's take that to the next level. This is an opportunity to do that, but let's try to do it as a matter of course every time. Look at what we do now in the way of doing business with other countries around the world and say: should we continue doing business that way, or is there a way to add value, to take it a step up the production chain and sell a more finished product, a less raw product, for greater profits?

You know, we're often criticized as a nation for being hewers of wood and drawers of water, a nation that for its entire history going back to colonial days has been about providing the rest of the world with raw material that they can then develop into something and sell at great profit around the world and sometimes sell right back to us, the providers of the source material. Obviously, there are times when you want to sell raw materials, but there are times that we do sell raw materials where we could be refining those materials and making more money. In those instances, why sell the Americans a barrel of crude if we can sell them petrochemicals instead? Why sell the Americans or the Japanese or anybody else a live animal when we can sell them dressed meats?

I think this motion helps us in that endeavour, and I'd be happy to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your time tonight.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can very sincerely say that I agree with everything the hon. member has said. It is truly a very small first step in representing Vermilion-Lloydminster in this province. It certainly gives me an insight into the hundreds of rules that we have put up interprovincially to stop trade. You know, it's the hypocrisy we have when we go to deal internationally, how we demand other countries remove their barriers, how they need to have access and we need to have access. Then we turn right around, and we have exactly the same internal barriers in Canada. It is much the same. I've been very privileged to represent Alberta at several international functions on agriculture. The Mexicans have much the same problems. They find it easier to deal with us than with each other. The Americans have more trade restrictions interstate than they do with us. It is protectionism, pure and simple. They do it often under the pretense of safety, and it is not.

Diamond 7 Meats in Lloydminster is a hundred feet on the Saskatchewan side. I doubt that there's a more reputable firm anywhere here. I can take my animals to them. I can slaughter them and take them home. They can slaughter for everyone in Saskatchewan. They can sell it to all the restaurants and stores in the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster. Albertans can flock across there and eat that meat. But they cannot move it 10 feet across the street and sell it to an Alberta café. It's just bizarre.

I mean, it opens a few more. In Lloydminster, for example, we will happily pay for me to go across the street and see a doctor in a hospital that we pay for on the Saskatchewan side, but that doctor cannot walk back across the street and see me. We will not pay for someone to go across the street and have their eye examined under a Saskatchewan eye doctor because they're not in Alberta anymore. We do this so many times, and it costs nothing but bureaucracy. If we're doing it under safety, then it makes it really difficult to talk about it.

We are so frustrated in Alberta with R-CALF because of all the things they do to keep our beef out, and it's always about safety. Everyone here and everyone in that organization knows that it's got nothing to do with safety. It's protectionism, blatant, pure and simple. When they don't win in a court of law, they'll move to another court or another jurisdiction. They're now lobbying to get beef put on what they call a J list, which is an import protection list that hasn't been adjusted since 1939. These boys are serious about what they think is protecting their beef industry, probably very shortsighted. We sit and look at them with ridicule, yet we do it to ourselves.

It would be a challenge to have the different departments in the other provinces come back to us with an instance where someone has been given back meat from a slaughter facility that's been contaminated. I think we hold standards that are very close or certainly close enough that Albertans are comfortable with our slaughter facilities, and my good friends in Saskatchewan are comfortable with theirs too. It's not them that stop us; it's us. It's the political will to put everything on the table and say: it's about trade.

I have to applaud the Premier in his initiative to sit down with the B.C. cabinet and talk about issues where we can work with B.C. and try and make it easier for business and commerce to happen. And I hope – I really hope – that our friends in Saskatchewan look at that and say: that's an opportunity for us to get inside. It's not about politics, although that's what we make it. If I can use the same term, it's about common sense, and we have so little of it when it comes to business and trade. It's not common here anymore.

I will say this about HACCP, that the hon. member mentioned. It's an internationally accepted standard, and it is a very good start to be able to connect the dots bigger than just here. If New Mexico is HACCP and we're HACCP and Saskatchewan is, maybe we can start to send a message to our federal management at CFIA. Quite candidly, most of the CFIA people that work at our level in the plants are very good, competent, caring people. When you move to the upper level in Ottawa, it becomes one of the most unaccountable bureaucracies we've ever seen.

We are going to be faced in agriculture with a huge growth in organic foods, organic meats. It doesn't matter. It is going everywhere else around the world, in the States, and we will regulate ourselves out of the market if we don't understand it. I don't want to get back into the Wheat Board fight, but you can't have the Wheat

Board dealing with organic foods. They don't separate them. They can't handle them. They don't acknowledge it. It's ridiculous to think that a system built 60 years ago is still relevant in organic foods. If we're going to have an organic food industry – and we will have it – we might have to import it all because we might regulate it out. If we're going to have it, we need to facilitate what the realities of today are. Everywhere else in the world recognizes that self-imposed trade barriers are just simply wrong.

So to the hon. Member for Highwood: I couldn't agree more. It's a very timely topic and timely discussion. I really do appreciate some of the statements from the opposition and our fellow members. I hope that everyone supports this motion, and I then hope that we do something about it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood to close debate.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to everyone who participated in this evening's debate. It has been very interesting to hear the thoughts of the legislative members regarding the important issue of interprovincial beef trading, and I'm pleased to be given the opportunity to address some of the concerns and comments that the members across brought up.

Specifically to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I'd like to thank you for the support, to begin with. When we talk about CFIA, as we know it today, I think that it was established in 1997, and one of their first mandates was to move forward on these type of issues with the meat and some of the other issues with livestock of various kinds. They're just the ones that we have to prod into action. I think it was brought up across the floor; they talked about this, about getting to work on some of this stuff. I think that they're the ones that we have to motivate somehow or other. I think that the provinces would come onside fairly quickly.

As far as Edmonton-Gold Bar's talk about whether he longs to call it blue tape or red tape, I think that the tape all belongs at CFIA at this particular time.

The other issue that he brought up was getting a hundred per cent support back for the American market, which would be a wonderful thing. I hope that that happens someday, but I think that for animals over 30 months of age this is going to be a pretty difficult situation. The member over here just mentioned about R-CALF; they've got the scare on there. So probably it's more important for us to concentrate on the Asian market: Japan, Taiwan, South Korea, those ones.

He questioned some of the plants. I think that there are only two federally inspected plants in Alberta besides the two big, international companies that we have here right now.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, although he and I don't agree on the Wheat Board, we seem to agree on this, which is quite refreshing. I guess the drop in the herd right now is partially because we had such a tremendous buildup of those cattle over 30 months of age that were retained on the farm, that are slowly now disappearing. Thus you see the numbers dropping. Also, in the meantime, because of the BSE crisis so many of what we may call the old boy ranchers have just plain got out of the business, and this further dropped the herd. Yes, it is going to be a bit of a challenge to bring this herd back up, but I hope that this type of motion, if we could get this moving, would start the process.

I did want to comment to you as well about the legislative changes at the CFIA. We have to perhaps initiate this, and I hope that we can move forward on this motion and do that.

I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for his support. Indeed, we want to keep our value-added stuff here, and it just makes – I guess we're overusing today the words common sense, but that's what we have to do.

I thank all of you people for participating.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 512 is an issue of great importance for Alberta's agriculture industry, and I'm pleased that there were so many insightful comments given regarding Alberta's current situation. The BSE crisis that occurred in 2003 was very hard on Alberta producers. We know that. As was discussed, the closure of United States and other international markets was very damaging to producers and the industry as a whole. By urging the government to work with other provincial governments as well as the federal government to standardize health and slaughter protocols, Alberta could further support beef producers in expanding their markets for Alberta beef. One standard between the provinces would assist the beef industry in shipping their products more efficiently and with greater simplicity. Alberta is Canada's number one beef producer, and the trade of beef products contributes a great deal to this province's economy. Encouraging interprovincial trade by creating one standard countrywide would be beneficial to all Albertans.

Again, I'd like to thank all members for their participation in this evening's debate, and I would ask them to please vote in favour of the motion. Let's kick-start this thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 512 carried]

head: 8:50

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed with the Committee of Supply, I'd just like to remind every member of the comments that were made by the Speaker earlier this afternoon. We are beginning Committee of Supply at 8:51, so the earliest vote that we could have, unless there are no other speakers, would be at 10:51. Okay?

An Hon. Member: Unless there is no one who gets up to speak.

The Deputy Chair: Unless there are no further speakers, yes.

head: Supplementary Supply Estimates 2006-07
General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: So, hon. members, I believe we have an order in which we're going. Okay. We'll begin with the hon. Government House Leader.

Education

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Chair, as you know and as all members here know, our students definitely benefit from one of the best education systems in the entire world. Thank you for that applause, hon. members. Alberta Education also enjoys one of the highest levels of investment in its students and teachers as compared with all other counterparts right across the dominion. As further proof of this tonight I'm pleased to comment on the supplementary estimates for Alberta Education, totalling an additional $293.3 million for our school-related needs, bringing our total voted expense for the '06-07 fiscal budget to about $5.6 billion. [some applause] Yes, thank you for that as well. It shows you how deeply we do value our K to 12 education system. In fact, this amount includes funds received through the Alberta school foundation fund, or what we commonly refer to as education property taxes, that help support our K to 12 education system in Alberta.

The specific increases I'm asking for tonight include $52 million more for operating grant support to public and separate schools and $241.3 million more for school facilities-related expenses. Mr. Chair, the $52 million in operating support can be broken down into supporting four very important initiatives. Specifically, $16.5 million more will provide school boards with a 1 per cent increase in their base instruction rates. This increases the base instruction grant from $5,087 per student in '05-06 to $5,291 per student in '06-07.

As well, $5 million more will be provided to school boards to accommodate the increasing number of students with severe special needs. This translates into a total 6 per cent increase in funding for all school boards this September for students with severe disabilities.

As well, $2.5 million more will allow us to extend the funding eligibility for students requiring English as a Second Language programs beyond five years. We've seen a very exponential growth in the need for ESL services in various parts of the province but particularly so in the Calgary and surrounding area.

Another $28 million will support the small class size initiative to help school boards retain the 1,685 teachers already hired under this initiative, and it also allows school boards to hire yet another 800-plus new teachers this September. The expectation, of course, is that school jurisdictions will reduce their average class sizes to those recommended by Alberta's Commission on Learning, and I do mean reduce to that number within the three-year time frame set by our government on a jurisdiction-wide basis.

Now, to comment on the $241.3 million of this supplementary estimate, let me say this. This amount will address the cost pressures related to school buildings, and here is how this amount can be broken down: $9 million more will be added to provide school boards with increased plant operations and maintenance funding for the '06-07 school year, bringing our total investment in plant operations and maintenance funding, or what we usually refer to as PO and M, up to $404 million for the '06-07 fiscal year. As well, $119 million in additional funding will be used to increase infrastructure maintenance and renewal funding for school boards. This money can be used to replace floors, ceilings, roofs, boilers, mechanical systems, and so on, as well as for improvements to school energy efficiency. This, in turn, can of course reduce cost pressures associated with operating older school buildings.

Mr. Chair, our IMR, or infrastructure maintenance renewal, funding will increase from $48 million last year to a whopping $200 million this fiscal year, a significant investment to ensure that health and safety concerns are addressed where our students are concerned. As well, $72.3 million will be provided for new schools and new school preservation and modernization projects as so-called kick-start funding and in order to address urgent school facility needs in our province. This will help provide an additional 130 new steel-frame modular classrooms as well, and we can also help with the relocation of 45 existing portables to communities in need around the province. In addition to that, $41 million will address cost escalations for previously approved school capital projects. The competitive construction market has resulted in rising costs over the life of all of these previously announced projects, and we want to ensure that the rising costs of construction are addressed with these additional escalation dollars.

I'll just wrap up by saying that new school construction and major modernization of existing schools are both of critical importance to our school jurisdictions right across the province. I will be announcing some specific allocations very shortly in that regard which will be based on emergent needs that address the health, safety, and other concerns that our jurisdictions are facing.

I want to briefly comment also on the schools for tomorrow plan that will serve as a guide for decision-making over the next five years for new school constructions, modernizations, modulars, and other school construction-related projects. I will have the schools for tomorrow plan completed later this fall, as has been indicated by our Provincial Treasurer, and it will be a very detailed long-term plan outlining where schools are needed, in what amounts, what sizes, and address which grade levels.

Now, I'll end just by saying a couple of brief things. The funding that's contained in tonight's supplementary estimates is a very, very good start. They are in addition to the $207 million that I announced in September of last year for new school construction projects, modulars, and so on. That all combined will bring the total to almost half a billion dollars in new funding committed for school infrastructure over the past year alone. I think this is a good demonstration of the commitment we have to this particular issue.

School boards told me that they are facing challenges in preparing their '06-07 school year budgets, and with an unanticipated surplus in government's revenues for the first quarter, these additional dollars will be provided to help them address those challenges. We've worked very hard over the summer, Mr. Chair, with school jurisdictions, with their chief financial officers, with school trustees, and the like. Our final school board funding levels will be of course determined after the final counts are taken at the end of September, but these dollars that we're announcing over the summer and confirming, I hope, and approving tonight will help alleviate those problems that they had flagged for my attention.

I'm proud to say that when our students return to their classrooms over the next several days, they will on average experience smaller classes. There will be additional base instructional dollars to support the classrooms. There will be more funding to support special-needs students. There will be more programming for ESL students. There will be additional planning initiated for new school constructions. There will be more monies and more planning possible for major modernizations of other schools, and additional classroom spaces will be available as a result of new steel-framed modulars.

Thank you for this opportunity to briefly comment. I'll now look forward to others commenting as well. Thank you.

9:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to start by just looking at the minister's figures here for a moment. I assume that the $28 million for the class size initiative so that school boards can hire more teachers – it's a total of $154.3 million. Maybe you could clarify that for me.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. It's over and above what was in the budget originally.

Mr. Flaherty: Yeah.

Let's see. The infrastructure and maintenance renewal program was 119 million plus dollars. I have $351 million now for the total amount.

Mr. Zwozdesky: A hundred and nineteen million plus $81 million.

Mr. Flaherty: Oh, $81 million. Okay. I think that's what it adds up to.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. It adds up to $200 million.

Mr. Flaherty: Yeah. Thank you very much.

Mr. Zwozdesky: That's IMR.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you very much for that. I appreciate it.

You know, you look at the direction that Alberta Education sets for the school systems. One of the key things it says: "Allocate funds to school boards." I think what we've gone through here is an exercise of three different budgets, if you will: the one in the spring, the one early in the summer, and now the present one. It suggests a kind of difficulty in dealing with the question of dollars and helping school systems get on with the tasks that they are faced with.

The minister was suggesting that he met with a number of school districts. I had the honour of doing that this summer, and I particularly speak of my own riding in St. Albert, where we find that one of the things that they are very much faced with, especially our high schools in St. Albert, is the credit enrolment unit. The minister's department set out to do an audit of this particular system on how it operated, and the timing and the planning and the way that audit went has really had impact on our high schools. In fact, both high schools in St. Albert will have close to a million dollar loss of dollars this next year, which is going to impact how they deal with their student populations.

The other aspect that's been significant there that's been brought to my attention is the class size initiative of 27, and they feel that this is a very difficult thing to hit and that it will be difficult to operate or make work well in their particular school situations.

The other thing that we're facing in our school systems in St. Albert is that one of our high schools has a difficult plant situation, and it does affect the program offerings that it's limited in offering.

So we have our high school systems in St. Albert facing some very difficult times in terms of funding this next year, to the point of being in deficit positions.

The other aspect is in the elementary and junior high schools. In one system we have 39 aides being let go. In fact, I visited one of the schools and met a mother with a child. Unfortunately, next year she'll have an aide only halftime whereas this last year she made wonderful progress and had a full-time aide. So this is having an impact on us.

The other thing I was kind of hoping for in this statement was some plan or some initiative on the unfunded liability for teachers across the province.

With that, Mr. Minister, maybe you could comment a little later, if you would. If you don't want to, that's fine too.

Now I'd just turn again to maintenance. Any additional funding that the minister has talked about is very welcome. However, it is doubtful that an extra approximately $232 million plus $119 million, whatever that adds up to, will address the infrastructure and maintenance needs of schools in the province of Alberta. Delaying routine maintenance and major repairs increases the cost to Albertans in the long run. Following the completion of the school evaluation project in 2001 there's a one-year jump in capital spending on schools followed by a return to the status quo. This suggests to me that the government recognizes the severity of this problem but is unwilling to commit a long-term solution to it. The Alberta School Boards Association, ASBA, noted in their report Missing the Mark: Alberta's School Building Deficit that while $2.62 billion of capital spending was requested by school boards in 2005, only $0.2 billion was awarded by the government. In 2005 the Calgary board of education calculated its total cost of deferred maintenance using data from Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation at $426 million, up from a calculated $322 million in 1999 and 2000, and this was adjusted for inflation and aging. Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation's business plan for 2006-2009 notes that 45 schools require major repairs and upgrading to comply with the minimum standards and that 530 schools have aged to the point of needing major refurbishing to remain functional.

Can the Minister of Education suggest a timeline for completion of major repairs needed to bring Alberta schools up to minimum standards? What is the Alberta government's long-term strategy for paying down the deferred maintenance in Alberta's schools, and is the government taking steps to ensure that schools that were rated as being in good condition in the school facility evaluation project in '99-2000 are not requiring greater maintenance presently, presently meaning now? Will the government create a specific fund for emergency maintenance projects to ensure that something like the closure of Marlborough school in Calgary-East, which closed because of fears that its roof would collapse and injure students, does not happen again? Will the government commit to immediately funding upgrades to schools that present a threat to students' health and safety due to mould and faulty roofs, et cetera, across the province?

Now, let me just comment if I can on capital spending on construction. Because of Alberta's hot economy many people are immigrating to the province each year, creating immediate and also long-term demands because of the concurrent baby boom. This reality necessitates the construction of new schools to address population growth and to stimulate emerging communities. Alberta has not adequately budgeted to meet these new demands. Calgary has 40 new communities. The Calgary board of education requested funding to build 24 new schools in its most recent three-year plan at a cost of $282 million but was awarded only $12 million, enough to build only one new school. In 2005 school boards requested $2.5 billion in funding in their three-year capital plan, but the provincial government allocated only $833 million for capital spending on schools over the next three years. That is $1.7 billion less than school boards required. The government has now allocated $1.3 billion and $1.2 billion less than what is required.

Capital requests by school boards have doubled within the past few years: $1.37 billion in 2002, $2.5 billion in 2005. This suggests that failure to provide adequate funding does not cut costs but, rather, defers expenditures to later years. The question is: will the Alberta government recognize that quickly growing centres require new schools to ensure that emerging communities are successful? Is the government prepared to assist parents and school boards with the increased costs of busing for as long as it takes to build neighbourhood schools in various communities, such as Calgary? It really begs the question: does this government recognize the importance of neighbourhood schools? I don't really know, and I don't see any really solid plan that suggests that they do.

Special needs. Let me just touch on special needs for a moment. The Alberta Learning Commission pointed out that in 2003 the number of students with severe, moderate, and mild special needs had gone up quickly in the past 10 years. They estimated that between '95-96 and 2000-01 the number of children with severe special needs went up 64 per cent and that the number of children with mild to moderate special needs went up 140 per cent. This suggests that additional support and funding are needed to ensure that the needs of all children are met.

So what is the status, I'd like to know, of the pilot project going on in 27 school districts that explores a flexible funding model for project unit funding, and what is the government doing to ensure that the needs of students with mild to moderate special needs are met? The example, again, is the one I gave in St. Albert. Will the government consider funding students with mild to moderate special needs in grade 1 individually rather than through block funding, as recommended by the Alberta Learning Commission? Will the government look at expanding PUF to grades 1 and up, particularly for those children who need assistance and have not taken any assessments because they haven't experienced kindergarten or an early childhood experience? That's a question. I think assessment is very, very important for kids starting off well in school.

The class size initiative is a good one, and we'll hope that it does relieve some of the problems across the province. I think it also will hopefully help schools better adjust to better teaching and learning.

I'll leave it at that, Mr. Chair, and hopefully I can get some answers. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. I'll provide a couple of quick answers right now, and then I'll do the rest in writing so that other members can have a chance to speak.

The $154 million total for the class size initiative is correct when you include the additional $28 million that I'm asking for tonight. The additional $119 million for IMR, infrastructure and maintenance renewal, coupled with the $81 million that was approved in the May budget will take us to a total of $200 million.

Just in general, hon. member, there are three envelopes involved with the infrastructure piece. Let's say that the first one is PO and M, plant operations and maintenance. That will experience a $28 million increase, to a total of $404 million. IMR, infrastructure and maintenance renewal, will increase by $152 million from last year, up to a total of $200 million this year, and the school construction budget envelope, the third one, will increase by about $195 million this year, to a total of about $372 million. I'll just confirm some of that back in writing because I'm going by memory a little bit here.

Quickly, on the CEUs the rules are very clear, hon. member, and all school principals know them as do school superintendents and school board trustees and so on. Basically, we're asking that students enrolled in the high school courses have the prerequisites that are required, that they attend at least 50 per cent of the classes, that they achieve a mark of at least 25 per cent, that a certified, accredited teacher is present, and so on. If some of those criteria aren't being met, then that is something that every school principal and every school superintendent and the school boards must review. And that's all that we do. We do about 23 on-site audits and about 200 paper audits, so we're trying to get the system to abide by all of those rules.

I'll comment in writing later, Mr. Chair, with respect to the maintenance issues, the three-year capital requirements of the boards. I understand the figures you've given, but those aren't all requested in one year. They're requested over a period of three and sometimes four and five years. The schools for tomorrow plan that I alluded to earlier will address exactly what you're talking about, and I think you'll quite enjoy reading that.

Issues to do with quick growth communities will be addressed.

Busing costs. We just added several millions of dollars to that, but I think the major problem that school boards are facing is the fact that you can't get as many people to drive buses today as they could, say, a year ago, and that's not just in the school system, hon. member. That's also in many other industries that rely on busing.

Special needs I've already addressed.

The unfunded pension liability we will chat more about.

With respect to the specific point you mentioned about aides being let go in one school jurisdiction, I'd like to see which school that is, because I think that with the additional monies they should be able to retain most of those. At least, let's hope that's the case.

Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat so that other members can get their comments and questions forward, and the questions I didn't address for the hon. Member for St. Albert I will undertake to address in writing at a later date.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to be relatively brief. [some applause] I appreciate that. Whenever I can get applause, I'll take it for whatever reason in this House, right?

I want to make some of the same comments I made about Health, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, this $232 million is needed. I don't think there's any doubt about that. The $61 million that is going into the schools is needed. Now, whether it's enough or not, that's a debate that we can have. But I think the important part about it is – think about this, Mr. Minister – that we brought in a budget in March, we passed it in June, and now we're coming back for another budget in August. It's nice that this money is coming, but it was surely predictable that we needed this money back in March.

This is what is so frustrating. The budget that we passed in March really doesn't mean much anymore. [interjection] Well, in May or whenever, but we brought it forward in March. I remember asking questions in the Legislature, and I know that the Official Opposition did. We were hearing from school boards, the rest of it. The problems were there. I guess I'm just saying: why couldn't we have dealt with them then, when we knew that it was going to occur, rather than have to do it now in supplementary estimates?

Don't get me wrong; I'm glad for some of the money because I was one pushing for it, as the minister knows. We take it this way if we have to get it this way, but it makes it very difficult for the boards to budget because they took these teachers, I know in most jurisdictions, and already they had laid them off because they had to do that with the money that they were accruing. Then all of a sudden there's money there later on. Now they're going to have to hire them back, and some of those young teachers will not be there. So it just doesn't make much sense to budget in this way.

The budget should be there in March. It makes sense to know what's occurring. We know that we have a huge infrastructure deficit. We know in Edmonton public that half our schools are 50 years of age or over, and I think Calgary is the same way. We know these things, so we should be budgeting for them in the proper way rather than hit and miss.

Again, Mr. Chairman, don't get me wrong. The money is needed. The money is needed, and we certainly support it, but there's got to be a better way to do this. The school boards have to have more ability to plan their budgets. I know that some of them are scurrying around now trying to bring back some of those teachers and teacher aides and the rest of it that they've lost. They may not be there. Wouldn't it have been much simpler to keep these people and not lay them off, because they knew the money was coming at that particular time? So I just say that we've got to learn from this that sort of crisis budgeting is not the best way to do it.

We look at the maintenance. I'm glad that there's more money coming in, but the numbers – you know, we can talk about big numbers, but it always comes down to what's happening at the local level. The Alberta School Boards Association identified a need for more than $2.5 billion in capital investments in their three-year capital plans, and for the same three-year period the government allocated $833 million, which is 32 per cent of what the school boards need. Now, even the new funding announced in the supplements here, an extra $463 million of capital investments for school maintenance, is still only 50 per cent of what school boards need. I mean, it's a start.

All I'm saying is: why can't we work this out in the budget over a three-year period of time to match what's actually going on? We don't save money. I know that the minister knows this. We don't save money by waiting, because the costs just get worse. The roofs are in worse shape. The gyms are in worse shape. I know that in Calgary Western and Ernest Manning, in which I used to be a counsellor and coach, you know, they can't even have their gym classes when it rains. So that ends up costing us more. Of course, I know that the construction costs are greater because of the overheated economy. But we just have to, I think, budget differently, make our annual budgets mean something and look at a three-year plan to cover the deficit.

Mr. Chairman, there are just a couple of other things I want to talk about. I want to say to the minister that I am very disappointed that we did not deal, as the Learning Commission suggested, with full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten in high-needs schools. We have examples across the province, but again I'll talk about where I know of the most and the member's statement from Edmonton-Mill Woods about the city centre project. I was the trustee in that area, and I know the good work that was going on there and in some other schools also.

Nobody said that it had to be across the board to all schools at all times right away – maybe that wasn't even feasible – but it's absolutely so crucial in those high-needs schools. If we don't get those kids at an early level, we will lose them, and we'll pay the price down the way. We talk about our high school dropout rates; there's a good reason right there. One of the quickest ways that we can do it over 10 years is do the job at the early levels. The city centre project was set up through AISI and was a pilot project, but it seems to me that when something works and is documented as well as this is, junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten, we should make it part of the system rather than saying: well, the school boards can do this if they want. They take it out of other instructional dollars.

I would honestly suggest that over the long haul that would save the government money. I really say to the minister: I wish that they would relook at this whole area of junior kindergarten and kindergarten. I think it's absolutely crucial in certain schools in Alberta, and if we don't get it, we'll pay the price. You know, it's the old advertisement: you can pay me now or pay me later.

We'll see what the school fees are like. One question, and he doesn't have to answer it here but maybe, as he said, in writing. The Learning Commission also talked about the fees, and I know that the minister has talked about that and I believe that there's some commission looking at this. The minister is reviewing the fees. I guess I'm wondering when. The latest I have would be sometime in the fall, but if he can give us an idea when we might look at that because fees are becoming a major obstacle for people with modest incomes. There are a lot of things that I would consider essential that are being charged in fees. So that's a very important issue, I think, for the minister to look at.

School dropout rates. Alberta is not doing well there, and the minister knows that. There has been a slight improvement but not nearly enough. I guess I would come back and say about that that one of the quickest ways 10 years down the way will be, as I said, to deal with kids in the high-needs areas. The other point I would make is that there are figures that I've pointed out before about high school counsellors. Now, maybe I'm biased, having formerly been one when I had a real job, but librarians and those sorts of people: there has been a tremendous drop at least in Edmonton public, and I expect that it's true throughout Alberta. It seems to me that if we're looking at one of the reasons for our high dropout rate in this province, it might be for that reason because that's what counsellors and certainly librarians did.

We know, for instance, that if a kid is going into high school and they're one year behind in their reading level, the chances are they're going to be a dropout. The odds are pretty good. We know. Those are the facts. I think that's what we may begin to look at, that whole area, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to come back – and the minister did reply – and talk about school utilization. This is again going to be a major problem. In a letter that he wrote to me – I guess I got it on June 29, and I appreciate the letter back. I was asking about the utilization and how other provinces handle it. The minister says: this is done using different approaches, including leasing space for other community services, rightsizing of facilities by relocating attached portable classrooms, and as a last resort the closure of schools. Well, I want to stress – and I was there in Edmonton public – that the closure of schools seemed to be the first resort, and it was encouraged by the government, not so much this minister. The impression was: look, if you want to get a new school out in the suburban areas, you'd better close down the schools in the inner city. They played off one part of the city against the other, and it's unacceptable, Mr. Chairman. The use of portable classrooms and many other things are good ideas, but I think there are some things that we have to look at.

I pointed out about Ontario: they've changed it around. They've taken the position that the education program needs of students must take priority over decisions concerning school buildings. I honestly suggest that it's the other way here still unless we're going to change this. One of the things that they do is that they make it very clear that you cannot close a school down to get another new school. There may be a reason eventually for closing a school down, but the two shouldn't be related. We have done that in Alberta. The previous minister made that very clear to the boards. That's why he had a rush of inner-city school closures. It's wrong. It's the wrong way to go about it.

We have to look at other uses for the community, too. If there's something useful going on in the schools that's beneficial to the community, why can't that be part of the utilization rate? We've talked about the old schools and how unfair that is. I know the minister is aware that we count halls and washrooms and everything else as space. We don't give enough coverage or enough utilization for special needs and the rest of it.

Now, I believe the minister said that they were going to relook at this whole process on utilization. Again, I'm wondering when we might look forward to hopefully a more enlightened policy coming on the whole utilization. We see all the schools up in Edmonton public again on a watch list, you know, all in the inner city. As I say, the process is ugly. I've been through it as a trustee, and I've been through it as an MLA. The parents feel violated, as you know, and it just doesn't work the way we're going. So I think we really have to take another look at the whole utilization. I think this would be true of rural Alberta as well as urban Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of issues – we could go on forever – but I'll just reiterate what the Member for St. Albert said. Finally there's acknowledgement by the Finance minister that a nonfunded liability is a debt. At least, that's what I heard the other day. That's a new approach, I think, from the government. This debt will grow and grow and grow. I know that the minister is aware of this: $6 billion now will be $46 billion down the way if we don't do something about it. So I would hope that the government would be taking a look at that and working with the Alberta Teachers' Association to begin to deal with this unfunded liability. I'd rather try to deal with $6 billion than $46 billion down the way.

There are a lot of other issues that we could go on in education, Mr. Chairman, but time is short. We've got a lot of estimates. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, there were a lot of comments and questions there and far too many for me to address in the time today if we're going to allow other members to speak, but I will just comment very quickly. Just for clarity's sake, one important issue is the date on which the budget actually was construed for '06-07, and the date it was passed, as you know, was in May. That's a critical date, hon. member. As you know, school boards don't send in their budgets to us until the last week of June. So we have a little bit of underlapping/overlapping in the wrong way here, and it's a challenge for us as well.

We go on the best projection estimates available from the school boards and based on our own tracking and so on, but there are other factors that impact that decision, Mr. Chairman. One of them, as I've referenced before, is the fact that teachers who are planning to retire aren't required to let the school board know until May 30 or 31 or something. Even if we could accelerate that frame by about a month or even two, that would help school boards with their planning, which, in turn, would help us a lot. I don't want this to come down to a money issue, because I'm a former teacher and I respect the profession deeply, but the fact is that most school teachers who are retiring are in the upper echelon earning capacity. They're in that $70,000 to $80,000 range typically, whereas new teachers coming into the system are typically in around the $40,000 a year mark. So it makes a difference. I think we can all do the math and understand that. Budgeting is difficult both ways.

The bottom line to it all, hon. member, is that the school boards' final budgets are set, and we agree to them around about the end of September. There's always a little bit of movement and overlap because that's when their school year is only one month old whereas we, at that point, are seven-twelfths of the way through our budget already, but we have to do the best we can with the information we have.

With respect to the cost escalations I'll make this comment, Mr. Chair: it's important to realize that cost escalations were already built into the '06-07 budget passed in May, but they were predicated on information we had going into the January, February, March period of allocations. Had we known that costs were going to jump again during the months of May, June, and July by another 15 to 20 per cent, obviously we would have addressed it earlier. That's one reason why we need your support for supplementary estimates tonight. Previously approved projects alone require $41 million in cost escalations just over the past couple months. It's happened so quickly. We don't want to abandon those projects already announced; we want them to continue on, so I need your support tonight for $41 million to continue those projects.

With respect to the high needs for schools. You know, hon. member, funding is available for students enrolled in recognized ECS programs. When you talk about the capital city centre projects, those three schools and so on which we've talked about before, all that has to happen in that case is that they just simply have to apply to the school board and have those students registered as mild- or moderate-delay students in the special-needs category, and they will receive the funding. We provide funding for recognized programs. Okay.

Now the junior K program is a separate issue, and I understand that. It ties in somewhat with what you're saying. But if there are high-needs students, if they are so-called at-risk students, and they're in that mild/moderate delay category, they can and should be receiving funding. If those folks who are running that project wish to approach the school board, they can do that.

School fees. That report should be coming forward in the next few months. I'll comment more in writing. I'll just remind everybody about the high school completion symposium, which will address the dropout rates. That will occur on September 24 and 25.

Other stuff to do with utilization, unfunded liability, and so on, Mr. Chair, I will address in writing so that we can have other members take the floor and offer their comments and questions.

Thank you, hon. members.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in the discussion here on the supplementary estimates for Education this evening.

Certainly, one welcomes this money. One only has to visit a public school anywhere in the province to see that it is needed. It is mind-boggling, to say the least, that in June teachers and support staff were being laid off. Everyone was very concerned – parents, trustees, and members on this side of the House – but the government at that time failed to recognize the funding shortfalls. This is welcome at this time, but hopefully we will have better planning, and we will have a better budgeting process in the future.

I don't know what sort of contingency the hon. minister is building into his budget. Certainly, everyone seems aware of the cost overruns that are happening in the province. We only have to look at the bridge construction on the ring road in the south end of the city. I mean, last year there were significant cost overruns that were acknowledged by the former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation in this House, whether it was fuel, whether it was cement, whether it was labour costs. This is not new, and I'm astonished that this is not built into the budget.

Specifically, we look at school maintenance projects, and let's just pick our own neighbourhood in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The minister's a very busy man, and I was pleased to hear that in June he, along with trustee Hansen, toured the Holyrood elementary school, which was a receiving school after this government, a former minister, forced the school board to close other public schools. After those schools were forced to be closed, Holyrood, of course, was one of the so-called receiving schools.

So the schools were closed. It was an exodus. The parents that had any confidence left in the public system enrolled their children in schools like Holyrood. It got so crowded, Mr. Chairman, that there had to be two assemblies because the student body was too large to have one assembly in the gymnasium. They had to go at separate times. There were issues of mould. There were issues of inadequate plumbing. There was a long list of repairs needed to be done to that school. Now, the hon. minister has toured that school. Hopefully that school – and it needs close to $5 million to bring it up to today's standard – is going to be included in this $232 million budget for upgrades and renovations. While we're at it, there's Capilano elementary. There's Gold Bar elementary. They were bumped down the list here. They both need over a million dollars in upgrades. What's the status on those two schools? Is there going to be any change in how they may be viewed?

Certainly, this government cannot force the closure of anymore neighbourhood schools. It has gone on long enough; it has gone far enough, and it is about time that we reinvest in neighbourhood schools, whether it's Capilano, or Forest Heights. We look at McNally senior high which is jammed to the rafters. I don't know how many more symposiums and more studies we need to do on our high school drop out rate, but just tour the school. Grade 10 students – if they're feeling in any way alienated, if they're feeling in any way that they don't fit into the school, they're lost in there with that large, crowded school. They can get frustrated, and of course they may not last through grade 12. I would like the hon. minister to let me know, please, what's going to happen with the upgrades that are needed at McNally senior high.

We look at the separate system. Austin O'Brien needs repairs. St. Brendan. There's probably not a school in a mature neighbourhood of the city that does not need upgrades and renovations. If we can find millions of dollars for other school boards, we can find adequate money to upgrade all the neighbourhood schools in both the public and separate systems in this city. Certainly there is a long list here. There's Ottewell junior high. There's Fulton Place elementary, which certainly needs work. Clara Tyner needs some work. The Gold Bar community would be no different than any other neighbourhood. I would really appreciate it if the minister could update the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Whether it's at a later date by a letter, that is adequate, but I would appreciate a detailed explanation of which of these additional dollars is going to the schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Again, Mr. Chairman, I won't take much time. I'll respond in writing so that others can get their questions onto the table. Let me just say, first of all, that I appreciate the comments about one welcoming these monies or whatever. I think the other previous speakers mentioned that too. I thank you for at least acknowledging that these dollars that we're injecting tonight are needed dollars and that they will be appreciated. I know that some additional dollars are still needed in other areas, but this is what we're working with. I'm pretty proud of the fact that we've got it, frankly, so thank you for acknowledging that.

The budgeting process is difficult; it is complicated. Let me just remind members here, Mr. Chair, that Alberta Education is essentially a flow-through agency, if you will. I'm not sure if that's the best way to describe it, but let me put it this way: we put out to school boards 98 per cent of all the monies that we get. We retain a very small percentage ourselves for curriculum development and the Learning Resources Centre and our own staff and travel costs and so on, but 98 per cent of our total budgets flow out to the locally elected school boards. As you know, we're dealing with about $5.6 billion in total, so that's a huge amount of money that is going out there.

I will again reiterate that cost escalations were not all known at the time that, you know, the budget was brought in, and the reason for that in part – and I should have mentioned it in response to Beverly-Clareview and his questions – is that projects get tendered at different times by the local school boards. So they don't all get tendered at the ideal time for all budgeting purposes.

You asked the question about Holyrood being one of the receiving schools. I think the hon. member would agree that Holyrood is one of the absolute best schools in all of Alberta in terms of its output. There are many schools who do an incredible job, but Holyrood happens to be one that I'm intimately familiar with, having visited it, oh, probably 100-plus times over the last few years. I know that it's a receiving school, and I know that it has some issues, as does Balwin, as do others.

Your specific request, however, with regard to McNally, Austin

O'Brien, Ottewell, Fulton Place, Clara Tyner, and others. The first thing we'd have to do, hon. member, is take a look at the boards' three-year capital plans and see where those projects are in their plans. But let me say this. IMR dollars, infrastructure maintenance renewal dollars, that have just been increased, I hope tonight with your approval, by another $119 million will go a very, very long way to helping some of those difficulties that schools such as those you mentioned might be having. Again, I'm not sure.

For example, in the case of Edmonton Catholic schools their IMR dollars will go from $231.5 million last year up to $253.8 million this year, and that's just for that one envelope, infrastructure maintenance renewal funding. Edmonton public will go from a grand total – sorry; hang on here. That's grand total funding. My apologies. IMR funding: I have to restate this; I'm sorry. The grand total for that school board, all of its funding – my apologies – will go from $231.5 million up to $253.8 million. The IMR goes from $2.7 million up to $12 million just in IMR for that envelope. Similarly, with Edmonton public they were receiving $6.9 million in IMR funding in '05-06, and they will now be receiving $30.8 million. I mean, it's a huge jump. So, you know, we can't address them all in one fell swoop, but that's a huge jump. Their total budget will go from $567 million up to $625 million, so they've got a lot more money to work with and a lot of flexibility.

I beg to differ. I don't think we're forcing any closures, hon. member. I think what we're trying to do is take a long-term view of this situation, see where it is that steel-framed modulars, which are mould resistant and have a much longer life span, can be moved around. They're wonderful. I just toured the facility here a couple of weeks ago down in Crossfield, Alberta, and they're amazing – absolutely amazing – units with steel-framed floors, steel-framed walls, steel-framed roofs, the whole nine yards. They're just real works of art. That factor along with the IMR dollars will help bode us very well, and hopefully more schools will be able to be preserved or added to or modernized or whatever. The schools for tomorrow plan that I referenced earlier, which I will have completed later this fall, will address that as well. Mr. Chair, we don't want to wind up in the end with a whole bunch of new schools that are only going to be 40 or 50 per cent full, and in the meantime the older schools are also only going to be 40 or 50 per cent full. We want to find a better solution than that.

I'll take my seat now and let other members get comments and questions on the record, should they wish, and I'll undertake to provide Edmonton-Gold Bar with additional written answers to the other questions he asked.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm really pleased with this additional money, and I'm very pleased with the comments that you're making tonight in terms of long-term vision and planning. I am concerned that in 2005-2006 $81 million was budgeted for infrastructure and maintenance renewal, and the supplementary budget funding right now is almost three times the entire original budgeted amount. You're right; that's a huge jump. To me it suggests poor planning. We've got to get a handle on things.

I know that schools have been through years and years, since about 1992, of government releasing money too late and in bits and pieces. The figures used to be released in January-February, and now it's as late as April-May. In the last several years there have been summer announcements of money just like this year. This creates staffing decisions being made in late August, often after our young teachers have left the province because we couldn't tell them that they really did have a job.

I know that in Edmonton public there were hundreds of teachers who were on probationary contracts last year and were recommended by their principals for continuing contracts because they are good teachers, but these teachers had to go through this summer not knowing if they would get their contract, and I suspect that some of them have left. Some of them are returning to work, but they still don't know if they have a contract. This anxiety is huge because it's about livelihood. It affects lives, and it affects families.

I know schools that let teacher aides go in June, and it may be very difficult now, even though we've got the extra money, to find replacements. People need stability in their lives. With the hot economy these teacher aides can go across the street and get a job with more pay and less responsibility. The reality is that they have to have that stability, so that concerns me.

Based on the budget schools have in April, they make plans for the following year. By the beginning of May, with students having generally concluded their registration plans, they put together master timetables. By the end of May schools declare some teachers surplus, and a process begins to plan for and place teachers for the next year. So teachers move, they change schools, and get placed as much as possible by the end of June. But that doesn't always happen.

To get money in August means that even if principals now open another position, they will not likely get back the teacher they had already lost and who has been placed somewhere else. The angst of waiting for placement for the teacher declared and moved to a new school has already occurred, and now principals have to take time to interview and go through that whole process to replace perhaps an excellent teacher that they would have preferred to keep with a possible new teacher now with limited experience. It disrupts teachers' lives, the schools spend time and money they shouldn't have to, and children and parents get upset because they were expecting so-and-so teacher, and that teacher is not coming back.

In high schools it may mean many hours of admin work modifying the master timetable. This will mean that many students will find that their timetable has changed from what they believed it was in July, and this can cause great difficulties, perhaps, in that they'll lose a course that they need for their postsecondary requirements.

I am concerned about that anxiety. I think it's unnecessary. If planning could be based on facts instead of guesswork, just like you say you have to do with your department, layoffs would be minimized and additional programs might even be planned properly. So why can't we do something about changing the timelines to accommodate schools? I don't know. Why is it like this?

The other thing I'd like to talk about: the recent addition of the 1 per cent of operating grants is really welcome. If school boards had known this would happen, it would have probably eliminated a lot of anxiety. But, you know, with the considerable increase in transportation budgets due to fuel costs and the rising costs of utilities, I'm told that it's likely the additional 1 per cent will allow schools to just break even. However, this is assuming, of course, that the three nonteaching contracts in Edmonton public school board, for example, will be settled at 3 per cent, like the ATA has already done.

Now, when I look at Mill Woods, as the hon. minister knows, the schools there are relatively new. They started in the 1970s. However, a number of them need modernization. But schools in older areas have greater needs.

The second major problem is that while the extra cash is welcome, the funding isn't nearly enough to deal with the overwhelming maintenance backlog in this province. The injection is good news, but the extensive backlog at local schools is just going to be shaved; it's not going to be eliminated. We know that. What concerns me is that the longer we wait, it seems that the cost is increased. So things have been put on the wayside because of lack of funding over the last several years, and we're going to pay a greater price.

What we need is sustained funding over the long term, predictable sustained funding. Man, it just sounds so simple, I know. But it would make a tremendous difference. Costs are increasing for many reasons. The longer things are on hold, the more they will cost. Soaring construction costs and inflation-eroded dollars mean ballooning price tags.

When I look at Edmonton public school board's plans for major maintenance, I really appreciate the effort that's gone into identifying for consideration what needs to be done by receiving input from schools, from facilities staff, and from regulatory agencies. The needs and requests for school improvement projects continue to exceed available funding. The plan, therefore, has to reflect the district's highest need. This is where I go back.

Now, I'd just like to talk a little bit more about Edmonton-Mill Woods, which I know the minister is quite familiar with. I've got a number of schools, Lee Ridge, Tipaskan elementary, and W.P. Wagner high school, who are getting new roofing through infrastructure maintenance and renewal. J. Percy Page is getting flooring, upgraded sidewalks, and upgraded washrooms. Wagner is also getting asbestos abatement and replacement of some corridor walls. Edith Rogers is getting lockers replaced. I wonder what's happening with Holy Trinity. It's the same age as J. Percy Page high school. They must have enormous needs too. Frère Antoine elementary school is not wheelchair accessible. I know that from personal experience, but I've also had calls from parents who need to use walkers that can't get into that school. That concerns me. I mean, that's an obvious need.

In years 1 and 3 Hillview and Weinlos are going to be looked at, and that's good news, but several schools have to wait for years 4 and 6 for facility alterations or a review of program fit, you know, looking at program viability. These are good things. But that involves Grace Martin, Greenview, Kate Chegwin, Lee Ridge, and Malcolm Tweddle. These are some of our older schools in Mill Woods. It concerns me that this is all based on needs at this time. There's no crystal ball to tell us what might be needed down the road due to extraordinary circumstances.

I think the cost of defeating the debt for the deadline of 2005 has been enormous. We should have been maintaining schools all through the last decade. Surely this would have been more responsible and competent fiscal management, management that would better serve Albertans. Again, I say that we have to provide sustainable funding to allow schools to plan with confidence to meet existing needs and to maintain their schools and their programs.

I've got more that I'd like to talk to, but I'll wait for another time. I think I've said enough for now. I don't want to repeat a lot of what's been said.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Sure. I'll be brief as well. Thanks very much for the positive comments. I have great respect for this member because I visited her school often, and we talked about education a great deal.

I'll just briefly say this: why did IMR, or infrastructure and maintenance renewal, dollars jump from $48 million a year to $200 million a year? The reason for that is because I happen to know some people who are in this business of property management, and

I talked with them over the past year, and some of my officials did as well. I can tell you, hon. member, that in many cases private industry tend to budget about 2 per cent per year for maintenance of their inventories.

Now, in the case of schools we have approximately $10 billion worth of school infrastructure out there. So if you take 2 per cent of that, you'll get about $200 million a year. If you take $81 million that we had in May and add $119 million, voila: you have $200 million. So that's the formula I used to get to the $200 million, and our caucus fortunately understood that, agreed with it, and we're asking for you to concur in it tonight. I mean, we take each year at a time, but that will do a tremendous amount of, as you called it, catch-up.

The issue of teacher stability and the budgeting process: I just want to comment this way. I know about the timetablings. I used to do them myself, and student enrollments and teacher retirements I've already commented on. But I want to correct one comment with respect to getting the money in August, as you said. No. In fact, I announced those dollars for the classroom on July 10, which is 10 days after the school year ended. It was as fast as I could get it out there and as fast as our caucus would approve it. We really did work hard to fast-track that, hon. member, so if it's some small consolation at least, you know that we got it out as quickly as we possibly could.

The 1 per cent increase in the base grant will help a great deal. That means a total increase of 4 per cent for the base grant rate alone right now, and that's a huge amount of dollars there. We are working very hard for this predictable, sustainable approach.

I think we've made some good progress toward that. Hopefully, we'll make more at tonight's vote, but it should set a good pattern for us. Let's not forget the fact, Mr. Chairman, that in terms of the new dollars that have been allocated for K to 12 education, the Learning Commission responses alone have necessitated a spending increase of approximately $600 million and climbing so far, just for responses to the Learning Commission. You know yourself that when you're dealing with up to 90, 95 recommendations, you can't throw every single one of them into the mix all at once, or the system will reverberate on you, perhaps negatively, and we don't want that. We're trying to deal with this huge influx of dollars in a very sustainable and efficient way because we want the system to be built on as solid a foundation going forward as possible so that we don't face any of those backlogs later. Hence, I appreciated your comment about the long-term planning that we're doing.

The specific schools you talked about: Lee Ridge, Wagner, the asbestos abatement there; J. Percy Page, the flooring, the sidewalks; Edith Rogers, Holy Trinity. Let me look into those along with Weinlos. The one, however, that I'm going to ask my staff to get on immediately in the morning ahead of all those is the Frère Antoine school that you mentioned, which I think you said is not wheelchair accessible. I'll have my staff follow up with the public school board. Is that the public school board there? That's the Catholic one. Sorry. I haven't been there for a long time. But that Frère Antoine one, if it's not wheelchair accessible, as you say, then perhaps some of the IMR dollars will help get that done or perhaps the PO and M dollars, both of which envelopes have been significantly increased. I wouldn't be surprised if they have it on their list already, but we'll check on that very quickly and try and get you an answer soon.

With that I will cede the floor to others. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by St. Albert.

10:00

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make some very brief comments on the Education budget. Certainly, I would like to acknowledge from the outset that these dollars are very much appreciated by K to 12 schools all across this province. We were really in a dire circumstance in terms of school-based budgeting and school board budgeting across this province. I think this money came in the nick of time, and I do want to acknowledge that.

That being said, however, I would also like to I guess have some reassurance that perhaps we could get the budgeting process through in a more timely manner or at least so that something like this doesn't happen again. As previous speakers have pointed out, there was a very disruptive process taking place right across the province, where school boards were compelled to serve notice to hundreds and hundreds of young probationary teachers. This creates a destabilizing effect on not just the schools individually but also on the entire profession. It sends a message that these very qualified people are somehow less valued or not as capable, perhaps, of maintaining a full-time job. Teachers, especially these probationary people who have otherwise exhibited tremendous skill and ability to get to that position, are somehow being devalued and made to question the very profession for which they've chosen to study.

I would like to get some assurance somehow – I know you're explaining the timing, Mr. Minister, and I appreciate that – to look for ways by which we can have the timing in place so that someone can leave their position in June and have a sense that they will continue back in the fall or not. This was the way that it had been over the last 18 years or so when I was teaching, and obviously something has changed and not for the better.

Another point that I wanted to bring forward here this evening is just information suggesting that there's a wider problem with parents meeting the school fees. This is something that I'm getting in my constituency office more and more. I can compare from last year and know that it's increasing. You know, it's this whole thing of charging extra fees for textbooks and for different programs, for options, but these are not really options because, of course, everyone does need a textbook, and everyone does need to fill up their timetable. Students going to elementary and to junior high and high school are seeing fees that can range from $100 to $400 or $500.

I have a survey of different schools here at different levels in Edmonton and Grande Prairie, and these fees, especially if you have more than one child in school, can be quite onerous given the other expenses that you will incur at the beginning of the school year. Again, I think this is something that I have seen increase quite dramatically over the time that I was a teacher and from the time that I, in fact, was a student. Obviously, we're downloading the cost of education onto the parents basically. This is not a way, at the very least, to encourage people to have children, and it is also discouraging and creating financial constraints and going against the spirit of public education in the broadest sense. Speaking out for my constituents, I would like to see some very specific attention addressed to increasing school fees over time, and I would also demand that we do in fact address that for the sake of public education in the most equal and accessible perspective that we can bring forward here from this Legislature.

Another comment that I wanted to make is that the Learning Commission's recommendation to establish junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten has again not been met. I know that the evidence is overwhelming that this indeed would improve the quality of education and the success rate for students throughout the rest of their public education up to grade 12. We know that other countries, in fact, do this. These are also countries that we often cite as being, you know, perhaps our intellectual competitors, who are in fact educating their students to a higher level or creating more students into the postsecondary level, and certainly full-day kindergarten has a lot to do with that.

The program that my colleague had pointed out, the inner-city school program that Edmonton public was funding and having difficulty funding, is a good reflection of that. Certainly, if we have something that works, then why don't we extend it to the wider population and increase their success rate as well? It's important when you're talking about that inner-city program – I think that the hon. minister is somewhat mistaken in that these are not people for special funding, that we're not putting them as special-needs students. These are students that require extra attention because of other circumstances, not the least of which being lower incomes. Certainly, a lower income is not a qualification for special needs. It's a wider issue that we are compelled to address here from this Legislature.

The whole issue of class sizes I think needs to be monitored in a more specific way. I know that certainly with higher grades and the class size situation, there's been little relief in that regard. In fact, quite the opposite. The 10, 11, and 12 classes are getting larger. I guess that it's a frustration I hear from high schools. I think it's a reflection again of perhaps the need for a more particular accounting mechanism for us in regard to measuring class size across the province. Certainly, I think that we have the imperative to look at that here through this Legislature as well.

Finally, last but not least – well, sorry; second last but not least there is the issue of the unfunded liability. I know that crosses over to the Finance department as well. I think it's a good thing that we are seeing this entering the public debate. In the leadership as well I'm happy to see it. It's a simple accounting issue, whether you're willing to come forward with $6 billion now or pay $46 billion later. I think the answer is obvious to all taxpayers, not just people whose pensions are being affected by this.

The very last issue I think that we need to stress – and I know that you will be having a commission in regard to this – is that our completion rates in this province are not acceptable. This problem is being exacerbated by the lure of jobs before students complete high school. I know that from being the product of a former generation that was in a boom and then a bust, you create a whole generation of people who have difficulty going back to education and completing their education or postsecondary education because they were lured into what seemed to be high-paying jobs in the oil patch. Now we're repeating that same scenario here 25 years later. I just loath to see the results of it, where you have undereducated people looking for other forms of work perhaps 10 years later, and it becomes a difficult problem, especially if the economy doesn't stay buoyant.

These are my concerns in regard to the Education budget. I'm delighted to see that there are some monies coming forward, but I think long-term planning and movement in some of these key areas that I pointed out would only help to make it even better.

Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I'll respond to the member in writing regarding his comments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

I guess we can move to the next department. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Advanced Education

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will try and adhere to our House leader's suggestion that we try and keep it down to about five minutes.

I'm pleased to have the opportunity to present the supplementary estimates request for Advanced Education. Advanced Education has one request, and it relates to cost escalation on approved capital projects that are currently under construction. There's not a lot of complexity with respect to what we're asking for. We're experiencing strong economic growth, and everything is going up in price. That's the reason we have to come back and ask for more money to finish projects that are already into the ground. The labour market with all of its benefits is having cost implications for our capital construction projects. This includes projects at our postsecondary institutions as well as education and health care facilities.

The supplementary estimate of $49.2 million that is requested for Advanced Education is to provide additional funding for five approved postsecondary capital projects that are currently under construction: $16 million for the Health Research Innovation Facility at the University of Alberta; $14 million for the Health and Research Innovation Centre at the University of Calgary; $10 million for the Sport and Wellness Centre at Keyano College in Fort McMurray, which will see improvements and expansion to the college recreational facilities as well; $6.5 million for the Robbins health learning centre at Grant MacEwan College in Edmonton, which will provide much-needed classroom and laboratory space for MacEwan's nursing and health sciences programs that have just recently been approved; and $2.7 million for expansion of the Cold Lake campus Portage College.

I'd also like to note that it's expected that costs for capital projects will continue to escalate throughout this booming economic period, but my officials are working closely with counterparts in Infrastructure and Transportation to monitor capital cost increases and will be paying close attention to this.

This concludes my remarks, and I would be pleased to address questions on the supplementary estimates. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and debate the estimates for supplementary supply for the Advanced Education department. The minister was brief. I will try and be brief as well because, of course, we have a great deal of ground to cover and a very short time in which to cover it if we're to get through all the departments asking for extra money tonight. Well, who am I kidding? We're not going to get through all the departments. We didn't set aside enough time. There's no possible way. I would have loved to have gotten involved in the discussion of the estimates for the Department of Education, but I leave it to my colleagues to ask as many of those questions as possible because we do have to move on.

You know, over the course of the summer the Taylor family has been building a new garage, a garage that we've been putting off building since we moved into the house 20 years ago, a garage that was supposed to be the first project after we moved in except the first project turned out to be the birth of our first-born and you know what that does to the construction budget when the budget for Pampers and things like that comes in.

I noted this summer, though, that had I gone ahead with that plan to build that garage 20 years ago, I could have built the whole garage for what it cost me to pour the concrete this summer, so I do understand what this minister is saying and what other ministers will say over the course of the debate for supplementary supply over the next few days about cost escalation. Both in terms of labour and in terms of materials it is fairly astounding. The Minister of Advanced Education really is looking for about 18 per cent more money than he budgeted for, and that's not far off the mark of what we're told is the cost escalation in the construction business in the province of Alberta these days. So in broad, general terms, no complaints here.

I thank the minister for his breakout of how this $49.2 million is proposed to be spent. I have no particular questions in that area. But I do have some questions, and I don't expect any answers from the minister tonight on this because I know that he shares my view that we need to move this process along, and he's very good about replying in writing, so I'll anticipate his answers in future to as many of these questions as possible.

Let me, though, run through this quickly. I guess question one is: given the way the numbers have bounced around for postsecondary education infrastructure budgets over the course of the last couple of years both in terms of budgeting and projections three years down the road – and I ask this uncritically; I ask this for information – can the minister provide any kind of assurances to what we can anticipate in the next two budget years? I mean, the budget has gone up by nearly $50 million over the course of this budget year. Does the minister anticipate that the same thing is going to happen next year and the year after? I'm getting a little bit to what the plan will be and how you plan in this kind of escalating cost environment, that we're all dealing with in one form or another.

I have a few other areas of interest as well that do not specifically relate to the dollars that we're talking about here but which will relate to dollars that we will need to talk about in fairly short order, I would hope, but in the months and years to come. So I'll hit the minister with a few questions if I could. Given that in just one year the budget for SAIT's new apprenticeship centre went up by something like $55 million, or 18 per cent, should the Legislature get used to this kind of budget? Whether they be supplementary dollars or budgeted dollars, when will we be seeing some hard funding beyond the sort of million dollars to cover the very basic start-up costs, I guess, for SAIT's new apprenticeship centre? I ask this question, obviously, because – and I know that the minister shares my view – it is vital that we turn out more apprentices in this province. SAIT is on record as saying that they expect the government to fund 81 per cent of the project. Will the minister commit to funding at least this amount? Can he?

ACAD, the Alberta College of Art and Design, is in need of a new downtown facility to meet enrolment demand and to support a dynamic, culturally diverse downtown core in the city of Calgary. I'm curious as to whether the minister is supportive of this project. I'm curious as to where he stands on support for the new NAIT/Northern Lakes College apprenticeship facility in Grande Prairie. I'm curious as to when we might expect to see some financial support to the new community learning campus at Olds College, the expansion of Bow Valley College in Calgary, the new digital library, the veterinary school at the U of C, the whole Campus Calgary concept, which I think is still alive, although I'm not sure that it's not on some degree of life support these days.

The University of Calgary as part of that wants to create 7,000 new spaces by 2010. Given what the minister is seeing happening to cost escalation, given what the minister is seeing happening to the infrastructure budgets bouncing around somewhat, can the minister offer any assurance that the U of C, the University of Calgary, will be able to meet that goal of 7,000 new spaces by 2010?

The U of A has an ambitious expansion plan to help the government fulfill its access promises. I know, again, that this is not part of this particular supplementary supply, but I'm wondering if the minister could provide an update to the Assembly on whether he's supportive of the University of Alberta's effort to increase enrolment to 50,000 by the year 2020. Has he committed to providing funding for any particular parts of this initiative?

What specific other projects on Alberta campuses is the minister committed to getting done over the next three years? This, I think, does potentially get back to some of the dollars we're talking about tonight. Can he provide specific estimates on how many additional spaces each of these projects will support and some timelines, too, specific timelines for increasing capacity in medical schools, in nursing programs, and other health-related fields over the next few years because as we all know – and I'll use once again the city of Calgary as an example – the city of Calgary is short hospital beds.

The Calgary health region has in place a plan to alleviate that shortage through the construction of new hospital facilities, but it won't be completed until the year 2010. The city of Calgary is fated to be short of hospital beds until 2010-2011. But even in this context of today's labour shortages and escalating costs, even if you could speed up the construction of those hospital facilities, you probably couldn't do much about filling the buildings with patients because you have doctors and nurses and other health care professionals to hire to staff those facilities.

We are short of doctors. We are short of nurses and other health care professionals. We need to churn out more, and I'm taking this opportunity to put this question to the minister although, again, it's not directly related. I wonder if the minister can offer us some timelines for increasing capacities so that we can graduate more doctors, more nurses, more health care professionals wherever they're needed over the course of the next few years.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I offer the minister the opportunity to reply to any or all of those questions in writing if we want to move this process along, and I thank the House for this opportunity tonight.

Mr. Herard: Just very briefly, and I will take the opportunity to provide as much information as I can in writing. As a general principle what I have looked at is that all of our institutions and boards have a number one priority project. Essentially, what I try and do is make sure that all of the number one priority projects are prioritized in such a way that depending on how many capital dollars, how far down the list I can go, I will effect as many number one priority projects around the entire province as I can. So that's sort of the basic principle in how I look at this because, quite frankly, every single one of our institutions has priority projects that they want to try and achieve for very good reason.

There are a number of projects that you mentioned that are really good ideas, but I don't have anything solid yet to analyze. You know, for example, that there isn't a good business plan in place; maybe some of the partners have moved away from the proposals. Anyway, we don't have something solid to evaluate yet. Everything that we've got in the hopper today has been analyzed and prioritized primarily to make sure that we distribute this throughout the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will also try and be brief and thank the minister for his introductory comments and then a few observations in response to those he just finished making. The $49.2 million in supplementary estimates that he is requesting the House to approve is related to the five projects that he mentioned. He's given us a breakdown, and I want to thank him for this: the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, Keyano College, Grant MacEwan College, and Portage College in Cold Lake, five of these projects. The increase that the $49 million represents over the $273,143,000 that was approved in the 2006-2007 budget barely three months ago, in May, is 18 per cent, yes, but are these monies being requested for the high-priority projects for just these five institutions? Are there some other institutions which had also asked for money and didn't get it?

The second question that I have is that it's only taken about three months for the minister to come back and ask for an 18 per cent increase over the funds provided in the initial budget. We have yet, I think, seven months remaining for the 2006-2007 budget going forward. Does he expect to have to come back, whenever the time permits, for more money in the face of the cost escalation that everyone recognizes is a problem for these five projects? That's what I'm asking.

A related question is: when are these five particular projects likely to be completed? Are they likely to be completed in the next few months, or are they going to be completed in the next two years? If the latter is the case, then can he say with confidence that it's the last time he'll be coming back to the Legislature for additional funds for the completion of these five projects?

I am concerned, in the context of rapidly increasing costs, with the way we are doing the budgeting. Either we have to abandon the old way in which the budgeting was done and concede that that is inappropriate and bring forward an open-ended budget and tell the Legislature that we may have to come back every three months or five months given the context of cost escalation or if you're going to be taken seriously on the annual budget just passed in the spring session, then you say that we'll find better ways of estimating the cost-escalation factor and build into the budget numbers that are presented to the House in March or April, at that time.

So there is some sort of difficulty here that I sense, and I sympathize with the minister and other ministers too. If it is, in fact, the case that there is a cost-escalation factor that is almost running not out of control but certainly somewhat wildly, then how does this House approach the request that it may receive, as it's receiving now, and hope that this is the last time that the minister or the ministry or the department is going to come back within this current budget year for more money? It is a cause for concern. I think that it does raise questions about budgeting procedures and budgeting practices. The circumstances have changed. Is some consideration being given to how to budget for this? Those are some of the questions for the minister.

I'm curious that these five projects with five different institutions are the only ones for which additional money is being asked. I wonder if this initial budgeted amount, $273,143,000, was dedicated for only these five projects. Are there other projects that are also covered by that initial 273 million plus dollars? If there are more projects that were covered by the $273,143,000 than just these five projects, then how is it that there is obviously no need for the minister to ask for additional funds for the completion of other projects, which are, I would say, outside the list of these five. In other words, are there 10 projects, in fact, that are going on now, which are funded by this $243 million? If so, why is it only these five which require additional funds and not others?

The minister may have answers to all of these questions. I hope I made my questions more or less clear. Otherwise, he'll come back to me and ask for clarification. With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down and see if the minister would want to respond.

Mr. Herard: I will deal with those questions in writing. Thank you very much for your questions.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development on behalf.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be here this evening on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on the supplementary estimates request for that department. I think it's important to acknowledge the earlier debate that we had this evening when the hon. Member for Highwood brought forward some of the challenges that the agricultural industry has. This Assembly certainly well knows those challenges because many of those challenges were talked about during that earlier debate. They talked of everything from disease to border closures, drought, having to deal with low commodity prices, and certainly the ever-increasing input costs. Alberta agricultural producers and processors have faced a great many of those challenges that we have mentioned.

As a government we continue to stand by this industry. It is an important industry to the province of Alberta. So, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the 2006-2007 supplementary estimate for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is $270.8 million.

I'd just like to take a moment and outline the main components of these estimates. The supplementary estimate provides $261 million in disaster funding relief to agricultural producers through the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program. Given the challenges our farmers are facing, this disaster declaration and resulting funds represent government's commitment to support farmers who face escalating input costs at a crucial time of year with the upcoming harvest season.

In addition to the disaster relief funding $4.8 million was put towards infrastructure assistance for municipal waste water to support a project in the municipal district of Rocky View. The funding will support the municipal waste water cost for the agricultural portion of the construction of a horse-racing track and equine centre. That's for the agricultural portion of that centre. Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's total commitment of $8.3 million is particularly offset by other savings in the municipal waste water program.

Another $5 million was dedicated to bioenergy development in Alberta, including support for the bioenergy commercialization and market development program, and the delivery of the bioenergy infrastructure assistance program. Both of these will help place Alberta at the forefront of the emerging bioenergy sector and could contribute to long-term sustainable growth in this province.

That concludes my explanation on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and their request on the supplementary estimates. I'm sure that the hon. members opposite will have some questions, and I will advise the hon. members that the minister or his staff will respond to those questions in writing following review of tonight's Hansard and make the answers available to the hon. members.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I just wanted to make a couple of brief comments in regard to the agriculture estimates. The first issue that I think needs to be addressed is the way that the farm-aid deal is assessed because, in fact, the way that it's being referenced – right? – is using the 2004 margins in order to establish peoples' rebates. However, we know that 2005 and 2006, this year, is when we've seen a serious increase in farm costs, especially in regard to fuel and petroleum-related inputs, fertilizer and whatnot, and I'm putting this forward, of course, for the minister to catch later. Changing those parameters by which the farm aid is assessed for individuals for the different year I think would make a big difference to being more realistic to just how fast the prices have been going up here in the last 18 months or so.

As well, I'm curious to ask about the Choice Matters campaign, how much of the budget and supplements are going into the funding of this program from the agriculture ministry, and I'm just wondering about the appropriateness of that choice of funding for this advertising campaign. You know, I have difficulty seeing the relevance of the province of Alberta being in this debate in the way that they are because, of course, it is a federal issue. It's a very controversial issue as well because when you do take a piece out of a monopolistic board, as the Wheat Board is, then you are risking the deflation of prices across the whole board. So I hope that this is being considered when the agriculture minister, in fact, weighs in on this issue.

Those are my two points that I wanted to bring forward, and I know that my first point particularly, in regard to the base lines for farm aids, is reflected by other groups. The Wild Rose Agricultural Producers association, among others, has expressed this as a pressing need from farmers across the province.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this evening on Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Before this session started, it was interesting to follow the department. I don't know how much public relations were devised by the Public Affairs Bureau, but certainly it was with interest when the news came out that $261 million was being set aside for farmers. I read with interest the previous day where the order in council had been initiated. I believe it was the 17th of August, Mr. Chairman, that this provincial government declared that a natural disaster exists in the nature of an agricultural economic hardship with respect to the 2006-07 fiscal year.

Now, there are a number of reasons, of course, for that. A lot of this was articulated in question period today. I listened earlier to the hon. Minister of Finance, and on first blush I'd have to say, Mr. Chairman, that I don't think the hon. minister has really given up the portfolio of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I would have to say that she seems very capable of handling that department. She's certainly familiar with all the programs in there. But we see the increasing production costs and the falling crop prices. We talk to farmers almost daily on this side of the House. They talk about fuel prices. They talk about fertilizer costs. Farm gate incomes we know are falling. There are significant problems. The only fortunate thing we have right now is the fact that so many people can work off-farm in the robust energy sector.

We asked questions during the budget estimates this past spring. This side of the House asked if we could have an increase in the farm fuel benefit allowance. That hadn't been adjusted for a number of years. It needed an adjustment to reflect this significant fuel increase. Nothing was done. We asked about fertilizer costs. There was a nod from the minister, but again nothing was done.

Now we find ourselves in this situation where funding will be provided through the CAIS program based on the 2004 claim year. The hon. Minister of Finance gave a detailed answer in question period, which I referred to earlier, but I'm not so sure that we should be using the 2004 claim year. Producers who participated in CAIS in 2004 will automatically have their claims processed, as I understand it, but now in other adjustments that have been made to the CAIS program, we have found that there have been significant overpayments.

Mr. Lund: How did that happen?

Mr. MacDonald: How did that happen? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation asks: how did those overpayments in the CAIS program happen? Well, in the November 2004 election this government was so anxious to shore up its deteriorating support in rural Alberta that it quickly went through all these claims, hastily cut the cheques, and got themselves re-elected. But now, 18 months later, they're asking from some of those farmers up to $80 million back. The farmers that have contacted this side of the House see through that. That's exactly what happened.

My point with this is: can we be assured that this won't happen again with the CAIS program? There are some files that I have seen where there is in excess of $45,000. There's a beef producer north of town here. I think he's got over $70,000 in overpayment. It's not a laughing matter. It is certainly not a laughing matter. You know, the hon. minister can chuckle and grin, but it is certainly for many farmers not a laughing matter.

We'll have to be very careful. We'll have to watch this. The hon. Minister of Finance spoke earlier about the 2004 claim year, that reference margins will be increased by 25 per cent for fuel and fertilizer costs, and there will be a general reference margin increase of 15 per cent. Now, by targeting the producers with the most need, about 60 per cent of the 2004 CAIS participants will receive the funding. Funds are expected to reach farmers this fall regardless of whether there's an election or not. There's a leadership race over there but no provincial election. I suspect that that's going to come during breakup next year, next spring.

Funds are expected to reach farmers this fall and are intended to provide support from now until when the disaster component of CAIS is developed. I wonder if the government has ever considered having a separate disaster relief fund. Let's set aside some money for a separate disaster relief fund. That was one of the past ways of dealing with these disasters but not currently. If the government has considered that, I would be interested to hear about it.

Now, the $4.8 million infrastructure assistance for municipal wastewater. Can the minister provide us with some details on this particular need? Why was the need not anticipated? Are there specific jurisdictions that this money will be targeted for? What led to this problem, and why wasn't it prevented? Certainly, there is interest in this.

The $5 million bioindustrial technologies: will the minister provide us with some details on this particular need? How exactly will this additional money be used? Are there specific initiatives that this money will be dedicated to? Why did the minister not recognize the need for this money when the budget was drawn up? Now, hopefully this will be dealt with.

I also have some other questions regarding the CAIS program. We talked about this a little earlier, specifically: why didn't the minister anticipate the need for the disaster program when we were doing the budget just this past spring? Conditions haven't changed that much. Why, again, has this government allowed the situation with farm incomes to reach a crisis? There seems to be a concern amongst farmers that the process that is being used for distributing this money is flawed. We talked about this earlier. I'm sure the government is hearing the same questions because of the question that the Minister of Finance directed today. Is the minister concerned that by using 2004 as the claim year, the increase of costs in 2005 and 2006 will not be adequately addressed? How does the minister plan on ensuring that farmers who were not significantly impacted in 2004 but who suffered greatly in 2005 and again this year, 2006 – how will they receive any additional funds?

The order in council that I spoke about earlier – and this is in conclusion, Mr. Chairman – states that this disaster is a result of many things, including “limited market access.” Will the minister elaborate on this point briefly, please? Is it the minister’s position that the further opening up of the market would prevent such disasters in the future?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Environment

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m very pleased here tonight to talk very briefly about what Alberta Environment is doing. Alberta Environment is requesting a supplementary amount for Water for Life, for grant payments under the waste management assistance program of $3.7 million; $2.7 million for the grant payment under Alberta water management and erosion control. As well, I want to say today that that’s why my ministry is requesting $11.4 million, because of the most progressive strategy pertaining to Water for Life in this province. So, Mr. Chairman, I move the $11.4 million as priorities for Water for Life and important environmental initiatives.

I also want to say that $2.4 million of the funding is allocated to the energy innovation fund to detail groundwater inventory mapping and management models, which are very important. As has been mentioned in the past, groundwater mapping will support planning for coal-bed methane development. Industry, municipalities, and communities all have a role to play. Understanding our groundwater is how we can best protect its integral part in the livelihood and longevity of this province, and of course this is a key principle of our Water for Life.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Mr. Minister, for sharing some of the thinking behind the new allocations requested. I guess that in general terms this is an important investment given the grossly underfunded budget of this ministry, so one cannot but applaud added investment into some of these vital issues for Albertans. Unfortunately, our environment has been a major casualty in the uncontrolled growth in this province, and it will continue to be a great concern to Albertans and certainly to us on this side of the House as we try to get a handle on just what sustainable smart growth is as opposed to uncontrolled growth at the whim of business.

As indicated, a good part of the $11.4 million has to do with water infrastructure, and that, I’m sure, is vital and just less than half of the money going into water mapping. I would very much appreciate knowing from the minister what water mapping has been done, where we are in terms of mapping in the province, and how we are monitoring the groundwater mapping to date. I think something that all of us need to be able to have a stronger handle on is: “Where are we? What needs to be done? When will this be complete?”

The Horseshoe Canyon is obviously the big play for coal-bed methane and a great concern for people around the province. It’s not clear to me to what extent the Horseshoe Canyon has been mapped and to what extent we understand why changes that have occurred there are occurring as a result of resource activity or other factors. So I think we need to know something about where this is taking us and how much more is going to be needed because this is clearly a priority for Albertans. A better handle on groundwater mapping is absolutely vital.

“Will these data be publicly accessible?” is another important issue. Many landowners have asked questions that I think are reasonable, and many of us could reduce some of the demands on the department if we had more information about the known elements of the groundwater inventory.

What about the observation wells and the groundwater monitoring wells? There are over 200 monitoring wells in the province, and on the basis of the amount of activity in the province, clearly not enough, and no gas monitoring in these monitoring wells. This doesn’t make sense, and I hope this can be addressed at some level so we can get some sense of the extent to which gas is migrating into groundwater. We still don’t know despite some testing in the hamlet of Rosebud, and the indications are very much that the gas is migrating from cumulative impacts across this province in resource activity. We need an objective comment. We need objective science and a public process to restore confidence that we understand the extent to which our groundwater has been damaged and how much of it is natural.

Finally, it’s applaudable that we’re going to do some more oil sands assessment. Clearly, that’s an important role that we have to give more science to. I think and I hope industry is spending a lot on this as well.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2006-07 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, but pursuant to Standing Order 61(1), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration of estimates, and pursuant to Government Motion 25, agreed to on August 24, 2006, I must now put the following question. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions not yet voted upon related to the 2006-2007 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports as follows.

All resolutions relating to the 2006-2007 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund have been approved.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $715,000.

Advanced Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $49,200,000.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $270,800,000.

Community Development: nonbudgetary disbursements, $15,537,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $20,356,000.

Solicitor General and Public Security: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $4,000,000; capital investment $9,600,000.

Sustainable Resource Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $251,503,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now that the supplementary supply has been voted on and based on previous discussion with all opposition party House leaders or such representatives regarding the need to revert to the introduction of bills, I will seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to in fact revert to Introduction of Bills so that we can do first reading of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head:

Introduction of Bills

Bill 44 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I would request leave to introduce Bill 44, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2). This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a first time]

head:

Government Motions

Adjournment of Session

26. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the summer sitting of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, oral notice having been given last week by myself, I now move the above motion, which, as I understand it, is not debatable. All members have been apprised through their House leaders or such representatives regarding this matter as well.

[Government Motion 26 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for participating in tonight's debate and for their comments and questions, which will be responded to. That being the case and in view of the hour, I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, August 29, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/08/29
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce two sets of guests. I'll ask them to stand as I mention their name: Lorna Chandler from Black Diamond and her children Josh Chandler, who is 8, and Jada Chandler, 4, the widow and children of a farm worker killed in June of this year; Patricia Williams, her sister, and her daughter Raylean Williams and grandma Rita Williams. With them are Darlene Dunlop and Eric Musekamp from the farm workers union of Alberta. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Secondly, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly Kathryn Andrusky, president of the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta, and Sarah Thomas of the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta. They're concerned about attracting more doctors to Alberta through the promised Alberta Learning approval of debt deferral and interest-free status till the end of residency. Let's give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this esteemed Assembly two sets of introductions. The first one is Jacquie Lycka, an 18-year-old friend who is my STEP student at the Edmonton-McClung constituency office. Jacquie is attending Grant MacEwan in the fall, majoring in political science for her BA, and we're hoping that she's being groomed to be the next Liberal MLA for Edmonton-McClung. She has absolutely loved working in the constituency office, and today she is here watching me put on my other hat as a legislator. I hope she learns, and I hope she enjoys her stay. I would invite her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is my sister Amina Elsalhy, who is just back from her honeymoon, and she is accompanied by her husband, Moamen Nomeir. Again, they're watching me do my work as an honoured member of this esteemed Assembly. Today, incidentally, is Moamen's birthday, so I wish him a happy birthday. I would invite all our colleagues here to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As is so often the case at this time of year, late summer brings a number of comings and goings in the caucus office of the Official Opposition. I would like to make some introductions today, if I could, the first being Jodie Gauthier, who is a research analyst with the Alberta Liberal caucus and the newest member of our team. Jodie was born and raised in High Prairie, Alberta, and recently completed a combined honours degree in political science and women's studies at the University of Alberta. Jodie would like to add that she supports same-sex marriage and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in general.

John Hanley has been a tremendous addition to our administrative team this summer as a correspondence assistant. John is a fourth-year political student at the U of A and will be completing his bachelor of arts degree this fall. He has worked previously as a radio broadcaster, a computer programmer, and a writer. John is excited about making his contribution to Alberta's democratic system by working in the Legislative Assembly. Unfortunately, he's leaving us on Friday to go back to school, so we would like to thank him and wish him continued success in the future.

Sarah FitzGibbon joined us this summer as part of our administrative team. She has done a phenomenal job and has been instrumental in cataloguing and reorganizing our library. Sarah will be starting her first semester at the University of Alberta in September in the sciences and hopes to continue on to medicine in the future. She is a bright young woman, Mr. Speaker, and we're sure that she will achieve great things.

Finally, Christel Hyshka has been with us as a STEP student, and she's done fabulous work supporting our outreach program. Christel completed her undergraduate degree at the U of A and is now off to Carleton University in Ottawa to begin her master's degree in Canadian politics. Christel plans to return to Alberta to work in the public sector and is particularly interested in issues surrounding democracy and civic engagement. She will be leaving us tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and we would like to thank her as well and wish her every success.

I would ask all four of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Del Marlow. Del is the program manager with Elizabeth House in the Alberta Avenue neighbourhood of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Del has worked in Edmonton's nonprofit sector for 14 years and has been with E4C's Elizabeth House facility for women in transition from homelessness for two and a half years. Elizabeth House provides a warm and safe home environment for women making the next step from emergency housing to independent living. Elizabeth House and E4C recently held a turn up the light on homelessness community event to break down some of the myths about homelessness and to foster relationships with the general community. Del Marlow is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to this Assembly two guests today: Samantha Power and Andrea Enes. Samantha was elected president of the University of Alberta Students' Union for this year. She has been a tireless advocate for students over a number of years and is here today to encourage the government to make postsecondary education a real priority.

Andrea Enes was recently hired by the students' union as the external officer for the advocacy department. Andrea has also been involved in the community on a number of fronts, including a number of social justice causes.

I would now ask both of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce three students from the University of Alberta who are here to observe the goings-on in the House this afternoon and also to advocate for reduced debt loads for students in postsecondary education. They are – and if you would rise as I call your name, please – David Cournoyer, VP external for the University of Alberta Students' Union and chair this year of the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS; Jessica King, U of A political science student and campus campaigns co-ordinator for the U of A Students' Union advocacy department; and Dane Bullerwell, a first-year U of A law student. If you could all please give them the warm traditional welcome of the House.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Planning for Growth Pressures

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta cities and towns are facing massive growth pressures. You know, quite frankly, without a plan to deal with the challenges to infrastructure, schools, hospitals, and community services, our communities will be left wondering where the Alberta advantage went. Yesterday in this House the Minister of Human Resources and Employment stated that only Liberals "would start thinking what may happen down the road." Precisely. To the Premier: does the Premier have any vision whatsoever or, indeed, even any interest in what kind of Alberta our children will inherit, or in his world is it just about he who dies with the most toys wins?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the allegation that this government has no plan to meet massive growth pressures is blarney. It is hocus-pocus. It is Liberal hocus-pocus. The challenge, as always, is finding a balance. We are well aware of the pressures in the Wood Buffalo region and other regions of this province where phenomenal growth is taking place. At the same time, we don't want to negatively impact the livelihood of thousands of people, literally thousands upon thousands who are directly or indirectly employed by the oil industry, that would be affected by the Liberals interfering in the market.

Now, we will consult with Albertans and stakeholders about oil sands development this fall. As a matter of fact, there is a process and a stakeholders committee set up to do precisely that. In addition, we have formed an oil sands ministerial committee to examine everything from infrastructure requirements to socioeconomic pressures in the areas involved, and that committee will report back to government before the end of the year. The chair of the committee is the hon. Justice minister, and he may want to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All that consulting doesn't sound like there's a plan yet.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that previous governments in Alberta had legislation in place to deal with extraordinary urban growth pressures in boom times, will the minister commit to bringing back that legislation, that was repealed in 1994 when the existing Municipal Government Act was brought in?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, when the existing Municipal Government Act was brought in, it replaced a number of pieces of legislation, and the legislation the member refers to was one of them. That being said, it doesn't mean that because the act is no longer there, the municipalities do not have the ability to deal with issues under the existing legislation. So the answer to the question is no.

Mr. Taylor: Well, having the ability to deal with it is something that we can't readily see any evidence of these days.

Again to the minister: given that counties and MDs often have the tax base, the money, and cities and towns have the population and the infrastructure pressures, the expenses, how does the minister propose to resolve this fiscal imbalance? Or should, for instance, Cold Lake just annex half the MD of Bonnyville in an effort to solve its problems?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's very timely that the member would ask that question because tomorrow afternoon I will again be welcoming to the Legislature members of the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability as we continue our ongoing dialogue to deal with just exactly what the member refers to.

Municipalities largely are dependent upon an inelastic form of taxation: property tax. That's very good in slow times; it seems not to be as effective in boom times. On the other hand, the province has a very elastic form of tax revenue, that provides good sources of revenue in times like we are in now, but frankly, Mr. Speaker, when the economic boom takes a downturn, our revenue can literally go to zero from a significant number. So the minister's council is exploring ways that we can look at what the responsibilities of municipalities are and what the opportunities are for them to garner revenue. Then we'll determine how we should distribute those various revenue alternatives.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lots of talk. We're still waiting for the action.

Despite this government's unshakable faith in the ability of the market to solve every problem known to humankind, the market has clearly failed to resolve the affordable housing crisis in Alberta. In fact, the government's hands-off approach has exacerbated the problem, with skyrocketing rents and a near zero inventory of reasonably priced housing. My first question is to the Premier. What is this government going to do, in real terms for real people, to build affordable housing or cause it to be built? The market isn't doing it on its own, and it's hard to be patient when you're living in a trailer.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as with all matters affecting growth, we see this as a challenge, and striking the right balance is the key. The hon. member is right; we don't want to interfere in the marketplace. But we do understand the severity of the problem.

Perhaps the minister responsible for housing might want to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we have been planning through this ministry for about four years now along with the federal government. Working with our counterparts, we have the Canada affordable housing program, which I've mentioned to you before. Over the past four years we have put $100 million from Alberta, $100 million from the federal government – $200 million, $50 million per year – developed 3100 units, houses, in the past four years. We are continuing it this year with another $44 million. And that's just the housing component.

An Hon. Member: It's not working.

Mrs. Fritz: It is so working, and well.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we're not keeping up with the demand. To the Minister of Government Services: does the minister consider that any increase in rent is fair and reasonable regardless of whether it's 3 per cent, 30 per cent, 300 per cent? At what point do market-driven rent increases become rent gouging?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Fair Trading Act we do watch this very, very carefully to make sure that the rents can only be increased twice a year.

Further to the question that the hon. member had previously, saying that private enterprise is not stepping up, that's absolutely wrong: 49,000 units are being built this year by the private sector here in Alberta.

Mr. Taylor: How many of them are priced over $400,000?

To the Minister of Advanced Education: has the minister begun to calculate how much the high cost of off-campus housing is going to add to students' debt loads when they return to school next week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much. As you know, we are looking at the entire affordability framework with respect to postsecondary, not just tuition, which happens to be sort of the iceberg. It's what lies below the water that seems to cost an awful lot. Housing and transportation, particularly for those who, in fact, have to move away from rural Alberta to find housing in our urban centres, is a big problem. We are looking for new solutions, and within the next few weeks I'm sure that the hon. member will be pleased with what we come up with.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Siting of Calgary Halfway House

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Halfway houses are a necessary part of the justice system. They facilitate the release of paroled prisoners back into the community. Without halfway houses prisoners would simply be released into communities with no controls or treatments after parole. This is obviously not in the interests of public safety. Our Solicitor General, our top cop, seems to believe: "Fine. Build your halfway house, just not in my backyard. This is someone else's problem." My question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given that the minister has made public statements threatening to withhold funding from an agency if they proceed to put a halfway house in his riding, is it the minister's policy, is it the government's policy to negotiate through intimidation?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong. The issue that we have here is a halfway house. The John Howard Society does provide a very good service to offenders that are released. The issue that we have – and it just happens to be in my riding – is the fact that we're going to have pedophiles that are two blocks from junior high schools and elementary schools. The issue isn't NIMBY, not in my back yard. The issue is: what should be the proximity of a school, an elementary school, where we have kids that have English as their second language, kids that are most vulnerable in our society that are going to have to walk right by and right in front of this facility on their way to school, knowing that there are pedophiles inside that would be very happy to sexually assault those kids? We're here and this government is here to protect the children in this province. We'll do what we have to, and it doesn't matter what riding it's in, if it's my riding or Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the pedophile issue is not the issue here.

Has the minister consulted the research? Across Canada such halfway houses do not contribute to an increase in crime and do not contribute to a decrease in property values.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been studies that have been done on halfway houses. There has been, in fact, a study on one halfway house that was in the Glamorgan area, in the southwest portion of Calgary, where the crime rate was noticeably higher than in other sectors of the city of Calgary. So I'm not sure where the member is getting some of his information. But I can assure you of this: it doesn't matter in which riding this would happen, if it was in Edmonton-Glenora or in Edmonton-Castle Downs. It's the issue of where we're going to be placing these and the issue of ensuring the safety of residents. I can tell you this: the safety of our kids is uppermost in this government's mind, and we're going to pursue that. We'll assist the John Howard Society in looking for a new location that isn't two blocks from an elementary school.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is this: is the minister willing to work with the John Howard Society and help them out? Where is the evidence that he is willing to help them find a suitable location? If not in his riding, what riding?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with both the provincial association and the association in Calgary in looking at other options for them. I have also worked with the two communities that are very affected by this issue, the community of Scarboro and the community of Sunalta, and will continue to work with them. The John Howard Society has gone forward in their development application. It's before city council right now. There has been an appeal by the community, and there will be further appeals as well. The communities have hired a lawyer because they don't want this facility in their community. There are four other agencies in this community that are providing services of that similar type. The communities are saying: "We don't need one more in our community. We have four already. Is there not another location in the city of Calgary or outside the city of Calgary or in another community where the John Howard Society can provide this same service?"

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta lags behind other jurisdictions which require public disclosure of all donations in a leadership contest for a registered political party. Tory leadership hopefuls are raising and spending millions of dollars, much of it coming, no doubt, from big business. Given that the winner of this race will automatically be the Premier of Alberta at least until the next election, it is unacceptable that the public is being kept in the dark about who is paying the piper. To the Deputy Premier: will the government take action to ensure that all donations to the Tory leadership candidates are publicly disclosed, and if not, why not?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, our rules clearly – clearly – prohibit questions dealing with political party matters being raised in the Assembly, and the question in particular asks the government to deal with the activities of a political party. That question is not in order, hon. member, under our rules.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Mr. Mason: This is a matter of government policy and very important public policy. It's been legislated in other jurisdictions in this country. So I will ask the Deputy Premier if this government is prepared to table legislation in this House to regulate the financing of leadership campaigns, including but not limited to the current race for the Progressive Conservative Party.

The Speaker: The question is a bit broader in the sense that it includes everything, and it has nothing to do with one particular party. If the hon. Deputy Premier wants to, proceed, please.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer, of course, in this province is an officer of the Legislature, but frankly I think that the question in this area would be more appropriately directed to our Minister of Justice.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My memory is that we do in fact have a legislative committee which addresses issues surrounding, in general terms, elections and election financing and whatnot. It's an all-party committee. I know that there are members of the Liberal opposition on that committee, and indeed my memory is that one of the members from the ND third party is on that committee.

The Chief Electoral Officer after the last election and, indeed, after all of the elections since our Premier became Premier of this province has prepared reports that have gone to that particular committee, including recommendations with respect to amendments to the Election Act and to the election financing act. There has been a discussion with respect to those matters after each of those three elections, and indeed the material has gone before that committee in this particular session.

Now, I know as a matter of fact that there have been recommendations made, and I know that there has been no discussion put forward by the ND or by the Official Opposition with respect to this particular matter. From my perspective, that is the appropriate place to raise that. There is a legislative committee, and to date there has been absolutely no interest expressed by this member, his party, or any other party with respect to this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will this government take responsibility to introduce legislation in this House, where it should be discussed, that places limits on the enormous campaign contributions that the Conservative candidates are receiving? When will this government deal with the issue?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. member, the second question dealt with everything. The third question now goes back to dealing with one particular political party. I ruled the first question out of order. I'm going to rule the third question out of order.

We're now going to go to the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish the opposition had been as interested in discussion yesterday. [interjections]

The Speaker: I recognized the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View. Please proceed.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is one of the few provinces in Canada that does not include farm workers under provincial labour law. In June in Foothills-Rocky View we lost an important member of the community in Black Diamond, Mr. Kevan Chandler, in a farm accident. Many of my constituents and the friends and family of Kevan Chandler are wondering why Alberta does not include farm workers under our labour law. Also, I know that my friend and colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose has had this issue raised with him. My first question is to the minister of human resources. Why are farm workers not covered in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question because, no doubt, any time there is a fatality in any industry in Alberta, we are concerned. Our target is not to have any fatalities at all. I understand from Alberta Agriculture that the majority of farms in Alberta continue to be family farms, and with families living and working together, they require unique operational needs. Of course, you know that that whole industry is faced with so many challenges.

Farm workers do have some coverage under the Employment Standards Code. They are covered for payment of wages, termination notices, and parental leave. Farmers are among the over 200 industry groups which may voluntarily purchase workers' compensation coverage, Mr. Speaker. That is, of course, available. We do have the cheapest workers' compensation rates in the country. Workers in all sectors are encouraged to find out what injury insurance coverage is provided through their employers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My next question is for the Acting Minister of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What steps is the government taking to make farm workers safer?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody can be complacent when it comes to human life, and there's no question that we take farm safety very seriously. Many of us, including this member, live with our families on farms and face this issue every day. Our ultimate goal is to prevent all accidents and fatalities on farms in Alberta. We are doing a lot of work through adopting best practices, identifying hazards, managing risk, those things.

There's an exceptional CD called Farm Safety: It's No Accident! that is available. It's a free training tool. It includes checklists and the dos and don'ts of farm safety. We have farm workers that participate in trade shows where there are examples.

One of the best examples that I've personally seen work, Mr. Speaker, was the program that worked with schoolchildren. If any of you that live on a farm have been involved with this, when your child has been through that program, they come home and have been instructed to very clearly and very respectfully inform parents where there are risks, whether it's around power lines or moving machinery, and so on.

It is a tragedy in any industry when there is an accident, especially one that takes a life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My last question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Are there any plans in your ministry to change the legislation to include farm workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, that's a very important and a very good question. Of course, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Alberta Human Resources and Employment will continue to work together in this area and monitor the situation very closely and, of course, make the necessary changes to improve the system as required.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier's legacy now to Albertans is electricity prices that soar to 99 cents per kilowatt and the constant threat of rolling blackouts. The market as designed by this government is not driving down the price of electricity in Alberta, as this Premier promised. It's another broken promise. My first question is to the Premier. Given that yesterday in this House the Premier stated that he would not tamper with the free market, why is this government continuing to subsidize electricity generation in the oil sands to the tune of at least $162 million in the year 2005 alone?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see where we are subsidizing production in the oil sands at any level. Now, there is a case where a company or perhaps one or two companies or maybe three are using their own gas to create steam to stimulate wells or operations to extract the oil from the sands, but it is their gas.

An Hon. Member: No. It's our gas.

Mr. Klein: No. It's their gas. It's gas over bitumen. Now, they either sell that gas, or they use that gas. Either way it's not free.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: where is all the extra generation capacity for electricity that the Premier constantly brags about when yesterday the wholesale electricity price was 99 cents per kilowatt, and generators were forced to produce at their maximum continuous rating to prevent another blackout?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the opposition has pointed out time and time again, it is a tremendously fast-growing population, and thank God we had energy deregulation in the generation business only, only in the generation, notwithstanding the falsehoods being spread by the Liberals relative to deregulation on the retail side. [interjection] Right. It is on the generation of electricity only.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that through deregulation the capacity of the generation plants has been increased substantially to the point where we have, notwithstanding some breakdowns and some unforeseen problems, 3,000 additional megawatts of power on stream.

Mr. MacDonald: And they weren't there yesterday whenever they were needed.

Again to the Premier: why does this government force consumers to pay the full shot for all transmission upgrades and expansions while the province subsidizes the price of fuel gas for generators of electricity in the oil sands before they sell it to the open market, as designed by this government in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true.

Mr. MacDonald: It is true.

Mr. Klein: It is not true.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Land Title Wait Times

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The unprecedented growth of Alberta's hot economy continues to lead the nation. One area that has been significantly affected by this growth is the long wait times at land titles offices. My questions today are for the Minister of Government Services. Can the minister tell us what actions are being taken to address registration volumes and resulting turnaround times at land titles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right. You know, we are experiencing longer delays than we would like. There has been such a huge increase in the volume at registry offices. I think our 109 officers are doing about 5,000 land transactions a day – a day. That's unbelievable. So last year we added new staff. This year we're adding new staff. It takes about six months to take a paralegal out of a postsecondary institution, get them trained, and get them into our workforce to produce. Our staff are working Monday nights, Tuesday nights, Wednesday nights, Thursday nights, and Saturdays. We have quite a commitment from the Government Services staff to address the backlog.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister then: can he tell this Assembly what the average Albertan can maybe do on our side of the ledger to reduce the long wait times for land titles registration?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, expectations are high here in Alberta. When you make the largest investment of your life that a couple can – I know that when my wife and I bought our first home, that was our largest investment, but we gave ourselves time to make sure that we had a mortgage lined up ahead of time, we made sure that we had, you know, the paperwork done properly, and we made sure that it was our responsibility to give ourselves the proper time and have the lawyers that represented us hand in the proper paperwork to the land titles office so that we had this done as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question for the same minister: is it true that long delays such as we are currently experiencing mean that people aren't able to get into their homes when they planned and are faced with paying fines or excessive interest payments due to government delays?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate the comments that I made earlier. You know, to go and spend $200,000, $250,000 on a home and expect that in two weeks you're going to be in it is unrealistic. You have to take some personal responsibility and make sure that you allow yourself sufficient time to buy a home with the right paperwork done.

To the member across: there is a no-cost service administered by the Law Society of Alberta that allows folks that are dealing with buying a home to have a lender release their mortgage money before the title is registered. So there is that service. They have to explain that to their lawyer acting on behalf of them. But I tell the public out there: please give yourself three weeks' time to buy a home. That's your largest purchase of your whole life that you'll make. Consider that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 18, 2006, Kevan Chandler was killed in a farm accident that was entirely predictable and preventable. Agriculture is a hazardous industry, with 20 deaths and 1,353 reported injuries in 2005. Still this government insists that farm workers just need more CDs and pamphlets. They've deliberately excluded these employees from occupational health and safety legislation in this province. To the minister of human resources: in front of the widow can you tell us what this government is prepared to do to change this situation?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, a similar question was just asked earlier this afternoon. It is, of course, very unfortunate that any accident would happen, not only on a farm but in the whole sector out there in Alberta. Of course, our target in Alberta is to ensure that there are no fatalities, and you can be assured and I can assure the individual listening that we will do everything we can. I made a commitment earlier this afternoon that I will be working very closely with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to review the situation, to monitor the situation, and make the necessary changes that are required to improve the system, keeping in mind that agriculture today is challenged with many difficulties because it's a difficult industry.

Dr. Swann: It's five years of monitoring, Mr. Speaker.

Is this minister saying that occupational health and safety regulations and legislation help every other occupation except farm workers? Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there are a number of industries in agriculture now that are covered under occupational health and safety. That includes the food processing plants, mushroom farms, greenhouses, nurseries, sod farms, and landscaping areas. Those are already covered under occupational health and safety. All I'm saying is that we'll review that between the two ministries and, of course, possibly involving the agriculture industry out there because they will be impacted by any change that is made. Hopefully, whatever we do will eliminate any fatality in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of human resources: with the proliferation of large-scale factory farms, will you at least institute basic minimum standards for workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, we will review all sectors in this area, as I said before, and make the necessary changes that are required, keeping in mind that agriculture is one of the backbones of rural Alberta. Many communities in rural Alberta depend on agriculture for their survival. Therefore, whatever change we make has to be the right change, keeping the balance, keeping in mind again our target of zero fatalities in Alberta.

Degree Granting Approval

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, next month students will be enrolling in new bachelor degree programs at Grant MacEwan College, while Mount Royal College is also applying for further degree-granting programs. There have been concerns raised that these new degrees will not be recognized as being of the same quality as university degrees. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education. What is the minister doing to ensure that any new degree programs granted at MacEwan and Mount Royal College will maintain the high standards of the other university degrees being granted in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much. It's a very important question, and I'm sure that the students in the gallery will be listening for the answer. Our government is committed to ensuring that quality education is provided to all students at our post-secondary institutions. That's why in 2004 we established an assurance mechanism to ensure that the new degree programs are of the highest quality, and that's what the Alberta Quality Council in fact does.

The issue that you may be referring to here with respect to Grant MacEwan is really not an issue of quality but an issue of whether or not Grant MacEwan is part of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, which is the AUCC. Now, Queen's University had said that they would not recognize degrees from institutions that were not part of the AUCC. So we are taking steps in terms of regulation to make sure that our institutions can in fact qualify for the AUCC.

I have confidence in the rigours and the processes that the Quality Council has undertaken to ensure that every student will have their degrees recognized by other institutions.

Dr. Brown: A supplemental question for the same minister: can the minister assure Albertans that graduates in these programs will have their degrees recognized and that they won't be penalized when they go to apply for graduate school as other Alberta graduates do?

Mr. Herard: I think that the member has hit the nail on the head. That's really the million dollar question. Now, I don't know that I can stand here and guarantee what others will do in other jurisdictions, but certainly here in Alberta our public universities are on board with the council's decisions and will accept new degrees from MacEwan and other public colleges. The council is committed to ensuring the national and international recognition of Alberta degrees and works closely with other provinces in quality initiatives. It has established an outstanding reputation nationally for the work it does.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise whether he can assure the House that the Campus Alberta Quality Council has the academic and public credibility to judge the quality of these new degree programs?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, many of the factors that the Quality Council looks at are things such as academic policy standards, faculty qualifications, physical resources, and things like libraries and laboratories. The most important thing, though, is that it is all a peer-reviewed process. The members of the council use their extensive knowledge of postsecondary education as well as the advice of external experts to make a thorough assessment of degree proposals.

Now, you may remember that just a couple of days ago I introduced here in this House Dr. Ron Bond, who is the chair of the committee. These people have impeccable qualifications. When I looked at his qualifications, I couldn't believe everything that he has published in his 33-year career. His reputation is on the line and so are the other members' on that Quality Council. I would invite you to look at their credentials, and you'll see that we use nothing but the highest credentials.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Tuition Fee Policy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last 16 months we have heard all kinds of grandiose statements from this government on tuition policy, none of which have materialized. In 2005 the Premier promised that Albertans would have the most affordable tuition policy in the country, but the reality is that we have the country's second-highest tuition fees. With the odious Bill 40 becoming law, we've moved tuition fee policy into regulation, out of public scrutiny, and behind the closed doors of the secret deliberations of cabinet room. We are now left with not only broken promises but also secrecy. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education. Will he bring tuition fee policy back into the Legislature as the Council of Alberta University Students and the Alberta NDP opposition have asked, allow this Assembly to debate it, and give Albertans democratic oversight over this, one of the most important public policies?

Mr. Herard: Well, I think the hon. member answered his own question. He did say that Bill 40 passed, which essentially set out tuition policy for regulation. He was also invited to participate throughout the summer along with members of ACTISEC and CAUS to ensure that we get it right with respect to tuition policy. I don't know for sure if I've heard from him. I was hoping to get some pearls of wisdom from him with respect to that.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that when you have tuition policy in regulation, you have the opportunity to have continuous improvement instead of enshrining something in legislation that doesn't change for 10 or 12 years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have clear messages for the minister right here.

My next question to him: given that this September students face yet another tuition increase masked by a band-aid rebate, why won't this minister reveal his secret tuition fee policy to this Assembly now, during this sitting?

2:20

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is just simply a couple of weeks too early. We are currently reviewing all of the input. As I said, I'm not sure that he did respond, nor am I sure that my critic from the Liberal opposition responded, but we are looking at all of the responses to bring forward a tuition policy. As a matter of fact, tomorrow I'll be meeting with the council of presidents and chairs to make sure that everybody is on board with respect to tuition policy. But I'll do more than that. I will challenge them to become more efficient and create more spaces with the physical infrastructure that they have now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the minister. It's a piece of good advice for him. Given that the summer students on average earned less than $1,400 a month while tuition fees alone in this province now are close to $5,200, will this minister adopt the policy advocated by all kinds of student groups and supported by the Alberta NDP opposition to roll back tuition fees to the 1999-2000 level and then link any annual increases to no more than CPI?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We went partway on that. We decided to keep the tuition level as it currently is. We paid $87 million to ensure that there was no tuition fee increase for last year and this year. Next year it will be based on that tuition fee plus a CPI indicator. So we've gone partway there.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think we live in a new world. Employers who sit on the sidelines and wait for institutions to produce well-educated and motivated employees are going to be competing for the bottom of the barrel, but those who participate in the journey of postsecondary from the very first year will get the cream of the crop.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Hospital Bed Capacity in Calgary

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians suffer daily from former Finance minister Jim Dinning's disastrous decision, supported by Calgary Conservative MLAs, to close half of Calgary's hospitals. The folly continues as the new, state-of-the-art Calgary Children's hospital has only 21 more beds and will not meet the needs of Calgary's growing population. Compounding the ongoing distress is the continuing series of delays in constructing the southeast hospital. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the predictable population increases, the increasing number of births, and the need to correct Dinning's shortsighted decisions, why weren't more beds added?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, clearly I have a number of points that I'd like to raise. First of all, when Chairman David Tuer of the Calgary health region speaks about beds, he speaks about effective beds. The beds in the currently used Children's hospital are not always effective. Children come in with communicable diseases, so frequently two or three beds are actually sterilized, unable to be used because only one bed can be used because the child has to be isolated. This new hospital, contrary to the number of 80, has 133 beds, 135 when fully operational, and has 60 per cent more in its emergency capacity.

Mr. Speaker, the Children's hospital was built for 25,000 emergency department visits. It usually got about 41,000 visits. This new facility will accommodate 60,000 visits, and it will enable us to do more of the kinds of supports for families who need that support in their homes and in other facilities.

One other point, Mr. Speaker. If you drive around Calgary, which I have done, to look at what Calgary is doing, you see construction on almost every site. There is a criticism that we haven't advanced on the southeast side, but take a look at the Sheldon Chumir, take a look at the work being done on the Rockyview, take a look at the work being done on the Peter Lougheed, and look at the state-of-the-art Children's hospital, which everybody is proud of.

Mr. Chase: Yes, Calgarians are spending a lot of time looking at hospitals instead of being served by them.

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. Was that the question? We don't have preambles, remember.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What plans does the minister have to add the additional capacity that Calgary families require?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, by the year 2011 we will have 700 more beds in Calgary available, up and running, to add to the bed capacity. We approved last August $1.4 billion. Today across Alberta there is about $3.5 billion being spent or on the books, planning and work being done, to add beds and other community-centred health capacity.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary alone had an injection of an additional $670 million last year, and they are actively not only planning for an expanded population but building on their primary care centres. I think the doubling up of dollars for the ARP plans, for academic plans for physicians, will help us build our medical capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: how many more code burgundy delayed, anxiety-filled trips to understaffed, stressed emergency facilities will Calgarians be forced to endure before the southeast hospital is finally operational?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, from experience I can tell you that one facility in one part of the community won't necessarily alleviate all of the problems in another part of the community. We have got a situation where we're trying always to make sure that we're serving just in time for emergencies. That's part of why I mention the primary care centres. I think that rather than a complaint about this city, that's had 1,200 more visits this year over last year – it will have a quarter of a million visits in total based on last year's statistics in emergency departments in Calgary – I think this Legislative Assembly would do well to congratulate the good men and women that are working hard to handle this excess capacity in this city.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Home Inspections

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are hearing of more and more instances of Albertans buying homes, arranging for a home inspection, and then moving in only to find that the inspector overlooked serious problems they must then deal with. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. What is your ministry doing to protect buyers against unscrupulous and unqualified home inspectors?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that there is currently no regulation of home inspection businesses here in Alberta. However, the Alberta Fair Trading Act would apply if a home inspector were to misrepresent their services or qualifications. We are working with the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Association of Home & Property Inspectors to find an effective and economical way of regulating the needs of the home-buying public. My ministry established just last month an advisory committee to advise me on educational and operational standards as well as licensing requirements. This committee includes representatives from the home inspection and real estate industries, nonprofit organizations, consumers, and government people. Once a potential model is identified, I make a commitment that we will consult Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister. In Alberta's heated economy to save time and expense many Albertans are purchasing homes without first arranging for a home inspection by a home inspector. Is there any recourse available to someone who purchased a home without a prior inspection and is now faced with costly repairs or possibly replacement?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's like I talked about in an earlier question: it's buyer beware. The public out there making this largest purchase of their lives needs to take time to get the facts, to make sure that they hire a proper inspector, one that's recommended by the Real Estate Association, by the municipality. Obviously, you know, the prospective homebuyer needs to discuss this with their real estate agent and their lawyer. So I'm asking the public out there to take the time to do this properly.

Statement by the Speaker

Alberta Association of Former MLAs

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'll call upon the first of six to participate, but a little historical vignette for today.

On June 1, 2006, proclamation was given to the Alberta Association of Former MLAs Act. The act became another first for the Alberta Legislative Assembly. The act deems that the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is the honorary president of the association and mandates that his first responsibility is to appoint seven former members who shall constitute the first board of directors. Today I have done such.

After a three-month consultation with former MLAs and several separate requests for former members to advise me of their interest, I am pleased to advise that the following former members will serve as the first board. Fred Bradley represented the constituency of Pincher Creek-Crowsnest and served in the Assembly from 1975 to 1993 as a Progressive Conservative member. Walter Alexander Buck served as the MLA for Clover Bar from 1967 to 1989 as a Social Credit member. Ed Gibbons served from 1997 to 2001 as the Liberal member for Edmonton-Manning. Karen Leibovici served from 1993 to 2001 as the Liberal member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Ian McClelland represented Edmonton-Rutherford as a Progressive Conservative member from 2001 to 2004. Don Tannas served from 1989 to 2004 as the Progressive Conservative member for Highwood. Julius Yankowsky served from 1993 to 2004 and represented Edmonton-Beverly-Belmont first as a Liberal, then a Progressive Conservative and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as a Progressive Conservative.

This board will be invited to its first meeting shortly and will be asked to determine its first list of officers and determine the date of the association's first annual meeting. The Alberta Association of Former MLAs must not by law pursue its objects for any partisan political purpose and was established as a nonprofit body corporate. Thank you.

Members' Statements

Baseball Canada Cup

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. August 17 through 20 saw the Baseball Canada Cup held in the city of Medicine Hat. This is a tournament for youth aged 17 and under, and the quality of baseball played during this event is of the highest calibre. I was pleased to have an opportunity to attend this year's competition and was very impressed by the proficiency with which these youth play the game. The fact that there were approximately 20 scouts from various major league teams watching these young players indicates just how good the quality of baseball being played was.

Mr. Speaker, sports teach Alberta's youth a great deal about working as a team, healthy competition, and sportsmanship. Being involved in sports also teaches young Albertans the value of working hard, of dedicating oneself to an endeavour in order to be successful. Finally, participating in sports impresses upon our youth the importance of an active lifestyle in order to remain healthy now and in the future. The individuals who participated in the Baseball Canada Cup certainly demonstrated these attributes throughout the tournament. Each one of them worked hard the entire season to support their team and to assist them in playing the best ball they could during this important tournament.

Mr. Speaker, every province was represented at this tournament by a team, and I would like to congratulate them all on a job well done. Although our own Alberta team did not win the championship and Ontario took home the honours of being the number one team, the quality of ball played was excellent and it was a very entertaining competition for the spectators who were there to take it in. I would like to congratulate all the teams on their efforts, and I would like to thank all of the volunteers in Medicine Hat who helped make this tournament possible.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mountain Pine Beetle

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has been very aggressive in its action to limit the spread of mountain pine beetle ever since they were discovered in our province outside the national parks in 2002. We implemented an aggressive cut-and-burn program. In the past three to four weeks a massive flight of beetles has resulted in infecting trees in and around Grande Prairie, Fairview, Peace River, and Fox Creek.

Mr. Speaker, this government remains committed to taking the most aggressive action it can to limit the spread of this tiny and deadly bug that has caused so much damage in British Columbia. We will survey all around the area where infected trees are reported. We are in the process of hiring more than 100 seasonal firefighters to do this work. They will be trained to identify the infested trees, and they will then cut and burn them. We will cut and burn every infested tree we find. We are working closely with industry to mitigate the situation as well. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has asked forest companies to make changes to their harvest plans. That way, companies will be able to harvest the stands that are most likely to be infected.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very confident that everything that can be done is being done to limit the spread of mountain pine beetles in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta Labour Market

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is time to end the war. I'm not talking about some conflict in some faraway land. I'm not talking about some war on drugs or crime. I am talking about the war that's been waged against occupation groups in our Alberta for the last generation. Limit doctors, hammer teachers, squeeze academics, control the nurses, destroy the traditional trades organizations; the list goes on.

Look at the trades. Labour brokers have been given union status by the government's not-so-arm's-length Labour Relations Board. These wise-guy brokers brag to big investors about how they can limit wages and benefits and conditions. They do not rally their worker clients and try to improve their state in life. If few want to work through them, they say: no problem. They'll get their friends in government to bring in temporary foreign workers.

Lists of workers are bought and sold like some slave markets of old. Fake unions have been bought and sold. Big lie words are used with impunity. Words like "open shop" and "merit" and "Christian" and "progressive" are used loosely where the syndicate organizations using these titles bear no resemblance to the words' true meanings. They trumpet and advertise their integrity as if it somehow makes what they do right. Think about it. Any group that has to advertise their integrity obviously knows that they have a problem with it. The big lie.

But Albertans, especially young Albertans, are not stupid for long. They look elsewhere for their future. The effect of all of this has been to create a labour market in chaos that is dragging a huge anchor, limiting its ability to adapt. Why else do we have concession bargaining by the trades in a time when they should be making real gains? Why do we have two strains of apprenticeship forming, limited skilling cheap labour versus full-mobility skills? Why do so many kids leave their trade when they see the hypocrisies? Why do so few graduate from apprenticeship?

No. It's time to end the war. End the special treatment for the labour brokers. Let them operate as what they are and forget the facade. Let people actually choose. Let Albertans have true freedom to be represented and to learn. It will solve our labour market woes quicker than you think. End the war now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Vermilion Centennial

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of Vermilion's 100th birthday some historical vignettes if I may.

In 1897 the first rancher settled in the Vermilion area, and in 1905 the railway arrived, a station was built, the post office was relocated, and by the end of 1905 the town could boast three hotels. In 1906 it was incorporated as a village, and in the same year incorporated as a town. The first grain elevator was built in 1909. The ag society incorporated in 1906, and the Vermilion Standard started to publish and still publishes to this day. In 1911 the provincial government established a demonstration farm west of Vermilion. It later became the Vermilion School of Agriculture and is known today as Lakeland College.

Oil was discovered near Vermilion in the late '30s, and in fact for the first eight months of 1941 it was the second highest producing oil field in Canada and made a valuable contribution to the war effort.

The first gas turbine used to generate electricity was located in Vermilion in 1954.

In 1959 the Alberta Fire Training School was established in Vermilion and obviously continues very successfully today as Fire Etc., a part of Lakeland College.

We have very successful people out of Vermilion. I'm sure you all know of Beckie Scott, our gold medallist and silver medallist. Susan Massitti set Canadian records in speed skating and represented us in the Nagano Olympics. We've hockey players by the dozen: Art Wiebe from the Stanley Cup champion Blackhawks – some may remember that – Jeff Woywitka, Grant McNeill, just to mention a few. Charlie Mead played baseball for the New York Giants back in the '40s. We have Mr. Bert Mead, test pilot, who worked with developing the first automatic takeoff and landing to allow us to land and take off from aircraft carriers. We all know Jean Paré, the country's most successful cookbook author, selling over 24 million cookbooks.

Over the hundred years some businesses have been there the whole time: Long's, Craig's, Webb's of Vermilion.

Solid Roots – Strong Future, Mr. Speaker. That's Vermilion's logo on its pin. I wish to join all Albertans and congratulate Mayor Judy Woyewitka and the wonderful people of Vermilion on a hundred years.

Frank Janett

Ms DeLong: When I first started out fundraising for charity in Bowness, I came to a door with a sign on it: patrolled by Smith and Wesson, with a picture of a handgun beneath it. So, naturally, I just had to knock. A very gruff old man came to the door. "What do you want?" "Donations for cancer." "I don't give out money." So entered Frank Janett, another father figure, into my life.

Over the years Frank would regale us with stories of Bowness characters from the past, stories of the great flood of '48, stories about the bird man but never stories about Frank himself. It was from others, such as Richard McDonnell, that I heard about Frank "Leadfoot" Janett: his racing of Model Ts, stock cars, and sprint cars; how once he was escorted out of the town of Olds by the RCMP for street racing his sprint car at midnight; Frank, who once broke his hand against a guardrail trying to land a punch on a rival in a finish-line skirmish; Frank, who never met a racer he wouldn't lend a hand to and who overcame alcoholism and injury to race high-powered supermodifieds until the age of 50; how he became a mechanic and a crewman, built racers, and then officiated in the fastest class of car races at the fastest racetrack in western Canada.

Frank epitomized to me my Bowness, made up of colourful, heroic characters living unassuming lives.

Frank "Leadfoot" Janett passed away last Father's Day, and, yes, despite his gruff exterior he always gave generously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Development in the Peace Country

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Let's not make the same mistake twice. The municipality of Wood Buffalo has been crying out these past months. Its infrastructure can't handle the pressure of rapid growth. In fact, a member of this very government has spoken out to the same effect and even intervened at a recent Energy and Utilities Board hearing.

The municipalities in the Peace Country do not want the same thing to happen there. They want managed, integrated growth of oil sands to promote both development but also to limit the detrimental impact on the environment and the residents in this more densely populated region.

An integrated, planned approach has many supporters. Municipal leaders, local residents, and even especially industry believe that an overall plan for the region will make for a better and more sustainable future on a level playing field. Local leaders and residents are wondering: how much more drilling will be allowed at Seal Lake and at Carmon Creek? They worry that in the absence of an overall plan drilling projects will continue to be approved piecemeal and without any consideration for the cumulative impact.

The provincial government has a very clear role to play. The departments of Municipal Affairs, Sustainable Resource Development, Energy, Infrastructure and Transportation, and especially Environment need to work together with stakeholders to craft an integrated plan for the staggered development of the oil sands in the Peace Country. It is, after all, the province that gives the go-ahead for the drilling of new wells. The province has a responsibility to think about the impact of these decisions and not download it onto the municipality.

The oil wells in the Peace Country are not like Fort McMurray. Wells are being drilled next to farms, villages, rivers, and lakes. This region has been settled for many centuries. People are worried about the environmental and social impacts on their lands. If we want to avoid the problems of the overheated economy like in Fort McMurray and to preserve the diversified economy in the Peace Country, then an integrated plan is absolutely essential.

Thank you.

The Speaker: To the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster: there's a clarification here required. I want to make sure that Hansard gets this right. Did the hon. member say that Company's Coming cookbooks by Mme Paré had done 24 million copies or $24 million in business?

Mr. Snelgrove: Twenty-four million copies, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Twenty-four million? Perhaps only two books in the world have ever had 24 million, one the Bible, the other the Koran. I don't know who could have ever done 24 million.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, that's what they told me in the paper.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 1,427 petitions, for a grand total of 1,916 to today, urging the government to move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive ring road south of the current proposal to reduce noise and increase safety measures as well as minimize the environmental impact of the road.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table, with permission, a petition with 135 signatures from concerned Edmonton-McClung residents. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to work with the City of Edmonton to ensure that the traffic noise from the Edmonton Ring Road near our neighbourhood of Wedgewood Ravine is evaluated immediately and again in six months, and that if the noise levels measured are found to exceed acceptable provincial or municipal thresholds, that noise attenuation and reduction measures be implemented as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly. This petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately abandon plans to increase the role of private insurance in the health care system, and instead, commit to strengthening the single-payer, public system.

This petition has been signed by over 100 Albertans.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the rules of the Assembly I rise to give a notice of motion that I will move a motion under Standing Order 30 resolving that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the Assembly urge the government to introduce election financing legislation requiring full disclosure of all campaign contributions and their sources for all leadership contests of registered political parties and that they do so prior to the selection of the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Association [of Alberta].

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all regarding the question I directed to the Premier earlier in question period. The first is a letter dated August 2, 2006, from the Minister of Energy to myself, and this indicates that "the Crown royalty quantities and estimated royalty exempted under section 15(1)(c) of the Natural Gas Royalty Regulation, 2002, for the 2003-2005 period are shown below." This is the "Crown royalty share of gigajoules (GJs) burned as fuel royalty exempt" and the "estimated royalty exemption value."

Also, I have the current supply demand report from the Power Pool yesterday, indicating that many units had to operate at overcapacity to meet the demand.

The last tabling I have is also from yesterday. It's the actual posted pool price for electricity, and even yesterday during question period it was at its maximum at $999.99 a megawatt, or 99 cents a kilowatt, per hour.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table in the Assembly the requisite number of five copies of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta annual report for the previous year, 2005-2006.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Research Council's 2005-2006 annual report. This annual report demonstrates how ARC operates as a premiere agent of the government of Alberta and the impact it creates on the economy of Alberta and on the lives of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from David Cournoyer, the chairman of the Council of Alberta University Students, to the Minister of Advanced Education. In the letter Mr. Cournoyer expresses disappointment that despite the opportunity presented by the sitting of the Assembly, the minister has not put tuition fees back into the legislation. Mr. Cournoyer also feels that the minister could have at least tied tuition increases to increases to the consumer price index.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Boutilier, Minister of Environment, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Government Accountability Act the Ministry of Environment 2004-2005 annual report and pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the Environmental Protection Security Fund annual report April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2005, the Alberta Elevating Devices & Amusement Rides Safety Association annual report April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006, the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2005 and pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the 2005 annual report of the Safety Codes Council and the authorized accredited agencies activities summary 2004-2005.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Optometrists annual report to government 2005, the College of Alberta Dental Assistants annual report 2005, the College of Alberta Denturists 2005 annual report, the Alberta College of Medical Laboratory Technologists 2005 annual report; pursuant to the Mental Health Act the Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate Office 2005 annual report; pursuant to the Opticians Act the Alberta Opticians Association annual report 2005; pursuant to the Pharmaceutical Profession Act the Alberta College of Pharmacists annual report 2005-2006; pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act the Palliser health region annual report 2005-2006, the Chinook health region annual report 2005-06, the East Central health region annual report 2005-2006, the David Thompson health region annual report 2005-2006, the Calgary health region 2005-2006 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, a response to Written Question 1, asked for by Mr. Martin on behalf of Mr. Mason on March 20, 2006, and the responses to Written Question 8, Written Question 9, and Motion for Return 16, asked for by Ms Blakeman on March 20, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Herard, Minister of Advanced Education, the responses to Written Question 6, Written Question 7, and Motion for Return 14, asked for by Mr. Taylor on March 20, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Energy, return to order of the Assembly, Motion for Return 6, asked for by Mr. Eggen on March 20, 2006.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll now deal with a Standing Order 30 application. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the Assembly urge the government to introduce election financing legislation requiring full disclosure of all campaign contributions and their sources for all leadership contests of registered political parties and that they do so prior to the selection of the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Association [of Alberta].

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I sent a letter, which has been distributed to all House leaders, to your office before the deadline of 11:30, as laid out in Standing Order 30(1). Beauchesne's 387 and Marleau and Montpetit at 588 say that a debate under this standing order must deal with a specific question that requires urgent consideration, it must be within the administrative competence of the government, and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

Mr. Speaker, we are calling for a debate on a very specific action that the government should take, in our view; namely, that the Assembly discuss the lack of rules for disclosure of financing in leadership campaigns, although Albertans would be well served by a broader discussion of electoral reform as well. The more immediate concern that I want to raise is that there are no disclosure or transparency requirements of leadership contests for registered political parties in this province. Indeed, as all members of this House are aware, such a contest is under way right now.

Mr. Speaker, I note, too, that the changes I'm proposing to discuss are well within the administrative competence of the government. One needs to look no further than section 2 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which specifically exempts leadership contests from the requirements laid out in the act. The government has clearly legislated in this area already, so it is within the competence of the House and the government.

This motion, in our view, meets the requirements in Marleau and Montpetit on page 588 and Beauchesne's 391 to 392 that the matter is not under adjudication by a court of law, does not raise a question of privilege, and has not been previously addressed in this session.

That brings us to the question of whether the matter is better dealt with as part of a substantive motion elsewhere. Looking at the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, I only see a single piece of government business, which is the Appropriation Act. As I'm sure you can appreciate, this is clearly not a question of appropriations or government spending. We cannot ask the Finance minister or any of the ministers who have brought supplementary estimates to this House to debate election finance reform. There are only, after today, two days of business scheduled, and there are no more days of private members' business, and there is apparently no other legislation to be debated.

With respect to the urgent public importance, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this Legislature has seen fit to legislate both donation limits and public disclosure requirements with respect to most operations of political parties in this province. The single major omission is leadership campaign financing. Leadership is, of course, a keystone of the activities of all political parties within our current system. Other jurisdictions, including the federal government and the province of Manitoba, have recognized this in legislation. Why have we recognized it in legislation with respect to political parties? Why have we adopted the principle that there should be disclosure and campaign limits? It's because we have accepted that the public has a right to know who is paying for the operations of political parties so that that might serve as a check against the activities of a government or of a political party. If they are acting not in the public interest but in the interests of those financing their activities, the public can then discern that and can draw appropriate political conclusions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I respect your comments earlier in question period about singling out a political party, but this speaks very much to the urgency of the issue. In my view this is an unfortunate situation, but the winner of the current leadership race of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta will automatically become the Premier of the province at least until the next election. So this is, in my view, not just a matter of public importance but of supreme public importance. This is perhaps the most important political decision that is currently under consideration. It is extremely important to all Albertans and is therefore, I think, something that needs to be brought within the purview of this motion.

This motion is clearly intended to encourage the government to bring forward legislation that affects all political parties and deals with them equally, but we cannot forget that the leadership race now under way will determine, at least for a short time, the Premier of this province, and therefore it is of extreme importance. As elected officials we all have a stake in bringing integrity and transparency to Alberta's political process. Active engagement by voters based on information is key to democracy.

So to conclude, I would observe that this is probably the last opportunity for this Assembly to debate this matter, making it truly urgent, and I would reiterate that although such reforms have already taken place in other jurisdictions, it is not too late for Alberta to catch up.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll recognize two additional participants on this very, very briefly. We'll go with the hon. Deputy Government House Leader and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I had an opportunity, in answer to one of the questions in question period, to address part of this particular matter. I don't intend to repeat what I said at that time, although I would like to incorporate it into my argument against the motion.

I find that it's somewhat ironic that at this time the leader of the ND opposition brings forward this motion. I've been in this House since 1997, and by my count there have been three leaders of the NDs in that time period. There have been four leaders of the Liberal opposition. There have been since 1992, when our Premier became Premier, four elections. After each election presumably there was a report similar to the one that was prepared this year by the Chief Electoral Officer regarding the elections and recommendations for discussion points put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer. There have been opportunities by the opposition to bring forward private members' bills and so on and so forth. So I don't think that the particular rule that's being put forward can possibly be that because there is no opportunity under the Order Paper to have a discussion with respect to this matter, it must be urgent. Therefore, one takes a look at the facts behind this.

This matter clearly has been the subject of discussion within the ND Party and within the Liberal Party on a number of occasions over the last 10 years that we've been here. They have never felt the need to bring forward this matter to govern their parties' affairs, and the legislation at this point in time clearly provides that it is a party matter. They found it completely satisfactory for their purposes until now, and because we happen to be having a leadership within the party that this government is part of, they would like to have a debate on it. I don't think it's urgent in any sense, Mr. Speaker. I think the facts surrounding it indicate that that is the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly on this application for Standing Order 30 sponsored by the NDP opposition. I'm not going to repeat some of the citations and quotations from Beauchesne and all the other references, but I can probably understand where the NDP opposition is coming from. Further to the comment by the hon. Government House Leader about private members' bills, private members' bills are submitted way in advance to the extent that currently, in August of 2006, we have a September 18 deadline to submit our private members' bills to Parliamentary Counsel for next spring. So there was no way we could have anticipated the events that have transpired and the leadership race that is currently under way.

Second, further to assessing all the tests that one has before we allow a Standing Order 30, we mentioned no bills, no motions on the Order Paper. We mentioned also that no written questions and no motions for returns are on the Order Paper, and arguably, like was demonstrated today in question period, Oral Question Period is not the best avenue to seek information from this government, given their customary and usual way of dismissing the opposition and dodging questions and deflecting criticism.

In terms of the urgency, Mr. Speaker. Again, we know that this is an internal party matter within the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, but the outcome has a profound effect on everybody living in this province. Whoever wins the PC leadership race does in fact basically become the Premier for a certain period of time. The motivation behind Standing Order 30 is to ensure the greatest degree of transparency in that race and, if anything, to try to alleviate some of the concerns people have with politicians in general but possibly with Tories in particular, especially after 35 years of uninterrupted power.

I may also be inclined to support this motion because of our own Alberta Liberal position with respect to democratic renewal in this province. Many citizens do not trust politicians anymore, and they feel distanced from and disenfranchised by the state of affairs in this province. The Alberta Liberals would certainly hope that faith is restored in the democratic process in the abstract sense but then also in practical terms would reflect in things such as higher voter turnouts, youth participation, more female representation, and more collaborative politics. This is something we've campaigned on.

We've introduced ideas in this House to strengthen democracy as such, things like a lobbyist registry, whistle-blower protection, fixed election dates, and campaign finance reform, which is to some extent the issue being dealt with here. Some of these ideas, Mr. Speaker, have been embraced by a number of those PC leadership hopefuls, and I'm glad to say that they're increasingly sounding like us Liberals. This is something that makes us happy because our ideas are proven sound.

Under Beauchesne 390 the distinction is made between urgency and the urgency of debate. The Government House Leader – no surprise – indicated that he doesn't think it's urgent. As such, I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to put this matter to a vote by all hon. colleagues from both sides of the House under Standing Order 30(3) to gauge the appetite of the hon. members in this Assembly, to see where they stand on the issue, and to proceed from there.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 30(2) the Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave . . . which was done,

. . . and the Speaker may allow such debate as he . . . considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

The chair is prepared to rule on the fourth Standing Order 30 application since this sitting started last Thursday. The previous decisions can be reviewed at pages 1694 and 1695 and 1728, 1729, and 1730 of Alberta Hansard, so the chair will not repeat all of the authorities.

The chair confirms that the ND leader, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, provided proper notice to the Speaker's office. The request was received at 11:10 this morning, so the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met. The subject matter of the request was also provided to the Speaker's office.

As members heard last Thursday and yesterday, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion "relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

Similar to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's request yesterday, this request seems to be inconsistent with the requirements of Standing Order 30(6), which indicates that "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." This request reads like a private member's motion as it urges the government to bring forward legislation. While there may not be a matter to discuss or debate this issue in the current sitting, the subject of financing fiduciary campaigns does not in the chair's view constitute an emergency in any way, shape, or form.

We'll repeat the historic analysis of the last 13 years with respect to this. There have been at least three Official Opposition leadership campaigns. This matter has never been raised by anyone in those three. There have been at least three third-party leadership campaigns, and to the chair's knowledge this matter has never been a pressing matter before. Why in the case of one leadership campaign in 13 years this becomes an emergency today is very difficult for the chair to understand in trying to determine this an emergency in any way, shape, or form. It may be an issue of concern and debate, but whether or not it is an emergency is quite the other thing, and the chair wants to reiterate Standing Order 30(6). So the chair will not put the question. The emergency debate will not proceed.

There's one additional thing the chair would like to say. While the chair respects the rights of every member to utilize the rules and to bring forward matters for debate, the chair is concerned that matters clearly not emergencies are being brought forward under the guise of emergency debates. The chair treats these applications under Standing Order 30 very seriously and would only ask that members respect the rule and, in turn, the institution. If individual members have difficulty understanding Standing Order 30 and would like private consultation with the chair, the chair's office is always open for this pedagogical exercise as we advance and improve our understanding of the Standing Orders.

Thank you.

Second Reading
Bill 44
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance in order to move second reading of Bill 44, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2).

I would only note that these supplementary supply estimates have already been debated in the Legislative Assembly in Committee of Supply over the past couple of days and that they are required in order to help cover extraordinary pressures facing many different parts of government operations. We are grateful to have these dollars available for those important needs. With that, I will cede the floor to others who may wish to present their comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has moved the bill on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have before us the appropriation bill for this very brief summer sitting of this Assembly. It is my understanding that this is the second shortest sitting in Alberta's history, at least lately. I'm sure someone in Public Affairs is going to scramble to research this to try to prove me wrong. It is ridiculously short regardless of whether this House sat fewer days before or not. This bill, Bill 44, called the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006 (No. 2) is the second in one year. It should be called the extra-spending bill or the in-hindsight bill.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Alberta's budgets under the current Tory administration are never final or credible documents. They're a work in progress, constantly in flux. You pass a budget, and then you pass three more quarterly minibudgets until the next throne speech, and so on. When you add interim supply, Mr. Speaker, it gets more complicated. As a layman I had never heard of supplementary supply till I joined this esteemed House. I can understand it when we're talking about a genuine emergency or something that is being used very infrequently and very far between under special circumstances, but instead it has become the preferred method, the way we do business in this province. It's the normal way the government prefers.

Yesterday in speaking with some of my caucus colleagues who've been here longer than I, it was made clear to me that back then all they did was approve additional funding for an emergency, like I mentioned, something like extra money for the firefighters. Possibly they added one other department for something very minor, maybe two at the most, not the practice we have here today, where 15 ministries or departments each get a piece of the pie, and the pie itself has grown so excessively large.

Mr. Speaker, we today are basically asked or, to be more accurate, we are being forced to rubber-stamp 15 minibudgets for 15 government departments worth $1.37 billion in three hours and 45 minutes in Committee of Supply. That's more than $6 million per minute. Last night, for example, we only had enough time for four departments out of the 10 scheduled for debate. Again, that is totally unacceptable.

As I mentioned, supplementary supply is okay when it's a natural disaster or an unforeseen circumstance. Otherwise, everything should be in the main budget. But this government cannot or will not budget. The talk about fiscal conservatism and how this government manages the affairs of this province has long been strayed from. The hon. Minister of Finance and some of her colleagues sometimes express their frustration at how much it pains them to spend, but the money they waste on things like the Aon report back in the spring or the $1 million that was slated for the third-way propaganda campaign that never saw the light of day doesn't bother them one bit. That doesn't bother them. Waste doesn't bother them.

The fact that they do not budget is something that I find very troublesome. The short legislative sessions and the mockery that we call a budget are this government's plan to minimize the amount of scrutiny and close examination that they may be subjected to. That's as much planning as this government is willing to do. In terms of fiscal planning, the actual governance and management of this province's affairs, there is clearly no plan. The various arms of this government – and there are many to this beast – do not talk to each other, and it's time that we evaluate this situation and try to rectify it. It's time to disengage the autopilot and take charge of this vessel, which is totally adrift. Status quo just does not cut it anymore.

One can also translate the need for supplementary supply into the equivalent of a deficit, needing more money to pay for something for which funds were allocated previously. This government is cool asking for more and more money, and it doesn't bother them. But in my constituency office I have to be very careful with my budget, and if I'm one penny over, it comes out of next year's budget. That's how careful I have to be. No free rides. School boards, health authorities, and many other government agencies and departments are also treated with this philosophy or this approach. They do not enjoy the luxury that this government enjoys. On the contrary, they are usually the victims of poor management and poor planning and are frequently audited, penalized, or even, in fact, fired. Why doesn't this government apply the same standards to its own operations?

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, today I wanted to focus briefly on Innovation and Science since I am the Official Opposition critic for that department. It's a department that is asking for money this time around, and it didn't have time to be looked at yesterday because of the rushed evening sitting. So we have a department that is asking for $20 million, which is not really a terrible sum of money. I have to agree that this ministry is a good-news ministry, and I support them getting this money. I mentioned this back in the spring under the regular budget.

We can only criticize this ministry, if we're going to, based on their granting process; for example, if their granting process is skewed or if the guidelines are not being adhered to. In essence, what I'm saying here is that this government is wise to invest more money in Innovation and Science, and my reasons are to follow. Fifteen million dollars is for energy-related research, and $5 million is for the Water for Life strategy research. Right away I would indicate that while I support the initial $15 million for energy research, the question always is: why mostly energy? Why can't we move on or expand to other sectors which can be equally or more lucrative? However great our resource reserves, they're still finite and are bound to run out. We have a responsibility to the future generations of this province to leave them with something. The money we make today belongs to us, yes, but equally to our children and grandchildren. So as important as energy research might be, other fields of research are also worthy of attention and support.

Why isn't any money being put toward encouraging the development of the tech sector, for example? Why can't we turn Alberta into the Japan of North America or the Korea of North America, for example? Why not invest in pharmaceutical research, nutraceutical research, agriculture, or veterinary medicine? The list goes on, of course. Are we doing enough? Is the government telling us that everything else should wait or could wait?

Also, if we're talking energy, what timelines does the Ministry of Innovation and Science have in place for the development of renewable energy resources? I'm interested in this twofold. One, because I said that our reliance on fossil fuel should not and cannot continue indefinitely, and other sources of energy have to be identified and commercialized. Two, I'm also approaching this as an investment, as something we can make money on or from, something we can generate some decent revenue from, something we can benefit from right here in Alberta and can sell to the world and be leaders.

Water, which is the second part of this money being requested, is also of paramount importance, and water research is money well spent. We need to know how much water we still have or how much is left, and how much is being used by oil and gas. We need to forecast and plan our water future as the population grows and the resource dwindles and so on. Water for Life is indeed an operative phrase as water is life, and we have to address both the internal and external pressures on this valuable asset.

Furthermore, I would like to see this commitment for further funding in 2007-08, which has been alluded to as being $25 million and even beyond. I would like to see it materialize into a long-term plan, not ad hoc, not one-time announcements. I would like it to be a constant plan that is again being adhered to. Can I tell people that this minister or his colleague in Environment have a long-term vision or plan for our water? Can I tell people that should this vision or plan be ready, the Tory caucus will endorse it and fully fund it?

Moving on, Mr. Speaker. Now that we have a new minister looking after this department, why not conduct a thorough review or inventory of all research initiatives in this province to see what's missing or lacking and to look for areas of potential growth? What percentage is our research drive compared to the entire provincial budget or whatever other measure we choose, like the GDP? How do we compare against other North American jurisdictions?

I have some reservations as to the budgets passed in this province, you know, the size of them and the uncontrolled growth that they have experienced. Instead, I want to focus on other departments if I may. I want to briefly mention some of the areas I would advocate as a member of the Liberal caucus, which is something that we advocated during the campaign and after, so inside the House and outside: something like establishing a provincial policy to direct the research and commercialization of cleaner energy and renewable energy initiatives in this province; implementing a 10 per cent provincial tax credit for eligible expenditures in scientific research and experimental development; implementing a 30 per cent provincial tax credit for investment in qualified early-stage Alberta-based technology companies; creating something like a $150 million Alberta technology venture fund, which is a request we've asked in this House time and time again, funded jointly by industry, university, and government to generate a venture capital industry in this province; and, lastly, creating a provincial technology program to harmonize technology commercialization programs across the province so that instead of a sporadic or separated, piecemeal approach we would have a harmonized, concise approach.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am supportive of Innovation and Science getting this money. I just think it should have been budgeted in the first place.

Lastly, I have a very brief question with respect to the granting process because, really, Innovation and Science is a granting ministry. They just give money out. I am concerned that giving money in-year, basically outside of the budget in supplementary supply, might actually lead to some waste or to an inefficient expenditure of these funds. So I am concerned that the minister should really assure us that they have adequate safeguards in place to guard against any of that wrongdoing.

Now, moving on if I may, the second area of interest for me is education, of course. A large chunk of this supplementary supply bill is for K to 12 education. I'm also proud and grateful to have been chosen by the Alberta Teachers' Association as a friend of public education for 2006. As such, I feel an obligation to enter into this discussion here today and to focus some of my energy and my time on education.

Let's have a look at the July 13, 2006, press release from the Ministry of Education. They're committing an additional $180 million to be infused into the veins and arteries of this department, bringing the total government support for education in '06-07 to almost $5.5 billion. Amazing. That's a great story. Of this $180 million $61 million is for operational support in classrooms, and $119 million goes toward school upgrades and renovations. The press release references and links to the renewed funding framework, which has been brought up in this House time and time again, but the link is broken, or the report is mysteriously missing for some reason. I'm not sure if maybe some of the people in the department are working on it, and that's why they removed it.

I know that some work is being done to implement the class-size initiative in 2006-07, but let's hope that significant improvements are achieved. Mr. Speaker, I'll be one of the first people to commend the hon. minister when those targets are reached. Class sizes went down for a brief period after the Learning Commission report, but they have crept back up since. This deserves attention and requires decisive action, which requires leadership.

The Alberta government expenditure per student in 2000-01 was about $6,800, when back then the budget for K to 12 education was something like $3.65 billion. So when you take $5.5 billion in 2006 after this new infusion of money, after this supplementary supply lifeline, and you subtract the $3.65 billion back in the year 2000, the government spin doctors will come out saying that in six years spending has increased by about $1.85 billion. The student population, however, has grown, and so did government spending, realizing, of course, that education is an investment in our future and not merely an entry on the expense side of our budget. It's an investment.

The government conveniently fails to go back, of course, to the trimming days of '92-93 and elects to only highlight the better half of the picture. The hon. minister will boast in this House about how much money is being spent every day on education as per his answers on August 24, 2006, when he indicated "$27.9 million each and every school day." He does not, however, tell us how much it represents today per student. How much money are we investing per student?

The same press release I mentioned just a minute ago tells us that the base instruction grant rate in the 2006-07 school year would rise after this infusion to $5,291 per student. I would certainly conclude, Mr. Speaker, that this represents a drop from $6,800 back in the year 2000, dollar for dollar in the simplest form, and we're not even looking at inflation or the rising cost of living in this boom time. So this is the bigger snapshot.

To take a smaller snapshot, Budget 2006 sees the government blow its own horn, talking about a 3.2 per cent average increase in funding for school boards, a 3.2 per cent average across the province. However, this is less than the inflation rate. Take the consumer price index for the month of July 2006: 140.8. If you want to understand it, Mr. Speaker, that's compared to a base score of 100 for the year 1992. So now we're 40 per cent higher than what we were at in '92, the highest in the country. The percentage change for the period July 2005 to July 2006 in Alberta was positive, or plus 4.3 per cent, again the highest increase in inflation in the country.

This supplemental infusion is a welcome gesture. I'm not arguing against it. I think it's a little late, but it's positive nevertheless. I know that the hon. minister, especially with his teaching background, recognizes the pressures that are faced by the system, but I also know that it is not easy for him when he does his sales pitch to his caucus colleagues, and for that I totally and truly sympathize. The government spin doctors will understandably showcase this extra spending but will ignore the fact that this money did not make it into the budget we just approved a few months ago. Is this government yielding or reacting to pressure? If yes, good. It's a sign of life, however faint. Government being responsive, that is, even if only motivated by political survival.

We as opposition members are often accused in this House of being big spenders or asking for more money for programs and services. I would seize this opportunity today, Mr. Speaker, to clarify that we as Alberta Liberals demand and offer better management whether or not more money is invested in certain key and critical areas. Management is the word to be underlined here, responsible management with a clear plan and a concise vision, not an ad hoc one of supplements crammed through in an extremely short, rubber-stamping Legislative sitting.

You know, here's another example. Again the same press release, telling us that the infrastructure and maintenance renewal funding will increase by $119 million on top of this initial $81 million to ensure that students' learning environments remain safe and healthy. This is definitely a victory for this minister to secure this kind of extra funding and is a good first step. But think about this, Mr. Speaker: the supplement is greater than the initial amount budgeted. The supplement, the lifeline, is greater than what they budgeted back in April and May. If so, why were our requests ignored last spring? Why was this government as dismissive of and resistant to our ideas in opposition when we were debating the budget back in the spring? You cannot help but wonder when the supplement is 47 per cent higher than the principal amount, and we're still a ways to go on the huge infrastructure deficit and school maintenance backlog. If they lack a plan, they should perhaps consider listening to some of the other ideas presented in this House in good faith.

Moving on again, Mr. Speaker, I have many points about education. This particular one was raised by some speakers in this esteemed Assembly before, English as a Second Language, which is an area that needs more attention, and more needs to be done. It was not included in this added support under supplementary supply.

Similarly, the area which I personally care about, the issue of school fees and the issue of the need for parents and guardians to fund raise more and more, not only for the extras but, increasingly, for the basics as well, which I find alarming and objectionable: no sign of relief on this issue.

Furthermore, transportation costs. Remember back in June of this year when the hon. minister came out with a token $8 million announcement to try to help alleviate some of the concerns with respect to transportation costs. Everyone told him back then that that was not enough. Again, I'm urging him to reconsider today, to continually monitor the situation, especially with fuel prices as high as they are. They're not expected to go down any time soon.

Special needs is another huge area. My staff and I at the constituency office in Edmonton-McClung have assisted a few constituents already with placement requests. What seems to be the predominant issue, of course, is funding. The magnitude is one aspect, the magnitude of funding, the size. But, also, the portability of this funding is equally important, how we can move the students from one place to the next and how we can make the money that is allocated towards looking after them move with them. More attention should be focused on this issue as more special-needs students join our schools and as the education environment evolves to try to make it fair to them and also to their classmates as well, plus their teachers and their teacher aides.

One more issue with respect to education, Mr. Speaker, which I talked about previously, was school boundaries and the catchment areas and how some students who live less than a block or two blocks away from a school are forced to go to another school in an attempt to even out the enrolment figures across the province. So instead of a kid walking for less than five minutes to his or her preferred school, he or she now takes a bus for 35 or more minutes to try to go to a different school because of that enrolment and catchment issue with the school boundaries. Again, it doesn't make sense, especially when some parents lie about or misrepresent their address in an effort to try to get their kid in their preferred school.

I will continue later, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a start. If I remember word for word what Calgary public school trustee Pat Cochrane had to say after the Education minister announced the $180 million in additional funding that we are talking about in supplementary supply estimates debate, among other things, that was her comment to reporters: well, it's a start. But that's about all that it is: a start.

Yes, you know, it's a good idea to see an increase in the base per-pupil instructional grant. It's a good idea to see extra money in the budget for students with severe disabilities. It's a good idea – it's a superb idea in the case of school boards like the big metro school boards – to increase and extend the funding eligibility cap beyond five years for English as a Second Language students. Not every student from another country can master this language of ours in five years. Yes, it's good that money has been put into the class size initiative so that school boards can hire more teachers.

I'm not going to take time today to discuss whether the estimates under each one of those categories are what they should be, whether there should be more in there, whether there should be less in there or not. I'm going to focus primarily on what is, I think, the single biggest issue for schools and teachers and students and parents in my constituency because school starts again on Tuesday next. While there may be many parts of rural Alberta where people may be praying for rain – I don't know; it's been a dry summer in much of the province – in Calgary-Currie they'll be praying that it doesn't rain so that the roofs don't leak on the students on the first day of school.

You know, I've got two kids – one grown to adulthood, one very nearly so – so I have experience as a parent of kids in the public school system, and I have experience as once upon a time having been a child myself in the public school system at a time when my father, as a matter of fact, was a school trustee in Ontario. So I've been associated with public education long enough to see a fair number of fads come and go. There was the back-to-basics movement. There was year-round education. I even remember that when I first started out in talk radio, it seemed like every fifth commercial that we played on that radio station was for the Hooked on Phonics game. I wonder if anybody still has that game.

But, you know, through all of that, from the time I started kindergarten more years ago than I care to admit until very recently, there has been one thing that never has been a fad, there's been one thing that's been a consistent, and that has been this: the physical surroundings in which our children are educated. As parents we've trusted that when our children went off to school, they would be spending the day safe, warm, and dry in a well-maintained learning environment. Well, I guess that's a pretty naive assumption these days.

I take a little bit of pride – and my colleague from Calgary-Varsity should too because he joined me on this darn-fooled idealistic crusade of mine, which was at the behest of the school administration at Western Canada high school, one of the finest, most storied secondary schools in not only this province, not only in my city, in my constituency, but right across the west of Canada. My colleague and I late last June toured Western Canada high school along with the public school trustee Miss Cochrane, a couple of parent council members, and two student council representatives at the behest of school administrators who wanted me to see for myself the general state of disrepair of Western Canada high school. They wanted me to understand what they've been up against in trying to deal with this government for the last – I guess it's been eight years now since the facilities audit was done. They wanted me to see for myself just what the rains of June had done to their school.

Through that tour and the media coverage and the public attention that it got in Calgary and Calgary-Currie, the Education minister, after having put off and rescheduled four previous appointments, magically appeared just a few days later to himself tour the facility and a couple of other public schools and a couple of other Catholic schools. And a couple of weeks after that – I believe it was during Stampede week, if I remember correctly, because I seem to recall that I was decked out in a cowboy hat and cowboy boots – he actually emerged from a cabinet meeting in Calgary at the McDougall Centre and announced the $180 million, $119 million of which was for the infrastructure and maintenance renewal program, and that's when Miss Cochrane said: well, it's a start.

But that's all it is. It's a start. It's 10 per cent of the accumulated infrastructure maintenance deficit of the public school system in the province of Alberta, the public and Catholic school systems. Calgary board of education by itself has a $425 million deferred infrastructure deficit, the biggest of any school district in this province. Calgary Catholic has its own deferred infrastructure deficit. So does Edmonton Catholic. So does Edmonton public. So do many smaller school districts. Visit your child's school and you'll see for yourself just how rundown it has become after 12 years of provincial government neglect.

You know, we don't even need to go back that far. I'm just going to run through a little bit of information here about the schools in my constituency, those ones which remain open, of course, because a number of schools in my constituency have been closed because of the way in which this government has applied its utilization formula. In the case of Western Canada high school, for instance, which is actually sort of a collection of individual buildings that grew together and where in order to get from the second floor of one wing of the building to the second floor of another wing of the building, you've got to go down half a staircase, then up a staircase – and there's a fair-sized landing in between those staircases, and under the utilization formula that counts as classroom space, which is just bizarre beyond belief. But I digress.

The general state of affairs is that when the school facility evaluation project was undertaken in 1999, in which audits of Alberta's schools were conducted by the government to determine overall maintenance needs, the schools were given scores. Anything between zero and 399 points ranked as good and from 400 to 799 ranked as fair, and anything 800 or over ranked as poor. At that time Western Canada high school came in as one of the schools in the worst physical condition – that's to be understood; I mean, it goes back to 1928 in the oldest parts, right? – with a score of 960, which is pretty bleeping bad no matter how you cut it.

An Hon. Member: Pretty bleeping?

Mr. Taylor: Pretty bleeping bad, because they won't let me say the word that I really have on my mind.

Well, you know, here we are seven years later. Over a million tax dollars have been spent on band-aid repairs to Western Canada high school while the province has dithered over a decision to modernize or rebuild the school. In that time the likely cost of the Western Canada high school project has ballooned from $9 million to $32 million or more.

As my tour with my colleague from Calgary-Varsity and the school trustee and the school administrators and the parent council members and the student council representatives back at the end of June showed, the tour where they showed me where the water gushed through the roof of the fitness centre and came down one wall like a waterfall during the rain, where it ran in around the windows of the electronics lab and where they had plastic garbage bags all hastily taped up to divert the water away from the computers and the electronics equipment, where the water damage leaked through and caused damage in a science lab and all the other places that the rain poured in, dribbled in, dripped in, ran in – they showed me the classrooms where a couple of windows had blown in during one storm and old wooden window frames that literally were so rotten you could fit your thumb between the edge of the pane of glass and what remained of the edge of the frame.

What all this proves is that with every passing day – you know, every problem proves that the costliest option is to do nothing, which, of course, is the modus operandi of this government. Do nothing. Consult, monitor, and watch the cost balloon. So, typically, the province has given Calgary public $14 million to maintain and repair every school in its system. Calgary public, Calgary board of education, is the second largest school district in the entire nation. It's got a lot of schools. It's got a hundred thousand students. You can't do much with $14 million when it would take $32 million to modernize or rebuild or fix appropriately, renovate extensively one high school.

And that's not the only story. Let's look, for instance, at Richmond elementary in my constituency, which received a score of 590 in 1999 in the provincial school facilities audit, 590 being just about in the middle of the fair category. That was in 1999. Using the Calgary board of education's own rating system, rating the mechanical, electrical, and structural conditions on a scale from 10, which is very, very good, to 140, which is pretty bleeping awful, Richmond elementary today has a total condition index of 120. That's the evidence of degradation there.

There's evidence of degradation in all kinds of schools in our constituency. You know, I've been to, I think, just about every single one of them: Alternative high school, which is a really cool place for kids who learn differently, kids who joyously proclaim every day that they are square pegs that are not going to be hammered into a round hole, and they go to school in an old elementary school that is very rundown. In 1999 it had a score of 630. It's gotten worse. Its total condition index now is 90 out of 140.

I've been to St. Mary's senior high school in the Catholic system. The Catholic schools in my constituency as a rule have seen some improvement over the course of time, the seven years since the school facilities audit was done. The public schools in my constituency, I'm afraid, have run down even further.

Now, this government, I guess, has tried a number of times in the past to blame all the problems with public education in the city of Calgary on the public school board in the city of Calgary. It's a convenient scapegoat, an effective whipping boy. It has all the responsibility and none of the authority. You know, when you set your governance model up like that, you make the decisions and create an institution, an organization, a board at a level below yours, at a level closer to the irate stakeholders, the irate stakeholders are going to call their school trustee and blast away at them for problems which were of this government's making because of lack of funding.

There are a lot of fine schools in my constituency – elementary, junior high, high school, alternative, even charter schools – each doing in their own unique way the best job they can and often a job that not only meets but exceeds everybody's expectations of educating the children of my constituency and in many cases children bused in from many other constituencies. They're doing the best they can in really inferior conditions.

It seems that my colleague from Calgary-Varsity and I, by touring Western Canada high school late in June, shamed the Education minister and the government of Alberta into actually doing something. But what they did and what they've done in this budget is 10 per cent of what they should have done, and it's not followed by any sustainable, predictable funding plan, so we haven't really made any progress here, Mr. Speaker. What we've done, really, is classic Conservative: throw money at it and hope the critics sit down and shut up. Well, you know, you can't fix many roofs when you got a billion dollars' worth of roofs that leak and $100 million to fix them. While this may be a start, it's not nearly good enough.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available and available after each subsequent speaker, which is a five-minute period for brief questions and comments. Are there any wishing to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

An Hon. Member: What was it he really said?

Mr. Elsalhy: Exactly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was interrupted midway when he was called on the 15-minute time maximum, so I would like to ask him kindly to finish what he was stating.

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: I'm going to read Standing Order 29(2)(a) to everyone here so that you're familiar with it. It says:

Subject to clause (b), which allows for the 20 minutes for the first speaker and the following speaker, following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

Upon reading that, I'm not too sure that it's available for the reason the Member for Edmonton-McClung requested, but I will recognize that it has been allowed in the past to do so. So until that gets changed, I'd just like to refer you to the actual standing order. I think it was intended for brief questions and comments, not to continue speeches. But since it was done before, I will allow it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your ruling on that, and I appreciate your advice on that as well. I hope that it's taken and adhered to by all members of this House. We could use a little focus here from time to time, don't you think?

3:50

Mr. Taylor: The point is simply this. I could run through a list of every school in my constituency, and I could probably get it done in five minutes. You know, you have some schools, like Earl Grey elementary and Mount Royal junior high, that are in fair to good condition. You have some schools, like Western Canada high school, that are in pretty pathetic condition. You have some schools, like St. Mary's Catholic high school, that are in improved condition relative to where they were in 1999 when the school facilities audit was undertaken. But we have maintenance needs that have gone up significantly in a number of schools in the constituency in the past five years.

I guess, really, my point is this. It may be illustrated more vividly in Calgary-Currie, because Calgary-Currie is an inner-city residential constituency, than it is in some other constituencies where the school buildings on average may not be quite as old. But when you drive around the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton, the province of Alberta, you see schools as a symbol for this province's great paradox: unparalleled private-sector wealth alongside the public school infrastructure of a have-not country.

Mr. Speaker, when this House was in session last spring and we broke for March break, my wife and I went down to Costa Rica for a week. Now, I'll grant you that I saw some schools down there that were in worse condition than schools in my constituency, but I also saw some that were in better physical shape in Costa Rica than in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. Relative to the rest of Central and Latin America Costa Rica is a relatively prosperous country, but it ain't got nothing on good old Alberta.

This is the paradox of the province of Alberta expressed in schools, expressed in colleges and universities, expressed in hospitals and public health clinics, expressed in our road and rapid transit systems, expressed in our infrastructure generally: unparalleled private-sector wealth expressed in total in Fort McMurray in the region of Wood Buffalo, unparalleled private-sector wealth along with the public infrastructure of a have-not country because this government can't seem to see beyond next Tuesday. That, my friends, my colleagues, is pathetic. It's unacceptable, it's inexcusable, it's lazy, it's blinkered, and it's considerably less than the citizens of this province have a right to expect. It's about time – not that I expect them to rise to the occasion – that the government of Alberta started doing its job. I've yet to see any evidence that that's happening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to the second reading of the appropriation bill, Bill 44. I think the same question that's crossed my mind has crossed many of our minds here over the last few days, and that is: why are we here? Why are we sitting in this extraordinary session in the summer? It's like we've been sent back to summer school because the government can't add. We know that the government and the Premier have had trouble with math in the past.

I just want to say that I think it's a real disappointment that we are in fact having to have this session at all. The fact that this session is taking place at all is really a testament to the incompetence of this Progressive Conservative government. If this government could do the rudimentary things that a government should do, if it could perform the basic functions of a government such as budgeting and planning, we would not be here today. I think the primary reason that we're here is because the government apparently forgot to fund the schools when they passed their budget in the spring session.

Mr. Elsalhy: Forgot or ignored?

Mr. Mason: They forgot; they ignored. I don't know whether it's absent-mindedness, whether it's wilful deafness, or, you know, a simple lack of attention to its functions.

I'm looking at some quotes from Hansard. In fact, I asked our staff to put together all of the questions to the Minister of Education from the spring session and to include those questions to the Provincial Treasurer that had to do with the school budgets. At that time, of course, we in the Alberta NDP opposition were telling the government that they had not funded schools adequately. And it wasn't just our opinion, Mr. Speaker. On the 2nd of May the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview addressed the Provincial Treasurer. He said:

School boards across the province are facing a financial squeeze. Edmonton public is the latest school board to be looking at a deficit. In their proposed planning base document presented to the April 18 board meeting, they have projected a $7 million deficit in this year's budget.

He asked the Minister of Finance:

At a time of multibillion dollar surpluses why are school boards facing a financial squeeze so severe that they are forced to run deficits?

Well, the hon. provincial Minister of Finance talked about "school boards that are elected to carry out the business of providing an education . . . for our students" and that they have been given "a 5 per cent increase in this year's budget." She says that she thinks "the Minister of Education expects that that should suffice to operate those schools."

Then on the 8th of May the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview again addressed this issue to the Minister of Education. He said, "Edmonton public is one of a growing number of school boards across the province facing crippling budget deficits." Well, the minister again responded with a lot of verbiage and stuff about the Learning Commission, and he accused the NDP opposition of wanting to rush in and so on, but he said that it was "premature . . . to be speculating on whether or not schools will be in deficit positions."

It goes on. On the 18th of May I asked a question of the hon. Premier. I talked about the Alberta Teachers' Association, which said that day that it has become clear that Budget 2006 does not provide adequate funding . . . resulting in larger class sizes or running deficits – all of which are completely unacceptable in a province having successive multibillion dollar surpluses.

The Premier said:

Well, you know, Mr. Speaker . . . I have a difficult time understanding where these particular complaints come from . . . There are no cuts. There haven't been cuts since 1993-94. It's been more and more and more [money] . . . every year. So $330 million is a lot of money. That's just for operating, and that's in addition to all the dollars we've poured in for capital construction.

Mr. Speaker, the government cannot say that the opposition or school boards or teachers or parents did not bring to their attention the deficiency of the budget which they presented to this Legislature in the spring session because it's here and it's clear. It's a matter of public record. So why didn't they do it? Why didn't they fund it adequately?

You know, I heard the Minister of Education say: well, we haven't got the final numbers yet. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? They don't get the final numbers when they pass the spring budget in any year. For 30 years before that this government alone was able to provide a budget to this Legislature that minimally met the needs of school boards and children in this province without the final numbers, but somehow this government now is no longer able to do so. This minister is unable to do so, and this provincial Finance minister is unable to bring forward a budget that actually funds schools adequately.

So, Mr. Speaker, instead of listening to the ATA and to parents and to school boards across the province and instead of listening to the NDP opposition, the government passed the budget, and here we are in an emergency session – because that's what this is – to pass a sufficient budget so that there won't be layoffs in schools, so that we won't be turning children away from classrooms. Yet even so there's a real question as to whether or not it's enough. That is not competent governance. That is clearly a government that is unable to perform minimal functions that the people that elected it expect from it. It's a government, in my view, that is in crisis.

Mr. Speaker, I want to deal a little bit with health care services as well. Health authorities across the province have also been communicating to the government about the stresses and strains that they're experiencing. In Grande Prairie, for example, patients were repeatedly flown to Edmonton for emergency surgery. Emergency rooms, intensive care beds, even operating rooms in at least five health regions had to shut down because of acute staff shortages.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about growth and the pressures of growth. This government has been talking about growth for years. The whole function of the Alberta advantage, which was introduced in the mid-90s, over 10 years ago, was designed to facilitate economic growth. That was the government's claim. Yet when the growth occurs – and, I might add, not because of the Alberta advantage and the various cuts and changes that the government made at that time but because of sky-high world oil prices – it's amazing to see that this government is actually surprised by it and unprepared for it.

You know, if you look back to the other major goal of the government – and that was the elimination of the debt – you found the same thing. They worked so hard to pay down the debt. They poured billions of dollars into it, sacrificing people's jobs, sacrificing quality of care in hospitals, in seniors' lodges, and in our schools, but they paid down that debt with single-minded determination. When it was finally paid off, Mr. Speaker, they had no plan for the massive surpluses that replaced it. So even though they worked very hard and diligently, I might say, to pay down the debt, once they'd accomplished that goal, they seemed surprised to have gotten there. So we see a parallel situation. We see the paydown of the debt with no plan for the postdebt world, and we see the effort to build economic growth in the province with no plan to deal with the growth.

Now, some little changes in committees that the Premier has made, appointing the Minister of Justice as chairman of the committee and so on, is a bit like closing the barn door after the horse is out. So the hon. Minister of Justice may be there to close the door, but I'm here to tell him that the horse is gone from the barn. The growth is out there. It's impacting and affecting people around this province. Municipalities are unable to deal with it. Hospital and health authorities aren't able to deal with it. School boards are struggling to deal with it. Farmers are struggling to deal with it. The government has not prepared the groundwork for the growth that is taking place, and they refuse to look at managing the growth in any way.

They believe deeply in their hearts, I'm sure, in the religion of the free market. They don't believe in it as a tool or as an economic policy. They believe in it as a religion that's true always and forever, and they refuse to acknowledge that there may be exceptions from time to time when the free market does not meet the needs of the economy or of the people or even of business. So you have small businesses who are now hurting badly because they can't find labour.

You know, I heard recently about a restaurant in one of the towns that I visited that had to go out of business because they can't hire staff. You've got big corporations like McDonald's and Tim Hortons that are advertising for staff, offering scholarships. Well, those are big, multinational corporations, Mr. Speaker, and they're able to advertise for staff. But the mom-and-pop businesses, the small farmers, the small-business people around this province are really, really squeezed. Why? Because of this government's single-minded determination to dig up all of the tar sands as fast as they can, refine it regardless of the consequences, and pump it down to the United States to feed the United States' addiction with oil.

A former Premier of this province, Peter Lougheed, had suggested that we should moderate the pace of development because he, unlike the current Conservative crop, is not a religious believer in the free market system. I'm sure that he does believe in the free market system, but he can see that there is a need from time to time to manage the growth.

Why should we be in such a hurry to dig up all the tar sands just as fast as we can, refine it, and pump it down to the United States? This resource, Mr. Speaker, belongs not just to this generation, I would remind the government. It belongs to all future generations and needs to be managed in their interests as well. It's no good if we can buy lakefront property in B.C. and have giant Hummer vehicles and great big homes and so on in our generation if our grandchildren have nothing left. But the government doesn't seem to have thought of that. They seem to think that this will go on and on forever. Well, I assure them that it will not go on and on forever.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk a little bit about housing as well because this is a clear example of where a religious belief in the free market does not serve people well. When the economy grows, rents rise and there's a shortage of housing. There's a great lag time before new housing is brought on, and in the meantime people suffer because there isn't housing for them, or they can't afford the housing that does exist. So we have the shame of tent cities popping up in Fort McMurray, in parks. We have people who, even though they're working, are homeless.

So, Mr. Speaker, this government should be ashamed of itself, and this budget ought not to have been necessary. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. member because he brings up the fact that they were telling us months and months ago that school boards were entering into a deficit and that the first one was Edmonton public. I wonder if the hon. member has looked at, as a percentage of the funding envelope for instruction, what the cost of salaries and benefits has done over the last number of years. I can tell the hon. member that 13 years ago it was somewhere around 80 per cent. Today I've got school boards who write to me and show me that their average cost for salaries and benefits is around 92 per cent of the funding envelope.

Here's an hon. member who wonders why boards are having some difficulty, when the very board that he talks about is the first one that went to 23.8 hours of instructional time per week, thereby necessitating the additional hiring of, I think, about 1,400 teachers throughout Alberta to cover the time for the spares of the other teachers who were, in fact, in the classroom. So he should probably look at what the efficiency has been over the years rather than what the funding has been.

Mr. Mason: Well, to respond to that, this government is responsible for the operation of education and has legislation in place regarding school boards and labour legislation and all of those other things. If it was just one school board, it might be an excuse. But it's a lot of school boards, Mr. Speaker, and it's a lot of health authorities, and it's a lot of municipalities, and it's a lot of housing. So his excuse is flimsy at best and is clearly just an attempt by his government to escape responsibility for the crisis that they have created.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a great opportunity to speak because we're already talking on education. The Minister of Advanced Education alluded to perhaps school boards overextending themselves. I happened to be on the board at that time with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and at that point the majority of the schools' money did go into supplies, equipment, services, as well as salaries. About 85 to 90 per cent is eaten up by salaries. Some schools were in fact budgeting as high as 91, 92 per cent. Recognizing that fact, we ensured that they capped the clawback; whether they released some people from their contracts, the bottom line was that you could not go over 90 per cent because it was just going to end up in an obvious deficit. There was less than 8 per cent, then, to dedicate to supplies, equipment, and services.

Basically, the whole budget was dedicated to salaries. It didn't make much sense. So they made sure – and it still is a policy, if I am correct – that they cannot budget beyond 90 per cent. Between 85 and 90 per cent would be an ideal operating budget within elementary, junior high, and high schools.

Mr. Elsalhy: If they run a deficit, would they get supplementary supply?

Mr. Bonko: No, they do not get supplementary supply if they run a deficit. They have to pay off that deficit, whether they cut back in custodial hours, whether they cut back in the basics, such as librarians, custodians, some of the support staff.

Mr. Elsalhy: They do fundraising.

Mr. Bonko: No, they cannot fund raise either, and that's another misconception perhaps.

I'd like to talk about my ministry that I didn't get a chance to talk about last night, which is Sustainable Resource Development. Sustainable Resource Development is asking for an additional increase of $251,503,000: $231 million is for forest fire costs, and $20 million is to survey, which they do plenty of, and apparently for control of the mountain pine beetle.

Well, back in the spring when this ministry was asking for their first allotment of money, we on this side with a vision, which we were accused of having, said that, in fact, with supplementary supply they continue to ask for money after they shortchange themselves during the budget. They always underestimate, and this has been going on for years.

I'll give some case in point. In 2002-2003 the budget was $227 million. In 2003-2004 they were under by about $128 million, and in the next year $124 million. They continue to come back to the cup because they know that it's going to be full because of the fact that our economy is doing so well. They realize that they don't have to budget efficiently. Other households have to budget because they don't have extra money. They just can't go to the bank, open the vault and say: "You know what? I need a loan to get me to the next banking day." Unlike this government here. They know that they can always go to the bank; they can go to the trough, whatever you want to call it. The supply continues to flow in. We're in a very fortunate position that we do have that supply. Times are good.

But we should be managing our resources. We should be managing our budgets far, far better, showing some leadership to all Albertans. I'm sure that this isn't a new thing when I talk about the fact that debt not just in Alberta communities or Canadian communities but worldwide is astronomical. So we ought to be showing some leadership, being able to stay within our budgeted amounts.

Like I said, the budget here, the base budget, has continued to be very low; they've not accurately predicted or forecasted for many years. You ask the question, and you don't get an answer. That's just the way it is. We can't predict whether we're going to have a large rainfall or whether we're going to have severe fires, but we can tell pretty much by looking at the almanac. Perhaps some of us have read that before. It gives us an indication. We can tell by our spring what it's going to be like. This year has been no different than any other year except that perhaps we've had far more forest fires. That's why we're asking for $231 million more in firefighting costs.

Just this spring we asked for equipment for firefighting, and I thought it was going to be for perhaps planes or something, but we ended up leasing some bombers and that. Some of these bombers had some fatalities. I believe that was the case there just this spring.

Mr. Elsalhy: We're buying planes for business.

Mr. Bonko: We're buying planes for business. That's right.

So the biggest question is: why does the ministry not budget for wildfire operations a little bit more realistically so that budget figures are more appropriate to the actual amount spent at the end of the year, so we have an idea of exactly how it's being spent? What steps do they take to ensure that the efficiencies at the wildfires or the forest fires are kept in line? I'm not sure.

Talk about the mountain pine beetle. We're asking for another $20 million. Well, back in the spring the ministry was saying that, you know, they're doing everything they can to ensure and allocate money to fight this dreaded disease aside from hoping for cold weather. They're monitoring on the ground. They're working closely with B.C.

Mr. Elsalhy: Now they're pointing fingers.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah. Now they're pointing fingers.

It appears that the government finally may be taking this a little bit more seriously, and they're trying to put some more money into it. Finally they're committing more than just a token amount, which they did in the spring and the year before that with a million dollars coupled with the federal investment because they were only giving a million dollars at that point. Now we're up to $20 million. But I think this could be a little bit too late.

Can the minister explain what actions exactly are going to be taken with the money? What other plans are being considered with regard to that additional $20 million that wasn't earlier budgeted? The mountain pine beetle, as he said many, many times, is a natural infestation. Warm winters, fire suppression, and migration from B.C. have allowed this phenomenon to continue to grow. It's unfortunate. But, you know, burning of trees, harvesting infested wood, or prescribed burns are about the only ideas or initiatives that we've got so far.

The money is going to be all right, but is it going to go far enough? I think we've been calling on this action, as I've said in the past, and we'll continue to call on the government to protect this forest and this valuable commodity which employs more than 49,000 people in its billions of dollar industry.

When we had an opportunity to go up to some of the pulp mill plants, we realized that SRD works closely with the ministries and some of the businesses out there. In fact, if this fire isn't raging out of control near any township, causing no concern to life, buildings, why not let it burn, then, instead of fighting it? As I said, this is an ethical question. They said: "This is wrong. We can talk about this for a long, long time. You know what? This is valuable money that we're just going to let sit here and go up in flames." So they said: "You know what? We can't agree with that particular one." They said, "We've got a concern with that one." We said: "It's an ethical question. Do you let it burn, or do you not let it burn?" I believe under the ministry you have a bid that you can have allowable burns in the area. You do have allowable burns in the area, that you can in fact allow to burn instead of fighting every little bit.

Now, the minister is indicating that that perhaps is not the case, but I believe that is the case. You can't fight every single solitary fire out there.

Mr. Elsalhy: It has to be contained.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah. It's got to be contained.

The fact is, you know, if some of this fire is taking place near where the pine beetle is coming in, would it be prudent to let it burn, or would you fight it? So you fight it, you save the forest, you save the resource, only to have in the spring or at some time over the course of the year the beetles being able to come through and destroy the forest. So now you've got a double-edged sword here. You've pinned yourself against fighting the fire, saving the resource, saving the commodity, saving the jobs, the livelihood of the industry. Or do you allow the bugs to take it down?

This is the question I put to some of the foresters out there. What do you do? Do you let the fire burn along the eastern slopes, where the beetle is coming in, or do you fight it? This is part of the problem that B.C. is facing. They've done such a good job in suppressing the forest fires in B.C. Over the course of the 100 years prior to this forest fires, you know, took a natural course. They didn't have people to fight them. Long before forest firefighting was set up, it took a natural course. Because we've begun to be so good at fighting them, we've allowed this infestation to get a better handle on it and take control instead of us having control over it.

Communities that perhaps we can talk about that are ravaged right now in B.C., a larger area than New Brunswick – and they're going to continue to remove the entire timber supply in those areas – would be Quesnel or Prince George. These areas are a good example of what happens if we're not in fact being prudent with our forest firefighting measures or, better yet, with fighting the pine beetle.

We talk about, you know: let's watch and see what the weather does. I don't think that's enough. I think now we have to be a little bit more aggressive, and we have to put more money into it. This ministry has to employ more people on the ground to do more monitoring, as they say, or to do more cutting and prescribed burns or maybe change the agreements. Even though they're not part of the plans right now, have those companies go over and harvest those infected or potentially affected areas right now, during the course of the year, or before it becomes infected. They can go back later on and take care of the other areas. I know we've got an ability to allow some flexibility within agreements, or at least we should have. So that would be one specific piece I would talk to the minister about.

Other priorities. Perhaps we could talk about SRD improving the enforcement roll of the Natural Resources Conservation Board by hiring more field officers and training more as well. I know we have not been successful in that area. We continue to need more and more in that area as well. Perhaps they're being drawn into the oil and gas industry like a lot of the other communities and large cities and, in fact, in half the country. You know: come to Alberta because we've got a lot here to offer you. We don't have affordable housing. We don't have affordable prices on homes or rents, but we've got a lot to offer you. This is a problem. We've asked for these people to come to Alberta with the signs of money and streets paved of gold like at McMurray. There's the perfect example. Yet when they get there, I think they're a little bit shocked. They're a little bit horrified at some of the conditions. We talked to some Americans that have gone up there, and they can't believe that this is what the prices are, that this is what they're led to believe is affordable.

You know, the Premier asks: come to Alberta. Other ministries have always asked for the economic opportunities. Come to Alberta. We continue to ask these people to come, but when they've come, we've got no opportunities for them to be able to live. Affordable housing in some cases is two years on the waiting list, and then the people aren't able to have their homes inspected. We don't have the ability to be able to even have the people registering. We've got such a backlog. This is something we've asked for, though. So did we create our own problem here? You've got to wonder about it.

Other priorities for SRD: more forestry officers, opening more offices, hiring more scientists to enforce the Forests Act regulations and the conservation initiatives, and redeveloping recovery plans to designated areas for special habitats. We could in fact ensure that some of the species that are supposedly in danger or at risk – it actually does take enforcement or at least putting into play. So I've talked a little bit about my area, Sustainable Resource Development, which I wouldn't have had an opportunity to talk about last night.

We could talk about another hot topic which seemed to be one of the reasons why we did come back into this session, which is because we didn't in fact properly plan for the looming crisis, we'll call it, before the budget time of September 30, when school boards have the projected enrolments and they submit the monies that they need to be able to operate for the entire year. They don't get to come back to the government and say: look, we're short here. They have to make their submissions based on enrolments by September 30. So before September 30 comes, and we have the candidates all seeking the leadership and then having an embarrassing question, we're here redeveloping a strategy again to talk about the priorities.

We'll talk about some of the schools within my constituency. Some that have placed high on the raw scores need the investments, need to ensure that they have the ability to track the students so they're not closing schools. You know, Dickinsfield junior high, the one that my daughter went to, didn't do too bad, but it can always use some money. Apparently, it could use about $350,000. With the escalating costs of construction and the overall supplies, equipment, and demand, it's going to be more than that, so what some of the schools, in fact, have had allocated to them for original estimates is going to be thrown out the window. Look at the costs of just completing the Anthony Henday or some of the stuff down there in Calgary I'm not specific with. The overrun costs are just outrageous. Are we going to be able to allow some contingency plans for already preapproved projects for schools to ensure that they're able to meet that same scope of work required but not adversely affect the board directly? They can't. They don't have and they won't have the ability to pull this out of their own budget. So they've got to rely on a government that's originally given them the grant money to be able to fulfill this particular piece.

Killarney junior high school in my constituency has received a poorer rating. It's mid-500s, and it needs over a million dollars, $1.4 million at last estimate a few years ago. Now, I mean, I went to Killarney junior high a number of years ago, and it's a school that's continuing to grow. It's got alternative programs and continues to attract new students through these measures, but we've got to realize that $1.4 million is just not going to cut it. Again, like I said, the spiralling costs and construction costs if you're able to find the trade workers are going to bump that number probably up to $2 million. Another concern right there.

Mee-Yah-Noh, just south of that, is one of the feeder schools. Now, this school is definitely older. It's about the 1960s. You know, if you or I have had a place since 1960, we're going to put a little bit of money into it because there's no way you could . . . [Mr. Bonko's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coumts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to address the Assembly this afternoon and talk about the need for the $252 million of supplementary estimates that we need for the rest of this fiscal year and that Sustainable Resource Development is under control of.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you rising under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Coumts: No, I was not.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Was there anybody else?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I heard you say, "Seeing none." You were going to acknowledge somebody else.

The Deputy Speaker: I saw none. I was questioned on it, so I thought someone wanted to rise. Please proceed.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me just put it this way for the hon. member and for all Albertans and for members of this House. This government and this minister take a prudent approach to budgeting for wildfires. We take a prudent approach. The base budget that we use for wildfires this year is similar to previous years. It comes in at close to $77 million. That gets us set up with contracts for helicopters. That gets us set up with contracts for all of our firefighters that we feel that we might need for the year.

Common sense will tell anyone here and common sense will tell any Albertan that it's very, very difficult to predict forest fires. Yes, you can come up with some ideas that you could have a wet year or you could have a dry year. Last year, for example, it was fairly wet, and therefore we didn't need as much money in supplementary estimates because we didn't have as many forest fires. But, Mr. Speaker, that will tell you that the dollars will vary depending on the amount of forest fires that you have. Also, it's not just the number of forest fires but the severity of a forest fire.

This particular year has been a very, very busy year for forest fires. Our near-record levels for our driest winter and spring and extremely warm temperatures have resulted in more than 1,600 wildfires burning over 116,000 hectares of land. That's an area that would be the size of Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Oh, my.

Mr. Coutts: Yeah. You know how large that is.

Ms Calahasen: Yes, I do.

Mr. Coutts: Wildfires burned near the communities of Caroline, Whitecourt, Hinton, Evansburg, and Gift Lake, and on July 4 the community of Nordegg was evacuated for a total of four days when the wildfire burned within almost 1.5 kilometres close to the hamlet. During that same week low relative humidity, warm temperatures, and extreme lightning – and that's something else that we can't predict: lightning strikes – resulted in the province seeing 169 active wildfires burning on a single day. We had to have the resources in place, and we had to have resources at our disposal to look after those 169 wildfires.

The wildfire season this particular year is not officially over until October 1, meaning that we still have over one month of wildfire season left. The total amount that the department currently expects to spend on wildfires in this fiscal year is about $308.9 million, and that will almost be a record. The $231.5 million in additional funds is what we actually need to complete this year.

The hon. member made some comments about pine beetle, and the comments are a little confusing, but I want to say that this ministry has been very proactive and had a very busy year in dealing with mountain pine beetle. We have kept on contract through the winter a number of our firefighters to do and assist us with extensive air and ground surveys, and we will continue to do that through this year so that we can catch the infestations that happen during this summer's fly of the pine beetle. We need to do that as early as possible so that we can cut and burn individual trees, so that we can look at large areas that would do prescribed burns.

We've had close to 14,000 infested mountain pine beetle trees that have been identified and selectively cut and burned by our forestry staff, the majority of these trees being in the Willmore wilderness park area. That's a real credit to the Department of Community Development, who has helped us establish a protocol to go in there and make sure that we don't abrogate our responsibility to the people of Alberta by letting the parks go to a brilliant red colour from pine beetle kill.

It's true, Mr. Speaker, that a new infestation has been recently identified in the north of the eastern slopes, the farthest north the mountain pine beetle has ever been in Alberta. The pine beetles that have infested not only have been identified by landowners but certainly confirmed by our forestry staff in Grande Prairie, Fox Creek, and Fairview. We're working with municipalities as well as private landowners to find the extent of the recent infestations, and we're working with the industry, which is so important in this, as well as provincial parks and protected areas and the federal government to survey and control as much as possible all of the beetle infestations. As soon as they're identified, we'll make sure that we go in there and cut and burn.

We will be training seasonal firefighters in surveying and keeping them on staff over the winter for the mountain pine beetle control. Ground surveys are being conducted this fall and will determine the number of trees infested for cut and burn treatments. Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely necessary that we remain vigilant in our efforts at limiting mountain pine beetles in our forests as Alberta's entire pine forest, which is 10 per cent of the entire area of the province of Alberta, is now at risk.

The department needs an estimated $22.6 million in total this fiscal year to continue this battle. Mr. Speaker, our original budget for the mountain pine beetle was $2.6 million, and that's all we needed at that particular time for the amount of trees that we had, but seeing that we have more trees infected with mountain pine beetle, this government has taken a very proactive approach and put the resources towards eradicating and stopping this pine beetle at the border of Alberta and British Columbia. These two requests make up $251.5 million in supplementary funding.

It's done to make sure that we preserve and protect this natural resource that we have that Albertans not only enjoy seeing but that they also work in. It provides to our economy about $12 billion worth of revenue a year, Mr. Speaker, so it's very, very important that we do the prudent thing and budget responsibly, and when we have emergencies, we can call on supplementary estimates to assist. Actually, in my opinion, you end up budgeting better when you know that the supplementary estimates are there to cover the costs of the action that's already been taken both on wildfires and on pine beetle.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Am I allowed to make a comment and question, Mr. Speaker, to the minister? I've been exposed to the beetle problem in B.C., and I would say to you, sir, that you are certainly on the right path with your burning and what you're doing. But one of the things I would emphasize to you, with all due respect, is that I think that the work of science has to go on. I would urge you, sir, with your compatriots in B.C. forestry to continue on that vein as well.

You're right. Everything you've said today I agree with. It's a very serious problem. For example, the property that I'm aware of in British Columbia: we took 200 trees off this year because we didn't handle it properly. We should have done the slash and burn and done it in the winter, which we didn't do. We're paying the price now.

I would emphasize that the government has done so much good work in health in terms of the heart and the kind of work you've done with children and the children's hospital. I would also suggest: don't give up on the science part of this. I think that's a very important one.

The other comment I'd just like to give you is on your fish hatchery in Cold Lake. We were up there visiting, my colleague and I, and it just is a very positive experience that we had. The staff treated us so well. I hate to say this, but I never knew it existed. Let me tell you that the tour was wonderful. It's a facility everyone should see, and when you see the condition of Cold Lake, the lake itself, and how it's nurturing the well-being of the fish that are in it – I understand it's not been restocked in the last year number of years. It's held its own is what I'm trying to say, and the water is really something to behold for Alberta. So I think there's a feather you can wear in your cap, and I hope that continues to be developed.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to respond?

Mr. Coutts: Just a quick response. Thank you very much. Our staff at the Cold Lake hatchery are very qualified staff. They work very, very hard to make sure that the hatchery provides the fish that can go into lakes. We do the science around that to make sure that Albertans can go out there and have a pleasant experience not only on the sports fishing side but also on the domestic side.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake certainly brought the fact that we need to make some improvements to the hatchery. We took the trip up there as well. I was, like you, very surprised and, actually, a little astounded that we had such a high-quality hatchery. This summer when I was in Korea, I thought I was going to learn something from the hatchery in Korea. Well, we don't have to take a back seat to anyone. We have a very, very good hatchery: quality water and good people with good science behind them to make sure that our fishing experience is a good one here. We'll continue to put the resources to that.

Your comment about not forgetting the science for mountain pine beetle is well taken. We continue to make sure that the scientists that we have on staff will continue to help us. As a matter of fact, we thought at one time that the Jack pine in northern Alberta in our boreal forest was exempt from mountain pine beetle. The scientists have said that that's not true. If the mountain pine beetle get into that Jack pine and go across the boreal forest, within the next 15 to 18 years that pine beetle could go all the way across Canada, all across the boreal forest, well into Labrador. We've advised the federal government of that. As well, B.C. has advised the federal government of that. The federal government has been participating not only, again, in some of the science but also in helping to facilitate some of the dollars to help stop the beetle. We think that this is the best stand that can be made at the high altitude between Alberta and British Columbia. So it's ongoing.

We also have to thank the ongoing presence of the science and the protocol that was put into place by British Columbia and Alberta back in early 2005 where they are participating and helping us with information and giving us support in whatever way they can. They're also supporting our industry to identify areas where mountain pine beetle could come across and the next area that we should be looking at.

So thank you for your comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many others have commented, it has been very difficult to have time to raise the kind of issues that we wish to raise given the fact that in supplementary supply there were only three and a half hours to discuss $1.3 billion and the procedure was to go through the departments in alphabetical order. That left out the one that I want to comment on; namely, Solicitor General and Public Security. I don't think we got very far last night. It's probably still with the As in terms of the departments.

I find it lamentable that we don't have an opportunity to have a give-and-take with the minister. I'm going to comment on the appropriations bill, Bill 44, and especially the amounts of money under Solicitor General and Public Security, but I would have preferred to hear some sort of introduction or explanation from the minister about these amounts before I make my remarks. Anyway, I will proceed.

There are two parts to the monies that are being requested for Solicitor General. The capital investment of $9,600,000 is requested for the development of an integrated province-wide strategic information technology system for police, corrections, and other public safety partners. I think this is something that's really needed. I applaud the movement towards a kind of rationalization of policing in Alberta, not to go so far as to suggest that Alberta have its own police force – many people are suspicious that that's where we're heading – but certainly to have a rationalization in terms of education, so the direction towards a police academy is something that is in the right direction.

This kind of proposal to develop an integrated strategic information technology system is quite laudable. My only two questions are: how much have municipal police forces already invested in their own information technology system, and how much are they going to actually be losing when this integrated system is put into place? I need to have more information about that. The second question about this integrated system is about the whole issue of abuse. What kind of monitoring, what kind of oversight of this integrated system will be put into place? It's easy to think about the Overtime scandal. I happened to be in the Overtime bar not too long ago, and I was reminded by the owner about that event when Edmonton police ran through their system the names of people that they were planning to catch in a sting operation. We all know about the aftermath of that. So what kind of oversight, what kind of prevention of abuse of using these computer systems will be put into place? That's all the comment I have about that portion of the money, capital investment in this technology system.

Now I want to turn to the other matter. There is $4 million being requested to provide an interim solution to the overcrowding at the Edmonton Remand Centre until a new one is built. According to press releases, I guess there's going to be a new remand centre to the tune of $308 million, although I'm not sure how that budgeting process unfolds. There's nothing in Infrastructure this year to cover that. I expect that there will be amounts from Infrastructure in the years to come, but a new Edmonton remand centre wouldn't be built until 2012, which raises all kinds of issues in terms of what is to be done in the meantime. So the $4 million asked for in the appropriation bill is for some interim solution to deal with overcrowding. Some of the inmates will be transferred to the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre, and sentenced inmates from Fort Saskatchewan will then be transferred to the federal Grande Cache Institution and so on.

I am not disputing the need for a new remand centre. I've raised numerous questions in the past, both in question period and before the Public Accounts Committee, about the terrible conditions in the remand centre in Edmonton. The problem is obvious. We have an institution, the Edmonton Remand Centre, which was built in 1979 to hold 332 inmates and now has more than 700.

It's not just the Edmonton Remand Centre. We forget easily that the Calgary Remand Centre, which was built in 1993 to hold 361 prisoners, now holds more than 500. That is a tremendous problem too, and I don't read anywhere about suggestions about what to do with the Calgary Remand Centre. I understand that there are 14 different units in the Calgary Remand Centre, including a number of medium security units for the general population, maximum security, female unit, disciplinary segregation, a suicide-watch unit, et cetera. Again, double-bunking occurs in the remand centre in Calgary just as much as in the Edmonton Remand Centre.

I am quite disturbed by this particular statistic. The average stay in the remand centre in Calgary is 14 days, but it is estimated that 15 to 20 per cent of inmates stay for one year, and 5 per cent stay for two years. That, to me, raises all kinds of questions about what we are actually doing to people through the remand centre. I mean, if most people in the remand centre are waiting for trial, and they have to wait a whole year or even longer, then in effect we are punishing them before they have a trial, and I think that's quite unacceptable.

The conditions are obviously lamentable in the Calgary Remand Centre and the Edmonton Remand Centre and the Red Deer Remand Centre and other institutions throughout the province. So my question is: what kind of consultation is taking place, especially with all the players in the justice system, to examine the whole picture, not just the need for one new remand centre but the needs overall?

I just want to say a few things about that because I think that if we don't do that, then a new remand centre is just a stopgap measure and doesn't deal with the real problem. I don't want to see a situation in which we're rushing to a solution before we have looked at all the different possibilities.

Given the trend of Conservative governments, especially federal and provincial, demanding that there be changes to the Criminal Code – for example, mandatory minimum sentences, less use of conditional sentencing, limiting conditional release, all of which eliminates judicial discretion, taking a lot of power and wisdom away from judges – that whole approach of Conservative policy guarantees that there will even be more offenders going to jail.

Now, it's interesting. There was an MLA review of the correctional system in Alberta, submitted in November 2002. That review was responding to a completely different situation, I assume. It seemed in reading the review that that was a response to complaints that actually we were too soft on prisoners, that they had "club-fed" situations in the correctional system, so most of the recommendations tried to make things tougher. The report also states that because of the use of conditional sentencing, the demands are not so great because there are other alternatives, so some youth detention centres were actually closed.

Of course, the situation now has shifted again as Conservative policies are recommending against conditional sentencing, so the demands on the system have changed and are much greater than before and will be greater. In fact, the MLA report which I referred to says that adult offender custody populations, especially offenders on remand, have been rising during the past year. In 2001-02, the remand population increased by 23 per cent and the sentenced population in Alberta facilities grew by 9 per cent over the previous year.

Mr. Speaker, that is going to continue to increase because of the policies of the federal government and the provincial government in Alberta, and more and more people are going to be incarcerated. Really, if it's the trend that the prison population will increase exponentially, then a new remand centre is not what we need. Right now we need an urgent review of the whole system.

Again, it's a question of planning. If this is the direction that the governments are going in, then we need to have greater planning for the future. What about the other facilities? Are we going to have to have other prisons being built, more prisons and larger prisons? It's a huge, huge issue, and I would like to see more study, more reports, more analysis of the whole situation than I'm seeing right now.

I'm asking that the whole issue be seen in a wider perspective, not just focusing on the one issue of a new remand centre. I mean, it leaves the question: who are the inmates in the remand centre? How many inmates in remand are there because there actually is no room in some of the other prisons like the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre?

Now, I have a personal experience along that line because I visited someone in the remand centre here who was actually sentenced for a white-collar crime of defrauding his employer. The judge wanted to make an example of him, so he was sentenced, but he stayed for a number of months in the remand centre because there were no cells open in the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre. I mean, he was put in with violent offenders. Here was a person that committed a white-collar crime and mercifully he wasn't double-bunked with somebody who was accused of a more serious crime. What are the solutions here if not moving in the direction of building more prisons?

Who is in the remand centre? Now, my assumption has been that the remand population consists of those who are waiting for trial and not, as the hon. minister said to this House, that if they are in remand, they must have done something wrong. We have no right to say that about someone who is waiting for his trial. Eventually they may be found guilty, but they also may be found innocent. What we should not be doing is punishing them before they have their trial. That's why the terrible conditions in the remand centre are so important. I mean, we have people there waiting for trial living in terrible conditions. That goes against the fundamental principle of justice that people should be considered innocent until proven guilty.

Who is in the remand centre? Well, the evidence seems to indicate that there are a disproportionate number of aboriginal men in the remand centre. In fact, the aboriginal population in Alberta is about 40 per cent in terms of inmates in provincial jails, and that raises all kinds of issues, which I'm not going to go into now. It leads one to think about a greater need for making ourselves aware of cultural differences, of the need for appointment of aboriginal Crown prosecutors and aboriginal judges and dealing with the whole aboriginal population in a different way. It seems to me that if there is a disproportionate number of aboriginal people in the remand centre, maybe it's the whole issue of: well, they may not appear for trial so keep them in prison, have the bail high so that they can't afford to pay it, and keep them there. Now, I find that quite unacceptable. We need to have different kinds of approaches understanding the aboriginal population.

Well, Mr. Speaker, my time is up, and I have much, much more to say. Again, this is not adequate, so someone ask me a question.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member appears to be talking with some degree of expertise on the population in prisons. But having very recently, about a year or a year and a half ago, done a thorough review of all correctional facilities in Alberta, I know for a fact – the first question: has he read the report? Because as a critic he should have. If he has read the report, he would have known that Alberta's correctional facilities are about 50 or 60 per cent vacant right now.

My supplemental to that question will be: how does he arrive at the conclusion that we may have to or are in a position to have to build more prisons? The reason why we have 50 or 60 per cent vacancy is not because we have fewer offences but because of some of the sentencing trends toward alternative sentences. So how does he arrive at this conclusion when the facts clearly don't support it?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond?

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have any statistics, but the money that's being requested for . . . [interjections] I read your report. The money that's being requested is to transfer inmates from Fort Saskatchewan to Grande Cache. Now, Grande Cache is a federal institution. Why are we moving people from Fort Saskatchewan to Grande Cache? Why don't we send them to Lethbridge or other provincial correctional centres? I think the issue of space in provincial prisons, correctional centres, is a serious issue.

Also, I think the situation is changing because, as I've said, of alternatives. Is the hon. member saying that this government is going to continue to emphasize alternative sentencing, restorative justice approaches? Because that is the issue. It seems to me that the issue of dealing with our burgeoning prison population is to reduce the incarcerated population by turning to other measures. I mean, building our way out of the correctional crisis – and I think there is a correctional crisis; it's here and it's going to get worse in the future – is not the answer.

Actually, I'm glad the hon. member raised the issue with me because I think we need to actually go back and look at the MLA review. It was looking at other possibilities of alternative sentencing. That's what we need. We need to find ways of keeping people out of prison. We need to find ways of providing other ways; for example, supervision within the community. If it's a property crime against an employer, surely the issue of restitution comes into it. Why throw someone into prison? Have that person restore what they stole to their employer and serve in the community and do some community service. There are all sorts of ways in which we can deal with people, especially first-time offenders, to make sure that the population in prison doesn't get bigger and bigger and bigger.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others that wish to participate under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for an opportunity to enter the debate this afternoon. Our ministry's vision is to ensure that Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work, and raise their families, and we require funding for two very important initiatives that further support that vision. In conjunction with Infrastructure and Transportation we recently announced plans to replace the Edmonton Remand Centre. Construction of the new facility is expected to take four to five years, and until the centre is complete, overcrowding at the Edmonton Remand Centre will continue to put the safety of staff and inmates at risk. So we need the $4 million to help alleviate that situation.

These funds will allow us to transfer provincially sentenced offenders currently housed in the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre to the federal Grande Cache Institution. Moving these offenders will free up space at Fort Saskatchewan to house more inmates from the Edmonton Remand Centre, therefore relieving some of the pressure and overcrowding at the Remand Centre. This requires $1.6 million for additional staff in Fort Saskatchewan to address security issues associated with housing remanded inmates, $500,000 to transport inmates from Fort Saskatchewan to Grande Cache as well as the additional cost to transport remand inmates from Fort Saskatchewan to Edmonton for court appearances, and finally, Mr. Speaker, $1.9 million in per diem payments to Correctional Service Canada, which operates the Grande Cache facility.

Mr. Speaker, we are also developing a new central crime database for our law enforcement agencies. The five-year, $100 million commitment by the Alberta government will enhance the safety and security of Albertans. In fiscal year '06-07 $9.6 million will begin the initial groundwork to start moving the project forward. This project will develop a comprehensive computer system that will improve the ability of law enforcement agencies, including police, sheriffs, and corrections, to share important criminal intelligence information. The systems will allow easier input and access to that information from anywhere in the province and should provide real-time information to front-line officers. So these two initiatives are vital to ensure that Albertans continue to live in safe and secure communities.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned the fact of who was actually studying the issue regarding this IT system. I can let him know that there has been an executive team in place from the police services as well as from our ministry and from RGE working together to look at the future as to what type of model would be in place. As well, I want to remind the hon. member and this Assembly that the population of Alberta is smaller than the size of Toronto, where they have one system for their police service. The issue that we have is eight major police services in Alberta that have eight different systems. So the issue is: how do we connect them all together? How do we provide that information and that sharing of information and resources to all of our police services throughout Alberta? Even though we have geographic issues and boundaries to deal with, the size of the police service in Toronto is, in fact, larger than the size of our 5,300 or 5,400 police officers in Alberta. So we want to obviously take that next step, and this government has provided that leadership in moving in that direction to ensure the safety and security of our communities.

I do want to touch on a few of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora's comments regarding the capital for other remand centres. Of course, there are issues that he mentioned. We are looking at the capital planning process for 2007-2008. Actually, we're meeting with the hon. minister for capital infrastructure planning regarding those requests and those needs that we have in other centres; for example, in the Calgary Remand Centre and the Calgary Correctional Centre as well. Those are going to be developed over the next year, and of course we have to go through the government process for capital plans. So we are aware of those needs. We are looking at those projects as we move forward in the coming years.

I had some concern with the hon. member blaming the Conservative government for filling facilities, and on the other hand my Liberal counterpart's comments were that he wants less individuals in the jails and to put them back on the street. The issue is that these individuals have been remanded either by a judge or by a justice of the peace to ensure the safety and security of the public, and that's why they're being held in custody. There are murderers. There are pedophiles. There are sexual assaults. There are rapists. There are assaults causing bodily harm, shootings, and stabbings that occur every weekend and almost on a daily basis throughout Alberta. These people are a risk to the general public, and that's why they're being held in remand. No, they haven't been convicted. Yes, they may sit in remand for two years, but it's better having a murderer sit in remand than having that murderer, who could commit another offence similar to that, exposed to the public. Our goal as the Conservative government is to ensure that we can provide the leadership and the facilities and the storage of remanded individuals and/or those individuals who are sentenced into correctional facilities.

I applaud the federal government. This Conservative federal government is looking at new initiatives, ensuring that there are deterrents in place for future potential offenders to look at, saying, "Do I want to spend five years in jail for this offence?" whereas right now they may spend 18 months and they're kicked out, or they used to. So I applaud this federal Conservative government for the initiatives they're taking and hope to see a lot more this fall when Parliament opens up again.

Mr. Speaker, I think that those are some of the comments that I have other than, obviously, the dollars that we're asking for in Solicitor General and Public Security are smaller dollars but will have a huge impact on the service level we provide within the ministry and, as well, to ensure the protection and safety of Albertans as well as the staff that we have in our ministry and the inmates and/or the remanded individuals themselves.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is general support in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning for the remand centre. Certainly, there's been a long number of comments over the last year or two about the fact that some justices of the peace and such are not putting people that maybe should be put into some incarceration because of the fact that the remand centre has been too packed.

However, when the issue of the remand centre was brought into public light as to where it would be sited, this became something of an issue in my riding. The mayor of Edmonton mentioned a site near the Alberta Hospital, which is in Edmonton-Manning, which is my riding, and this has created a great deal of consternation among the residents of my riding, many who have seen the Edmonton maximum institution, Alberta Hospital, Henwood, and other institutions brought there. They're important institutions, but I think the feeling is that we've got our fair share.

There is opposition, which is very clear, to the fact of placing it at that particular site. I must make that clear. Ninety-nine per cent of many communications which I've received are against the siting near Alberta Hospital or, indeed, in having some suggestions, you know, from members of the Edmonton Police Service that it really only makes sense to have it downtown because there is one there already. They would be building on. There is land that could be made available from the city. My question to the minister is: will you ensure that it doesn't go near Alberta Hospital and that we could maybe see it downtown? Take the interests of the police service members and others who think that, as you say, murderers, pedophiles, rapists, thieves being transported on a regular basis to the courthouse, to the main police headquarters in Edmonton might be a mistake, that we don't want them travelling daily on our roads.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I have the hon. minister respond, I'd like to remind the hon. Member for St. Albert that we're not in committee.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for those questions. I take his concerns to heart. I, too, have received a number of e-mails from residents in Edmonton, in the northeast area, in and around the Edmonton hospital. Obviously that is one of the locations due to the amount of government land that is available to us, but we are looking at other sites. Our department has recently met with the mayor and I believe council in Fort Saskatchewan to look at existing land within the Fort Saskatchewan complex as well as just across the street from it as well as looking at other opportunities and other government-owned land in and around the Edmonton area, around EYOC and other land in the downtown area as well.

There are a number of options that we are looking at and, again, looking at what the facility should look like, how it should be provided, how it should be housed, and obviously looking at the long term, the number of inmates that a remand centre can hold, to ensure that we have that space available for 25 to 30 years down the road so that we have a clear vision of ensuring that when we've reached 2030 or 2035, in fact, that facility will still be in use and the ability to provide a sufficient and safe service not only to the inmates but to the staff and corrections officers as well that work in those facilities. So we are looking at those.

I take the member's questions to heart and will let our department know, and obviously we'll keep the hon. member in the loop as we move through the process.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods wish to participate in the debate?

Mrs. Mather: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: In debate on the bill?

The Deputy Speaker: In debate on the bill.

Mr. Renner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very pleased to discuss the request that's included in this bill as it applies to Municipal Affairs. As you know, $20.4 million of these estimates apply to Municipal Affairs. The lion's share of that is $13.4 million, which is the first increment of a $50 million commitment that the government has made to reinstate the underground storage tank program.

This was a very successful program that assisted many small-business operators and municipalities throughout the province to deal with the contamination that they found themselves with as a result of leaking gas tanks from old technology. That program had a limitation both in total dollars, which was met, as well as individual claims that owners could make. There was a $10,000 grant available to do the initial investigation to determine the extent of any contamination and then up to a $100,000 grant that's available to actually deal with the contamination itself. Most of the sites in the province fall within that $100,000 range.
